John to Patmos occurred under the Emperor Nero, and that the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70),—because it is a leading object with rationalistic critics to establish this early date. It is, indeed, manifest that there is nothing in itself contrary to the acceptance of the Apocalypse as inspired Scripture, or to the belief that it was the work of the Apostle John, in admitting that it was written in the age of Nero.¹ But, inasmuch as such a conclusion contradicts the concurrent voice of the most trustworthy writers of the first four centuries, who place the composition of the Apocalypse between the years 95 and 97; and because the rationalistic interpretation of the Book depends upon the dogmatic assumption that it can only refer to events which happened before it was written (i. e., as rationalists assume, before the year 70), it is important for the Christian argument not only to set aside the alleged “external proof” of the early date (as has now been done), but also to examine the “internal reasons” which have been brought forward in support of the same result.

§ 4 (cont.). b.—The Internal Evidence.

It has become a principle of rationalistic exegesis that St. John refers, throughout this Book, to events in his own age,—events which had already occurred, and which were notorious to all. It is also assumed that the Apostle fully shared in the popular delusion as to the return of Nero, who, we are told, is the Antichrist of the Apocalypse. Thus Hermann Gebhardt (Der Lehrbegriff der Apokalypse, Gotha, 1873, s. 432) who allows that the Apostle John was the author as well of the Apocalypse as of the Fourth Gospel and the Joannean Epistles, asserts (s. 234) that the Apocalypse was written under Galba, A.D. 68. He accordingly maintains: “It is incontestable that the author has erred [“geirrt hat”] when he expects that Nero will appear again, in a short time, as Antichrist out of hell, and that then the end will come” (s. 13).

¹ The evidence of history (as we have seen) proves that the Revelation was written somewhere about A.D. 95–97; and this result is supported by “Dupin, Basnage, Turretin, Spanheim, Le Clerc, Mill, Whitby, Lampe, Lardner, Tomline, Burton, Woodhouse, Elliott, Ebrard, Hofmann, Hengstenberg, Thiersch,” and others,—see Dr. S. Davidson (Intrad. to the N. T., vol. iii. p. 599). On the other hand, a writer of such genuine piety as Auberlen writes: “The evidence contained in the Book itself is more in favour of the view . . . that it was written shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem.”—Daniel and the Rev., p. 235. Stier argues that it was written under Nero, from the mention of the “ten days,” i. e., the ten persecutions (ch. ii. 10). This result is adopted by Lücke, Neander, Schwegler, Baur, Züllig, De Wette, Düsterdieck (apparently following Zeller, Vorträge u. Abhandl., 1865, p. 212, ff.), Renan, Reuss, &c., &c.:—see also Bunsen’s Bibelwerk, viii. s. 478. The author of Supernatural Religion (vol. ii. p. 392) is, of course, of the same opinion.

And here it is to be observed that it is in that strange mixture of heathen and Jewish, and, in many parts, Christian superstition known as the “Sibylline Oracles,” that we meet in book iv.—which is ascribed to the age of Titus, A.D. 79 (see Note E on ch. ii. 20)—what seems to be the earliest allusion to the survival of Nero.¹

Under various forms, this is the principle which underlies the rationalistic interpretation of Rev. xvii.:—see on ch. xvii. 9, and the note in loc.; cf. also on ch. xiii. 1. Indeed this idea that Nero is Antichrist was, according to Renan, “the parent of the Apocalypse,”—“mère de l’Apocalypse” (l. c., p. 351). The “internal evidence,” then, which is brought forward to prove the composition of the Apocalypse during the reign of Nero, or shortly after his death, is as follows:—

i. ‘The Book was written before the destruction of Jerusalem’:—This theory was originally put forward by Lud. Alcasar (see below, § 12), and accepted by Grotius, Hammond, and Lightfoot, as enabling them to apply certain texts to the fate of Judaism. Rev. xi. 1, we are told, proves that the Temple must have been still standing; while verse 2 (cf. ch. xi. 9) informs us that the City was in a state of siege, of which the result is stated in Luke xxi. 24. Some writers also argue from ch. vii. 4-8 that the Twelve Tribes were still in existence. In answer to this argument it is sufficient here to say, that this exposition of St. John's words not only assumes that they must apply literally to the literal Jerusalem—an application of which no proof whatever is given; but also takes for granted that language, founded upon the language of earlier prophecy (e.g. Ezek. xl. 3, &c.; Zech. ii. 2), and therefore manifestly figurative, is to be understood in its baldest and most unspiritual sense.

¹ (30) καὶ τότε ἀπ’ Ἰταλίας βασιλεὺς μέγας, οἶδ’ αὖτε δράτης, φεύξεται ἄφαντος, ἄπυστος, ὑπὲρ πόρον Εὐφράτας, ὁπότε δὲ μητρὸν ἄγος στυγεροῖο φόνου τλήσεται, κ. τ. λ.

ver. 119, &c.; cf. vv. 137–139.

ii. 'The Seven Heads of the Seven-headed Beast, ch. xiii. 1; xvii. 3, indicate seven individual men, that is to say, seven Roman Emperors,—Babylon (ch. xvii. 5) being Rome.' Now in ch. xvii. 10 we are told that five have fallen; that the sixth is now reigning; that the seventh is not yet come. In verse 11, we further read that the Beast "that was, and is not, is himself also an eighth, and is of the seven." This must be Nero, argues Reuss¹ (to quote a single writer on this side):—it cannot be Augustus, or Tiberius, or Claudius, none of whom came to a violent end; nor can it have been Caligula, who did not stand in a hostile relation to the Church; there remains only Nero, in whose death the people did not believe, and who was expected from the East, to regain his throne by the aid of the Parthians. We read in ch. xiii. 3 that the deadly wound—the "death-stroke" of the Beast—was healed. And thus Nero, the fifth Emperor, and who is "of the seven," returns to reign as the eighth, as Antichrist:² see the note on ch. xiii. 3.

Not to urge as an objection to this line of argument, that it assumes the Apostle John to have shared in a popular delusion, and to have written under the influence of ignorance and passion (so Renan, l. c., p. 356);—nor to insist upon the fact that Victorinus, with whom this system of interpretation seems to have originated, begins to count from Nero's successor, Galba (see No. (24) p. 423);—nor yet to dwell upon the shrewd remark of Schleiermacher: "I see no certainty of interpretation here, Nero is at one time one Head, but afterwards the entire Beast" (Einleit. ins Neue Testament, s. 456);—not to urge such objections as these, the historical difficulties are not easy to be overcome. It is to be asked, in the first place, with which of the Cæsars does the series begin? If, as many hold,—e. g. Wetstein, Stuart, Bertholdt, Köhler, Renan (l. c., p. 407),—with Julius Cæsar (and no valid reason can be assigned why the series should not begin with Julius) then Nero is the sixth, not the fifth Emperor, and the theory at once collapses.¹ But if—as the great majority of this school maintain—the series begins with Augustus, there is the greatest variety of opinion as to who is the seventh Emperor, and as to the Emperor under whom the Apocalypse was written. For we have (1) Augustus, (2) Tiberius, (3) Caligula, (4) Claudius, (5) Nero, (6) Galba, (7) Otho, (8) Vitellius, (9) Vespasian, (10) Titus. According to Reuss (l. c.): "The sixth Emperor of Rome was Galba, an old man, seventy-three years of age at his accession. The final catastrophe which was to destroy the City and Empire was to take place in three years and a half [i. e.; the 42 months, the 1260 days, the 3½ times]. For this one simple reason, the series of Emperors will include only

¹ See, for further proof, the notes on ch. xiii. 3; and the notes on ch. xvii. 10. For the argument founded on the supposed interpretation of the "number of the Beast" (ch. xiii. 18) as signifying Nero, see the notes in loc.

The rationalistic theory is not even original. This notion of Nero returning as Antichrist is mentioned very contemptuously by Ambrosius Autpertus, or Ansbertus (circ. A.D. 770): "Septem enim Bestiæ capita septem Romanos reges intelligentes, et unum de ejusdem Bestiæ capitibus in mortem occisum Neronem astruentes. . . . Quem profecto intellectum cuilibet sequi (ut minus sapiens) non facile dixerim, maxime cum et ab ipsis mediocribus quam sit absurdus, possit sciri."—Max. Bibl. Patrum, t. xiii. p. 592.

¹ History of Christian Theology in the Apost. Age, by E. Reuss (London, 1872), p. 380.

² Bleek (Einleit., Clarke's tr., vol. ii. p. 225), having accepted as true this fiction of Nero returning as Antichrist after the death of the Emperor then reigning, concludes:—The Apocalypse "thus seeks to determine the time and circumstances of the Lord's coming, and thus goes beyond the declarations of the Lord Himself. . . . It can therefore in this respect . . . have no normative authority for us."

one after the then reigning monarch, and he will reign but a little while. The writer [St. John] does not know him; but he knows the relative duration of his reign, because he knows [!] that Rome will in three years and a half perish finally, never to rise again"¹:—on similar grounds, Ewald, De Wette, Guericke, Volkmar, Krenkel, Aubé,² &c. &c., also fix upon Galba. On the other hand, Lücke, Bleek, Düsterdieck, &c. fix upon Vespasian: Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, they argue, are not to be reckoned at all,—their united reigns being regarded merely as an interregnum. This conclusion they infer from a casual observation of Suetonius;³ and thus, combining ch. xvii. 10 and ch. xiii. 1–14, the Apocalypse, we are told, was written between the end of December 69 and the spring of A.D. 70, just before Jerusalem was captured:—or, more closely still, if "the Lord's Day" (ch. i. 10) means Easter Day, St. John beheld his Visions on the Christian Easter Day of the year 70 (see Düsterdieck,⁴ Krit. Exeget. Handb. üb. die Offenb., s. 51).

¹ The argument is, that when the Jews (and St. John was a Judaizing Christian) saw the ruin of their Holy City and Temple to be imminent, they still felt persuaded that Jehovah would not forsake His people; while for the Christians the expectation was—"the Lord is at hand." The fiction of Nero's return was now embraced; and men, we are told, believed (and St. John among them) that Nero was to come back with a countless host, from Parthia, to execute vengeance on Rome. See Dio Chrysost., xxi. p. 504, ed. Reiske; St. August., De Civ. Dei, xx. 19, 3; Lactantius, De Mort. Persec. ii.

² M. B. Aubé (Hist. des Persécutions de l'Église, Paris, 1875), accepting these conclusions,—as the results "les plus solides de la critique de notre siècle appliquée aux écrits du Nouveau Testament,"—writes: "Ce sixième roi, ou plutôt ce sixième empereur, est Galba, qui régna, comme on sait, de juin 68 à janvier 69. C'est entre ces six mois que l'Apocalypse a été écrite . . . Galba a soixante-douze ans à son avènement; après lui viendra le septième empereur 'qui n'est pas encore venu' et qui tombera bientôt; car Néron reparaitra et ressaisira le trône . . . l'auteur de l'Apocalypse est ici l'écho de la tradition populaire."—pp. 117–120.

³ "Rebellione trium principum et cæde, incertum diu et quasi vagum imperium suscepit firmavitque tandem gens Flavia."—Vespasian, c. 1.

⁴ Düsterdieck arranges thus:—The Seven

Renan (p. 302–355) differs slightly as to the date:—Galba was proclaimed Emperor on the evening of June 8, A.D. 68; and Nero killed himself on the 9th. On January 2, A.D. 69 the Legions proclaimed Vitellius; on the 10th Galba adopted Piso; on the 15th Otho was proclaimed, and on the evening of that day Galba was slain. In this state of confusion, the hopes of the false Nero of Cythnos (Tac. Hist. ii. 8, 9) were raised; and "it was then (at the close of January, 69) that a symbolical manifesto"—or, as Renan elsewhere (p. 434) calls it, a political "pamphlet," viz. the Apocalypse—"was circulated among the Christians of Asia." It is doubtful, Renan adds, whether St. John knew of Otho's existence; but the Apostle has a full belief that the restoration of Nero will immediately follow the downfall of Galba.

It is worthy of notice that the results which have been just described are deduced solely from "internal" considerations,—Renan and his school discarding the mass of external evidence adduced above for the date under Domitian, although they accept the same evidence when it testifies that the author of the Apocalypse was St. John. If "internal" evidence, however, is to be appealed to here, there is no absence of such evidence on the other side, e.g. see on ch. ii. 4, and on ch. xi. 2; cf. also the arguments of Godet, quoted at p. 437:—and, as to this whole question, see the notes on ch. xvii.

The preceding summary of the opinions of the modern rationalistic school as to the Apocalypse may close with the result given in the Protestanten-Bibel, N. T. (Leipzig, 1873),—viz. that the date of the Book admits of being determined with a certainty rarely attainable in the writings of antiquity:—"It was evidently composed between the day of Nero's death, June 9, A.D. 68, Heads are Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero (these five have fallen, ch. xvii. 10), Vespasian (the sixth, who is present), and Titus ("the other [who] is not yet come"). Rejecting the fable of the return of Nero, Düsterd. makes the eighth to be Domitian, the second son of Vespasian,—understanding the words of ch. xvii. 11, ἐκ τῶν ἐπτά ἐστί, to mean "filius unius eorum";—cf. Matt. i. 3, 5, 6; Luke i. 27; Rom. ix. 10:—l. c., s. 52.

and August 10, A.D., 70, on which day the Temple of Jerusalem, which John had hoped to see spared, was reduced to ashes by the Romans. After that day, no one could hope (as the writer of Rev. xi. 1 did hope) that the Sanctuary would be preserved on the capture of the City."—s. 997. (For the date A.D. 44–47, see the argument of Züllig and Lakemachers quoted in the note on ch. xvii. 10). If the testimony of history, however, is to have any weight, hypotheses of this nature, proceeding from mere imagination or from total scepticism, will not receive the assent of sober criticism.

In support of the historical evidence, internal arguments are not wanting:—

i. 'The condition of the churches of Asia Minor.' These churches had been founded by St. Paul between the years 55 and 58. Consider the reproaches addressed to Ephesus, to Sardis, to Laodicea. A religious revival, especially when caused by the ministry of a Paul, and that, too, in the most flourishing cities of Asia Minor, does not pass away in ten years. Nay, St. Paul wrote to Ephesus and to Colossæ in the year 63; in 63 or 64 St. Peter wrote to all the churches of that region (1 Pet. i. 1); and neither Apostle hints at any deadness in their religious life. Can we then ascribe to St. John, four or five years later,—i.e., in the year 68,—the language of ch. ii. 5; iii. 3, 16? See Godet, Études Bibliques, 2^{ème} série, p. 326; and the note on ch. ii. 4.

ii. 'The ecclesiastical organization which the Apocalypse takes for granted, is no less incompatible with a date so early as the year 68.' Hitherto the titles 'presbyter' and 'bishop' are synonymous: compare Acts xx. 17 and 28;—Tit. i. 5 and 7;—Acts xiv. 23 and Phil. i. 1. "It is only toward the end of the Apostolic age that the presbyteral authority is concentrated in the person of a chief of the flock, who assumes specially the name of Bishop. The Epistle of Clemens Romanus, written probably under Domitian; and the Epistles of Ignatius, which date from Trajan, are the first patristic monuments of that form of ministry which we meet in the Apocalypse: 'Write to the Angel of the Church of' This personal term, Angel, as well as the responsibility which the reproaches and the praises of the Lord cause to press upon the functionary so designated, do not permit us to see in him a being collective, or abstract; nor yet an Angel properly so called, the invisible patron of the flock. This can be only the Bishop, such as we meet him in all the churches of the end of the first century. The Apocalypse makes us contemplate the transition from the primitive presbyterian constitution to the monarchical organization universally admitted in the second century. This detail, then, excludes as positively the epoch of the year 68, as it agrees naturally with the date indicated by Irenæus."—Godet, l. c., p. 327.

iii. 'An ecclesiastical usage is referred to in ch. i. 3, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear," &c.' These words imply a public, official reading in full religious assembly for worship; and not merely private or individual reading. The contrast between the singular and the plural indicates this; the present participle also (ὁ ἀναγινώσκων) implies an habitual act repeated:—"Now the stated reading of the Apostolical writings in public worship cannot have commenced in the year 68. . . . This usage did not exist, as a received form, before the ruin of Jerusalem, A.D. 70; and consequently the Apocalypse which here points to this custom cannot have been composed in the year 68."—Godet, l. c., p. 328. On Rev. i. 3, Renan notes: "Il s'agit ici de la lecture dans l'église par l'Anagnoste."—l. c., p. 360. The Church supplied, by the public reading of the writings of the Apostles, the want which the loss of their personal ministry left behind.

iv. 'The use of the expression, "the day of the Lord" (ch. i. 10), is unknown, before the destruction of Jerusalem, to the Apostolical writings.' The usual phrase had been, "the first day of the week,"—e.g. Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2. "The Lord's day" belongs to the later Apostolic age, when the Church had broken off all ties with the Synagogue. This fact proves that the date of the Apocalypse indicated by Irenæus, viz.

under Domitian, is that which alone suits such language.—Cf. l. c., p. 329.

v. We know from the Acts of the Apostles that the Judæo-Christian Church still participated, in the year 60, in the worship of the Temple. We are to bear in mind, too, the Epistle to the Hebrews written in the year 67 or 68:—and yet, “In ch. ii. 9; iii. 9, Jews are spoken of as ‘the Synagogue of Satan.’ A fact so momentous as the destruction of Jerusalem and of the Jewish nation can alone explain the use of such an epithet applied to the ancient people of God.”—Cf. l. c., p. 330.

vi. The banishment of the author of the Apocalypse agrees precisely with the kind of punishment inflicted under Domitian (see above, pp. 428, 431); while under Nero, at the supposed date of the Book, the punishment was death.—Cf. l. c., p. 330.

§ 5.—Doubts as to the Apostolic Authorship.

EXTERNAL EVIDENCE:—The testimony of ecclesiastical writers during the first four centuries has established the fact that the Apocalypse was written by the Apostle St. John. We have next to consider the nature of the doubts which were entertained on the subject during that period, and which we have seen reflected in the uncertain utterances of Eusebius (No. (20), p. 420). All such doubts centre in the person of Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 247. From the time of Papias, as has been already noticed—see No. (4), Chiliasm of a Jewish type had prevailed more or less definitely in the Church. It has also been pointed out that both Chiliasts and Anti-chiliasts accepted the Apostolic authority of the Apocalypse—see p. 411, note ³. About the year 254, a work entitled a “Refutation of the Allegorists,” and written in defence of a literal Millennium, was published by Nepos of Arsinoë; and his opinions were warmly contested by Dionysius (Euseb., vii. 24). Dionysius, who was a pupil of Origen, regarded this work as tending to degrade the Christian’s hope in “the glorious and divine appearance of our Lord;”—as persuading the simple brethren “to look for mean and perishable things, and such as resemble those that now exist in the kingdom of God.”¹ The lengths to which the Allegorists of the time pressed their arbitrary interpretation of Scripture, and the dissatisfaction felt at their system of spiritualizing its language led men into the opposite extreme, and favoured the gross literalism which looked forward to a sensual Millennium. Dionysius, who was an Allegorist, naturally opposed the opinions of the Chiliasts; and he unhappily adopted, as the means of refuting their error, the method of doubting whether the Book, on which they rested their cause, had an Apostle for its author. The arguments which were urged in proof of this conclusion were purely internal and subjective; and there is no proof whatever that any historical evidence was brought forward in support of them:—“The doctrine taught in the Apocalypse,” it was said, “is false; and consequently the Book cannot be Apostolic.”

Dionysius, indeed, implies that he was not the first to urge similar doubts: “Some,” he writes (ap. Euseb., vii. 25) “of those who were before us rejected and altogether discarded the Book” (Τινὲς μὲν οὖν τῶν πρὸ ἡμῶν ἠθέτησαν καὶ ἀνεσκεύασαν πάντῃ τὸ βιβλίον). “These persons,” he proceeds, “asserted that the inscription of the Apocalypse which ascribes the Book to St. John, is false,—the author being Cerinthus, who, in order to defend his carnal doctrine as to the Millennium, sought to support himself by a name worthy of credit.” Here Dionysius, apparently, refers to the Alogi—a sect which came into existence at the close of Cent. ii.—who were strenuous opponents both of Montanism, and of Chiliasm. From this point of view they rejected all St. John’s writings—not the Apocalypse only—on account of his teaching as to the Comforter, and as to the Millennial kingdom; just as the Marcionites rejected other parts of Scripture. Their opinions are described by Epiphanius (Hær. li. 32, p. 454 ff.) :— ‘How,’ argued the Alogi, ‘can the Apocalypse profit us, with its tale of the Seven Angels and Seven Trumpets?’ Nay, they added, the Book is self-contradictory; for the Seer is ordered to write to the church of Thyatira, where no Christian church exists (πὼς οὖν ἔγραφε τῇ μὴ οὖσῃ,—ib., p. 455). Thus the objections of the Alogi were founded, partly on “internal” grounds; partly on the assertion that the Church had disappeared, in the second century, from Thyatira—a conjecture not difficult to understand from the description of that church in Rev. ii. 18–25. As to such objections, De Wette (Einl., ii. s. 356) and Lücke (s. 578) agree that they had neither critical, nor (in St. John’s day) historical grounds to rest upon. The Alogi, however, further asserted, as Dionysius tells us, that Cerinthus was the author of the Apocalypse :—of this Book, they alleged that neither an Apostle nor a Saint was the author; but that the heresiarch Cerinthus desired to prefix a name deserving of credit to a fiction of his own (Κήρινθον δὲ τὸν καὶ τὴν ἀπ’ ἐκείνου κληθεῖσαν Κηρινθιανὴν συστησάμενον αἵρεσιν, ἀξιόπιστον ἐπιφημίσαι θελήσαντα τῷ ἑαυτοῦ πλάσματι ὄνομα.—ap. Euseb., ib.). Our modern critics have introduced another witness in support of this opinion :—

¹ St. Jerome (Proem. in Isai., lib. xviii. t. iv., p. 767) observes that, if we understand the Apocalypse of St. John, “according to the letter, we must Judaize; if spiritually, we shall appear to gainsay the sentiments of the Latins, Tertullian, Victorinus, Lactantius; and of the Greeks, Irenæus, against whom Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, wrote . . . ridiculing the fable of the Thousand Years, and of a terrestrial Jerusalem made of gold and gems,” &c.

Cerinthus forms the point of transition from the Judaizing sects to Gnosticism; and Irenæus (Hær. iii. 3–11) had heard from Polycarp of his controversies with St. John. At the close of Cent. ii. (A.D. 196–219), Caius, a Roman presbyter,¹—apparently a friend and companion of Irenæus (see p. 411, note ¹),—writing against the Montanist Proclus (Euseb. iii. 28; cf. Tertullian, adv. Valen- tin., c. 5) speaks thus of Cerinthus :²— “Moreover Cerinthus also [who] through revelations, written as if by a great Apostle, speaking falsely further brings in for us tales of marvel shown to him as if by Angels,—affirming that after the Resurrection comes an earthly kingdom of Christ, and that men dwelling in Jerusalem are again to be the slaves of lusts and pleasures” (Routh, l. c., ii. p. 128),—and so on as to the carnal delights of the Millennium. These words have been taken, without any sufficient reason, to mean that Caius ascribed the Apocalypse to Cerinthus. Why, asks Hug (Einleit., 4te Aufl., ii. s. 511), may not these ‘revelations as if from a great Apostle,’ be regarded as statements forged by Cerinthus in the name of others besides St. John,—such as ‘the Apocalypse of Peter,’ or ‘the Apocalypse of Paul’? St. John’s name is not mentioned; nor do we here read, as is usual in such references, of “the Apocalypse” absolutely; but, in the plural, of ‘apocalypses.’”³ Dean Alford, indeed, would set aside Hug’s interpretation that some other book is meant, and not “the Apocalypse of John”: because “no such book is to be traced, though we have very full accounts of Cerinthus from Irenæus (Hær. i. 26) and Epiphanius (Hær. xxviii.),”—Prolegg., p. 210; but, whether Cerinthus did or did not write such a book, is not the plain meaning of Caius that which is more clearly expressed by Theodoret³ (who tells us that Caius wrote against Cerinthus),

¹ ἀλλὰ καὶ Κήρινθος [ὁ] δι’ ἀποκαλύψεων ὡς ἀπὸ ἀποστόλου μεγάλου γεγραμμένων τερατολογίας ἡμῖν ὡς δι’ ἀγγέλων αὐτῷ δεδειγμένας ψευδόμενος ἐπεισάγει, λέγων μετὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν ἐπίγειον εἶναι τὸ βασίλειον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, κ. τ. λ.

² G. Paulus, quoted by Hug, suggests that Cerinthus sought, by his reference to the Millennium (Rev. xx.), to recommend his own false opinions under the shelter of a carnal exposition of the words of St. John,—“suumque plasma ea Canonicæ Apocalypseos similitudine adfecta exornasse.”—Histor. Cerinth., § 30.

³ (31) οὗτος [viz. Cerinthus] ἀποκαλύψει τινὰς ὡς αὐτὸς τεθεαμένος ἐπλάσατο, καὶ ἀπειλῶν τινῶν διδασκαλίας συνέθηκε, καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου τὴν βασιλείαν ἔφησεν ἐπίγειον ἔσεσθαι· καὶ βρῶσιν καὶ πόσιν ὠνειροπόλησε, καὶ φιληδονίας ἐφαντάσθη, καὶ γάμους, καὶ θυσίας, καὶ ἑορτάς, ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ τελούμενας, καὶ ταῦτα ἐπὶ χιλίοις ἔτεσι τελεσθήσεσθαι.—De Hær. Fabulis, ii. 3, ed. 1642, t. iv. p. 219.

¹ Bishop Lightfoot questions the actual existence of the Roman presbyter Caius; and supposes that the Dialogue between Caius and Proclus (Eus., iii. 31) was written by St. Hippolytus. At all events, he observes, the author was a Roman ecclesiastic, who wrote probably a quarter of a century after Polycrates.—Comm. on Coloss., p. 46; see The Journal of Philology, i. p. 98.

namely, that Cerinthus claimed himself to have seen certain revelations disclosing the coming of a grossly carnal Millennium?—Cf. also Philastrius of Brescia († 387), Har. 60.

And thus the supposed evidence of Caius against the Apocalypse disappears, —although some, e.g. Dean Alford, still regard it as weighty; and the opinion that the Apocalypse was ever ascribed to Cerinthus, rests upon the unsupported testimony of the Alogi. This conclusion is accepted, among English scholars, by Dr. Routh (ii. 138), and by Professor Westcott, who notes: “I may express my decided belief that Caius is not speaking of the Apocalypse of St. John, but of books written by Cerinthus in imitation of it. The theology of the Apocalypse is wholly inconsistent with what we know of Cerinthus’s views on the Person of Christ.”—l.c., p. 254.

The evidence of Dionysius himself (ap. Eus., vii. 25) is now to be considered. His reasoning rests altogether on “internal” grounds. From this fact we may conclude that no “external” or historical proof could be urged, in the middle of Cent. iii., against the Apocalypse; otherwise, Dionysius, who was at the pains of quoting the Alogi, would certainly not have failed to avail himself of it. Having referred to the previous doubts of the Alogi, Dionysius proceeds to say that for himself he could not venture to reject the Book; for, though he does not understand it, he suspects that some very profound meaning lies beneath its words (καὶ γὰρ εἰ μὴ συνίημι, ἀλλ’ ὑπονοῶ γε νοῦν τινὰ βαθύτερον ἐγκείμενον τοῖς ῥήμασιν): and then, going on to examine what that meaning may be, he concludes that it is not to be understood literally (ἀδύνατον δὲ αὐτὴν κατὰ τὴν πρόχειρον ἀποδείξας νοεῖσθαι διάνοιαν,—is the account of Eusebius, ibid.). Dionysius had also found that the objections urged against the Apocalypse by the opponents of Chiliasm were insufficient:—The Book itself declares that its author was named John; and he allows that it is the work of a man “holy and inspired” (ἁγίου μὲν γὰρ τινος καὶ θεοπνεύστου συναινῶ): but, nevertheless, he cannot admit “that this John was the Apostle, the son of Zebedee, the brother of James, who wrote the Gospel and the Catholic Epistle.” He cannot, indeed, tell who was the “John” that wrote the Book, for there were many of the same name as the Apostle (πολλοὺς δὲ ὁμωνύμους Ἰωάννη τῷ ἀποστόλῳ νομίζω γεγονέναι), who were called after him in token of respect, as the faithful are wont to call their children Peter and Paul. It was not John Mark who is spoken of in the Acts, for he did not accompany St. Paul to Asia (Acts xv. 39):—“but I think it was some other John of those who were in Asia, since men say (φασίν) that there were two graves at Ephesus, and that each was the grave of John.” (This mention of “the two graves” is the single fact which Dionysius can bring forward, in proof of the existence of the second “John”—see No. (20), p. 420). And yet, notwithstanding this theory, in his epistle to Hermammon (ap. Euseb., vii. 10) he quotes—just as Eusebius (see p. 420) subsequently quotes—the Apocalypse as prophetic and inspired. This epistle to Hermammon, was written, A.D. 262, under the reign of Gallienus, after the close of the three and a half years’ persecution by Valerian which began A.D. 257, and not long before the death of Dionysius: “And to John,” he there writes, “is it in like manner revealed, ‘And there was given unto him (saith he) a mouth speaking great things and blasphemy; and there was given to him authority, and forty and two months;’ [Rev. xiii. 5] (καὶ τῷ Ἰωάννῃ ὁμοίως ἀποκαλύπτεται καὶ ἐδόθη γὰρ αὐτῷ, φησὶ, στόμα . . . καὶ . . . ἐξουσία καὶ μῆνες τεσσαράκοντα δύο).” Both predictions, adds Dionysius, have been wonderfully fulfilled in Valerian.

That the Apocalypse was not written by the author of the Fourth Gospel, Dionysius seeks to prove by the following arguments:—

(i.) ‘The writer of the Apocalypse names himself (ch. i. 1, 4, 9; xii. 8); the Evangelist never does so.’ The obvious reply is, that St. John is here writing in the Prophetic style; and in it anonymous prophecy is inadmissible:—cf. Dan. vii. 15; viii. 1, 15; ix. 2; &c.; and the other prophets passim.

(ii.) ‘The Apocalypse differs from St. John’s other writings in style, in the character of its Greek, and by its barbaric idioms and solecisms' (see below, pp. 454-61).

(iii.) 'The Apocalypse further differs in its tone of thought, and by the absence of the characteristic terms frequent in the Fourth Gospel and the Catholic Epistle':—whoever examines the matter, adds Dionysius, will find, in both, the same words and phrases recurring—"life," "light," "truth," "grace," "joy," "love," and so forth; while the Apocalypse is quite distinct, and, when compared with these two, of an entirely foreign character (see below, p. 451).¹

The objections (ii.) and (iii.), which form the staple of modern criticism also, are neither stronger nor weaker in the mouth of Dionysius than when employed by writers in this nineteenth century:—as such they will be considered below. Meanwhile it is to be borne in mind that, so far as historical evidence goes, there is absolutely no proof whatever in favour of any other author than St. John. Dionysius does not deny that the author of the Apocalypse beheld the Visions which he describes; or that he was endowed with the Divine gift of prophecy. He was embarrassed by the arguments which the Chiliasts founded upon the Book; and he knew that certain objections had been raised as to its authenticity; but he deliberately rejected those doubts, and accepted the Book as inspired Scripture. Although he could not account for the style of the Apocalypse, he was unable to ascribe it—as he desired to ascribe it—to any other than the Apostle among the many persons who bore the name of "John." And thus, this earliest effort to apply subjective criticism to the Books of the New Testament, utterly failed to establish itself in opposition to adequate historical proof. The positive testimony of Clemens Al. and of Origen (see above p. 415), predecessors of Dionysius in the school of Alexandria, may fairly be adduced as conclusive against the subjective theory of that writer.

Eusebius, indeed, has attempted, as we have already seen (p. 420), to found an argument on the "conjectures" of Dionysius. Adopting the singular reasoning which finds proof of the non-apostolic authorship of the Apocalypse in the mention of the two graves at Ephesus¹ (No. (20), p. 420), Eusebius proposes to disinter from the words of Papias, No. (5), the mysterious form of "the Presbyter John,"—of whose existence Dionysius seems to have had no knowledge at all,—and suggests that this was the unknown "John" whom Dionysius had failed to discover. No writer between Papias and Eusebius has mentioned the name of this enigmatical personage, who has furnished the theme of such protracted controversy in modern times. It has been argued with much force, by Hengstenberg and others,² that no such person existed; and that "John the Presbyter" is no other than the Apostle himself, who styles himself "Elder" in the superscriptions to his second and third Epistles. Still, when one examines the words of Papias, No. (5); and notices there the occurrence of the name "John" twice,—once, in conjunction with other Apostles, and once, in conjunction with Aristion (all, however, being apparently styled "disciples of the Lord")¹; and further, when one notices the different tenses used,—“what Andrew or Peter, &c., said” (εἶπεν); “what Aristion and the Presbyter John say” (λέγουσιν),²—it is hard to avoid the conclusion adopted by Eusebius, that Papias had in mind two persons named “John,” one the Apostle, the other “the Presbyter.” To infer, however, from the mere fact of the existence of such a person that he was the author of the Apocalypse, is perhaps the most daring venture which subjective criticism has ever assayed. We have seen—indeed Dionysius (see p. 440) has noticed the fact—how common was the name “John” (see p. 406, note ¹): and this of itself affords a strong presumption that the writer who speaks with such authority to the churches of Asia (Rev. ii. 7, &c.) ;—whose name was sufficient to show who was that “James the brother of John,” whom Herod “killed with the sword” (Acts xii. 2) ;—who was content to announce himself simply as “I John” (Rev. i. 9) ;—was one so well known and pre-eminent in the Church as to need no distinguishing title: in a word, one who could be no other than the Apostle. Only arrogance, indeed, or a deliberate intention to deceive, can account for the assumption of this simple title by a different writer. Were a forger to have desired to appropriate the name of one of the original Twelve, is it likely that, when assuming a name so common, he should have given no clearer intimation of the person for whom he wished to be taken, than the unambitious address, “John to the Seven Churches” (Rev. i. 4)? If the author was not a forger,—and neither Dionysius nor Eusebius imply that he sought to deceive,—must he not have given some note of identification such as St. Luke has given (Acts i. 1), or as St. Jude has prefixed to his Epistle? “The Presbyter John,” on the other hand, seems to have been a person so obscure that no early writer, except Papias,—neither Polycarp the contemporary of St. John (see p. 409), nor yet Polycrates of Ephesus (see p. 413) when enumerating those who were eminent (μεγάλα στοιχεῖα) in Asia,—has referred even by a distant allusion to his existence. The conclusion, therefore, seems to be established, that the “Presbyter John”—admitting that he ever existed—was a person too insignificant to leave any trace behind him;¹ and that to ascribe to him the authorship of the Apocalypse, is the most arbitrary and the most improbable of hypotheses. Lücke (s. 657) thus sums up the verdict of antiquity: “The oldest and the universal tradition of the Church—if you will, the orthodox opinion—is that the Apocalypse is a work of the Apostle John, the undoubted author of the Fourth Gospel and of the three Catholic Epistles which stand in the Canon under his name.”

¹ St. Jerome writes: "Nonnulli putant duas memorias ejusdem Apostoli Joannis esse."—De Vir. Ill. c. 9.

² E. g. Zahn, "Papias von Hierapolis," Studien u. Kritiken, 1866, s. 649; Lange; Guericke; Riggensbach; &c. Renan (Vie de Jésus, 13^{me} éd., p. lxxiii.) also writes: "L'existence de ce Presbyteros Johannes n'est pas suffisamment établie. Elle semble avoir été imaginée pour la commodité de ceux qui, par des scrupules d'orthodoxie, ne voulaient pas attribuer l'Apocalypse à l'Apôtre. L'argument qu'Eusèbe tire en faveur de cette hypothèse d'un passage de Papias n'est pas décisif. Les mots ἡ τῷ Ἰωάννῃ dans ce passage ont pu être interpolés (?). Dans ce cas, les mots πρεσβύτερος Ἰωάννης, sous la plume de Papias, désigneraient l'Apôtre Jean lui-même (Papias applique expressément le mot πρεσβύτερος aux Apôtres; cf. 1 Pet. v. 1); et Irénée aurait raison contre Eusèbe en appelant Papias un disciple de Jean. Ce qui confirme cette supposition c'est que Papias donne Presbyteros Johannes pour un disciple immédiat de Jésus."

¹ εὐρήσει τὴν ζῶην . . τὸ φῶς . . τὴν ἀλήθειαν . . τὴν χάριν, τὴν χαράν, τὴν ἀγάπην . . Ἀλλοιωτάτη δὲ καὶ ξένη παρὰ ταῦτα ἡ ἀποκάλυψις. . . Ἔτι δὲ καὶ τῆς φράσεως τὴν διαφορὰν ἐστὶ τεκμήρασθαι τοῦ εὐαγγελίου καὶ τῆς ἐπιστολῆς πρὸς τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν. Dionysius had just before "conjectured" as to the writer,—τεκμαίρομαι γὰρ ἐκ τε τοῦ ἡθους ἐκατέρων . . καὶ τῆς τοῦ βιβλίου διεξαγωγῆς λεγομένης, μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι,—ap. Euseb., H. E. vii. 25.

§ 6.—The present stage of subjective Criticism.

The subjective doubts suggested by Dionysius of Alexandria, and developed by Eusebius, have fructified; and every possible combination of the different aspects of the problem has found its advocates in modern times. The question as to the relation of the Apostle John to the two principal works which bear his name, admits of four answers:—

¹ The same may be said of the word “elders.” On the word “elder” in the passage No. (5) (Eus., H. E. iii. 39), Bishop Lightfoot observes: “What class of persons he (Papias) intends to include under the designation of ‘elders’ he makes clear by the names which follow. The category would include not only Apostles like Andrew and Peter, but also other personal disciples of Christ, such as Aristion and the second John. In other words, the term with him is a synonym for the Fathers of the Church in the first generation.” — Contemp. Review, August, 1875, p. 379.

² Bishop Lightfoot (l. c., p. 583), however, thinks that, here, “the-tense-should probably be regarded as a historic present introduced for the sake of variety.”

¹ The “Apostolical Constitutions” (vii. 46), indeed, mention, in connexion with the Aristion (Ariston) of Papias, a John bishop of Ephesus, successor of Timothy and of the Apostles, and chiefly of the Apostle John who installed him in his office—τῆς δὲ Ἐφέσου Τιμόθεος μὲν ὑπὸ Παύλου, Ἰωάννης δὲ ὑπὸ ἐμοῦ Ἰωάννου—on which Le Clerc notes: “Est quidem Johannes hic meâ conjecturâ Johannes ille Presbyter apud Eusebium, atque ex eo apud Hieronymum.” — ap. Coteler., t. i. p. 387, ed. 1724. The mention of Aristion (ibid.) as Bishop of Smyrna adds some weight to this interpretation of the statement of the Apostolical Constitutions.

The Apostle John has written

- I. The Apocalypse as well the Gospel;
- II. Certainly the Gospel, but not the Apocalypse;
- III. Certainly the Apocalypse, but not the Gospel;
- IV. Neither the Gospel, nor the Apocalypse.

After the settlement of the Canon of the New Testament (always excepting the doubts, already considered, which were founded upon the misuse of the Apocalypse by the Millennarians) this question was not reopened until the age of the Reformation.¹ The verdict of antiquity, as represented in the answer No. I., was universally accepted. In the sixteenth century, however, Erasmus (followed by Carolstadt), having reproduced the doubts suggested formerly by Dionysius, and at this period by Luther and Zwingli, declared himself in favour of the answer No. II. During the rest of Cent. xvi., and during Cent. xvii., criticism was silent; but at the beginning of Cent. xviii., doubts once more arose,—called forth, perhaps, by the numerous expositions of the Apocalypse which had appeared in Cent. xvii. The first attempt in England, writes Lücke (s. 496), at a “more fundamental critical inquiry” as to the Apocalypse, was that of “the unknown author” of ‘The New Testament in Greek and English, form’d agreeably to the illustrations of the most learned commentators,—London, 1729.’² The more important treatise of F. Abauzit, ‘A Discourse historical and critical on the Revelation ascribed to St. John,—London, 1730,’ first appeared anonymously in its English translation; and called forth from Dr. Leonard Twells the third part of his ‘Critical examination of the late new text and version of the New Testament’ (i. e., the version of W. Mace). This treatise of Twells Lücke (s. 498) describes as “unquestionably the first comprehensive and fundamental attempt to defend the Johannean authenticity of the Apocalypse, as well on internal as external grounds;” and by it an end was put to the controversy in England. Semler and Oeder took up the question in Germany about the year 1769, and alleged that the Book was a forgery by Cerinthus who ascribed it to St. John. This revival of the opinions of the Alogi has received no countenance from subsequent critics, however extreme their scepticism; although the theories that the author was “John whose surname was Mark”¹ (Acts xii. 12); or “the Presbyter John;” or a fictitious “Johannes Theologus” of later date than the Apostle (Ballenstedt, Philos. u. Johannes, Göttingen, 1812); or “a rabbinically learned Christian of Laodicea” (Lützelberger); or, generally, an unknown writer named “John,”—were variously maintained. This last theory is supported by Ewald, Credner, De Wette, Neander, Lücke, Düsterdieck, and others: its stronghold is the alleged discrepancy in style between the Gospel and the Apocalypse, together with other “internal” grounds (see below, § 7); and its motive is an anxiety to uphold the authenticity of the Fourth Gospel.

The next stage of criticism, represented by the answer No. III., is that of Baur and the school of Tübingen. For the first time, in the year 1820, K. G. Bretschneider² suggested doubts as

¹ So Beza in his annotated New Testament: —“Quod si quid aliud liceret ex stylo conjicere, nemini certe potius quam Marco tribuerim, qui et ipse Joannes dictus est.”—Prolegg. in Apoc., ed. Cantab. 1642, p. 744. In modern times Hitzig also (Ueber Joh. Markus u. seine Schriften, 1843) has revived the hypothesis rejected by Dionysius Alexandrinus.

² Probabilia de Evangelii et Epp. Joannis Apostoli indole et origine.

¹ Thus, Nicephorus Callistus (Cent. xiv.) accepts as an admitted fact that St. John, when in exile in Patmos under Domitian, wrote his Gospel and his ἑρὸν καὶ ἔνθεον ἀποκάλυψιν (ii. 42). In his enumeration (ii. 46) of the Books of the Canon he observes that some persons imagined (τινὲς ἐφαντάσθησαν) that the Apocalypse was written by the Presbyter John:—here he is clearly referring to Eusebius (see above p. 441). See Alford, Prolegg., p. 220.

² The author of this Arian Version of the New Testament, now known to be W. Mace (see Cotton’s ‘Editions of the Bible,’ p. 87), relies upon the precedent of Dionysius Alex.; and asserts as to the Fathers who bear testimony to the Apostolic authorship of the Apocalypse, that “Justin Martyr was remarkable for his illiterateness; Irenæus for his credulity; and Tertullian for his atheistical philosophy. The credibility, therefore, of a fact founded upon such evidence is less than nothing.”—p. 1022.

to the authorship of the Fourth Gospel, and prepared the way for the theory of Baur and Zeller (p. 406, note ¹). The difference of style, so much insisted upon, gave rise to the dilemma,—“Either the Fourth Gospel is the authentic work of St. John, and, consequently, the Apocalypse is not an authentic work of the same author; or the converse is true, and the Apocalypse was written by the Apostle, and the Gospel was not.” Heretofore, the former member of the dilemma had been usually adopted by critics, following Dionysius Alex.; but the school of Tübingen—in its turn taking up the dilemma—has adopted the latter member. Writers of this school insist upon the early and definite decision of ecclesiastical tradition in favour of the authorship of the Apocalypse by the Apostle John, and of his residence in Asia Minor; they usually dwell on the testimony of Justin M. who, as they argue, was unacquainted with St. John’s Gospel; and they also rely upon the genuinely Apostolical (that is to say, “genuinely Jewish”) type of thought presented by the Apocalypse. Hence they conclude that this Book alone is the work of the Apostle John; and they consequently assert, on account of the alleged difference of style, that the Fourth Gospel and the three Epistles did not proceed from him.

A distinct theory has been proposed by Volkmar,¹ in holding which he seems to stand alone; viz., that the Apocalypse is a forgery by a Christian versed in the Scriptures, devised during the lifetime, and in the name of St. John,—“under his shield,” as Volkmar expresses it (“unter dem Schilde des letzten Hauptes der 12 Apostel,” s. 42),—and with the design of carrying out that hostility to Pauline doctrine (see Note A on ch. iii. 19) which it is a favourite assumption of modern rationalists to ascribe to the Apostle John. This theory is a sort of compromise between the attempt to deny that the Christology of the Apocalypse proceeded from one of the original Twelve Apostles, and the wish, at the same time, to maintain that an original

Apostle was opposed to the teaching of St. Paul.¹

The unsatisfactory results of either member of the dilemma presented by the answers No. II. and No. III., has led to a partial return to the answer No. I.,—although by no means in the sense in which any system of orthodox theology accepts it. Hase in his Leben Jesu (4te Ausg., s. 5), and Réville, in two articles in the Revue de Théologie (vol. ix. p. 329; vol. x. p. 1), entitled Jean le prophète et Jean l'évangéliste, admit, on the one hand, the authenticity of the Apocalypse; and, on the other, the authenticity of the Fourth Gospel and the Epistles: but they assert that an essential divergence distinguishes these writings,—a divergence which they account for by the hypothesis that, in the interval between the composition of the Apocalypse and of the Fourth Gospel, a profound transformation took place in the faith of the Apostle John:—“When the Apocalypse was written, Jerusalem,” argues Hase, “was still standing; and thus the passage from this Book to the Gospel must have been a transition from a lower to a higher point of view:—a progress in religious conception, and also a progress in style, manifested when the Apostle John found himself at Ephesus, where Paul had laboured before him.” When assailed on account of this theory by the chief of the School of Tübingen, Hase answered by contending that the transformation in St. John’s opinions was caused by his sense of the Divine judgment which fell on the Jewish Sanctuary, and also by the normal development of the Christian mind:—“The Gospel,” he writes, “is the Apocalypse spiritualized.”—Die Tüb. Schule, s. 26–30. The same theory has been proposed in Holland, by Professors Scholten and Niermeyer. It is evident, however, that whatever can be urged in answer to the imaginary contradiction between St. John and St. Paul (see below, and on ch. ii. 2) will equally hold good in answer to this imaginary contradiction between St. John and himself.

¹ Commentar zur Offenbarung Joannes, von Dr. Gustav Volkmar, Zürich, 1862.

¹ “Der Verfasser, gleichviel welcher Johannes, gehört zu dem Kreis der ältesten Christenheit, welche den Paulinismus, der das Gesetz aufhebt, als einen Verrath am alten Bund betrachtet.”—Volkmar, l.c., s. 25.

Yet again, the controversy has veered to a different point:—we are now asked to adopt the answer No. IV.; and, in order to see that St. John wrote neither the Fourth Gospel nor the Apocalypse, to disbelieve the fact of the Apostle's residence at Ephesus; nay, of his having ever been in Asia Minor, a fact which Strauss (Leben Jesu, P. ii., v. § 74) fully admitted. The ministry of the Apostle John in Asia Minor was first called in question by Vogel in 1800, and in 1826 by Reuterdahl who suggested that the accounts of St. John's residence at Ephesus and exile to Patmos, were derived from Rev. i. 9, and from it alone. The question was taken up by Lützelberger in 1840, who contended that St. John died before the Epistle to the Galatians was written in Palestine; and, accordingly, that he had never been at Ephesus. The hypothesis of Lützelberger has been revived and defended by the late Dr. Theodor Keim.¹ Keim, as we have already seen (p. 406, note ³), admits that "from Justin M. to Irenæus and the great Fathers, the Revelation of John was recognized as the work of the Apostle;" and he also allows that the Book "clearly enough refers its own composition to Asia Minor and Ephesus" (B. i. s. 164):—but he nevertheless attempts to prove that, "according to all historical evidence, the residence of the Apostle John in Asia Minor is set aside; and this in such a manner as to determine the question not only concerning the Gospel, but also concerning the Revelation; . . . and thus the last support left to the composition of the Gospel by the son of Zebedee is removed" (l. c., s. 156). An earlier writer, Bleek (l. c., ii. p. 232), while maintaining that the Apocalypse was the work of "John the Presbyter," had admitted that such a theory is not without its difficulties, if the Apostle John was then living in Asia Minor and in the region where the Book appeared. In order, therefore, not to contradict the historical evidence which so clearly proves that St. John was a resident in Ephesus, Bleek had conjectured that he did not come there until after the Apocalypse was written. This conjecture seems to have suggested his system to Keim (B. i. s. 156 ff.), who seeks to prove, (1) that all the Apostles died long before the end of Cent. i.; (2), that St. John never resided and laboured in Asia Minor; (3), that the account, usually accepted, of his residence at Ephesus is not more ancient than Irenæus; and that Irenæus, through a mistake, changed "the Presbyter John" of Papias, No. (5), into the Apostle John,—erroneously connecting with the latter what he had heard in Asia Minor, when a boy.

(1) As to the early removal by death of the Apostles, Keim relies on Rev. xviii. 20; xxi. 14. These texts give no support to his conclusion: for ch. xviii. 20 can only refer generally to the persecution of the Church—ver. 24 speaking merely "of the blood of prophets and of saints," without any article to restrict the meaning, and without any mention of Apostles; while in ch. xxi. 14, the Twelve Names on the Twelve Foundations symbolize those who had founded the kingdom of God, without any allusion to their death or their survival. That some, at least, of the Apostles did survive the destruction of Jerusalem, may surely be gathered from such texts as Matt. xvi. 28 and the parallel passages; to which we may add the "when ye shall see (ἴδητε) Jerusalem compassed with armies," of Luke xxi. 20. See below, p. 449.

(2) Keim urges the silence of the earliest Christian writers as to the residence of St. John in Asia Minor. We are here to bear in mind how scanty the writings are which remain from this period; and that even these are nearly all hortatory, controversial, or apologetic:—when the New Testament itself is quoted, the names of the writers are seldom given. Where, one may ask, was that positive necessity which the argumentum a silentio requires, for any mention of St. John? If we omit the New Testament, how little do we know of St. Paul? Polycarp addressing the Philippians (c. iii.) speaks of St. Paul who had written an Epistle to that church; but the church of Philippi had no relations with St. John. Men like Ignatius, writing in fear of their lives, naturally confined themselves to the burning questions which agitated the Church, unconscious of the historical demands of posterity:—Thus, writing to Rome, Ignatius (c. iv.) refers to the connexion of that church with St. Peter and St. Paul; he addresses Ephesus (c. xii.) as the city through which the saints passed to a martyr's death;¹ his epistles to Smyrna and to Polycarp are occupied with the dogmatic and other interests of the time. The Epistle of the church of Smyrna relates to the persecutions of the Christians; and was written to the neighbouring churches which needed no information as to St. John. Keim's chief reliance, however, is placed on the silence of Hegesippus (circa A.D. 170). Eusebius (H. E. iii. 32; cf. Routh, I. c., i. 205, &c.) has preserved a few fragments of this writer's "historical memorials" (ὑπομνήματα), in which he tells us that the Church was at peace till the time of Trajan; that the Apostles had gradually died off, and been succeeded by others who had heard with their own ears the Divine Wisdom; and that errors had now sprung up because there was no Apostle to correct them. Hegesippus accordingly places the death of the last Apostle in immediate causal connection with the outbreak of Gnostic error; he assigns both facts to the reign of Trajan, and is thus in perfect agreement with Irenæus and the others (see p. 430) who state that St. John survived till that period.²

¹ "Geschichte Jesu von Nazara," Zürich, B. i. 1867; B. ii. 1871; B. iii. 1872.

(3) "But among the silent," writes Keim (s. 161), "there rises one who speaks," Papias bishop of Hierapolis near

Ephesus, the friend of Polycarp bishop of Smyrna—see No. (6). From the passage No. (5) Keim infers that Papias neither personally knew the Apostle John, nor even presupposes, in those words, his existence in Asia Minor; Papias having merely been connected in his early days with one Aristion, and a Presbyter or "Elder" named John, who were both "disciples of the Lord." And the reason given for such an inference is, that, in this enumeration of seven Apostles, St. John—had he really been bishop of the neighbouring city Ephesus—could not have been placed by Papias so low as sixth.¹ The Apostle, accordingly, was never in Asia Minor at all; and the positive assertion of Irenæus—with whom the error first arose—and of others, that St. John lived and died at Ephesus, originated in the desire cherished in Asia, as well as at Corinth and Rome, to claim an Apostle as transmitter of the pure Christian tradition in opposition to Gnosticism. And thus it has come to pass that the Apostle John has taken the place in history of "the Presbyter John"—a personage of whose existence we know absolutely nothing, except from this casual mention of his name by Papias. Keim's contention, then, amounts to this; that what Irenæus had heard in his boyhood respecting "John the Presbyter," he falsely ascribed to John the son of Zebedee; and this with such success as to impose on all succeeding writers down to the present day. When the evidence, however, as to St. John's history which has been examined in the foregoing pages is borne in mind, it is hard to avoid the conjecture of Ewald (Götting. gel. Anzeig. 1867, s. 41) that Keim could not have meant seriously to defend such a conclusion. As a matter of fact, Keim is mistaken when he asserts that Irenæus was the first to announce the residence of the Apostle John in Asia Minor; for we have the distinct evidence to the contrary of Apollonius who, as we know, lived in the days of Polycarp and Papias, and who wrote before Irenæus: even Keim allows that Apollonius wrote A.D. 170-180.¹ Apollonius, moreover, was free from any controversial bias in favour of the Apocalypse, for he wrote against Montanism (see p. 411); and he was able, as being himself an Asiatic, to bear testimony to St. John's residence and work at Ephesus, and to a special miracle which was there performed by the Apostle—see No. (9). Again, Keim assumes that Polycrates (see note³, p. 413) was in error as to the Apostle Philip; and hence he concludes that Polycrates shared in the general confusion as to the Apostle John—although he was himself bishop of Ephesus, and for forty years a contemporary of Polycarp. See also p. 430, note². In fine the theory of Keim requires us to believe that four independent witnesses—Apollonius at Ephesus, Irenæus in Gaul, Clemens at Alexandria, and Tertullian in Africa,—shared in the same misconception; and that this misconception has come to be accepted as history, while every trace of the true facts has been obliterated.²

¹ There is a hint (c. xi.) that St. Paul was not the only Apostle who had laboured at Ephesus:—the receivers of the Epistle are those οἱ καὶ ἀποστόλοις πάντοτε συνέσαν ἐν δυνάμει I. X.

² If the 'Muratorian Fragment' (see p. 421) was written by Hegesippus, as Bunsen holds, Keim's objection is still less forcible. On this argument that, if St. John had been at Ephesus at all, Papias and Hegesippus must have mentioned it, and Irenæus and Eusebius have quoted them to that effect,—Mr. Matthew Arnold observes: "As if the very notoriety of John's residence at Ephesus would not have dispensed Irenæus and Eusebius from adducing formal testimony to it, and made them refer to it just in the way they do!"—Contemp. Review, May, 1875, p. 988.

¹ As to the position here assigned to the name of the Apostle John, Bishop Lightfoot writes:—"No rational account can be given of the sequence, supposing that the names are arranged 'in order of merit' The two names, which are kept to the last and associated together, are just those two members of the Twelve to whom alone the Church attributes written Gospels. As Evangelists, the names of John and Matthew would naturally be connected."—Contemp. Review, October 1875, p. 839.

And thus it may easily be seen how groundless is this latest attack on the Apostolic authorship of the Apocalypse, founded as it is upon the denial of St. John's residence in Asia Minor. Hilgenfeld without hesitation concludes: "John is, with full certainty, to be upheld as the Apostle of Asia" ("Johannes als Apostel Asiens ist mit voller Sicherheit zu behaupten," l. c., s. 395). The evidence for the fact of the Apostle's residence in Asia has been already stated (pp. 427-30): and the epistle of Irenæus to Florinus (pp. 8, 27); the passage from Polycrates (No. (14), p. 414); and the opening chapters of the Apocalypse itself—to go no farther—will ever remain three solid bases on which our belief may rest with full historic certainty.¹

§ 7. Doubts as to the Apostolic Authorship.

INTERNAL EVIDENCE. — We have seen how the current of modern Rationalism has set in the direction of fully admitting the composition of the Apocalypse by the Apostle John, the son of Zebedee,—the conclusion which it has been the chief object of this Introduction to prove. This admission, whatever its value may be, is to be placed to the credit of the present argument, without accepting in any sense the result which is thereby aimed at, namely the rejection of the Fourth Gospel on the ground of its internal discrepancies from the Apocalypse. As scholars, on the other hand, of the stamp of Lücke, Düsterdieck and Ewald, who accept the Fourth Gospel as the composition of St. John, seek to overthrow the authenticity of the Apocalypse by means of the same alleged discrepancies, it is necessary to examine whether such discrepancies really exist.

It is evident at a glance that the

¹ This result, given in his own words, is almost admitted by Renan (l. c., p. 569). Luthardt, on the Fourth Gospel (1874, s. 122), thus sums up the answer to Keim:—(i.) Irenæus cannot have confounded the Apostle John with "the Presbyter John," since he carefully distinguishes between the Apostles and other disciples of the Lord; and since he appeals, in controversy, to facts which cannot be rejected by those against whom he urges them;—(ii.) Nor can the supposed error of Irenæus as to St. John's residence at Ephesus be ascribed to this confusion, since, independently of Irenæus, the same tradition existed in Asia Minor as well as in Rome, and with Clemens Alex. (see above, p. 415);—(iii.) Had St. John not been at Ephesus, Polycarp could never have appealed to his example in the Easter controversy, as we know that he did,—οὐτε γὰρ ὁ Ἀνίκητος τὸν Πολύκαρπον πείσαι ἐδύνατο μὴ τηρεῖν, ἀτε μετὰ Ἰωάννου τοῦ μαθητοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν ἀποστόλων, οἷς συνδιέτριψεν, ἀεὶ τετηρηκότα—ap. Eus. v. 24.

² L. c., i. s. 154; ann. 2, s. 164. Keim (s. 169) also allows that the Apostle was confounded with, or exchanged for, the author of the Apocalypse, before the confusion arose between John the son of Zebedee and "the Presbyter John"; because Justin Martyr, some time before Irenæus, was a witness to that error,—see No. (8), p. 410.

³ See Mr. Sanday's remarks on Keim, in The Academy, July 1, 1871.

Apocalypse presents wide divergences in structure and form from the other writings of St. John; but it is equally evident that such divergences are implied in the nature of the Book itself. From first to last the Book is a reflexion of the Old Test., echoing the prophetic voice, and exhibiting all the severity of the prophetic language. The style and manner, too, of the Apocalypse, as of any other composition, must, of necessity, be influenced by the position of the author throughout:—one need only call to mind the hymns of Mary, and Zacharias, and Simeon, differing as they do from the usual style of St. Luke. Some writers seem to think that St. John could write in only one style, and that, a style fixed and unchangeable; forgetting how different the subjects are on which the Apostle has written, as well as the influence of the prophetic state on a prophet's utterances. The fact is that the divergences in form and structure between the Apocalypse and the Fourth Gospel present themselves as natural and inevitable; while, at the same time, the analogies which may be traced between the ideas and the language of both writings, are too numerous, and are often marked with too great subtilty, to be fortuitous.¹ The Gospel, no less than the Apocalypse, is marked by its dependence on the Old Test. The Apocalypse, indeed, as well as the Gospel, is throughout full of allusions to, as distinct from direct citations of, the earlier Scriptures,—allusions which are interwoven, as if unconsciously, with the author's style. For example, let Rev. i. 10; iv. 2; xvii. 3; xxi. 10, be compared with Num. xxiv. 2; 2 Chron. xv. 1; Isai. lxi. 1; Ezek. xi. 5;—Rev. iv. 3, with Ezek. i. 28;—Rev. vii. 1, with Dan. vii. 2;—Rev. xiv. 10, with Jer. xxv. 15. See also the Messianic allusions in Rev. iii. 7; v. 5; xxii. 16. So in the Gospel, let John i. 51 be compared with Gen. xxviii. 12;—John ii. 16, with Jer. vii. 11;—John v. 29, with Dan. xii. 2;—John ix. 39, with Isai. xlii.

¹ On this whole subject, see articles in the numbers of the Revue de Théologie for June, July, and Sept. 1856, entitled “De l'authenticité des écrits johanniques d'après Antonie Niermeyer, par M. Busken-Huet.”

7;—John x. 16, with Isai. lvi. 8. The Messianic allusions are no less clear:—Christ must first “be manifest unto Israel,” John i. 11, 31;—Nathanael addresses Him as “King of Israel,” John i. 49;—“Salvation is of the Jews,” John iv. 22;—and finally, the “Hosanna” of John xii. 13.

But the question must be considered more systematically.

I. And first of all as to the reasons derived from internal characteristics, against the composition of the Apocalypse by an Apostle, the great majority of “doubts” founded upon such grounds almost carry with them their own refutation:—

(α) ‘The entire history of the exile of the Apostle John in Patmos under Domitian is, we are told, a fiction founded on Rev. i. 9, which is the record of an unreal vision:’—so Eichhorn, Neander, Bleek. Not to mention the positive evidence already adduced, Winer (Real-Wörterbuch, i. 592) justly observes that the ecstatic condition of the Seer does not commence until ver. 10,—the ninth verse bearing all the marks of a plain historical narrative in which, under the circumstances of the time (see note ³, p. 431), there is not the least improbability.

(β) ‘The author does not call himself an Apostle; he does not speak of himself as an Apostle, or in the manner in which an Apostle might be expected to speak:’ so Lücke, Keim, &c. But why should the title “servant” (δοῦλος) Rev. i. 1 (cf. ch. x. 7; xi. 18) prove that he was not an Apostle, when we find the same title assumed by St. Paul, Rom. i. 1; Gal. i. 10; Phil. i. 1; Tit. i. 1? Or again the title “partaker” (συγκοινωνός), Rev. i. 9, which is also used by St. Paul, 1 Cor. ix. 23; Phil. i. 7;—or “brother” (ἀδελφός) Rev. i. 9 (cf. ch. xix. 10; xxii. 9), a mode of speech which occurs in Rom. i. 13; 1 Cor. i. 10; Gal. iii. 15; &c.? The writer is naturally referred to as a “prophet” (as in Rev. xxii. 9; cf. ch. x. 7), just as were Ezekiel and Daniel. The style, moreover, and manner throughout the Book agree in all respects with the character of the “son of thunder” (Mark iii. 17) as depicted in the Gospels, e.g. Luke

ix. 54. Cf. also p. 428, note ²; and see paragraph (e) below.

(γ) 'The Author speaks of the Twelve as he would not have done had he belonged to their number,'—e. g. in Rev. xviii. 20; xxi. 14 (on these texts see also p. 445). When Keim argues here, that in ch. xviii. 20 the Apostles are spoken of "objectively," he forgets that they are similarly spoken of in 1 Cor. xii. 28; Eph. iii. 5; while Rev. xxi. 14 does no more than reflect the teaching of such passages as Matt. xvi. 18; xix. 28¹; Eph. ii. 20,—passages which also set aside the objection that it is inconsistent with the humility of an Apostle, as prescribed in Mark x. 43, 44, to call himself and his fellow Apostles "Foundations." The remark of Ewald, that it is likewise inconsistent with Apostolic humility to record these promises of future blessedness, may be answered by referring to the far plainer words of St. Paul, Phil. i. 21-23; 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8; not to mention Dan. xii. 13; or St. John's styling himself in the Gospel "the Disciple whom Jesus loved."

(δ) 'The reflexion of the language and imagery of ancient prophecy which marks the Apocalypse, shows that the Visions recorded by its author are not original; but a mere repetition of the words of earlier Seers, in which he clothes his own anticipations of the future.' This is an argument really directed against the whole prophetic Volume, where we find successive prophets employing the very expressions of earlier predictions and developing their sense (see Lee on Inspiration, 4th ed., p. 326, &c.): it is also a denial of that progressive character which marks all Revelation, as set forth in Heb. i. 1.

(e) 'The Christ of the Apocalypse is not the Christ of the Gospels:—in the Apocalypse He is "the Lion of the Tribe of Judah" (Rev. v. 5); He "shall rule the nations with a rod of iron" (Rev. xix. 15); He leads His armies "clothed with a vesture dipped in blood" (Rev.

xix. 13). Is this,' we are asked, 'the Jesus of Matt. xi. 28-30; xii. 18-20?' The answer is clear: The Christ of the Apocalypse is the Christ of the Gospel,—Christ in His character of King (Matt. xxv. 31-46),—Christ in His character of Judge (John v. 22-29; cf. Ps. ii.; Isai. lxiii. 1-6). See also the note on Rev. iii. 21.

II. Again, it is urged that 'the Apocalypse differs from the other writings of the Apostle John by the severity of its spirit, and temper, and tone.'

Is this conclusion, however, borne out by facts?

The fiery spirit of St. John (cf. Mark iii. 17; Luke ix. 54) has, no doubt, left its impress on the Apocalypse. The loving words of the Epistles to the Seven Churches are mingled with stern tones of reproof to Ephesus (ch. ii. 5), to Pergamum (ch. ii. 16), to Laodicea (ch. iii. 16). Of those who worship the Beast, "the smoke of their torment goeth up for ever and ever" (ch. xiv. 11; cf. vv. 10, 20). They who are not written in the Book of Life are "cast into the lake of fire" (ch. xx. 15). But with all their gentle and loving utterances the other Joannean writings present the same aspect of severity,—see John iii. 36; vi. 70; viii. 44; xv. 6; 1 John ii. 19; v. 16; 2 John 10. If it is said in Rev. xvi. 5, of the avenging justice of God, "Righteous art Thou" (Δίκαιος εἶ),—so in John xvii. 25, God is addressed "O righteous Father" (Πατὴρ δίκαιε). And yet with all this, the principle that "God is love" is deeply stamped upon the Apocalypse. Although the Book, as describing the Divine judgments, dwells on the wrath of God (cf. John v. 22-29), still we never lose sight of His mercy and loving-kindness. The thought contained in ch. vii. 17, which is repeated in ch. xxi. 4,—that "God shall wipe away every tear from the eyes" of men—is also implied in ch. xxi. 7, where the idea of "son" includes that of "Father." This same thought reappears in another form in ch. xxi. 3: "God himself shall be with them, and be their God," where the words "their God" at once recall John xx. 17. If in John iii. 17, God comes in Christ not to judge but to save; in the Apocalypse, God comes in

¹ When discussing this question, Scholten (l. c., s. 129) asserts that Matt. xix. 28 is spurious. There is, however, really no more doubt as to the genuineness of this verse than as to the genuineness of any other verse in the New Test.:—see Tischendorf, 8th ed., in loc.

Christ to judge—but, only after the work of mercy has been accomplished, ch. xix. 11; xx. 11–15. The judgment of the world, indeed, and the conflict between Christ and the world are the constant theme of the Fourth Gospel, e.g. John xii. 31; xv. 19, 20; xvi. 11; nay, that peculiar feature of the Apocalypse—the First Resurrection—is not obscurely foreshadowed in John v. 25–29: see on Rev. xx.

Let the following passages also be compared: Rev. i. 5; iii. 4; v. 9, with 1 John i. 7;—Rev. ii. 17 with John vi. 32;—Rev. iii. 20 with John xiv. 23;—Rev. vii. 16 with John vi. 35;—Rev. xxi. 6; xxii. 17 with John iv. 10, 14; vii. 37.

III. The question as to the identity of doctrine is next to be considered. And first of all, as to the Christology of the Book:—

(a) The Christology of the Apocalypse perfectly reflects that of the Fourth Gospel. The Ancient Church styled the Author of the Apocalypse Theologos (see the remarks introductory to ch. i.), because he taught the Godhead of the Logos; and this fact Scholten (l. c., s. 9) turns into the objection that the “Apotheosis of Jesus is stated too strongly to be ascribed to a contemporary and disciple of Jesus,”—see e.g. ch. iii. 21.

The title Logos, “The Word,” describes as an exclusive attribute the Person of Christ:—In the Fourth Gospel we read (i. 1) “The Word was God” (Θεὸς ἦν ὁ Λόγος). In Rev. xix. 13 He is called, at His Second Coming, “the Word of God;” as in 1 John i. 1, He is called “the Word of Life.” When He is called absolutely “the Word,” in John i. 1, the genitive (τοῦ Θεοῦ) underlies the sense;—just as when “The Life” (ἡ ζωή, John i. 4), also taken absolutely, is applied to Him: cf. John v. 26. Accordingly, in the Apocalypse (ch. xix. 13), where Christ appears as the supreme and final Revelation of Jehovah, the genitive (τοῦ Θεοῦ) is added to the absolute ὁ Λόγος. The titles, too, which paraphrase the name Jehovah, are, with but slight notes of distinction, applied to God and Christ:—“Alpha and Omega,” “the First and the Last,” “the Beginning and the End,”

“the Holy and True,” “the Amen,” He that is “alive for evermore” (Rev. i. 8, 17; iii. 7, 14; xxi. 6; xxii. 13). In Rev. iii. 14 Christ is “the Beginning of the Creation of God” (ἡ ἀρχή, see John i. 1; cf. Col. i. 15). In this passage of the Apocalypse, the title (ἡ ἀρχή) cannot mean a being prior to all others, “the first created,” any more than “the Last” (ch. i. 17) can mean, ‘One who comes last or after others:’ it means ‘the Beginning,’ ‘the primal Source’—principium not initium (see in loc.)—from Which all Creation flows; just as “the Last” means the end to which all Creation returns. Through Christ all things created are connected with God:—and this is the thought which “the Word,” as represented in the Fourth Gospel, conveys, see John i. 3; cf. Rev. iv. 11. The pre-existence of Christ is also implied,—see John xvii. 5; and cf. Rev. xiii. 8 with John xvii. 24.

The name “Jesus Christ” occurs in Rev. i. 1, 2, 5; and in the Fourth Gospel in ch. i. 17; xvii. 3. The title “Son of God,” which is frequent in the Fourth Gospel, is found in Rev. ii. 18; and similarly the title “Son of Man” occurs eleven times in the Fourth Gospel, and appears in Rev. i. 13; xiv. 14. Throughout the Apocalypse Christ is styled “the Lamb,”—e.g. ch. v. 6; and the title is applied to Him twenty-eight times. In the Fourth Gospel He is “the Lamb of God,” John i. 29, 36. In John xix. 36—“a bone of Him shall not be broken”—the reference to Ex. xii. 46 proves that “the Lamb of God” is the Paschal Lamb, the “Lamb slain” (a phrase more than once to be found in the Apocalypse, ch. v. 6, 9, 12; xiii. 8), by Whom and by Whose blood the sins of the world have been taken away,—see John i. 29; 1 John i. 7; ii. 2; Rev. i. 5;¹ vii. 14. (On the Greek word rendered “Lamb,” see below, p. 457). The idea of “redemption” is also expressed in Rev. v. 9; xiv. 3, 4; cf. John vi. 51; x. 15; xv. 13. In Rev. iii. 21 Christ sits at the Father's throne; in John i. 18 He is the Son who is in the bosom of the Father;—in Rev. i. 4, 5, as in 2 John 3, "grace and peace" come from Christ as well as from God. Like God, the Lamb is the Temple and the Lamp of the heavenly City (Rev. xxi. 22, 23); He receives worship at the same time, and in the same manner as the Father (Rev. v. 11-13); and that worship belongs to Him which may not be rendered to Angels (ch. xix. 10; xxii. 9):—all this but reflects the thought expressed in John v. 23, "that all may honour the Son, even as they honour the Father."

¹ In Rev. i. 5, a few authorities give the reading λούσαντι in place of λύσαντι. Cf. the former with the use of λούειν in John xiii. 10.

In the Fourth Gospel, God revealed in Christ is Life, Light, Love (e.g. John i. 4, 5, 9; xv. 9, 10; xvii. 2, 26; cf. 1 John iv. 8, 16),—abstract terms which express the three characteristic thoughts of St. John. In the Apocalypse, God is He "that liveth for ever and ever," ch. iv. 9; x. 6; xv. 7; cf. vii. 2:—God is Light, ch. xxi. 23; xxii. 5; cf. ch. iv. 3:—while the words of ch. i. 5; iii. 9, reflect all that the Fourth Gospel and the Joannean Epistles declare as to the Divine Love. (See above the objection urged by Dionysius of Alexandria, (iii.), p. 441).

If we compare Rev. v. 9 with John xvii. 4, 5 (observe καὶ νῦν,—"And now," i. e., 'My work being accomplished'), we at once perceive that the Apocalypse and the Gospel present the death of Christ from the same point of view. In Rev. xii. 11, we read that when Christ's kingdom was founded, the Dragon was subdued and his power broken:—this is also the doctrine of John xii. 31; xiv. 30; 1 John iii. 8. Christ speaks of God as "My Father" (John ii. 16; xiv. 2), as "My God" (John xx. 17):—and so also in Rev. ii. 27; iii. 2, 5, 12, 21 (in Rev. xiv. 1, God is called "His [the Lamb's] Father"). In John vi. 51; viii. 12; x. 7, 11, He uses the emphatic "I am;"—and so too in Rev. i. 8, 17; ii. 23; xxi. 6; xxii. 13, 16. Compare also the formula "I will give" ["water," "bread"], in John iv. 14; vi. 51, as in Rev. ii. 7, 17; xxi. 6. As a shepherd He feeds His flock, leads them, and they follow Him, Rev. vii. 17; xiv. 4: this image occurs in John x. where it is transformed into a complete parabolic discourse,—cf. John xxi. 16. He leads to "the fountain of the water of life," Rev. vii. 17; xxi. 6; xxii. 17;—cf. this thought with John iv. 10, 14; vii. 37. As a Bridegroom He receives the Church as His Bride, Rev. xix. 7; xxi. 2, 9;—cf. John iii. 29. Compare in like manner Rev. i. 7, with John xix. 37;—Rev. ii. 7, with 1 John v. 11;—Rev. ii. 11, with John xi. 26;—Rev. iii. 7, with John x. 9;—Rev. iii. 20, with John xiv. 23; xvii. 21-26;—Rev. xxi. 23, 24, with John viii. 12;—Rev. xiv. 4, with John xiii. 36.

Christ is placed in the same rank with God in Rev. vi. 16; xii. 10; xiv. 4; xxi. 22;—and so He is placed in John v. 17-26; viii. 19; x. 15; xvii. 1; 1 John ii. 23. The doxologies in Rev. v. 13; vii. 10; xi. 15, where the same expressions are applied to Christ and to God, merely reflect such texts as John viii. 16; xv. 23; xvi. 3; xvii. 3; 1 John i. 3; ii. 22; 2 John 3, 9. Such passages, indeed, as Rev. xx. 6; xxii. 1, 3, are founded on the great principle announced in John x. 30, "I and the Father are one" (cf. xiv. 9). As God is worshipped in Rev. iv. 8-11, so is Christ in Rev. v. 12, 13:—Angels and men "honour the Son even as they honour the Father," John v. 23.

Acts of the same kind are ascribed to God and to Christ. The "sending" of the Angel "to show unto His servants the things which must shortly come to pass,"—an act ascribed to God in Rev. xxii. 6, and ascribed to Christ in Rev. i. 1; xxii. 16,—corresponds to the "sending" the Comforter by the Father in John xiv. 26, and by Christ in John xv. 26. If both God and Christ are the light of the Heavenly City in Rev. xxi. 23; xxii. 5, the presence of both is the recompense of the faithful in John xiv. 18, 23, and their protection in John x. 28, 29.

If Christ is "He which searcheth the reins and hearts" in Rev. ii. 23, we read to the same effect in John ii. 24, 25:—cf. John vi. 61, 70.

In both the Fourth Gospel and the Apocalypse the "Tabernacle" of God, or of Christ is with (or among) men, John i. 14; Rev. vii. 15; xxi. 3:—in the former He speaks of His body under the figure of a Sanctuary (ναός), John ii. 19; in the latter He is Himself the Sanctuary of the New Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 22.

The references to the Resurrection in Rev. i. 17, 18 ; ii. 8, are parallel to those in John ii. 19 ; x. 17, 18 :—compare, too, Rev. i. 18, where Christ has “the keys of death and of hell,” with John v. 21 ; vi. 39 ; xi. 25 ;—Rev. i. 5 (“the first born of the dead”), with John xiv. 19 ; xx. 17 ;—Rev. xii. 5, (the “Man Child Who . . . was caught up unto God”), with John vii. 33 ; xiii. 3 ; xvi. 16. In Rev. i. 18, Christ is “the Living One,”—He “that is alive for evermore ;” in John xiv. 6, 19, He names Himself “the Way, the Truth, and the Life ;” and declares “Because I live, ye shall live also.”

In fine,—the doctrine of the “subordination” of the Son, expressed in Rev. i. 1, is the reflection of what is taught in John v. 19, 26 ; x. 29 ; xiv. 28.

The Gospel, in short, presents Christ, in His state of humiliation, as the object of faith ; the Apocalypse reveals Him in His state of Glory, as a King carrying out the scheme of redemption, and executing judgment. Each Book is the complement of the other ; and both, by their union, make up one perfect whole. The Evangelist looks to the past ; and brings to light those features of the life of Christ which set forth the glory of the Word made flesh :—the writer of the Apocalypse studies with the same care the future ; and unfolds the progress of the Kingdom of God.

(b) The doctrine of the Holy Spirit :—

The Personality of the Holy Ghost is an admitted doctrine of the Fourth Gospel ; so also in the Apocalypse, the Divine Spirit is a distinct Person :—(1) He appears, in the entire fulness of His being, distinct both from God the Father and from Christ, symbolically represented as “the Seven Spirits which are before the throne,” Rev. i. 4 ; iv. 5 (cf. John xv. 26) ; and then as “the Seven Spirits of God” which Christ “hath,” Rev. iii. 1 ; v. 6. In the last of these passages we may discern an analogy to the statement of John iii. 34, that the Spirit is given “without measure” to Christ,—a fulness distinct from that of any gift to man, as the absence of the article in John xx. 22, of itself, indicates. (2) “The Spirit” appears absolutely in Rev. ii. 7 (and the six parallel places) ; xiv. 13 : xxii. 17. In this sense “the Comforter” teaches and reminds the Disciples (John xiv. 26) ; and when He comes, will testify of Jesus (John xv. 26). Compare, too, 1 John iv. 1, with the references to “the Spirit of prophecy in” Rev. xix. 10 ; and “the spirits of the prophets in” Rev. xxii. 6.

(c) The Ministry of Angels—of which the Apocalypse from beginning to end testifies—is taught by Christ in John i. 51 ; is confessed by the people, John xii. 29 ; is represented as a matter of fact, John xx. 12, 13.

(d) The Christian life :—

(1) The formula, “to keep the commandments” of God or of Christ, so continually employed by the Apostle, is variously expressed (τηρεῖν τὰ γράμματα, τὰ ἔργα, τὸν λόγον, τὰς ἐντολάς, τὰ ἱμάτια, &c.) in Rev. i. 3 ; ii. 26 ; iii. 8 ; xii. 17 ; xvi. 15 ;—the verb is used absolutely in ch. iii. 3, but always in this moral sense. With the exception of John ii. 10, this is always the sense of τηρεῖν (24 times) in the Fourth Gospel, and in the first Epistle of St. John. (2) We read in Rev. xxi. 27 : xxii. 15 of him that “doeth (ποιῶν) a lie ;”—in John iii. 21 ; 1 John i. 6 of him that “doeth the truth.” (3) In Rev. i. 9 (cf. ch. iii. 10), of “the patience which is in Jesus” (ὑπομονή) ;—with which cf. the “abiding” (μένειν) in Him, John xv. 4 ; 1 John ii. 6 ; 2 John 9. (4) If the “beloved” are commanded “to prove (δοκιμάζειν) the spirits,” in 1 John iv. 1,—the Church of Ephesus is commended (Rev. ii. 2) for having “tried” (πειράζειν) “them which call themselves Apostles.” (5) The use of the verb ἀρνέσθαι, “thou didst not deny my faith,” or “my name,” Rev. ii. 13 ; iii. 8, is entirely parallel to its use in John xviii. 25–27 ; 1 John ii. 22, 23. (6) And so is the mention of the trials of the faithful, Rev. ii. 10 ; iii. 10, to such passages as John xv. 18–21 ; xvi. 1–4 ; 1 John iii. 13. Compare also Rev. iii. 11, with 2 John 8 ;—Rev. ii. 9, 19, with John xv. 2, 5 ;—Rev. vii. 14 ; xxii. 11, 14, with 1 John iii. 3. (7) “To walk” (περιπατεῖν) is used to denote moral action in Rev. iii. 4 ; xvi. 15 ; xxi. 24 ;

John viii. 12 ; xii. 35 ; and ten times in the three Epistles,—e. g. 1 John i. 6 ; 2 John 4 ; 3 John 3. (8) The verbs δυσᾶν, πεινᾶν are used to denote the profound cravings of the soul—and in this sense only—in Rev. vii. 16 ; xxi. 6 ; xxii. 17 ; John iv. 13, 14, 15 ; vi. 35 ; vii. 37 ; xix. 28. (9) In fine, the full conception of the Christian life is summed up by St. John in the thought of “overcoming the world.” In expressing this thought the verb νικᾶν is used to denote the triumph over evil, not only absolutely,—as throughout the Seven Epistles, Rev. ii. ; iii.,—but also with an object: compare especially Rev. xii. 11 ; xiii. 7 ; John xvi. 33 ; 1 John ii. 13, 14 ; v. 4. See the note on ch. ii. 7.

To be excluded from eternal life is represented in Rev. ii. 11 ; xx. 14 ; xxi. 8, as “the second death ;” and this same figurative sense of “death” is found, in the New Test., only in John xi. 25, 26 ; 1 John v. 16, 17 :—on the idea of spiritual death, cf. John v. 24, 1 John iii. 14. And finally, the judgment of men “according to their works” is expressed alike in Rev. xx. 12, 13, and John v. 29 (cf. Rom. ii. 6).

(e) Eschatology :—

The doctrine of the Apocalypse properly so-called, as revealing the Second Advent of Christ,—His “Coming,” His “Presence,” the “Parusia” (1 John ii. 28 ; cf. Matt. xxiv. 27, 37, 39),—and especially the future perfection of the kingdom of God, has been termed “Eschatology” (see Lücke, l. c., s. 23). This, the leading theme of the Book, is brought forward exactly after the same manner as is the leading theme of the Fourth Gospel. From the very first, in ch. iii. 12, we meet “the New Jerusalem” of ch. xxi. ;—already in ch. xi. 7, we meet “the Beast” of ch. xiii. So in the Gospel also :—from the outset (John i. 29, 51 ; vi. 71), the Saviour’s death and betrayal, and resurrection and glory are placed in the foreground ; while the Lord’s future return to judge and to recompense is referred to in the Gospel and the Epistles in such a manner as to recall the various aspects of Apocalyptic Eschatology,—John v. 28, 29 ; vi. 39, 40, 44, 54 ; xi. 24 ; xii.

48 ; 1 John ii. 18, 28 ; iv. 3, 17 ; 2 John 7. The First Advent of Christ in the Spirit is, indeed, the great theme of the Fourth Gospel ; but still His Personal return is the chief thought with which He comforts the disciples—see John xiv. 2. In John v. 28, 29, moreover, the Gospel points to His visible return ; and on this subject, as Luthardt¹ observes, we must neither spiritualize the Gospel, nor materialize the Revelation. In the Gospel the ordinary forms of language are used to express the thought ; in the Revelation all is conveyed by figures. In the former, the standpoint is the presence of the Spirit ; in the latter, the issues of history. The Apocalypse, at each instant, recalls and reflects the prophetic language of the Old Test. ; while it also sums up the Eschatology of the New. Thus, the teaching of St. Paul as to the “Parusia” (1 Cor. xv. 23 ; 1 Thess. iv. 15 ; cf. Rev. xxii. 20),—and “the Israel of God” (Gal. vi. 16 ; cf. Rev. vii. 4),—and the “Jerusalem which is above” (Gal. iv. 26 ; cf. Rev. xxi. 2),—is repeated in the symbolism of the Apocalypse. Eschatology is, by its very idea, the history of the future,—the history of the building up of the kingdom of Christ, on the ruins of the kingdom of Satan. In a word, the history of Christian hope is re-echoed, throughout the ages, in the central thought of the Apocalypse—“The Lord is at hand.”

(f) Demonology :—

In the kindred texts of the Apocalypse, ch. xii. 9 and ch. xx. 2, the chief titles of the spirit of evil are accumulated :—indeed, the epithets, Devil (διάβολος, Rev. ii. 10 ; John viii. 44 ; 1 John iii. 8, and Satan (Σατᾶν), Rev. ii. 9 ; John xiii. 27), are common to all St. John’s writings. The remarkable designation of the evil one as, “the Prince of this world” (ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, John xii. 31 ; xiv. 30 ; xvi. 11), is reflected in the statements that Satan and his agents “deceive the whole world” (Rev. xii. 9 ; xiii. 14 ; xix. 20 ; xx. 3, 8, 10) ;—that “a throne” is given him (Rev. ii. 13);—that the Dragon bears “seven diadems” (Rev. xii. 3);—that his agent, the Beast, bears “ten diadems” (Rev. xiii. 1), and receives from the Dragon “his throne” (Rev. xiii. 2; cf. ch. xvi. 10). In both the Apocalypse and the Fourth Gospel we read how the effects of the evil principle are ascribed to Satan personally: e. g. murder and lying,—Rev. ii. 13; iii. 9; John viii. 44; 1 John ii. 21, 22; iii. 12. In 1 John iii. 10, the wicked are “the children of the Devil,” while in Rev. ii. 9 they are “the synagogue of Satan.” Compare Rev. xii. 11 with 1 John ii. 13, 14;—Rev. xii. 7–9, with John xii. 31; xvi. 11 (cf. also John xiv. 30; xvi. 33). See Note A on ch. xiii.

¹ St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel, Clark’s tr. p. 273.

IV. The Language and style of the Apocalypse:—

The objection which, at all times, has formed the principal argument against our ascribing the Apocalypse to the Apostle John, rests upon its style,—a style which Lücke and others affirm to be so distinct from that of the Fourth Gospel and the Joannean Epistles, as to compel us to infer a different author. The peculiar style of the Apocalypse is recognized on all hands: it results naturally from the excited condition of prophetic ecstasy. The distinction is clearly defined between one who speaks “in the Spirit” (ἐν πνεύματι, Rev. i. 10; iv. 2, &c.) and one who speaks “with the understanding” (τῷ νοί, 1 Cor. xiv. 15). We know how St. Paul describes the former state in 2 Cor. xii. 2–4; and we can trace the effect of this spiritual exaltation in the contrast between the historical and the predictive portions of a Prophet’s utterance:—cf. Isaiah xxxvi.; xxxvii. with the rest of the Book (see Lee On Inspiration, p. 180, &c.). To explain, on “rational” grounds, this phenomenon of the diversity of style and language presented by writings of the same author, various theories have been started. Some tell us that St. John’s old age deprived his diction of its wonted force and vigour; while others, who place the date of the Apocalypse before the date of the Gospel, consider that his residence at Ephesus affected and softened the Hebraistic peculiarities of his earlier style.¹ Harenberg has even suggested that the Apocalypse was originally written in Aramaic.²

So early as the third century, it has been already pointed out [see (ii.) and (iii.), p. 441], the peculiarities of style which mark the Book were used as an argument to prove that the writer of the Fourth Gospel and of the First Epistle of St. John could not have been the author of the Apocalypse. Of the Gospel and Epistle Dionysius Alex. writes that they were composed “not only without blemishes, but in elegant and polished Greek; their author evidently possessing the gift of both knowledge and expression (τῆς γνώσεως, τῆς φράσεως). He who beheld the Apocalypse, on the contrary, had the gift of knowledge, but not that of expression:—his Greek is not accurate; it abounds in barbarous idioms and sometimes even in solecisms;”³ and so forth.

¹ Milton’s critics argue in exactly the opposite way. Comus appeared in 1637; Paradise Lost in 1667; Samson Agonistes in 1671, three years before the poet’s death. The melodious versification of Comus, the sublime richness of Paradise Lost, the rugged grandeur of Samson Agonistes, harmonize respectively with the age of Milton when he wrote these works. In the case of Shakspeare, “harshness and obscurity” are placed by his critics “among the notes of his third manner;” nor would his style in this last stage, “even were it possible by study to reproduce it, be of itself a perfect and blameless model:”—see Fortnightly Review, 1876, p. 30, “The three stages of Shakspeare.”

² “Erklär. der Offenb. Johannis,” s. 72:—see Lücke, s. 441. That the Book was originally written in Greek, is evident, not only from the fact of its having been addressed to Greek-speaking communities, but also from the familiarity with the Greek language which the work displays:—for example, in such instances as the Greek names of precious stones, ch. xxi.; the Greek measures of weight and length, ch. vi. 6; xiv. 20; xxi.; the Greek rendering of Hebrew words, ch. ix. 11; the symbolism of Greek letters, ch. i. 8; xxi. 6; xxii. 13,—especially ch. xiii. 18; not to mention the use of classical expressions such as τυφλός, ἡμιόριον, μεσουράνημα, δακύνθωος, ταλασσίαις, ξύλον θύϊνον, τετράγωνος, διαυγής, &c. One may add, too, the use of the LXX. when reference is made to the Old Test.:—cf., e.g., ch. vii. 9; xi. 9, with Dan. iii. 4, 7, 29; v. 19; vi. 25;—ch. v. 5, with Isai. xi. 1, 10, &c. (see below).

³ Dionysius writes that the Fourth Gospel and First Epistle were written:—ὁ μόνος ἀπταίστως κατὰ τὴν Ἑλλήνων φωνήν, ἀλλὰ καὶ λογιώτατα ταῖς λέξεσι, τοῖς συλλογισμοῖς, ταῖς

As will be seen presently, this description unduly exaggerates the anomalies and diversities of style: meanwhile, the attempt of Beza and Hitzig (see p. 443, note ¹) to prove, from the resemblance in diction between the Apocalypse and the Second Gospel, that the writer of the former was the Evangelist John Mark, illustrates how frail is the support which this line of argument supplies to any theory of authorship.¹ Let this aspect of the objections urged be now considered.

The Apocalypse, we are told, as contrasted with the Fourth Gospel, and the Joannean Epistles contains:—

(a) 'Hebraisms or Aramaic idioms.'

In reply to this statement, if urged as an objection, an analogous instance may be adduced:—The style of Josephus, when he writes the history of the Old Test., is more decidedly Aramaic than when he describes the events of his own time, and does not refer to a foreign model (see Winer, Grammatik des N. T. Sprachidioms, 6^{te} Aufl., 1835, § 3, s. 31). Doubtless, the Hebrew element in the Apocalypse² where St. John delineates the bright or the gloomy outlines of the future, after the manner of the Hebrew Prophets, is far more conspicuous than in those earlier compositions of his in which he too, as well as other New Test. writers, calmly records his own reminiscences. In the former his thoughts flow ἐν πνεύματι, in the latter ἐν νοί. Indeed, it is evident of itself that the historical portions of the

New Testament would naturally depart far more from the style and manner of the Old than the prophetic; and this fact may be illustrated by what Matthiæ notes in his grammar (vol. i., Introd. p. 11, Kinrie's ed.) of Athenian Tragedy, where the lyric choruses approach the Doric dialect,—the more impassioned parts being distinguished by the predominance of Doric, and the calmer by the use of Attic. The language of the Apocalypse, in fact, is more akin to the Hebrew than to the Greek; and while the Fourth Gospel proceeds in propositions of the usual historical and narrative character, the Apocalypse is occupied with Visions and imagery corresponding to the Hebrew diction of the Old Test., especially to its prophetic and sacred forms of speech¹:—Thus we find in the Apoc. for "Jerusalem" only the form Ἱερουσαλήμ² (ירושלם), which is always used in the LXX. version of the Canonical Books; while in St. John's Gospel, as in St. Matthew's (with one exception,—Matt. xxiii. 37), and St. Mark's, the Greek and civil form, Ἱεροσόλυμα, alone is found. And yet, as Bishop Lightfoot observes (Cont. Rev., May 1875, p. 860), the Apocalypse, "after all allowance made for solecisms, shows a very considerable command of the Greek vocabulary, and (what is more important) a familiarity with the intricacies of the very intricate syntax of this language."

¹ E. g. the Hebrew words, Abaddon, ch. ix. 11; Har-Magedon, ch. xvi. 16; Amen, Hallelujah, ch. xix. 1, 3, 4, 6;—such phrases as, "He that hath the key of David," "the root and offspring of David," "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" (ch. iii. 7; v. 5; xxii. 16);—the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, ch. v. 5; xxi. 13. The Apocalypse "does not, indeed, mention any one of the Hebrew Prophets by name. It knows nothing of Isaiah, or Daniel, or Zechariah, as individuals. But nearly in every line it breathes their spirit, and almost utters their words."—Bishop Wordsworth, Intr. to the Book of Rev., p. 150.

² Grimm notes: "Hæc forma constanter ap. LXX.; in N. T. ubi in ipso nomine tanquam sancto vis quædam reponitur, ut Gal. iv. 25, 26; Heb. xii. 22; Ap. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10; coll. Jos. c. Apion. i. 22; ita in compellationibus Mt. xxiii. 37; Lc. xiii. 34. Promiscue utraque forma usurpatur in apocryphis V. T., in Lucæ et Pauli scriptis."

συτάξεις τῆς ἐρμηνείας (ap. Euseb. vii. 25); but in the Apocalypse—διάλεκτον, καὶ γλῶσσαν οὐκ ἀκριβῶς ἐλληνίζουσιν αὐτοῦ βλέπω, ἀλλ' ἰδιώμασι μὲν βαρβαρικοῖς χρώμενον, καὶ που καὶ σολαιζόντα (ib.).

¹ The similar attempt of Hartwig according to Ebrard (Krit. d. Ev. Gesch., s. 855), has paved the way for the correct method of demonstrating the authenticity of the Apocalypse.

² E. g., the instances of pleonasm in the case of the redundant pronouns in relative sentences, as in Rev. iii. 8; vii. 2, 9; xi. 8; which occur much more frequently in the LXX., in accordance with the Hebrew idiom,—see Ex. iv. 17; 1 Kings xi. 34; Ps. xxxix. 5; Isai. i. 21, &c.: compare Winer, § 22, 4, a, s. 134. Compare too the case of the "relative adverb," Rev. xii. 6, 14,—see Deut. iv. 5, 14, 26; 1 Macc. xiv. 34.

When this Hebrew colouring is urged as an objection, it is not difficult to point out that here also the Apocalypse resembles the Fourth Gospel. It is pretty generally admitted by modern critics that the style of the Gospel of St. John is that of a born Jew, and certainly not that of an educated Greek:—the result is given below in the words of Mr. Sanday.¹ A few illustrations may be added here:—In Rev. ix. 11 we read “his name in Hebrew is Abaddon” (ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἑβραϊστὶ Ἀβαδδών) followed, after the manner of the Fourth Gospel, by the addition of the Greek equivalent for the Hebrew term,—see John i. 38, 42; iv. 25; ix. 7; xi. 16; xx. 16, 24; xxi. 2. In the case of Rev. iii. 14—“the Amen, the faithful and true Witness” (ὁ Ἀμήν, ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς καὶ ὁ ἀληθινός)—one may note the formula of assurance, peculiar to St. John’s Gospel, and used only by our Lord, “Verily, verily, I say unto you,”

¹ The Authorship of the Fourth Gospel, p. 28: “Representatives of such different schools as Luthardt, Ewald, Wittichen, and Keim, all speak to the same effect. . . . ‘The language of the book,’ says Keim (i. 116, 117), ‘is a reconciliation of the parties (Jew and Greek) in itself, so marvellously does it combine the facility and address of genuine Greek with the childlike simplicity, the figurativeness, yes, and the gaucherie (Unbeholfenheit) of Hebrew.’ Ewald expresses himself similarly (pp. 44–47). It is Hebrew in a Greek dress—easily worn. The Greek has been learnt somewhat late in life, and has been fitted on to a framework of Hebrew. Luthardt (pp. 61, 65) describes this by a different metaphor: he says that ‘a soul of Hebrew lives in it.’ ‘The imagery and modes of thought in the Fourth Gospel are rooted in the Old Testament, and have grown up out of the prophecy of the Old Testament.’ M. Wittichen . . . has gone carefully into this part of the subject; and gives a list of expressions which betray a specifically Hebrew origin’—(Ev. Joh. 5–7).” E. g. :—

“Hebraistic words and phrases: σκανδαλίζειν (xvi. 1), γεύεσθαι θανάτου (viii. 52), φαγεῖν τὸ πᾶσχα (xviii. 28), ὑψωθῆναι ἐκ τῆς γῆς (xii. 32), ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντεῦθεν (xix. 18), σφραγίζειν, ‘approve’ (iii. 23), σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα (iv. 48), ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου (xii. 19), ἕξις ἵνα (i. 27), περιπατεῖν trop. (viii. 12). Figures of speech: the woman in travail, xvi. 21 (cf. Isai. xxi. 3, Hos. xiii. 13); living water, iv. 10 (cf. Ecclus. xv. 3, Baruch iii. 12); the lamp, λύχνος, v. 35 (2 Sam. xxi. 17, Ecclus. xlvi. 1). Special Theological terms: βασιλεία θεοῦ (iii. 3), ὁργὴ and κρίσις (iii. 18, 36), δικαιοσύνη (xvi. 8), ἀγιάζειν (xvii. 19).”—See Sanday, l. c., p. 289.

(Ἀμήν, ἀμήν, λέγω ὑμῖν). Compare the Hebrew idioms, John i. 12, 18; vi. 39; vii. 38, with “he that overcometh to him will I give” (ὁ νικῶν δώσω αὐτῷ), Rev. ii. 26; iii. 12, 21; vi. 8. As in Rev. i. 6 (βασιλεία ἱερῆς), a substantive in apposition supplies the place of an adjective,—so in John xii. 3. The verb commonly precedes its subject:—e. g. “saith he that holdeth” (λέγει ὁ κρατῶν), Rev. ii. 1 (cf. vv. 8, 12, 18; iii. 1, &c.); a usage frequent in the Gospel,—ἀπεκρίθη ὁ Ἰωάννης, John i. 26 (cf. vv. 50, 51; ii. 3; v. 7, &c.).

(b) It is further objected that ‘The Author of the Apocalypse and the Author of the Fourth Gospel, differ in their use of the LXX.’ :—

On the contrary, a striking parallel may be noted. Both writers follow the LXX,—although both sometimes abandon this Version in order to approach more nearly to the Hebrew text. Thus, in Rev. ii. 27 (cf. ch. xix. 15)—“He shall rule them . . . as the vessels of the potter are broken to shivers.” (ποιμανεῖ αὐτοὺς . . . ὡς τὰ σκεύη τὰ κεραμικὰ συντρίβεται)—the variation is insignificant from the LXX. version of Ps. ii. 9 (ποιμανεῖς αὐτοὺς . . . ὡς σκεῦος κεραμέως συντρίψει αὐτούς)¹ and is owing to the nature of the context.

¹ So, too, comparing Rev. xv. 4, πάντα τὰ ἔθνη ἔξουσιν καὶ προσκυνήσουσιν, with Isai. lxvi. 23, ἔξει πᾶσα σὰρξ τοῦ προσκυνῆσαι. Compare John xv. 25, ἐμίσησαν, with Ps. xxxv. 19, οἱ μισοῦντες, and John xix. 36, ὅστων οὐ συντρίβησεται αὐτοῦ, with Ex. xii. 46, ὅστων οὐ συντρίψετε ἀπ’ αὐτοῦ. Cf., also, Rev. vi. 8, Ezek. xiv. 21;—Rev. x. 5, 6, Dan. xii. 7;—Rev. xviii. 23, Jer. vii. 34;—John ii. 17, Ps. lxix. 10;—John vi. 31; Ps. lxxviii. 24: see p. 455, note ².

At times the author of the Apocalypse shows himself independent of the LXX.: e. g. Rev. ii. 17, τοῦ μάννα τοῦ κεκρυμμένου,—Deut. viii. 3, τὸ μάννα ὃ οὐκ ἔδωκαν οἱ πατέρες σου. Compare also Rev. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xviii. 3, with Jer. xxv. 15, 16; Isai. li. 17, 22. (Note the various reading of Rev. xviii. 3, πέπτωκαν, as compared with τὸ ποτήριον τῆς πᾶσης, Isai. li. 17). The same independent mode of citation is followed in the Gospel: cf. John vi. 45 with Isai. liv. 13;—John xii. 40 with Isai. vi. 10;—John xiii. 18 with Ps. xli. 10; &c.

The most remarkable quotation of this class is that of Zech. xii. 10 in Rev. i. 7; John xix. 37,—in both of which passages the καταρχήσαντο of the LXX. is changed into ἐξεκέντησαν, and ἐπιβλέπεσθαι into ὑπνέσθαι: see the note on Rev. i. 7.

The absence of direct quotations accounts for the fewness of the instances in which the Apocalypse, as in the case of Rev. i. 7, abandons the LXX. in order to return to the Hebrew original. In the Gospel also such instances are rare.

(c) 'Differences in language and manner' afford another ground of objection:—

There are certain peculiarities characteristic of the Apocalypse, on the one hand, and of the Fourth Gospel and the First Epistle of St. John, on the other, which cannot fairly be taken into account; inasmuch as such peculiarities result from the different subjects with which these writings are severally occupied. Thus, the spiritual tone of the Gospel and Epistle is reflected in such phrases as to "be born anew," or "from above"¹ (John iii. 3); while, for whatever reason, the Apocalypse has its own peculiar forms of words and phrases:—e.g. the form of the word "Jerusalem"² (see above, p. 455). Nor does the objector's standing argument prove any real diversity,—viz. that, in John i. 29, 36, where our Lord is styled the "Lamb," we find one form (ἀμνός), instead of the other form (ἀρνίον) which alone is found in the Apocalypse. In the Gospel, John the Baptist twice employs the former (ἀμνός), because that form occurs in the LXX. version of Isai. liii. 7, to which he is referring;—just as it (ἀμνός) is found in Acts viii. 32, and in 1 Pet. i. 19, where the same words of Isaiah are quoted or referred to. In these four places only does ἀμνός appear in the New Test. On the other hand, in John xxi. 15, the latter form (ἀρνίον) is employed by the Evangelist when himself recording a saying of Christ; and in this place only, and in the Apocalypse, does this word (ἀρνίον) appear in the New Test. The result, therefore, is that—while the Baptist borrows from the LXX. one form (ἀμνός)—the other form (ἀρνίον) is the term which St. John himself uses in the Fourth Gospel to express "a lamb." There is, accordingly, no divergence here, but perfect agreement: see the note on ch. v. 6.

Leaving out of sight the nature of the different writings, Lücke (s. 670) further objects that words characteristic of St. John's manner, or of frequent occurrence in his Gospel and Epistles, occur but rarely in the Apocalypse. Thus, ἀγαπᾶν is found only in Rev. i. 5; iii. 9; xii. 11; xx. 9; and ἀγάπη only in Rev. ii. 4, 19;—μένειν only in Rev. xvii. 10;—φωνεῖν only in Rev. xiv. 18;—οὖν, of such constant recurrence in the Fourth Gospel, only six times in the Apocalypse, viz., ch. i. 19; ii. 5, 16; iii. 3 (twice), 19. (As to the case of οὖν, it may here be observed that, in the abrupt narrative of the Apocalypse, there does not exist that close connexion of sentences which would admit of the frequent use of οὖν; and οὖν, it is to be noted, is found only in the first three chapters. Hengstenberg gives, as a parallel case, the use of τε only eight times in St. Luke's Gospel, while it occurs more than 160 times in the Acts). Again, it is objected that πιστός, which is found eight times in the Apocalypse, occurs only in John xx. 27; 1 John i. 9; 3 John 5;—that πίστις, which is found four times in the Apocalypse, occurs only in 1 John v. 4;—that while θεᾶσθαι and θεωρεῖν are frequently used in the Fourth Gospel, as well as in 1 John i. 1; iii. 17; iv. 12, 14, θεωρεῖν alone is used in the Apocalypse, and there, only in Rev. xi. 11, 12 (ὁρᾶν, βλέπειν, εἶδον, continually employed in the Gospel and Epistles, are the verbs which appear in the Apocalypse).

Of a similar character are the following objections, also urged by Lücke among many of the same kind:—

The phrase "to have part" (ἔχειν μέρος) occurs, it is true, both in the Fourth Gospel and in the Apocalypse; but in the former (John xiii. 8), it refers to a person, and is followed by the preposition "with" (μετά),—while in the latter (ch. xx. 6; xxi. 8) it does not refer to a person, and is followed by "in" (ἐν). The Apocalypse has, no doubt, the phrase characteristic of the Fourth Gospel, "to keep the commandments of God" (τηρεῖν τὰς ἐντολὰς τοῦ Θεοῦ); but, in Rev. xiv. 12, the words "and the faith of Jesus" (καὶ τὴν πίστιν Ἰησοῦ) are added, which are not found in the Gospel. The name "Satan" (ὁ Σατανᾶς), which is found eight times in the Apocalypse, occurs once only in the Gospel (John xiii. 27); but the Gospel never combines "the Devil and Satan" (διάβολος καὶ ὁ Σατανᾶς), as in Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2. [The verse Rev. xii. 9 sufficiently answers the question,—'Why do we not find in the Apocalypse the phrase "the Prince of this world" (ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου τούτου), John xii. 31?].

¹ For example, εἶναι ἐν τινι (e. g. John xiv. 10),—γεννηθῆναι ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ (1 John iii. 9), μένειν ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ (1 John iii. 14),—κ. τ. λ.

² Compare also ψευδής (Rev. ii. 2; xxi. 8) for ψεύστης (John viii. 44);—εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων (Rev. i. 18, &c.) [cf. the v. l. εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ch. i. 6] for εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα (John vi. 51, &c.);—ἐν τῇ Ἑλληνικῇ (Rev. ix. 11) for Ἑλληνιστί (John xix. 20). Some divergences are merely apparent:—e.g., the case last quoted; for in Rev. ix. 11; xvi. 16, we find Ἑβραϊστί in full agreement with John v. 2; xix. 13, 17, 20. If in Rev. xxi. 6 we read τὸ ὄψω τῆς ζωῆς, and in John iv. 10 ὕδωρ ζωῆς, nevertheless in John vi. 35 we read ὁ ἄριστος τῆς ζωῆς.

It is difficult to understand why a hard and fast rule, such as this form of the objection points to, should be imposed on any author; and why he should be expected to use the same word an equal number of times in his different writings. May there not also be, in all cases, valid reasons for his selection? When we are told for instance that, instead of κόσμος—so repeatedly used by St. John (e.g. John i. 9; iii. 16), and which also appears in Rev. xi. 15; xiii. 8; xvii. 8—the Apocalypse more frequently employs τὰ ἔθνη, πᾶν ἔθνος (e.g. ch. ii. 26; xiv. 6: cf. John xi. 48–52; xviii. 35), the reason is, as Godet observes, "because, in the struggle which constitutes the object of that Vision, the nations are 'the heathen' who represent, in a concrete manner, the worldly principle."—On St. John's Gospel, i. p. 268.

(d) Irregular constructions:—

In the often quoted words, Rev. i. 4—"Grace to you, and peace from Him which is and which was, and which is to come" (εἰρήνη ἀπὸ ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν, καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπὶ πνευμάτων, κ. τ. λ.)—the writer is certainly not ignorant that ἀπὸ governs the genitive, and that ἦν is not a participle. The entire formula ὁ ὢν κ. τ. λ., as Winer observes (l.c., § 10, s. 64), is used as an indeclinable equivalent of the name Jehovah, יהוה.

When Lücke writes (s. 670): "The regular construction of the neuter plural with the singular verb does not appear in the Apocalypse," it is hard to understand his meaning. We read, no doubt, in Rev. i. 19, ἃ εἶδες, καὶ ἃ εἰσίν,—as similarly in John xix. 31, ἵνα κατεργῶσιν αὐτῶν τὰ σκέλη,—but we also have the construction which Lücke says is not found, viz., in Rev. viii. 3; xiii. 14; xiv. 13; xx. 7; xxi. 12 (see Winer, § 58, s. 456): cf. John iii. 19–21; ix. 3; x. 21; 1 John iii. 10, 12. When Ebrard, in reply to Lücke, adduced the text Rev. viii. 3 (ἐδόθη αὐτῷ θυμιάματα πολλά), Lücke's answer is that ἐδόθη is placed first, and that the nominative seems to be taken collectively. This construction, frequently recurs, with, at times, a transition, in the same passage, from the singular to the plural, and vice versa: see Rev. i. 19; viii. 9; xvi. 14; John x. 4, 21, 27; xix. 31. The verb in the plural is also used, as in the LXX,—e.g. in Rev. xi. 18; xv. 4; xvii. 12; cf. Ps. lxxxvi. 9. Rev. iii. 2, and John x. 8, are also to be compared,—τὰ λοιπά and τὰ πρόβατα being explained of persons: see Moulton's ed. of Winer, p. 646.

Again, when different cases are put in apposition, as Rev. i. 5, "from Jesus Christ the faithful witness (ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστός), assuredly the rules of grammar are not unknown to the author, for he follows those rules elsewhere: he evidently does not err from ignorance, but he emancipates himself designedly from grammatical laws. By the side of the alleged solecisms, and, at times, as in the case of Rev. i. 4, in the same verse, the correct grammatical construction, of which the writer is alleged to be ignorant, is found.¹ In every such case, the writer's object is to place the accessory idea (cf. ch. xx. 2), in all its independence, in relation to the principal word (see Godet, ibid.).

To this head belong mixed constructions:—e. g. Rev. iv. 4; v. 11; vii. 9; xiv. 14; xviii. 12–14 (Winer points out that in ch. ii. 17 the just distinction between the cases depending on δώσω, first the genitive and then the accusative, is observed,—§ 63, s. 511). Cf. Rev. xix. 1, where the singular of a collective noun is combined with a plural (ὄχλου . . . λεγόντων: similarly, John vi. 2; vii. 49; xii. 9, 12);—see also ch. viii. 8, 9; ix. 18; xviii. 4. We find the subject suddenly changing from singular to plural (Rev. xiv. 10, 11); the nominative transformed into the accusative (ch. vii. 9), and the accusative into the nominative (ch. xx. 2,—see above); an accumulation of genitives (ch. xvi. 19), &c., &c. The verb substantive also is often suppressed where we naturally look for it (e. g. ἃ ἐνώπιον, Rev. i. 4; τίς ἄξιος, Rev. v. 2; cf. Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεός, John iv. 24).

¹ E.g. if in ch. ii. 20, we meet with τὴν γυναῖκα ἣ λέγουσα, we have in ch. i. 10, ὁ σάλπιγγος λεγόμενος,—if in ch. iii. 12 we meet with τῆς καυῆς ἱερ. ἣ καταβαίνουσα, we have in ch. iii. 10 ἐκ τῆς ὕρας τοῦ πεφρασμοῦ τῆς μελλούσης ἐρχ.

(c) Solecisms:—

Of the solecisms of the Apoc., Winer (§lix. 11) observes:—"In some instances they are the result of design; in others they are to be referred to negligence (?) on the part of the writer. Considered from a Greek point of view, they may be explained as arising out of anacoluthon, the mixture of two constructions, constructio ad sensum, variatio structuræ, &c. In this light they should always have been considered, and not ascribed to the ignorance of the writer, or even regarded as Hebraisms But with all the simplicity and the oriental tone of his language, the author knows well and observes well, the rules of the Greek syntax Rev. ii. 20 should probably be construed thus: 'who giving herself out for a prophetess, teaches and seduces,' &c. Rev. vii. 9 may be explained as containing a mixture of two constructions: in using the nominative the writer had ἰδού before his mind, but in using the accus. περιβεβλημένους, the verb εἶδον, and thus he mixes together the two constructions; cf. iv. 4; Judith x. 7. In Rev. v. 11 ff. the word λέγοντες is not construed with μυριάδες, but (the words καὶ ἦν μυρ. being taken as a parenthesis) with ἄγγελοι, as if the sentence had commenced with φωνὴν ἐπήραν ἄγγελοι κ. τ. λ.: similar examples are Thucyd. vii. 42, τοῖς Συρακουσίοις κατάπληξίς οὐκ ὀλίγη ἐγένετο ὁρῶντες. Achil. Tat. vi. 13; Plat. Phædo, p. 81 a. Elsewhere, λέγων or λέγοντες (iv. 1; vi. 9; xi. 15) stands in connexion with φωνή, φωναί, &c., because the writer is thinking of the speakers themselves. We even find λέγων used quite absolutely in xi. 1; xiv. 7; xix. 6—as in the LXX., where it corresponds to the Hebrew וַיֹּאמֶר, Gen. xv. 1; xxii. 20; Jos. x. 17, &c.; even in Rev. v. 12 it might be so taken. More singular is the irregular apposition in Rev. iii. 12 (where, however, ἡ καταβαίνουσα, since it cannot well be taken as a nominativus tituli, interrupts the structure of the sentence as a significant parenthesis, as if for αὐτῇ ἐστὶν ἡ καταβ.); and also in Rev. xiv. 12 (cf. i. 5), where there is a sudden transition to a new sentence, somewhat as in James iii. 8. In Rev. viii. 9 also, and in ix. 14; xvi. 3, it is probably by design that the apposition is interposed in an independent form: see also xx. 2. In Rev. xxi. 11 ff. the structure changes repeatedly: first we find καταβαίνουσιν in regular agreement with τὴν πόλιν of ver. 10; then is inserted an independent sentence, ὁ φωστήρ κ. τ. λ.; ver. 12 comes back to πόλις, but the attributive commences a new sentence, ἔχουσα κ. τ. λ. . . . In i. 5 ff. τῷ ἀγαπῶντι κ. τ. λ. is connected with αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα κ. τ. λ.; but instead of writing καὶ ποιήσαντι κ. τ. λ., the writer interposes the thought in the form of an independent sentence" (Moulton's transl., p. 672).

On this passage Dr. S. Davidson thus comments: "This language is apologetic, to the extent of substantial incorrectness After all endeavours to find analogies to the linguistic peculiarities and departures from good Greek usage in the [Apocalypse], either in the New Test. or classical writers, anomalies of such a nature and in such number present themselves, as separate the author widely from the Evangelist."—Introd. to the N. T., 1868, vol. i. p. 341.

Such a comment as this of Dr. S. Davidson has called for the discussion with which the present section is occupied.

(f) The style of the Apocalypse:—

In point of style, the Book of the Revelation is marked by those parallelisms full of Oriental majesty which belong to the grandeur of the prophetic language. Examples of the similarity of the Apocalypse in this respect to the Fourth Gospel are not far to seek:—compare, e.g., “Her sins have reached even unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities” (Rev. xviii. 5) with “The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not,”—John i. 5 (cf. also “The world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever,”—1 John ii. 17). We may also compare the rhythmical recurrence of phrases in such passages as Rev. xx. 13; John i. 10; 1 John ii. 13. When the writer’s object is strongly to intensify a thought, an affirmation is followed by a negation, e.g. Rev. iii. 3, 16, 18 (cf. xvi. 15); x. 4; xi. 2; John i. 3; 1 John i. 5:—at times the negation precedes, e.g. Rev. iii. 5; 1 John iii. 18. Antithetical parallels are connected by ἀλλά, Rev. ii. 9; ix. 5; x. 6, 7; xvii. 12; xx. 6; John iii. 16; v. 22; and passim. We find the repetition of the verb in the second member of a phrase, Rev. ii. 6, 17; xvi. 18; John i. 3;—the reproduction of entire phrases, Rev. iii. 21; John xv. 10;—the frequent repetition of a substantive in the same context, Rev. iii. 12 (cf. ch. xiii. 12); John xviii. 36, in order to add force to a thought.¹ Explanatory notes are inserted,—Rev. iv. 5; v. 6; xx. 5, 14; John ii. 21; iv. 2; vii. 39; xxi. 23; 1 John ii. 22. The thought is at times rendered more clear by an explanatory phrase,—Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2; John i. 12. The frequent repetition of the article² between the substantive and the adjective is, in like manner, a marked characteristic of St. John. Græcisms, also, usual in the Fourth Gospel and scarcely to be expected in the Apoc. are nevertheless found there:—e.g. the attraction of the relative pronoun by the preceding substantive, Rev. xviii. 6; John vii. 39; 1 John iii. 24.¹

¹ As an instance of the inverse attraction, cf. Rev. v. 8, αἱ εἰσὶν αἱ προσευχαί; 1 John ii. 8, ὃ ἐστὶν ἀληθές. Compare, too, the instances of irregular apposition, Rev. xvii. 8 (οἱ κατοικοῦντες . . . ὧν οὐ γέγρα. τὸ ὄνομα . . . βλέποντες τὸ θηρ.), and 1 John ii. 25 (ἡ ἐπαγγ. ἦν αὐτοῖς ἐπηγγ. . . . τὴν ζωὴν): see Winer, § 59, s. 469. As examples of the double negation may be adduced Rev. xviii. 11, 14; John iii. 27; xv. 5; xix. 41; 1 John i. 5.

In further illustration of this subject:—

Compare the elliptical phrases, εἶδον θρόνους καὶ ἐκάθισαν, Rev. xx. 4; and ὄρατα πολλὰ ἐν ἐκεῖ, καὶ παρεγένοντο, John iii. 23;—the frequent combination of λέγειν and λαλεῖν, Rev. iv. 1; x. 8; xvii. 1; xxi. 9; John viii. 12; xiv. 10; xvi. 18;—the connexion of φωνή with βροντή, Rev. iv. 5; vi. 1; xiv. 2; &c.; John xii. 29, 30;—of ὥς with περιπατεῖν, Rev. xxi. 24; John xii. 35;—the titles of reverence, μόνος ὁσιος, Rev. xv. 4; μόνος ἀληθινός, John xvii. 3; πιστός καὶ ἀληθινός, Rev. xix. 11; πιστός καὶ δίκαιος, 1 John i. 9;—the constant use of the historic present, Rev. v. 5; vi. 16; xi. 5; xii. 2, 4; &c.; John viii. 14; ix. 13; xv. 27; 1 John iii. 8; &c.:—to which instances of similarity may be added, Rev. ii. 27, ὡς κἀγὼ εἶληφα παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς μου, and John x. 18, ταύτην τὴν ἐντολὴν ἔλαβον παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς μου.

The direct discourse is introduced by ὅτι:—Rev. iii. 17; xviii. 7; John i. 20, 32; &c.; 1 John iv. 20. Cf. τοῦτο ἔχεις ὅτι, Rev. ii. 6, with ἐν τούτῳ ὅτι, John xvi. 30; 1 John ii. 3.

We find ἀπὸ and ἐκ used in the same phrase in a common sense in Rev. iii. 12; ix. 18; xvi. 17; xxi. 2; John i. 45; xi. 1;—the idiomatic use of ἀπὸ to signify distance, a use confined to Rev. xiv. 20; John xi. 18; xxi. 8 (Winer, s. 491, exemplifies the regular construction by Luke xxiv. 13);—of ἐκ to denote part of a whole, Rev. ii. 10; v. 9; xi. 9; John xvi. 17; 2 John 4;—of ἐπὶ, with a dative, in the sense of concerning, Rev. x. 11; John xii. 16; the pleonastic ἐξ with verbs compounded with ἐκ, Rev. iii. 12; [xi. 2]; John ix. 34; xix. 5;—and the pleonastic (?) οὕτως, Rev. ii. 15; iii. 5, 16; John iv. 6; xiii. 25;—the characteristic use of ἵνα, (1) in the absence of ὅπως which is found once only (John xi. 57) in the writings of St. John;—(2) followed by the indicative future, e.g. μακάριοι . . . ἵνα ἔσται, Rev. xxii. 14 (cf. ch. vi. 4, 11; viii. 3; xiv. 13); John xv. 8; xvii. 2;—(3) to express the gerund in dum (a New Test. usage, nowhere so frequent as in St. John’s writings), e.g. οὐ χρεῖαν ἔχει τοῦ ἡλίου οὐδὲ τῆς σελ. ἵνα φαίνωσιν, Rev. xxi. 23; ὅτε ἀπέστειλαν οἱ Ἰουδ. . . . ἵνα ἐρωτήσωσιν, John i. 19;—(4) in Rev. xiii. 13, *ἵνα καὶ τῶν ποιῶ (= ὥστε ποιεῖν, in the sense of adēu w), we*

¹ So also, μαρτυρία and μαρτυρεῖν (Rev. i. 2; John v. 32);—ὥς and φωτίζειν (Rev. xxii. 5; John i. 9);—δίκαιος and δικαιοσύνη (Rev. xxii. 11; 1 John ii. 29; iii. 7) are employed in the same phrase. Cf. μετ’ αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτὸς μετ’ ἐμοῦ, Rev. iii. 20, with John xvii. 23; 1 John iii. 24.

² E.g. ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστός, Rev. i. 5; τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν πρώτην, Rev. ii. 4; τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ δευτέρου, Rev. ii. 11; τὴν ρομφαίαν τὴν διστομόν, Rev. ii. 12; ὁ δεσπότης ὁ ἅγιος, Rev. vi. 10:—τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν, John i. 9; τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ, John ii. 1; τὸ θέλημα τὸ ἐμόν, John v. 30; ὁ καιρὸς ὁ ἐμός, John vii. 6; ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλός, John x. 11; ἡ ἀμπελος ἡ ἀληθινή, John xv. 1; ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ παλαιά, 1 John ii. 7; τῆς ἀδελφῆς τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς, 2 John 13.

§ 8. The Text of the Apocalypse.

As the English Version of 1611 is the basis of the present Commentary, it is necessary to point out, from the beginning, the peculiar position which "the Authorized Translation" of the Apocalypse holds with regard to that of the other Books of the New Testament.

The first printed edition of the Greek Testament formed the fifth volume of the great work published by Cardinal Ximenes—the Complutensian Polyglott, expect δοτε, which occurs in St. John's writings, as Bengel points out, only in John iii. 16, but St. John's constant use of ἵνα is adhered to [here Winer notes: "In the faulty style of the Apoc. ἵνα occurs once (ch. xiii. 13), as it seems for δοτε, δς, after an adjective which includes the idea of intensity,—'magna miracula,' i. e., 'tam magna ut' &c."—s. 409. Winer does not consider 1 John i. 9 (De Wette, Schott) an analogous case];—(5) the use of ἵνα after ποιεῖν, e.g. ποιήσω αὐτοὺς ἵνα ἡξουσιν, Rev. iii. 9; xiii. 12, 16; John xi. 37 (elsewhere, in this sense, we have the infinitive, Mark vii. 37; Luke v. 34).

The phrases ποιεῖν ἀλήθειαν, ψεύδος, γνώμην, ἐπιθυμίαν, κρίσιν, πόλεμον, are found in Rev. xi. 7; xvii. 17; xxii. 15; John iii. 21; v. 27; viii. 44; 1 John i. 6;—we also find ἔχειν ἀνάπαισιν, γνώμην, μέρος, ὑπομονήν, in place of the more usual verbs derived from the substantives, see Rev. ii. 3; iv. 8; xvii. 13; xx. 6; cf. John xiii. 29; xvi. 22; 1 John i. 3, 8. Again λαλεῖν μετὰ τινος, which occurs in Rev. i. 12; iv. 1; x. 8; xvii. 1; xxi. 9, 15; John iv. 27 (twice); ix. 37; xiv. 30, is found elsewhere in the New Test. only in Mark vi. 50; Eph. iv. 25. The phrase ὄνομα αὐτοῦ (e.g. ὁ θάνατος, Ἀβαδδὲν) Rev. vi. 8; ix. 11, is used John i. 6; iii. 1; xviii. 10: elsewhere we read ὃ (or οὗ), ὄνομα, or ὀνόματι δεῖνα ἢ δεῖνα, or ὀνόματι καλούμενος, cf. Matt. xxvii. 32; Luke i. 26, 27; xix. 2. The verb προσκυνεῖν takes an accusative, as well as the usual dative, in Rev. ix. 20; xiii. 8, 12, [15]; xiv. 9, 11; xx. 4; John iv. 22, 23, 24;—elsewhere in the New Test. the accusative occurs only in Matt. 4, 10; Luke iv. 8 (compare for both texts Deut. vi. 13), and in Luke xxiv. 52. The phrase ἔχειν τὴν μαρτυρίαν, Rev. vi. 9; xii. 17; xix. 10; John v. 36; 1 John v. 10, is found elsewhere only in 1 Tim. iii. 7 (cf. the frequent use of μαρτυρεῖν, and of μαρτυρία, in all St. John's writings). Observe also the combination of the terms μαρτυρεῖν, μαρτυρία, μάρτυς, with ἀληθής or ἀληθινός, or ἀλήθεια, Rev. iii. 14; John v. 32, 33; xix. 35; 3 John 12:—"Can any one seriously deny," writes Gebhardt (l. c., s. 377), "that the Evangelist and the author of the Apocalypse are here in striking agreement; and that too in an expression which bears on its front—and notably in the Apocalypse—its strict applicability to the Logos-doctrine?"

Alford writes:—"I have observed the following [examples] which I have not seen elsewhere noticed, occurring only in the three Books, or only in the peculiar sense: (1) οὐ δύνασθε βαστάξαι ἑρτι, John xvi. 2; οὐ δύνη βαστάσαι κακούς, Rev. ii. 2;—(2) κεκοπιακὸς ἐκ τῆς ὁδοπορίας, John iv. 6; οὐ κεκοπίακες, Rev. ii. 3;—(3) ὁὐ ἀγγέλους ἐν λευκοῖς, John xx. 12; περιπατήσουσιν μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν λευκοῖς, Rev. iii. 4;—(4) the verb κεῖμαι used of mere position, John ii. 6; xix. 29; xx. 5, 6; xxi. 9; Rev. iv. 2 only;—(5) ὄνομα αὐτοῦ [see above];—(6) compare Rev. iii. 18 with 1 John ii. 20, 27 as to the χρίσμα and its effects."—Prolegg., p. 228.

Turning, in conclusion, to single words:—

ἀληθινός, is found ten times in the Apoc. (e.g. ch. iii. 7), nine times in the Fourth Gospel (e.g. i. 9), four times in 1 John (e.g. v. 20). It occurs elsewhere in the N. T. only in Luke xvi. 11; 1 Thess. i. 9; Heb. viii. 2; ix. 14, 24; x. 22.

ἀπαρτί (or ἀπ' ἑρτι), Rev. xiv. 13; John xiii. 19; xiv. 7, is found only in Matt. xxiii. 39; xxvi. 29, 64.

ἄρα is not found in the Apoc., or in the other writings of St. John.

βροντή found ten times in the Apoc. (e.g. ch. iv. 5) occurs elsewhere only in John xii. 29, and in the explanation of St. John's surname "Boanerges," Mark iii. 17.

δαίμων, found in each of the Synoptists, is not employed by St. John, who uses δαμόνιον,—e.g. Rev. ix. 20; John vii. 20. In Rev. xvi. 14; xviii. 2, δαίμων is a false reading.

ἐβραϊστί, Rev. ix. 11; xvi. 16; John v. 2; xix. 13, 17, 20; xx. 16, is not found elsewhere in the N. T.

ἐκκεντεῖν occurs only in John xix. 37; Rev. i. 7 (see the note in loc.).

ἐλεεῖν, ἐλεος, do not occur in the Apocalypse (but see ἐλεεινός, ch. iii. 17), nor in any of St. John's writings, except 2 John 3 (ἐλεος).

καταβαίνειν is always connected with ἐκ in the Apoc., and the writings of St. John. Elsewhere (except in Matt. xvii. 9; xxviii. 2), with ἀπὸ.

μάνα is referred to in Rev. ii. 17; John vi. 31, 49; elsewhere only in Heb. ix. 4.

μέν does not occur in the Apoc., or the Epistles of St. John. It is found but eight times in the Fourth Gospel. This, together with the rareness of particles so frequent in Greek writings, is a feature common to the Apocalypse and the other Joannean writings.

ὅχλος, continually used in the plural elsewhere, is so used only in Rev. xvii. 15; John vii. 12.

ὄψις is found in the New Test. only in Rev. i. 16; John vii. 24; xi. 44.

πορφύρεος is found only in Rev. xvii. 4; xviii. 16; John xix. 2, 5.

σκηνοῦν is found only in Rev. vii. 15; xii. 12; xiii. 6; xxi. 3; John i. 14.

σφάττειν, found eight times in the Apoc. (e.g. ch. v. 6), occurs elsewhere only in 1 John iii. 12.

σφραγίζειν is used absolutely, in the active, only in Rev. xx. 3; John iii. 33.

φολιγ is found only in Rev. vii. 9; John xii. 13.

so called from the place where it appeared, Complutum, or Alcalá, in Spain. This volume is dated January 10, 1514. The entire work was completed during the summer of 1517¹; but was not published until March 22, 1520, when Pope Leo X. granted his licence.

Not until the year 1522, however, the date of his third edition, did the Complutensian Bible come into the hands of Erasmus, who, at the request of the famous printer Frobenius of Basle, had undertaken to edit the text of the New Testament.² The first edition of Erasmus appeared, with a translation and notes, in March 1516, and was the first printed Greek Testament which was actually given to the world. From the second edition of 1519, Luther made his translation. For the text of the Apocalypse Erasmus possessed but one cursive manuscript, lent to him by Reuchlin, together with a few (five) readings supplied by Laurentius Valla, of which the source is now unknown. This manuscript, known among the cursive codices of the Apocalypse by the figure "1," was long supposed to be lost; but has been discovered by Delitzsch, in the Library of Mayhingen, in Bavaria. The cursive "1" presents traces of having been copied from a more ancient Uncial, and its date is placed by Delitzsch in the twelfth or even in the eleventh century;—by Tregelles in the twelfth.³ The sacred text is here mixed up with the commentary of Andreas, Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia (cir. A.D. 500). Hence, one source of the errors committed by Erasmus, or rather by the person whom he employed to transcribe the manuscript; for, although it is generally notified in the margin where each portion of the text or of the commentary begins, nevertheless both are, at times, so intermingled that the manuscript itself does not enable a copyist, unfamiliar with the Greek text,—as most persons were in the days of Erasmus,—to separate them. For example, in Rev. xxi. 24 the copyist has imported into the text the words of the commentary, viz., "of them which are saved"; and so they still appear in the Authorized Version. Again, owing to this cause, Erasmus omitted, from his first three editions, ch. xxi. 26,—a verse which is also omitted in all the original editions of Luther's translation (Delitzsch, l. c., s. 51): see, too, the note on Rev. iii. 15, among the various readings of ch. iii.¹ Further, the manuscript is mutilated at the end,—the text of the Apocalypse closing with the word Δαυίδ, ch. xxii. 16, a page being lost. The rest of this chapter, from ὁ ἀσθήρ to the end, Erasmus retranslated into Greek from the Vulgate: and, although acquainted with the Complutensian text, in none of his later editions (he published five in all, viz., in 1516, 1519, 1522, 1527, 1535) did he replace his own Greek version of this passage by the genuine words of St. John.² Erasmus has also supplied from the Vulgate words which do not exist in the text of his manuscript. Thus, in ch. xiv. 5, he added, from the Latin curavimus" (Opp., ed. Lugd. Bat., 1706, t. ix p. 246). On ch. ii. 2 he writes: "In Apoc. non suppetebat nobis nisi unicum exemplar, sed vetustissimum, quod nobis exhibuit eximius ille litterarum heros Joannes Reuchlinus." And on ch. iii. 7, he adds: "Ne quis contemnat nostrum [exemplar], tantæ vetustatis erat ut Apostolorum ætate scriptum videri posset."

¹ "Novum Test. Græce et Latine in acad. Complutensi noviter impressum."—Complut. 1514. "De mandato et sumptibus R. in Christo P. et D. D. F. Franc. Ximenii de Cisneros, tit. S. Balbine SS. R. E. Presb. Card. Archiep. Toletani. Industria et solertia hon. viri Arnaldi Guil. de Brocario, artis impressorie [sic] magistri, A.D. MDXVII., mensis Julii die decimo."—Coloph. ad part. iv.

² On this edition of Erasmus see "Handschriftliche Funde" von F. Delitzsch, 1^{tes} Heft, Leipzig, 1861; 2^{tes} Heft, "nebst einer Abhandlung von S. P. Tregelles," 1862. See also Mr. W. Kelly's ed. of the Text of the Revelation, 1860, Introd.; and Dr. Scrivener's "Introduction to the Crit. of the N. T.," 2nd ed. pp. 245, 380.

³ Erasmus himself writes: "Quoniam Græcis nunquam magnopere placuit liber Apocalypseos, rarus habetur apud illos. Itaque quum cuperemus nihil abesse nostræ æditioni, ægre extorsimus ab inclyto viro J. Capnione ([i. e., Reuchlin] vetustissimum codicem, commentarios habentem in hoc opus. Ex eo contextus verba describenda

¹ See also the varia lectio on ch. xvii. 3.

² After the word Δαυίδ there follow six Greek words of the commentary of Andreas, which was doubtless continued on the lost page. Erasmus writes: "Quoniam in calce hujus libri nonnulla verba reperi apud nostros, quæ aberant in Græcis exemplaribus, ea tamen ex Latinis adjecimus."—Annot., ed. 1ma, 1516.

"ante thronum Dei"—a clause which even in the Vulgate is not genuine (Delitzsch, s. 39)—the words ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ: and these words are represented to this day in the Authorized Version ("before the throne of God"), as well as in Luther's translation. He has elsewhere altered the text of his manuscript so as to make it conform to his own text of the Vulgate:—in ch. xv. 3, codex 1 reads "the King of the nations" (ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν ἐθνῶν); but Erasmus substituted for "nations" (ἐθνῶν), "saints" (ἀγίων), in order to conform to the reading of his copy of the Vulgate, "sanctorum,"—which is itself a corruption of the best supported reading, "sæculorum," "the ages" (τῶν αἰώνων), the abbreviations of "sæculorum" and "sanctorum" being easily interchanged. The Authorized Version and Luther's translation still render here "thou King of Saints:"¹ see the vv. ll. of ch. xv.

To these sources of error must be added the mistakes of the copyist when transcribing the manuscript. Of such mistakes one instance²—one, too, which has misled many a commentator—"and yet is" (καίπερ ἐστίν), for "and shall come" (καὶ παρέσται), ch. xvii. 8, is perpetuated to the present day both in our Authorized Version and in Luther's translation. Such also is the strange form διαδιδώσουσιν in ch. xvii. 13 (still represented in our Authorized Version by the future "shall give"), although the future δίδωμι is found only in Homer. This error originated thus:—Codex 1 gives διασιν, written in red ink, corrected by writing δό above in black ink, so that διδόσιν—the true reading—might result; and the copyist seems to have mixed up these three elements, although the manuscript has no trace of ω or ου (Delitzsch, s. 43).

The text of Erasmus has exercised an unfortunate influence on the subsequent translations, and on the subsequent interpretation of the Apocalypse. This is due to the fact that from his first edition—described by himself as "præcipitatum verius quam editum"—numerous false readings have passed over into the third edition of Robert Stephens (A.D. 1550), and thence into the Elzevir edition of 1624, the so-called Textus Receptus. Wetstein¹ affirms that R. Stephens had only two manuscripts of the Apocalypse, and these imperfectly collated. Stephens also followed the Complutensian text; for which the editor, adds Wetstein, had but one manuscript of the Apocalypse. The third edition of Stephens (A.D. 1550) was the basis both of the editions of Beza (Geneva, 1559, 1565, 1582, 1589, 1598,—see Scrivener, l. c., p. 390), and of the Textus Receptus. Beza's edition of 1589² (or 1598) was taken as the basis of our Authorized Version, by the Translators of 1611: and thus the English Version of the Apocalypse represents a Greek text which does not rest upon the same authority as that of the other Books of the New Testament.³ E. g. in ch. xvi. 5, the conjectural reading of Beza's last three editions (ἐσόμενος for ὄσιος, which rests on no authority whatever), is still represented in the words of the Authorized Version—"and shalt be."

¹ Prolegg. in Apocalyps. N. T., vol. ii. p. 741.

² See The English Bible, by John Eadie, D.D., 1876, vol. ii. p. 211.

³ Lectio recepta Apocalypseos quæ ab Erasmanis profluxit, admodum infirmo nititur tibicine.—Wetstein, l. c.

¹ "Some portions," writes Dr. Scrivener, "of his [Erasmus's] self-made version, which are found (however some editors may speak vaguely) in no one known Greek manuscript whatever, still cleave to our received text."—l. c., p. 382.

² Instead of the true reading, "when they behold the Beast, how that he was, and is not, and shall come," the A.V. has, "when they behold the Beast that was, and is not, and yet is." Here Bossuet, understanding by the Beast Rome under Diocletian ("Rome païenne avec son idolatrie"), concludes that because the Beast exists, for the moment, only in its sixth "Head," and because the seventh "Head" continues but "a little while" (see Rev. xvii. 10), this is expressed in ver. 8 by the words "is not, and yet is" ("quoiqu'elle soit");—St. John thus describing the "languid" condition in which the Beast now appeared to him ("pour faire entendre à Saint Jean que dans la langueur où elle lui paroissoit . . . il la pouvoit regarder comme n'étant plus"). Vitranga (p. 767) applies this erroneous reading to the parallel between the old Roman Empire and the Papacy: "Fuit nempe et non est, quatenus vere antiquum illud Imperium Paganum destructum fuit; sed est tamen, quia ex destructo illo Vetere natum est Romanum Imperium Mysticum, in quo omnia antiqui Imperii æmula digito demonstrari possunt."

Many manuscripts of the Apocalypse, however, have been collated since 1611; and yet,—neither here nor elsewhere should it be forgotten when estimating the effect of criticism,—all the skill which, since then, has been brought to bear upon the sacred text has not added to, nor has it taken from, one article of the Faith as expressed in the single codex of Erasmus.¹

Until a comparatively recent date but three Uncial manuscripts of the Apocalypse were known:—the Codex Alexandrinus, A, of Cent. v.; the Codex Ephræmi,² C, of Cent. v.; and the Codex Vaticanus, No. 2066, formerly numbered 105 in the Library of the Basilian Monks in Rome, and of a date about the end of Cent. viii. From the time that Wetstein employed this last Uncial in place of the cursive known as 91 among the cursive texts of the Apocalypse, and which had previously supplied the lost portions of the great Codex Vaticanus, B, No. 1209 (ascribed to the middle of Cent. iv., and which breaks off at Heb. ix. 14; see Scrivener, l. c., p. 96),—this Uncial also has been designated B.³

To these three Uncials are now to be added the Codex Sinaiticus, \aleph , of about the middle of Cent. iv., and the Codex Porphyrianus, P, both of which MSS. Tischendorf had the good fortune to bring to light. P is a palimpsest which was brought to St. Petersburg in 1862 by Porphyry, Bishop of Uspensk. It was printed at Leipzig, in 1869, by Tischendorf, in the sixth volume of his “Monumenta sacra inedita.” He places its date in Cent. viii. or ix., and estimates its value perhaps too highly (“Codex Porphyrianus textum Apocalypseos præbet tam egregium ut principalibus codicibus qui ætate ipsum longe antecedunt vix posthabendus videtur.” — Prolegg., p. 1): he considers it to represent the text used by Andreas. If this be so, the fact will, perhaps, account for the frequent coincidences between P and the cursive 1, on which the text of Erasmus is founded.¹

In addition to these five Uncials, Dr. Scrivener has enumerated 105 cursive manuscripts of the Apocalypse:—see his “Introd.,” l. c., p. 249; and he has appended to his transcript of the Codex Augiensis a careful collation of thirteen of these cursives.

§ 9. The modern conception of “Apokalyptik.”

The Revelation of St. John and the Book of Daniel have been classified in modern times apart from the other Books of Scripture, as constituting a distinct species of literature styled “Apokalyptik.”² Lücke defines “Apokalyptik” to be “The sum and substance of the revelations, as well of the Old as of the New Testament, respecting the end of all things” (“Der Inbegriff der eschatologischen Apokalypsen so des alten wie des neuen Testaments”),—s. 25. This kind of literature, we are told, created by the prophets of the Old Test., has been continued after them by more than one Apocryphal writer: e.g. by the authors of the Fourth Book of Esdras and the Book of Henoch.

The term “Apokalyptik” has been formed from the word with which the Book of the Revelation begins, Ἀποκάλυψις. Ἀποκάλυψις, moreover, has been

¹ In his reply to “A late Discourse of Free-thinking,” by Collins, Richard Bentley (“Phileleutherus Lipsiensis”) wrote: “Make your 30,000 [various lections] as many more. . . All the better to a knowing and serious reader.

. . . Even put them into the hands of a knave or a fool; and yet with the most sinistrous and absurd choice he shall not extinguish the light of any one chapter.”—7th ed., p. 113.

² C contains Rev. i. 2–iii. 19; v. 14–vii. 14; vii. 17–viii. 4; ix. 17–x. 10; xi. 3–xvi. 13; xviii. 2–xix. 5.—Scrivener, l. c., p. 109.

³ Tregelles reserving the letter B for the great Vatican Uncial, called this manuscript first L (N. T., part iv. p. iii.); and subsequently Q (N. T. part vi. p. 1).

¹ E.g. ἀγαπήσαντι, Rev. i. 5; ἔγχευσεν, ch. iii. 18; ὡς ἄνθρωπος, ch. iv. 7; φωνῆς, ch. vi. 1; ὁμι. ὁλη, ch. vi. 12; ἀγγέλου, ch. viii. 13; &c. P is defective in Rev. xvi. 13–21; xx. 1–9; xxii. 7–21.

² Düsterdieck justly inverts the conclusion of modern critics (e.g. Hilgenfeld, Die jüd. Apokalyptik, s. 8, ff.), and derives both the name and the very idea of the so-called “Apocalyptic Literature” from the Apocalypse of St. John: “Die johanneische Apok. ist das Normalmass, nach welchem der Begriff des Apokalyptischen innerhalb und ausserhalb des Kanons bestimmt werden muss.”—Einkl., s. 35.

distinguished from προφητεία. "Revelation" implies both a Divine "prophecy" and a human activity; a distinction inferred from Dan. ii. 22, 23 and Rev. i. 1, 2, where God reveals His secret counsels, and the human prophet communicates them to the world (see on Rev. i. 1). "Prophecy" remains strictly within the limits of its fundamental idea; "Apocalypse" goes into concrete details, symbolizes and allegorizes. An Apocalypse and a Prophecy are thus regarded as two distinct species of the same genus, according as the objective "revelation" or the subjective "prophetic" communication becomes more prominent; and 1 Cor. xiv. 6 is adduced as conferring on this distinction the authority of St. Paul (see Auberlen, The Prophecies of Daniel and the Revelations of St. John, viewed in their mutual Relation, Engl. transl., p. 80). The earlier prophets, it is further said, bring out the particular situation of the people of God at a given time into the light of prophecy; the Apostles also disclose only certain things relating to the future, as the wants of their readers may require:—but the Book of Daniel and the Apocalypse have the more general aim of giving light to the Church of God in those times when there is no revelation; the former illumining the darkness which prevailed from the Captivity until the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; the latter guiding the Church from the destruction of Jerusalem until the Second Coming of Christ. And thus Jewish "Apokalyptik" relates to the first Advent of Messiah, and Christian "Apokalyptik" to His Second Advent (Lücke, s. 224).

Outside the Canon of Scripture there exist at least the remains of a rather extensive literature, likewise styled "Apokalyptik" by those critics who would bring down the great Revelations of Daniel and St. John to the level of such spurious and apocryphal compositions. The publication by Archbishop Laurence, in 1819–1821, from the Æthiopic, of the "Ascensio Isaïæ," the "Book of Enoch," and the "Fourth Book of Esdras," gave an impulse to the study of this class of writings, whether Jewish or Christian. From the nature of the case, the names of the reputed authors, and the titles, of the different elements of "Apocalyptic" literature were taken from Scripture. Ezekiel (i. 1) "saw visions of God;" St. Peter "in a trance saw a vision" (Acts xi. 5); St. Paul "knew a man" who "was caught up into Paradise" (2 Cor. xii. 4):—and hence the titles ὄρασις, ἀναβατικόν, ἀνάβασις, ἀνάληψις, &c. It is an interesting task, no doubt, and from an apologetic point of view not unimportant, to exhibit the doctrine concerning the Messiah as it was held among the Jews in the centuries before Christ came, and at the time of His coming. This has been done, to some extent, by Mr. Drummond in his work entitled The Jewish Messiah. In this sense, "Apokalyptik" possesses a certain value:—but, as has been just observed, this is not the purpose for which modern critics have given prominence to works of this kind.¹

To the class of Jewish "Apokalyptik" belong:—

Portions of the Sibylline Oracles (see Note E on Rev. ii. 20);—

The Book of Enoch (Jude 14). Of this Lücke ascribes chapters 1–35 and 71–105 to the age of the Maccabees; and ch. 37–70 to the time of Herod the Great (s. 142):—many critics, however, (e. g. Hilgenfeld, Jüd. Apok., s. 181) appeal to its Messianic references in order to prove that the book has been largely interpolated by Christian hands. To this supposition the objection has been opposed, 'Would not a Christian have spoken more clearly of Christ?' (Schürer, N. T. Zeit-gesch., 1874, s. 535): "If a Christian really undertook to make Enoch the vehicle of his Apocalyptic thoughts, how is it that he did not point, as clearly as is done, for instance, in the 'Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs' (e. g. Levi, § 4), to the rejected, and crucified, and risen Christ?" (Drummond, l. c., p. 61);—

The Apocalypse (or 'Ανάληψις) of Moses (Origen, De Princ., iii. 2). Hilgen-

¹ Modern Jewish writers are naturally not disposed to bring forward testimony to the Messianic expectations of their people at the time when the Lord came. Thus Jost remarks: "Jedenfalls sind alle diese Erscheinungen ohne Bedeutung für die jüdische Religions-geschichte."—Gesch. des Judenth. und seiner Secten, ii. s. 218.

feld has published the Latin text, in his "Nov. Test. extr. Can.," fasc. i., p. 99. Ewald (Götting. gel. Anzeig., 1862) assumes that the Greek text, now lost, had a Hebrew original, and he places its date shortly after the death of Herod the Great;¹—

The Apocalypse (or ὁρασις, or ἀναβαρυόν) of Isaiah; referred to by Origen, Hom. i. in Esai., c. 5; see Epiphan., Hær. xl. 2; lxvii. 3;—

The Fourth Book of Esdras (which Lücke places before the birth of Christ,—s. 209). St. Jerome has styled this work the fourth book of Ezra, taking Nehemiah as the second, and the Greek Ἐσδρας of the Apocrypha as the third. This fourth book (which we possess only in its Latin version,—Lücke, s. 146) is extant neither in Hebrew nor in Greek. A Greek original is quoted by Clemens AL in Strom. iii. 16; and references are also found to 4 Esdr. v. 5, in the epistle of Barnabas, c. xii.; and to ch. ii. 16, in the first epistle of Clemens Rom., c. 1. (cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 13);—

The Apocalypse of Baruch (placed, in the Stichometria of Nicephorus and in the Synopsis S.S. ascribed to St. Athanasius, among the Apocryphal writings of the Old Test.,—see Credner Zur Gesch. des Kanons, ss. 121, 145) was first made known in modern times through a Latin translation, in 1866, by A. M. Ceriani.² The Syriac text was subsequently published by Ceriani in 1871 (l. c., t. v. 2), from a manuscript ascribed by Cureton to Cent. vi. Ceriani (Pref., p. 1) assigns this Apocalypse to a place among the most ancient writings of its class, chiefly owing to its close affinity to 4 Esdras. He also points out (p. 80) the almost exact resemblance of ch. 29 to the chiliastic passage quoted from Papias by St. Irenæus (Adv. Hær. v. 33). Papias must plainly have borrowed from the "Apocalypse of Baruch," or both must have borrowed from an earlier writer. Hilgenfeld (Mess. Judæor., s. lxii.) refers the composition of this work to A.D. 72. "There can be no doubt," writes Mr. Drummond (l. c., p. 125), "that it was written by a non-Christian Jew. Though it is rich in Messianic passages, I have not observed a single expression which betrays a Christian hand;"—

To the class of Jewish "Apokalyptik" Lücke (s. 232) refers the Apocalypse of Adam, proceeding from the Gnostics; and that of Abraham, proceeding from the Sethites, a sect of the Ophites: see Epiphan., Hær. xxvi. 8; xxxix. 5.

To Christian Apocalyptic literature belong:—

The Shepherd of Hermas (Rom. xvi. 14; Orig. Hom. 25 in Luc. xii. 58). Dorner considers that this work "must be dated prior to Montanism" (On the Person of Christ,—Engl. tr., i. p. 382);—

The Testaments of the twelve Patriarchs. This work Lücke (s. 334) ascribes to a Jewish-Christian of the second century; and Dr. Gibbings (The Sibylline Oracles, p. 65, Dublin 1878) also regards it as a Christian composition of the beginning of Cent. ii.;—

The Apocalypse of Peter (see the "Muratorian Fragment," c. 10; Hilgenfeld, l. c., iv. s. 74);—

The Apocalypse, or Ἀναβαρυόν, of Paul (St. Augustine, Tract. in Johann. 98; Sozomen., H. E., vii. 19);—

A spurious "Apocalypse of John" first mentioned in the Scholia to the Grammar of Dionysius Thrax, Cent. ix.; and now published by Tischendorf, Cal. Apocr. N. T., p. 70;—

The Apocalypse of Cerinthus (Euseb. H. E. iii. 28): see above, § 5, p. 439;—

An Apocalypse of Thomas, and an Apocalypse of Stephen (enumerated in the Decretum of Gelasius, 1^{mo} Pars, Dist. xv. 3, ap. Corp. Jur. Can., ed. Richter, t. i. p. 34; see Credner, Gesch. des Kanons, s. 219).

Dorner (l. c., i. 408) thinks that Barnabas and Papias, alone among the Fathers, properly represent "Apokalyptik."

On this subject see also Schenkel, Bibel-Lexicon, art. Apokalypsis; Smith's Dict. of Christian Biogr.; Hilgenfeld, Die Jüd. Apokalyptik, 1857, and Messias

¹ A.D. 6; i. e., after the attempt of Judas the Gaulonite, who led the revolution against the taxation under Quirinus.—Ewald, Gesch. des V. Isr., B. v. s. 73.

² "Olim de Græco in Syriacum, et nunc de Syriaco in Latinum translatus," edidit A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta sacra et profana., t. i. fasc. 2, Mediolani, 1866, pp. 73–98.

Judeorum, 1869; Renan, L'Antechrist, p. 358, note; J. Drummond, The Jewish Messiah, 1877.

There is yet another alleged characteristic of Apocalyptic literature, which comes nearer to the subject of the present section, but which is certainly not to be restricted to the Book of Daniel or to the Revelation:—In prophecy, we are told, the Spirit of God finds His immediate expression in words; but in “Apokalyptik” human language disappears, for here are “unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter,” 2 Cor. xii. 4. The Apocalyptic writer beholds in Vision the unseen and the future; but he beholds them “embodied in plastic symbolic shapes, as in a dream; only that these images are not the children of his own fancy, but the product of Divine revelation adapting itself essentially to our human horizon. . . . The form peculiar to Apocalyptic prophecy is the symbolic. . . . As the subjective form of Apocalyptic prophecy is the Vision, the corresponding objective form is the symbolic.”—Auberlen, l.c., pp. 83, 85.¹ It is evident, however, that the employment of symbols is not “peculiar to Apocalyptic prophecy,” defined as it is by the class of writers here referred to. Auberlen, no doubt, acknowledges this, although but partially. He admits that “Apokalyptik” “did not appear without being prepared for by the earlier prophets, and only reached its full development in Daniel, who exerted, in this formal respect also, an influence on Zechariah, as is evident from the first six chapters of that prophet” (l.c., p. 90). This admission, however, gives a very incomplete idea of the symbolism of the other prophets. Zechariah’s use of symbols is by no means confined to his first six chapters:—see ch. xi., and especially vv. 10–14; ch. xiii. 7, and compare vv. 8, 9, with Ezek. v. 12. Compare also Zech. iii. 8 with Isaiah iv. 2; Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15; Zech. x. 10 with Isai. xi. 11, 16; Hos. xi. 11 (see Pusey, The Min. Proph., Introd. to Zechariah, p. 504). Jeremiah is throughout symbolical,—e.g. Jer. i. 11, 12; xiii. 2–11; xviii. 1–6; xxv. 15; xxvii. 2; and so are Ezekiel and others,—e.g. Ezek. i.; ii. 9; iii. 1–3; iv. 1; &c., &c.; Hos. iii.; Joel ii.; &c.

¹ The intervention of Angels is also alleged to be another feature peculiar to “Apokalyptik”; but cf. Gen. xvi. 7; Num. xxii. 22; Judges xiii. 3; 2 Kings i. 3; Zech. i. 11; Matt. i. 20; Luke i. 11; Acts viii. 26, &c.

Renan fully concedes this fact, and so far differs from other writers of his school. “The form of ‘Apocalypse,’” he observes, “adopted by the author [of the Revelation] was not new in Israel. Ezekiel had already inaugurated a considerable change in the old prophetic style, and one may in a certain sense regard him as the creator of the Apocalyptic method.”—L'Antechrist, p. 357.¹

Nor yet is the New Test.—apart from the Apocalypse—without its own symbolical element, as, e.g., in Acts xxi. 11; and especially in the Fourth Gospel, a fact which constitutes a fresh proof of the similarity between it and the Revelation. Thus we have the following symbols of which the meaning is not obscure,—Light, John i. 4, 8; xii. 46;—the Lamb, i. 29, 36;—the Temple, ii. 19;—the brazen Serpent, iii. 14;—living Water, iv. 10–15; vii. 37–39;—Manna, vi. 31;—the healing the blind man, ix. 39;—the Shepherd and the door, x. 1–16;—washing the disciples’ feet, xiii.;—the Vine,

¹ Renan thus expands his theory as to Apocalyptic literature:—For the simple allegorical acts which accompanied preaching Ezekiel substituted Visions; i.e., “a complicated symbolism, where the abstract idea was represented by means of chimerical beings, conceived without any reference to reality. Zechariah continued to proceed in the same way. . . . The author of the Book of Daniel, in fine, by the extraordinary popularity which he gained, fixed definitively the rules of this method. . . . Henceforward, to every critical situation of the people of Israel, corresponded an Apocalypse. . . . It was inevitable that the reign of Nero and the siege of Jerusalem should have their apocalyptic protest; as at a later period, the severities of Domitian, of Adrian, of Septimius Severus, of Decius, and the Gothic invasion in 250, provoked their own.”—ib., p. 359. To the same effect Max Krenkel (“Der Ap. Johannes”): “In the near relationship between the old prophecy and ‘Apokalyptik,’ it is certainly hard to say what belongs to the one, and what to the other. Ezekiel and Zechariah, commonly reckoned among the Prophets, may with equal right be claimed for ‘Apokalyptik,’ in so far as they chiefly busy themselves with the future, and avail themselves largely of Visions.”—s. 49.

xv. 1;—the prophecy to St. Peter, xxi. 18.

In the Apocalypse, on the other hand, the symbolism is confessedly dark and complex,—a mysterious hieroglyphic which has too often been interpreted arbitrarily and rashly. The entire Book, as the following analysis will more fully show, is to be understood throughout in a symbolical sense. Its figurative language has manifestly two forms,—it consists (1) Of ideal symbols or the images of material things; (2) Of symbolical numbers.

§ 10. Ideal Symbols¹ or the Images of Material Things.

Let the Apocalypse itself be here its own interpreter; and the question as to the character and import of its announcements will thus receive its chief answer—(a) from the intimations of the Book itself; (b) from the interpretations supplied by other Books of Scripture:—

(a) The intimations given by the Apocalypse itself:—

Ch. i. 8. "I am the Alpha and the Omega." =

"I am the First and the Last," ver. 17 :—see also ch. xxi. 6; xxii. 13, "the Beginning and the End."

„ Ver. 12. "Seven golden Candlesticks" (cf. ch. ii. 1, 5); ver. 16, "Seven Stars"² (cf. ch. ii. 1; iii. 1). =

¹ "A symbolical alphabetical Dictionary" is prefixed by Daubuz to his commentary:—see the ed. of P. Lancaster, 1730, pp. 23–143.

² The star (ὁ ἀστήρ) has amongst all nations been employed as the symbol of Imperial dominion and splendour: "Ecce Dionæi processit Cæsaris astrum."—Virg. Ecl. ix. 47; "Micat inter omnes Julium Sidus."—Hor. Od. I. xii. 47; Ἐσπερος δὲ κάλλιστος ἐν οὐρανῷ ἴστανται ἀστήρ.—Il. xxii. 317.

Compare the title of the false Messiah in the reign of Hadrian, Bar-cohab or "son of a star;" see the note on Num. xxiv. 17, and below on Rev. vi. 13; viii. 10; ix. 1; xii. 1, 4 (cf. Dan. viii. 10). In Isai. xiv. 12, the bearer of the World-power, the king of Babylon, on account of his glorious dominion, is named "Lucifer, Son of the Morning,"—the bright morning star which shines as a monarch in the starry heavens: see the note in loc. Hence "the Morning Star" (ὁ ἀστήρ ὁ πρωϊνός) in Rev. ii. 28; xxii. 16. Cf. Eccus. I. 6; 2 Pet. i. 19.

"The Seven Stars are the Angels of the Seven Churches; and the Seven Candlesticks are Seven Churches."—ver. 20.

„ Ver. 18. "The Keys of death and of hell" (Hades). =

"The Key of the pit of the Abyss. And he opened the pit of the Abyss," &c.; ch. ix. 1, 2; cf. ch. xx. 1. The Key is the symbol of authority:—see on ch. iii. 7.

Ch. ii. 10. "Ten days." =

A comparatively short time;—as is shown by the use of the expressions, "one day"; "one hour," ch. xviii. 8, 10.

„ Ver. 11. "The Second Death" (see also ch. xx. 6). =

To have "part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone"; which is the Second Death."—ch. xxi. 8; and so, "This is the Second Death, even the lake of fire."—ch. xx. 14.

„ Ver. 15. "The doctrine of the Nicolaitans" (cf. ver. 6). =

"The doctrine of Balaam," ver. 14. Balaam—"the destroyer of the people" (from בלל and נע)—is equivalent to Nicolas (Νικόλαος, from νικᾶν τὸν λαόν). This Græcizing of Hebrew words we again find in the instances of Apollyon and Abaddon, ch. ix. 11;—of "the Devil" and Satan, ch. xii. 9;—of ναί and ἀμήν, ch. i. 7: see Züllig in loc., i. s. 303.

„ Ver. 28. "The morning Star." = Christ: "I am the root and the offspring of David, the bright, the morning Star."—ch. xxii. 16. See note ² above.

Ch. iii. 12. "The new Jerusalem" (see also ch. xxi. 2). =

"The Bride, the Wife of the Lamb, . . . the Holy City Jerusalem."—ch. xxi. 9, 10. (Note the contrasted symbol, the "great Harlot,"—ch. xvii. 1. = Babylon, the World-city, ch. xvii. 5, 18).

[Ch. iv. 4. The "Four-and-Twenty Elders," see below under class (b)].

Ch. iv. 5. "Seven lamps of fire burning before the throne." =

"The Seven Spirits of God."—Ib.: see also ch. i. 4; iii. 1; cf. Zech. iv. 2.

Ch. v. 6. "Seven eyes." =

"The Seven Spirits of God."—Ib.: cf. Zech. iii. 9; iv. 10.

„ Ver. 8. "Incense." =

"The Prayers of the Saints."—Ib.: cf. ch. viii. 3; Lev. xvi. 12, 13; Ps. cxli. 2; Isai. vi. 4; Luke i. 9, 10; Acts x. 4.

Ch. vi. 2. "A white Horse, and He that sat thereon." =

"A white Horse, and He that sat thereon, called Faithful and True . . . and His name is called the Word of God."—ch. xix. 11, 13.

„ Ver. 8. "A pale Horse: and he that sat upon him." =

"His name was Death."—Ib.

Ch. ix. 3. The "Locusts" are explained to be symbolical; they are not literal locusts:—"They have over them as King the Angel of the Abyss," Abaddon, Apollyon.—ver. 11.

Ch. x. 3, 4. "The Seven Thunders uttered their voices. . . . And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Seal up the things which the Seven Thunders uttered, and write them not:"—cf. ch. xiv. 2.

Ch. xi. 3. The "Two Witnesses." = "The two Olive trees, and the two Candlesticks."—ver. 4; they are also "Two Prophets."—ver. 10.

„ Ver. 8. "The Great City, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified."

Ch. xii. 3. "A great red Dragon"; "The great Dragon" (ver. 9). =

"The old Serpent, he that is called the Devil, and Satan."—Ver. 9; ch. xx. 2, 7. Cf. Isai. xxvii. 1; Ezek. xxix. 3.

Ch. xiii. 11. The second "Beast." =

"The False Prophet," ch. xvi. 13; xix. 20; xx. 10. Cf. 1 John iv. 1-3

Ch. xiv. 8. "Wine." =

An image implying the concentration of "wrath,"—ch. xvi. 19: cf. Jer. xxv. 15-18. On "the Wine-Cup," see ch. xiv. 10; xvii. 4; xviii. 6. Cf. ch. xv. 7; xvi. 1,— "The Seven Vials of the wrath of God."

Also an image implying the extreme of spiritual "fornication;" "The wine of her "fornication,"—ch. xvii. 2; xviii. 3.

„ Ver. 20. "The Wine-press." =

"The great Wine-press of the wrath of God."—ver. 19; "of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God."—ch. xix. 15.

Ch. xvi. 13. "And I saw coming out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the False Prophet, three unclean spirits, as it were Frogs." =

"They are Spirits of Devils."—Ver. 14.

Ch. xvii. 1. "The great Harlot." =

"The great City, which reigneth over the kings of the earth."—Ver. 18.

„ Ver. 1. She "sitteth upon many Waters." =

"The Waters . . . where the Harlot sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."—ver. 15 (cf. ch. xii. 15, 16).

„ Ver. 3. "A scarlet-coloured Beast . . . having Seven Heads and Ten Horns." =

"The Seven Heads are Seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth: and they are Seven Kings" (vv. 9, 10):—"The Ten Horns that thou sawest are Ten Kings."—ver. 12.

„ Ver. 5. The Harlot's "Name." =

"Babylon the great, the mother of the harlots and of the abominations of the earth."—Ib. Cf. ch. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xviii. 2.

Ch. xviii. 21. "A mighty Angel took up a stone as it were a great millstone, and cast it into the sea." =

"Thus with violence shall Babylon, the great City, be cast down, and shall be found no more at all."—Ib.

Ch. xix. 8. "The fine Linen." =

"The righteous acts of the Saints." Ib. Cf. ch. iii. 4; vi. 11; vii. 9, 14.

„ Ver. 9. "The Marriage Supper of the Lamb." =

"If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—ch. iii. 20.

„ Ver. 17. "The great Supper of God." =

"An Angel . . . cried . . . to all the birds that fly in mid-heaven, Come . . . that ye may eat the flesh of kings," &c.—vv. 17, 18; cf. ver. 21.

Ch. xx. 8. "Gog and Magog." =

"The Nations which are in the four corners of the earth."—Ib.

(b) The interpretations supplied by other Books of Scripture:—

Ch. i. 4. "The Seven Spirits which are before His throne" (cf. ch. iii. 1). =

The Holy Ghost, Sevenfold in His operations, Isai. xi. 2; 1 Cor. xii. 4. See also under division (a), on ch. iv. 5; v. 6.

„ Ver. 16. "Out of His mouth proceeded a sharp two-edged Sword" (see also ch. ii. 12, 16; xix. 15). =

"He hath made my mouth like a sharp Sword,"—Isai. xlix. 2 (and so Isai. xi. 4; Hos. vi. 5). See Eph. vi. 17; 2 Thess. ii. 8; Heb. iv. 12.

Ch. ii. 7. "To eat of the Tree of Life" (see also ch. xxii. 2, 14). =

Immortality: "Lest he take also of the Tree of Life, and eat, and live for ever."—Gen. iii. 22; see on Rev. xxii. 2.

„ Ver. 17. "The hidden Manna." =
"And Moses said, Take a pot, and put an omer full of Manna therein, and lay it up before the Lord."—Ex. xvi. 33; "The Ark of the Covenant wherein was a golden pot holding the Manna."—Heb. ix. 4; "Your fathers did eat the Manna in the wilderness, and they died. This is the Bread which cometh down out of heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die."—John vi. 49, 50; cf. 1 Cor. x. 3.

„ Ver. 20. "Jezebel." =

The symbol of idolatry, 1 Kings xviii. 19; she is also the symbol of adultery and witchcraft 2 Kings ix. 22, 30 (cf. Jer. iv. 30; Ezek. xxiii. 40).

Ch. iii. 4. "Garments" undefiled, and defiled (see also, under division (a), on ch. xix. 8). =

Righteousness and unrighteousness, Zech. iii. 3-5 (cf. Gal. iii. 27; Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10; Jude 23).

„ Ver. 5. "The Book of Life" (see the note on this verse). =

"Blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy Book which Thou hast written."—Ex. xxxii. 32; "Let them be blotted out of the Book of the Living, and not be written with the righteous."—Ps. lxxix. 28; "Thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the Book."—Dan. xii. 1; "Whose names are in the Book of Life."—Phil. iv. 3. Cf. Luke x. 20.

Ch. iv. 1. "A Door opened in heaven." =

"This is the Gate of heaven."—Gen. xxviii. 17.

„ Ver. 4. The "Four - and - twenty Elders." =

The Twelve Patriarchs, and the Twelve Apostles (see ch. xxi. 12, 14),—Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30.

Ch. v. 1. The Sealed Book. =

"The Vision of all is become unto you as the words of a Book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed."—Isai. xxix. 11.

„ Ver. 6. "A Lamb standing as though it had been slain." =

Christ: "He is brought as a Lamb to the slaughter," Isai. liii. 7; "He seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold, the Lamb of God."—John i. 29, 36; Acts viii. 32; 1 Pet. i. 19.

„ „ "Having Seven Horns." =

Having the symbol of universal Dominion:—"He shall give strength unto His King, and exalt the Horn of His anointed."—1 Sam. ii. 10; cf. Deut. xxxiii. 17; 1 Kings xxii. 11. (On the number Seven, see below, p. 475).

Ch. vi. 1-8. The Four Horses. =

"The four Spirits of the heavens."—Zech. vi. 1-8;—cf. Zech. i. 8-10. "These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth."

„ Vv. 5, 6. "He had a balance in his hand, and I heard as it were a voice.... saying, A Measure of Wheat for a penny," &c. =

Scarcity:—"And when I have broken the staff of your Bread . . . they shall deliver you your Bread again by weight; and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied."—Lev. xxvi. 26;—"Thy Meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight."—Ezek. iv. 10, 16, 17;—cf. v. 16.

Ch. vii. 1. "The four Winds." =

The Divine Judgments:—"Upon Elam will I bring the four Winds . . . and I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy," &c.—Jer. xlix. 36, 38. Cf. Zech. vi. 5, where "The four spirits (or Winds) of the heavens" are personified (see above on Rev. vi. 1-8).

„ Vv. 1-3. "The Sea." =

The Nations: "The Lord bringeth upon them the Waters of the river, strong and many, even the King of Assyria and all his glory. Isai. viii. 7;—"Upon the earth distress of Nations, with perplexity; the Sea, and the waves roaring," Luke xxi. 25; (cf. Dan. vii. 2, "The four winds of heaven strove upon the great Sea)." See ch. xvii. 1, 15.

„ Ver. 1. Trees (cf. ch. viii. 7). =

Kings, great men:—"This is the word that the Lord hath spoken concerning [Sennacherib] I will cut down the tall cedar Trees thereof, and the choice fir Trees thereof," &c. ; 2 Kings xix. 21-23 (cf. Isai. x. 18, 19) ;—"The Tree that thou sawest . . . it is thou, O king," Dan. iv. 20-22. Cf. Zech. xi. 2.

Ch. viii. 7. Grass. =

Subjects :—"The Grass withereth, the flower fadeth surely the People is Grass."—Isai. xl. 7.

„ Ver. 8. "A great Mountain" (ch. xvii. 9, 10). =

A Kingdom, a seat of Empire :—"I will render unto Babylon, &c. . . . Behold, I am against thee, O destroying Mountain." Jer. li. 24, 25 ;—cf. Dan. ii. 34, 45 ; Zech. iv. 7.

„ Ver. 11. "Wormwood." =

Bitterness, the distress and trouble resulting from sin :—"Lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and Wormwood."—Deut. xxix. 18 ; cf. Acts viii. 23 ; Heb. xii. 15.

Ch. ix. 3. Locusts. =

God's destroying Army :—"The Locust . . . My great Army."—Joel ii. 25 ; see vv. 2-11.

Ch. x. 9. "Take [the little Book] and eat it up." =

"He caused me to eat that roll [of a Book,—see Ezek. ii. 9] Moreover He said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart."—Ezek. iii. 2, 10.

Ch. xi. 1, 2. "And there was given me a reed like unto a rod : and one said, Rise, and measure the Temple And the court which is without the Temple leave out, and measure it not" (cf. ch. xxi. 15-17). =

"Behold there was a man with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed He measured it by the four sides to make a separation between the Sanctuary and the profane place." Ezek. xl. 3—xlii. 20. Cf. Zech. ii. 1, 2.

„ Ver. 4. "The two Olive Trees and the two Candlesticks." =

"What are these two Olive Trees upon the right side of the Candlestick and upon the left side thereof? Then said he, These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."—Zech. iv. 11, 14. Cf. Rom. xi. 17, 24, where the "Olive Tree" signifies the people of God ; and Rev. i. 20, where a "Candlestick" signifies a Church.

Ch. xii. 1. "A Woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of Twelve Stars." =

She is invested with authority :—"Behold the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me."—Gen. xxxvii. 9.

Ch. xiii. 1. "I saw a Beast coming up out of the sea, having Ten Horns and Seven Heads." =

(See Dan. vii. 3-7) :—"These great beasts, which are four, are four Kings ; . . . The fourth beast shall be the fourth Kingdom upon earth ; And the Ten Horns out of this kingdom are Ten Kings."—Dan. vii. 17, 23, 24.

Ch. xiv. 14-19. To "send forth the Sickle" ; "to reap the Harvest of the earth" ; to "gather the Clusters of the Vine." =

To sit in judgment ; to be ripe for judgment :—"There will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the Sickle for the Harvest is ripe : come get you down, for the Press is full, the fats overflow ; for their wickedness is great."—Joel iii. 12, 13. Cf. Isai. xxi. 9, 10 ; Jer. vi. 9 ; li. 33.

„ Ver. 20. "The Winepress was trodden." =

Wrath, Judgment :—"I have trodden the Winepress I will tread them in mine anger for the Day of Vengeance is in mine heart."—Isai. lxiii. 3, 4.

Ch. xv. 7, The Vials (see on ch. vi. 1 ; viii. 2, the Seals, the Trumpets). =

The Divine judgments : cf. the Plagues of Egypt,—Ex. vii.-xii.

Ch. xvi. 16. "Armageddon." =

The scene of great Mourning :—"In that day shall there be a great Mourning in Jerusalem, as the Mourning of Hadad-rimmon in the valley of Megiddon."—Zech. xii. 11.

„ Ver. 21. "Great Hail." =

"The indignation of His anger With scattering, and tempest, and Hailstones." Isai. xxx. 30 ;—"I am against you, saith the Lord God and ye, O great Hailstones, shall fall."—Ezek. xiii. 8, 11.

Ch. xvii. 2. "Fornication." =

Faithlessness to God.—"How is the Faithful city become an Harlot!" Isai. i. 21;—cf. Jer. ii. 20; iii. 2, 6; Ezek. xvi. 15; Hos. ii. 5; Nah. iii. 4; &c.

Ch. xx. 2. "A Thousand Years." =

The symbol of the duration of time, as God regards it.—"A thousand years in thy sight are but as Yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."—Ps. xc. 4;—"One Day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one Day."—2 Pet. iii. 8. See the note on ch. xx. 2.

Ch. xxi. 2, 9. "The Bride, the Wife of the Lamb." =

The Church.—"Thy Maker is thy Husband; the Lord of Hosts is His name." Isai. liv. 5;—"He hath clothed Me . . . as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels." lxi. 10;—"He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom." John iii. 29;—"A man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the Church."—Eph. v. 31, 32.

„ Ver. 7. "The Fountain of the water of Life;"—"A River of water of Life." ch. xxii. 1 (cf. ver. 17). =

The grace of Christ.—"With joy shall ye draw water out of the Wells of Salvation." Isai. xii. 3;—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."—lv. 1; "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst."—John iv. 14; "Rivers of living water. . . . This spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive."—John vii. 38, 39.

Ch. xxii. 2. "The leaves of the Tree were for the Healing of the nations." =

"The fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for Medicine."—Ezek. xlvii. 12.

The numerical symbolism of the Apocalypse in like manner receives its only just illustration from the other Books of Scripture. See § 11.

§ 11. Symbolical Numbers.

Rationalists represent this aspect of symbolism as follows:—As the writers of

"Apokalyptik" strive to excite the curiosity of their readers by mysterious hints, and to test their acuteness by enigmatical words, so, with them, Numbers gain a special significance, and often find an artificial and allusive application. Certain Times also are fixed, even to the day and hour; and that which the writer does not venture to commit to words, he entrusts to the more ambiguous, and therefore less treacherous symbolism of Numbers' (see Krenkel, l.c., s. 47).

Nothing can be more superficial, when the question is examined generally—nothing more incorrect, when the symbolism of Scripture is the subject, than such a theory. Among every ancient people, especially in the East—in India, China, Chaldæa, Egypt; in Greece, long before Pythagoras—we find importance attached to numbers; and this, too, in connexion with religious worship. This instinctive apprehension of the heathen world involves a profound truth. Number and Proportion are essential and necessary attributes of the Kosmos: and God, as a God of order,¹ has arranged each several province of Creation—even to the minutest particular ("the very hairs of your head are all numbered," Matt. x. 30)—according to definite numerical relations (Ps. cxlvii. 4; Isai. xl. 26; Eccclus. xvi. 26, 27).² Not

¹ Wisdom xi. 21, —πάντα μέτρον καὶ ἀριθμὸν καὶ σταθμὸν διέταξε. Cf. also the Pythagorean saying, —τὰ τῶν ἀριθμῶν στοιχεία τῶν ὅλων στοιχεία πάντων. Aristot., Met. i. 5.

² This position may be illustrated by the results of Science. Nature, in not a few of her provinces, works according to strict numerical laws. E.g. in—

CRYSTALLOGRAPHY:—A few instances may be given of the forms which minerals generally assume: (a). Minerals which crystallize as Hexahedrons (whose faces are six squares), or Octahedrons (whose faces are eight equilateral triangles)—Fluor spar, Alum, Sea-salt, Magnetic Iron-ore, Diamond, Garnet, Ruby Copper, &c.; (b). Minerals which crystallize as right square Prisms, or in Octahedrons (whose faces are Isosceles Triangles)—Hyacinth, Tinstone, &c.; (c). Minerals which crystallize as six-sided Prisms, or as Hexagonal Dodecahedrons (whose faces are Isosceles Triangles)—Beryl, Quartz, Corundum, Tourmaline, &c.; (d). Minerals which crystallize in four-sided Prisms with a Rhombic base, or in Octahedrons (whose faces are equal and similar Scalene Triangles)—Sulphur, Arragonite, Nitre, &c.; not to mention other classes.

CHEMISTRY:—Although the "atoms" of only where the thought transcends the limits of man's understanding (e. g. Gen. xiii. 16; Jer. xxxiii. 22; Rev. vii. 9), but also in the province of human freedom (e. g. Job xiv. 16; Ps. lvi. 8), all has been divinely disposed according to number and proportion, order and design: and should such dispositions not admit of being computed by human faculties, or should God reveal them elementary matter have very different weights which are not always represented by integer numbers, when we take the "atoms" as units combination takes place between them in proportions which are represented only by integers. Thus, the molecule of Hydrochloric acid contains 2 elementary atoms (1 of Hydrogen and 1 of Chlorine);

Water, 3 el. at. (2 of Hydrogen and 1 of Oxygen);

Ammonia, 4 el. at. (1 of Nitrogen and 3 of Hydrogen);

Nitric Acid, 5 el. at. (1 of Hydrogen, 1 of Nitrogen, and 3 of Oxygen);

Sulphurous Acid, 6 el. at. (2 of Hydrogen, 1 of Sulphur, and 3 of Oxygen);

Sulphuric Acid, 7 el. at. (2 of Hydrogen, 1 of Sulphur, and 4 of Oxygen);

Phosphoric Acid, 8 el. at. (3 of Hydrogen, 1 of Phosphorus, and 4 of Oxygen);

Alcohol, 9 el. at. (2 of Carbon, 6 of Hydrogen, and 1 of Oxygen);

Nitrous Ether, 10 el. at. (2 of Carbon, 5 of Hydrogen, 1 of Nitrogen, and 2 of Oxygen).

(This information as to Crystallography and Chemistry has been kindly supplied by Professors Apjohn and Emerson Reynolds.)

ZOOLOGY.—In his Leçons sur la Physiologie (t. ix., Paris, 1870), M. H. Milne-Edwards writes:—

"La limite extrême du séjour du jeune Animal dans l'intérieur de l'œuf paraît être fixée d'une manière presque invariable pour chaque espèce zoologique."—p. 589.

The following are a few of the results given at p. 445:—The duration of incubation is 12 days for humming-birds; 31 days for the peacock; 42 days for the swan.

The duration of gestation among the Mammalia is, about 3 weeks for the mouse; 3½ weeks for the marmot (Fr. "souslie;" Arctomys citillus); 4 weeks for the hare; 7 weeks for the hedgehog; 14 weeks for the lion; 21 weeks for the sheep, &c.

PHYSIOLOGY.—Dr. Carpenter observes that there are marked differences in the functional operations of Organic life "which mark out the whole term of life into the various 'Ages' which are commonly recognized as seven, namely—Infancy, Childhood, Youth, Adolescence, Manhood, Decline, and Senility. For Physiological purposes, however," may be used "the three great periods of Growth and Development, of Maturity, and of Decline."—Princ. of human Physiology, 7th ed., p. 961.

in mystery,—they are nevertheless capable of being represented not only by means of ideal types and symbols; but also by numerical relations.

The conception of the sanctity and symbolical dignity of numbers may probably have passed over to the Israelites from their heathen neighbours:¹ at all events, it is certain that this universal sentiment is reflected from the pages of the Old Testament. What could be more natural, indeed, than that the writers of either the Old or the New Testament should employ numbers as they were employed by their contemporaries? Numbers, like words, are but the signs of ideas; and if we can ascertain the idea corresponding to a particular sign, we have the meaning of that sign. It is this underlying idea alone on which the numerical symbolism of Scripture depends. The Pantheism of the religions of Nature, it is true, had attached to numbers, in addition to their speculative value, a further meaning. The real relations which are stamped on the material Kosmos were sought after; and, in the effort to trace out the laws of the Universe, everything sublunary was supposed to be guided by the motions of the heavenly bodies. "Though the Universe," writes Professor Archer-Butler, "displayed the geometry of its constructor or animator, yet Nature was eminently defined, by the Pythagoreans, as the μύνησις τῶν ἀριθμῶν (Aristot. Metaph. i. 6)".—Lectures on the Hist. of Antient Philosophy, vol. i., p. 336.²

¹ The elaborate theory of Bähr ("Symbolik des Mosaischen Cultus") to this effect, was, at one time, opposed by Hengstenberg ("Die Gesch. Bileams," 1842, s. 70 ff.); but this opposition was subsequently modified in his "Beiträge" (see B. iii. ss. 311, 605, 646). His criticism was replied to by Kurtz, "Stud. u. Kritiken," 1844, s. 330. Bähr has, no doubt, carried his theory to too great lengths.

² "Having discovered that the changes of sound were indissolubly connected with changes of length and tension, Pythagoras reversed the proposition, and asserted that sound—that which is essentially 'harmony'—perpetually waited on proportion; and that as the heavens themselves were ordered in consonance with number, they must move amid their own eternal harmony, a harmony to which the soul of man from familiarity (owing to its past transmigrations) had become deaf and irresponsible."—l. c., p. 341. "Pythagoras ad harmoniam canere

The influence thus ascribed to the heavenly bodies led immediately to star-worship; and it was only after eliminating every such conception that numerical symbolism was employed in the Bible. Had the principles of the Sabæan worship lingered in the mind of the Israelite, he would have seen in the Seven-branched Candlestick only an image of the planetary heaven; or in the number of the Twelve Tribes, but a type of the signs of the Zodiac:¹ but this error, above all others, was denounced by Moses who appointed death as the punishment for apostasy to this form of false worship (cf. Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3-5). This abuse, therefore, being guarded against, the speculative value which the heathen attached to Numbers while it serves to illustrate this species of symbolism as found in the Bible, could in no way oppose the use by the Sacred Writers of a figurative mode of speech recognized by all ancient peoples.²

(a). NUMBERS TAKEN SIMPLY.

The number THREE:³—

Among the heathen, if at all civilized, every type and image of Deity, all mundum existimat."—Cic., De Nat. Deor. iii. 11, 27.

¹ Bähr observes that there is but one probable trace of any reference to the signs of the Zodiac in the entire Old Test., viz.—in the מַזְלוֹת (A. V. "Planets;" Marg., "twelve signs or constellations;" LXX. τοῖς μαζουράθ) of 2 Kings xxiii. 5 (cf. Job xxxviii. 32), where it is specified as an instance of the idolatry from which Josiah cleansed the Sanctuary (l.c., i. s. 206).

² Mede observes: "The Scriptures use no numbers indefinitely [i.e., symbolically] but such as the use of speech in the language of the people had made such."—p. 597. He instances 7 and 10; 7 times, and 10 times; Myriads of myriads; Sexcenti by the Latins: χίλιοι χιλιάδες by the Greeks.

³ The number TWO is the "signature" of testimony—of truth—of certainty. (Deut. xvii. 6; xix. 15; John viii. 17). There were two Tables of Testimony, Ex. xxxii. 15;—the Apostles and the Seventy were sent forth "two and two," Mark vi. 7; Luke x. 1;—there are "two Witnesses," Rev. xi. 3;—"two olive-trees," Zech. iv. 3. The repetition of a revelation is the assurance of its truth,—e.g. Gen. xli. 32; Judges vi. 39; 1 Kings xi. 9. And thus Two symbolizes God's witnesses and martyrs throughout all time.

that stands in immediate relation to It,—all, in short, in which the Divine completes itself, has the stamp of Three. This idea almost forces itself on the mind when man contemplates Creation: there are three dimensions of Space;—Time is past, present, future;—the Universe offers to the view, Sky, Earth, and Sea;—hence arose the proverb, τριχθα δὲ πάντα δέδοσται (Bähr, l.c., s. 143). It is but natural, indeed, that the essential character of the Triune GOD, as He has revealed Himself, should be impressed upon His works. And so, in the record of Revelation Three is the numerical "signature" of the Divine Being, and of all that stands in any real relation to God:¹—e.g. three Angels appeared to Abraham, Gen. xviii. 2; the benediction is three-fold, in Num. vi. 24-26 (cf. "My Name," ver. 27); Balaam's blessing is also three-fold, Num. xxiv. 10; each year God's people must appear before Him three times, Ex. xxiii. 14, 17; Deut. xvi. 16; above all, there is the Ter Sanctus,—the "Holy, Holy, Holy," of Isai. vi. 3.

Christ performs three miracles of raising from the dead (Matt. ix. 18; Luke vii. 12; John xi.); He three times announces that He will rise from the dead on the third day (Matt. xvi. 21; xvii. 23; xx. 19); He is "the Way, and the Truth, and the Life (John xiv. 6); He is Prophet, Priest, and King.

The Number FOUR:—

The number Three being the "signature" of God, of the Creator; Four is the "signature" of Nature, of the created, of the world:—not of the world as "without form and void," but as a Κόσμος, as the revelation of God so far as Nature can reveal Him. Among the heathen, Four is the number of the elements and of the regions of the earth.

¹ Leyrer (in Herzog's Real Encyclop., art. Zahlen bei den Hebr.) disputes the conclusion that Three is strictly the "signature" of God; it rather, he considers, when applied to God, symbolizes the conception of Life. In the history of Creation, he argues, Three is involved in the Seven, as the number describing a gradual development of Life, when, in the first Triad of the Hexameron, the lower order (or kingdom of plants), and, in the second Triad, the highest order of organic Life (man) is attained (Gen. i. 11-13, 26-31).

It is the holy number of the Pythagoreans—the sacred Tetractys, or divine Quaternio, by which they swore. In Scripture Four appears first in Gen. ii. 10, where the river of Eden parts into four heads, “compassing” on all sides the lands of the earth: and thus we read of “the four corners¹ of the earth” (Isai. xi. 12; Ezek. vii. 2); or, as it is expressed in Ps. cvii. 3, “He gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south” (cf. Luke xiii. 29);—we also read of “the four winds of the heaven” in Dan. vii. 2; Zech. ii. 6 (cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 9; Matt. xxiv. 31);—and of the four constellations (Job xxxviii. 31, 32). This is also the language of Rev. vii. 1; xx. 8. For the Hebrew, the world was the manifestation of the Divine creative power (Ps. xix.); and the number Four, which denoted the form of the world, was the “signature” of the world as that scene which “declared the glory of God.” The Living Beings who are the symbols in heaven of the Divine glory which Creation reveals—who are the ideal representatives of Creation (see on Rev. iv. 6)—appear, in Ezek. i., four in number, with four faces, four wings, four wheels (cf. Ezek. x. 9), four sides. See also St. Peter’s Vision, Acts x. 11, 12; xi. 5, 6, where living Creation is symbolized. When the enumeration of the world’s inhabitants is meant to be exhaustive, that enumeration is of four classes,—e.g. “every tribe and tongue, and people and nation” (Rev. v. 9). The old Creation had fallen from God; the new Creation was hereafter to be His Kosmos, in the essential meaning of the word; and towards this restoration the Jewish Theocracy was the first step: “In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed” (Gen. xxii. 18). From such considerations, leaving aside all material notions, is to be derived the religious significance of this number. Thus there were four ingredients in the sacred incense, and four in the sacred oil (Ex. xxx. 23, 24, 34);—the two Altars are “four-square,” and had each four horns (Ex. xxvii. ; xxx.). And so in the Apocalypse the New Jerusalem “lieth four-square,” ch. xxi. 16. Many other instances from Scripture are given by Bähr, and in Herzog, ll. cc.

The number Three—the “signature” of the Divine; and the number Four—the “signature” of Creation, are combined in numerical symbolism both by addition and multiplication: $4 + 3 = 7$; $4 \times 3 = 12$;—e.g. the Three and the Four of the Seven-branched Candlestick; and the Four rows of Three in the Twelve stones of the Breastplate (Ex. xxv. 31–37; xxviii. 17–21).

The number SEVEN:—

This number is employed to present, in the language of symbolism, the following relations:—(a) As 3 and 4 make one number in 7, Seven is the note of union between God and the world, and, therefore, signifies union and harmony; (b) As the conceptions of God and the world are the conditions of every religion, so all systems which aim at union with God must include them. Being the symbol of this union, Seven is, in general, the “number” of religion; (c) The end of religion being union with God, the number (Seven) which signifies this, is the necessary “signature” of Salvation, Blessing, Peace, Perfection.

With the heathen, Seven had almost exclusive reference to natural relations: the seven planets;—the seven colours in the rainbow;—the seven tones in music;—the seven strings of the lyre of Helios;—the seven reeds in the pipe of Pan, the personified ALL. On man, pre-eminently as the world in miniature,—the Mikrokosm,—Seven was stamped. Solon and Hippocrates defined the seven ages of man (Philo, De Opific. Mundi, i. p. 25). According to the Indian doctrine, “man is the representative of the great Seven-stringed World-lyre;” the “symbol of Kosmic harmony;” the “makro-kosmic Heptachord” (v. Bohlen, Das alte Indien, ii. 247). The Chinese distinguished seven material souls in man, together with three spiritual souls (Ritter, Asien, i. 199). The Egyptians worshipped the seven planets (Diodor. Sic., ii. 30); and Herodotus tells of their seven castes. There were also the sacred “Heptads” of Greece and Rome; and hence, the significance attached to Rome's seven hills. Cicero styles Seven "rerum omnium fere nodus" (Somn. Scip. 5,—see De Republica, vi.). In the Pythagorean doctrine of numbers, seven is the number of a καρπός;¹ in accordance with the seven sacred divisions of time, which all nations seem to have recognized.² In the Oriental division of time into seven days, the Indians and Chaldæans gave to each day the name of one of the seven planets, as representing the harmony of the world.

¹ In Hebrew קצות, כנפות,—LXX. ἄκρα, γούραι, πτερυγες, Job xxxvii. 2; Ps. xix. 7; Isai. xlii. 5, 6; Jer. xlix. 36.

In place of all such material relations, the ethical and religious significance of Seven was alone recognized by the Hebrews.³ The Bible begins, in the Book of Genesis, with a Seven; and ends, in the Apocalypse, with a series of Sevens. The symbolical value of this number is not to be sought for, with Winer (Real WW. B., B. ii. s. 715), in the ideas attached by the ancients to the seven planets; nor, with Bähr (l. c., i. 192), in the harmony of the seven tones and colours; nor, with Philo (De Opific. Mundi, i. p. 21), in numerical combinations;⁴ but in the seven days during which Creation arose from chaos (חָהוּ וּבְהוּ) and was pronounced to be "very good" (טוֹב מְאֹד):—when God "rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made" (Gen. ii. 2); when He blessed it, and sanctified it as a day of rest for the Creation also (cf. Prov. ix. 1).¹ And thus the sacred Seven is the "signature" of perfection,—the type of all development in the history of the creature, especially of the human race as it struggles to rise out of imperfection and unrest and sin, to the state of perfection and rest and holiness, through the redemptive operation of God. If in this symbolical number we can look backwards to the work of the first creation of the world; we can also look forward to the New Creation,—to "the sabbath rest" (σαββατισμός, Heb. iv. 9) of the people of God. Of this progress² Israel is the type,—by its origin, its preparatory discipline, its deliverance from Egypt, its organization through the Law; and in this progress the numerical symbol Seven is of never-ceasing recurrence. The very existence of the Jewish nation rested on its Covenant-union with God; and of this the "bow in the cloud" (Gen. ix. 13), with its seven colours, was the Divinely appointed "token." The sign and pledge of this Covenant was the Sabbath (שַׁבָּת; compare שִׁבְעַ, seven: "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," Gen. ii. 3; Ezek. xx. 12;—the resemblance of the two words, however, seems to be merely accidental): see Ex. xxxi. 12-17; Neh. ix. 14. With reference to this sacred number—Seven, or Seven multiplied by Seven—all the legal festivals were ordered.³ Seven was the number

¹ Mr. R. Proctor (Contemp. Rev., March. 1875) would derive the origin of the Jewish Sabbath "from an Egyptian, and primarily from a Chaldæan source."—p. 611.

² Cf. the "seven steps," Ezek. xl. 22, 26, symbolizing the gradual preparation of humanity for the New Temple, and perfected Kingdom of God.—See Leyrer, l. c.

³ The great Festivals lasted seven days:—the Passover (Ex. xii. 15), the Feast of Weeks (Ex. xxxiv. 22), the Feast of Tabernacles (Deut. xvi. 13). Pentecost was seven weeks after the Passover (Lev. xxiii. 15, 16); each seventh year was "a sabbath of rest unto the land" (Lev. xxv. 4); and the Jubilee year was the year after "seven times seven years" (Lev. xxv. 8-11). The Great Day of Atonement fell in the seventh month (Lev. xvi. 29, 30), as did the Feasts of Trumpets and of Tabernacles (Num. xxix. 1, 12). And thus, the 7th day is a Sabbath; the 7th week a Pentecost; the 7th year a Sabbathical year; the 7th Sabbathical year a Jubilee.

¹ Alexander Aphrod. on Aristot. Met., i. 5, 7, writes: "Quem ordinem numerus septem obtineret, hunc in mundo assignabant tempestivitati, utique quoniam hunc numerum tempestivitatem esse censebant" (ap. Herzog, l. c., s. 365).

² Ideler (Chronol., i. 178; ii. 473) traces the universal division of time into periods of seven days, to the phases of the moon, or the duration of each of the four divisions of the lunar month of twenty-eight days. See a remarkable passage on the sacred character of the seventh day among the Greeks, in Clemens Al., Strom. v. 14. Aulus Gellius (iii. 10) gives an account of a work by M. Varro (B.C. 116) on the virtues of the number seven, which, after the Greeks, he called a Hebdomad. Varro writes of the "septem triones quas πλειδδας Græci vocant;" of the phases of the Moon completed "quater septenis diebus;—and he adds "se quoque jam duodecimam annorum hebdomadam ingressum esse."

³ See the treatise of Victorinus, De Fabrica Mundi, ap. Cave, Hist. Liter., t. i. p. 148.

⁴ Philo gives the following examples:— $3 + 4 = 7$; $1 + 2 + 4 = 7$; in the two geometrical series 1, 2, 4, 8, &c., 1, 3, 9, 27, &c., the seventh term in each—as in every geometrical series beginning with unity—is at once a square and a cube.

of *sacrifice*¹ (Num. xxiii. 1, 14, 29; 2 Chron. xxix. 21; Job xlii. 8). Judicial acts, whether of mercy or of punishment, involved the sacred number: e.g. the punishment of Cain (Gen. iv. 15, 24);—the seven years of plenty and of famine in Egypt (Gen. xli. 29, 30). Cf. the use of Seven in Josh. vi. 4—the compassing of Jericho; in 2 Kings v. 10—the healing of Naaman;² in Dan. iv. 16³—the “seven times” of Nebuchadnezzar; &c. Again, the words signifying an oath, and to swear, are derived from Seven: e.g. Beer-sheba, signifies “The well of the oath,” Gen. xxi. 28–31;—God forgets not His Covenant (ברית) which He had sworn (נשבע), Deut. iv. 31; viii. 18.⁴

Seven is also used as a sacred number in the New Test.:—e.g. the seven Beatitudes; the seven petitions in the Lord's Prayer; the seven Parables in Matt. xiii.; the miracle of the seven loaves; “the seven words” from the Cross; the seven disciples in John xxi. 2 (cf. the 7 × 10 disciples, Luke x. 1); the seven Deacons; the seven “Charismata” in Rom. xii. 6–8; the seven characters of “wisdom” in James iii. 17; the seven “virtues” in 2 Peter i. 5–7.

In the Apocalypse, the prominence of the number Seven is as remarkable as it is unquestionable. (i). There are the cases in which the numerical symbol is exhibited, but not expressed:—such are the doxologies of ch. v. 12; vii. 12; the enumeration of the dwellers on the earth, ch. vi. 15; the enumeration of God's enemies, ch. xix. 18.¹ (ii). There are the far more numerous instances in which the numerical symbol is indicated expressly:—in ch. i., the seven Spirits, the seven Churches, the seven Candlesticks, the seven Angels, the seven Stars; elsewhere, the Seals, the Trumpets, the Vials, the Thunders, the Lamps of fire, the horns and eyes of the Lamb, and so throughout the Book.²

It should also be added here that the half of Seven ($3\frac{1}{2} \times 2 = 7$) was taken among the Jews as the symbol of times of tribulation: e.g. the period of famine and of Israel's oppression in the days of Elijah—a period so expressly specified by Christ in Luke iv. 25 (cf. James v. 17); and this “broken number”—this half of Seven—is a symbol of great significance from Rev. xi. to Rev. xiii.: see Wetstein's note on Rev. xi. 2. A condition of things is thus symbolically represented in which the Church suffers oppression from the World-power, and seems to be abandoned by God,—a condition the duration of which is shortened “for the elect's sake” (Matt. xxiv. 22). “A time and times and the dividing of time” (Dan. vii. 25; xii. 7; Rev. xii. 14), or this period of three years and a half according to the usual interpretation, is the prophetic duration of the deliverance

¹ In the Feast of Tabernacles (Num. xxix. 13–34), the whole idea of sacrifice was ordered according to Seven:—during the seven days were sacrificed, of goats, 7; of rams, 7 × 2; of lambs, 7 × 7 × 2; of bullocks, 7 × 5 × 2,—seven bullocks being offered on the seventh day (see Mr. White, Symbolic Numbers, p. 57). One may add the seven elements of the sacrifice,—the bullock, the ram, the goat, the dove; corn, wine, and oil.

² “Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh,” &c. This is an instance of Seven, as the note of purification. The first hint of this is given in the number of “clean beasts” taken into the Ark by Noah, Gen. vii. 2, 3: cf. Lev. xiv. 51.

³ “In Babylonia the number Seven had a character quite sacramental.”—See the notes on Dan. iv. 16, 32, 34.

⁴ To this brief enumeration may be added the adjuncts of the Sanctuary and its service:—the seven branches of the Candlestick, and its seven lamps (Ex. xxv. 31–37);—Solomon's Temple was seven years in building, 1 Kings vi. 38. The length of each curtain of the Tabernacle was 7 × 4 cubits (Ex. xxvi. 2);—the number of the pillars of the Tabernacle court was 7 × 4 × 2 (Ex. xxvii. 10–15): see Philo, De Vita Mosis, iii. 1.

¹ It is to be noted that as the symbol of the Lamb, and the possession of a throne, are associated with Antichrist—the “simia Dei” (Rev. xiii. 2, 11); so the number Seven is taken in connexion with what is evil, e.g. Luke viii. 2; xi. 26. The seven heads of the Dragon and the Beast (Rev. xii. 3; xiii. 1) are the hellish anti-type of, and contrast to, the seven Spirits of God,—the seven eyes and horns of the Lamb: cf. the seven nations of Canaan, Deut. vii. 1; Acts xiii. 19.

² Note that in Amos i. 3 seven is resolved into its elements three and four. The purification on the seventh day was useless, if that on the third day did not precede, see Num. xix. 11, 12. Compare the seven night-Visions of Zech. i.–vi.; the three of ch. i.–ii. being Visions of general, and the four of ch. iii.–vi., of special import. This resolution into three and four, and more usually into four and three, marks the Apocalypse:—see the remarks introductory to ch. ii.

of the saints into the power of their oppressors. In Rev. xi. 2, 3, the period of 42 months (= 1260 days; = "a time, and times, and half a time," ch. xii. 14)¹ is the period during which the Holy City is trodden down, and the Witnesses are persecuted (cf. "three days and a half" ch. xi. 9). This "broken number"—"Septenarius truncus"—may also be taken to be the "signature" of the broken Covenant; or may, perhaps, denote a period when God's Covenant of mercy is hidden from view, though the glory to be hoped for is still in store,—a glory which is fully developed in the sacred Seven.

Further, if one be subtracted from Seven, we get Six, a deficient number,—the half, also, of Twelve,—and thus the "signature" of non-perfection: in Ex. xxviii. 10, the two Sixes make up the perfect Twelve. The source of the idea is to be sought for in the six days of Creation, as days of work; and thus Six is also the "signature" of human labour. The command to "work" on the "six days" is given seven times,—viz. Ex. xx. 9; xxiii. 12; xxxi. 15; xxxiv. 21; xxxv. 2; Lev. xxiii. 3; Deut. v. 13; and thus man follows the Divine exemplar, for not until the seventh day did God rest "from all His work which He had made," Gen. ii. 2. This number is also a symbol of human rule and power, for on the sixth day God conferred on man his dominion over animated Creation, Gen. i. 28. After the pause which, in each case, precedes the last Seal, and the last Trumpet, the judgments which fall on the world and which are complete in the number 6, are fulfilled in the 7, when "the kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ" (Rev. xi. 15). Accordingly, "Six is the number of the world given over to judgment" (Auberlen, l. c., p. 267). In Rev. xiii. 18, the threefold appearance of six in higher orders ($666 = 6 + 60 + 600$) indicates that the Beast "can only rise to greater ripeness for judgment."—ib., p. 268.

¹ Mr. C. Maitland suggests that this variety of expression is intended "to make us more abundantly certain of the accuracy of the fulfilment."—The Apost. School of Proph. Interpr., p. 27. See note ², p. 474.

The number TWELVE denotes, not by addition as Seven, but by multiplication, the combination of the "signature" of God, and the "signature" of the world (3×4):—

According to the material conceptions of the heathen, Twelve was the regulating number of the Universe, both in space and time. There are 12 chief Stars—12 signs of the Zodiac in the path of the sun; 12 months in the year; 12 hours in the day. Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, had 12 chief deities; there were 12 Titans; 12 labours of Hercules, &c. In Scripture, however, rejecting all material references, as Seven, by reason of its components 3 and 4, is the Covenant-number,—so, by analogy, Twelve is not indeed, the number of the Covenant itself as Seven is, but of the Covenant-people in whose midst God dwells, and with whom He has entered into Covenant-relations. The division into Twelve Tribes fixes the relation of the Israelites, as God's elect people, to this symbolical number. That this relation was divinely fixed we learn from such passages as Ex. xxiv. 4; xxviii. 21; Josh. iv. 1-9; 1 Kings xviii. 31; Ezra vi. 17. That the relation was not accidental,—that it did not spring from the mere fact that Jacob had twelve sons,¹ is clear from the incorporation of the Tribes of Ephraim and Manasses in place of their father Joseph, which would have disturbed the number Twelve had not Levi been specially separated among the other Tribes (Num. i. 47; ii. 33). That this explanation is just, we learn from the Divinely appointed arrangement of the Camp of Israel (Num. ii.); where the Tabernacle in which God dwelt was in the midst (ver. 2), with three Tribes encamped on each of the four sides (vv. 3-31). Jerusalem—the Holy City which replaced the Camp in the wilderness—was built, as Josephus describes it (B. J., v. 4. 2), on four hills, with three gates on each side ; just as we read of the New Jerusalem in Rev. xxi. 13. And thus the number Twelve was the "signature" of Israel as God's elect people with God in their midst : while the perpetuation of this number as that of the Apostles of Christ, and this selection of it (Matt. xix. 28) to mark out the Christian Church also as the Covenant-people with whom God shall ever dwell,—fixes Twelve as the "signature" of the collective body of the Redeemed.

¹ The fact that Nahor (Gen. xxii. 21-24) and Ishmael (Gen. xvii. 20; xxv. 16) had each twelve sons, has led Leyrer (l. c.) to conclude that Twelve is not the "signature" of the people of God, but generally of a people (cf. Gen. xxi. 13); the predominant and permanent reference to Israel causing this number to be symbolical of the Church, as the assemblage of God's chosen people.

For the symbolic use of Twelve in the New Test., see the twelve thrones of the Twelve Apostles, Matt. xix. 28 ; Acts i. 26 ; the twelve legions of Angels, Matt. xxvi. 53 ; the twelve baskets full of fragments in the miracle of the loaves, Matt. xiv. 20 :—in the Apocalypse, the Woman with "a crown of twelve Stars," ch. xii. 1 ; or, referring to the New Jerusalem, the Twelve Angels at the twelve gates on which were the names "of the Twelve Tribes of Israel," and the twelve foundations, on which were "the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb," ch. xxi. 12, 14 ;—in fine, the "twelve manner of fruits" of the Tree of Life (in connexion with the twelve months) ch. xxii. 2.

The introduction of Twelve as a factor of other numbers is also significant :—

12×2 ,—The courses of the priests, 1 Chron. xxiv. 1–19 (cf. 2 Chron. viii. 14 ; xxxi. 2 ; Luke i. 8). In the Apocalypse the "Four and twenty Elders," with their thrones, ch. iv. 4.

12×4 ,—The "forty and eight cities" of the Levites, Num. xxxv. 7.

12×8 ,—The offering of "ninety and six rams," Ezra viii. 35.

12×10 (and the derivatives of 12 multiplied by the derivatives of 10),—e.g. The 120 priests, 2 Chron. v. 12 ; the 120 disciples, Acts i. 15.

$12 \times 10 \times 10 \times 10$ (= 12,000),—The length and breadth of the City, Rev. xxi. 16.

12×12 ,—The wall of the City was "an hundred and forty and four cubits," Rev. xxi. 17.

$12 \times 12 \times 10 \times 10 \times 10$ (= 144,000 or 12,000 from each of the Twelve Tribes),—The sealed of Rev. vii. 4 ; see also ch. xiv. 1.

The number TEN :—

As the numerical system of all nations consists of decads, and the number Ten represents the entire system, it is the natural symbol of perfection and completeness. The Pythagoreans gave to Ten the name of Kosmos,—transferring to it the name properly belonging to their Tetractys ; for, as Four is the number of the Universe which comprehends all relations, so Four involves Ten, inasmuch as $1 + 2 + 3 + 4 = 10$, or the great τετρακτὺς (see Suidas, s. v. ἀριθμός). As 4 follows 3, so also 10 follows 3×3 .¹ Ten is, therefore, the "signature" of the perfected κόσμος, and they claim for it—as the perfectly explicit Monas and Tetractys—everything that embraces what is odd and even, what is evil and good. Hence they regarded Ten as the symbolical representative of absolute perfection and complete development. And thus Ten symbolizes, not God and the world—like 3 and 4, but that peculiar quality of completeness and perfection which belongs to both. From such speculations Spencer derives the universal custom of setting apart a Tenth of all to God (De Legg. Hebr. iii. 1),—a symbolical conception which may be noticed so early as the time of Abraham, who gave Melchizedek "tithes of all" (Gen. xiv. 20) ; and which was divinely ratified in the Law (see Lev. xxvii. 30 ; Num. xviii. 21, 24). Though but a tenth, the tithe was given in token that the whole was the Lord's. Hence, too, "the words of the Covenant, the Ten Commandments" (Ex. xxxiv. 28) gave the complete summary of the Law, and were the condition of Israel's existence as a people.²

¹ Philolaus, the first expounder of the system of Pythagoras (see Ritter and Preller, Hist. Phil., p. 58), disputed as to the proportions and virtues of numbers,—"maxime de numero denario, quo omnes numeros atque omnes numerorum virtutes contineri putabant."—l. c., p. 61. "Quaternarium numerum quasi compendium et originem denarii esse docebant, quia si addendo conjungas unum, duo, tria, quatuor, efficiuntur decem. Cf. Vit. Pythag. ap. Phot. Bibl. p. 712 . . . Inde juramentum illud Pythagoræ per tetractyn. Cf. Lucian., pro lapsu inter salut. 5."—l. c., p. 62.

² Delitzsch (see Herzog, l. c., art. Zahlen, s. 379) would trace the symbolical value of Ten to a different source :—"Reading between the lines" of the express division into Seven, of the work of Creation, he discerns Ten "acts," or "creative words," of God (viz., Gen. i. 1,

In the Bible, accordingly, as the "signature" of a complete and perfect whole, Ten appears, at times, by itself; at times, in connexion with other symbolical numbers:—e.g. in the details of the Tabernacle. The Tabernacle consisted of ten curtains, forming a covering, in surface forty cubits by twenty-eight (i.e., 10×4 by 7×4), and of which the "loops" and "taches" were fifty (or 10×5); its length being 10×3 cubits (Ex. xxvi. 1; xxxvi. 8–18). The length of its court was 10×10 cubits, by 10×5 (Ex. xxvii. 18). The Holy of Holies was a cube, each edge being of ten cubits (see on Rev. xxi. 16). Other applications are frequent. Noah, the head of the tenth generation¹ of mankind, was a type (Gen. v. 29) of the future universal Redemption; and that the tenth generation signifies "for ever," we learn from Deut. xxiii. 3, as explained by Neh. xiii. 1. The ten Egyptian plagues symbolized the complete outpouring of Divine wrath;—to which stands in contrasted parallel the "tribulation of ten days" (Rev. ii. 10), caused by the world to the Church. The ten horns of the fourth Beast represented ten kings, and symbolized perfect power (Dan. vii. 7, 24).² In order to intensify the idea,

3, 6, 9, 11, 14, 20, 24, 26, 29) through which the Kosmos reached its completion, as a whole, during the seven days: so that the "seven days" represent, in succession, the progress of time during which God's word and work completed the world; and the "Ten words" represent in systematic perfection the single parts and aspects of the Kosmos, when all the parts of it have become complete. By this consideration of the relation of Ten to the Kosmos, Delitzsch accounts for the position of Ten in the system of numbers among all peoples, and under every form of culture. Be this however, as it may, the symbolical importance of the number Ten is beyond question.

¹ Leyrer notes that the formula "these are the generations" occurs ten times in the Book of Genesis: viz. (1) Heaven and Earth,—ii. 4; (2) Adam,—v. 1; (3) Noah,—vi. 9; (4) Noah's sons,—x. 1; (5) Shem,—xi. 10; (6) Terah,—xi. 27; (7) Ishmael,—xxv. 12; (8) Isaac,—xxv. 19; (9) Esau,—xxxvi. 1; (10) Jacob,—xxxvii. 2.

² Leyrer (l. c.) adds, that the instruments which give praise to God have the "signature" of Ten,—e.g. the "ten strings," Ps. xxxiii. 2; xcii. 3; cxliv. 9: and he refers to the Pythagorean World-lyre, with its ten strings, and the ten-voiced music of the spheres,—see Cicero, De Republica, vi. (Somn. Scip. 4); Meursius, De Denar. Pythag., ap. Grævii Thesaur. Græc., t. ix.

the powers of Ten are frequently employed singly or in combination with other symbolical numbers:—e.g. "a thousand (10^3) generations" (1 Chron. xvi. 15; Ps. cv. 8); and again, to express indefinite time, "a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday," (Ps. xc. 4; 2 Pet. iii. 8). Also combined with other numbers:—e.g. the captivity in Babylon for seventy (10×7) years (Jer. xxv. 11);—these seventy "sevens" (10×7^2) of Daniel (ix. 24);—in Elijah's days the seven thousand ($10^3 \times 7$) in Israel who did not bow the knee to Baal (1 Kings xix. 18; Rom. xi. 4);—in the Apocalypse the 12,000 ($10^3 \times 4 \times 3$) from each of the Twelve Tribes ($= 10^3 \times 12^3 = 144,000$), ch. vii. 4; xiv. 1;—the "thousand and six hundred furlongs" ($10^3 \times 4^2$), ch. xiv. 20. Compare also ch. v. 11, "ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands"—a countless number;—ch. ix. 16, "two hundred thousand thousand,"—and, above all, ch. xx., the "Thousand years."

The number Five:—

To the number Ten is related Five, which thus represents one-half of the "signature" of perfection. In this light, it symbolizes in Scripture a relative imperfection. Thus, he that sins through ignorance in holy things "shall make amends," "and shall add the fifth part [= a double tenth] thereto," Lev. v. 16; cf. vi. 5; xxii. 14. In the New Test., the five foolish virgins are placed beside the five who were wise, Matt. xxv. In the Revelation the locusts have power but for five months (ch. ix. 5, 10); and in ch. xvii. 10, five of the "seven kings" are fallen.

(b) NUMBERS APPLIED TO TIME.

I. The system of Tichonius (A.D. 390):—

From a very early period the chronological as well as the numerical statements of the Apocalypse have exercised the ingenuity of commentators. Among the "Seven Rules"¹ of Tichonius, which were intended by their author to solve the difficulties of Scripture, the fifth is headed De Temporibus. "The legitimate numbers" Tichonius takes to be 7, 10, 12, and their multiples,¹—e.g. 70, 700, or 7×7 , or 10×10 . By this means either perfection is signified, or the whole is inferred from its part :—thus the Seven Churches (Rev. i.) denote perfection; and in like manner the number Ten,—e.g. 1 Sam. xxix. 5; Dan. vii. 10; Matt. xviii. 22. For the number Twelve, see above, p. 478.

¹ "De septem Regulis," ap. M. Bibl. Patrum, ed. De La Bigne, t. vi. p. 49, &c. These "Rules" were taken by Beda as the foundation of his interpretation of the Apocalypse.

In cases where time is concerned, the "tribulation of ten days" signifies 'down to the very end' ("significat usque in finem");—the five months" (Rev. ix. 5) denote five years;—"the hour and day and month and year" (Rev. ix. 15) denote three years and a half. Sometimes "a day" is put for a hundred days, and thus the "1260 days" (Rev. xi. 3; xii. 6) represent 350 years.—so also the "42 months" (ver. 2). "A time, and times, and half a time" (Rev. xii. 14) are either $3\frac{1}{2}$ or 350 years; and in like manner one day is sometimes a hundred years, as it is written concerning the Church, "after three days and a half" (Rev. xi. 9, 11).²

In modern times, however, the "Year-day theory" is that which has gained the highest popularity.

II. The "Year-day" theory :—

Among the questions relating to symbolical numbers, none possesses such importance as the question of the "Year-day" theory. This theory is thus defined by Mr. Birks: In the predictions of Daniel and St. John "which relate to the general history of the Church between the time of the prophet and the Second Advent . . . each day represents a natural year, as in the Vision of Ezekiel,

¹ "Ex legitimis numeris sunt septenarius, denarius, duodenarius. Idem est autem numerus et cum multiplicatur: ut septuaginta vel septingenti; vel toties in se, ut septies septem, aut decies deni."—l. c., p. 61.

² "Aliquando dies denario numero centum dies sunt, sicut in Apocalypse, Dies mille ducenti sexaginta. Nam millies ducenties sexagies centeni, centum viginti sex millia dies sunt, qui sunt anni trecenti quinquaginta, mensibus triginta dierum . . . "Tempus" aut annus est, aut centum anni; sicut tempus et tempora et dimidium temporis, quod est aut tres anni et dimidius, aut 350. Iterum unus dies aliquando centum anni sunt: sicut de Ecclesia scriptum est post tres dies et dimidium" (Rev. xi. 9, 11).

[iv. 4–6]; a month denotes 30, and a time 360 years."—First Elements of Sacred Prophecy, p. 311.¹

The passages in the Apocalypse to which Mr. Birks applies this theory are the following :—ch. ii. 10 ("ten days"); ch. ix. 5, 10 ("five months"); ch. ix. 15 ("the hour, and day, and month, and year"); ch. xi. 2, 3 ("42 months," and "1260 days"); ch. xi. 9 11 ("three days and a half"); ch. xii. 6 ("1260 days"); ch. xii. 14 ("a time, and times, and half a time"); ch. xiii. 5 ("42 months"). It will be observed that this writer excludes from the application of the "Year-day" theory, ch. viii. 1 ("half an hour"); ch. xvii. 12 ("one hour"); ch. xviii. 8 ("one day"); and, chief of all, the "Thousand Years" of ch. xx. Indeed Mr. Birks regards it as the merit of his definition that it excludes the Millennium, and thus, he considers, avoids the objection that, according to the "Year-day" theory, the Millennium would continue for 360,000 years (l. c., pp. 313–322).

The objections to this principle of interpretation which at once offer themselves, are neither few nor unimportant. If Numbers are symbolical at all, we cannot play fast and loose with their figurative meaning: we cannot apply, at our pleasure, the "Year-day" theory to some prophetic numbers, and arbitrarily exclude others;—and yet almost all writers seem to shrink from applying this theory to the Millennium.² Christ has told us that it was not even for Apostles "to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in His own power"; nevertheless the advocates of the "Year-day" theory place the exact interval of 1260 years between some point of time variously and arbitrarily fixed upon, and the goal of Apocalyptic prediction, — whether that goal be the Lord's Second Advent, or some subordinate event in history.¹ Further still:—by aid of the "Year-day" theory, writers who, above all others, seek to spiritualize the Apocalypse, are unconsciously led to give what is really a literal interpretation to passages which they imagine they are expounding symbolically. In Num. xiv. 34, and Ezek. iv. 6, when it is expressly said that years are represented by days, or conversely, this is simply a literal statement of a fact, — a statement as literal as when Jeremiah (xxv. 11) predicts plainly that the captivity in Babylon will last for seventy years. If, therefore, an expositor assumes that a prophetic day always means a natural year, and, consequently, that 42 months, or 1260 days must represent 1260 natural years, he, so far, places himself in the ranks of those who interpret the Apocalypse literally. If the Second Advent, moreover, be the goal fixed upon, one can easily perceive how greatly the knowledge of the preceding period of 1260 years must interfere with that attitude of expectation which the Church should ever maintain. Nor can such objections, even if they stood alone, be removed by the statement of Mr. Birks (l. c., p. 410) that the meaning

¹ "The mystical exposition of the 1260 days as years was first published about A.D. 1200." . . . "From the time of Osiander (1544), and the Centuriators, it has been generally received and retained in the Protestant Churches."—l. c., p. 19. The Abbot Joachim (circa A.D. 1190), "completely anticipated the day-year theory."—Todd, The Prophecies relating to Antichrist, p. 457. Joachim's words are: "Accepto haud dubie die pro anno, et 1260 diebus pro totidem annis."—ib. p. 458.

² Anton Driessen, however, (Meditt. in sacram Apoc., 1717) has not shrunk from this conclusion. Taking a year to be equal to 360 days, he counts in the Apocalypse from the first Christian Pentecost, seven equal periods of 360 years, down to Rev. xx.; and he makes the 1000 years (beginning in the year 2695) to be the eighth and last period of God's kingdom on earth,—this Millennium being equal to 360,000 years :—so Lücke reports, s. 1038.

¹ Thus Junius counts the 1260 years from Christ's Resurrection, A.D. 34, to A.D. 1294.

Mede (p. 600) would count the 42 months of "the Antichristian Apostasy" from some year between 365 and 455. He inclines to the year 376, when the Emperor Gratian, who renounced the title "Pontifex Maximus," began to reign.

Cressener from A.D. 427 to A.D. 1687, the eve of the decline of the Turkish power.

According to Elliott, the primary epoch of the Beast's 1260 days was Justinian's decree, A.D. 530; and the primary ending the French Revolution, A.D. 1790. The secondary beginning was the decree of Phocas, A.D. 606; and the secondary ending the year 1866 (vol. iii. pp. 296-302, 396-410).

Faber counts from A.D. 604 to A.D. 1864 (Sacr. Cal., B. I. ch. 7, p. 132). Tyso (p. 79) gives a list of 47 writers who give different dates.

of the symbol was concealed for twelve, or fifteen, or even eighteen centuries, until the "Year-day" theory was devised by expositors; for, when closely examined, this theory has no real support from the analogy of Scripture.

The passages which are appealed to in proof of this theory, and which explain its meaning, are as follows:—(1) "After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years" (Num. xiv. 34); (2) "Lie thou upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity. For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days. 390 days: . . . And when thou hast accomplished them lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year" (Ezek. iv. 4-6). To these passages writers add, as their grand confirmation, (3) the prediction of the "seventy weeks" in Dan. ix. 24-27;¹ which according to the established interpretation, indicates "seventy weeks of years," or 490 years, — "each day for a year."

As to the two passages Num. xiv. 34,

¹ "What are the 'weeks'? Are they weeks of days,—or weeks of years,—lunar years of 354 days, or Babylonian years of 360 days,—or jubilee periods of 50 years,—or are they mystical and symbolical numbers? Critics of acknowledged piety and ability adopt, on this point, the most opposite views."—Excursus on Dan. ix. 24-27, p. 365. "It is a question," writes Mr. G. S. Faber, "whether the 'seventy weeks' [of Daniel ix.] are composed of solar years [of 365 days] or of lunar years; and if of the latter, whether each year contains 354 days or 360 days." Dissert. on Dan. ix., p. xiii. E. g., on Rev. xi., Brightman takes the 1260 days (the months "being neither lunar nor Julian, but Egyptian, each consisting of 30 days"—p. 287) to be 1242 Julian years, from Constantine's accession A.D. 304, to A.D. 1546, the year when the Council of Trent assembled (cf. Note C on ch. ii. 10). R. Fleming also reduces the 1260 days (or 3½ years) to Julian years (3½ Julian years = 1278 days; and, therefore 1260 prophetic days = 1242 Julian years). He counts from "the decree of Phocas," A.D. 606, and thus obtains for the close of the Apocalyptic 3½ years (1242 + 606) the year 1848 (see Note B on ch. xi. 2).

Ezek. iv. 4-6, it is not easy to see what support can be found in them for the "Year-day" theory. In neither of them does a "day" stand for a "year"; in both a day is simply a day, and a year is a year, in the plain, literal sense of the words. The "forty years" of Israel's wandering in the wilderness were the punishment for "forty days" unbelief:—Ezekiel, lying on his side for 430 (390 + 40) days, bore the national iniquity of 430 years. How can it be inferred from either of these passages that the word "day" in prophecy always signifies a year? In the passage from Ezekiel the whole significance lies not in the words "day" and "year," but in the symbolic action publicly performed; and the argument based upon it, in proof of the "Year-day" theory, "confounds the allegory of action with the metaphors of speech."¹ In the previous verse (Ezek. iv. 3) "an iron pan" (marg. flat plate) symbolizes the wall of Jerusalem; and Bishop Horsley argues that we might with equal reason (and by the same analogy) conclude that the word iron-plate symbolizes the wall of a city in Lev. ii. 5; 1 Chron. xxiii. 29, as infer, because a day represents a year in Num. xiv. 34, that the 1260 days of Rev. xi. 3 must be interpreted to mean 1260 years (l.c., p. 723).²

The argument from the "seventy weeks" of Daniel (ix. 24-27) is still less conclusive. The usual translation—"seventy weeks," instead of the literal rendering "seventy sevens"—has contributed not a little to the misconception here. Expositors supply in this passage, not weeks of days, or months, or jubilees, but of years,—i.e., "seventy sevens [of years]." That the simple rendering, "seventy sevens," is the correct signification follows from the usage of Scripture. When we ourselves use the word "week," we mean exclusively a week of days; and we calculate time by weeks, reducing days to weeks, weeks to months, and months to years. This, however, was not the custom of the writers of Scripture. As the Jews were not in the habit of counting time by weeks, they did not express the period of seven days by any one word; writing in full "seven days" (e.g. Num. xxix. 12, shibath yamim, שבעת ימים,—ἐπτά ἡμέρας), or "a seven (or sevens) of days" (Dan. x. 2, shabuim yamim, שבועים ימים,—ἑβδομάδας ἡμερῶν, cf. Ezek. xlv. 21)¹:—cf. "a month of days," Gen. xxix. 14; "three years of days," Amos iv. 4. The important fact, however, is that the word shabua (שבוע) properly signifies not "a week (of days)," or "a week (of years)," but strictly "a seven,"—just as the French language has the phrase une septaine; and, similarly, as we say, a dozen. Whether shabua denotes "a seven (of days)," or "a seven (of years)," or "a seven (of some other period of time)," is to be determined by the context alone;² and ¹ Three exceptions to this rule are given by Dr. S. R. Maitland (see his First and Second Enquiries as to the Prophetic periods of Daniel and St. John):—(1) In Lev. xii. 5, the duration of "two weeks" (shebuaim) is prescribed; (2) In Gen. xxix. 18, 20, Jacob serves Laban "seven years" (sheba shanim); and in ver. 27 we read "Fulfil her week" (shabua soth,—τὰ ἑβδομα τῶν ἡμερῶν), which commentators usually take to be "a week of days"—"the seven days of the [marriage] feast" (Judges xiv. 12): so that Jacob married Leah and Rachel within eight days. Josephus, however, understood that Jacob served seven years (ἑπτὰ ἐνιαυτοί—Antt. i. 19, 7) for Rachel also; (3) "The feast of weeks" (hag shabuoth), or feast of the "first fruits of wheat harvest" (Ex. xxiii. 16; xxxiv. 22; Num. xxviii. 26; Deut. xvi. 9, 10, 16; Jer. v. 24), as the feast of Pentecost was also called (Lev. xxiii. 15-21),—was fixed by counting seven weeks (as we count) from a given time: see Tobit ii. 1, ἡ ἑστὶν ἀγία ἑβδομάδων.

¹ See Bishop Horsley, British Magazine, Supp. 1833, vol. iv. p. 725, quoted by Dr. S. R. Maitland, The Twelve hundred and sixty days, p. 108. Dr. Maitland (ib. p. 107) also quotes Wagenseil: "Alter locus, Ezech. iv. 6, seque nihil probat, ibi enim tantum propheta super latus dextrum et sinistrum tot dies cubare jubetur, quot annos Deus domus Israelis et domus Judæ peccata tacitus pertulerat. Hic ergo vox dies ad annum significandum physice, ut ita loquar, adhibetur, non grammaticè: exstatque locus plane similis, Num. xiv."—Tela Ign. Satanae (Mantissa de LXX. Hebdom., p. 61).

² The reply of Mr. Birks (l.c. p. 348) that it is not said that "three hundred iron plates" represent "three hundred walls," does not appear conclusive.

² "Hofmann and Kliefoth" writes Keil (on Dan. ix. 24), "are in the right when they remark that shabuim does not necessarily mean year-weeks, but an intentionally indefinite designation of a period of time measured by the number seven, whose chronological duration must be determined on other grounds." See also Dr. M. Stuart's Comm. on the Apoc., vol. ii. p. 462.

this usage is followed by the Misnic writers.¹

In Dan. ix. 24 the context seems to point to the interpretation of "seventy sevens" (shabuim shibim), viz. "seventy sevens (of years)."² In ver. 2 Daniel quotes Jeremiah's prediction of the accomplishment of "seventy years [shibim shanah] in the desolations of Jerusalem." This period Daniel intensifies by multiplying seventy by seven in ver. 24. He leaves the measure of time indefinite; but his previous reference to Jeremiah seems to indicate that "sevens (of years)," not "weeks (of days)," are to be understood throughout the entire passage, vv. 24-27. On the other hand, when Daniel does not leave the measure of time indefinite, but intends to express a week in our sense of the word, he writes in full "a seven of days,"—see Dan. x. 2, 3, "three sevens of days" (sheloshah shabuim yamim): cf. Hävernicks in *loc.*³ On the reference in Dan. ix. 2 to Jeremiah, compare the remarkable passage, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21.⁴

It is to be noted that when one space of time in Scripture typifies another space of time, both spaces of time are equal:—e. g. "The three days and three nights" in Jonah i. 17, and "the three days and three nights" of the entombment of Christ,—Matt. xii. 40. When the exact time differs, it is stated expressly as in the case of the days in Num. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 4-9.

Again, when we are told by Mr. Faber (Dissert. on Dan. ix.: see note ¹, p. 482) that the 1260 days, the 42 months, and the 3½ times "must alike be equivalent to 1260 years," we are also to bear in mind that a year is taken to signify two different periods of time. When writers of this class thus speak of "years of years," they really "mean 'years' (consisting of 360 mystical days) 'of years' (consisting of 365 natural days)."—S. R. Maitland, Second Enquiry, p. 83. See Mr. Elliott's calculation referred to on ch. xi. 9.¹

The arguments of those who uphold the "Year-day" theory, in answer to Dr. S. R. Maitland and the other writers who adopt the "Futurist" system of interpretation, or who take the numbers of Scripture in their bare, literal sense,² do not apply to anything which has been stated here.

III. "A Time, and Times, and half a Time" (Rev. xii. 14):—

This symbolical period is borrowed from Dan. vii. 25³ ("a time and times and the dividing of time"), and Dan. xii. 7 ("a time, times, and an half"). In the former place, which occurs in the Chaldee portion of Daniel, the Chaldee word iddan (ܝܕܢ) is used; in the latter, which occurs in the Hebrew portion, the common Hebrew word moed (מוֹעֵד): and in both places the LXX. has καὶρός, as in Rev. xii. 14. These "three and a half times" are the half of the "seven times" of Dan. iv. 16 (LXX. ver. 20).⁴

¹ See, too, in loc., Elliott's explanation of ch. ix. 15 ("the hour, and day, and month, and year"). Robert Fleming, however, has noted this: "In order," he observes "to understand the Prophetical years aright," we must reduce them to Julian years; and thus he makes the 3½ Prophetical years = 1278 Julian years, speaking "ore rotundo:"—see above, p. 482, note ¹, and Note B on ch. xi. 2.

² E. g. Mr. Edward Irving reckoned the 1260 days from Jan. 14, 1832, to July 14, 1835. As a "Preterist," Mr. F. D. Maurice understood the 42 months literally: "We commonly reckon a period of about four years between the commencement of the Jewish rebellion, . . . and the termination of the war by Titus."—Lectures on the Apoc., p. 190.

³ Cf. Dan. vii. 12, "for a season and time;"—a phrase which it is rather too great literalism to identify with "the times and seasons" of Dan. ii. 21,—see the note on Dan. vii. 12.

⁴ The Chaldee word iddan, found only in Daniel, is used for time either indefinitely (e. g. Dan. ii. 8, iii. 5, &c.), or to express a definite period of time, as in Dan. iv. 16 (Heb. iv. 13), "and let seven times pass over him" (shabat iddanin, ܫܒܬܐ ܝܕܢܐ, and so in vv. 23, 25, 32).

¹ See Dr. Maitland, l. c.; and the references in Dr. A. M'Caul's reply to the 'Morning Watch.'

² On Dan. ix. 27, Irenæus writes: "Dimidium hebdomadis tres sunt anni et menses sex."—Har. v. 25, p. 323.

³ Grotius comments thus on Dan. ix. 24: "Septuaginta Hebdomades." Annorum. Ita enim mos erat loquendi, et manet apud Thalmudicos. Ideo ubi de dierum hebdomade agitur, solet adjici dierum nomen. Ezek. xlv. 21; infra Dan. x. 2, 3, in Hebræo."

⁴ Cf. Lev. xxvi. 34, 35. It should be noted that "a sabbath of years" was a legal phrase; see Lev. xxv. 4, 8, "seven sabbaths of years" (sheba shabbethoth shanim), or "seven times seven years," the fiftieth year being "a Jubilee."

The majority of the older¹ as well as of the more recent interpreters take a "time" to represent a year: the text itself, however, does not fix any period—years, months, weeks, days. The Jews, in the age of Justin Martyr,² considered "a time" in Daniel to represent a century. Scaliger (A.D. 1540) has followed them; and assumes that Scripture makes a time to signify "annum magnum sæcularem:" and he makes the $3\frac{1}{2}$ times the period which elapsed between the rise of the Albigenses and the Reformation, "car un temps ou jour en l'Écriture signifie cent ans"³ (quoted by S. R. Maitland, Second Enquiry, p. 34, from "Scaligerana, prima," p. 39). "The supposition," notes Keil (on Dan. vii. 25), "that in Dan. iv. 16 the 'seven times' represent 'seven years,' neither is, nor can be proved. As regards the time and times in Dan. xii. 7, and the periods named in Rev. xii. 14, it is very questionable whether the weeks and the days represent the ordinary weeks of the year, and days of the week, and whether these periods of time are to be taken chronologically." At all events, probable though it may be that the three and a half times typify three and a half years, this result cannot be relied upon as a certainty by the interpreter of prophecy.

IV. Bengel's chronological system⁴ affords an illustration of the arbitrary methods according to which commentators have dealt with the Apocalyptic numbers:—

Bengel first assumes that "the number (666) of the Beast," Rev. xiii. 18, denominates years.⁵ These, for 666 is "the number of a man," are common years; and this number of years he identifies with the 42 months of the Beast, Rev. xiii. 5.¹ Accordingly one prophetic month = $15\frac{1}{2}$ common years; and one prophetic day = (nearly) half a natural year. Again he compares 666 with the 1000 years of Rev. xx.; and infers the proportion $3 : 2 :: 999\frac{2}{3} : 666\frac{2}{3}$ years. The unit in each of these denominations (or $111\frac{1}{3}$) he further assumes to be "a half time" (Rev. xii. 14); and, therefore, "a time" (καιρός) = $222\frac{2}{3}$ common years; and "a time, times, and half a time" = $777\frac{2}{3}$ years. "A short time" (Rev. xii. 12—ὀλίγος καιρός) = $888\frac{2}{3}$ years.² A Chronus (χρόνος) he makes to be five times = $1111\frac{1}{3}$ years; and a Non-Chronus (χρόνος οὐκέτι, Rev. x. 6) a period greater than $999\frac{2}{3}$, and less than $1111\frac{1}{3}$ years. An Æon (see Rev. xiv. 6, "an eternal Gospel" — εὐαγγέλιον αἰώνιον) = two Chroni, = $2222\frac{2}{3}$ years: and so on.³

masculine form in the Vulgate (sexcenti) direct us to the word years (ἔτη, or anni) as the noun to be understood before 666.

Bengel (s. 467) says that for some centuries before the Reformation the number 666 was taken to represent so many years:—in Cent. xv. by Antonius of Florence;—in Cent. xiv. by Nicolas de Lyra;—in Cent. xiii. (A.D. 1250) by Pope Innocent III. (ap. Baron.) who counted from the rise of Mohammed 666 years until A.D. 1288.

¹ Bengel also makes the 42 months, and the 1260 days of Rev. xi. 2, 3, to be common months, and common days. In ch. xi. 9, the $3\frac{1}{2}$ days are likewise common days; and so, too, in ch. ii. 10, the "ten days" are not "prophetical" but natural days.

² "The difficulty that 'a short time' (ch. xii. 12) should denote the long space of $888\frac{2}{3}$ years, is explained by considering that our computation is by half-times (viz. $111\frac{1}{3}$). Now the ancients used to reckon no less than seven to the completion of a time (καιρός); hence four times (or $222\frac{2}{3} \times 4$) might easily be denominated 'a short time,' ὀλίγος καιρός."—see Burk, l. c., p. 291.

³ E.g. a prophetic hour = 8 common days; a day = half a common year + 14 days (nearly) = 196 common days; a month = $15\frac{1}{2}$ years = 15 years + 318 days or 5797½ days; a year = 196 common years + 117 days + 13 hours. Accordingly he makes the five months of Rev. ix. 5 = $79\frac{1}{2}$ common years; the "hour, and day, and month, and year" of ch. ix. 15 = (8 + 196) days + (15 years + 318 days) + (196 years + 117 days) = 211 years + 639 days = $212\frac{2}{3}$ years. The 1260 days of ch. xiii. 5 he takes to be less than the $3\frac{1}{2}$ times of Rev. xii. 14, and considers them = 677 years. (The common year Bengel took to be, 365 days, 5h., 49m., 12s.).

¹ E.g. St. Augustine writes: "Tempus quippe, et tempora, et dimidium temporis, annum unum esse, et duos, et dimidium."—De Civ. Dei, xx. 23.

² Justin says to Trypho:—ὁμοῖς ἀγνοοῦντες πόσον χρόνον διακατέχειν μέλλει, ἄλλο ἡγεῖσθε. τὸν γὰρ καιρὸν ἑκατὸν ἔτη ἐξηγεῖσθε λέγεσθαι.—Dial., c. 32.

³ On this Vitringa observes: "Magno tamen mercarer, loca adscripta esse, quæ Scaliger respexerit, ubi Annos in Verbo Dei pro Sæcularibus sumi dixit."—p. 464.

⁴ See his Erklärte Offenbarung, Einl. § 35–52; Burk's Memoir of the Life, &c. of J. A. Bengel, Engl. transl., London, 1837.

⁵ One of his reasons is that the neuter form of the numeral in "the best Greek codices" (P, Andr., and some cursives read ἑξακόσια,—see the list of readings prefixed to ch. xiii.), and its

The point of time which has determined all his calculations, Bengel arrived at as follows:—The duration of the world from the Creation to the Last Judgment he assumes to be seven Chroni, or 7777½ years. The Dionysian era begins from A.M. 3942; and hence 7778—3942 (= 3836) is the sum total of the New Testament times. Bengel also interprets Rev. xx. so as to understand two periods of 1000 years, or two Millenniums; subtracting, therefore, 2000 from 3836, he obtained the year 1836 as the date from which the first Millennium begins, during which Satan is bound.¹

This entire scheme may be judged by Bengel's own words:—"Should the year 1836 pass without bringing remarkable changes, there must be some great error in my system."—Burk, l. c., p. 300.

From what has been said in these latter sections it seems to follow of necessity that the Apocalypse must be understood throughout in a symbolical sense. "As all language abounds in metaphor and other materials of imagery, imagery itself may form the ground of a descriptive language. The forms of it may become intelligible terms; and the combination of them may be equivalent to a narrative of description. . . . In certain points the [Apocalypse] furnishes a key to its own sense, by a positive interpretation given. . . . [Its] prophecies therefore come before us as a fair document of prediction, as much as others expressed in the more obvious and direct language of civil and historic description, modified, as the prophetic style usually is, by a tropical character."—Davison, On Prophecy, 3rd ed., p. 439.

In the case of no part of Scripture however, has the maxim of St. Irenæus (Contr. Har., iv. 26, p. 262), "Every prophecy is an enigma before its accomplishment," been more completely forgotten. The symbolical interpretation of this Book has, from the earliest times, been carried to an extravagant excess, and to the most inconsistent conclusions. The literature of the subject affords melancholy evidence of the fact. Examples, more than enough, have been given in the preceding discussion; and in further illustration, it may suffice to add here the two following:—Stars signify, Doctores Ecclesiae (Arethas on ch. vi. 13), Hæretici (Beda, on ch. viii. 10), Bishops (Stern, on ch. viii. 10), Jews (Böhmer on ch. vi. 13). The Earth (ch. x. 2) signifies, Asia (Bengel), Europe (Launoi), the righteous (Aretius), the Jews (Alcasar), the part of the earth which is Christian (Vitranga). In the course of the Commentary abundant instances will be given.

§ 12. The Interpretation of the Apocalypse.

It has been attempted, in the course of the following Commentary, to give some account of the different systems of interpretation which, from the earliest times, have been adopted by those who have professed to explain the mystery of the Apocalypse. The most usual method has been to seek in successive historical events—past, present, or future—the fulfilment of its predictions. This problem, which has attracted to itself genius of the highest order, and intellects of the most varied character, has, from the first, engaged the attention of theologians: and yet, is it presumptuous to maintain that, hitherto at least, the solution, on such principles, has been sought for in vain?

Nor should the remark be omitted that there seems to be a general tendency among Commentators to regard the Predictive element of the Apocalypse as applicable to but one, and that a very limited field of history. We read, it is true, in the Evangelical prophet, that "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isai. xi. 9; cf. Hab. ii. 14); and we know that Christ Himself has taught, in that Discourse where He has traced out the lines which St. John was to follow in the Revelation, that the "Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the End come" (Matt. xxiv. 14). And yet, how has the great prophetic Book of the New Testament been usually explained? Do not expositors, as a rule, in their application of the Apocalypse to the Christian Church, confine their attention to those parts of the world which have hitherto embraced Christianity? Nay, more, have they not confined their attention almost exclusively to Western Christendom, as being alone the object of the Seer's predictions? "Futurists," indeed,—at least some among them,—hold that the conversion of the world is not to be effected before Christ's Second Advent, and is not to be looked for until then;¹—but this, perhaps, is an opinion which is not generally maintained. At all events, it may be well that students of the Book of the Revelation should reflect upon this whole matter.

¹ John Wesley has adopted Bengel's numerical results. Writing on Rev. xii. 14 (see Note A on that verse) he says, "The time, times, and an half are from 1058 to 1836"; see his Notes on the New Test. Halifax. 1869.

In the exposition of the Book, and in the effort to trace the object and plan of the inspired writer, St. Augustine's grand conception of the providential course of history—his 'Philosophy of History,'² so to speak,—has been accepted in the following pages as conveying the fundamental truth which underlies every statement of the Revelation. According to St. Augustine, the events which come to pass in this world are neither fortuitous nor isolated. Divine Providence directs, coordinates, and controls them all, causing everything to concur towards one and the same end—the triumph of purity and holiness, of truth and justice, as they were originally revealed to the Hebrew people, and as Jesus Christ has confirmed them, and announced them anew to the nations. Whoever hears the voice from on High, and follows it, belongs to the elect people—to "the City of God;" beside which lies the city of the earth occupied with the interests of this lower sphere—a city proud, tyrannical, the persecutor of the saints, but which does not the less subserve, albeit by means of which it is unconscious, the establishment of the Divine Kingdom. Such was Babylon in the East; such was Rome in the West: both Imperial Cities, and both ordained to diffuse God's revelation—the one the Old Testament, the other the New. The Empire of Rome was universal, because such must be the Kingdom of Christ: and as the Old Law was but the preparation for the New, so all events in the old world converged towards Rome and towards the Coming of Christ; in the same manner as all events after that Coming have concurred to the final triumph and to the Universality of the Christian Faith.¹

If this central thought be kept in mind, many interpretations, seemingly opposed to each other, will be found to harmonize; it being assumed that the successive events which are taken to be the complete accomplishment of an Apocalyptic prediction, are but illustrations merely—specimens, so to speak,—of God's dealings with the Church and with the world. Thus, to give one or two instances, we see in the Seven Churches of Asia (Rev. i.–iii.) not only literal Churches existing in St. John's own day, but also examples of different conditions of the Church Catholic throughout all future time;—the "Locusts" and their king Apollyon under the fifth Trumpet (Rev. ix. 1–11) may apply very closely to Mohammed and his creed, while this same Vision may also foreshow different phases of hostility to the Christian Faith at different epochs of history;—the indications of Antichrist which are given in Rev.

¹ Dr. De Burgh writes:—"Our idea has been that the design of this the Christian Dispensation is to convert the world and to spread Christianity over the earth: but facts and the history of Christianity have hitherto spoken a different language; and neither, I am bold to say, does Scripture warrant the opinion. . . . In short, I would say that the conversion of the nations is the work of Christ's Second Advent, and of the Dispensation which it introduces" (An Expos. of the Book of the Rev., 4th ed., p. 280). See within on ch. xiv. 6.

² St. Augustine it was who first suggested the idea of a "Philosophy of History." Vico (born 1668) is usually said to have been the originator of this idea; and he has been followed by Hegel, and others:—but the science was really founded by the great Father of the Western Church.

¹ "Without the Apocalypse it would be impossible for us to have a history of revelation, or of the Kingdom of God; for it is only the Apocalypse in which we can distinctly see the goal to which the ways of the Eternal are tending,—the end and purpose which He had in view in all His doings on earth from the beginning."—Auberlen, l. c., p. 395.

xi.-xix. may not be fully realized before the Last Days; and yet, in what age of the world may we not see fulfilled the saying of St. John concerning the age in which he himself lived: "Even now are there many Antichrists" (1 John ii. 18)?

There are three principal systems of exposition, as they are commonly classified, according to which the Apocalypse has, for the most part, been interpreted:—the Preterist; the Historical or Continuous; the Futurist.¹ It is obvious, however, on the most superficial examination,—and this is what renders any strict classification impossible,—that there is scarcely a single writer belonging to any one of these three schools (except writers who are strictly Rationalists) who does not frequently accept several results of expositors belonging to either or to both of the two other schools. This classification, nevertheless, is sufficiently exact for the purpose of giving some notion of the numerous and discordant expositions which are put forward from time to time; and which by their arbitrariness and mutual contradictions, have rendered the history of Apocalyptic exegesis the opprobrium of theology.

In the subjoined classification those names only are introduced which seem best to illustrate the principles of the different schools: the names of other writers—e. g. of writers of such high authority as Bishop Wordsworth—will be found, in due course, as the following Commentary proceeds.

(1) THE PRETERIST SYSTEM.

According to this system the successive statements of the Revelation apply chiefly to the history of the Jewish nation, down to the destruction of Jerusalem, and to the history of Pagan Rome.

¹ Dr. S. Davidson (An Introd. to the N. T., 1st ed., vol. iii. p. 619) has needlessly added a fourth class of "extreme," as distinguished from "simple" Futurists; who hold that the entire Book (including, i. e., ch. ii. and ch. iii.) refers to the last times. Lücke (s. 1068) justly remarks that the second class, which Dr. Davidson calls the "Continuous," should more properly be styled the "Historical." Lücke himself (s. 951) classifies the interpretations chronologically,—during (1) The old Catholic; (2) the Medieval; (3) the post-Reformation periods.

(a) The earlier writers:—Among the earliest expositors of this class is to be named Lud. Alcasar (e Soc. Jesu),¹ who prepared the way for the commentaries of Hugo Grotius (A.D. 1644);² Bossuet;³ Wetstein;—and more recently, of Moses Stuart; Mr. F. D. Maurice, &c.

(b) Rationalistic writers:—It is a principle of Rationalism to deny the existence of the predictive element in Prophecy. Owing to this assumption, Rationalists are necessarily "Preterists." The horizon of a Prophet's vision does not extend, they assert, beyond his own lifetime; and, consequently, all that St. John has written must relate to events which occurred before his death. In carrying out this principle, Eichhorn follows Grotius; but he argues as if the Apocalypse were composed at the end of the reign of Nero⁴ (see above § 4,

¹ "Vestigatio arcani sensus in Apocalypsi, Antv., 1614." Regarding Rev. i.-iii. as the Prologue which the Holy Spirit "sacræ actioni præposuit," Alcasar takes (1) ch. v.-xi. to express the conflict of the Church with the Synagogue; (2) ch. xii.-xix. to express her conflict with Roman Paganism; (3) ch. xx.-xxii. to express her victory, and repose, and glorious rule. In his Preface to the works of Arethas this division had already been adopted by Hentenius (A.D. 1545); it is also that of Salmeron (Præludia in Apoc., ap. Comm. in Hist. Ev., t. xvi., p. 346, A.D. 1612) who compares the problem of expounding the Apoc. to that of "squaring the circle,"—"quod dici solet de circuli quadratura . . . scibilis est, sed nondum scita" (l. c., p. 357). Alcasar mentions 110 works on the Apocalypse with which he was acquainted:—he was answered by David Paræus (A.D. 1618). See Lücke, s. 1021.

² Grotius writes: "Pertinent hæc visa ad res Judæorum usque ad finem cap. xi.: inde ad res Romanorum usque ad finem cap. xx.: deinde ad statum florentissimum Ecclesiæ ad finem usque" (Comm. in cap. iv., p. 1174). H. Hammond (A.D. 1653) follows Grotius generally; and Le Clerc (A.D. 1698) follows Hammond.

³ "L'Apocalypse avec une explication," A.D. 1690. Bossuet, with Grotius, places the composition of the Book under Domitian; and his chronological scheme extends from Domitian to the fall of the Western Empire in Cent. v. The close of the Millennium, or period of the Church's supremacy, is marked, Bossuet concludes, by the appearance of the Turks in Europe, and by the heresy of Luther.

⁴ "Einleitung des N. T.," B. ii., s. 388. Eichhorn himself thinks that the Apocalypse was written under Vespasian; but he adopts the Neronian interpretation retrospectively. Eichhorn, writes Lücke (s. 1054), has carried to its full result, and thus refuted, the thought of

p. 433). According to Herder, Hartwig, Koppe, and others, the Apocalypse relates chiefly to the overthrow of the Jewish state;¹ according to Ewald, De Wette, Bleek, and others, it relates chiefly to Rome and the Pagan Emperors. Other Rationalists like Eichhorn make the Book apply both to the Jews and to Pagan Rome. To these names may be added those of Réville; Reuss;² Renan; and Mr. Desprez³ in England.

(2) THE HISTORICAL OR CONTINUOUS SYSTEM.

The Historical school includes the great majority of Commentators. To it belong those who uphold the "Year-day" theory; as well as those who interpret chronologically.⁴ Writers of this school differ widely among themselves. They differ, e. g., as to the questions—(a) Whether the Apocalypse is strictly continuous or consists of "synchronous" prophecies (Mede⁵), Hengstenberg regarding the Seals, Trumpets, and Vials as being complementary;¹ (b) Whether the sixth Seal refers to Constantine (Elliott²), or to the First French Revolution (Faber³). In this class we also Wilderness, and of the Ten-horned Beast (ch. xi. 2, 3; xii. 6, 14; xiii. 5);

(2) Of the two Beasts (ch. xiii. 1, 11);

(3) Of the Mystic Babylon, with the Ten-horned Beast (ch. xvii. 3-5);

(4) Of the 144,000 Sealed (ch. vii. 4; xiv. 1), with the Harlot and Beast (ch. xvii. 3);

In the case of these four "omnia omnibus συγχρονίζουσι." The remaining "Synchronisms" may be summed up as follows:—

(5) Of the measuring the Inner Court (ch. xi. 1), with the war of the Dragon against Michael concerning the Woman (ch. xii.);

(6) Of the Seven Vials (ch. xv.), with the approaching fall of the Beast and of Babylon (ch. xvi. 10, 19);

(7) Of the Seventh Seal and the first six Trumpets, with the two Beasts of ch. xiii.;

(8) Of the measuring the Inner Court and the war of the Dragon against Michael, with the first six Seals (ch. vi.);

(9) Of the Seven Vials (ch. xvi.), with the sixth Trumpet (ch. ix. 13);

(10) Of the Millennium, the binding of Satan, the reign of Christ, the New Jerusalem, and the triumph of the Palm-bearing multitude,—with the seventh Trumpet after the fall of the Beast.

¹ So also David Paræus (who wrote in reply to the "Preterist" Alcasar, and who belongs to the class of Protestant and anti-papal expositors) considers the Seals and Trumpets as fulfilled, in a parallel sense, by the history of the Church until Pope Boniface III. (A.D. 606) and Mohammed. The Vials refer to Church-history until Luther; and thence to the end.

² "Horæ Apocalyptica," 4th ed., 1841. Mr. Elliott's work is chiefly marked by its anti-papal character. Its historical interpretation ends with the pouring out of the sixth Vial (ch. xvi. 12) in 1820, since which year the exhaustion of the Turkish power has proceeded rapidly. The remaining predictions of the Book are placed among the secrets of the future; but the struggle of the Papacy to regain its ascendancy after the shock received from Napoleon I. must issue in some great event about A.D. 1866, which will give the death-blow to the Papal Usurpation.

³ "Sacred Calendar of Prophecy," 2nd ed., 1844. Mr. Faber makes the Apocalypse to consist jointly of the "Sealed Book" of ch. v., and the "Little Book" of ch. x., which divide the whole into three parts:—(1) The first part of the "Sealed Book" (ch. vi.-ix.), or from the birth of the King who is the "Head of Gold" (Dan. ii. 38) in B.C. 657, to A.D. 1697; (2) The entire of the "Little Book" (ch. x.-xiv.), the period of the 3½ "times," or 42 months, or 1260 days, beginning A.D. 604 and ending A.D. 1864,—including also that single additional year which constitutes the period of the seventh Vial, which coincides with Daniel's Time of the End" (vol. i., p. 272); (3) The second part Paræus, that the Apocalypse is to be understood as a Jewish drama. Hug, Heinrichs, and Davidson agree generally with Eichhorn.

¹ Züllig's commentary (though really Futurist) belongs to this class:—he excludes all reference to Rome and heathenism; and refers everything to Jerusalem and Judaism.

² Reuss thus clearly states the result and purpose of the rationalistic system: "Deux ans à peine après la composition de notre apocalypse, . . . il survint des événements, lesquels, tout en rentrant, jusqu'à un certain point, dans le cercle des idées qui en faisaient le fond, lui donnèrent cependant un éclatant démenti. Les trois ans et demi se passèrent, et Jérusalem, au lieu de devenir la demeure des croyants et des saints, ne fut plus qu'un monceau de ruines. Rome ne fut pas détruite par l'Antéchrist, mais resta la capitale d'un puissant empire . . . le prophète avait été trompé par l'ardeur de ses désirs" (Introd., p. 37).

³ The Apocalypse, by P. S. Desprez, B.D., 1870.

⁴ E. g. those who undertake to fix the Time of the End:—thus Nic. Cusanus (De Noviss. Diebus, Opp., Basil., A.D. 1565, p. 934) concluded that Antichrist would come between A.D. 1700 and 1734. The Waldenses counted the 3½ "times" as 350 years from A.D. 1000. Bengel fixed on the year 1836 as the date of the Millennium. The year 1866 (606+1260) is the favourite date.

⁵ Mede's "Synchronisms":—(1) The first is that of the 1260 days, the 42 months, and the 3½ "times," of the profaned Temple, of the Two Witnesses, of the Woman in the

find the name of the Abbot Joachim (circa 1180¹); of De Lyra (A.D. 1320); Wiclif; Bullinger; Brightman;² Vitringa³

of the "Sealed Book" (ch. xv.-xix.) which forms one prophecy of the events under the seventh Trumpet or third Woe. It extends from A.D. 1789 to A.D. 1865, in which year the Millennium begins. The seventh Vial is contained in ch. xvi. 17-21, and in ch. xvii.-xix. (except the retrospective and descriptive parts of ch. xvii.).

¹ "Expositio magni prophetae Abbatis Joachimi in Apocalypsin, Venet., 1527." Joachim assumed to be himself gifted with the prophetic spirit. His commentary on the Apoc. was the oracle of the enthusiastic anti-papal party among the Franciscans, and formed the text of its (so-called) "New and everlasting Gospel" [Rev. xiv. 6]. For Joachim, as for Dante, the Papacy was anti-Christian only in its worldliness:—in itself, and in its true ideal sense, it belongs to the eternal foundation of the Church (see Lücke, s. 1010). He divided the history of the Church down to his own time into six periods, which are represented in the first six Seals, Trumpets and Vials;—what is announced in the Seal-Visions being repeated in the Visions of the Trumpets and the Vials. He reckoned 1260 years from the birth of Christ to the birth of Antichrist; "all the time," he said, "after 1200, I consider dangerous."—Alberti Chron., sub anno 1188:—see Ch. Maitland, l. c., p. 321. Cf. Gieseler, Kirch. Gesch., B. ii., s. 357.

² Brightman ("Apocalypsis Apocalypseos, Francof., A.D. 1609") wrote in answer to the "Futurist" Ribera, who regarded the whole of the Apocalypse as a commentary on Matt. xxiv. With Brightman the seventh Seal not only typifies (in ch. vii.) all the ages after Diocletian (who fulfilled the sixth Seal), but also denotes, by the "silence" in ch. viii. 1, the peace under Constantine. The Trumpets signify Arians, Vandals, Saracens, &c.,—the seventh being sounded when England, Ireland, and Scotland embraced the Gospel in 1558. Constantine is the "Man-Child" (ch. xii.) of the Church; and when the Dragon, who persecuted the Church under Constantius and Valens, failed to overwhelm her by the deluge of Barbarians, and subsequently of Saracens, he substituted as his Vicar the Beast of ch. xiii. 1,—that is to say, the Pope who was "smitten unto death" by the Goths, but healed by Justinian and Phocas. The second Beast (ch. xiii. 11) is also the Pope, exalted to still higher dignity by Pepin and Charles the Great. The "Two Witnesses" are the Scriptures slain by the Council of Trent, &c., &c.

³ "Anakrisis Apokalypsias (sic), Amstel., 1719." According to Vitringa, in the first division of the Apoc. (ch. i. 9—iii. 22) a prophetic view is given of the internal condition of the Church until the end. In the second (ch. iv. 1—xxii. 7), he sees her external condition;—viz. (a) in the Seals, her history from Trajan until the end; (b) in the Trumpets a prophecy concerning Rome, both Pagan and degenerate Christian; (c) in ch. xii.-xxii., the contents of the last two Trum-

(who wrote in reply to Bossuet); Sir Isaac Newton¹ (who agrees generally with Mede); Robert Fleming²; Gaussen,³ &c.

A general tendency to allegorize is another characteristic of this School.

(3) THE FUTURIST SYSTEM.

The "Futurists" apply the predictions of the Apocalypse to the events which are immediately to precede, or immediately to follow the Second Advent of Christ. The writers of this school usually (although they are not always consistent) interpret literally:—Israel is the literal Israel; the Temple is the literal Temple rebuilt at Jerusalem; the 3½ "times," 42 months, 1260 days, are 3½ natural, literal years. It is clear that there can be no discussion as to the accuracy or inaccuracy of the results of this system of interpretation in any of its forms. The Future defies criticism.

Ribera (e Soc. Jesu; 1592) seems to pets (ch. ix. 13; xi. 15) are developed,—viz. the rise of the Roman Antichrist; the struggle of the Church with him, and his downfall; the state of the Church in Europe after his fall; her triumph over Gog and Magog, who appear at the end of the Millennium; &c.

¹ "The Prophecies of Holy Writ," Works, 1785, vol. v.

² "Discourses—the First containing a new account of the rise and fall of the Papacy, by Robert Fleming, V.D.M., London, 1701:—for an account of Fleming's very remarkable interpretations, see Note B on ch. xi. 2.

³ "Daniel le Prophète," 2nd ed., 1850. On Rev. xiii., and generally, Gaussen closely follows Elliott;—neither of them regarding the Dragon of ch. xii. as Satan, but as the heathen, Roman, World-power inspired by him. The Dragon, the Beast from the Sea, and the Beast from the Abyss, denote the Roman Empire in the three great epochs of its history—"autocrate, polycrate, démocrate." During the close of the first epoch the Empire became Christian; the second began with the inroad of the Barbarians; the third began A.D. 1789. The seven Crowns on the Dragon's Heads (ch. xii. 3) signify that Rome is still a crowned City; the ten Crowns on the Horns of the Beast from the Sea (ch. xiii. 1) represent the ten absolute Kings of "the Tribes of the migration"; the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xvii. 3, 8) has no Crowns, and this is democracy, with its Citizen-Kings, Louis Philippe, Leopold of Belgium, Charles Albert of Piedmont, &c. The "False Prophet" (ch. xvi. 13) and the Harlot (ch. xvii.) exist contemporaneously, and together represent the "Little Horn" of Dan. vii. 8,—or the Papacy.

have been the earliest Futurist.¹ He has been followed by Lacunza² (e Soc. Jesu; born 1731); Tyso; S. R. Maitland; De Burgh; Todd; W. Kelly.³

(4) THE SPIRITUAL SYSTEM.

There is yet another principle of interpretation which adopts for its leading idea the great conception of St. Augustine, stated above, as to the "Philosophy of History." This system may be styled the "Spiritual." Among those who have more or less closely adhered to this principle may be named I. C. K. Hofmann¹; Hengstenberg²; Ebrard; Auberlen;—whose conclusions, often arbitrary, and constantly tending to the same goal as the conclusions of the "Futurists," will be noted in the following pages. The majority of such writers consider that to predict the future conversion of Israel, and the return of God's ancient people to their own land, was the chief object of St. John. But whatever may be thought of this application of the Apocalypse, all, who in any sense adopt the "Spiritual" system of interpretation, must agree in accepting the definition of it with which Ebrard brings his commentary to a close:—"The Book of the Revelation does not contain presages of contingent, isolated, events; but it contains warning and consolatory prophecies concerning the great leading forces which make their appearance in the conflict between Christ and the enemy. So full are its contents, that every age may learn therefrom, more and more, against what disguises of the Serpent one has to guard oneself; and also how the afflicted Church at all times receives its measure of courage and of consolation" (s. 634).

The "Spiritual" system of interpretation receives support from the review of Apocalyptic symbolism which has occupied sections 9-11 of this Introduction. It appears from that review how naturally the imagery of the Book describes, in accordance with the whole spirit of Prophecy, the various conditions of the Kingdom of God on earth, during its successive struggles against the Prince of this world. The figurative utterances of the Seer are specially suited for this purpose, owing to the latitude of application which all symbolism allows; and this, without distorting the sense or offering violence to the language, of a single passage. Reuss indeed objects (l. c., p. 41) that this system does not really differ from the "Historical," inasmuch as it merely substitutes the religious history of the Kingdom of God, for the political history of the Church:—but this

¹ "Weissagung und Erfüllung," 1841.

² And yet Hengstenberg interprets generally on the "Historical" and allegorical system; regarding the Apocalypse down to ch. xix. as already fulfilled.

¹ "In Apocalypsin Comm., Antv., 1603." Mr. Elliott (vol. iv. p. 597) makes Ribera to be the first "Futurist" or "nearly the first."

² Lacunza adopted the name of Ben-Ezra,—probably in accordance with his system which assumes the literal restoration, in the future, of Israel; or, as Mr. Elliott suggests (vol. iv. p. 536), owing to the prejudice then existing against the Jesuits. He wrote "On the coming of Messiah in glory and majesty" (Ben-Ezra, Irving's transl.). His great theme was our Lord's "Pre-millennial Advent"; and the Woman of ch. xii. he takes to be the ancient Zion, which is to be restored literally in the last days. Commenting on Cant. v. 7, Lacunza considers that the clergy of the Church of Rome will hereafter become the priests of Antichrist: "Our priesthood it is, and nothing else, which is announced for the last times, under the metaphor of a Beast with two Horns like a lamb (ch. xiii. 11)."—l. c., vol. i. p. 220.

"Perhaps of all modern writers," observes Mr. Chas. Maitland ("Apost. School of Proph. Interpret.," p. 392), "Lacunza has the most deeply influenced the study of Prophecy." . . . "The Futurists, when they borrowed from Lacunza the great elements of their system, rejected that which had cost him dearest,—the admission that the Romish Church is Babylon. In preference to this they joined Bellarmine in the expectation that [the city of] Rome will fall away from her present faith before the days of Antichrist."—l. c., p. 395. The words of Bellarmine (De Rom. Pont., iv. 4) are: "Neque obstat, quod tempore Antichristi Roma desolanda, et cremanda videatur, ut deducitur ex cap. xvii. Apoc.,"—where he is merely arguing that the seat of the Papacy was not fixed by Divine command in Rome.

³ Mr. Kelly, giving his assent generally to the results of the usual "Historical" exposition, considers that there is a still more perfect interpretation. Regarding the words "After these things" (ch. iv. 1) as the epoch of the close of the history and existence of the Church on earth—that is the epoch of "the rapture" of the Saints who constitute it—he concludes that all the Visions which follow represent the Great Day of the Lord at the end of the present Dispensation.

objection is manifestly unsound. As already pointed out, the "Spiritual" application is never exhausted, but merely receives additional illustrations as time rolls on; while the "Historical" system assumes that single events, as they come to pass in succession, exhibit the full accomplishment of the different predictions of the Apocalypse. If anywhere, Lord Bacon's estimate of the fulfilment of a prediction is verified here:—"In hac re admittenda est illa latitudo quæ Divinis vaticiniis propria est et familiaris, ut adimpletiones eorum fiant et continenter et punctualiter: atque licet plenitudo et fastigium complementi eorum, plerumque alicui certæ ætati vel etiam certo momento destinetur; attamen habent interim gradus nonnullos et scalas complementi, per diversas mundi ætates."—De Augmentis Scientiæ, lib. ii. c. 11

The principal Works consulted in the following Commentary.

-
- | | |
|--|---|
| ALCASAR, L., e. Soc. Jesu . . . | Vestigatio arcani Sensus in Apoc. , 1614. |
| ALFORD, H. | The Greek Testament , 3rd ed., 1866. |
| ANDREAS | In Apocalypsin , ap. Opp. St ⁱ . Chrysostomi, ed. Fronto Ducaeus, Paris, 1609, t. viii. |
| ARETHAS | Ap. J. A. Cramer, Caten. in Epp. Cath. , 1840, p. 171. |
| AUBERLEN, C. A. | The Prophecies of Daniel and the Revelation , Engl. tr., 1856. |
| BAHR, K. C. | Symbolik des Mosaischen Cultus , 1839. |
| BEDA | Opera , ed. Giles, t. xii., 1844. |
| BENGEL, J. A. | Gnomon N. T. , 1836. |
| „ | Erklärte Offenbarung Johannis , 1834. |
| BIRKS, T. R. | The Mystery of Providence , 1848. |
| BISPING, AUG. | Erklärung der Apok. des Johannis , 1876. |
| BLEEK, F. | Vorlesungen üb. die Apokalypse , 1862. |
| BOSSUET, J. B. | L'Apocalypse , Œuvres, vol. iii., 1819. |
| BROWN, D. | Christ's Second Coming , 6th ed., 1868. |
| BURGER, C. H. A. | Die Offenb. St. Johannes , 1877. |
| BURK, J. C. | Life of J. A. Bengel , 1837. |
| CASSIODORUS | Complex. in Apoc. , ap. Migne, Patrol. , vol. lxx. |
| DAVIDSON, S. | Introd. to the New Test. , 1st ed., 3 vols., 1851; 2nd ed., 2 vols., 1868. |
| DE BURGH, W. | An Expos. of the B. of Revelation , 4th ed., 1839. |
| DELITZSCH, F. | Handschriftliche Funde , 1 ^{re} Heft, Leipzig, 1861; 2 ^{te} Heft, mit Beiträgen von S. P. Tregelles, 1862. |
| DE WETTE, W. M. L. | Exegetisches Handbuch N. T. , B. iii., 2 ^{te} Ausg., 1853. |
| DÖLLINGER, J. J. | The First Age of the Church , Eng. tr., 1866. |
| DRUMMOND, JAMES | The Jewish Messiah , 1877. |
| DÜSTERDIECK, F. | Handbuch üb. die Offenbarung Johannis , 1859. |
| EBRARD, J. H. E. | Die Offenbarung Johannes , 1853. |
| EICHHORN, J. G. | Einleitung in das N. T. , B. vi., 1810. |
| ELLIOTT, E. H. | Horæ Apocalyplicæ , 5th ed., 1862. |
| EWALD, H. | Comm. in Apoc. Johannis , 1828. Die Johanneischen Schriften , 2 ^{te} Ausg., B. ii., 1862. |
| FABER, G. S. | Sacred Calendar of Prophecy , 2nd ed., 1844. |
| FLEMING, ROBERT, V.D.M. | On the Rise and Fall of the Papacy , 1701. |
| GEBHARDT, H. | Der Lehrbegriff der Apokalypse , 1873. |
| GODET, F. | Études bibliques 2 ^{de} série, 3 ^{ème} éd. |

- GODET, F. Comm. sur l'Évang. de S. Jean, 1865.
GROTIUS, H. Opera Theologica, 1679, vol. ii. pars 2.
HEFELE, C. J. Patres Apostolici, 1855.
HENGSTENBERG, E. W. The Revelation of St. John, Eng. tr., 1841.
HOFMANN, J. C. K. Weissagung und Erfüllung, 1841.
HUG, J. L. Einleit. in die Schriften der N. T., 4^{te} Aufl., 1847.
KEIM, THEOD. Jesu von Nazara, 1867–1872.
KRENKEL, MAX Der Apostel Johannes, 1871.
LACUNZA, EM. [BEN-EZRA] The Coming of Messiah, Irving's tr., 1827.
LIGHTFOOT, J. B. Contemp. Review, 1874–1877.
" Comment. on the Epistles of St. Paul, 1866–1875.
LÜCKE, FR. Comm. üb. die Schr. des Ev. Johannes, 2^{te} Aufl., 1852.
LUTHARDT, C. E. St. John the Author of the Fourth Gospel, 1875
MAITLAND, C. The Apostles' School of Proph. Interpr., 1849.
MAITLAND, S. R. The Prophetic Period of Daniel and St. John, 1829, and other Tracts.
MAURICE, F. D. Lectures on the Apocalypse, 1861.
MEDE, JOSEPH Works, ed. 1672.
NEWTON, SIR ISAAC The Prophecies of Holy Writ, Works, 1785, t. v.
NEWTON, BISHOP Dissertations on the Prophecies, 1827.
NIERMEYER, ANT. De l'authent. des écrits johann. ("Revue de Théologie," June—Sept., 1856)
PUSEY, E. B. The Minor Prophets, 1869.
RENAN, E. L'Antechrist, 1873.
REUSS, ED. L'Apocalypse, 1878.
" Hist. de la Théol. chrét. au Siècle apost., 3^{ème} éd.
RÉVILLE, ALB. Essais de Critique religieuse, 1860.
ROUTH, M. J. Reliquiæ Sacræ, 2nd ed., 1846.
SCHOLTEN, J. H. Der Apost. Johannes in Klein Asien, 1872.
STERN, C. Commentar über die Offenbarung, 1854.
STUART, MOSES A Commentary on the Apocalypse, 1854.
TODD, J. H. Six Discourses on the Apocalypse, 1846.
TRENCH, R. CHENEVIX The Epistles to the Seven Churches, 2nd ed., 1861.
" Synonyms of the New Test., 7th ed., 1871.
TYSO, JOS. An Expos. of the Books of Daniel and the Revelation, 1838.
VICTORINUS PETAV. In Apocalypsin (ap. Bibl. Max. Patr. Gallandii,
t. iv.).
VAUGHAN, C. J. The Rev. of St. John, 3rd ed., 1870.
VITRINGA, CAMP. ΑΝΑΚΡΙΣΙΣ Apocalypsios, 1719.
VOLKMAR, GUST. Commentar zur Offenb. Johannes, 1862.
WESTCOTT, B. F. The Canon of the New Test., 3rd ed., 1870.
WILLIAMS, ISAAC The Apocalypse, 1852.
WINER, G. B. Gramm. des N. T. Sprachidioms, 6^{te} Aufl., 1855.
WORDSWORTH, CHR. The New Testament, 1862.
ZÜLLIG, F. J. Die Offenbarung Johannis, 1834.

ANALYSIS OF THE CONTENTS.

THE contents of the Apocalypse have been variously arranged ; indeed any arrangement must be more or less arbitrary.

As a marked characteristic of the Book the numeration according to Sevens prevails throughout ; as well as the division of Seven into groups of four and three, or three and four :—see, for example, the Visions of the Seals, Trumpets, and Vials. The following classification, therefore, of the Visions will be found convenient, and is adopted in the present Commentary.

The most usual, as it is the most obvious, division of the Apocalypse is into three principal sections :—

I. THE PROLOGUE (ch. i.—iii.), setting forth (a) the Vision of Christ ; including the Commission given to the Apostle John (ch. i. 1, 11, 19), an intimation of the historical personality of the Seer, as well as the place and occasion of his receiving the Revelation (vv. 9–11) ;—(b) the enumeration of the Seven Churches (ch. i. 11 ; ch. ii. ; ch. iii.) which symbolize the Church Universal (ch. iii. 22) for whose sake the prophetic utterances are intended ;—(c) the Seven Epistles (ch. ii. ; ch. iii.) ;

II. THE REVELATION PROPER (ch. iv. 1—ch. xxii. 5) ;

III. THE EPILOGUE (ch. xxii. 6–21) which gradually passes from visionary representation ; and, referring back in ver. 8 to the Prologue, closes with a Divine attestation, and with threats mingled with promises.

THE REVELATION PROPER may be divided into Seven chief Visions :—

i. The Prelude (ch. iv. ; ch. v.) which introduces the Divine Judgments. These chapters contain two scenes :—the Appearance in heaven of the throne of God (ch. iv.) ; and the Appearance of the Lamb Who takes the Sealed Book “out of the right hand of Him that sat on the throne” (ch. v.) ;

ii. The Vision of the Seven Seals (ch. vi. 1—ch. viii. 1) ; including an interlude between the sixth and seventh Seals which consists of two scenes :—that of the Sealing of the Elect (ch. vii. 1–8), and that of the “Great Multitude which no man could number” (ch. vii. 9–17) ;

iii. The Vision of the Seven Trumpets (ch. viii. 2—ch. xi. 19) ; including as before an interlude between the sixth and seventh Trumpets which again consists of two scenes :—that of the “Little Book” (ch. x. 1–11), and that of the “Two Witnesses” (ch. xi. 1–14) ;

iv. The Vision of the WOMAN, and her three enemies (ch. xii. 1—ch. xiii. 18)—the Dragon (ch. xii. 3–17) ; the Beast from the sea (ch. xii. 18—ch. xiii. 10) ; the Beast from the earth or “False Prophet” (ch. xiii. 11–18) ;

v. The group of Visions in ch. xiv. :—(a) The Vision of the Lamb with His Company on Mount Zion (vv. 1–5) ; (b) the Vision of the three Angels proclaiming judgments (vv. 6–11) ; (c) the Episode (vv. 12, 13) ; (d) the Vision of the Harvest and the Vintage (vv. 14–20) ;

vi. The Vision of the Seven Vials (ch. xv. 1—ch. xvi. 21) ; again including an interlude between the sixth and seventh Vials which now consists of one scene—that of the three unclean spirits gathering the Kings of the earth “into the place which is called Har-Magedon” (ch. xvi. 13–16) ;

vii. The Vision of the final Triumph (ch. xvii. 1—ch. xxii. 5) ; presenting four Scenes : (a) The history and fall of Babylon (ch. xvii. 1—ch. xix. 10)—the hostile World-power ; (b) The overthrow of Satan (ch. xix. 11—ch. xx. 10)—the hostile Spiritual power ; (c) The Universal Judgment (ch. xx. 11–15) ; (d) The glories of the New Jerusalem (ch. xxi. 1—ch. xxii. 5).

THE REVELATION

OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE.

CHAPTER I.

4 John writeth his revelation to the seven churches of Asia, signified by the seven golden candlesticks. 7 The coming of Christ. 14 His glorious power and majesty.

THE Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John :

(With few exceptions, those variations only from the Textus Receptus which affect the translation will be noticed. On the text generally see the Introduction, § 8.)

[Ver. 2 om. τε. Ver. 4 om. τοῦ [which Erasmus inserted contrary to his codex, known as "1".—B reads Θεοῦ]. Ver. 5 om. ἐκ.—ἀγαπῶντι.—λύσαντι [so N, A, C, 1;—B, P read λούσαντι, and so Erasmus, who has altered the reading of 1, after the Vulgate, lauit].—ἐκ τῶν. Ver. 6 βασιλείαν, ἱερεῖς.—[A, P om. τῶν αἰώνων,—which is read by N, C, B, 1, as in the eleven other places in this Book]. Ver. 8 om. ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος.—λέγει κύριος ὁ Θεός. Ver. 9 om. 1st καί.—om. ἐν τῇ before βασ.—ἐν Ἰησοῦ (after ὑπομ.).—om. Χριστοῦ twice.—om. 2nd διὰ. Ver. 11 om. ἐγὼ εἰμι τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος καί.—ἐπτά ἐκκλ.—om. ταῖς ἐν Ἀσίᾳ (which Er. supplied after the Vulg. quæ sunt in Asia). Ver. 13 om. ἐπτά. Ver. 14 ὡς ἔριον. Ver. 15 [A, C read πεπυρωμένης,—N reads πεπυρωμένῳ,—B, P, 1 read πεπυρωμένοι]. Ver. 17 ἔθηκεν.—om. μοι. Ver. 18 om. ἀμήν.—τοῦ θαν. καὶ τ. ᾄδου. Ver. 19 γράψον οὖν. Ver. 20 om. ἃς εἶδες.]

THE TITLE.

The Revelation of John.] So the uncial manuscripts N, C, and A in its subscription. P reads "The Revelation of the Apostle and Evangelist John;"—B reads "The Revelation of John the Divine and Evangelist;"—Erasmus, "The Revelation of Saint John the Divine;"—The Textus Receptus, "The Revelation of John the Divine." The title "the Divine" (ὁ θεολόγος) was first applied to St. John by Eusebius (Præp. Ev. xi. 18); and Eusebius (H. E. iii. 24) explains that St. John, omitting the Genealogy of Christ after the flesh, began his Gospel with the doctrine of the Lord's Divinity,—the θεολογία. The memory of the Apostle, it is said, is still preserved in the name, Ayasalouk, of a village near Ephesus, corrupted from ἅγιος θεολόγος (Agio-solouk),—see Forbiger, Handb. der Alt. Geogr., ii. 188. Philo gives the title θεολόγος to Moses (Vita, iii. 11), and so does Methodius (A.D. 290), De Resurrect. ii. 6. Eusebius also applies the title to the Prophets, Demonstr. Ev., ii. 9. In the Appendix to Mr. J. T. Wood's "Discoveries at Ephesus" (London, 1877), in the transcript of "Inscriptions from the Great Theatre," we read, at p. 23, as titles of the highest order of the priests of Artemis, the words τοῖς θεολόγοις καὶ ὑμνωδοῖς. Professor Plumptre (The Epp. to the Seven Churches, p. 1) considers that this may have been the first embodiment of the thought conveyed by the word "Theologus."

CHAPS. I.—III.

I. THE PROLOGUE.

The First of the three great Divisions of the Book.

THE INSCRIPTION (1–3).

This Inscription, setting forth the title and prophetic character of the Apocalypse, commends it to the study of the Church. It is pre-eminently a Book of Prophecy, see ver. 3; ch. xxii. 7, 18.

1. The Revelation] The religious sense of the word Apocalypse—in English “Revelation”—is unknown to Classical writers; nor does it occur in the Septuagint in the sense of a Divine communication,—e.g. 1 Sam. xx. 30; Eccus. xi. 27: see Lee on Inspiration, 4th ed., p. 4. With the genitive of the object (Rom. xvi. 25), and with the genitive of the subject (2 Cor. xii. 1; Gal. i. 12), it denotes the act of revealing a Divine mystery (Eph. iii. 3). It has also come to signify that which is itself revealed (1 Cor. xiv. 26). “Revelation” on the part of God is the foundation of all true prophecy; on the side of man, a spiritual intuition or vision is to be presupposed (cf. ὀπτασία, 2 Cor. xii. 1; ὄραμα, Matt. xvii. 9; ὄρασις, Acts ii. 17; ὅσα εἶδεν, “all that he saw,” Rev. i. 2; ὁ βλέπεις, “What thou seest,” Rev. i. 11). Here it cannot be taken objectively—“the Revelation concerning Jesus Christ;” but it is used, in the former sense, subjectively,—for it is the distinctive office of Christ to reveal the mystery of God (Matt. xi. 27; John i. 18). Thus, it is Christ who addresses the Seven Churches (ch. ii.—iii.); who opens the Sealed Book (ch. v. 7, 9); &c. Hence it is added—which God gave him] In harmony with the doctrine of St. John as to the relation of the Son to the Father, John v. 20; vii. 16; xii. 49; xiv. 10; xvii. 7, 8.

According to the “Futurist” scheme (see Introd. § 12), the “Apocalypse” signifies not the revelation by or concerning Jesus Christ; but the “Revelation,” or Second Advent, or future Manifestation of Jesus Christ Himself (1 Cor. i. 7). Not very differently the rationalistic “Preterists;”—but in illustration of the rationalistic interpretation of the Apocalypse, see note A at the end of this chapter.

to shew] I.e., “that he might shew,” a construction common to the Apocalypse and the Fourth Gospel: e.g. ch. iii. 21; vii. 2; xiii. 14, &c.; John i. 12; vi. 52, &c. (for the constr. with ὡς, cf. ch. ii. 21; viii. 3; ix. 5, &c.; John xiii. 34; xiv. 16; xvii. 4; 1 John v. 20, &c.). Others explain “so as to shew,”—an infinitive epexegetical of “gave”;—cf. ch. v. 5, 7. Not merely “to make known,” as in Matt. xvi. 21; but with clear reference to “shewing” in Vision, cf. ch. iv. 1; xvii. 1, &c.

unto his servants,] I.e., Christ’s servants; so also “his Angel,” “his servant John” (cf. ch. ii. 20); not merely prophets, but the Church, in general,—see ch. xxii. 6, 9.

[even] the things which must] Because so ordained by God (δεῖ not μέλλει, ver. 19). This idea is essentially presupposed in all prophecy, see ch. iv. 1; xvii. 10; xx. 3; and cf. Matt. xvii. 10; xxiv. 6. For this sense compare ver. 2. Or translate and punctuate:

“gave unto Him, to shew unto His servants the things, &c.”

shortly come to pass:] “Before long,” i.e., as time is computed by God; not that the events are close at hand. What prophets behold are, as they are called here, “the things which must shortly come to pass;” for in the invisible world which is disclosed to the Seer all is action, in motion, about to approach:—“The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry” (Hab. ii. 3). This is the usual prophetic style, see Ezek. xii. 21–25; 2 Pet. iii. 4, 8. The key to passages such as this and ch. xxii. 6, 7, as well as Rom. xvi. 20, is supplied by the “speedily” (ἐν τάχει) of Luke xviii. 7, 8, where long delay is implied. So Bengel: “Totus liber tanquam unum verbum uno momento pronuntiatione debet accipi”; see De Wette, Ebrard, Alford. Duration is to be computed in the Apocalypse, either relatively to the divine apprehension, as here and in ch. xxii. 10 (cf. ver. 3; iii. 11; xxii. 7, 12, 20); or absolutely in itself as long or short; see on ch. viii. 1; xx. 2. (On ἐν τάχει here, cf. εὐθέως Matt. xxiv. 29). Haupt (The First Ep. of St. John, Engl. tr., p. 111) observes on John ii. 18 that Scripture “has for the process of the times a standard of measurement different from ours.” Expressions like the present “can be understood only when we interpret them according to the canon of 2 Pet. iii. 8, ‘one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.’ But that tells us no other than this, that in the Divine estimation one day may wrap up in itself a thousand human years, and the converse . . . Thus there may be, to speak with the Apocalypse, silence for half an hour (ch. viii. 1), or, according to human measurement, for half an eternity.”

Otherwise:—it is said, (1) that the events are close at hand, see ver. 3 (Düsterdieck); and so in a different sense, Burger, who compares Acts xxv. 4, and thinks that, since the Day of Pentecost, we stand in the “Last Days” (Acts ii. 17; 1 John ii. 18); but, he adds, this Book takes no account of time;—(2) that they must soon begin to come to pass. So Hengstenberg, who argues that already in St. John’s time the axe was laid to the root of the Roman Empire;—(3) that “the certainty” of the future is meant (Eichhorn);—(4) that the events which precede the Second Advent are to take place swiftly, in a short space of time (Todd),—a meaning which the Greek cannot well bear.

and he sent and signified [them]] I.e., “the things which must come to pass shortly.”

2 Who bare record of the word of Christ, and of all things that he God, and of the testimony of Jesus saw.

The A.V., by supplying "it," understands "the Revelation." Observe, "He," "the Sender," the subject of the verb, is Christ,—as is proved by the changed construction, and by ch. xxii. 16. Perhaps the verb "signified" may be taken absolutely. Except in Acts xi. 28 (cf. Acts xxv. 27), this prophetic use of the verb (σημαίνειν) is peculiar to St. John; see John xii. 33; xviii. 32; xxi. 19. The term denotes the figurative and symbolical character of what follows:—see on ch. xii. 1.

by his angel,] Lit. "through his angel;" cf. Ex. iv. 13. Hence, and from ch. xxii. 6, 16, the office of unveiling the different scenes of the Apocalypse seems to have been assigned to a particular Angel; cf. Dan. viii. 16; ix. 21; Zech. i. 9, 13; ii. 3:—even when the speaker is not defined, as in ch. xix. 9, the words which follow clearly point to the Angel who speaks in ch. xxii. 8, 9. When St. John describes at some length what he had previously seen in spirit, the Angel, as in ch. iv. 1, accompanies him, and explains the mystery of what has been revealed. The description is thus rendered highly dramatic, when the voice of the Angelus interpres is unexpectedly interposed, as in ch. x. 4, 8, 11; xiv. 13; xix. 9; xxi. 5 (where note the change of verbs and tenses). Others take the word Angel generically, as implying different angels who act as spokesmen throughout. The first express mention of an Angel imparting a Vision is in ch. xvii. 1. Cf. ch. xvii. 7; xxi. 9.

unto his servant John;] The title "servant" designates the prophetic office: Isai. xlix. 5; Amos iii. 7; cf. Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 9. The proper name "John" (cf. verses 4, 9; xxii. 8), after the prophetic manner,—for there is no anonymous prophecy in Scripture,—accredits the writer, see Dan. viii. 1; ix. 2: "History had its security in the joint knowledge of contemporaries; but in prophecy, personality is of the greatest moment" (Hengst.). For proof that the "John" here mentioned is the Apostle and Evangelist, see Introd. § 1.

On this verse seems to be founded the modern term 'Apokalyptik,' denoting a class of writings in which the Divine impartation of mysteries is more prominent than the human activity of the person chosen to communicate them; e.g., in the Old Test., the Book of Daniel:—see Introd. § 9.

2. who bare witness] Ebrard (Krit. d. Ev. Gesch., s. 858) insisting upon the aorists in this passage, especially on "he saw" at the end of the verse, refers these words to the fourth Gospel, of which, he considers, they establish the earlier date. In illustration, he takes Rev. xxii. 17 to be an allusion to the previous statement of John vii. 37. The expressions "the word of God," and "he saw," he also refers to 1 John i. 1; the author of the Apocalypse thus announcing himself as also the author of the Gospel and the First Epistle. So, too, Grotius, Wolf, Eichhorn, &c. The majority of commentators, however, understand here "the epistolary aorist,"—cf. Rom. xvi. 22; Philem. 19; Thucyd. i. 1; the present Book alone being meant. The verb is characteristic of St. John; e.g. John i. 7; iii. 11; v. 31; xxi. 24; 1 John i. 2; &c.

This idea (of μαρτυρία), writes Haupt (l.c., p. 296), "appears at the beginning, and recurs at the end of all the three greater documents which we have received from St. John." He begins "with the vindication of his trustworthiness. It is a matter of indifference whether the verb here refers to the Apocalypse which he is beginning, or to the earlier written Gospel. The drift of the Apostle is to introduce a guarantee of his veracity by the statement that he was an eye-witness (ὅσα εἶδεν)."

of the word of God,] The greater number of writers explain, not the Personal Word (cf. ch. xix. 13), but, in common with the rest of the verse, the prophetic contents of this Book (cf. Ezek. i. 2, LXX.), which from first to last proceeds from God; see ch. xxii. 6 (where, however, we have the plural—"words").

and of the testimony of Jesus Christ,] i.e., subjectively, the witness borne by Jesus who (ver. 5; ch. iii. 14) is "the faithful witness," and who attests the contents of the Book in ch. xxii. 20. The phrase may also be taken as parallel to "the word of God;" and thus, objectively, also expresses the witness "concerning" Jesus, combining both senses as in ch. xix. 10. Some (e.g. Cocceius) who take "the word of God" to mean the Fourth Gospel, refer these words to St. John's Epistles.

[even] of all things that he saw.] (Omit "and,"—see vv. 11.). These words are in apposition to the previous clauses. The verb here, so constantly used in this Book for the "seeing" a Vision, denotes that immediate intuition whereby the prophet is said "to see" what God communicates, e.g. Isai. i. 1; Ezek. xxxvii. 8; Mic. i. 1; Hab. i. 1:—on the title "Seer," 1 Sam. ix. 9, see Lee On Inspiration. App. K. This use of the word proves that the "perspective" character of prophecy, according to which events distant in time are presented in juxtaposition to the eye of

3 Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

4 JOHN to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the the Seer, belongs to the Apocalypse. Thus what is "signified" to St. John had been "seen" by him,—seen in "Vision," ch. ix. 17; or at times, is also "heard," cf. ver. 12; ch. xxii. 8; see also 1 John i. 1. Vitranga refers the previous part of this verse to the Fourth Gospel; and these words to the Apocalypse itself, "seen" in ecstatic vision. The true reading, however, which omits "and," excludes this sense. The sense accordingly is,—God has given the Revelation to His Son "to shew unto His servants"; the Son, through His Angel, by images and Visions, has "signified" it to St. John; and St. John here bears record to that "word of God, and that testimony of Jesus Christ," as all has been seen by him.

3. be that readeth, and they that bear] I. e., the public reader in the Church (Luke iv. 16; 2 Cor. iii. 14), and those present who hear what is read. Hence, the one participle is singular, and the others plural. See the use of this fact for settling the date of the Book, Intro. § 4, p. 33.

the words of the prophecy,] I. e., of this Book;—see ch. xxii. 7, 18.

and keep the things which are written therein:] See Luke xi. 28.

for the time] 'The season (καιρός) determined on,' as ch. xi. 18; xxii. 10: the word is used differently in ch. xii. 12, 14. For the noun expressive of mere duration (χρόνος), see ch. ii. 21; vi. 11; x. 6; xx. 3. Both are combined, Acts i. 7; 1 Thess. v. 1. The term here employed denotes "the critical epoch-making periods, fore-ordained of God, Acts xvii. 26."—Trench, Synon. of the N. T., p. 199.

is at hand.] See on ver. 1 and ch. vi. 10; cf. Rom. xiii. 11; James v. 9; 1 Pet. iv. 7, 17. At every moment the end draws nearer, but every moment it is near: the Lord Himself points the moral, Matt. xxiv. 48-51. "The Apocalypse," writes Auberlen, "on the one hand points to the coming of Christ as distant, for it shows the succession of the Seven Seals, Trumpets, and Vials; on the other hand it proclaims with uplifted finger, 'Yea, I come quickly,' xxii. 20. In this it but follows the example of the Saviour Himself: Matt. xxv. 6, 13, 19; Mark xiii. 32-37."—Daniel and the Rev. (Engl. tr., p. 79). In the warnings to Pergamum and Sardis (ch. ii. 16; iii. 3) the language associated with the Second Advent is transferred to some nearer and more immediate judgment.—see Luke xii. 36-40; 1 Thess. v. 2. Cf. Plumptre, l. c., p. 162.

Duration is thus treated in the Apocalypse as relative to the Divine apprehension,—cf. on ver. 1; ch. viii. 1; xx. 2. On the other hand, according to the theory prevalent among rationalistic writers, the Apocalypse was written between June A.D. 68, and Jan. A.D. 69 (see Intro. § 4), under the influence of the horror and revengeful feelings excited by the cruelties of Nero. The hour of vengeance could not, the Christians believed, be long deferred ("Ce mot de l'Apocalypse 'le temps est proche,' qui se retrouve dans les trois premiers Evangiles, est puisé au cœur même des sollicitudes chrétiennes de cette époque."—Aubé, Hist. des Persécutions, p. 132). And writers of this school agree in holding that the authors of the New Testament all laboured under the common delusion that the power of Antichrist was to continue for the literal period of three and a half years (ch. xii. 14; xiii. 5), when the Lord was to return and overthrow the power of Pagan Rome.

THE ADDRESS (4-8).

The Apocalypse is addressed to the Seven Churches, named in ver. 11, which, in their mystic unity, represent the Church Universal,—see ch. ii. 7, 11, 29, etc. The fundamental thought is expressed in vv. 7, 8.

4. John] No title is assumed, as none was needed to designate the writer to those whom he addressed. Who else but John the Apostle would have thus named himself? See on ver. 1.

to the seven churches] (On the sacred covenant-number Seven, see Intro. § 11). We have here a greeting after the manner of St. Paul, who, however, designates himself with scrupulous care;—e.g. Rom. i. 1-7. Not all the churches in "Asia" are meant, for there were, among other churches, Colossæ to which St. Paul addressed an Epistle,—and Miletus where he preached (Acts xx. 17),—and Hierapolis (Col. iv. 13) of which Papias was shortly afterwards Bishop,—and Magnesia to which the martyr Ignatius wrote some few years later; but the "Seven" only which, without at all suppressing their historical character, were chosen to symbolize the whole Church of God (see on ch. ii. 7), and to supply seven Spirits which are before his throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, who is ¹ Cor. i the faithful witness, and the ²⁰ Col. i first themes for warning, for encouragement, for consolation, for promise;—Churches, too, which, as we may well suppose, stood in a special relation to the Apostle John. As Tertullian remarks: "If we trace the series of Bishops in these Churches ("Johannis alumnas ecclesias") to their origin, we shall arrive at John as their founder" (adv. Marcion., iv. 5). This relation is further proved by the intimate knowledge of the Apostle as to the circumstances of each church, and especially of Ephesus, ver. 11; ch. ii. 1.

which are in Asia:] Here, and throughout the N.T., by 'Asia' is meant, not one of the three continents of the old world, nor yet the region which geographers, about the fourth century of our era, began to call 'Asia Minor,'—but a district scarcely one-third of this, the bequest of Attalus III., king of Pergamum (B.C. 133), to the Romans:—cf. Hor., 2 Carm. xviii. 5. Its capital was Ephesus, in which city St. John resided, wrote his Gospel, and died:—see note B. at the end of this chapter. Compare St. Paul's mention of the "churches of Asia," 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

Grace to you and peace,] Cf. the form of salutation in St. Peter's two Epistles, and in those of St. Paul,—except in 1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2, where, as in 2 John 3, "mercy" is added (cf. Gal. vi. 16). We are thus (by this "most frequently recurring Apostolic salutation: Grace and Peace,") reminded, notes Archbishop Trench (Epistles to the Seven Churches, p. 5) that the whole Book is an Epistle addressed to the Universal Church; not merely a Book containing the Seven briefer Epistles of ch. ii., and ch. iii.

from him which is] We have here the first of the many departures from ordinary grammatical construction with which the Apocalypse abounds. At all costs,—so St. John seems to have felt,—the title of the immutable God, Jehovah, the self-existing One, "the same yesterday and to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8; James i. 17; Mal. iii. 6), must be retained in the dignity and emphasis of the nominative case:—cf. "I AM hath sent me unto you" (Ex. iii. 14). On such constructions (ἀπὸ ὁ ὧν) see Introd. § 7 (omit τοῦ, as in v. 11). Note the threefold "from," of which we have here the first.

and which was,] These words are not to be divided by a comma from the former part of the title; both united form a special title of God,—see the form, "Which art and Which wast," without any addition, in ch. xi. 17; xvi. 5. Together, they form one clause which is to be balanced against the remaining words: see Trench, in loc.; and also the comparison of the word "was" here, with the "was" in John i. 1, as drawn by St. Basil quoted in the Introd., § 2, p. 14 and which is to come;] Lit., "which cometh,"—cf. Mark x. 30. This clause is also in some sort a proper name of our Lord (Matt. xi. 3; John i. 15, 27; Heb. x. 37; cf. Hab. ii. 3; Mal. iii. 1): its occurrence in this compound title attests the equal dignity of the Son with the Father,—so Origen who quotes this verse (de Princip., i. 10, p. 118, ed. Redepenning). The complete title is not a description of the eternity of God,—present, past, future (see the different order in ch. iv. 8, and compare ch. iv. 10),—this would make ὁ ἐρχόμενος equivalent to ὁ ἐσόμενος: it simply means "which is and which was, and which is to come" to judgment. This latter member of the clause supplies the key-note of the Book, with which it begins (ver. 7), and with which it closes (ch. xxii. 7, 12, 20),—"I come quickly;" cf. John v. 25: and see Trench, l.c., p. 6. This title is repeated in ver. 8; and is to be omitted in ch. xi. 17; xvi. 5.

and from the seven Spirits] The second "from":—cf. ch. iii. 1; iv. 5; v. 6. Not the Seven principal Angels (cf. ch. viii. 2) as the later Jews counted them (Tobit xii. 15), but the Holy Ghost, Sevenfold in His operations, "that doth His Sevenfold Gifts impart:"—see Isa. xi. 2; Zech. iii. 9; iv. 10. Angels are never called 'Spirits' in the Apocalypse; nor would such a sense agree with the prerogative claimed for Christ in ch. iii. 1. This expression, which guides the mysterious Sevenfold imagery throughout the Book, is explained by ch. v. 6. The Personality of the Holy Ghost—which is asserted in ch. ii. 11; xxii. 17—is not touched by this interpretation, which rests upon the varied manifestations of one and the same Spirit (1 Cor. xii. 4) in the Church; the number Seven (note the relation to the Seven Churches) being the symbol of God's covenant with His people; see Introd., § 11, p. 71. The absence of the article (as Dean Vaughan notes on Rom. v. 5) attaches to πνεῦμα the sense of communication; its presence that of personality. Each one of the Seven Spirits (symbolizing the diffusion of the Holy Spirit) is so to say, a πνεῦμα ἁγίων. Viewed in Himself, and in His personal Deity, He is τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. Herder's reference to the Cabalistic personification of the Divine attributes cannot hold good, for the Sephiroth (as they were called) were ten in number.

which [are] before his throne;] Note the begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him ^{Heb. 9} that loved us, ¹⁴ and washed us from our sins in his own blood, 6 And hath ^dmade us kings and ^epriests unto God and his Father; to him ^fbe glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

absence of the verb substantive after the relative:—see Introd., § 7, p. 55. The ministering office of the Holy Ghost as “sent” by the Father (John xiv. 26) is implied in the words “before his throne.”

5. and from Jesus Christ, [who is] the faithful witness,] The third “from.” The three nominatives in irregular apposition to the genitive denote here, as in ver. 4, the importance of these titles; cf. ch. xiv. 12; xx. 2. Winer (§ lix. 8), suggests that these nominatives may be taken “as a kind of exclamation,”—cf. James iii. 8.

In the New Testament the word “faithful” (πιστός) is used, (1) in an active sense signifying ‘trusting,’ ‘believing’ (John xx. 27); (2) in a passive sense, signifying ‘trustworthy,’ ‘to be believed’ (1 John i. 9):—God alone is “faithful” in this latter sense; see on ch. iii. 14. The thought here expressed, which is characteristic of St. John (see on ver. 2), may be founded on Isaiah lv. 4.

the first-born of the dead,] (Omit ἐκ, see vv. 11.). A thought found only here, and in Col. i. 18; see ch. ii. 8, and Bishop Lightfoot on Col. i. 15, 18:—another correspondence with Pauline doctrine (although St. Paul writes ἐκ τῶν νεκρ.). Cf. too 1 Cor. xv. 20; Acts ii. 24; i. e., “death was the womb that bare him.” Or, it may be, “first-begotten,” as in Acts xiii. 33, with reference to Ps. ii. 7; cf. Rom. i. 4:—and so Trench, l. c., p. 12.

and the ruler of the kings of the earth.] See Ps. lxxxix. 27; 1 Tim. vi. 15; cf. Rev. vi. 15; xvii. 14; xix. 16. The prize offered by the Tempter, Christ has won by the way of death:—Matt. iv. 8, 9; John xvi. 33.

Unto him that loveth us,] For the tense see vv. 11.:—“whose love rests evermore on his redeemed” (Trench). Cf. John xiii. 1.

and loosed us from our sins] See vv. 11.:—this reading connects the words with those other texts which speak of Christ as our “ransom,” (λύτρον), Matt. xx. 28; 1 Tim. ii. 6; cf. also ch. v. 9; xiv. 3, 4. The prayer, “Though we be tied and bound with the chain of our sins, yet let the pitifulness of thy great mercy loose us,” suggests a different metaphor. The reading “washed us,” differing but by a single letter from that which the weight of evidence commends (λούω—λύω), is also in accordance with St. John’s tone of thought:—see ch. vii. 14; John xiii. 10; 1 John i. 7. Cf. Acts xvi. 33; and Winer, § 30, s. 177.

by his blood;] ransomed us at the price of, or with:—Gr. in; cf. 1 Chron. xxi. 24, LXX. See Winer’s note quoted on ch. v. 9.

6. and he made us] By a Hebrew idiom, the participial is resolved into the direct construction.

[to be] a kingdom,] Cf. ch. v. 10; so, too, “a kingdom of priests,” Ex. xix. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 9:—see vv. 11. The concrete term “king” is not applied to Christians in the New Testament.

[to be] priests unto his God and Father;] I. e., consecrated to God,—brought into near relationship to Him. On the words, “His God and Father,” cf. Rom. xv. 6; 2 Cor. i. 3; Eph. i. 3. The emphasis given to “kingdom” points to the reigning of the saints,—an idea so prominent in the Apoc.,—ch. iii. 21; v. 10; xx. 4, 6; xxii. 5. Or it may mean that the redeemed form Christ’s “kingdom;” and thus, inasmuch as they are “priests” unto God, become subjects of Him who is “King of kings.”

to him be all glory and dominion] The article is prefixed to each noun, and expresses universality,—“the glory,” “the dominion.” The sense may be: “to Him is the glory,” &c.; i. e., not ascribing to Him “the glory,” but confessing that it belongs to Him,—that He possesses it: see 1 Pet. iv. 11. Unlike “power” and “might” in the doxology of ch. vii. 12, the attribute of “dominion” or “strength” (Luke i. 51) is applied in the New Testament solely to God. The doxology becomes threefold at ch. iv. 11; xix. 1 (see the notes); fourfold at ch. v. 13 (cf. ch. xii. 10); sevenfold at ch. vii. 12 (cf. on ch. v. 12); the article in each case preceding each noun. The Divine honour thus expressed can be ascribed to none else than God and Christ. Writers usually attempt, but rather unprofitably, to distinguish and to define the ideas which these different doxologies contain. Compare the doxology of 1 Chron. xxix. 11, 12; and also that which has been attached to the Lord’s Prayer, Matt. vi. 13.

for ever and ever. Amen.] Lit., “unto the ages of the ages,” a phrase occurring twelve times in this Book:—it is not read in ch. v. 14. In ch. xiv. 11 the articles are omitted:—see the vv. 11. here. This form is not found in the Gospel or Epistles of St. John. Elsewhere, it occurs in Gal. i. 5; Heb. xiii. 21; 1 Pet. iv. 11; &c.,—in all, nine times. See ch. xiv. 6.

* Matt. 24.
32.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds ; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him : and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

7. Behold, he cometh] I.e., the Person last spoken of. The fundamental thought of the Apocalypse, "Christ cometh," is here solemnly prefixed, after the manner of the prophets:—see Pusey (The Minor Prophets) on Amos i. 2.

Mr. F. D. Maurice, as a strict "Preterist," lays down from the first his principle of interpretation: "I believe that the time of which St. John wrote was at hand when he wrote."—Lect. on the Apoc., p. 9.

with clouds ;] Gr. the clouds (of heaven, Dan. vii. 13 ; Matt. xxiv. 30 ; xxvi. 64 ; Acts i. 9, 11) ; denoting not the glory, but the terror of that day :—cf. ch. xi. 12 ; xiv. 14–16. These clouds have nothing in common with the "glorious privacy of light"—the "bright cloud" (νεφέλη φωτεινή, Matt. xvii. 5) of the Transfiguration (Trench, l.c., p. 16). Cf. Nah. i. 3.

and every eye shall see him ;] He is no longer as in Isai. xlv. 15 ; cf. Job xix. 27.

and they which pierced him ;] I.e., 'whoever,' 'all they who' ; cf. Acts x. 41, 47. In Zech. xii. 10, here quoted, the repentance of Israel, when the Crucified One is recognized as their king, is described. As in Matt. xxiv. 30, the despair of sinners is now the thought. The form of the quotation in this place, as in John xix. 37 (the only other N. T. passage in which the piercing of the Lord's side is mentioned), is almost a demonstration of the common authorship of the Apocalypse and the Fourth Gospel. In both, the original Hebrew words (יִרְדּוּ שָׁמָּה) are rendered in the same way (αὐτὸν ἐξεκέντησαν), and with the same departure from the LXX. (ἀνθ' ὧν κατωρχήσαντο). In order to escape this inference, Ewald conjectures that the text of the LXX. has been altered. Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, however, who translate as here, lived after St. John:—see Field's edition of Origen's Hexapla, vol. ii. p. 1026 ; Lee on Inspiration, p. 345.

and all the tribes of the earth shall wail over him ;] Or shall mourn for him, as in Zech. xii. 10 (LXX., which is quoted here). The words of the Lord Himself, Matt. xxiv. 30, are also referred to. The verb denotes the Oriental manifestation of sorrow, the smiting on the breast, cf. Luke xviii. 13.

The frequent quotations from the Old Testament in this chapter exhibit the Apocalypse as the continuation of Hebrew prophecy.

Even so, Amen.] "Yea, Amen,"—the Greek and Hebrew forms united, as in 2 Cor. i. 20 ; see ch. xxii. 20,—God's own ratification, like the "Thus saith the Lord" of the prophets.

Note the three ideas in this doxology,—(1) Unto Him that loveth us ; (2) Who made us to be a kingdom, to be priests ; (3) Who cometh.

8. I am the Alpha and the Omega, saith the Lord God ;] See vv. 11. The explanatory words, "the beginning and the ending," are added here in the Textus Receptus, and are read in ch. xxi. 6 ; xxii. 13 (cf. below, ver. 17). The thought conveyed by this title is expressed in Isai. xli. 4 ; xliii. 10 ; xlv. 6. On the expression "the Lord God," or "the Lord the God," cf. Luke i. 32.

which is &c.] See on ver. 4.

the Almighty.] This title (ὁ Παντοκράτωρ) occurs nine times in the Apoc. ; elsewhere in the New Test. only in 2 Cor. vi. 18, where it is a quotation: it is the equivalent in the LXX. for Shaddai (שֹׁדַי) only in Job (e. g. Job v. 17) ; and for Tsaba, in such phrases as Tsebi Tsibat (צְבִי צְבִאות, Jer. iii. 19), or Elohi Tsebbat (אֱלֹהֵי צְבִאות, Amos iv. 13). "We have always translated it 'Almighty,' except at Rev. xix. 6, where with a very sublime effect our Saxon 'Almighty' is exchanged for the Latin 'Omnipotent'" (Trench, l.c., p. 18). This verse expresses the worship in heaven under the seventh Trumpet, ch. xi. 17. Lücke (Einl. in die Offenb. des Johann., 2te Ausg., s. 693) thinks that "the reference to Ex. iii. 14 cannot be mistaken ;" and Alford also considers that these words are "uttered by the Eternal Father,"—although at ver. 17, and also at ch. xxii. 13, Christ is the speaker. At all events, Christ's Divinity and co-eternity with the Father are plainly stated in these latter texts. Early Christian Art and early Christian Hymnology alike apply the symbolic language of such passages to Christ : e. g.—

"Corde natus ex Parentis, ante mundi exordium Alpha et Ω cognominatus, Ipse fons et clausula Omnium, quæ sunt, fuerunt, quæque post futura sunt."

PRUDENTIUS, Cathem. ix. 10 (quoted by Bishop Wordsworth in loc.).

9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 I was in the Spirit on the

THE FIRST SCENE OF THE VISION (i. 9—iii. 22).

As the Prophets of old related their call (Isai. vi. 8; Jer. i. 4; Ezek. i. 3), so St. John sets forth his commission, in order to identify this Book with the Revelation announced in ver. 1.

9. I John,] The writer here names himself for the third time:—so again, ch. xxi. 2; xxii. 8. Elsewhere, Daniel alone says, “I Daniel” (Dan. vii. 15, 28; viii. 15, 27; ix. 2; x. 2, 7; xii. 5). See on ver. 4.

your brother] Omit “who also am,”—see vv. 11. Isaiah names himself “son of Amoz;” St. John, as having entered the circle of Christian thought, refers merely to the brotherhood in Christ.

and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience [which are] in Jesus,] See vv. 11. The Lord’s words, in Matt. xx. 22, had been fulfilled so far as “James the brother of John” was concerned,—see the narrative in Acts xii. 2: the prediction is here brought home to John himself. For the case of others, cf. ch. ii. 13; vi. 9; xvii. 6. Note the order: “while the tribulation is present, the kingdom is in hope” (Trench), and hence, “patience in Jesus,” the link which unites them, is added;—see Acts xiv. 22; Rom. viii. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 12.

The word Christ is twice omitted in this verse.

was] Ἐγενόμην—not ἦν which implies the mere fact. We have no one word in English to express the force of this Greek verb when a person is meant (see ver. 18); in the case of an event we say “came to pass.” Here, therefore, we are to understand—“I found myself” “I became a dweller;” not simply “I was.” As in ver. 10, the verb seems to imply that St. John was no longer in Patmos when he wrote these words.

Patmos,] Or Patnos—whence the popular form Patino, known in the Middle Ages as Palmosa, one of the Sporades, a rocky island consisting of three solid masses united by narrow isthmuses: it is about thirty Roman miles in circuit, and lies in that part of the Ægean called the Icarian Sea. Patmos is visible about forty miles out at sea from the hills which surround Miletus at the mouth of the Mæander. M. Guérin (Description de l’île de Patmos, 1856) estimates the population of La Scala, the ancient Hellenic town of which the Acropolis still exists at its port, at twelve or thirteen thousand. Its excellent harbour, according to the custom of coasting voyages at that period, was the first or the last station between Ephesus and Rome. See Renan, L’Antechrist, p. 373; and also Dean Stanley’s description, Introd., § 4, p. 25. It appears to be the certain result of historical evidence (see Introd., § 4) that the Apostle John was banished to the island of Patmos during the reign of the Emperor Domitian (A.D. 81–96), and in the fourteenth year of that reign; and that he was recalled from Patmos to Ephesus by the Emperor Nerva in the year 96.

for the word of God] The use of this same preposition (διά with an accus.) in ch. vi. 9; xx. 4 (cf. John xv. 21), renders imperative the sense that St. John’s banishment is here meant, not (as Lücke thinks, s. 816) that he was a voluntary dweller in Patmos ‘for the purpose of’ receiving “the word of God.” For the confirmation which the nature of this punishment supplies of the date of the Apocalypse under Domitian, see Introd. p. 27. Renan writes: “Jean paraît avoir souffert pour le nom de Jésus:” and he quotes Polycrates (ap. Euseb., H. E., v. 24), who testified that St. John was a “martyr and teacher” (l.c., p. 198).

In reply to the modern theory that “the tradition” as to St. John’s banishment is founded altogether upon this verse, see Introd. § 7, i. (a).

and the testimony of Jesus.] See vv. 11. For the meaning of this phrase (the objective sense—“the testimony concerning Jesus”—predominating here, cf. ch. xii. 11), see on ver. 2.

10. I was in the Spirit] See on verse 9,—‘I found myself in that state wherein revelations are received’—“in a trance,” Acts x. 10; xi. 5; xxii. 17 (for the opposite state see Acts xii. 11);—withdrawn from the relations of ordinary life. St. Paul cannot tell whether “in the body” or “out of the body,”—2 Cor. xii. 2–4. Cf. Luke xxii. 44 for a similar use of the verb. This phrase occurs only here, and in ch. iv. 2;—see also ch. xvii. 3; xxi. 10; Num. xxiv. 2; Ezek. xi. 5 (Lee On Inspiration, p. 131, &c.) on the Lord’s day:] ‘The first day of the week,’ the day of the Lord’s Resurrection (ἡ κυριακὴ ἡμέρα,—cf. 1 Cor. xi. 20). For the early use of this expression (which is not found elsewhere in the New Test.) to denote Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

'Sunday,' see note C. at the end of this chapter. Eichhorn (cf. Lücke, s. 815), relying on the article, understands the chief Lord's day, i.e., Easter Day. Some maintain, but without sufficient reason, that "the Day of the Lord" here signifies "the Day of Judgment" in the distant future, as in Joel i. 15; iii. 14:—so Wetstein, Augusti, Züllig, S. R. Maitland, J. H. Todd (cf. Züllig, Die Offenb. Johannis, Excurs. i., B. i. s. 401.) See the argument of Godet, founded on the ecclesiastical use of "the Lord's Day," in proof of the date of the Apocalypse (Introduction, § 4).

and I heard behind me a great voice,] The speaker is undefined. We note here the same indefiniteness as to the speaker which we frequently find throughout this Book:—e.g., ch. iv. 1; vi. 6; ix. 13; x. 4, 8; xiv. 13; xviii. 4. Still more indefinite is the speaker in ch. xix. 9; xxi. 5:—see on ver. 1. In ver. 15, the "voice" is clearly that of Christ: so also in ch. ii., iii. The voice proceeding from "behind" the Seer has been thought to signify that all the symbols and references are of the Old Testament (I. Williams in loc.);—but cf. Ezek. iii. 12.

as of a trumpet] A trumpet, as of the Law (Ex. xix. 19; Num. x. 1–10), but articulate with human utterance, as of the Gospel. Cf. Isai. xxvii. 13; Matt. xxiv. 31.

11. saying,] Cf. ch. iv. 1:—"saying" is in concord with "trumpet."

What thou seest,] Omit "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, and"—see vv. 11. The words omitted are borrowed from verses 8 and 17. The sense is—"What thou seest" throughout the Vision now opening.

write in a book,] Gr. into a roll (eis βιβλίον): see Note A on ch. x. 2. The command to write is given twelve times in the Apocalypse; viz. here, and ver. 19; ch. ii. 1, 8, 12, 18; iii. 1, 7, 14; xiv. 13; xix. 9; xxi. 5. Hengstenberg is certainly wrong when he restricts the command to the contents of ch. ii. and ch. iii.,—see on ver. 19.

and send [it] to the seven churches; unto Ephesus, and unto, &c.] Though his Codex reads "seven," Erasmus omits it, and is followed by T. R. Omit "which are in Asia,"—see vv. 11.

unto Pergamum,] Or Pergamos:—for the form of this word see note D at the end of this chapter. As to the selection of these Seven Churches, see on ver. 4; and Trench, l.c., pp. 25, 222–4. Renan (p. 347) would account for the omission of Hierapolis by the conjecture that the residence in that city of the Apostle Philip (see Introd. § 2, p. 9) removed it from the jurisdiction of St. John; and for the omission of Colossæ, by the assertion that it had suffered so severely from the earthquake of the year 62, as to have almost disappeared from the number of the churches. Such criticism, however, does not explain the omission from the list of Miletus, or Tralles, or Magnesia.

The Seven Churches are divided into groups of three and four (see the remarks introductory to ch. ii.). The first group consists of Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum;—Ephesus standing first as being the scene of St. John's own labours; as being the most important church in 'Asia,' as well as the chief city of the province; and, it may be, as being geographically nearest to Patmos. The second group is arranged according to the order given in the "Itinerarium Antonini." Of Laodicea we read in Col. iv. 16; of Philadelphia in the Epistle of St. Ignatius to that church; of the churches of Pergamum, Thyatira, and Sardis, we know nothing from the Pauline or Ignatian age. The objection of the Alogi (see Epiphanius, Her. 51, 33)—that there was no "church of the Christians in Thyatira," and, therefore, that St. John was not the author of the Apocalypse—Lücke (s. 424) proves to be of no weight: see Introduction, § 5. By these Seven the Church Universal is symbolized; and so each Epistle is addressed to "the Churches,"—ch. ii. 7, 11, 17, 29; iii. 6, 13, 22. As the "Muratorian Fragment" expresses it:—"John, in the Apoc., though he writes to Seven Churches, nevertheless speaks to all." ("Johannes in Apocalypsi licet septem ecclesiis scribat, tamen omnibus dicit.") So also Victorinus ("quod uni dicit, omnibus dicit," ap. Galland., t. iv. p. 53), who adds that St. Paul, too, wrote Epistles to seven churches only, addressing his other Epistles "singularibus personis," lest he should exceed the number of seven churches. Godet (Études bibliques, 2^m série, p. 349) observes: "Christianity, represented by these Seven Churches, is the true audience to which the author addresses himself."

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks;

13 And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14 His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

12. And I turned to see the voice] "The voice" put for the speaker. Or, "And I turned round to see." that spake with me.] I. e., 'what the voice was which was speaking.'

And having turned I saw] Here the Vision, properly so-called, begins.

seven golden candlesticks;] Here (see also ch. xi. 4) the λυχνία (LXX.) or lampstand, Ex. xxv. 31 (Heb., menorah), is properly the stand which supported the λύχνος (LXX.) or lamp, Ex. xxv. 37 (Heb., ner):—see Matt. v. 15; Rev. xviii. 23 (cf. ch. iv. 5; viii. 10). The ner was a shallow covered vessel, oval in form, with a mouth at one end from which the wick protruded:—see the note on Ex. xxv. 37. We recognize the reference to the Seven-branched Candlestick, Ex. xxv. 32, and the "seven lamps," Zech. iv. 2. "The Jewish Church was one; for it was the Church of a single people: the Christian Church, that too is one, but it is also many; at once 'the Church' and 'the Churches.'" —Trench, l. c., p. 28. "Any one candlestick may be removed (ch. ii. 5), but the Sevenfold unity is not disturbed by its removal" (Wordsworth).

THE APPEARANCE OF CHRIST (13–18).

The subject matter of the Book is now illustrated by the description of Christ's appearance,—as His relation to the world had been described in vv. 5, 6. Hence, each of the Seven Epistles opens with a feature borrowed from this description. What He afterwards says to them in words, He here prefigures through his appearance (Hengst.). "The Majesty of Him who holds His own in His right hand (cf. ver. 20), is the real ground of all Apocalyptic hope" (Düsterd.).

13. and in the midst of the candlesticks] Omit seven, see vv. 11. In the midst of the Seven Churches,—see ver. 20, and cf. ch. ii. 1.

one like unto the Son of man,] A title adopted from Dan. vii. 13; but nowhere applied to Christ by others than Himself except here, and in ch. xiv. 14,—and also in Acts vii. 56 where the articles occur which are absent here and in ch. xiv. 14, as they are absent in John v. 27. It is no more necessary to translate "a son of man" when the article is thus absent, than to render "a Spirit of God" in Matt. xii. 28, or 1 Cor. xii. 3. If the absence of the article is to be insisted on, the expression "a son of man" would simply declare that the risen Lord still retains in glory His human Nature. The contrast between His return to glory and the condition described in Phil. ii. 7, 8, explains how it was that, while He continued in the state of humiliation, no created being dared to address Him as "son of man." That St. John, who had "heard, and seen with his eyes, concerning the Word of life," could have here intended merely to describe a human form, is scarcely credible. Réville conjectures that here, and in ch. xiv. 14, the word "like" implies that St. John recognized his Master in the Divine Personage whom he describes (Revue de Théologie, ix. p. 241).

a garment down to the foot,] The Greek equivalent for these words (ποδήρης, scil. ἐσθῆς) is found only here in the New Testament. It is of frequent occurrence in the LXX., representing different Hebrew terms (cf. Ex. xxv. 7; xxviii. 4). It is the linen priestly garment (כִּטְיֹן) of the "One Man" revealed to Ezekiel (see the note on Ezek. ix. 2). It is also the "Ephod" of the High Priest (see the note on Ex. xxviii. 31), "woven without seam:"—"a high-priestly-royal robe" (Ewald).

and girt about at the breasts with a golden girdle.] See Luke xi. 27; cf. ch. xv. 6.

Bengel and others have attempted to reproduce this description pictorially; but with an unhappy result.

14. And his head and his hair were white as white wool, [white] as snow;] (See vv. 11.). As in Dan. vii. 9; not, however, the hoary head as of "the Ancient of days," but "a part of the transfiguration in light of the glorified Person of the Redeemer" (Trench, p. 34):—see Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 3. So of the Angel at the empty tomb (Matt. xxviii. 3), it is "not the garment of innocence but of glory" (Trench, Studies in the Gospels, p. 194). White is the colour and livery of heaven; and has throughout the Apocalypse a Messianic reference: ch. ii. 17; iii. 4, 18; iv. 4; vi. 2, 11; vii. 9, 13; xix. 8, 11, 14; xx. 11. (In the Apocalypse λευκός is not albus, but candidus:—"aliud est candidum esse, id est luce quidem nitente per-

15 And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

16 And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

17 And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last:

fusum; aliud album, quod pallori constat esse vicinum."—Wetst.). Reuss insists that the colour white is here the characteristic feature of old age; and in his Introduction (p. 34) he argues from this that the Apocalypse was not written by the Apostle John, who was acquainted with the Lord's appearance. He also notes on this verse that Christ does not appear "as the historical personage who died before He reached His fortieth year, but as a Divine Person invested with the symbolical attributes of eternity."

as a flame of fire;] As in Dan. x. 6; cf. ch. xix. 12. Fire, throughout Scripture, is the symbol of Divine wrath:—Gen. xix. 24; Num. xi. 1; 2 Kings i. 10, 12; 2 Thess. i. 8.

15. like unto burnished brass,] See Ezek. i. 7. The etymology and meaning of this term (Chalco-libanos, or—on, a noun fem., or rather neuter: see note E at the end of this chapter), found only here and in ch. ii. 18, have hitherto been merely guessed at. Thus we have the senses: 'Brass of Mount Lebanon,' (so Arethas, and the Syriac version);—'Mountain-brass' (Vulg., auricbaleum, the vulgar form of oricbaleum, and erroneously taken to be a compound of aurum and χαλκός,—more precious than gold, cf. Plaut. Curc. i. 3, 46);—'Brass of the furnace' (Words.);—'Brass at a white heat' (Bochart);—'Brass the colour of frankincense' (Ausonius, ap. Wetst.);—a metal like electrum (Suidas), a word which signifies both amber, and the metal electrum. A combination of the last two explanations may give the true sense, 'A metal like electrum, having the colour of amber,'—amber being the colour of frankincense, which is the commercial name of "the gum-resin Olibanum," (Brande and Cox Dict. of Science). Grimm gives as the general meaning imposed by the context: "Metallum auro simile, si non eo præstantius."

as if it had been refined in a furnace;] (Compare Zech. xiii. 9, LXX.). This version reads the dative of the participle,—see vv. 11. Reading the genitive, we get the same meaning, the construction being irregular,—cf. ch. ii. 20; iii. 12; iv. 1, &c. The nominative masculine plural, adopted in A.V., would agree with "feet;"—cf. ch. x. 1.

as a voice of many waters.] Cf. ch. xiv. 2; xix. 6; Ezek. xliii. 2. The form of the sentence now changes; the description proceeding as if with pencil touches;—cf. ch. xix. 12; xxi. 12.

16. And he had in his right hand seven stars:] See ch. ii. 1; where also the preposition is "in," not "on," as in ver. 20. Some would explain, "which he grasped as a garland," i.e., "a crown of stars;"—the words of Jer. xxii. 24, suggest to others the idea of seven signet rings on the right hand. At all events we learn that Christ holds in His right hand His own, represented by the Seven Stars.

and out of his mouth proceeded a sharp twoedged sword:] The sword of Christ is designated by a peculiar term in this Book,—see ch. ii. 12, 16; vi. 8; xix. 15, 21 (ρομφαία, the heavy Thracian broadsword, found elsewhere in the N. T. only in Luke ii. 35). The shorter sword (μάχαυρα) occurs in ch. vi. 4; xiii. 10, 14. For the image, see Isai. xi. 4; xlix. 2; Hos. vi. 5; 2 Thess. ii. 8; Heb. iv. 12. This last text supports the reference to "the word of God." The early writers saw in the "two edges," the Law and the Gospel (Tertull., Marc. iii. 14; Augustin., Enarr. in Ps. cxlix. 6). Or the meaning may simply be that the words which Christ utters are of judgment and command,—ch. ii. 16; xix. 21.

and his countenance [was] as the sun shineth in his strength.] The construction is again broken. Not the Lord's general appearance, but His "countenance," His "face," is meant:—see John xi. 44. Düsterd., however, appealing to ch. x. 1; John vii. 24, and to the frequent use of πρόσωπον in the Apocalypse to denote the countenance (e. g. ch. iv. 7; ix. 7, &c.), takes ὄψις here to mean "the appearance," the whole form, radiant as with the brightness of the sun.

17. as one dead.] So Moses (Ex. xxxiii. 20); or Daniel (viii. 27). The state of prophetic ecstasy:—see Dan. x. 7–19; Matt. xvii. 6, 7; Acts x. 10; cf. Lee On Inspiration, p. 174, etc.

And he laid his right hand upon me,] See vv. 11. The prep. with the accus.,—see on ver. 20.

saying,] Omit "unto me,"—see vv. 11.

Fear not; I am the first, and the last,] These words explain ver. 8. The prerogative three 18 I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19 Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter;
20 The mystery of the seven stars times claimed for Jehovah, Isai. xli. 4; xlv. 6; xlviii. 12, is three times claimed in this Book for Christ:—here; ch. ii. 8; xxii. 13. Some explain 'first in glory, last in humiliation' (Phil. ii. 6–8). Richard of St. Victor (quoted by Trench, p. 46) writes: "Primus, quia Ego sum causa originis; novissimus, quia Ego iudex et finis."

18. and he that liveth;] Or, and the Living one;] I.e., 'Who is possessed of absolute being':—"I live for ever," Deut. xxxii. 40: see 1 Tim. vi. 16; cf. John i. 4; v. 26; xiv. 6, 19. All hopes of immortality are but shadows, compared with the guarantee which this truth of Christ's Life affords.

and I was dead,] Gr. "I became dead," see on verse 9.

alive for evermore,] Gr. "unto the ages of the ages,"—see on ver. 6. Compare also ver. 5; ch. iv. 9, 10; x. 6; and also Acts ii. 24; Rom. vi. 4. (Omit "Amen,"—see vv. 11.).

and I have the keys of death and of hell.] See vv. 11. "Hell," Gr. Hades, is in like manner combined with Death, in ch. vi. 8; xx. 13, 14. "Hades," personified in ch. vi. 8; xx. 14, is here conceived of as a city with walls and gates, of which Christ had already spoken, Matt. xvi. 18;—cf. Isai. xxxviii. 10. (See the application of the symbol "key" in ch. ix. 1, 2; xx. 1).

In the natural order "death" precedes "Hades" (Sheol), the gathering place of departed souls. "Hell" (Gebenna, Matt. xviii. 9; James iii. 6) is "the lake of fire," the final abode of the lost, spoken of in ch. xix. 20; xx. 10, 14, 15. The "keys" are the symbol of authority,—see ch. iii. 7; ix. 1; xx. 1. Christ used these "keys" when the penitent was admitted into Paradise,—Luke xxiii. 43; and He asserted His power to use them, in John xi. 25, 43. Cf. the Jewish tradition as to the "four keys" (of which 'the key of the sepulchre' was one) which God entrusts neither to Angels nor Seraphim, but reserves in His own power:—see in Wetstein, on this verse, the Jerus. Targum on Gen. xxx. 22.

Note that in ch. xx. 14; Luke xvi. 23, "Hades" means the place of torment.

19. Write therefore] See vv. 11. In continuation either of ver. 11, or of ver. 18—i.e., "having seen this Vision." (Note the occurrence here, and in ch. ii. 5, 16; iii. 3, 19, of the word οὖν,—a word characteristic of St. John's style: see Introd., § 7, IV., (c).

the things which thou sawest,] Namely, in vv. 12–16.

and the things which are,] I.e., as contrasted with those which are about to happen, the things present being described in ch. ii.; iii. (so Arethas, Bengel, Lücke, Düsterd., Words., and others). Or, and what things they signify or represent, as explained in ver. 20 (so Ewald, De Wette, Alford, and others); and in proof it is urged, (1) that the plural εἰσιν distinguishes this clause from that in which we find the singular μέλλει; and (2) that εἰσιν must mean here what it means in ver. 20. The plain reference, however, of μετὰ ταῦτα to ἀ εἰσιν seems to decide in favour of the former sense.

and the things which shall come to pass hereafter;] I.e., in Vision,—e.g. ch. iv. &c. Sequence merely, not Divine appointment, is signified,—see on ver. 1.

According to Bengel, Elliott, Bisping, and others, a threefold division of the Book is indicated in this verse:—(1) vv. 12–18; (2) ch. ii.; iii.; (3) ch. iv.–xxi. Hengstenberg, connecting this verse with ver. 11, refers it altogether to the Seven Epistles of ch. ii.; iii.,—the words "which are" describing the real condition of the Churches, as contrasted with their outward appearance, e.g. ch. iii. 17; and the word "hereafter" telling the Churches of their Lord's coming. The command to "write" is suspended at ch. x. 4. The command is renewed at ch. xiv. 13; xix. 9; xxi. 5. The publication, as it were, is commanded at ch. xxii. 10. See above on ver. 11.

20. the mystery] Either governed by "write," ver. 19; or placed, as it were, absolutely, stating the "spiritual riddle of which the solution follows in the latter half of the verse,"—so Trench, p. 50. Throughout the N. T. a "mystery" denotes not an enigma, but what is secret,—a symbol before its meaning is explained,—that which lies beyond the reach of the natural understanding, and which God's Spirit only can unfold: in a word, the direct antithesis to Revelation or Apocalypse. See Matt. xiii. 11; Rom. xi. 25; Eph. v. 32; Col. i. 26; Rev. x. 7; xvii. 5—where see the note. Reuss notes that the Seven Stars and the Seven Candlesticks are the only images in this description which are peculiar to the author, who, accordingly, after the manner of the ancient prophets, himself explains them:—cf. Jer. i. 11, &c.; xxiv.; which thou sawest in my right hand,

and the seven golden candlesticks.
The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches : and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

Amos, vii. ; viii. This is a questionable statement,—see Introd. § 10.

of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand,] Gr., on. (Note that enī with a gen. will be indicated throughout by the word “on;” with an accus. by “upon,”—see ver.
17. With a dat., the context must decide:
e.g. ch. iv. 9 ; vii. 10 ; ix. 14 ; xix. 4, 14 ; and see on ver. 16, where the prep. is év).

The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches :] These “Angels” appear not merely at the head of each of the Churches (ch.
ii. ; iii.), but also as “Stars” in the right hand of the Redeemer:—cf. ver. 16 ; ch. ii. 1 ; iii. 1.

By the “Angels” here are to be understood the Bishops, in the modern sense of the title, of the Seven Churches,—the term ‘bishop’ (ἐπίσκοπος, Acts xx. 28 ; Phil. i. 1 ; 1 Tim. iii.
2 ; Tit. i. 7) not being as yet restricted to the Successors of the Apostles. This title, “Angel,” to denote a high spiritual function may have been suggested by Hag. i. 13 ; and Mal. ii. 7 : (“The priest’s lips should keep knowledge . . . for he is the messenger
(LXX. ἄγγελος) of the Lord of Hosts.”)
This symbol of the “Stars” is explained, as is that of the “Candlesticks” in the next clause, without an express application, which, however, is made in the following chapters where the address to each Church is personal to its “Angel;” the bishop being regarded as persona ecclesiae, by the Chief “Shepherd and Bishop of Souls”
—1 Pet. ii. 25. Primasius notes that in ver.
4 St. John addresses “the Seven Churches;” but, in ch. ii. ; iii., “the Angels of the Churches,” taking “the person of the Church and of the Angel to be the same,” (“unam videlicet faciens Angeli Ecclesiaeque personam.”—Comm. in loc., ap. Migne, Patrolog., vol. lxxiii., p. 803). In the typical language of Scripture a “Star” is the symbol of highest dominion, Num. xxiv. 17 ; Isai.
xiv. 12 ; Matt. ii. 2 ; and also of faithful or false teachers, Dan. xii. 3 ; Jude 13 (some refer, in this sense, to ch. vi. 13 ; viii. 10 ;
xii. 4) : and so, as Ewald (in loc., s. 118) writes of the “Angels” here, “Es sind die Vorsteher der sieben Gemeinde”—“They are the presidents of the Seven Churches.” Dean Vaughan notes: “The Angel of the Church is its chief minister or pastor.
The title is borrowed from the Jewish Synagogue, in which the angel or messenger of the assembly was the person who presided over and arranged the meetings for worship, charged, as it were, with the messages of the people to God . . . exercising also (it is said) something of discipline over its members.”—Lectures on the Rev., 3rd ed. vol. i.

p. 20. It has also been suggested “that the Apostolical bishops may have been called ‘Angels’ as ministering the New Testament, with reference to the fact of the Law having been received” “at the ministration of Angels”—Acts vii. 53 ; Gal. iii. 19 ; Heb. ii.
2 (Walcott, in Blunt’s *Annot. B. of Com.
Prayer*, p. 531). See Trench, p. 51, &c.

Reviewing some of the interpretations which have been proposed,—the sense cannot be, (a), as Alford and Reuss argue, ‘the Angels who are guardians of the Churches:’ ‘If,’ it is said, ‘single persons (Matt. xviii. 10 ; Acts xii. 15 ; cf. Dan. x. 21 ; xii. 1) have their Angels, why not Churches?’ But, on such a theory, how explain the language of ch. ii. 4, 5, 14, 20 ; iii. 1, 2, 15, 17 ? If Angels in heaven are meant, how account for the command to the Seer to “write” to such and such an “Angel” ? To argue that, because elsewhere in the Book “Angel” is used in its strict sense, it must be so here, is to assert a principle which cannot be carried out:—our Lord is once styled Logos, the Word, in ch.
xix. 13 ; elsewhere in the Apocalypse the term is used in its lower sense:—the noun θηρίον, “the beast,” is employed once in its literal sense in ch. vi. 8 ; elsewhere it is used symbolically. The interpretation thus supported by Alford was anciently held by Andreas and Arethas ; and, with a modification, the same theory has been maintained, (b), in recent times, by De Wette, Lücke, Düsterd., Geb-hardt,—viz., that the “Angels” of the Churches are the personified spirits of the Churches, “die persönlich vorgestellten Geister der Gemeinden” (Gebhardt, Der Lebrbegr. der Apoc., s. 39), or the Churches themselves;—as we read of the “Angels” of the various elements ; of the winds, ch. vii. 1 ; of fire, ch. xiv. 18 ; of the waters, ch. xvi.
5. To this entire theory Rothe (Die Anfänge der Christl. Kirche, s. 423) justly objects that we should thus have a Star the symbol of an Angel, and an Angel the symbol of a Church, to which in the same context another symbol, that of the Candlestick, is attached,—a manifest confusion of symbols.
(c) For Bishop Lightfoot’s explanation that the heavenly representatives of the Churches are meant,—“the celestial guardian, or only a personification, the idea or spirit of the Church,”—an explanation which combines more than one of these various shades of opinion,—see note F at the end of this chapter.

Nor, (d), can we understand by the "Angels" "the messengers" from the Churches to St. John, as in Phil. ii. 25; iv. 18; Col. iv. 12. One does not address a letter to such messengers,—the letter is sent by them. (e) Again, the notion of Brightman, revived by Hengstenberg, that the "Angel" is no one person, but "the collective presbytery,"—"das gesammte Kirchen-Regiment,"—is opposed to the distinct relations which the Seven Epistles set forth as subsisting between each Church and its "Angel."

See the argument of Godet (quoted Introd. § 4, p. 33) founded upon the use of the word Angel in chapters ii. and iii., for fixing the date of the Apocalypse.

and the seven candlesticks are seven churches.] Omit which thou sawest,—see vv. 11. Verse 12 is now explained. "The candlestick or lampstand . . . is not light, but it is the bearer of light, that which diffuses it, that which holds it forth and causes it to shine throughout the house; being the appointed instrument for this. It is thus with the Church."—Trench, p. 29. Compare the Lord's words in Matt. v. 14:—"Ye are the light of the world."

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. I.

NOTE A ON VER. 1.—"RATIONALISTIC" EXEGESIS.

The rationalistic interpretation of the Apocalypse may be summed up as follows, after Professor Reuss of Strasbourg, one of the latest expositors of this school (L'Apocalypse, Paris, 1878):—

(a) The design of the Book is to set forth the "revelation" of Christ in the objective sense;—i.e., the extraordinary manifestation of Christ's future coming to His Kingdom, as the word ἀποκάλυψις is used in 1 Cor. i. 7; 2 Thess. i. 7; 1 Pet. i. 7, 13. Accordingly, the 'Apocalypse of John' means the 'Book of the re-appearance of Christ described by John.' In it the Author brings together the various eschatological ideas which circulated, during his lifetime, in the Jewish and Judæo-Christian world; and to add aught to, or to take away aught from the popular conviction was held by him to be an act of sacrilege (ch. xxii. 18, 19). Far from containing new and marvellous disclosures, the Apocalypse gives but a meagre outline of what the majority of its readers already knew and believed. The hopes and fears of the early Christians led them to expect the immediate manifestation of Messiah; and this expectation the Apostles everywhere encouraged ("nourrissaient et caressaient"),—Matt. xxiv., xxv.; Acts i. 6; Heb. x. 25; James v. 7–9; 1 Pet. iv. 7; 1 John ii. 18. This current of ideas our Author describes with prophetic enthusiasm; and he gains the ear of the masses by lending the charm of poetic allegory to frequent reminiscences borrowed from the supreme authority of Scripture. All his facts are strung on one chronological thread; the principal facts of this continuous evolution being the purification of the Holy City, and the destruction of Rome (pp. 3–18).

(b) Visions:—Our fathers, writes Professor Reuss, have spoken of the "Visions" of the Prophet of Patmos, as if he had ever been in the state of prophetic ecstasy. Of ecstatic Visions, we have, indeed, examples in the history of St. Paul; but our Author was a mere visionary, as many ardent men, at all times, are visionaries. For him "heaven had nothing to reveal which the other Apostles have not also known and believed: consequently 'Visions,' in the theological sense, would be quite as superfluous as they would be psychologically incomprehensible" (p. 23).

(c) The time of the End:—The entire duration of the Roman Empire from the time when the Author wrote, down to the final catastrophe, he himself fixes, after Daniel, at three years and a half (ch. xi. 2, 3; xii. 14). "This conclusion can only be evaded by substituting for the proper sense of the text a so-called spiritual interpretation, which is in truth quite arbitrary, and condemned beforehand by the Author himself, who at every instant repeats that he wishes to be understood literally,—ch. i. 1, 3; ii. 5, 16; iii. 11; xi. 14; xxii. 6, 7, 10, 12, 20, &c." (pp. 25, 36).

(d) The Apocalypse is to be interpreted on the "Preterist" theory:—The Author has sharply defined the horizon which embraces the entire range of his prophetic vision, "even designating by name [i.e., the name of Nero—see on ch. xiii. 18] the principal personages of the drama which he unfolds before our eyes." This fact men persist in disbelieving:—forsaking the region of primitive Christian history, they seek for the meaning of the Book along the obscure vista of the future. And yet, the entire Apocalypse is no more than a "summary, as complete as it is lucid, of the hopes which animated the churches in the Apostolic age; and which gave them the strength to brave the world, and the courage to conquer it" (pp. 3, 4).

(c) The date:—The date of the Apocalypse can be determined with greater exactitude than that of any other Book of the New Testament, and even absolutely fixed; although there is not a Roman Emperor, from Claudius to Hadrian, under whom expositors have not sought to place its composition:—"The Apocalypse has been written under the reign of Galba; that is to say, in the interval between the two epochs when men might have known in Asia the death of Nero, which took place June 9, 68, and that of Galba, who was killed January 16, 69" (p. 26). Many commentators, indeed, hold that the Book was composed under Domitian, "on account of the ancient legend which tells that the Apostle was exiled to Patmos by that Emperor; and above all, because they suppose that the Author may be thus spared the reproach of having been deceived in one of his principal predictions" [e.g. as to the preservation of the Temple of Jerusalem, assumed to be predicted in Rev. xi. 1]. "We acknowledge," continues Professor Reuss, "that we are touched but in a moderate degree by this advantage; since, to speak the truth, we do not see that one single prediction of his has been realized" (p. 24). Indeed, "scarcely two years after the composition of our Apocalypse there came to pass events . . . which in a glaring manner falsified it. The three years and a half [Rev. xi. 2] had not passed away, and yet Jerusalem, instead of becoming the abode of the Saints, was no more than a heap of ruins; Rome was not destroyed by Antichrist;" &c., &c. (p. 37).

NOTE B ON VER. 4—"ASIA."

The phrase "Asia Minor,"—first found in Orosius (i. 2), or 'Ἀσία ἡ μικρά (Constant. Porphy. De Prov. Them. i. 1), was not used until the fourth century after Christ. The Roman Province "Asia" properly embraced, not all Asia Minor, but only its western divisions. For the Peninsula, which we now call "Asia Minor" (otherwise Anatolia, Natolia, Ἀνατολή) there had previously been no proper name; and the region was styled Ἀσία ἡ ἐντὸς τοῦ Ἄλυσος (Strab. xii., p. 534; Herod. i. 28); or ἡ ἐντὸς τοῦ Ταύρου (Strab. h.); or Ἀσία ἡ ἰδίως καλουμένη (Strab. xii. p. 577; Ptol. v. 2); or "Asia propria," or "proprie dicta" (Plin. H. N. v. 27, 28); or absolutely "Asia" (Cic. pro Flacco, 27; pro lege Man. 6; Liv. xxvi. 24):—see Forbiger Handb. der alt. Geogr. B. ii. s. 92. St. Irenæus uses the expression ἐν τῇ κάτω Ἀσίᾳ (Ep. ad Florin., ed. Ben. p. 399). Neubauer (Geogr. Talm. p. 308) observes that "Asia" (אֲסִיָּה, אֲסִיָּי) is used by the Talmudists as vaguely as by Latin and Greek writers, since they speak of "Asia" sometimes as a city (Antioch or Laodicea), sometimes as a country. In the New Test. "Asia" and "Cilicia" (Acts vi. 9) are both regarded as Roman Provinces in Asia Minor.

"Asia Minor under the Romans was divided into districts, each comprising several towns and having its chief city, in which the Courts were held from time to time by the proconsul or legate of the province. Each of these political aggregates was styled in Latin conventus, in Greek διοίκησις At the head of the most important of these political dioceses, the 'Cibyritic convention' or 'jurisdiction,' as it was called, comprising not less than twenty-five towns, stood Laodicea. Here in times past Cicero, as proconsul of Cilicia, had held his court. (See Ad Attic. v. 16, 21; vi. 2). In its metropolitan rank we see an explanation of the fact, that to Laodicea, as to the centre of a Christian diocese also, whence their letters would readily be circulated among the neighbouring brotherhoods, two Apostles address themselves in succession, the one writing from his captivity in Rome (Col. iv. 16), the other from his exile at Patmos (Rev. iii. 14)."—Bishop Lightfoot, Epp. to the Col. and Philem., p. 8. After the year B.C. 49, the three cities, Laodicea, Hierapolis, Colossæ, with the rest of the Cibyritic union, seem to have been permanently attached to "Asia": before that time they are bandied about between Asia and Cilicia:—see Bergmann, De Asia provincia, Berlin, 1846. Laodicea is assigned to "Asia" in Boeckh, Corp. Inscr. 6512, 6541, 6626: "As an Asiatic Church accordingly Laodicea is addressed in the Apocalyptic letter" (Ibid. p. 19). There appears, too, to have been a very intimate relation between the other Asiatic cities and Ephesus. Thus the Concord of the Laodiceans and Ephesians, the Concord of the Hierapolitans and Ephesians, are repeatedly commemorated on medals struck for the purpose,—Eckhel, iii. pp. 155, 157, 165 (Ibid. p. 31).

NOTE C ON VER. 10—"THE LORD'S DAY."

The following are some instances of the early use of ἡ κυριακὴ ἡμέρα to denote our Sunday, or 'First day of the week': St. Barnabas thus refers to and defines the phrase:—ἀγομεν τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ὀγδόην εἰς εὐφροσύνην, ἐν ᾗ καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνέστη ἐκ νεκρῶν (Epist., c. 15). Dionysius of Corinth:—τὴν κυριακὴν ἀγίαν ἡμέραν διηγάγομεν (ap. Euseb. H. E., iv. 23). St. Ignatius:—μηκετι σαββατίζοντες, ἀλλὰ κατὰ κυριακὴν ζῶντες (ad Magn. c. 9). Tertullian:—"Die dominico jejunium nefas ducimus (De Corona, 3); and again:—"Non dominicum diem, non Pentecostem" (De Idol. c. 14). Clemens Al.:—κυριακὴν ἡμέραν ποιεῖ . . . τὴν τοῦ κυρίου ἀνάστασιν δοξάζων (Strom. vii. 12). As representing the interpretation of Rev. i. 10 by later writers, we may take the words of Andreas: Πνεύματι ἀγίῳ γενόμενος κάτοχος . . . ἐν τῇ κυριακῇ ἡμέρᾳ, κὰν τούτῳ τιμηθείσῃ διὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν, κ. τ. λ. (in loc., l. c., p. 8.)

On the other hand, the reference of Wetstein and of the "Futurists" to the Day of Judgment receives some support from the reference of Julius Africanus to the Ogdoad, or eighth millennium of the world: τάχα τε σημαίνει τὸ πολυχρόνιον αὐτοῦ διὰ τὴν ὑπερκόσμιον ὀγδοάδα, Κυριακὴν ἡμέραν (Chronicon, 5, ap. Routh, ii. p. 240): cf. Irenæus, Adv. Hæc. v. 28; Victorinus, de Fabr. Mundi, ap. Cave, i. p. 148. (Victorinus is speaking of Ps. vi., the title of which is "Upon the eighth," ὑπὲρ τῆς ὀγδοῆς,—"David pro die octavo Dominum rogat . . . hic est enim revera futuri illius judicii dies octavus").

The usual form in the New Test. for the first day of the week is ἡ μία τῶν σαββάτων, Luke xxiv. 1; John xx. 1, 19; Acts xx. 7; cf. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. The great "Day of the Lord," is expressed by ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ Κυρίου, 2 Thess. ii. 2;—or ἡ ἡμέρα Κυρίου, 2 Pet. iii. 10;—or "the Day of Christ," ἡμέρα Χριστοῦ, Phil. ii. 16: never by ἡ κυριακὴ ἡμέρα. The adjective occurs only here and in 1 Cor. xi. 20 (Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον).

NOTE D ON VER. 11—"PERGAMUM."

The form usual with Greek and Latin writers is the neuter, "Pergamum." Thus Forbiger (l. c., ii. 158) writes: "Pergamum (τὸ Πέργαμον: Strab. xiii. 4, pp. 603, 619, 623 f.; Xen. Anab., vii. 8, 8, 23; Polyb. iv. 48, 2; v. 78, 6; Plin. v. 30, 33). Πέργαμος bei Ptol. v. 2; noch j. Pergamo oder Bergama." The Greek commentators use the feminine: thus Arethas on Rev. ii. 15:—θρόνον δὲ τοῦ Σατανᾶ τὴν Πέργαμον καλεῖ (ap. Cramer, Catena, p. 208). "Instances of the feminine. ἡ Πέργαμος (Ptolemy, i. 2), are excessively rare (see Lobeck, Phryn., p. 422); while the neuter, τὸ Πέργαμον in Greek, and "Pergamum" in Latin, occurs innumerable times."—Trench, on ch. ii. 12, p. 113.

Besides "Pergamum" in Asia Minor, we read of "Pergamos" which denoted a town in Crete, near Cydonia (Plin. iv. 12, 20),—see Virg. Æn. iii. 133; or a fortress in the Pieric hollow by which Xerxes passed (Herod. vii. 112):—see Smith's Dict. of Geogr.

NOTE E ON VER. 15—"CHALCOLIBANOS."

Χαλκολίβανος, ου, ἡ (or—βανον, ου, τό), Suidas explains to be a kind of electrum, a metal much prized by the ancients (ἤλεκτρον,

i. e., ἀλλότῳ χρυσιον μεμιγμένον ὑελῷ καὶ λιθείᾳ). Electrum is "a natural alloy of gold and silver in the proportion of two of gold to one of silver."—Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science, in verb.

The Vulgate translates here by auricbaleum (otherwise orei—, or orichaleum). This word, found in the New Test. only here and in ch. ii. 18, seems to be taken from the לָבַן נְשֵׁת of Ezek. i. 7 (A.V. "burnished brass"; LXX. ἐξαστράπτων), and of Dan. x. 6 (LXX. χαλκὸς στίλβων): cf. לָבַן נְשֵׁת Ezek. i. 4, 27; viii. 2 (LXX. ἤλεκτρον).

In the Critias of Plato (p. 114, E), among the productions of the island Atlantis, is mentioned orichaleum,—τὸ νῦν ὀνομαζόμενον μόνον, τότε δὲ πλέον ὀνόματος ἦν τὸ γένος ἐκ γῆς ὀρυττόμενον ὀρειχάλκου . . . πλήν χρυσοῦ τιμώτατον ἐν τοῖς τότε δν. So too we read: "Tibia non, ut nunc, orichalco vincta."—Hor., Ars Poet. 202; and "Ipse dehinc auro squalentem alboque orichalco"—Virg., Æneid. xii. 87 (cf. Cic., De Off., iii. 23, 12).

The rule as to compounds in Greek (and also in English, e.g. brass-mountain and mountain-brass) that the important word comes last, and the qualitative first, ought not (see Abp. Trench, l. c., p. 36) to be urged against the suggestion, as old as Arethas,—a suggestion older still, see below,—that the meaning depends on the word λίβανος; and that the meaning therefore is "brass of Mount Lebanon" (so also Ebrard):—"Libanus pro quolibet monte," says Wolf. Salmasius (followed by Hitzig and Ewald) reads χαλκοκλίβανος="brass of the furnace." Alford suggests χαλκολιβάδιον="a stream of melted brass." Bochart (followed by Grotius, Vitranga, Hengst., Trench, Words.) proposes "a hybrid formation" from χαλκός, and לבן = albare, to make awbite, i. e., "brass at a white heat." Words. rather prefers the suggestion of Schwartz, viz. from λείβω liquo (as πιθανός from πείθω), with the sense, liquid or molten-brass. Züllig thinks there may be an enigma here, founded on the meaning given by Suidas, ἤλεκτρον signifies a metal, and also signifies amber. Some take λίβανος to be frankincense (ch. xviii. 13; see Note B on ch. viii. 3), and we have (as χρυσό-πρασος, χρυσό-λίθος) a sense, copper in ignition, like frankincense when red hot. So Ausonius (ap. Salmas., ad Solin., p. 810):—ὁ λίβανος ἔχει τρία εἶδη δένδρων, καὶ ὁ μὲν ἄρρῆν ὀνομάζεται χαλκοκλίβανος, ἡλιοειδὴς καὶ πυρρὸς ἡγουν ξανθός. Dürstiedt thinks that the word may have been a provincialism of Asia Minor.

In his interpretation of the Arabic text of the (lost) commentary of St. Hippolytus (see Note A on ch. xii. 3), Ewald says that Hippolytus agrees with the Peschito,—"Brass of Mount Lebanon"—"weil der Libanon das beste Erz getragen habe" (s. 5).

NOTE F ON VER. 20.—“THE ANGELS,” OF THE CHURCHES.

The use of the word “Angel” to signify the Bishop of a Church is not common; but the instances which are met with in early writers indicate that the title was clearly understood. St. Jerome thus comments on 1 Tim. iii. 2: “Oportet enim Episcopus] Aut Ecclesiæ princeps non erit, &c. . . . doctorem] Tam verbo quam exemplo . . . quia Angelus Dei Omnipotentis est” [Mal. ii. 7].—Opp., ed. Vallars., t. xi. p. 1047. The historian Socrates also, giving a catalogue of the Egyptian Solitaries, describes by this title Serapion, bishop of Thmuis (circ. A.D. 359): ὁ τῆς Θμουϊτῶν Ἀγγελος Σαραπίων.—Hist. Eccl. iv. 23; St. Jerome styling Serapion “Thmueos Egypti urbis Episcopus.”—De Vir. Ill. c. 99. Cassiodorus (A.D. 500) notes on Rev. i. 20: “Cum sit earum rerum innumera multitudo, septem ponuntur ad perfectionem scilicet indicandam: unde Angelo Ephesiorum, hoc est Episcopo, commonet scribendum.”—Complex. in Apoc., ed. Migne., t. lxx. p. 1405. Primasius (A.D. 550) notes on the same verse: “Angeli Ecclesiarum hic intelligendi sunt rectores populi, qui singulis Ecclesiis præsidentes, verbum vitæ cunctis annunciant.”—ed. Migne, t. lxxviii. p. 803. See Melito and Gregory Naz. already quoted, Introd., § 2; and the note on ch. ii. 13.

As stated above Andreas writes thus on Rev. i. 20: τούτων δὲ ἐκάστη ἄγγελος φύλαξ ἐφέστηκε: and Arethas: ἀστέρας δὲ τοὺς Ἀγγέλους τοὺς τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ἐφόρους καλεῖ . . . ὡς ἐξ αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἡλίου τῆς δικαιοσύνης τὸ φῶς χωρηγουμένους . . . ἐκάστη δὲ ὅτι Ἀγγελος ἐπιστατεῖ καὶ ὁ θεολόγος Γρηγόριος παραθέμενος ἐπιστώσατο—ap. Cramer, l.c., p. 199.

This explanation, fanciful as it is, has been accepted in modern times by writers of repute. Thus Lücke (s. 430), who criticizes the theory of Vittr., Beng., and others,—viz. that by the use of the term “Angel” St. John meant to transfer to the Christian Church the technical expression of the Jewish synagogue לִשְׁכָּת הַלְוִיִּם or “Legatus Ecclesiæ,”—and who observes that there is no proof that this expression, which most probably signifies simply “precentor,” was in use in St. John’s day, and that such a title is unsuitable to the office which is here assigned to the “Angels” of the Churches;—himself adopts the theory put forward by Salmasius (De Episc., p. 182), by Gabler (De Episc., p. 14), and by De Wette (in loc.), namely that St. John, who has elsewhere (ch. xiv. 18; xvi. 5; cf. John v. 4) recognized Angels as presiding over the elements, here follows the usage of Daniel (x. 13, 20; xii. 1) by recognizing Guardian Angels over the Churches (“welche den Gemeinden immanent vorstehen”).

Bishop Lightfoot considers that the Stars, as opposed to “the earthly fires” of the Candlesticks, are the heavenly representatives of the Churches, “the star shining steadily by its own inherent light.” Were this so, each “Star” or “Angel” must, surely, be equally faultless; and yet the “Angels” of the churches of Smyrna (ch. ii. 9–11) and Philadelphia (ch. iii. 8–11) alone of the Seven are spoken of without reproof. Again, he objects that the “Angel” is “made responsible” for the Church “to a degree wholly unsuited to any human officer,”—Ep. to the Phil., p. 198. This is a matter of opinion; but the objection is scarcely reconcilable with the statement at the close of the Essay that “the Christian minister is the representative of man to God—of the congregation primarily” (p. 265).

The circumstances under which the Apostolic office was extended, and the government of the Church committed to the Episcopal Order, are no doubt obscure. And yet Tertullian writes expressly: “Habemus Johannis alumnas Ecclesias; nam etsi Apocalypsin ejus Marcion respuit, ordo tamen Episcoporum ad originem recensitus in Johannem stabit auctorem.”—adv. Marc. iv. 5. Eusebius also (H. E. iii. 23) reports the saying of Clemens Al. to the effect that St. John, having on the death of the Tyrant removed (μετῆλθεν) from Patmos to Ephesus, ἀπῆει παρακαλούμενος καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ πλησιόχωρα τῶν ἐθνῶν, ὅπου μὲν ἐπισκόπους καταστήσων, ὅπου δὲ ὅλας ἐκκλησίας ἀρμόσων, ὅπου δὲ κλήρω ἓνα γέ τινα κληρώσων τῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος σημαινόμενων.—Quis Dicit salvetur, c. 42.

Bishop Lightfoot admits that “this change must have been brought about during the last three decades of the first century; and consequently, during the life time of the latest surviving Apostle” (l.c., p. 199). The Apocalypse here supplies the missing link: and by the use of the word “Angel” furnishes the term which marked the gradual change of name from “Apostle” to Ἐπίσκοπος or “Bishop,” as denoting the supreme Order in the Church. The title “Angel” or “Messenger” is applied to men in Hagg. i. 13; Mal. ii. 7; iii. 1; and its use here is characteristic of the symbolical language of this Book. Rothe (Die Anfänge der christl. Kirche, s. 427) quotes 3 John, 9, 10, where Diotrephes is described by St. John himself as holding a position far higher than that of Presbyter.—the Apostle’s language being unintelligible did Diotrephes not fill an office of a very special character. That the “Angels of the Churches” mean Bishops in the strict sense—“monarchische Bischöfe”—is held by Bunsen (Ignatius, s. 85); while Rothe sees in them “an ideal anticipation of Bishops” (l.c. s. 423);—the title Ἀγγελος, he adds, is very significant, denoting not only the consciousness that the office was necessary, but also the conscious effort to realize it. The Apocalypse knows the idea of the Episcopate, not merely as relative to a single community, but as relative to the assemblage of single communities, that is, to the Church. Consider ch. i. 16, 20; ii. 1; iii. 1:—what is meant by these texts but this, that the (ideal) personages, in whom the single communities are each comprehended in a concrete unity, are again comprehended in one by Christ Himself, Who is present and works in all as their common centre? And thus the full idea of the Episcopate was already formed out of the process of the collective Christian life; not as a foreign institution, but as the realizing of an Ideal innate in the Christian consciousness itself (s. 425, ff.).

The "Apostolical Constitutions" supply information as to the tradition which had reached their writer. In Book VII. c. xlv. (ed. Cotel., t. i. p. 385) the names of "the Bishops ordained" by the Apostles are given (περὶ δὲ τῶν ὑφ' ἡμῶν χειροτονηθέντων Ἐπισκόπων). Among these the writer mentions that St. John appointed John to succeed Timothy at Ephesus;—at Smyrna, Ariston is the first Bishop, and after him Strataas, son of Lois, who is succeeded by another Ariston;—at Pergamum, Gaius;—at Philadelphia, Demetrius;—at Laodicea, Archippus is named (see Col. iv. 17; Philem. 10). No other Apocalyptic Church is mentioned; but the names of "John" (who is said to have succeeded Timothy) and of Ariston, or Aristion (see Introd. § 2, p. 3), are deserving of notice. The date of this seventh Book is, like the rest of the "Constitutions," uncertain;—part of it, at least, belongs to the beginning of Cent. iii.: so Hilgenfeld (Nov. Test. extr. Can., fasc. iv. p. 93). Jacobson, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop., fixes the date as the beginning of Cent. iv.

Accepting "the tradition" as to the appointment by St. John of Bishops at the head of the different churches, Neander (Allg. Gesch. der Kirche, 3te Aufl. B. i. s. 104) will not allow that this Apostle intended to found the Episcopate; or, admitting that some exigency of the time led St. John himself to ordain Bishops ("das Institut der Bischöfe . . . eingesetzt hätte"), Neander will not concede that this form of Church government was intended for all future time. By such arbitrary conclusions any Apostolical ordinance, proved to be such, might equally be set aside. An impartial writer like Godet observes: "Rothe, Thiersch, Neander himself, attribute to the influence exercised by St. John the stable constitution of the churches of Asia Minor during Cent. ii., the first traces of which we already find in the Apocalypse ('the Angel of the Church'), and a little later in the Epistles of Ignatius."—Comm. on St. John's Gospel, Engl. transl., vol. i. p. 60.

We have here another illustration of the importance of fixing the date of the Apocalypse. Bishop Lightfoot is in favour of the earlier date. Taking for granted that "probably not more than two or three years have elapsed from the date of the Pastoral Epistles" (A.D. 66 or 67) and the Book of Revelation; and also that no distinct traces of Episcopal government had appeared in the former, Bishop Lightfoot holds it to be scarcely possible that the Episcopal organization could have been so mature, when the Apocalypse was written as the interpretation (here assumed to be the true one) of the name "Angel" must involve. The interval supposed "seems," he thinks, "quite insufficient to account for so great a change in the administration of the Asiatic Churches" (p. 198, &c.). (For a different conclusion see the argument of Godet, quoted in the Introd., § 4, p. 33.)

"I repeat my conviction," concludes Archbishop Trench, "that in these 'Angels' we are to recognize the Bishops of the several Churches" (l.c., p. 57).

CH. II.; III.—THE EPISTLES TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

What the parables of the Gospels are to individual men, these Epistles are to the Church of all time. In this sense they may be regarded—and so the whole Book may be regarded—as prophetic; but yet not as foreshadowing, as many hold, different states of the Church down to the end of all things. Thus, Mede considers that we have here "patterns and types of the several ages of the Catholic Church from the beginning thereof unto the end of the world;" a picture, in short, of "a sevenfold temper and constitution of the whole Church according to the several ages thereof."—Disc. lii. on Rev. iii. 19, p. 296. On the same principle, Vitringa regards Ephesus as representing the Church from Pentecost, to the Decian persecution; Smyrna, from the Decian to that of Diocletian inclusive; Pergamum, from Constantine to Cent. viii.; Thyatira, the Church's mission—during the first half of the Middle Ages—to the end of Cent. xii., and the rise of the Waldenses; Sardis, thence to the Reformation; Philadelphia, the first Century of the Reformation period; and Laodicea as the type of the Reformed communities in the subsequent times:—see note A at the end of chapter ii.

One cannot, however, overlook the historical character which is stamped on the Epistles throughout,—e. g. ch. ii. 6, 10, 13, 15; iii. 4, 9, 17,—and which distinctly points to a state of things actually before St. John's mind as existing in his own day in the several Churches. The Apostle, of course, employs such facts as the foundation of his inspired teaching; just as he employs the existence of the Seven Churches themselves,—or, throughout the Book, other historical facts (e. g. the Egyptian Plagues, see on ch. viii. 6),—or the details of Jewish worship,—or the different phenomena of nature. That such teaching is applicable for reproof or for encouragement throughout all future time, is firmly to be maintained; but that definite periods of the Church are here predicted, or that these Epistles refer severally to successive aspects of the Divine Kingdom, may well be doubted; and this will appear more fully as the exposition proceeds. This historical character, however, of the Seven Epistles, which are merely the introduction to the Book, is by no means to be ascribed to the rest of the Apocalypse, in the sense maintained by Preterists and Rationalists alike;—see Introd. § 12; and Note A, (d) on ch. i. 1.

K K

Ittameier, in his commentary (Nördlingen, 1880), starts from this point,—namely, that these Seven Asiatic Communities are not types of successive ecclesiastical periods, but of different conditions or states of the whole Church (“Kirchenzustände”):—the Seven Epistles are not to be regarded as forming a section apart from the rest of the Book, but the rest of the Book, and the entire contents of the Revelation, are addressed to the Seven Churches; and merely expand and develop the warnings and the promises which are attached to each Epistle.

The Seven Epistles are all constructed on the same model, and all rest on the same fundamental thought,—the Coming of the Lord, as announced at ch. i. 7. Each Epistle consists:—(1) of an inscription containing the command to write to such or such a Church, uttered by Christ Himself Who there claims one or more of the titles drawn from the attributes already ascribed to Him (ch. i. 4–20), and preceded by the constant prophetic formula, “These things saith He” (cf. Amos i. 3, 6, 9, 11, 13; ii. 1, 4, 6);—(2) of the special import of the Epistle, introduced by the announcement, “I know” the condition of each; and followed by praise or censure, warning of dangers present or future, together with words of encouragement, or consolation, or threatening (ch. ii. 2–6, 9–10, 13–16, 19–25; iii. 1–4, 8–11, 15–20);—(3) of a conclusion, consisting of two parts, (a) an appeal, “He that hath an ear,” &c., reminding each at the same time that what is said to one Church, is said to all; and (b) a promise “To him that overcometh.”

And yet with all this symmetry, the element of diversity is here. Thus, in the case of the last four, the order of (a) and (b) is inverted, thereby dividing the Seven Epistles into groups of three and four (viz. three churches in ch. ii. 1–17, and four churches in ch. ii. 18–iii. 22), as in the case of the Vials (see ch. xvi.):—for the Seals and Trumpets, see on ch. vi. 1; viii. 1. (Cf. the Seven parables of Matt. xiii.,—the first four being connected by the words, “Another parable put He forth unto them;” the last three by, “Again the Kingdom of Heaven is like,” &c.). The form, too, borrowed from the symbolism of ch. i. 4–20, under which Christ appears as He addresses each Church, is different. The contents also are varied:—thus, for Smyrna and Philadelphia, there is praise; for Sardis and Laodicea, reproof; for Ephesus, Pergamum, and Thyatira, praise and reproof intermingled.

A division more ingenious than accurate, and which does not suit that division into consecutive groups of three and four, or four and three, which is adopted throughout the Apocalypse, has been given by Godet (Études Bibl., p. 294). He, too, divides the Seven Epistles into two groups,—but they are denoted by the odd numbers 1, 3, 5, 7, and by the even 2, 4, 6; the former numbers indicating “the different possible degrees of the dominion of sin over the Christian life in a Church;” and the latter “the different degrees of the victory of the work of God over sin.” Thus the tone of reproof is raised progressively from Ephesus, through Pergamum and Sardis, to Laodicea; while Smyrna, Thyatira, and Philadelphia are praised. This division is clearly inaccurate as regards Thyatira, the fourth Church. There is, indeed, one feature which connects the Churches of the odd numbers, viz. that “in these only the formula “Repent” is introduced (ch. ii. 5, 16; iii. 3, 19), followed by a menace in case of obstinate hardening.” —“cette alternance de tableaux lumineux et sombres qui sera l'un des caractères les plus frappants du livre entier.” And yet here, too, we can read in the case of Thyatira (ch. ii. 21):—“And I gave her [Jezebel] time that she should repent; and she is not willing to repent of her fornication.”

CHAPTER II.

What is commanded to be written to the angels, that is, the ministers of the churches of 1 Ephesus, 8 Smyrna, 12 Pergamos, 18 Thyatira: and what is commended, or found wanting in them.

UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

[Ver. 1 τῷ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ. Ver. 2 om. 2nd σου.—ἐπείρασας τ. λέγοντας ἑαυτοὺς ἀπ. [these words, not found in 1, Er. supplied, after the Vulg., qui se dicunt apostolos esse]. Ver. 3 ὑπομονὴν ἔχ. κ. ἐβάστω.—om. 3rd καὶ (bef. διά).—καὶ οὐ κεκοπίωκες.—om. καὶ οὐ κέκμηκας (added by Er. for the rendering of the Vulg., et non defecisti, which is, however, the rendering of καὶ οὐ κεκοπίωκες. In 1, the verse began with καὶ ἐβάπτισας. Er. afterwards learned from Stunica, and adopted, the correct reading, but did not remove καὶ οὐ κέκμηκας). Ver. 5 om. τάχει. Ver. 7 ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ. Ver. 8 τῆς ἐν Σμ. ἐκκλ. Ver. 9. om. τὰ ἔργα καί.—ἀλλὰ πλούσιος.—ἐκ τῶν λεγ. Ver. 10 μὴ.—[N, B read καὶ ἔξετε. A, P read καὶ ἔχητε].—Ver. 13 om. τὰ ἔργα σου καί.—om. ἐν αἷς [Er., by an error of transcription, reads ἐμαῖς].—ὁ πιστός μου. Ver. 14 om. ἐν bef. τῷ Βαλάκ. Ver. 15 om. τῶν.—ὁμοίως (for ὁ μισῶ. P reads ὁμοίως ὁ μισῶ,—a reading suggested by Br. Wordsworth before P was collated). Ver. 16 μεταν. οὖν. Ver. 17 om. φαγεῖν ἀπό.—οἶδεν [ὁ οὐδ. ἔγνω εἰ μὴ ὁ λαμβ., wanting in 1, Er. supplied after the Vulg., quod nemo scit nisi qui accipit]. Ver. 19 τ. ἀγάπην, κ.τ. πίστιν, κ.τ. διακον.—om. καὶ bef. τὰ ἔσχα. Ver. 20 om. ὀλίγα.—ἀφείς (for ἔας).—ἡ λέγουσα.—καὶ διδάσκει καὶ πλανᾷ τοὺς. Ver. 21 ἵνα μεταν., καὶ οὐ θέλει μετανοῆσαι ἐκ τῆς πορν. αὐτῆς. Ver. 22 ἔργων αὐτῆς. Ver. 24 λέγω τοῖς λοιπ. τοῖς.—om. καὶ bef. οἵτινες.—τὰ βαθεία.—βάλλω.].

THE EPISTLE TO EPHESUS. (1-7.)

CHAP. II.—1. Unto the angel] The Bishop officially represents his particular Church:—see on ch. i. 20, and Introd. § 4, p. 33. A few years later (A.D. 107, or A.D. 116) Ignatius wrote to the Ephesians: “We have received your abundance in the name of God by Onesimus, who is your Bishop in love unutterable.”—Epp. Ign., Cureton's Recension, p. 13.

of the church in] See vv. 11. In ver. 18 the reading is the same. In the case of the other Epistles, we read as in ver. 8.

Ephesus] Ephesus was the chief city of Ionia, on the Caystrus, near the sea, between Smyrna and Miletus; the civil as well as the ecclesiastical centre of ‘Asia’ (see note B on ch. i. 4), of which, in the time of Strabo (xix. 1, 24), it was the most important seat of commerce. It was styled by Pliny “Asiæ lumen” (H. N. v. 29, 31). Under the Byzantine emperors Ephesus became the capital of the entire province of ‘Asia,’ (Hierocl., p. 658):—see Forbiger, l. c., ii. p. 189. Here St. Paul had laboured (Acts xix.; xx. 31), and ordained Timothy as its Bishop (1 Tim. i. 3; 2 Tim. i. 6); the very Bishop, perhaps, to whom this first of the Seven Epistles was addressed—if we accept the statement that Timothy died as a martyr under Domitian or Nerva, which his youth at the close of St. Paul's career renders not impossible (1 Tim. iv. 12; cf. Euseb. H. E. iii. 4; Theodoret. Comm. in Epp. ad Tim.; Niceph. H. E. iii. 11). By others the martyrdom of Timothy is placed under Nero (cf. Photius, Cod. 254). Dorotheus of Tyre (see on ver. 6), circ. A.D. 300, states that Gaius (1 Cor. i. 14; Rom. xvi. 23) was Bishop of Ephesus after Timothy the disciple of the Apostle Paul,—l. c. p. 126. Ephesus was the chief seat of St. John's later ministry (Euseb. v. 20, 24; see Introduction, § 4); and from it, as centre, he exercised jurisdiction over the surrounding churches (3 John 9, 10). The chief church at Ephesus (once the seat of the celebrated temple of Diana, Acts xix. 27) was dedicated to the Apostle (see Procop. Æd. v. 1; Anna Comn., p. 319). This once famous city is now a mass of ruins; its “Candlestick” is indeed removed (ver. 5). The sea, it is true, has not “as has been supposed, receded far, if at all, from the ancient seaboard;” but Ephesus and the Turkish town at Ayasalouk have alike fallen into decay. “The cause of the decay is to be found in the malaria from the marshes near the river Cayster,”—Wood's Ephesus, pp. 4, 14.

write; These things saith he] On this opening, common to all the Epistles (see above), cf. Isai. viii. 11; Ezek. ii. 4, &c. Christ is the speaker throughout. The symbols of ch. i. 13, 16, explained in ch. i. 20, are now combined.

that holdeth the seven stars] The verb—cf. vv. 13, 25; ch. iii. 11—is more forcible than in ch. i. 16, and recalls the promise in John x. 28, while it is suggestive of the warnings of ver. 5 and ch. iii. 16. Even Sardis and Laodicea are still “in his right hand,”—are not yet cast away.

2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

he that walketh] An addition to ch. i. 13: He now appears exercising His Divine action among the Churches,—in order, perhaps, that the lamps may burn pure and bright. The thought refers literally to Lev. xxiv. 2-4, and symbolically to Lev. xxvi. 12.

in the midst of] As in ch. i. 13:—Christ “in the midst of” all, renders the individual Churches one body,—namely, the Church Universal, of which He is the centre. See on ch. i. 20, together with the argument of Kothe in note F on that verse.

2. I know thy works,] Cf. the first prayer of the disciples, Acts i. 24:—“works” generally, good or evil: see also vv. 9, 13, 19; ch. iii. 1, 8, 15.

In the personal address here, and in each Epistle, the rule is observed: “Unam facit Angeli Ecclesięque personam,”—see on ch. i. 20.

and thy toil and patience,] (See vv. 11.). The active and passive sides of the Christian life combined (Words., Alf.),—qualities so needful in the idolatrous city of Diana: cf. ch. i. 9; xiv. 13.

and that thou canst not bear] See on ver. 3.

evil men,] The word used here, kakós, refers rather to the essence and character, while πονηρός refers to the acts or manifestation: πονηρός is the concrete appearance of what is kakós,—(Cremer, Wörterb. d. N. Test., s. 465; Trench, N. T. Synon. p. 298); for both words cf. ch. xvi. 2; 1 Cor. v. 8.

and didst try] ‘Make experiment of,’ as in ver. 10;—see 2 Cor. xiii. 5. The different verb in 1 John iv. 1, means to prove, to acquire a definite knowledge of. Christ proposes the test, Matt. vii. 16.

them which call themselves apostles, and they are not,] (See vv. 11.). These persons (see Acts xx. 28-30; 2 Cor. xi. 12-15) were most probably the Nicolaitans spoken of in ver. 6, and more particularly described in vv. 14, 15; cf. the language of ver. 20. Professor Plumptre (see below on ver. 4) makes “the false teachers” to be Hymenæus, Alexander, and Philetus (1 Tim. i. 20; 2 Tim. ii. 17). This title “apostles,” argues Reuss, is a proof that the Book was not written at the end of the century, as the Fathers held; for then, no one would have dared to usurp the name.

and didst find them false;] The adjective is found only here, in ch. xxi. 8, and in Acts vi. 13. The false teachers, notes St. Hippolytus (Arabic text; see Note A on ch. xii. 3), were Jewish-Christians sent from Jerusalem, with whom St. Paul also had to contend.

The theory first started by Schwegler has now become a commonplace with German critics,—e. g. Volkmar (Zur Offenb., Einleit. s. 25 ff.), and Keim (Jesu von Nazara, i. s. 160), and the same result is repeated by Renan (L'Antechrist, pp. 363-476; Saint Paul, pp. 303, 367)—viz. that the Apostle Paul and his teaching, as being that of “Gentile Christianity,” is here, and throughout the Apocalypse, assailed by St. John, the teacher of “Jewish Christianity.” [Volkmar writes: “Direct verworfen wird Paulus erstens in den Briefen an die 7 Gemeinden, cap. i.-iii.”—s. 28]. Neander justly censures this theory as being utterly destitute of proof;—see his Gesch. der Pflanz., Bohn's transl., vol. ii. p. 161; and, below, note A on ch. iii. 19. The notion, indeed, that the author of the Apocalypse, writing to the church of Ephesus, could apply the language of this verse to St. Paul, the founder of that church, carries with it its own refutation.

3. and thou hast patience and didst bear for my name's sake, and hast not grown weary.] The text which the A.V. represents is very corrupt,—see vv. 11. This may be due to the perplexity of the scribes at the affinity of the verb, here rendered “to grow weary” (κοιμάω), with the noun rendered “toil” (κόπος), in ver. 2; cf. John iv. 6. As the verb “to bear” (βαρύνω), in its figurative sense (cf. John xvi. 12), is repeated in this verse the meaning is “There are things which thou canst not bear [as in ver. 2], and things which thou canst bear [as here]” (Trench, p. 76). “Thou toilest, but dost not feel the toil” (Words.). For the use of the verb in its literal sense “to carry,” see ch. xvii. 7; and cf. Luke x. 4; John xii. 6.

4. But I have [this] against thee,] Cf. the similar form, Matt. v. 23.

that thou didst leave thy first love.] Here (see also ver. 20) the A. V. inserts “somewhat,” and thus mitigates the censure; this, however, the Greek does not authorize, as it does in ver. 14. The words “thy first love”

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou hast, that thou plainly convey the same meaning as "the first works" in ver. 5. This fact sets aside the interpretation of Hengst., Ebrard, Bisping, which would apply the words "thy first love" not to the love of Christ, but to the exercise of brotherly love. St. Paul, it is said, noted the same failing at Ephesus (Eph. iv. 2; v. 2); and the falling away which is censured here, may have arisen from the zeal of different members of that church against the teachers of error, out of which grew mutual coldness and mistrust. This restriction, however, is not authorized by the context.

The Church is here, for the first time in this Book, addressed as a Bride,—see Jer. ii. 2; cf. ch. xix. 7. In ver. 19, Thyatira is commended for that in which Ephesus is here pronounced wanting. Neither in St. Paul's Epistle to this Church, nor in his parting charge, Acts xx. 17, &c., is there any sign that its love for Christ had, as yet, grown cold,—although he warns them of dangers which were to "enter in" after his "departing," Acts xx. 29, 30. A generation at least must have passed away, and the thirty years from Nero to Domitian must have elapsed, ere the change here noted could come to pass. We may observe the analogous change in the condition of Israel, in the generation after Joshua:—see Josh. xxiv. 31; Judges ii. 10, 11 (Trench, p. 78). Hence the bearing of this verse on the date of the Apocalypse:—see also Godet, as quoted Introd. § 4 b.

Professor Plumptre, who places (l. c. p. 3) the date "shortly after the death of Nero (say circa A.D. 68 or 69)," disputes (l. c., p. 68) this reasoning. The Church of Ephesus, he thinks, had its shortcomings in St. Paul's time; "the false apostles" (2 Cor. xi. 13), "who followed him with ceaseless hostility in Galatia, Corinth, Philippi, and Colossæ, were hardly likely to leave Ephesus untouched" (l. c., p. 64) This, however, is mere conjecture.

5. do the first works;] 'As in the time of thy first love' (ver. 4).

or else I come unto thee,] On the omission of the word "quickly," see vv. ll.; and cf. ver. 16; ch. iii. 11.

and I will move thy candlestick out of his place,] Cf. ch. vi. 14. Perhaps, the metaphor was suggested by the removal from the Temple of the Seven-branched Candlestick, which graced the triumph of the Roman conqueror, and is still visible as represented on the Arch of Titus at Rome. The same transfer of a church's privileges is expressed under other images, e. g. Matt. xxi. 41; Rom. xi. 17;—Christianity herein differing from Judaism, in that this transfer can take place only in the case of a particular Candlestick, (as, for instance, in the case of Ephesus itself, or of the church of North Africa—once the church of Augustine), and not of the Church Catholic: see Matt. xvi. 18; xxviii. 20.

6. But this thou hast,] The Lord, in His Divine compassion, again (see ver. 2) brings forward some good thing which he had found in Ephesus.

that thou batest the works] Cf. 2 John 10: "True Christian charity 'amat errantes, odit errores.'" (Words.).

of the Nicolaitans,] As noted in the remarks introductory to this chapter, the Seven Epistles present a distinctly historical character;—see, e. g. ver. 13. As with the names found elsewhere in this Book,—Egypt, Babylon, Sodom,—so here also Balaam, Balak, Jezebel, are historical names, although they may be applied mystically. In reply, then, to the question, Who were the Nicolaitans? analogy itself suggests the answer:—'An actual sect here denounced by St. John.' Nor is historical proof wanting. Tertullian, Irenæus, Hippolytus, followed by Jerome, Augustine, and others, expressly state that a licentious sect of antinomian Gnostics did exist, whose founder was the Deacon Nicolas, Acts vi. 5:—see St. John's own allusion to the Gnostics in ver. 24. Clemens Al. merely says that this sect misapplied the words of Nicolas—"One must misuse the flesh" (Strom. ii. p. 162); and Dorotheus of Tyre states that Nicolas, "one of the Seven," became bishop of Samaria, and apostatized from the faith along with Simon Magus (see the illustrations of the Paschal Chronicle, ap. Corp. Scriptt. Hist. Byzant., vol. xv. p. 122, ed. Niebuhr). Eusebius (H. E. iii. 29) expressly tells us that the Nicolaitans were a sect who claimed the Deacon Nicolas as their founder; that they were censured by St. John in the Revelation; and that the sect disappeared in a very short time. Ewald too (Gesch. des V. Isr., vii. s. 175) admits the possible existence of this Gnostic sect, even before the destruction of Jerusalem. This accordingly, would be the earliest instance under Christianity of a sect named after its founder. Ewald (l. c., s. 172) also quotes a further statement of St. Hippolytus, that Nicolas was the forerunner of Hymenæus hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.

7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

and Philetus (2 Tim. ii. 17),—ap. T. Lagarde, Analecta Syr. p. 87, &c. As stated above, the historical existence of this sect is not opposed to the mystical interpretation of which the key is given in ver. 14, where "the teaching of Balaam" points to "the teaching of the Nicolaitans" (ver. 15). The name Balaam, moreover,—which, in Hebrew, denotes "he who vanquishes, or destroys the people,"—would thus be the equivalent of Nicolas, as a Greek compound, after St. John's manner:—e. g. Apollyon = Abaddon, see on ch. ix. 11. Balaam, who resisted Moses, is the well-known Old Testament type of Antichrist. Thus the Targum of Jonathan, on Isai. xi. 4, explains that "Messiah will slay Armillus, the wicked one;" where Armillus (= Eremolaos) the final Antichrist = Nicolas, or Balaam (note B at the end of this chapter). St. John himself (1 John ii. 18) tells us: "Even now have there arisen many antichrists." As a matter of fact, the tempters of the Church in the Apostolic age were those who, like Balaam (Numb. xxxi. 16), introduced the freedom of the flesh,—Acts xv. 20; 2 Pet. ii. 15; Jude 11; and thus, irrespectively of the etymology of the names, the licentious Nicolaitans may well be spoken of under the type of Balaam, ver. 14. Zullig, in loc., denies the existence of a sect of Nicolaitans; but he regards the identification of the persons here censured with the followers of Balaam, as certain,—"Nikolaiten = Bileamiten." Archbishop Trench (p. 87), points out that in this verse we have not a mere repetition of the praise bestowed in ver. 2, which would identify the "evil men" of that verse with the Nicolaitans here,—but mention of a further merit which the Lord acknowledges in His Church at Ephesus.

Renan (see on ver. 2) calmly notes on the Nicolaitans:—"Les partisans de saint Paul" (l. c., p. 363).

7. He that hath an ear,] Cf. ch. xiii. 9:—the wonted invitation, not found in St. John's Gospel, to solemn attention; cf. Matt. xi. 15; Mark iv. 9; Luke viii. 8; &c.

what the Spirit saith] Archbishop Trench notes (p. 168): "It is the Lord himself who speaks throughout . . . That the Master is speaking and not the servant is remarkably attested in the fact of the numerous points of contact between these Seven Epistles and the words of Christ as recorded in the Gospels, in the three synoptic Gospels above all:"—see on ch. iii. 3, 5. The Revelation thus proceeding from Christ (ch. i. 1), the Spirit Who inspired St. John (ch. i. 4) guides the words in which it is conveyed:—cf. ch. i. 10.

unto the churches.] The plural, although but one church is addressed, indicates the universal character of the Seven Epistles in each of which this formula occurs,—see on ch. i. 11. Here also Christ declares: "What I say unto you I say unto all," Mark xiii. 37; cf. ver. 23. What follows is put absolutely. This appears from the last four Epistles, in each of which the 'promise' comes before this formula: hence a full stop is required at the word "Churches," and so in vv. 11, 17.

To him that overcometh,] The verb is used absolutely in this formula which is common to all these Epistles; elsewhere it is absolute only in ch. xxi. 7 (cf. ch. xv. 2); and, in the case of Christ Himself, in ch. iii. 21; v. 5; vi. 2. On the other hand, while the strife is proceeding the object of the verb is expressed:—e. g. ch. xi. 7; xii. 11; xiii. 7; xvii. 14; and so in John xvi. 33; 1 John ii. 13, 14; iv. 4; v. 4, 5. This fact sets aside the objection of Lücke (s. 677; see Introd. § 7), that νικᾶν is used differently in the Johannine writings, and in the Apocalypse. This word is characteristic of St. John. It occurs once in the Gospel, six times in the first epistle, sixteen times in the Apocalypse; and elsewhere only in Luke xi. 22; Rom. iii. 4; xii. 21.

to him will I give] The pronoun is repeated for emphasis;—see ver. 17, and cf. ch. xx. 8; John xviii. 11. Christ throughout these Epistles (cf. ch. xxi. 6) assumes for Himself, without qualification, the distribution of rewards (Heb. xi. 6) in the kingdom of glory. Elsewhere, St. Paul writes, "the gift of God is eternal life" (Rom. vi. 23); here it is the gift of Christ (Trench, p. 91).

to eat of the tree of life,] I. e. to "live for ever," see Gen. ii. 9; iii. 22:—"They that do things that please him shall receive the fruit of the tree of immortality" (Ecclus. xix. 19). At this stage, the promise pauses at the pledge of immortality,—see on ver. 11. Note too the reference here, in "the tree of life," to the New Jerusalem, ch. xxii. 2.

which is in the Paradise of God.] See vv. 11.; for the reading "my God" (B, Valg.), cf. ch. iii. 2, 12; John xx. 17. "After the completed victory of Christ, the true and perfect Paradise can only be above" (Stier,

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich, and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

on Luke xxiii. 43);—"The tree which disappeared with the disappearance of the earthly Paradise reappears with the appearance of the heavenly" (Trench, p. 91). The LXX. render by "Paradise" the word "garden" where the "garden of Eden" is meant (e.g. Gen. ii. 8; iii. 1; Ezek. xxviii. 13); and sometimes the word "garden" generally (e.g. Isai. i. 30; Jer. xxix. 5):—it is formed from Pardēs, an Aryan rather than a Shemitic word. It is usually held to be Persian; and the A.V. translates it by "orchard" in Eccl. ii. 5; Cant. iv. 13; and by "forest" in Neh. ii. 8. Elsewhere in the New Testament we find the word "Paradise" only in Luke xxiii. 43, denoting the invisible world in which the souls of the faithful await their full felicity; and in 2 Cor. xii. 4, denoting "the third heaven" where is the presence of God.

Archbishop Trench (p. 95) observes that the various promises in these Epistles "look on to, and perhaps first find their full explanation in, some later portion of the Book:"—Thus, deliverance from "the second death" (ver. 11) points to ch. xx. 14; xxi. 8;—"the new name" (ver. 17) to ch. xiv. 1;—"authority over the nations" (ver. 26) to ch. xx. 4;—"the morning star" (ver. 28) to ch. xxii. 16;—"the white garments" (ch. iii. 5) to ch. iv. 4; vii. 9, 13;—the name written in the Book of Life (ch. iii. 5) to ch. xiii. 8; xx. 15; xxi. 27;—"the new Jerusalem" (ch. iii. 12) to ch. xxi. 2, 10; xxii. 14;—the sitting with Christ in His throne (ch. iii. 21) to ch. iv. 4. The final promise (ch. ii. 11) is in contrast to the doom announced in ch. xxi. 8;—above all, "the Tree of Life," which we meet here at the opening of the Book, forms the crowning blessing at its close, ch. xxii. 2, 14, 19.

THE EPISTLE TO SMYRNA (8-11)

This is the shortest of the Epistles, as that to Thyatira is the longest.

8. And unto the angel] According to Tertullian (De Præscr. 32), Polycarp was appointed Bishop of Smyrna by St. John (Irenæus, iii. 3, 4, says "by the Apostles"); and, as Ussher argues on the authority of Irenæus, was the "Angel" referred to here,—see The Original of Bishops, Works, Elrington's ed., vol. vii. p. 50. As stated in the Introduction (§ 2), M. Waddington proves that the baptism of Polycarp (which most probably took place when he was some years old) is to be assigned to the year 69 (Mém. de l'Institut, t. xxvi. p. 235); and, as the date of the Apocalypse is to be assigned to the year 96 (see Introd. § 4), all chronological difficulty is removed, and vv. 9, 10, represent an historical event as well as vv. 6, 13, 15. Dorotheus of Tyre (l.c., p. 124) states that Apelles (Rom. xvi. 10) was "Bishop of Smyrna before the holy Polycarp." Among its Bishops the "Apostolical Constitutions" give the name of Aristion,—see Introd., § 5, p. 38, note 1.

of the church in Smyrna] See vv. 11.

Smyrna was a populous city of Ionia to the north of Ephesus, at the head of the bay named after it, to the east of the mouth of the Hermes, and on the little stream Meles. Its excellent harbour rendered it one of the most flourishing centres of commerce under the Romans. It boasted to be the birthplace of Homer, to whom a statue was erected in a building styled τὸ Ὅμηρειον; and there was also a Temple of Cybele (Strabo, xii. 3, 27; xiv. 1, 37). It is still the centre of the trade of the Levant. Polycarp was Bishop of Smyrna (see above), and suffered martyrdom there on Feb. 23, A.D. 155, under Antoninus Pius, eighty-six years, as he himself testified, after his baptism.

the first and the last,] A title taken from ch. i. 17, and found again only in ch. xxii. 13.

which was dead, and lived [again];] These words are taken from ch. i. 18. Gr. became dead;—for the idea conveyed by ἐγένετο, see on ch. i. 9.

9. I know thy tribulation, and thy poverty] The words, "works, and," read in vv. 2, 19; ch. iii. 1, 8, 15, are omitted here and in verse 13;—see vv. 11.

but thou art rich,] I.e., before Christ;—cf. ch. iii. 17; Matt. vi. 20; 2 Cor. vi. 10. Hengstenberg sees here a reference to the name "Polycarpus, rich in fruits;" he also sees an allusion to James ii. 5-7.

and the blasphemy of them] I.e., "proceeding from them:"—see vv. 11.

which say they are Jews, and they are not,] As in ch. iii. 9,—"are not worthy to be so called" (Rom. ii. 28, 29; cf. John iv. 22; viii. 39). In this Book, by "Jews" are denoted the people of God,—the true Israel: see on ch. xi. 2. The "Epistle of the Church of Smyrna," giving the account

10 Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

of the martyrdom of Polycarp (c. 12, 13, 17), tells how the Jews joined the heathen in their persecution:—cf. Acts xiii. 50; xiv. 2, 5, 19; xvii. 5; xxvi. 2; 1 Thess. ii. 14, 15. This reference to Jews properly so called (some try to maintain that they were false Christians,) is confirmed by the words which follow:—

but [are] a synagogue of Satan.] Cf. ch. iii. 9; and see ch. xii. 9; John viii. 44; xiii. 27. The term “synagogue” is confined to the Jews (see Trench, Syn. of N. T.), except in James ii. 2; and thus, it represents here the Jewish antagonism to the Church. So, “the throne of Satan” (ver. 13) denotes the heathen antagonism; “the depths of Satan” (ver. 24) denoting the heretical antagonism. Renan again notes here: “Les partisans de saint Paul”;—cf. on rv. 2, 6. See the proof for the date of the Apocalypse founded on this verse, Introd. § 4.

Smyrna and Philadelphia (ch. iii. 8) alone are not censured:—Smyrna, alone of the Seven Churches, remains to this day.

10. Fear not the things which thou art about to suffer:] Cf. Acts ix. 16; Matt. x. 16–31. Why this suffering is to be prized will be declared presently.

the devil] Gr. Diabolos (cf. ch. xii. 9, 12; xx. 2, 10),—the rendering given in the LXX. (e. g. Job i. 6) of Satan, as the “accuser” (ch. xii. 10); not daimonion, which signifies an evil spirit of inferior order (see ch. ix. 20; xvi. 14, xviii. 2), and which is always used by St. John instead of daimon: e. g. John vii. 20; viii. 48, 49, 52; x. 20, 21 (Introd. § 7).

is about to cast] That the Devil was the author of their sufferings is implied in the reference in ver. 9 to Satan, who uses Jews and heathen as his instruments (John xiii. 27;—cf. The Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, c. 3).

that ye may be tried;] I.e., by God's gracious trials, James i. 2, 3; 1 Pet. i. 6, 7 (Trench; Ewald). Others understand the temptations, just referred to, of the Devil as the agent (note the use of iva), and pointing to ch. iii. 10; Luke xxii. 31 (Düsterd., Alf.).

and ye shall have] Or, according to the reading of some manuscripts, “and may have,” see vv. ll.:—so Düsterd., who refers to the limit which the Lord assigns to His servants' trials; Matt. xxiv. 22.

tribulation ten days.] Or, Gr., a tribulation of ten days.] The expositions are various:—(1) Ten literal days (Grotius, Bengel, Herder); or, perhaps, in a wide sense, the days during which the outbreak of the persecution under M. Aurelius lasted, in which Polycarp suffered, Euseb. iv. 15 (Stern, Words.);—(2) a very short period, see Gen. xxiv. 55; Num. xi. 19; 1 Sam. xxv. 38; Dan. i. 12 (Ewald, Trench, and the majority);—(3) a very long period, see Gen. xxxi. 41; Num. xiv. 22; Job xix. 3 (Ribera, Cor. a Lapide), ten standing for a multitude, e. g. ten talents: Mr. White (Symbolical Numbers, p. 115) explains “to the very end”: cf. Deut. xxiii. 3, with Neh. xiii. 1;—(4) on “the Year-day” theory (see Ezek. iv. 6, and Introd. § 11), the ten years' persecution, A.D. 81–91, under Domitian (Cluverus ap. Calov.); or under Decius and Valerian, A.D. 249–259 (Vitranga); or under Diocletian, A.D. 303–313 (Daubuz, Faber, Birks): see note C at the end of this chapter;—(5), the ten persecutions said to have occurred from Nero to Diocletian (Stier, Ebrard). Perhaps (2), with a reference to (1), suits best the numerical symbolism of the Apocalypse; “a day” denoting a comparatively short division of time,—cf. ch. xviii. 8; and see Introd. § 11 (b).

Be thou faithful] Or “Show thyself faithful” (γίνου πιστός—see Thuc. v. 6), cf. John xx. 27.

On the force of the singular “thou,”—that is, the “Angel,”—see on verse 2.

unto death.] I.e., not to thy life's end, but, ‘even to the endurance of death,’ ‘to the worst that the enemy can inflict,’ see ch. xii. 11; Matt. xxiv. 13;—the death of the body, distinguished from “the second death,” ver. 11: cf. Acts xxii. 4. How this fidelity is exhibited we learn from ch. xvii. 14.

the crown of life.] The gen. of apposition,—life as a crown (De Wette),—the life over which death has no power: compare “thy crown,” ch. iii. 11. Only here, and in Jas. i. 12, does this expression “the crown of life” occur: but we have the kindred expressions “the crown of righteousness,” 2 Tim. iv. 8: “the crown of glory that fadeth not away,” 1 Pet. v. 4,—the latter passage clearly expressing the sense, “the garland of victory,” a metaphor fully explained by such texts as 1 Cor. ix. 24, 25; 2 Tim. ii. 5. No emblem is more frequent in the Bible; it was common to the Jews and to other nations. With the Greeks the wreath or garland (στεφάνος) of olive leaves, was the emblem of victory in the public games; with the Romans the victorious general received a garland or crown of laurel. Among the Jews also a similar usage prevailed:—the garland which was the emblem of joy (Ecclus. vi. 31; xv. 6; 3 Macc. vii. 16), was also the ornament at the solemn reception of a prince and leader (Jud. iii. 7), or in celebration of a victory (Jud. xv. 13); and, in a religious sense, the festive decoration of the temple (1 Macc. iv. 57):—cf. Acts xiv. 13. As with the Greeks and Romans, the Jews also used garlands at feasts (Isai. xxviii. 1, 4; Ezek. xxiii. 42); and at marriages (Cant. iii. 11). The garland or crown is the typical representation of an honourable decoration (Job xix. 9; Isai. lxii. 3; cf. Phil. iv. 1; 1 Thess. ii. 19). Hence the allusions to the Greek games which occur (see above), in a religious sense, in the New Testament as metaphors to describe the Christian course,—e.g., in Gal. ii. 2; Phil. iii. 14; here also, and in ch. iii. 11; iv. 4, 10. For the full sense, ‘the conqueror’s crown,’ see ch. vi. 2. Stier sees in the symbolical name of the First Martyr—Stephanos = “a crown”—a prophecy of the “crown of life” which awaited him:—The Words of the Apostles, Engl. tr. p. 138.

In his New Test. Synonyms (p. 76), Archbishop Trench sees here “the emblem, not of royalty, but of highest joy and gladness (Ecclus. vi. 31), of glory and immortality.” Commenting, however, on this verse (p. 109), he explains the word “crown” as meaning “the diadem of royalty” (so also Züllig, l. c., i. 310),—although a different word (διάδημα, diadem) is employed, in this signification, in ch. xii. 3; xiii. 1; xix. 12. The “golden crowns (στέφανοι)” he adds, “of ch. iv. 4, 10, can only be royal crowns (cf. ch. v. 10).” And again “στέφανος is the word which all the Evangelists employ of the crown of thorns, evidently a caricature of royalty, which was planted on the Saviour’s brows” (see below). St. Paul, proceeds the Archbishop, freely drawing his imagery from the Greek games, can describe the victor’s garland as “a crown:”—his culture was Hellenic as well as Jewish; but not so the Christians of Palestine. To them these Greek games were not only strange, but “the objects of their deepest abhorrence” (Joseph. Antt. xv. 8, 1–4). Tertullian’s point of view (Scorp. 6) would very much have been theirs: “And then (he adds) to me at least, decisive on this point is the fact, that nowhere else in the Apocalypse is there found a single image drawn from the range of heathen antiquity. . . . The palms in the hands of the redeemed who stand before the throne (ch. vii. 9), may seem an exception to the universality of this rule; but really are far from being so. It is quite true that the palm was for Greek and Roman a token of victory, but this ‘palmiferous company’ . . . do not stand before the throne as conquerors,—Tertullian’s exposition, ‘albat et palmis victoriae insignes’ (Scorp. 12), being at fault,—but as those who keep the true Feast of Tabernacles, the Feast of Rest, of all the weary toil in the wilderness accomplished and ended. As such, and to mark them for what they are, they bear, according to the injunctions of the Old Testament, the branches of palms in their hands (Lev. xxiii. 40),”—l. c., p. 110. (Hengstenberg, on ch. vii. 9 adopts the same interpretation).

Two points, however, are to be noted with respect to this interpretation of the metaphor:—(1) It is not quite evident that the three Evangelists who mention “the crown of thorns” (Matt. xxvii. 29; Mark xv. 17; John xix. 2, 5) understood thereby “a caricature of royalty.” Their narratives, when examined, seem to indicate that the minds of the Roman soldiery were occupied by the charge that our Lord incited an insurrection against Cæsar; and that, in order to scoff at His pretensions, the soldiers crowned Him with a mock laurel wreath, like that worn by the Emperors (who did not wear a kingly crown), and which is represented on their coins. The “thorns” of which the mock wreath was made, were the numerous and sharp thorns of a plant found in Palestine, the flexible twigs of which replaced the laurel:—see the note on Matt. xxvii. 29. (2) As to the absence from the Apocalypse of images drawn from the range of heathen antiquity, one must recollect the use of the term, ίρις, to denote a “rainbow,”—of which the only instances in the New Test. are in Rev. iv. 3; x. 1,—and which is, surely, an exception to the universality of the rule: see also the instances which seem to be afforded by ver. 17, and ch. xiii. 16. In place of the mythological Iris the Septuagint has τὸ τόξον to denote “the bow in the cloud” (Heb. תִּשְׁבָּע), Gen. ix. 13, 14, 16; Ezek. i. 28;—τόξον being found in the New Testament only in Rev. vi. 2, and there signifying the implement of war.

“The garland,” or “crown of victory,” then, seems to be the sense which must be adopted here. The “diadem,” not the “crown,” was the ancient emblem of royalty; and this distinction it is important to keep in view with reference to the interpretation of Rev. xiii. and Rev. xvii. On this distinction see Note D, at the end of this chapter.

The writer in Smith’s Dict. of the Bible, art. Smyrna, would refer to the custom of presenting a crown to the priest at the end of his year of office; the title “garland-wearer” (στεφανηφόρος), in this sense, occurring in the inscriptions of Smyrna:—see Boeckh, Corp. Inscr. Græc., vol. ii. p. 752, No. 3190, &c.

Zeller has raised a question on the fact noted above,—viz., that the phrase, “the 11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;

13 I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, crown of life," is found in the New Test. only in this place, and in Jas. i. 12. He considers it to be a difficulty which expositors have not answered, 'where is "the crown of life" spoken of in Jas. i. 12 promised?' His conclusion is that Rev. ii. 10, "and no other, is the passage which floats before the mind" of St. James. Forgetting that the idea of the Christian course, and of the prize resulting from it (1 Cor. ix. 24), is, as pointed out above, the idea which underlies the whole teaching of the New Testament, Zeller can find no other solution of "the difficulty" caused by the use of this phrase in the Epistle of St. James, than that the author wrote subsequently to the composition of the Apocalypse—which he saw and copied—most probably before the end of the first century. The author of the Apocalypse, Zeller "conjectures," "first formed the idea of 'the crown of life' from 'the crown' of Zechariah (vi. 14, LXX.);—'the crown of life' standing in expressive contrast to 'the truth unto death,' thus presenting a thought similar to that in Matt. x. 39."—Zeitschrift für wissenschaftl. Theologie, 1863, s. 93. Zeller concludes by adding that in the Epistle ascribed to St. James we have thus gained a valuable testimony to the Apocalypse, and one, too, of the highest antiquity ("wohl durch kein anderes von gleichem Alter zueretzendes").

11. unto the churches.] A full stop is to be placed after "churches;"—see on ver. 7.

shall not be hurt] "in no wise":—much more than a mere negative,—see John vi. 37.

of the second death.] A phrase found only in the Apocalypse:—it is defined to be "the lake of fire," in ch. xx. 14; xxi. 8; cf. ch. i. 18. Natural death is common to all men—the death of the body (ver. 10); the second death is that of body and soul. This expression is not unusual in the later Jewish theology: e.g. "—improbos, qui moriuntur morte secunda et adjudicantur Gehennæ,—Targ. in Ps. xlix. 11, ap. Wetst.; see also Mede, Works, p. 572. "The death in life of the lost, as contrasted with the life in death of the saved" (Trench, p. 111). Note, that St. John, in ver. 10 and elsewhere, abstains from the use of the phrase, "the first death," which we might have looked for, in this context, as the antithesis to "the second death. See on ch.

xx. 5, 6; on which place Victorinus thus comments: "The first resurrection is now,—the resurrection of souls by faith, which does not permit men to pass to the second death. Of this resurrection the Apostle (Col. iii. 1) writes: 'If ye then be risen with Christ,' &c." (ap. Galland., iv. p. 63.)

In verse 7 the promise pauses at immortality,—"the life that knows no ending." Here, it rises to deliverance from the doom (Gebenna) foreshadowed in Matt. x. 28 ("Vita damnatorum mors est,"—August.); cf. ch. xx. 6. Hengst. notes on ch. xx. 14: "The first death has, as it were, two lands over which its rule extends:—(1) One in time, before the separation of soul and body (Luke xv. 32; 1 John iii. 14), the state of those who allow sin to reign over them in this life. (2) The other death follows after the first; and into it they fall who have not been softened by the judgment of the first death:—see ch. xxi. 8. This thought of "the second death," or exclusion from eternal life, is peculiar to St. John,—see John xi. 25, 26; 1 John v. 16, 17.

THE EPISTLE TO PERGAMUM (12-17).

12. And unto the angel] See on ver. 1.

in Pergamum] On the form of this word see Note C, at the end of ch. i. Pergamum, in Mysia; on the Caicus, the most northerly of the Seven Churches, is styled by Pliny (H. N. v. 33) "by far the most illustrious city of Asia" (see Note B, at the end of ch. i.). Under the Byzantine emperors its prosperity declined when Ephesus became the capital of the newly-formed province of 'Asia Minor':—see on ver. 1. It had been the chief seat of the kings of the family of Attalus, under whose dynasty it became a city of temples,—Zeus, Athene, Apollo, Dionysus, Aphrodite, being the objects of worship. Its principal cultus, however, was that of Æsculapius, whose temple, of which the ruins still remain outside the city, was regarded as an "asylum" (Tac., Ann. iii. 63). Here Galen the physician was born (ob. A.D. 200). Its famous library of 200,000 volumes, founded by Eumenes II. (B.C. 197-159), was given by M. Antonius to Cleopatra (Plut. Anton., 58), and was destroyed, with that at Alexandria, under the Caliph Omar. Parchment (charta pergamena) derives its name from Pergamum (Plin. xiii. 11, 21).

even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of "Balaam,"^{Num. 25.}

the sharp two-edged sword;] The attribute of Christ in ch. i. 16 is repeated, and is the basis of ver. 16 below.

13. I know where thou dwellest,] The reading as in ver. 9:—omit "thy works, and," see vv. ll.

[even] where the throne of Satan is:] The notorious idolatry of Pergamum gives this description, repeated at the close of the verse, its historical foundation. The Æsculapius of Pergamum rivalled the fame of Diana at Ephesus, and of Apollo at Delphi. The chief reference, accordingly, is to the worship of Æsculapius whose well-known symbol was a serpent (see ch. xii. 9; xx. 2, and cf. 1 Cor. x. 20); "and who is so represented on the coins of Pergamum, and is called 'Pergameus Deus'—Martial. ix. 17" (Words.). For this obvious sense others substitute simply a reference to ver. 10,—where the devil is represented as the author of persecution which, at Pergamum, was always intense (Euseb. iv. 15), and of which this verse supplies an instance. Burger insists on the fact that Pergamum was the seat of a supreme Court of Justice, from which the first sentences of the Roman magistracy against the followers of Christ proceeded; and hence the expression "the throne of Satan." Of course this aspect of Satan's work is included here. The A. V., by rendering, throughout the Apocalypse, the Greek noun θρόνος by "throne," when it refers to our Lord (e. g. ch. iii. 21); but by "seat," when it refers to Satan (as here; ch. xiii. 2; and ch. xvi. 10), or to the faithful (ch. iv. 4; xi. 16),—obliterates the two great ideas which pervade the whole New Testament; viz., "the hellish parody of the heavenly kingdom" by Satan; and the share of the faithful in Christ's sovereignty: see Trench, On the Auth. Vers., p. 53.

and thou boldest fast my name,] Cf. ver. 1; ch. iii. 11;—i. e., still, at the present time. This fidelity was proved on a special occasion, as follows:—

and didst not deny my faith,] Cf. ch. xiv. 12; the "name," as objective (John i. 12; Acts ix. 14), is parallel to the "faith," as subjective.

even in the days of Antipas my witness,] Or "martyr,"—cf. Acts xxii. 20. Omit "wherein," see vv. ll. Luther, following the error of Erasmus, translates "in meinen Tagen." [A reads ἀντίπας,—and the Copt. renders "et in diebus prodidisti testem fidelem."] my faithful one,] The text here is perplexing: in that which is adopted, Antipas is regarded as the gen. of an indeclinable proper name (so De Wette, Bleek, Alf.) with appositional nominatives as in ch. i. 5 (Ewald notes: "für 'Αντίπας, ist 'Αντίπα herzustellen."—s. 133). The alternative reading gives: "even in the days wherein [was] Antipas, my faithful witness" (so Words.). Ebrard takes the clause as an 'anacoluthon,' and the sense to be: "Wherein Antipas . . . who was slain,"—the latter words having been changed into a relative clause, owing to the addition of "my faithful witness." Düsterd. considers that the Vulgate ("et in diebus [illis] Antipas testis meus fidelis, qui occisus est") represents the true reading:—"and in [those] days [was] Antipas my faithful witness, who was slain" ("und in den Tagen [war] A. mein treuer Zeuge welcher, u. s. w."). Bengel, reading ais, supplies, "Even in the days in which A. did not deny my faith." who was killed] Explanatory of "witness,"—see ch. vi. 9; xx. 4. Of Antipas (= Antipater, Joseph., Antt. xix. 1-3) nothing historical is known. Andreas (in loc.) tells us that "he had read" the account of his martyrdom at Pergamum; perhaps the account of the ancient martyrologies (see Menol. Gr. iii. 5) which state, on his day, April 11, that he was the predecessor of the "Angel" or Bishop, and that he suffered under Domitian:—see Stern in loc., who quotes to this effect Simeon Metaphrastes. Dollinger (The first Age of the Church, Oxenham's transl., i., p. 168) observes that "there can be no mistake here as to Domitian and his persecution being meant." This persecution is referred to by Dion Cassius (lxvii. 15); and so severe were its cruelties that they were noticed by a heathen writer of the period, Bruttius (see Euseb. Chron. ii., ad Olymp. 218; cf. Chron. Pasch., vol. i. p. 468, ed. Dindorf). Tertullian also names Antipas as a martyr ("Item ad Pergamenorum. [angelum] de Antipa fidelissimo martyre interfecto in habitatione Satanæ."—Scorpiace, c. 19).

Arctius, followed by Hengst. and Stier, explains the name symbolically, as 'the opponent of all,' 'Antikosmos;' for Antipas = ἀντί πάντων, just as Timothy = 'Honour God.' And thus, with Cocceius, Antipas is a mystic name under which Athanasius (viz., 'Athanasius contra mundum') and others of the orthodox are to be prophetically understood; and Vitranga (p. 98) makes the mystic Pergamum to be Alexandria, the see of Athanasius.

who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

16 Repent ; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches ; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden

E. Schmidt notes, "Antipas = 'Αντίπαπα." But all this is to trifle with the sacred text.

That a martyr Antipas suffered at Pergamum, this verse renders certain: "Il n'est pas douteux qu'il n'y ait là-dessous un martyr."—Renan, l. c., p. 183.

where Satan dwelleth.] Burger appeals to this repetition of the reference to Satan, after the mention of the martyrdom of Antipas, in confirmation of his explanation (see above) of the phrase "The throne of Satan." [The Arabic] Hippolytus, observes Ewald (see Note A on ch. xii. 3), understands by these words Jerusalem, "because he could find no other as the faithful martyr who had fallen there except Christ. It follows therefore that the author did not know the reading Antipas" (l. c., s. 6).

14. But I have a few things] Few as compared with the things approved in ver. 13,—cf. ver. 4; not (as Luther, Hengst.) "a little matter."

thou hast there some that hold] Even "there" where my name is held fast, see ver. 13.

the doctrine of Balaam,] See on ver. 6. The name Balaam had become typical of any who played the part of a prophet with regard to the heathen, and of a seducer with regard to Israel:—see Num. xxii. 5; xxv. 1–9; xxxi. 16. The history of Balaam is held out as a constant warning in the New Testament:—1 Cor. x. 8; 2 Pet. ii. 15; Jude 11.

who taught Balak] See vv. 11.;—the dative here (the accus., as in ver. 20, is the regular construction) is a Hebrew idiom, as most writers hold:—cf. Winer, § 32. It is not a dativus commodi, meaning "for Balak," "in the interests of Balak," as Bengel and Hengst. argue. On the sin of Balaam, see Josephus, Antt. iv. 6, 6.

a stumbling block] "Properly a trap, or more precisely, that part of the trap on which the bait is laid, and the touching of which causes the trap to close upon its prey; then generally any loop or noose set in the path."—Trench, in loc., p. 118.

sacrificed unto idols,] Cf. Acts xv. 29; xxi. 25; 1 Cor. viii. 10–13;—a temptation (see Trench, p. 119) "which addressed itself exclusively to the converts from heathenism," in whose former existence sacrifice had bound itself up in almost every act of social life. And thus a searching test was supplied from the first of the Christian's sincerity,—1 Cor. x. 20, 21.

fornication.] A reference to the impure character of the heathen festivals:—cf. the reference to both sins, 1 Cor. x. 7, 8; Num. xxv. 1, 2; and see on ch. xvii. 1. Renan (cf. on vv. 2, 6) discovers here a new allusion to the teaching of St. Paul, relying upon an assumed indifference on his part, as shown in 1 Cor. x. 23–27, to heathen usages. This notion is at once set aside by 1 Cor. viii. 9–13; x. 28–31. As Balaam was the forerunner of the "False Prophet" (ch. xvi. 13), so was Jezebel (ver. 20) of the great Harlot (ch. xvii. 1). See on ver. 17.

15. So hast thou also] 'As Balak had Balaam for a false teacher, so hast thou also, &c.,—for the sins to which Balaam allured Israel were a type of the sins (ver. 14), to which the doctrines of the Nicolaitans now seduce thee.' Or, 'So hast thou as well as the ancient Church of Israel.' Or, 'as well as the Church of Ephesus,' ver. 6. Or, "So" (οὕτως) is pleonastic, 'Thou hast also,'—see ch. iii. 5, 16; ix. 17; John iv. 6; xiii. 25.

some that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans,] Viz. the sins to which Balaam had tempted,—eating things offered to idols, and fornication. The sin of Pergamum, described in ver. 14 is here identified with "the teaching of the Nicolaitans,"—see on ver. 6, and note B at the end of this chapter. As this sect had its parallel in the days of Balaam, so also (ver. 20) it has a representative in the more recent case of Jezebel,—1 Kings xxi. 25, 26. Professor Plumptre denies the identity of the Balaamites and the Nicolaitans; although he admits that the latter "arrived at the same goal by a different path" (l. c., p. 121):—viz. by an overstrained asceticism and scorning the body.

in like manner.] The true text gives this sense, in place of the Authorized Version, "which thing I hate,"—see vv. 11.

16. Repent therefore; or else I come to thee quickly,] The insertion of "therefore" (οὖν,—see vv. 11.) is important, as indicative of St. John's style:—see Intro. § 7. (On the word "quickly," see ch. iii. 11; xii. 7, manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

12, 20; and cf. ver. 5. As noted on ch. i. 3, language specially referring to the Second Advent, is associated with a judgment about to fall on Pergamum:—see on ch. iii. 3.

and I will make war against them with the sword of my mouth.] Cf. ver. 12. Many see here a reference to the Angel's sword, Num. xxii. 31; and to the sword by which Balaam was slain,—Num. xxxi. 8; Josh. xiii. 22. It is surely more natural to refer to ch. i. 16, for the source of this metaphor.

17. unto the churches.] A full stop is to be placed at "churches"; see on vv. 7, 11.

To him that overcometh, to him] For the construction, see on ver. 7.

will I give of the hidden manna,] (Omit to eat,—see vv. 11.) Cf. on ch. xi. 19; and also what we read of "the Ark of the Covenant" in Heb. ix. 4. The heavenly food—"Angel's food" (Ps. lxxviii. 25) given to Israel—is here opposed to the idol-offerings of Pergamum: the idol-offering is to be spurned, and the prize is to be "the hidden manna." "In almost all these promises there is a peculiar adaptation of the promise to the self-denial by which it will have been won" (Trench, p. 126). The reference is plainly to Ex. xvi. 32-34 (cf. Deut. viii. 3, LXX.), as well as to John vi. 32-35.

The life eternal, it is true, begins on this side of the grave, where Christ is Himself the true manna (John vi. 51), "the medicine of immortality" (Ignat. ad Ephes. 20). This gift begins with "the new birth unto righteousness,"—with "the first resurrection" (see on ch. xx. 5); but there is yet a higher gift which it hath not entered into the heart of man to conceive,—the manna which is hidden; and this, like that manna laid up in the holy place, the Lord reserves for those who "overcome." Thus He says, John iv. 32: "I have meat to eat which ye know not of;" see also John xi. 25.

and I will give him a white stone,] Gr. "pebble:"—the word rendered "stone" is found only in this verse, and in Acts xxvi. 10. "I gave my vote." On the word "white," see on ch. i. 14.

Here; in vv. 26-28; and in ch. iii. 5, two distinct rewards are included in each promise.

The interpretations given to the "white stone" are various:—(1) The Jewish notion is alluded to, viz., "Cadebant Israelitis una cum manna lapides pretiosi,"—Joma 8 (ap. Wetst.);—(2) "the white stone" was of old the mark of good fortune (Pers., Sat. ii. 1);—

(3) by it the Greeks were wont to give sentence of acquittal: so the earliest explanation, by Andreas; and so Victorinus, Erasm. Vit. (cf. Ovid, Met. xv. 41);—(4) the victor at the games received a ticket (tessera, ψῆφος), which entitled him to food at the public expense; here to the heavenly feast, ch. iii. 20; xix. 9: so Arethas (ap. Cramer, p. 210), Hammond, &c. (cf. Plin. Ep. ad Traj. 119, 120; Ziphilin. Epit. Dion. p. 228). To the same effect Ewald (who is followed by Professor Plumptre, l. c., p. 128) refers to the mention of the heathen-feasts in ver. 14; and sees here the contrasted feast, represented by the manna, which is to be the reward of the faithful (cf. Matt. viii. 11; xxii. 10),—the manna being as yet reserved in the heavenly temple (ch. xi. 19; cf. Heb. ix. 4), and no longer on earth. To this heavenly feast the tessera hospitalis (Plautus, Pænulus, v. 1, 8), the "white stone," admits each worthy guest;—(5) the last two senses combined, signifying justification and election (De Wette, Stern, Words., Bisping): Burger, who excludes the justification which is promised on earth, restricts the meaning to acquittal at the Last Judgment, see Luke xxi. 36;—(6) it was an ancient custom to use pebbles on which to engrave various inscriptions; and thus, without any further significance, the use here is simply to receive "the new name," so Bengel, Hengst., Dusterd., Alf.;—(7) Stier, M. Stuart, and Bisping explain this verse by referring to Ex. xxviii. 36, 37,—the "white stone" being here substituted for the High Priest's golden frontlet with its inscription:—(8) Archbishop Trench, setting aside every allusion to heathen usages (see on ver. 10), accepts the solution of Züllig (i. s. 405 ff.; and so Ebrard, s. 178), premising that the mention of manna in the same clause points to Jewish history; while the priestly dignity of the victorious Christian (ch. i. 6) also points to the prerogatives of the High Priest. Hence, the "white stone" (and ψῆφος in later Greek is used for a precious stone, the gem in a seal ring,) is a diamond; in fact is the mysterious Urim (Num. xxvii. 21), which was concealed in the High Priest's "breastplate of judgment" (see the note on Ex. xxviii. 15; cf. Lev. viii. 8). For this precious gem, the Urim, and to conceal it, the High Priest's "breastplate" existed, "quite as much as the Ark existed for the sake of the tables of the law." Except the High Priest no one knew what was graven on it; and what can with greater probability have been graven on it than the Holy Tetragrammaton,—the ineffable name of God

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

(יהוה)? In Ex. xxviii. alone do we read of stones with names engraved on them: among these the diamond does not appear, for it is allowed that the word Jabalom (LXX. ἰάσμις), so rendered in ver. 18, is not the diamond,—“as though this stone had been reserved for a higher honour and dignity still.”—l.c., p. 133. To this conclusion, however, there exist two grave objections:—

(a) The Hebrew noun (Sbamir) translated “diamond” in Jer. xvii. 1, is translated “adamant” in Ezek. iii. 9; Zech. vii. 12;—and this is the name (adamas) by which our diamond (in low Latin, petra de adamante) was known to the ancients. Theophrastus, writes Mr. King (Nat. Hist. of Precious Stones, p. 39), “does not include the Adamas in his list of gems, and only once incidentally alludes to it (19) as an incombustible substance. . . . The first indisputable mention of the Adamas as the true diamond . . . is met with in Manilius (iv. 926,—‘Sic Adamas punctum lapidis pretiosior auro’); and this poet flourished in the latter part of the Augustan age.” Pliny mentions it as of the highest value among gems (xxxviii. 15); and clearly refers to the mention of the Adamas in Plato’s Timæus (59 B), as being “the germ of gold;”—the connexion of the diamond with gold being an ancient belief, which is confirmed by modern discoveries. The diamond was thus known to be most precious in the age of St. John; and the chief difficulty in conceiving it to be referred to here, or in Exod. xxviii., is the mention of the engraving of a name upon it. The method of even cutting the diamond to a pattern was not known in Europe before A.D. 1475; Mr. King thinks it possible that the art of engraving the diamond was discovered in 1564; but he suspects that Costanzi (circ. 1700) was the first who really engraved one (l.c., p. 99).

(b) As Professor Plumptre observes, there is no allusion to the Urim and Thummim elsewhere in the New Testament; where also not ψῆφος, but λίθος (e.g. Luke xxi. 5; 1 Cor. iii. 12; Rev. iv. 3; xvii. 4; &c.) is used to denote “a precious stone” (p. 126).

Perhaps the old interpretation of the tessera hospitalis, see (4) above, admitting to the heavenly feast (ch. iii. 20), is that which best suits the present passage.

and upon the stone a new name written, which no one knoweth] Cf. 1 John iii. 2; 1 Cor. xiii. 9. See vv. 11.

save he that receiveth it.] I.e., receiveth the “white stone.” As “white,” so also “new” is one of the key-notes of the Apoc.

“A truly Apocalyptic word” notes Bengel:—here, “a new name;” ch. iii. 12, “the new Jerusalem;” ch. v. 9, “the new song;” ch. xxi. 1, “a new heaven, and a new earth;” ch. xxi. 5, “Behold I make all things new.” Here it is the “new name,”—some hold, of God, or of Christ (see ch. iii. 12, “My new name”),—a revelation of glory, only in that higher state to be imparted to the redeemed,—Matt. xi. 27; cf. Rev. xiv. 1 (Trench, p. 134). It seems better, however, to say, in the language of symbolism, that we have here the symbol of a new and transfigured character (Plumptre). And to the same effect, the greater number (Bengel, De Wette, Ebrard, Düsterd., Alf., &c.) understand the recipient’s own name,—a “new name” revealing his new relation to God (cf. Gen. xii. 5, 15; xxxii. 28: see Isaiah lxii. 2; lxx. 15; Rev. iii. 12; vii. 3; xiv. 1),—and excluding the reference to Christ. So Olshausen (on Matt. xvi. 18) identifies St. Peter’s faith with his personality, “not with the old Simon, but with the new Peter:” cf. the new names, “Cephas,” “Boanerges.” Burger compares the giving a “new name” in baptism.

Those over whom “the second death” (ver. 11) has no power, are now strengthened with heavenly food;—they receive the token of their Divine calling, and bearing the “new name” are enrolled in the company of heaven.

With this admission to the Divine Society the first group of Epistles closes.

THE EPISTLE TO THYATIRA (18–29).

The second group of four Epistles begins here. The Epistle to Thyatira is the longest of the Seven Epistles:—see on ver. 8.

18. Thyatira] Thyatira, a Macedonian colony (Strabo, xiii. 4, 4, p. 625) called in old times Pelopia and Euhippia (Plin. v. 31), now Ak Hisar (“the white castle”), was a town of Lydia, on the river Lycus, to the south-east of Pergamum, and north of Sardis. In Acts xvi. 14 allusion is made to its famous guild of dyers, to which, doubtless, belonged St. Paul’s convert Lydia to whom this Church probably owed its origin. “A fane stood outside the walls, dedicated to Sambetha [see note E on ver. 20] the Sibyl who is sometimes called Chaldean, sometimes Jewish, sometimes Persian. . . . In Thyatira was a great amalgamation of races, . . . together with a syncretism of different religions. . . . If the Sibyl Sambetha was really a Jewess lending her aid to [a syncretism of different religions], and not discountenanced

19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman ^b Jezebel, which ^a ¹ Kin. 16. ^{31.} calleth herself a prophetess, to teach by the authorities of the Judæo-Christian Church," the reference to "Jezebel," vv. 20—23, receives a singular illustration if not explanation:—see Dean Blakesley, in Smith's Dict. of the Bible, art. Thyatira.

See also the note on ch. i. 11.

saieth the Son of God,] This title, frequent in St. John, occurs only here in the Revelation. It points to Ps. ii. 7;—as in vv. 26, 27 the reference is to Ps. ii. 8, 9. In ch. i. 13, the Lord had appeared as the "Son of Man."—cf. also His title in ch. xix. 13.

who hath his eyes like a flame of fire,] For Christ's attributes here see ch. i. 14, 15:—cf., too, the allusion at ver. 23 to this verse in the words "He which searcheth" &c.—the "eyes" searching every secret thought; and at ver. 27, where 'the feet of brass' trample to fragments everything impure.

and his feet are like unto burnished brass;] See note E, on ch. i. 15.

19. I know thy works, and thy love and faith and ministry and patience,] See vv. 11:—Gr. "and the love and the faith . . . and the patience of thee."

and that thy last works [are] more than the first.] (See vv. 11.). I.e., are more excellent than the first,—cf. Heb. xi. 4. This praise is to be contrasted with the censure of Ephesus, ver. 5: cf. also Matt. xii. 45; 2 Pet. ii. 20. On the constr. cf. ch. xi. 3; and see Winer, § 53, 3.

20. But I have [this] against thee, that thou sufferest] See vv. 11:—"that thou leavest alone,"—"that thou hinderest not;" as the verb signifies in John xi. 48; xii. 7.

the woman Jezebel,] The authorities for the reading, "thy wife" (which Wordsworth and Alford favour), in place of "the woman" (see note F at the end of this chapter), are insufficient, although the reading is an ancient one. No historical foundation for such a reference is suggested; and Alford merely observes that "the conscience of the Thyatiran Church could not fail to apply the severe reproof to whatever influence was being exerted in the direction here indicated;" and Words. notes: "Doubtless a female false teacher." Hengst. understands "heresy personified." Ebrard and Bisping consider that false prophecy, fornication, and idolatry, are symbolized by "the woman Jezebel:" in these respects Thyatira sinned more than Pergamum which merely allowed the Nicolaitans, after the manner of Balaam, to seduce some; while Thyatira allowed the Nicolaitans a recognized position as a teaching and persecuting sect,—the position which Ahab allowed to Jezebel. This is an interpretation which may fairly be maintained. So also Trench, l. c., p. 139.

Tertullian's comment is: "An heretical woman, privily introduced into the Church, who had undertaken to teach what she had learned from the Nicolaitans."—De Pudic. 19.

Renan notes on "Jezebel:" "Some influential woman of Thyatira, a disciple of St. Paul."—l. c., p. 366; see on ver. 2.

An historical foundation, however, for the reference here to a well-known female, a teacher of error, is suggested by Dean Blakesley on the evidence already given:—see on ver. 18. The evidence for this fact as stated above,—that there was at Thyatira a temple of the Chaldean or Hebrew Sibyl, who was known as Sambetha, and who is here referred to under the name Jezebel,—is very strong, and seems to clear up the meaning of this passage:—see note E at the end of this chapter. The existence of a Sibylline prophetess at Thyatira, in the age of St. John, would thus be in conformity with historical facts; and, this being admitted, Jezebel would be the symbolical name given to this woman. Jezebel's hatred to God's prophets, and devotion to the prophets of Baal, is recorded in 1 Kings xvi. 31—33; xviii. 4, 13, 19. After Balaam (see ver. 14), she is the chief representative, in Old Testament times, of heathenish seductions.

which calleth herself a prophetess;] See vv. 11:—the construction is a case of irregular appositional nominative, as in ver. 13; or, as Winer (§ 59, 11) explains, the words contain a mixture of two constructions:—he renders, "who, giving herself out for a prophetess, teacheth and seducoeth;" cf. ch. vii. 9. Jezebel was probably herself a prophetess of Baal, 1 Kings xvi. 31—33; xxi. 25. Cf. the case of the damsel "having a spirit of divination" (Πύθωνος), Acts xvi. 16:—see also Acts xxi. 9; 1 Cor. xi. 5.

and she teacheth and seducoeth my servants] (See vv. 11.). The faithful,—see ch. vii. 3; xxii. 3. The public teaching of women is also condemned by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

Haupt on 1 John i. 8 (l. c., p. 44) notes that the verb to seduce (πλανᾶν) is found oftener in the Apoc. than elsewhere in the N. T. It never denotes mere error as such;

and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that 'I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as but always, as here, fundamental departure from the truth.

fornication,] The sin also of Pergamum, ver. 14. For Jezebel's impurities, see 2 Kings ix. 22, 30; cf. Jer. iv. 30:—cf. "be that worketh abomination," ch. xxi. 27.

things sacrificed unto idols.] This is the sin condemned by St. Paul, 1 Cor. viii. 10; x. 7—11.

21. and I gave her time] "Time" is not given to Pergamum, ver. 16. The word here used (χρόνος) "is time simply contemplated as such; the succession of moments (Matt. xxv. 19; Heb. iv. 7)."—Trench, Synon. of New Testament. See on ch. i. 3; x. 6.

that she should repent; and she is not willing to repent of her fornication.] (See vv. 11.). The verb "to repent" is used here both absolutely as usual, and with the preposition ἐκ (as in ver. 22; ch. ix. 20, 21; xvi. 11). Besides this use of the prep. ἐκ, ἀπό is used once, Acts viii. 22; and ἐπί once, 2 Cor. xii. 21. On the construction here (with ἵνα) cf. ch. viii. 3; ix. 5; xii. 14; xix. 8; John xvii. 4; 1 John iii. 1, &c.:—(with the infin.) cf. ch. iii. 21; vii. 2; xiii. 7, 14; xvi. 8; xvii. 17; John i. 12; &c.

22. Behold, I cast her] The verb of itself includes a reference to a bed of sickness,—see Matt. viii. 6, 14: "There where she has sinned shall she also be punished." (Trench, p. 141.)

into a bed,] On the word rendered "bed" (κλίνη, Heb. שֵׁנָה, or מִשְׁכָּב, or מִטָּה),—see the note on Ps. xli. 3, where the words denote an entire change from sickness to health. Here the contrary is the case;—cf. 2 Kings i. 4.

and them that commit adultery] The verb is changed; that which is used here (μοιχεύω, not πορνεύω) embracing all the sins specified in ver. 20,—it is the term applied to idolatrous and rebellious Israel (Jer. iii. 9; Ezek. xvi. 32; xxiii. 37). We are to note also that the sin is of those who "commit adultery with her," and that the idea of "adultery" is applied to the beaten Jezebel only indirectly:—see on ch. xvii. 1.

they repent of her works.] See vv. 11.:—"they," i.e., Christ's "servants" (ver. 20), led astray by her seductions; as distinct from "her children," ver. 23. Archbishop Trench, however, understands the chief abettors of her wickedness; "her children" being the less forward partakers in her sin.

23. her children] Her proper adherents; cf. John viii. 44; and see Isai. lvii. 3. That the history of Jezebel is used typically in this passage, may be confirmed by bearing in mind the slaughter of the sons of Ahab [and Jezebel], as told in 2 Kings x. 7. And thus the sect of the Nicolaitans is described (1) as Jezebel; (2) as those "that commit adultery with her;"—i.e., who allow themselves to be seduced by her; (3) as "her children," who perpetuate her immoral practices (Ebrard):—see on ver. 20.

with death;] A general threat of signal doom. Hengst. refers to the death of the adulteress, Lev. xx. 10; Ezek. xvi. 40: Bengel, Ewald, &c. to pestilence, cf. ch. vi. 8; xviii. 8—"pestilence" (פִּגְעָה, Ezek. xxxiii. 27) being generally rendered "death" (θάνατος) by the LXX.: see the note on Job xxvii. 15. Others refer to the punishment recorded in 1 Kings xviii. 40; 2 Kings x. 6, 7, 25.

and all the churches] See on ch. i. 11; ii. 7:—the Church Catholic consisting of its different local churches.

unto each one of you according to your works.] The Lord's own rule of judgment,—Matt. xvi. 27; cf. Matt. vii. 16—20.

24. But unto you I say, [even] unto the rest that are in Thyatira,] See vv. 11. The particular address to this church is resumed with reference to ver. 20, and to the fact of its freedom from idolatry,—a fact which Jewish history (1 Kings xix. 18) illustrates.

this doctrine,] Viz. that of Jezebel.

they which have not known the depths of Satan, as they say;] Or the deep things. See vv. 11.,—omit and. The adjective is to be read here, the substantive in 1 Cor. ii. 10;—cf. vv. 9, 13. The antinomian Gnostics they speak; I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But that which ye have already hold fast till I come.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

known even in St. John's day as Nicolaitans (see on ver. 6), are identified, in vv. 14, 15, with those who hold "the doctrine of Balaam." The Lord, using their own technical phrase, "the depths," here denounces their so-called knowledge (Gnosis,—"the knowledge which is falsely so-called," 1 Tim. vi. 20) as "the depths of Satan" ["Altum est aiunt," writes Tertullian of them (Adv. Val. 1); "profunda Bythi," writes Irenæus (ii. 22, 1)]. St. Hippolytus states that the Ophites (i. e., the Naasseni—νάας δὲ ὁ ὄφης καλεῖται) were the first who called themselves Gnostics, "saying that they alone know the depths" (τὰ βάθη γινώσκουσιν).—Refut. omn. Hær., v. 6, p. 132, ed. Dunker. For the Christian this expression presented a fearful contrast to "the deep things of God," of which St. Paul writes 1 Cor. ii. 10. Archbishop Trench (p. 145) agrees with Hengstenberg in thinking that the Gnostics themselves talked of "the depths of Satan," which it was expedient for them to fathom; and so Burger:—see also Baur, Das Chr. der drei ersten Jahrh. s. 192. On the other hand, Ebrard, Stern, Bisping, and others, make the subject of the verb "say," to be "the rest that are in Thyatira" (see above), who thus express their abhorrence by designating Gnostic doctrine as "the depths of Satan."

However we may explain this, the emphasis lies on the word "depths." There is, first, the "synagogue of Satan" in Smyrna (ver. 9); secondly, "the throne of Satan" in Pergamum (ver. 13); thirdly, here, the anti-Christian perversion which had arisen from these "deep things," or "depths," as a doctrine and a power.

I cast upon you none other burden.] See vv. 11. The ellipsis is supplied by Acts xv. 28, 29, where this very word "burden" occurs in the same sense of abstinence from idol-meats and fornication. On this use of the word "burden" (βάρος), see Matt. xi. 30; where, however, a different noun (φορτίον) is used in the Greek (Trench, p. 146). Stier and Ebrard explain,—'none other than to resist Jezebel's seductions and oppression.' De Wette and Bisping understand the "burden" of suffering implied in their "patience" (ver. 19). Ebrard compares the Old Testament use of the word "burden" (Heb. נִשְׁבָּר) in prophecies announcing heavy calamities (Nah. i. 1; Hab. i. 1);—a meaning which should not be left out of sight here.

25. Howbeit] The word rendered "how-
New Test.—VOL. IV.

beit" (πλὴν), does not occur elsewhere in St. John's writings [John viii. 10 cannot be regarded as an exception]; cf. Acts xv. 28; xx. 23.

that which ye have, hold fast] Cf. ch. iii. 11.

till I come.] Or until what time I shall come:—the Lord speaks of His coming with designed indefiniteness, see ch. iii. 3. The "Day of the Lord," as always in Scripture, not the day of death, is the close of the Christian conflict (Trench, p. 146).

26. And he that overcometh,] Here only is the promise connected by "And" with what precedes; ver. 25 being, in fact, repeated in this verse. Note that in this, the first of the second group of Epistles (see the remarks introductory to ch. ii.), the promise (vv. 26–29) comes before the proclamation; cf. vv. 7, 11, 17. Note also—as indicating how essential to the Christian life are personal purity and holiness—that this fourth Epistle repeats the object for which, as stated in the third Epistle (compare ver. 20 with ver. 14), the servant of God must strive.

and he that keepeth my works] I. e., commanded by me,—cf. John vi. 28, 29; and contrasted with "her works," ver. 22.

to him will I give] The verb refers to "he that overcometh." Under the head "of some particular kinds of anacoluthon," Winer writes, on this verse: "At the head of a sentence there stands a nom. or an accus. with which the verb of the sentence does not agree (casus pendentes),"—l. c., § 63, 2, d. See ch. iii. 12, 21; John vi. 39; vii. 38; 1 John ii. 24, 27.

authority over the nations:] Cf. Luke xix. 17. The reign of the saints is a leading thought in the Apocalypse; see ch. i. 6, 9; iii. 21; v. 10; xx. 4; xxii. 5. Christ here shares his royal dignity with the inheritors of immortal life (see vv. 7, 11, 17); and how and when this "authority" shall be the prerogative of the Church, Scripture again and again unfolds,—Ps. cxlix. 5–9; Dan. vii. 22, 27; Matt. xix. 28; 1 Cor. i. 2. In ch. xx. 6 this dignity is the privilege of those on whom "the second death" (see on ver. 11) "hath no power." The import of the promise here differs from that in ver. 17; although, as noted above, the sins are the same which the Christian is called upon "to overcome" in Pergamum and Thyatira (see vv. 14, 20).

“Ps. ii. 9. 27 And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him the morning star.

29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

27. and] In fulfilment of Ps. ii. 9, which sets forth the prerogative claimed for Christ in this place, in ch. xii. 5, and in ch. xix. 15:—which three quotations are taken from, and therefore sanction, the LXX. version of these words of the Psalmist.

he shall rule them] The Hebrew original admits of the rendering of the LXX. (tirbem, טִרְבֵּם = ποιμανεῖς αὐτούς); although, read with the vowel points of our Hebrew Bibles, the word denotes “thou shalt break them” (terobem, טִרְעֵם). The Greek verb here signifies literally “to tend as a shepherd;” it denotes the whole office of the Shepherd, leading, feeding, guarding his flock,—see ch. vii. 17; and cf. Matt. ii. 6. In Homer, kings are “shepherds of the people.”

with a rod of iron,] The shepherd’s staff; also a royal sceptre, Heb. i. 8. The pastoral staff will become “a rod of iron” in the case of false teaching. Cf. Mic. vii. 14; and see the notes on Ps. ii. 9.

as the vessels of the potter are broken to shivers;] Or, with a rod of iron; as the vessels of the potter are they broken to shivers.

as I also have received from] Viz. in Ps. ii. 9; see also Luke xxii. 29. We have here the prelude to the promise in ch. iii. 21.

28. the morning star.] According to His title in ch. xxii. 16 the Lord here promises His faithful ones that He will give to them Himself, sharing with them His royal dominion (ch. iii. 21). The Star is the symbol of royalty in Matt. ii. 2, and is linked with the sceptre in

Num. xxiv. 17. The beauty of the “Morning Star” is the constant theme of poets:—

“Coelo nitidissimus alto,”

OVID, Trist. i. 3, 71;

“Hesperus, that led

The starry host, rode brightest,”

MILTON, Par. Lost, iv. 605;—

cf. Isai. xiv. 12. And “thus does he who is fairer than the children of men claim all that is fairest and loveliest in creation, as the faint shadow and image of His perfections” (Trench, p. 151). De Wette understands “the heavenly glory,” Dan. xii. 3; Matt. xiii. 43; and Stier, a pledge of the spiritual light which will dawn hereafter,—referring the promise to a future reformation in the Church. Victorinus explains, “He shall have part in the ‘first resurrection,’”—ch. xx. 6.

According to Andreas, (1) Thyatira is Lucifer (Isai. xiv.; Luke x.) to be trodden down by the saints;—or (2) 2 Pet. i. 19 is referred to;—or (3) we are to understand Elijah and John the Baptist, who usher in the First and Second Advents of Christ (l. c., p. 17).

It is more in accordance, however, with the context to understand that, in addition to the promises in vv. 7, 17, Christ now promises Himself, as the sum of every spiritual blessing (Trench, ib.).

The rule of the saints who form the company of heaven (see on ver. 17) commences here.

29. He that hath an ear] Note the changed position of these words, indicating the first Epistle of the second group of four:—see the remarks introductory to this chapter.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. II.

NOTE A. THE PROPHETICO-HISTORICAL INTERPRETATION OF THE SEVEN EPISTLES.

This principle of exposition is very ancient; Andreas, in his commentary on verse 5 (l. c., p. 12), mentions some who had applied that verse to the transfer of the chief jurisdiction from Ephesus (τὸν ἀρχιερατικὸν τῆς Ἐφέσου θρόνον) to Constantinople; and he refers ch. iii. 10 either to the cruel persecution of the Christians by the rulers of Rome, or to the times of Antichrist. Coming down later, the Abbot Joachim (circa A.D. 1200) and the Spiritualist Brethren—as subsequently Mede—expounded the Seven Epistles as prophetic of the Seven Ages of the Church, so that all good should there be prophesied of themselves and all evil of Rome (see Trench, l. c., p. 228). Later still Vitringa expounded the Epistles on the same principle; and he writes (pp. 32–36): “Existimo Spiritum S. sub typo et emblemate Septem Ecclesiarum Asiae nobis. . . voluisse depingere septem variantes status Ecclesiae Christianae. . . usque ad Adventum Domini”; adding—“demonstratur illas Propheticæ non Dogmaticæ esse expendas.”

Mede (“Works,” Advert., ch. x., p. 925)

states his opinion more fully as follows: "If we consider their number being Seven, which is a number of revolution of times, or if we consider the choice of the Holy Ghost in that he taketh neither all, nor the most famous Churches in the world, as Antioch, Alexandria, Rome, . . . If these things be well considered, may it not seem that these Seven Churches, besides their literal respect, were intended to be as patterns and types of the several Ages of the Catholic Church à principio ad finem? that so these Seven Churches should prophetically sample unto us a Sevenfold successive temper and condition of the whole visible Church according to the several Ages thereof. . . . And if this were granted. . . . then surely the First Church (viz., the Ephesian state) must be the first, and the Last be the last. . . . The mention of false Jews and the synagogue of Satan, &c. (Apoc. ii.) in the Five middle ones, will argue that they belong to the times of the Beast and Babylon. And for the Sixth in special we have a good character where to place it, viz., partly about the time the Beast is falling, and partly after his destruction, when the New Jerusalem cometh."

Brightman sees in the first four Churches the following periods typified: A.D. 30-100;—A.D. 100-382;—A.D. 382-1300;—A.D. 1300-1520;—and then in Sardis, the Lutheran;—in Philadelphia, the Reformed;—in Laodicea, the Anglican Church. L. Crocius (Syntagma Sac. Theol., 1636) sees in Ephesus, the "Ecclesia Apostolica;"—in Smyrna, the Church "Martyrumene;"—in Pergamum, "Polemica" from Constantine to Charles the Great;—in Thyatira, "Devota" from Charles the Great to Charles V.;—in Sardis, "Politica" from Charles V. to A.D. 1636;—in Philadelphia, "Fraterna" beginning in his own lifetime, to which the conversion of Israel is to belong;—in Laodicea, an "Ecclesia Tepida" to be looked for hereafter.

According to Sir I. Newton, the Epistle to the Church of Ephesus prefigures the condition of the Church Universal from St. John to the persecution of Diocletian (A.D. 302);—the Epistle to Smyrna, thence to that of Licinius (A.D. 303-323);—the Epistle to Pergamum, the Church under Constantine and his sons (A.D. 324-340);—the Epistle to Thyatira, the Church under the divided rule of the sons of Constantine (A.D. 340-350);—the Epistle to Sardis, the Church under the sole rule of Constantius (A.D. 350-361);—the Epistle to Philadelphia, the faithfulness of the Church under Julian (A.D. 361-363);—the Epistle to Laodicea, the lukewarmness of the Church under Valentinian and Valens (A.D. 363-378).—Works, vol. v. p. 452, ed. 1785.

Stier (Words of the Risen Saviour, Clarke's tr. p. 143) sees in these Epistles the Spirit of Prophecy embracing, in a parallel scheme, the times and history of the Old Test. and of the New, in their entire development:—(1) The primitive world, and primitive Christendom (Noah—Constantine); (2) The preparation of God's people, and of the European peoples (Moses—Charlemagne); (3) Israel in its decline, and the Romish Church as the tolerated transition (Nebuchadnezzar—Hildebrand); (4) The Babylonish period, and the Papal-worldly period (Zerubbabel—Luther); (5) The Persian-Greek period, and the Protestant political age (Alexander—Napoleon); (6) The Greek-Roman period, and the second Reformation; (7) The Advent of Christ, and the Millennial kingdom.

NOTE B. ON VER. 6.—"THE NICOLAITANS."

The sect of the Nicolaitans and its founder are thus referred to by early writers:—

E. g. "Alter hæreticus Nicolaus emersit: hic de Septem Diaconis fuit. Satis est nobis quod istam hæresim Nicolaitarum Apocalypsis damnavit."—Tertull., De Præscr. 46; cf. adv. Marc. i. 29. "Nicolaitæ magistrum habent unum ex Septem qui primi ad Diaconium ab Apostolis ordinati sunt. . . . Plenissimè per Johannis Apocalypsin manifestantur qui sint."—St. Irenæus, Adv. Hæc., i. 26; cf. iii. 11. Νικόλαος . . . εἰς τῶν ἐπτὰ εἰς διακονίαν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων κατασταθείς, ὡς ἀποστάς . . . ἐδίδασκεν ἀδιαφορίαν βίου . . . οὐ τοὺς μαθητάς . . . διὰ τῆς ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰωάννης ἤλεγχε.—St. Hippolytus, Ref. omn. Hæc., vii. 36. Clemens Al. (cf. Strom. ii. 20; iii. 4) and St. Ignatius (ap. Stephanum Gobarum, Phot. Cod. 232) merely deny that the founder of the sect was the Deacon Nicolas.

To the statement of Eusebius in his Chronicle (Olymp. 221) that Simon son of Cleopas, bishop of Jerusalem, suffered martyrdom, in Trajan's persecution, the Paschal Chronicle adds that he was "accused by the followers of Cerinthus, and by those who were called Nicolaitans" (διαβληθεὶς ὑπὸ τῶν τῆς μοίρας Κηρίνου, καὶ τῶν λεγομένων Νικολαϊτῶν.—ed. Dindorf., i. p. 471).

The word Νικόλαος (i. e., νικῶν τὸν λαόν) is identified with Balaam (see ver. 14) after the following manner:—עֲלֵךְ = to destroy, to vanquish, and עַם = people (Witsius, Hengstenberg);—or simply עֲלֵךְ, with terminal ם, = devourer, destroyer (Fuerst, Dietrich). On the other hand, Gesenius thus explains the word Balaam: "comp. ex עַם et עַם non-populus, fort. i. q. peregrinus":—"All three derivations are admissible according to the rules of the language," observes Kurtz (O. T. Covenant, on Num. xxii.; cf. Keil and Delitzsch, The Pentateuch, in loc.). Cocceius (A.D. 1650) seems first to have suggested this identification of Nicolaos and Balaam. Philip of Aquino (ob. 1650), a converted Jew, also identifies Balaam, the Old Test. type of Antichrist, with the Armillus of the Targums,—אַרְמִילּוֹס = ἐρημόλαος = Balaam (or Nicolaos, as above defined): so the Targum of Jonathan on Isai. xi. 4; see Gfrörer, Das Jabrb. des Heils, ii. s. 406. Armillus is the name by which the final Antichrist who shall seduce the Christians to their ruin, is known among the Jews:—see Eisenmenger, Entd. Judenthum, ii. p. 705; and Trench, p. 83, &c. See also Stern, l. c., pp. 141–145; Wieseler, Apost. Zeitalt., s. 263.

NOTE C OF VER. 10—"THE TRIBULATION OF TEN DAYS."

Mr. G. S. Faber (Sacred Calendar of Prophecy, 2nd ed. vol. i. p. 33) thus interprets this prophecy:—St. John "foretells a great persecution of the Church, which he limits to ten days. Now we find not recorded any persecution of which the short period of ten literal days was the precise limit. But we actually find it recorded that the final and pre-eminent persecution, which was carried on by Paganism [under Diocletian] against Christianity, lasted ten complete years. Eusebius (H. E. viii. 16) contents himself with roundly saying that that persecution entirely ceased in the tenth year, though at the end of the eighth year it had begun to experience some remission. But Lactantius (De Mort. Persec. 48) states it, with absolute precision, to have continued from February 23, A.D. 303, to June 13, A.D. 313. Its exact duration, therefore, was: ten years, three months, and nineteen days. Or, in a round number, its duration was ten complete years."

If the latitude of "round numbers" is allowed, the range of interpretation may be considerably extended; especially if the interpreter is to be at liberty to lay down his own theory. Mr. Faber adopts the "Year-day" theory; and considers that each day in the chronological statements of "Daniel and St. John is not a natural day, but a year; and [in opposition to 'Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Marshall, and Bishop Lloyd' (p. 52),—he might have added Mr. Elliott and Mr. Birks] that each number is equivalent to a series, not of years of 360 days each, but of natural solar years" (p. 56). Mr. Birks, who likewise refers to the persecution under Diocletian, observes: "It is notorious that it lasted just ten years" (Elements of Prophecy, p. 374);—i. e., on Mr. Birks' system of years of 360 days, nine (ordinary) years, ten months, and fifteen days. See Intro. § 11.

NOTE D ON VER. 10—Στέφανος AND Διάδημα.

It is important, with reference to the interpretation of future chapters, to fix the meanings of the words στέφανος and διάδημα, and to mark the distinction between them.

The word διάδημα is found in the New Test. only in Rev. xii. 3; xiii. 1; xix. 12: and always denotes "the diadem of royalty." "It is quite true," notes Abp. Trench, as already quoted (l. c., p. 109), "that στέφανος is seldom used in this sense; much oftener διάδημα (see my Synonyms of the N. T., § 23); yet the 'golden crowns' (στέφανοι) of ch. iv. can only be royal crowns (cf. ch. v. 10):"—see, within, the notes on ch. iv. 4, 10; v. 10. In his Synonyms, however (p. 74), Abp. Trench writes: "I greatly doubt whether anywhere in classical literature στέφανος is used of the kingly or imperial crown. It is the crown of victory in the games, of civic worth, of military valour, of nuptial joy, of festal gladness—woven of oak, of ivy, of parsley, of myrtle, of olive, or imitating in gold these leaves or others—of flowers, as of violets or roses (see Athenæus, xv. 9–33): the 'wreath,' in fact, or the 'garland,' the German 'Kranz,' as distinguished from 'Krone;' but never, any more than 'corona' in Latin, the emblem and sign of royalty. The διάδημα was this βασιλείας γύρισμα, as Lucian calls it (Pisc. 35); being properly a white linen band or fillet, 'tænia' or 'fascia' (Curtius, iii. 3), encircling the brow."

The diadem—the cidaris (see Ex. xviii. 35, 36; Ezek. xxi. 26, LXX.)—was the badge of Persian royalty.¹ In Esther i. 11; ii. 17, διάδημα is used by the LXX. as the equivalent of kether (כֶּתֶר): in both places, it is rendered in the A. V. by "crown."² Curtius (lib. vi. c. 6; cf. iii. 3) mentions that Alexander the Great borrowed this emblem from the Persians: "Purpureum diadema, distinctum albo, quale Darius habuerat, capiti circumdedit." See Ezekiel Spanheim, De usu Numism. antiq. Diss. v. i.; and cf. Tacitus, Annal. xv. 29.

¹ In Isai. lxii. 3, "diadem," διδάδημα, is the rendering of tzeniph (צִנִּיף) in the A. V. and the LXX; and in both "crown" (στέφανος) is the rendering of 'aldrak.

² In Esther i. 11 the "crown royal," or "ordinary head-dress of a Persian king" was a stiff cap, probably of felt or cloth, ornamented with a blue and white band or ribbon—which was the "diadem" proper" (see note in loc.). In Esther viii. 15 "the great crown of gold" was "not a crown like the king's (kether), but a mere golden band or coronet ['aldrak]" (note in loc.) The "diadem" is often mentioned in the Apocrypha:—e. g. 1 Macc. i. 9; vi. 15; viii. 14, &c. Among the Hebrews indeed, as among other peoples, the insignia of royalty included—together with the sceptre, the gorgeous attire, and ornaments—the "diadem," נֶסֶךְ (נֶסֶךְ, A. V. "crown"), 2 Sam. i. 10; 2 Kings xi. 12; Ps. lxxxix. 40; or the "crown," 'aldrak (אֶלְדְּרָק), 2 Sam. xii. 30; Ezek. xxi. 31 [26]; Zech. v. 11, 14. Both names are derived from the fundamental sense of "surrounding," "enclosing":—by the former is also described the Selden (Works, vol. iii., London, 1726) in his treatise on "Titles of Honour," distinguishes the diadem from the crown. The diadem, he writes, "was no other than only a fillet of silk, linen, or some such thing. Nor appears it that any other kind of crown was used for a royal ensign, except only in some kingdoms of Asia, but this kind of fillet, until the beginning of Christianity in the Roman Empire" (§ 8, c. 2, p. 249). "The coins of the old kings of Sicily . . . have their heads circled with this fillet or diadem . . . Neither was Alexander's using of a diadem by that name singly, taken to be at all strange to his Macedonians, but the using of just such a one as the Persian kings had, and the wearing it upon his causia or Macedonian cap in such fashion as it was like the Persian cidaris. So must Justin be understood where he says: 'habitum regum Persarum et diadema insolitum ante regibus Macedonicis, velut in leges eorum quos vicerat transiret, assumit' (Hist. xii.)"—ib., p. 254.

Selden having referred to the probable use of the diadem by the early Roman kings, and to coins of the age of Pompey, observes that his "testimonies" shew "that the Romans at that time conceived (as other nations) this diadem or fillet to be the proper ensign of a king, and therefore endured not the use of it while they hated the name of king. Thence is it that he that put a white fillet or diadem upon the laurel of Julius Cæsar's statue was committed to prison (Sueton. Julius, 79), as one that thereby derogated from the public liberty in giving him that which was proper to a king [see below]. . . By reason of this suspicion of the diadem . . the Emperors at first abstained from meddling with any diadem. Caligula indeed ventured to put priestly head-dress (Ex. xxix. 6; xxxix. 30; Lev. viii. 9); by the latter the garland of the newly-wedded (Cant. iii. 11), or of the reveler (Isai. xxviii. 1), as well as the head-dress of the ruler (Ps. xxi. 4; Esth. viii. 15). It is conjectured that together with the anointing of the king—which, like our crowning, typified the Divine consecration, but is not mentioned at each change of ruler—there was also united the imposition of the crown-diadem, as the token of royal dignity. Of this, however, we do not read before Joash: see the note on 2 Kings xi. 12. According to scriptural usage, 'atdrah,' "crown," is employed chiefly to denote an ornament of honour (Job xix. 9; xxxi. 6) for the most worthy, the most noble, the best (Prov. xii. 4; xiv. 24; xvii. 6):—thus Zion is so named, Isai. lxii. 3. As to the form of the Hebrew crown we know nothing. It is conjectured that it consisted, like a diadem, of a circlet, over the forehead, with a broader ornament; and that subsequently it assumed a form like modern crowns. See Schenkel, Biblical-Lexicon, art. Krone.

it on, but durst not use it.¹ . . . None afterward for about cclxxx years openly affected it. . . . The first of them afterward that wore it, and sometimes, perhaps, publicly, was Aurelian (A.D. 270)."—Ib. p. 257. And Selden quotes a passage from Eutropius (Hist. x.), which was misunderstood by a paraphrast of the Middle Ages, as if all Emperors "before Diocletian had used diadems; when clearly none did otherwise than is before noted. . . . Soon after Aurelian the diadem grew to be a principal ensign of the Empire" (Ib. p. 258). Constantine continually wore the diadem:—so "says Victor or his epitomator . . . and the author of the Chronicle of Alexandria; Constantine first used a diadem of pearls and rich stones."—Ibid.

But further, in order to fill up the history:—Plutarch describes the kingly crown which Antonius offered Cæsar as διάδημα στεφάνῳ δάφνης περιπεπλεγμένον (Cæs. 61). "Here the στέφανος ('crown') is only the garland or laureate wreath, with which the diadem proper was interwoven; indeed, according to Cicero (Phil. ii. 34), Cæsar was already 'coronatus' (= ἐστεφανωμένος): this he would have been as Consul, when the offer was made. It is by keeping this distinction in mind that we explain a version in Suetonius (Cæs. 79) of the same incident. One places on Cæsar's statue 'coronam lauream candidâ fasciâ præligatam;' . . . on which the tribunes command to be removed, not the 'corona,' but the 'fascia;' this being the diadem, in which alone the traitorous suggestion that he should proclaim himself king was contained."—Trench, Synon., p. 75.

Spanheim (l. c., Diss. viii.) concludes that the earliest of the Cæsars who assumed the diadem occasionally was Caracalla (A.D. 212); and he shows that Sulpitius Severus is in error when he describes Vespasian as "diademate capiti imposito ab exercitu Imperator consalutatus."

Gibbon (ch. xiii.) thus sums up the facts: "The pride, or rather the policy, of Diocle-

¹ Aurel. Victor (Cæsar 4) says of Caligula: "His elatus dominum dici, atque insigne regni capiti nectere tentaverat;" and in the "Épitome" the same author asserts that Caius actually wore the diadem. Suetonius, however, merely says that he was very near assuming it, and only desisted on the assurance that he had risen above the highest eminence of kings and sovereigns:—see Merivale, l. c., v. p. 463. The words of Suetonius are: "Hactenus de principe; reliqua ut de monstro narranda sunt. Exclamavit, εἰς κόλρανος ἔστω, εἰς βασιλεύς. Nec multum absuit quin statim diadema sumeret, speciemque principatus in regni formam converteret."—Calig. 22. And more definitely still, Eutropius also says of Caligula: "Primus diademate imposito, dominum se appellari jussit."

tian engaged that artful prince to introduce the stately magnificence of the court of Persia. He ventured to assume the diadem, an ornament detested by the Romans as the odious ensign of royalty, and the use of which had been considered as the most desperate act of the madness of Caligula."

To suppose that St. John could have introduced the diadem into the symbolism which indicated the Roman Cæsars of his generation, is to contradict the most certain facts of history: see infra on ch. xiii. 1, and ch. xvii.; and note C on ch. xiii. 3.

NOTE E ON VER. 20.—THE SIBYL SAMBETHA.

I. The existence of a Hebrew, or rather Hebræo-Gentile Sibyl is to be accounted for by the contact of Alexandrine Judaism with Greek literature. Friedlieb (Orac. Sibyll., 1852, Einl., s. xxxviii.) regards "the old pre-Christian Sibyl of Erythræ in Bœotia (known to Alexander Polyhistor, Varro, Josephus, &c., and quoted by Theophilus, Athenagoras, and Lactantius) as being the same as the Cumæan Sibyl of Virgil's fourth Eclogue,—the Cumæan Sibyl being assigned very different names by Varro. Josephus (Antt. i. 43) quotes from the Sibylline Books (Book iii. 98, &c.) an account of the Tower of Babel, copied from Gen. xi. (LXX.)—a passage which had been referred to by the heathen writer Alexander Polyhistor, a contemporary of Sulla. From Judaism this Sibylline literature passed over to Christianity; and Sibylline verses claiming prophetic authority continued to be produced down to Cent. v. These "Oracles" are quoted with more or less respect by Justin M. (Apol. i. 20, 44, &c.), Clemens Al. (Strom. i. 21; v. 14; &c.), Theophilus Antioch. (ad Autol. iii. 2), &c. Celsus (ap. Origen., c. Cels. v. 61, t. i. p. 625) scoffs at the Christians as Σιβυλλισταί. Among Western writers Lactantius most frequently refers (e. g. vii. 15) to the Sibylline Books. Eusebius and St. Augustine do not conceal how little value they attached to them. The earliest portion of the existing Sibylline Oracles is part of Book iii.¹ (ver. 97, &c.), which is ascribed to a Jew of Alexandria. It is assigned by Ewald to B.C. 124; by others to B.C. 169:—see Pusey, "Daniel the Prophet," p. 362, &c.; "Oracula Sibyllina," curante C. Alexandre, Paris, 1869, p. 351; Delaunay, "Moines et Sibylles," p. 246; Edinburgh Review, July 1877; The Sibylline Oracles,—Two Lectures by R. Gibbings, D.D., Dublin, 1878, &c.

¹ In Book iii., writes Mr. Drummond (The Jewish Messiah, p. 13), "we possess by far the larger part of the Verses (amounting, according to Lactantius, Div. Instt. i. 6, to about a thousand) of the old Hebrew or Erythræan Sibyl."

Of the extant collection of the "Christian Sibyllines" Alexandre (l. c., Excursus v., pp. 312-440) assigns B. i. and B. ii. to Cent. iii. after Christ; part of B. iii. (lines 1-96, 295-488) to Cent. ii. and Cent. iv. after Christ;¹ B. iv. to the age of Titus, A.D. 79 ("Vix de ejus ætate ambigi potest . . . sub Tito nempe, vel Domitiano."—p. 326).²

The popular notion was that the Sibyls were prophetesses who uttered predictions of evil as to cities and countries. As these "Oracles" copied Homer, Hesiod, Euripides, &c., so they copied the LXX. (see above), and also the Apocalypse:—thus in "The Woe on Egypt" (B. iii. 317), Rev. vi. 8 is closely followed:

Ῥομφαία γάρ τοι διελεύσεται ἅμμῃσα σείο.
Σκορπισμὸς δέ τε θάνατος καὶ λιμὸς ἐφείξει.

At vv. 319, 512 ("Gog and Magog"), we recall Rev. xx. 8; Ezek. xxix. At vv. 396-400 ("the Ten Horns"), Rev. xvii. 12; &c.

¹ Mr. Drummond however (l. c., p. 13) regards lines 46-96 as "of Jewish and pre-Christian origin;" and assigns this section, from its clear allusion to the Triumvirs and to Cleopatra, "to the period immediately preceding the battle of Actium, 31 B.C." The intervening lines (97-294, 489-828) of this third Book, Alexandre ascribes to the years between B.C. 170 and B.C. 164. Hilgenfeld (Jüd. Apok., s. 75) places B. iii. between 142 and 137 B.C. Friedlieb ascribes this Book to an Egyptian Jew, B.C. 160;—B. v. he also ascribes to an Egyptian Jew in the reign of Hadrian, A.D. 117-138; but Bleek ascribes it to a Christian on account of the reference in it to Nero as Antichrist, and because Hadrian is favourably mentioned: Mr. Drummond, however, questions this conclusion of Bleek, because the opinion that Nero was Antichrist (or Anti-Messias,—Βελλὰρ, see B. ii. 167) might have been "held by a Jew; and at the time when the Book was composed Hadrian may not have begun to display his hostility towards the Jews."

There are in all fourteen Books. Of these, Books ix. and x. are still missing; but these, Alexandre conjectures, are included in B. viii. (A.D. 211), where, at line 217, begins the well-known acrostic on the name of our Lord, quoted by St. Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xviii. 23. B. xii. was printed for the first time in 1817 by Cardinal Mai, who has also published the last four collectively in 1828 in his Scriptt. Vet. Nov. Coll., vol. iii. pars. 3, p. 202. B. xii. is assigned by Friedlieb to an Egyptian Jew of Cent. iii.; and the remaining books to Christian writers of Cent. ii., and Cent. iii., or, it may be, later.

² "Christianorum Sibyllinorum primus habendus est" (l. c., p. 443). "It seems to have been composed about the year A.D. 80, while the burning of the Temple (v. 125) and the destruction of Herculaneum and Pompeii (vv. 130, 131) were still recent."—Ed. Rev., l. c., p. 55.

II. As to the Sibyl Sambetha, Suidas (art. Σίβυλλα Χαλδαία) writes: ἡ καὶ πρὸς τινῶν Ἑβραία ὀνομαζομένη, ἣ καὶ Περσίς, ἣ κυρίῳ ὀνόματι κυλουμένη Σαμβήθη, ἐκ τοῦ γένους τοῦ μακαριωτάτου Νῶε:—Of the ten Sibyls, adds Suidas, the Chaldaean called Sambetha was the first. Lactantius (De falsa Relig. i. 6) states that M. Varro (ob. A. U. C. 727) mentions ten Sibyls, of whom he writes, “primam fuisse de Persis,” and we read in Ælian (Var. Hist. xii. 35) that some count four Sibyls, to which number others add six—ὡν εἶναι καὶ τὴν Κυμαίαν καὶ τὴν Ἰουδαίαν. Pausanias (Græc. Descr.; Phocia, lib. x. 12, Leipz. 1796, t. iii. p. 186) tells us that παρὰ Ἑβραίοις τοῖς ὑπὲρ τῆς Παλαιστίνης γυνὴ χρησμολόγος, ὄνομα δὲ αὐτῇ Σάββη· Βηρώσου δὲ εἶναι πατρός . . . φασὶ Σάββην· οἱ δὲ αὐτὴν Βαβυλωνίαν, ἕτεροι δὲ Σιβύλλαν καλοῦσιν Αἰγυπτίαν. Perizonius (in Ælian., l. c.) notes that this Sabbe is the same as Sambethe—the letters M and B being interchangeable; adding: “Ceterum hæc Sambethe etiam Divinis honoribus seu sacellis videtur a quibusdam culta. Certe ad eam referendum quod legimus in illustri inscriptione Thyatirena apud Sponium.” In Spohn’s travels entitled: “Voyage d’Italie et du Levant, fait aux Années 1675, 1676, A la Haye, 1724”—this Inscription is to be found (vol. i. p. 316); and also in Boeckh, Corp. Inscr. Græc., § vii. Thyatir. Inscr. No. 3509 (vol. ii. p. 839), who states that at Thyatira, in the space surrounding the temple of a Chaldaean deity, Fabius Zosimus had deposited a chest, or cinerary urn (σορόν),—ἐπὶ τόπου καθαροῦ ὄντος πρὸ τῆς πόλεως πρὸς τῷ Σαμβαθείῳ ἐν τῷ Χαλδαίου περιβόλῳ. And Boeckh notes: “Σαμβάθειον est fanum Sambathæ Sibyllæ Chaldææ.” Photius (ap. Montfaucon., Bibl. Coislin., p. 347, Quæstio 160) thus reports the ancient tradition that of the ten Sibyls πρώτη ὄνομα Σαμβήθη, Χαλδαίαν δὲ φασιν αὐτὴν οἱ παλαιοὶ λόγοι, οἱ δὲ μᾶλλον Ἑβραίαν· καὶ δὴ καὶ ἐν ταῖς Νῶε εἰς γυναῖκα ἀρμοσθῆναι. This tradition is copied from the Scholiast on the Phædrus of Plato, 244 B. It was said, adds Photius, that she had predicted the fate of the Tower of Babel; and that, before the confusion of tongues, she had uttered her oracles in the Hebrew language.

NOTE F ON VER. 20.—THE READING τὴν γυναῖκά σου.

This reading is certainly ancient; it is supported by the MSS. A., B., together with several ¹ cursives, among which is the cursive g (“Parham, No. 17”), pronounced by Dr. Scrivener (Cod. Augiensis, p. lxxii.) “to yield in value and importance to no copy of the Apocalypse except the three Uncials” (then known to him,—i. e., A, C, B):—see his collation, l. c., p. 533. It is supported by the Syriac Version and by St. Cyprian. Andreas, Arethas, and Primasius also adopt it. St. Cyprian (Epist. lii. ad Anton., p. 72) writes: “Alio item loco pœnitentiæ tempus datur, et pœnitentiam non agenti Dominus comminatur: ‘Habeo inquit, adversus te multa, quod uxorem tuam Jezabel, quæ se dicit propheten, &c.’” Andreas (l. c., p. 15) quotes the verse, reading τὴν γυναῖκά σου, but thus interprets: ἀλλὰ δικαίως ὑμῖν ἐπιμέμφομαι, ὅτι τὴν τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν αἵρεσιν, τὴν τροπικῶς ὀνομασμένην Ἰεζαβελ, κ. τ. λ. And so Arethas (ap. Cramer, p. 212): λέγει δὲ τροπικῶς ταύτην διὰ τοῦ τῆς Ἰεζαβὲλ ὀνόματος τῆς τῷ Ἀχαάβ συνοικησάσης, κ. τ. λ. Primasius (ed. Migne, t. lxxviii. col. 807) also reads “thy wife”:—“Sed habeo adversus te multa, quod sinis uxorem tuam Jezabel, quæ se dicit prophetam,” &c.

For the omission of σου the Uncials K, C, P testify; many cursives, e. g. 1, 7, 36, 38, 95; together with the Vulgate, Coptic, Arm., and Æthiopic versions. Tertullian also adopts the reading τὴν γυναῖκα:—“Joannes in Apocalypsi . . . ubi ad angelum Thyatirenorum Spiritus mandat habere se adversus eum, quod teneret mulierem Jezabel, quod se prophetin,” &c.—De Pudicit., c. 19.

¹ Tischendorf (8th ed.) notes: “Gb, Sz, Ln, Ti, add σου cum AB al¹⁰ syr¹ And¹⁰ Are Cyp¹⁰ Prim.”

CHAPTER III.

2 The angel of the church of Sardis is reprov-ed, 3 exhorted to repent, and threatened if he do not repent. 8 The angel of the church of Philadelphia 10 is approved for his diligence and patience. 15 The angel of Laodicea rebuked, for being neither hot nor cold, 19 and admonished to be more zealous. 20 Christ standeth at the door and knocketh.

AND unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready

[Ver. 1 [T.R. omits 1st ἐπτά].—om. τό. Ver. 2 ἔμελλον.—om. τά [so A, C;—N, B, P read τὰ ἔργα].—τοῦ θεοῦ μου. Ver. 3 om. 1st ἐπὶ σε [not in 1, but added by Er. after the Vulg.]. Ver. 4 ἀλλὰ ἔχεις.—om. 1st καί. Ver. 5 οὕτως.—ὁμολογήσω [the words ἐκ τῆς βίβλ. . . . τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, omitted in 1, were supplied, after his manner, by Er. from the Vulg.]. Ver. 7 ὁ ἀληθινός, ὁ ἅγιος [so N, A;—C, B, P read ὁ ἄγ., ὁ ἅλ.].—κλείσει.—κλείων [so 1; but Er. altered this reading after the “claudit” of Vulg., although κλείων was confirmed by Valla].—[A, C, P, 1 read ἀνοίγει. N, B read ἀνοίξει]. Ver. 8 ἦν for καί bef. οὐδεὶς. Ver. 9 ἤξουσιν.—προσκυνήσουσιν. Ver. 11 om. ἰδοὺ [so also 1; the Vulg. has ecce]. Ver. 14 τῆς ἐν Λαοδικίᾳ ἐκκλ.—ὁ ἀληθινός [so N, C]. Ver. 15 ἦς [The words of T. R. ὁφελον ψυχρὸς εἶης ἢ ζεστός are not found in the text of 1; but in the beginning of the Commentary we read: ὁ θεολόγος φησὶ Γρηγόριος· ὁφελον ψυχρὸς ἦς, ἢ ζεστός. εἶης is due to Erasmus]. Ver. 16 ζεστός οὐτε ψυχρός. Ver. 17 οὐδέν. Ver. 18 ἐγγρῖσαι. Ver. 20 [A, P, 1 omit (before εἰσελεύσομαι) the καί, which is read by N, B].]

THE EPISTLE TO SARDIS (1-6).

1. in Sardis] Sardis, the ancient capital of Lydia and residence of its kings until Cræsus, was situated, to the south of Thyatira, and three days journey to the east of Ephesus, at the northern foot of Mount Tmolus. Pactolus, of the golden sand, a brook which came from Tmolus, ran through the agora of Sardis, and beside the great temple of Cybele. Sardis was remarkable in antiquity for its riches and its luxury; it was nearly destroyed by an earthquake under Tiberius, but was restored by that Emperor (Tac. Ann. ii. 47). Although of diminished importance, it was still a considerable town (Strabo, xiii. 4, 5); and so continued down to the end of the Byzantine Empire. In Cent. xiii. it was destroyed by Tamerlane. Melito, who wrote a commentary on the Apocalypse (Euseb. iv. 26), was Bishop of Sardis, circ. A.D. 170. See Introd. § 2 (a).

that hath the seven Spirits of God,] For the attributes now ascribed to Christ, see on ch. i. 4, 16. This description is new in form rather than in meaning,—see ch. iv. 5; v. 6. Christ, as Son of God, has the Spirit of God. By the Spirit, the Lord addresses the Churches (ch. ii. 7, 11, 17, &c.); and to a church, as here, “sunken in spiritual deadness . . . He presents himself as having the fulness of all spiritual gifts” (Trench, p. 154). The phrase is important as bearing upon the “Procession” of the Holy Ghost from the Son;—cf. ch. v. 6. This reference to the Spirit, “the Giver of Life” (τὸ ζωοποιόν of the Constantinopolitan Creed,—that Divine Life of which all “the

Seven-fold Gifts” are but forms,—bears upon the spiritual condition of Sardis: see below, “thou hast a name that thou livest” (Plumptre, p. 157).

and the seven stars;] Cf. ch. i. 16, 20; and the note on ch. i. 16. This “is the only approach to a repetition in the titles of the Lord throughout all the Epistles. . . But the repetition is only apparent”:—see ch. ii. 1. In the combination here we have “a hint of the relation between Christ, as the giver of the Holy Spirit, and as the author of a Ministry of living men in his Church,”—for “the Stars are the Angels” (Trench, ib.). Cf. Eph. iv. 7-12; John xx. 22, 23; and see on ch. i. 20. The Lord speaks as about to withdraw that Spirit, and to let that Star fall from His hand.

a name that thou livest, and thou art dead.] Spiritually dead: see above, and ver. 2; cf. Luke ix. 60. Some writers make the fantastic comment that, in the words “thou livest,” there may be an allusion to the name of the bishop of Sardis, which may have been Zosimus or Vitalis.

2. Be thou watchful,] “Become watchful,” which thou art not now: “Awake and watch,”—see on ch. i. 9; cf. Eph. v. 14.

and stablish the things that remain.] The parts of the church which remain (Bleek); or the graces not yet extinct (Bengel, Ewald, Alf.). Others, regarding the neutral as denoting a fallen condition (cf. 1 Cor. i. 27; Ezek. xxxiv. 4; Zech. xi. 9), understand persons,—those members of the Church which yet remain, which are not yet dead though at the point to die;—so De Wette, Ebrard, Bispington; and see Winer, § 27, 5. Archbishop to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. ^{1 Thess. 5 2.} 'If therefore thou ^{2 Pet. 3 10.} shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

Trench (Auth. Vers. of the New Testament, p. 167) writes: "The Angel . . . is not bidden to strengthen the graces that remain in his own heart, but the few and feeble believers that remain in the Church over which he presides." Burger denies this reference to the "few names" or persons, who, he observes, are spoken of in ver. 4. He understands the great majority of the members of this church, who are now sunk in spiritual sleep; and he considers that to rouse them up from their slumber is the duty here imposed on their Bishop.

which were ready to die:] See vv. 11:—things, or persons, as before. The past tense is either "the epistolary aorist," as in ch. i. 2; or it is meant that the Lord, Who is the speaker, looks back to His inquiry into the state of this Church (De Wette).

for I have not found thy works perfect before my God.] Or I have found no works of thine fulfilled, or "complete," so as to reach the standard which God requires;—see vv. 11. See also John vii. 8; xv. 11; xvi. 24.

In the words "my God" (see ch. ii. 7), the judgment of the speaker is bound on to that of God (Alford). In Sardis only which is "dead," and in "lukewarm" Laodicea (ver. 16) is there no mention of foes within or without. How often has the coldness of a church been the result of its repose?

3. Remember therefore] See ch. i. 19 on word therefore (οὖν), found twice in this verse.

how thou hast received] On the thought here cf. Col. ii. 6: note also the perfect tense. The doctrine had not suffered from heresy. Sardis had kept what she had received, but had lost the how,—the manner in which she had once received it (Ebrard, Düsterd.). Vit. De Wette and Hengst. also refer not to the manner of receiving but to what had been received, "qualem doctrinam ab apostolis acceperis" (Grotius). On the other hand,—the Lord is reminding Sardis of the heartiness, the zeal, the love, with which she received the truth at the first (Trench, p. 159). Burger would unite both the manner, and the matter,—cf. 1 Thess. i. 9; ii. 13.

and didst hear:] The tense is changed:—how thou once didst hear: the perfect implies the possession of the truth; the aorist points to the want of works corresponding. Ewald explains, "the receiving" the gifts of the Holy Ghost, which remain; and then the "bearing doctrine preached," which was a momentary act.

and keep [it], and repent.] The present tense ("keep") denotes an abiding habit. Note the use of the verb "keep" absolutely; the word is characteristic of St. John, signifying to "keep" my word, my commandments, &c.:—cf. ver. 8; John xiv. 15; 1 John ii. 3; and Introd. § 7, III. (d), 1. In the aorist ("repent") is implied "a quick and decisive act of amendment" (Alf.).

shalt not watch,] This warning, and that in ver. 18, are combined in ch. xvi. 15.

I will come as a thief,] See vv. 11.; and cf. ch. xvi. 15. He comes not "quickly," as to Pergamum (ch. ii. 16); nor after "a time," as to Thyatira (ch. ii. 21); but unexpectedly "as a thief." The stealthiness of the thief, not the violence of the robber, is implied in the original. The Lord repeats his own words, twice spoken, Matt. xxiv. 42, 43; Luke xii. 39, 40; words which profoundly impressed the early Church, cf. 1 Thess. v. 2, 4; 2 Pet. iii. 10:—see Trench, p. 160. This is a striking instance of the fact referred to in the notes on ch. i. 3; ii. 16, viz. the association of language specially referring to the Second Advent, with some signal judgment about to overtake the church of Sardis:—cf. ch. ii. 25.

what hour] Düsterd. points out that this is not a Hebrew construction (De Wette, Ebrard), but regular Greek;—cf. John iv. 52 and Winer, § 32, s. 205. From the similarity of the warnings here, and in ch. xvi. 15, Ebrard infers that Sardis (and also Laodicea, see ver. 18) will exist at the time of the sixth Trumpet and sixth Vial;—see on ver. 10.

4. But thou hast a few names in Sardis] See vv. 11. Perhaps there is a reference here to "thou hast a name," ver. 1; or "names" may be used for "persons," as in ch. xi. 13; Num. iii. 40; Acts i. 15. Bengel notes that these few had not separated themselves from the church of Sardis, fallen though it was. Cf. Matt. xiii. 30, 47.

which did not defile their garments:] For the metaphor here, see Jude 23:—their spiritual attire, the robe of baptismal purity, Gal. iii. 27; Eph. iv. 24; not the "white

5 He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

Phil. 4.
3. ch. 20.
12.

garments” twice referred to in the context, and which are assumed at the Resurrection,—ch. vi. 11; vii. 9.

with me] Cf. John xvii. 24.

in white;) Hereafter. “In white garments,” “white” is the colour of heaven, see on ch. i. 14:—the ellipsis is filled up in ver. 5.

worthy.] Meet for the robes of heaven, cf. Matt. x. 10, 13, 37:—“There is another very fearful ‘They are worthy’ in this Book (xvi. 6)” (Trench, p. 164).

5. He that overcometh, shall thus be arrayed] (See vv. 11). I.e.,—as those just mentioned; or, “thus” may be pleonastic, see on ch. ii. 15. See ch. vii. 13.

in white garments;) See on ver. 4:—cf. ch. vii. 14; xix. 8. White represents the effulgence of light; and we are reminded of the words “Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun,” Matt. xiii. 43; cf. also Ps. civ. 2; Dan. xii. 3.

and I will in no wise blot out His name] See John vi. 37. The benefit here is personal. We thus learn that a name, though written in “the Book of Life,” may be blotted out:—the result is told in ch. xx. 15.

out of the book of life;) See ch. xiii. 8; xvii. 8; xx. 12, 15; xxi. 27; and compare Ex. xxxii. 32; Ps. lxix. 28; Isai. iv. 3; Ezek. xiii. 9; Dan. xii. 1; Phil. iv. 3 (in addition to which express mention of “the Book of Life,” St. Paul elsewhere refers, without an image, to God’s eternal purpose of love toward his saints, Eph. i. 4, 5:—see Trench, Studies in the Gospels, p. 234). In ch. xiii. 8 we read of “the Book of Life of the Lamb,” and the Lord speaks of those whose “names are written in heaven,” Luke x. 20; compare Heb. xii. 23. Some see here an emblem of “the Divine memory,”—cf. the words of St. Augustine quoted on ch. xx. 12. Others (Vitranga, Schöttgen, Züllig) derive the image from the genealogical tables of the priests: see Ezra ii. 62; Neh. vii. 64.

In ch. vii. Dan and Ephraim, both leaders of apostasy, are omitted from the names of the Twelve Tribes. There is not, however, in the entire Scripture any mention of a contrasted ‘book of death’:—see on ch. xx. 12; and cf. Isai. xlviii. 19.

and I will confess his name] Here are combined the “confessions,” of Matt. x. 32

6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, and Luke xii. 8; “What I say unto you I say unto all.” The Lord is now setting His seal from heaven upon His words uttered on earth. (Trench, p. 168.)

The promise in this verse to him “that overcometh” is threefold, as in ch. ii. 17, 26–29:—(1) the vesture of the company of heaven (see ch. xix. 14); (2) eternal life secured; (3) the public recognition that he is Christ’s. The kingly rule of the saints had been indicated in ch. ii. 27, 28; here their priestly functions are implied in their white raiment:—see Ex. xxviii. 39, 42; Ezek. xlv. 17, 18.

The words—“out of the book of life, and I will confess his name”—omitted in his manuscript, were supplied by Erasmus after the Vulgate: see vv. 11.

6. He that hath an ear;) See on ch. ii. 19. This Epistle is in a great part woven together of sayings of the Lord preserved in the first three Gospels, rather than in St. John’s: e.g. the watching and the coming as a thief, see ver. 3 (compare Mark xiii. 37);—“The Book of Life” (cf. Luke x. 20), with the “confessions,” see ver. 5;—and also the words common to all these Epistles,—so constantly on our Lord’s lips, and yet never found in the fourth Gospel,—“He that hath an ear, let him hear.”

THE EPISTLE TO PHILADELPHIA (7–13).

7. And unto the angel of the church in Philadelphia] This city on the eastern frontier of Lydia, to the south-east of Sardis, on the little river Cogamus, at the foot of mount Tmolus to the north-west, was built by Attalus Philadelphus, king of Pergamum, B.C. 138. No city of Asia Minor suffered so much from earthquakes by which it was nearly destroyed, A.D. 17 (Tac. Ann. ii. 47; Strabo, xiii. 4). To this event allusions have been found in the words “thou hast a little power,” ver. 8; and in the image of a “pillar,” ver. 12:—see on ver. 14. Ignatius writing to this church, calls it in the salutation of his epistle, “Philadelphia in Asia,” to distinguish it from other cities of the same name. Its modern name is Allab Scôabr, and under this name it alone is included in the list of modern cities: it still retains a Christian population; it has several churches, and an active trade.

In the “Apost. Constitutions” (vii. 46) we read: “Demetrius was appointed bishop of he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth;

8 I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

Philadelphia by me"—doubtless the Apostle John, who is referred to just before as having appointed the bishop of Ephesus; see on ch. ii. 1. This is probably the Demetrius mentioned in 3 John 12.

he that is true, he that is holy,] See vv. 11. These are titles which, in their absolute sense, belong to God only, see ch. iv. 8; vi. 10; John xvii. 3, 11;—cf. "Very God, of very God" in the Nicene Creed. The antithesis, according to the well-known distinction between ἀληθινός here (a word which is found in the New Testament in Luke xvi. 11; in 1 Thess. i. 9; three times in the Epistle to the Hebrews; and twenty-three times in St. John's writings, of which ten cases occur in this Book), and ἀληθής (not found in the Apocalypse),—is not between the true (John iii. 33) and the false (Titus i. 2), but between the perfect (John i. 9) and the imperfect (see on ver. 14). Hence no contrast is intended here between "truth" and "falsehood," as in ver. 9.

The title "holy" is emphatically ascribed to Christ in John vi. 69 (according to the true reading, "the Holy One of God"), and finds its explanation in John x. 36. The fundamental idea of ἅγιος—"a word of rarest use in Attic Greek"—is "separation," "consecration and devotion to the service of Deity." Thus the Jews were "holy," for God is "holy" (Lev. xix. 2). Hence the 'Trisagion' of ch. iv. 8. For the word ὁσῖος, which also denotes "holy," see on ch. xv. 4:—cf. Trench, Syn. of the N. T., p. 313.

be that hath the key of David,] The "key" is the symbol of authority,—see on ch. i. 18. Christ's authority is exercised over the kingdom of God—to open its doors and invite all to enter—as being supreme Lord, and heir of the throne of David;—see ch. v. 5; xxii. 16, and cf. Luke i. 32. Of His own right the Lord "hath" this key; which was only entrusted to, or "laid upon the shoulder" of Eliakim (2 Kings xviii. 18), in that passage of Isaiah (xxii. 20–22) which is plainly referred to here. Eliakim had been installed as steward of the king's household; and "the key" had been committed to him as the symbol of his office. The historical bearing of this reference falls into the background. The words are chosen because they describe, in terms which the prophecy had made familiar, that aspect of the highest sovereignty which was now most needed (cf. Plumptre, p. 177). David is ever the type of the supreme ruler of the Theocracy—Jer. xxx. 9; Ezek. xxxiv. 23; xxxvii. 24; Hos. iii. 5. The "house of David" is, in the Old Test., the typical designation of the "Kingdom of David" (Ps. cxxii. 5; Isai. vii. 2); and the true kingdom of David is the Kingdom of Jesus Christ—the Church of God of which the Lord Himself has "the keys," and the power of admitting thereto (Matt. xvi. 19; xxviii. 18).

be that openeth,] There is more than one explanation, not altogether satisfactory, here: such as a reference to ch. i. 18;—or to the power of opening out the sense of Scripture, ch. v. 9; Luke xi. 52; xxiv. 32;—or, nearly to the same effect, that of Irenæus (iv. 20, 2) who applies these words to the opening of the Sealed Book, ch. v. 4, 5.

and no man shall shut, and that shutteth, and no man openeth;] (See vv. 11). "He has not so committed the keys . . . to any other . . . but that He still retains the highest administration of them in His own hands." Trench, p. 173.

The attributes which the Lord here ascribes to Himself are not taken so fully from ch. i. as in the case of the other addresses. In ch. i. 13, 14, He appears as the Holy One, but is not so named;—in ch. i. 18, He holds the "keys," but not in the same sense as in this verse. Hengst., however, takes the sense to be the same: "To whomsoever He opens with the key of David, for him He shuts death and Hell."

8. I know thy works] Either put absolutely, conveying comfort, and without reference to the words which follow, "because thou hast" &c.;—or, as Bengel, De Wette, Ewald, explain, with that reference, and defining "the works," the intervening clause being parenthetical, viz.—"I know thy works; . . . that thou hast," as in vv. 1, 15: cf. ch. ii. 2.

(behold, I have set before thee a door opened, which no man can shut),] (I.e., I have given, Gr. δέδωκα. See vv. 11).

A metaphor often used by St. Paul,—Acts xiv. 27; 1 Cor. xvi. 9; 2 Cor. ii. 12; Col. iv. 3. Christ, Who "hath the key of David," has opened the door for the Gentiles of Philadelphia; and, in general, for the missions of the Church,—see ver. 9; cf. Matt. xi. 12; Col. i. 13. Some take the words to mean "entrance into the joy of thy Lord," Matt. xxv. 21; 2 Pet. i. 11; others, "into the hidden meaning of Scripture;" &c.

9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

Ebrard connects "behold" here, with "behold" which occurs twice in ver. 9:—(1) the blessing which the Lord has given; (2) the opposition which He gives; (3) the victory which He will give.

On the redundant pronoun here, frequent in relative sentences, cf. ch. vii. 2, 9; xx. 8: see Winer, § 22, 4, a.

that thou hast] Or, because. Either "I know thy works . . . that thou hast," &c., as in ver. 1; or—without the parenthesis—giving the reason of the privilege just stated.

a little power,] Thus rendered, the words express one of three good qualities, here stated, which mark this Church. The majority, however (omitting the indefinite article), understand "thou hast little power, and yet," &c.:—"they were poor in number and in wealth compared with the Jews."

and didst keep my word,] See on ver. 3.

and didst not deny my name.] The tenses denote a past occasion in which Philadelphia had been faithful: or, "and yet thou didst," &c.,—see above.

9. Behold, I give of the synagogue of Satan,] "The partitive genitive" (Winer, § 59, s. 466),—"certain persons from out of the synagogue." The present tense "I give" is taken up below in the formal future "I will make." Dusterd. rejects the senses "patiar" (Wolf); "I give to thee" (Hengst.). Not false Christians, but Jews are meant; Jews of the class referred to in ch. ii. 9. See Introd. § 4, b.

of them which say they are Jews, and, they are not,] In apposition with "the synagogue of Satan:"—see on ch. ii. 9.

but do lie; behold, I will make them] Viz. "them which say."

to come and worship before thy feet,] The tenses here are in the future, see vv. 11,—a construction characteristic of St. John, "that they shall come and worship;" cf. ch. xiii. 12; John xvii. 2: see Winer, s. 258, and Introd. § 7, iv. (f). There is a reference to the fulfilment of Isai. lx. 14 (cf. Zech. viii. 20–23); and to "the opened door," ver. 8. What is said in Isai. xlix. 23, is here said of certain of the Jews. In this one instance Israel appears to submit to the Cross. Commentators of a certain school place the restoration of the Jews under the sixth Vial, where we meet again the warnings of this chapter, vv. 4, 18;

see ch. xvi. 15. Archbishop Trench (p. 177) refers to St. Ignatius (ad Philadelph., 6), whose words imply the actual presence in this Church of Jewish converts, who preached the faith which once they persecuted.

and to know that I have loved thee.] The "I" is emphatic. Note here the form ἡγάπησα, and see on ver. 19 where a different verb occurs expressing greater tenderness and personal affection; cf. John xxi. 16, 17; and Trench, Syn. of N. T., p. 38. Dusterd. illustrates the strictly aoristic sense ("that I loved thee") by 1 John iv. 10, 11.

10. didst keep the word of my patience,] To "my word" (ver. 8) is added "of my patience"; "the whole Gospel, teaching as it does the need of a patient waiting for Christ" (Trench);—or understand "the word" enjoining that patience which belongs to me and mine, ch. i. 9 (De Wette); as Mr. Green translates, "My patience-enjoining word;"—or, the special saying of Christ enjoining patience, Matt. x. 22; Luke viii. 15.

from the hour of trial, that [hour, which is to come on the whole world, Or, the hour of temptation which is about to come. For the language and meaning here, cf. John xvii. 15: see also ch. vii. 3, 14. The reference is to the predicted trial, Matt. xxiv. 21, &c.; and so it is said, ver. 11, "I come quickly." Philadelphia, notes Ebrard on ch. xvi. 15, is to exist under the sixth Trumpet; but shall be preserved from the hour of trial which is to come "on the whole world" (ch. xvi. 14):—its "trial" or "temptation" is to be that of the sixth Trumpet and sixth Vial:—see on ver. 3. (World, or inhabited earth,—οἰκουμένη).

to try them] Or to tempt them.

that dwell on the earth.] Meaning, according to the usage of the Apocalypse (ch. vi. 10; viii. 13; xi. 10; xiii. 8, 14), the mass of mankind as contrasted with believers redeemed from "every people and tongue," ch. v. 9 (Dusterd.); the redeemed being "contemplated as already seated in heavenly places with Christ" (Trench). They "that dwell on the earth" are opposed to those "that dwell in the tabernacle" in heaven,—cf. ch. xii. 12; xiii. 6. Züllig sees the fulfilment of this promise in ch. vii. 1, &c.

Here only, in the Seven Epistles, is there some degree of consent among commenta-

11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out:

and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name.

tors that Antichrist is spoken of:—see “I come quickly,” ver. 11; and cf. Andreas in loc. Different writers discover here references to the persecutions under Nero, or Domitian, or Trajan (Düsterd. in loc.). Ebrard understands the time of the sixth Trumpet and Vial: see above.

11. I come quickly:] (Omit “Behold,”—see vv. 11.). This key-note of the Apoc.—at times (ch. ii. 16) a word of fear—is here a word of comfort; cf. ch. xxii. 7, 12, 20 (Trench, p. 179):—it is an exhortation, too, the only one that Philadelphia needed. The expression has also reference to “the hour” in ver. 10. As to the distinction between absolute and relative duration, see on ch. i. 1; viii. 1.

hold fast that which thou hast,] Viz. that strength and faithfulness described in vv. 8–10:—Ephesus, too, “had” a hatred of the works of the Nicolaitans, ch. ii. 6. This possession each one must “hold fast” in order to retain the “crown,” ch. ii. 25; Matt. xxiv. 13.

that no man take thy crown.] See on ch. ii. 10. De Wette, followed by Archbishop Trench and others, explains, “to take away,” “wegnehmen,” “auferre,” as in ch. vi. 4. Archbishop Trench regards the words as exactly equivalent to Col. ii. 18. Others, with the Vulgate, “accipiat,” “receive” (cf. Matt. vii. 8; Luke xi. 10; John xvi. 24), i.e., “in thy stead, the place of glory designed for thee,” as David succeeded Saul (1 Sam. xvi. 1),—or Matthias Judas (Acts i. 20, 25),—or the Gentiles the Jews (Rom. xi. 11): cf. ver. 5. On the word “crown” see note D. on ch. ii. 10.

12. He that overcometh, him will I make] For the constr. cf. on ch. ii. 26.

a pillar] A promise of permanence is conveyed by this expression, not a title of dignity as in Gal. ii. 9 (Trench). The “Candlestick” (ch. ii. 5) may be removed; the pillar remains fixed. Düsterd. (with Bengel, Ewald, Hengst., Ebrard) takes the words as referring to future glory,—the community of believers forming the Temple of God (see ch. xiii. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 5), and the individual saints appearing as pillars (Gal. ii. 9),—an explanation not very different from the preceding. Various other references are given: Eichhorn refers to Isai. xxii. 23;—Stern to Jer. i. 18;—Vitranga, Züllig, &c. to 1 Kings vii. 15, 21; Jer. lii. 20; and they compare the two pillars called “Ja- chin” and “Boaz,” names which probably signify ‘God will establish in strength, or firmly, the Temple and the religion connected with it’ (see the note on 1 Kings vii. 21). Both the names signify permanence, notes Words., who adds, that in the ancient temples of Asia to which St. John wrote, and of Greece, pillars of temples were often sculptured in human shape, such as the Caryatides at Athens, and the Atlantes still visible at Pompeii.

This figure of permanence may be used in contrast to the earthquakes frequent at Philadelphia, see on ver. 7. Compare the remarkable words of Gibbon, quoted on ver. 13.

in the temple of my God,] Properly “Sanctuary,” Naos; the ‘Temple,’ in its more limited and more august sense, as the ‘habitation’ (ναός, babito) of God; into which Zacharias entered to burn incense (Luke i. 9), but into which the Lord, not being of the Levitical Priesthood, never entered during His ministry on earth (Trench, Synon., p. 11):—see on ch. xi. 1, 2; and cf. ch. vii. 15; xxi. 22; John ii. 19–21. Note,—The word Hieron (ιερόν, templum) which signifies the whole compass of the sacred enclosure, and which is frequently found in the Fourth Gospel, does not occur in the Apocalypse. When the Apocalypse was written, the ‘Temple’ had been destroyed for more than a quarter of a century. There is no Temple indeed in the heavenly Jerusalem (ch. xxi. 22), but the City is all Temple. The saints are no longer the stones merely, as in the imagery of the Church Militant (1 Cor. iii. 16; Eph. ii. 19–22), but the pillars themselves;—cf. Alf. in loc.

The image of the pillar is now dismissed, and “the Conqueror” alone remains.

The Visions with which the Apocalypse closes are anticipated here,—the spiritual Temple, the Holy City, the impress of the Divine Name:—see ch. xxi. 10, 22; xxii. 4.

and he shall go out thence no more:] I.e., from the heavenly Temple. Cf. the thought expressed in John viii. 35; x. 28, 29; Matt. xxv. 10.

and I will write upon him] Not upon the pillar (Grotius, De Wette), but upon the conqueror shall be written three names:—

(1) the name of my God,] Düsterd. (after Ewald, &c.) suggests a reference to the High Priest’s frontlet (Ex. xxviii. 36–38), illustrating this by the seal on the brow of the faithful,

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

14 And unto the angel of the church ¹of the Laodiceans write; ¹Or, is ^{Laodicea} These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God;

ch. vii. 3; ix. 4; xiv. 1; xxii. 4;—this dignity being common to all who share in the royal priesthood, ch. i. 6; the new Jerusalem,] Omit which is. In ch. xxi. 2, 10, the title "holy" is given it, as in Matt. iv. 5; xxvii. 53; (cf. Neh. xi. 1; Isai. xlvi. 2); but this title the earthly city had forfeited for ever. In Gal. iv. 26, we read of "Jerusalem which is above;"—in Heb. xii. 22 of "the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem" (Trench, p. 184).

(2) and the name of the city of my God,] Viz. "Jehovah-shammah," "the Lord is there," Ezek. xlvi. 35:—cf. ch. xxi. 11, 23. While on earth the citizenship of the saints (Phil. iii. 20) is latent; hereafter, thus sealed, it is their right to enter in by the gates into the City, ch. xxii. 14 (Trench, p. 183). Professor Plumptre (p. 187) prefers the name "Jehovah-Tsidkenu," "The Lord our Righteousness" which was to be the name of the City in its glorified state, no less than of the Anointed King (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16).

St. John uses, in his Gospel, only the Greek and civil form of the name Jerusalem; in the Apocalypse always the Hebrew and more holy appellation, as writing of the Heavenly City which is described in ch. xxi. 2, 10; xxii. 5;—see Introd. § 7, iv. (a).

which cometh down out of heaven from my God,] The construction is an instance of "irregular apposition,"—Winer, § lix. 11. In ch. xxi. 2, the City is the glory of "the new earth;" and its spiritual character is here represented by its descending from God. Its citizens are to bear its name when finally transferred to heaven.

Archbishop Trench happily quotes on these words the lines of Bernard of Clugny in his Laus Patrie Celestis:—

"Me receptet Sion illa, Sion, David urbs tranquilla, Cujus faber Auctor lucis, Cujus portæ lignum Crucis," &c.

(3) and mine own new name.] Omit the words in italics, I will write upon him. The uncommunicated Name, ch. xix. 12 (cf. ch. ii. 17),—not that in ch. xix. 13, or 16:—see on ch. vii. 3. The name 'Αρνίον, "the Lamb,"—which is applied to Christ 28 times in the Revelation, and not elsewhere,—has been suggested as being "the new name" here (see Plumptre, p. 188):—but for this suggestion there seems to be no sufficient reason.

In these three names, we seem to have the baptismal formula of Heaven: the Name of God the Father;—the Name of the Son;—the Name of this City, or Tabernacle, built up of the redeemed as "living stones," "the Temple [ναός] of the Holy Ghost" (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19; 1 Pet. ii. 5):—cf. ch. xiii. 6.

The expression "my God" occurs four times in this verse,—see ver. 2.

13. He that hath an ear] See on ch. ii. 7.

Gibbon having touched upon the present condition of the other six Churches, writes:—"Philadelphia alone has been saved by prophecy or courage. At a distance from the sea, forgotten by the Emperors, encompassed on all sides by the Turks, her valiant citizens defended their religion and freedom above fourscore years, and at length capitulated with the proudest of the Ottomans. Among the Greek colonies and churches of Asia, Philadelphia is still erect—a column in a scene of ruins—a pleasing example that the paths of honour and safety may sometimes be the same."—Decline and Fall, ch. lxiv.

THE EPISTLE TO LAODICEA (14–22).

14. in Laodicea] (See vv. 11). Laodicea, at first Diospolis (its tutelary deity was Zeus), then Rhœas (Plin. v. 29), was lastly named by Antiochus ii., one of the Seleucid kings (B.C. 261–246), after his wife Laodice. The modern Turkish name is Eski-Hissar, "the Old Castle." It was situated on the Lycus a tributary of the Mæander, in the south-west of Phrygia, not far from Colossæ and Hierapolis (Col. iv. 13), and forming with the other Apocalyptic Churches a sort of semicircle round Ephesus. "Laodicea and Hierapolis stand face to face, being situated respectively on the southern and northern sides of the valley [of the Lycus] at a distance of six miles, and within sight of each other, the river lying in the open plain between the two. The site of Colossæ is somewhat higher up the stream."—Bishop Lightfoot, Epp. to the Col. and to Philem., p. 2. A powerful Jewish colony seems to have existed in Laodicea, Col. ii. 1; iv. 13–16. It was specially called "Laodicea on the Lycus" (Λ. ἡ ἐπὶ Λύκῳ) to distinguish it from several other cities of the same name. Under the Romans it became one of the important seats of commerce in the interior of Asia Minor; its trade consisting in the exchange of money, and in woollen manufactures (Cic. ad Div. ii. 17; Strabo, xii. 8, 16: the "raven-blackness" of its fleeces being much esteemed:—see Lightfoot, l.c., p. 4; cf. vv. 17, 18. Of Ephesus and Laodicea alone among the Seven Churches do we read elsewhere in the New Testament; see the references above, and note B, on ch. i. 4. The cities in the valley of the Lycus were exposed to constant danger from earthquakes; and similar catastrophes befel the neighbouring cities of Sardis, and Smyrna, and Philadelphia (Tac. Ann. ii. 7; Strabo, xii. 8; Cbron. Pasch. i. p. 489). Laodicea the flourishing and the populous was laid in ruins about A.D. 63. Tacitus places the earthquake in the year 60. ["Eodem anno ex inlustribus Asiæ urbibus Laodicea, tremore terræ prolapso, nullo a nobis remedio propriis opibus revaluit."—Ann., xiv. 27]. As here stated, while other cities, prostrated by a like visitation, had sought relief from Rome, "it was the glory of Laodicea that she alone neither courted nor obtained assistance but recovered by her own resources," and rose again with more than her usual splendour (Lightfoot, l.c., p. 43). In these facts we have the best illustration of vv. 17, 18. Neither metropolitan Ephesus, nor imperial Sardis could lay claim to such independence: "No one would dispute her boast that she had 'gotten riches and had need of nothing'" (ib., p. 44). Subsequently, at the outset of the Paschal controversy, A.D. 165, her bishop Sagaris, a name held in great honour, fell a martyr at Laodicea (Euseb. iv. 26); and the fact that Laodicea became the head-quarters of this controversy (see Hefele, Concil. Gesch., i. 297 ff.) testifies as to the prominence of this Church at the end of Cent. ii. From century to century, however, its influence declined. Bishop Lightfoot sums up its history (l.c., p. 64, &c.):—Having accepted the Nicene decisions in the Arian controversy (Labbe, Concil., t. ii. p. 236), Laodicea, through its bishop, joined in the condemnation of Athanasius at the synod of Philippopolis, A.D. 347 (Labbe, ib., p. 744). At the "Robbers' Synod" of Ephesus (A.D. 449) its bishop adopted the policy of Dioscorus, and the opinions of the heretic Eutyches. Two years later, at Chalcedon (A.D. 451) the bishop of Laodicea sided with the orthodox party, and condemned the Eutychian heresy which he had so lately supported (Labbe, l.c. iv. p. 82, &c.), and the same vacillation and infirmity of purpose characterized this Church amid the religious troubles of later times, e.g. in the matter of Photius and the Eighth General Council (see Hefele, Concil. Gesch., iv. s. 378). "At length the name of this primitive Apostolic church passes wholly out of sight. The Turkish conquest pressed with more than common severity on these districts. When the day of visitation came, the church was taken by surprise . . . The long impending doom overtook her, and the golden Candlestick was removed for ever from the Eternal Presence."—Lightfoot, ib., p. 72. For the remains of Christian churches at

Laodicea, see Fellows, Asia Minor, p. 282; Pococke, Description of the East, ii. p. 74.

The 'Apostolical Constitutions' (vii. 46; see note F on ch. i. 20) name Archippus as first bishop of Laodicea; and St. Paul's words (Col. iv. 17) have suggested that the Archippus there spoken of, may have been the negligent "Angel" here addressed. The name Archippus also occurs, Philem. 2; and were he, as is most probable, son of Philemon, a principal convert in the Colossian church,—and whose son might well have been chosen to the office of bishop,—"it would be nothing strange to find him some thirty years later holding his office still" (Trench, l.c., p. 190). That the ministry of Archippus was exercised at Laodicea is regarded as most probable by Bishop Lightfoot (l.c., p. 375);—see note A on ver. 19. Here, too, in Cent. iv., was held the Council whose sixtieth Canon contains a list of the Books of the Old and the New Testament "which were to be publicly read in the Church" (see Hefele, l.c., i. p. 749);—a definition which explains the absence of the Apocalypse from that list: see Introduction, § 3.

These things saith the Amen,] This title, "Amen," is used here only as a proper name,—cf. 2 Cor. i. 20. See the note on Isai. lxxv. 16, where the remarkable expression, "the God of Amen" (ἰδὲν, —LXX. ἀληθινός), is found. The absolute certainty of what the Lord will announce to this "Angel," is implied in the verse, the faithful and true witness,] See vv. 11.; and the same epithets (without the articles) in ch. xix. 11:—the epithet "true" is applied absolutely to Christ in 1 John v. 20. This explanatory note on the word "Amen," is quite after the manner of St. John,—see on ch. ix. 11. The language, too, is characteristic of the Apostle,—cf. John iii. 11, 32, 33; xviii. 37; see on ch. i. 5. It is to be noted, moreover, that our Lord is "faithful" only in the sense of "trustworthy," "to be believed," as the word is used 1 John i. 9; cf. 1 Thess. v. 24; 2 Tim. ii. 11;—not in the sense of "trusting" or "believing," as the word is used John xx. 27. Man may be "faithful" in both senses; God only in the former. And thus the "truthfulness," or "veracity," of Christ is asserted in the word "faithful,"—not in the other epithet "true," which asserts "that he realized and fulfilled in the highest sense, all that belonged to a witness" (Trench, p. 193): see on ver. 7.

the beginning of the creation of God;] Not, as the Arians held, in a passive sense, 'the first created,'—a sense excluded both by the context, and by the whole conception of the Lord's Person in this Book (see ch. i. 8; xxi. 6;—xxii. 13:—how, asks Dusterd. "could 15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

17 Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18 I counsel thee to buy of me every creature in Heaven and earth, ch. v. 13, adore Him, if He Himself were one of them, cf. ch. xix. 10?"),—but in an active sense, 'the Beginner'; in the words of the Creed, "by Whom all things were made" (John i. 1-3; Heb. i. 2; cf. Rev. iv. 11). He is principium, not initium; and that, too, as "principium principians," not "principium principiatum;"—'the Beginning' (Col. i. 18) from which all Creation emanates; as the 'Last' (ch. i. 17) signifies the end to which all Creation tends. In a word, He is the source not only of the first Creation, but also of the new Creation, which springs from Him as the second Adam:—"Behold I make all things New," ch. xxi. 5.

15. I know thy works,] Partly a menace (ver. 16), partly a counsel (ver. 18).

I would] In form a wish,—in reality a regret (Trench). On the text of this verse, see vv. 11.

thou wert cold or hot.] Düsterd., followed by Alf., understands the fervent zeal of the true believer (Rom. xii. 11), on the one hand; and active hostility to Christ, on the other,—the "lukewarm" state being specified in ver. 16. Archbishop Trench more justly explains "cold" to mean "one hitherto untouched by the powers of grace;" "lukewarm" to mean "one who has tasted of the good gift . . . but in whom that grace has failed to kindle more than the faintest spark." "The publicans and harlots were cold; the Apostles hot; the Scribes and Pharisees lukewarm;" cf. Luke vii. 36-50, and the thought conveyed in John ix. 41:—so also Bengel, Ebrard, &c. The reproof of "lukewarm" Laodicea is specially characteristic, by contrast, of the Apostle who records this message,—St. John, the Son of Thunder, whose zeal had not lost its old intensity; cf. 2 John, 10, 11 (Plumptre, l.c., p. 199).

16. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold,] (See vv. 11.). "Thus," "So then," Sic igitur,—cf. Rom. i. 15; see also on ver. 5.

I will spew thee] Note the announcement of the certainty of judgment expressed by the absolute future in ch. ii. 5, 16, 23; iii. 3; while, here, the possibility of yet averting that judgment is expressed by μέλλω (cf. ver. 2).

out of my mouth.] Archbishop Trench prefers to connect this verse with ver. 17;—

placing a semicolon here at the end, and a full stop at the end of ver. 17. So also Burger, who takes ver. 18 as a new proposition placed in contrast to vv. 15-17. The question is "whether Christ threatens to reject him, because he says I am rich, &c.; or whether, because he says he is all this, therefore Christ counsels him," as in ver. 18. The A. V. adopts the latter connexion.

For the subsequent religious history of Laodicea, see on ver. 14.

17. Because thou sayest,] The punctuation of the A. V. is adopted by Bengel, Ebrard, Düsterd., Alf.:—the analogy of vv. 8, 10; or of ch. xviii. 7, 8, may be quoted as authority for either view as to the connexion.

I am rich,] Spiritual riches are, of course, the predominant idea; but the reference to the worldly prosperity of Laodicea need not be excluded:—opulent in worldly riches, she was spiritually destitute. For the pride in her wealth and grandeur which Laodicea manifested, see on ver. 14.

and have gotten riches, and have need of nothing;] Gr. "in nothing," see vv. 11. Writers find here a climax—riches gradually increasing to self-sufficingness, cf. 1 Cor. iv. 8; Hos. xii. 8, "two passages of holy irony" (Trench).

and knowest not that thou] 'Thou of all others,'—observe the emphatic pronoun.

art wretched,] Gr. "the wretched one:"—this adjective (ταλαίπωρος) is found only here and in Rom. vii. 24.

and miserable,] And ἐλεεινός also, only here and in 1 Cor. xv. 19. It seems better to render thus, than to take the last four adjectives as subordinate to the article before the first of the five,—"the wretched and miserable . . . and naked one." Archbishop Trench, accepting the authority for reading an article before the second adjective also, renders,—"that thou art the wretched and the miserable one, and poor," &c. (A, B = ὁ ἐλεεινός). The three concluding adjectives would thus correspond with the three clauses of ver. 18, although in a different order.

and poor, and blind, and naked:] See on ver. 18.

18. I counsel thee] The question whether a new sentence begins here, summing up the result of the previous remonstrance; or gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

^{Prov. 3.} ^{Heb. 12. 5.} 19 ^aAs many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

20 Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

whether this verse has to be connected with ver. 17, has been stated in the note on ver. 16.

to buy of me] Or "from me,"—the words are emphatic; cf. Isai. lv. 1. In Christ are hidden "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge:"—so St. Paul had told the Colossians (Col. ii. 3), and had desired (Col. iv. 16) that his Epistle should be read at Laodicea. But the Laodiceans "had not learned their lesson" (Trench, p. 202.)

gold refined by fire,] I.e., fresh burnt out of the fire,—"not only tried by the process, but bright and new from the furnace" (Alf.): see on ch. i. 15, and cf. Zech. xiii. 9 (LXX). This may be regarded (see on ver. 17) as taking up the epithet "poor."

that thou mayest become rich;] Cf. ch. ii. 9; 1 Cor. i. 5; Eph. i. 18.

and white garments, that thou mayest clothe thyself,] See on vv. 4, 5. On this clause, cf. ch. xvi. 15.

and [that] the shame of thy nakedness be not made manifest;] I.e., either now, or at the Last Day when each guest must have "the wedding garment,"—Matt. xxii. 11–13: see on ch. xix. 8. This clause may be regarded as taking up the third epithet, "naked," in ver. 17; cf. Isai. xlvi. 3.

From the similarity of the language here to that of ch. xvi. 15, Ebrard infers that Laodicea, as well as Sardis and Philadelphia, will exist under the sixth Trumpet (s. 439); see on vv. 3, 10.

and eye-salve to anoint thine eyes,] (See vv. 11.) "Eye-salve," or collyrium, was an ointment made up in the long and round form of a cake of bread, collyra:—cf. 1 Kings xiv. 3 (LXX.); Hor. Sat. I. v. 30. Spiritually understood (cf. Ps. xiii. 3; xix. 8) the unction of the Holy Spirit is denoted (see 1 John ii. 20, 27), as by "gold" the genuine Christian graces are intended, and by "white garments" the righteousness of which they are the symbol, as in ch. xix. 8.

As before, the epithet "blind" in ver. 17, is now taken up. Under the light of these words we can discern the spiritual significance of John ix. 6, 41.

19. As many as I love,] Note the emphatic position of the personal pronoun at the beginning,—the prerogative here assumed by Christ. Note also the verb (φιλῶ), different from that used in ver. 9, now expressive of personal affection. The menace of ver. 16 is softened here.

I reprove] See John iii. 20; viii. 46; xvi. 8,—Gr. convict. The verb implies that the person reproved is convinced (cf. 2 Sam. xii. 13); it expresses an essential element of the chastening which follows.

and chasten:] Hitherto, from verse 15, the Lord has exercised the force of conviction; this, as well as His chastisement, He here declares to flow from His love. The verb rendered to chasten means in Scripture, 'to educate by means of correction:'—both ideas are combined in Heb. xii. 5, 6. As in 2 Sam. xii. 14, so here the correction follows the conviction (Trench, p. 210).

be zealous] This word (ζήλῳ, through ζήλος connected with ζέω, and thus with ζεστός, ver. 15) is chosen as the word of exhortation, with special reference to the lukewarmness of Laodicea (cf. Trench, p. 210). Addressed to the "Angel" of the Church—and most probably to Archippus (see on ver. 14)—these words are the counterpart of the "take heed" of St. Paul, Col. iv. 17:—see Note A at the end of this chapter.

20. Behold, I stand at the door] Düsterd. thinks the meaning to be merely "I come quickly," as in ch. ii. 5, 16; iii. 3, 11; cf. James v. 9. The usual interpretation, which refers to "the door" at which the Lord "stands and knocks,"—the door of the heart,—is far better.

and knock:] Ebrard explains by Luke xii. 36; but the greater number of writers by the parallel words in Cant. v. 2,—the obvious bearing of which passage is of itself an answer to Ewald's and De Wette's assertion that there is no allusion to the Song of Solomon in the New Testament. The whole tenor, however, of the imagery which represents the relation of the Church to Christ as that of the Bride to the Bridegroom, is founded upon that Book,—see ch. xix. 7. "Between sleeping and waking, [the Bride] has been so slow to open the door, that when at length she does so, the Bridegroom has withdrawn (Cant. v. 5, 6) . . . This exactly corresponds to the lukewarmness of the Angel here" (Trench, p. 214).

21 To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

I will come in to him, and will sup with him,] Cf. ch. xix. 9; Matt. xxii. 2.

and be with me.] Compare St. John's usual style,—John vi. 56; xiv. 20; xv. 4; xvii. 21, 23. Indeed the parallel between this verse and John xiv. 23, is very remarkable. In both passages the Divine Presence is conditional,—cf. ch. ii. 5, 16; iii. 3.

This conclusion of the Epistle contrasts strongly with its beginning (ver. 16): "No other opens with such sharp unsparing severity; no other closes with such yearning tenderness, and a promise so exceeding glorious" (Plumptre, p. 207).

21. He that overcometh, to him will I give] See on ch. ii. 26.

to sit down with me in my throne,] "A magnificent variation of Christ's words, spoken in the days of his flesh,—John xvii. 22, 24" (Trench). Here only in the New Testament is the preposition in (not upon) twice used with "throne," denoting admission into, session in, the same throne; not the act of taking a seat upon a separate throne:—cf. Matt. xix. 28; Rev. iv. 2, 9; &c. (Words.). Matt. xxiii. 22 is not an exception.

The full glory of the "Conqueror" is eternal communion with the Father and the Son; or, briefly, to reign with Christ,—ch. xxii. 5. The fulfilment of this pledge is to be looked for in eternity, as the prize of the victory over the world, over death, and over sin. In this we see the accomplishment of the function committed to the Son, John v. 22, 27, with which words this passage is in perfect harmony. Hence the futility of Scholten's assertion (l. c., s. 9), that St. John could not have written the Apocalypse, because this promise contradicts the saying, "is not Mine to give,"—Matt. xx. 23; Mark x. 40.

as I also overcame,] (Omit even). This thought is echoed at ch. v. 5; John xvi. 33.

and sat down with my Father in his throne.] The tenses point to the historical facts of the Resurrection and Ascension. Some erroneously distinguish here between the thrones of the Father and the Son, in opposition to ch. xxii. 1; cf. Mark xvi. 19; Heb. xii. 2.

More than was promised to the Elect Twelve (Matt. xix. 28) is here promised to every believer; and, as being the last of the promises to the Seven Churches, this is the climax of all (cf. Trench).

22. unto the Churches.] See on ch. ii. 7. The fact already noted (see on ch. i. 11) that the Seven Epistles form a body of instruction addressed to the Church Universal, of itself suggests the thought that the promises annexed to each Epistle are not to be regarded as unconnected;—that each reward has a wider application than to the particular victory which has in each several case been won;—that the promises, in short, do not relate to distinct places or gradations of glory, to be assigned hereafter according to that degree of faithfulness which had been manifested in the different Churches, but that the Seven Promises combine to form one picture of the future bliss of heaven. The different forms in which Christian faith, during every stage of the Church's progress, may be exhibited are, first of all, exemplified in the different Epistles: (1) In the first (ch. ii. 2-4), patient endurance and the rejection of evil, the faith that labours and does not feel the toil, which preserves the freshness of its first love;—(2) In ch. ii. 10, the being faithful unto death in days of suffering and persecution;—(3) In ch. ii. 14, the rejection of idolatry and all appeals to sensuality;—(4) In ch. ii. 20, so essential to the Christian life are purity and personal holiness, the same object as in the third Epistle is repeated, and for this the servant of God must strive;—(5) In ch. iii. 2, 3, watchfulness and repentance;—(6) In ch. iii. 8, the keeping Christ's word, and the not denying His name;—(7) In ch. iii. 18, the coming to Christ Himself for strength. In each case, the promise forms the sequel. Distinct promises, however, are not made to distinct classes of those who fight the good fight of faith. The promise annexed to each Epistle is designed to set forth a particular aspect merely of the general condition reserved for all who shall have "come out of the great tribulation" (ch. vii. 14); and to which, in ch. xxii. 17, "the Spirit and the Bride" invite the Redeemed. No support, in a word, is given in these two chapters to the conclusion that there is to be an advance from glory to glory; or that the different stages must be traversed in succession. Were this so, the glory promised in the first Epistle would be expressed by "the circle of light" most remote from the Divine Presence; whereas in ch. xxii. 2, the same promise of the Tree of Life is the crowning blessing of the saints. Nor are the rewards to differ in degree; for the promise to the faithful in each church, although not expressing all that will be their portion, cannot be regarded as less glorious in one instance than in another:—nay, it is expressly declared in ch. xxi. 7: "He that overcometh shall inherit these things,"—that is to say, all the blessings of "a new heaven and a new earth." Least of all can we conclude that the faithful in Smyrna and Philadelphia—churches which alone are not censured—have certain stages of progress to pass through hereafter; while the faithful in Laodicea at once attain the Divine Presence. The result, accordingly, is that we are here given, separately, the outlines of the picture which represents the condition of the Redeemed after this life; and that the picture itself is only then complete when these different outlines are combined. This fact is declared in ch. xxi. 7: and the description must necessarily (1 Cor. ii. 9) be conveyed either by means of human conceptions; or by means of what has been already revealed in Scripture or in the system of the Church. The unity of this picture may be illustrated by the fact that the Seven Promises at length find their complete fulfilment in the splendours of the New Jerusalem, described at the end of the Book.

22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

These Seven aspects of the future of the redeemed are as follows: I. The first promise, ch. ii. 7,—is Immortality; II. In the second, ch. ii. 11,—"He that overcometh shall not be hurt by the second death;" III. In the third, ch. ii. 17,—The heavenly food imparts the New Life; announces a share in Christ's priestly character, and, to those who bear the "new name," enrolment in the company of heaven; IV. In the fourth, ch. ii. 26–28,—Share in Christ's royal dominion is conferred; V. In the fifth, ch. iii. 5,—The vesture of heaven is assumed, full security is pledged, the conqueror's name is confessed; VI. In the sixth, ch. iii. 12,—The pledge of security is repeated, introducing the inscription of the Three Names,—the baptismal formula of Heaven; VII. In the seventh, ch. iii. 21,—The promise "He shall sit with me in my throne" completes the picture.

A different view is here taken by Archbishop Trench. Writing (p. 217) of "the order in which the promises of the Seven Epistles succeed one another," he considers that "it is impossible not to acknowledge such an order here,—an order parallel to that of the unfolding of the kingdom of God from its first beginnings on earth to its glorious consummation in heaven." We are led from Paradise (ii. 7),—to the Fall (Gen. iii. 19;

Rev. ii. 11),—to the Church in the wilderness (ii. 17),—to the triumph of David and Solomon over the nations (2 Sam. viii. 1–13; Rev. ii. 26, 27). The scenery now changes from earth to heaven. The fifth promise holds forth "the Book of Life" (iii. 5), with the attendant glories;—then comes the "New Jerusalem" (iii. 12);—and then the admission to the throne of Christ (iii. 21): "*It is here, to compare Divine things with human, as in the Paradiso of Dante. There, too, there are different circles of light around the throne, each, as it is nearer to the throne, of an intenser brightness than that beyond it and more remote, till at last, when all the others have been past, the throne itself is reached, and the very Presence of Him who sits upon the throne, and from whom all this light and this glory flows*."—p. 219.

"The general idea of this picture," writes Godet (l.c., p. 294), "*contains the representation of all the shades (nuances), and, in some sort, the statistics, of all the spiritual states, good or evil, in which terrestrial Christianity can be found. . . . The number Seven denotes here, as elsewhere, a totality. But, according to the thought of the Book, the subject is a simultaneous, and not a successive totality, as those wish who see in these Seven Churches the representation of the principal phases of the history of the Church*." It is the point of departure, however, of the Lord's progress that is indicated here:—"This point of departure is the condition of the Church at the moment of the Vision, and not the unrolling of her future history which is comprised in the Visions that follow."—Ib.

In this opening Vision, contained in ch. ii. and ch. iii., Ebrard understands St. John to see the Son of Man in His relation as Shepherd to the Church—cf. ch. ii. 27.

According to the general opinion the first division of the Apocalypse ends here; whether the first three chapters be regarded merely as the Prologue to the Revelation Proper, or whether—as is far more consistent with the character of the Book—they themselves constitute the First Vision vouchsafed to the Seer, who describes beforehand (see ch. xxii. 17) the state which awaits those who have passed through "the great tribulation," the various aspects of which form the theme of the Apocalypse.

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. III. 19.

NOTE A ON VER. 19.—THE ALLEGED OPPOSITION BETWEEN ST. JOHN AND ST. PAUL.

It is necessary to consider with care the theory which places the Apocalypse in opposition to so important an element of the New Testament as the writings of St. Paul.

It is a fixed idea with the rationalistic school that St. John had no other object in the Apocalypse than to uphold the Jewish type of Christianity in opposition to the, so-called, Pauline; and that the Book throughout has "a tendency which beyond mistake denies the teaching of Paul" (Max Krenkel, l. c., s. 21). Everything breathes, we are told, the fierce and wrathful spirit of Judaism; and the writer's design is to appear as the open antagonist of the Gentiles: e. g. the Apocalypse condemns unconditionally those who "eat things sacrificed to idols" (ch. ii. 14, 20; cf. 1 Cor. x. 25-31);¹—it denounces marriage between Christians and the heathen as πορνεία (ch. ix. 21), in contradiction to 1 Cor. vii. 12-16;—it manifests this hatred by likening all who adopt any heathen usage to Balaam and Jezebel (ch. ii. 14, 20);—in fact, the Book everywhere exhibits hostility to the Apostle of the Circumcision. Carrying out this theory, Baur (Christentum der drei erst. Jahrh., 2^{te} Ausg., s. 83) asserts that St. Paul is never named, or, if ever, only in the way of hostile allusion, by the ecclesiastical writers of Asia Minor in the period following that of St. John;—while the writer on the Apocalypse in Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon (s. 163) alleges that St. John is "best satisfied with Ephesus, which is precisely the Church where Paul had met with the sharpest resistance (Rev. ii. 1-7; Acts xix. 9, 29; 1 Cor. xvi. 9)."²

Writers argue thus:—Keim (l. c., s. 158), having noted that St. Paul (Gal. ii. 9) reckons St. John, after James and Peter, as the third representative of "the Judæo-Christian Jerusalemish tendency," alleges that if we add the Apocalypse to the Gospels of Mark and Luke, "we get a decisive proof that, from the year 70 to the year 100 [i. e., from the years in which, according to Keim, these two Gospels were written], John has been accounted a strictly Judæo-Christian Apostle." Thus in Rev. xxi. 14, the Twelve—a number which includes John, and excludes Paul—are associated as "foundations" of the future Jewish Jerusalem;³ just as the Book, by contrasts easy to be recognized, assails and denies the position of Paul. Keim, indeed, will not go so far as Volkmar (l. c., s. 25 ff.) in identifying St. Paul with the False Prophet of Rev. xiii. 11; but he argues that in the Seven Apocalyptic Epistles, especially that to Ephesus (ch. ii. 2), the reference to the Paulinians—especially including their Apostle himself—is not to be mistaken, cf. 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2, and even Acts xv. 25, &c.; as to the disputes at Ephesus, see Rom. xvi. 17-20 (l. c., s. 160, Anm.). Krenkel (l. c., s. 104 ff.), differing from Keim, attributes the Apocalypse to St. John, and believes that he resided at Ephesus; but he makes the two Apostles to differ altogether in their mode of regarding the Roman Empire, comparing Rom. xiii. with Rev. xiii., where St. John ascribes the power of Rome to the Devil. Further, Krenkel (agreeing with Volkmar) asserts that St. John, in Rev. ii. 2, as clearly as the Apocalyptic form admits, condemns St. Paul who, on his side, states that Ephesus was the seat of the opposition to his Apostolic authority (see 1 Cor. xv. 32; xvi. 8, 9; 2 Cor. i. 8, &c.). If St. Paul speaks of his knowledge of what were "the deep things of God" (1 Cor. ii. 10), this is styled in Rev. ii. 24, "the deep things of Satan"; and Krenkel contemplates with pity "the tragic conflict of these two followers of Christ,"—understanding St. Paul's words in Gal. i. 8, 9, and St. John's words in Rev. xxii. 18, 19, as directed against each other. The same conclusion is asserted by Renan (Saint Paul, p. 303, &c.) who maintains that St. Paul was regarded by a party in the Church, from A.D. 54 (Acts xviii.) and his rupture with St. Peter (Gal. ii. 11), as a most dangerous heretic;—a false Jew (Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9);—a false Apostle (Rev. ii. 2);—a false prophet (Rev. ii. 20⁴);—a new Balaam (Rev. ii. 6, 14, 15; cf. 2 Pet. ii. 15; Jude 11);—a wicked one who ushered in the destruction of the Temple (Clement. Hom. ii. 17);—a Simon Magus.⁵ Renan dwells

¹ Thus Aubé (Hist. des Persecutions, Paris, 1875), asserting that the Seven Epistles have this antagonism as one leading object, adds, with reference to the eating "things sacrificed to idols", "le dernier trait est évidemment dirigé contre les disciples de Paul" (p. 111).

² In reply to this latter statement, we need only read Rev. ii. 5. And in reply to the former, we can refer to the Epistle of St. John's disciple Polycarp, in which St. Paul is the only Apostle, and St. Paul's Epistles the only Apostolic writings, mentioned by name (see Bishop Lightfoot, Contemp. Rev., May, 1875, p. 832); or, again, to the sayings of the "Presbyters," which are still to be read in the writings of Irenæus, who insist alike on 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26, and John xiv. 2. So far is Irenæus himself from seeking to efface the influence of St. Paul that he represents the church of Ephesus as the genuine preserver of Apostolic tradition because St. Paul was its founder, and because St. John laboured there till the reign of Trajan (Adv. Har., iii. 3). Least of all, indeed, if we bear this fact in mind, could this church of Ephesus have regarded these their two Apostles as hostile to each other,—the one (St. Paul) as a false Apostle; the other (St. John) as "the Judæo-Christian disturber of the Gentile-Christian Paulinism."

³ See Introd. § 7, I. (7). Bengel acutely notes that St. Paul, as Apostle of the Gentiles, could not be included here,—see Matt. xix. 28.

⁴ On the words "thy wife Jezebel" Renan notes: "Désignation symbolique de Paul, envisagé comme infidèle, et entraînant le peuple à l'infidélité."—ib. 368. "Les chapitres ii. et iii. de l'Apocalypse sont un cri de haine contre Paul et ses amis."—ib. p. 367.

⁵ "Il n'est pas douteux que sous le personnage particularly on St. Paul's toleration of mixed marriages (see above) as identifying him, in the Jewish mind, with Balaam who seduced the Israelites of old (Num. xxxi. 16);—cf. Acts xv. 20; xxi. 25: "Cette πορνεία en relation avec Balaam est l'étincelle électrique qui fait suivre dans les ténèbres le courant de haine contre Paul."—Ib. p. 304.

Without dwelling minutely on this tissue of extravagance, and arbitrary assumption, and criticism run wild,—which Renan with unconscious truth describes as proceeding "in the dark,"—it may be well to note how accordant in tone of thought, and often in language, is the teaching of St. John and of St. Paul. It is easy to recognize the accordance of Rev. xviii. 20 with Eph. iii. 5 ("His boly Apostles and Prophets"); as well as of Rev. xxi. 14 with Eph. ii. 20 ("the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets")—the idea expressed by θεμέλιος being a favourite one with St. Paul, e. g. Rom. xv. 20; 1 Cor. iii. 10, 11, 12): but the essential agreement of the two writers appears everywhere.

In Rev. i. 4 St. John adopts the Pauline form of salutation "grace to you and peace" (Rom. i. 7) which is found in all St. Paul's Epistles (except the Pastoral, where "mercy" is added, as it is in 2 John 3);—Rev. i. 5; iii. 14 are to be compared with Col. i. 15–18;—Rev. xvii. 14 with Rom. viii. 30, 37, and 1 Tim. vi. 15;—Rev. v. 6, 9 with 1 Cor. v. 7, the sacrifice of Christ being regarded by both as representing that of the true Paschal Lamb. Where, we may challenge the objector to point out, is there a trace in history of the existence of a "Johannean" party in the Church, by the side of a "Pauline"? St. Paul in 1 Cor. i. 12 refers to the tendency, which he explains more fully in Gal. ii.; but his only reference to St. John—and that too in the only place where St. John's name is found in his writings—is that St. John had given him "the right hand of fellowship" (Gal. ii. 9). That the spirit of St. John's writings is in close harmony with the spirit of the elder revelation is, of course, obvious; and every reader of the Apocalypse, and indeed of St. John's Gospel and Epistles, can at once discern how he is disposed to adopt (while investing them with an elevated and spiritual meaning) the symbols and forms of Judaism, rather than to disown them:—see e. g. John iii. 14; vi. 31; vii. 38. But does de Simon le Magicien l'auteur des Homélies pseudo-clémentines ne veuille désigner souvent l'apôtre Paul:—cf. ἀνθέστηκας μοι, and ἡ ἐκ κατεγνωσμένων με λέγεις, Hom. xvii. 19, with Gal. ii. 11; also Hom. xvii. 12–17 with 1 Cor. xii. 1; Hom. ii. 17 with Acts xxi. 28. Renan places the date of these "Homilies" in A.D. 150 or 160:—"Pour leur caractère d'hostilité contre Paul, voir surtout Hom. ii. 17; iii. 59; vii. 4, 8; Recogn. iv. 36."—Ibid., p. 304.

St. Paul disown the elder revelation? We need only turn to such passages as Rom. vii. 12, or to such teaching as Gal. iii. 24, for the answer. If we find echoes of Old Test. doctrine (e. g. Canticles passim) in John iii. 29; Rev. xix. 7; xxi. 2, 9, do we not read to the same effect in 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 25, 27? If the Apocalypse abounds with Old Test. imagery and its doctrinal application,—have we not in the Pauline Epistles the "allegory" of Hagar, and the conception of the spiritual Jerusalem (Gal. iv.), and the grand idea of "the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16)? History places beyond a doubt the true sense of Rev. ii. 2, 20, 24; 1 John ii. 18; iv. 1, when, as time went on, heresy, and false prophets claiming divine illumination, and the practice of gross licentiousness under the pretext of freedom from the slavery of the Law, had begun to prevail. But from first to last there are no traces of Jewish nationality, or of a preference for Christians of Jewish descent. The Apoc., no doubt, bears witness to a definite type of doctrine characteristic of St. John, as clearly as does the Fourth Gospel—especially in its explicit teaching as to the Logos, which no refinement can explain away, e. g. ch. i. 17; iii. 14; xix. 13: cf., too, ch. vii. 17 with John vii. 37–39. Together with its strongly-marked Jewish element there is stamped upon the whole Book a character which could only be impressed upon it by the creative breath of the transforming Spirit of Christ,—whether we read the description of the glorified (ch. vii.),—or of the splendours of the perfected Theocracy (ch. xxi.),—or of the universal Priesthood (ch. i. 6; v. 10),—or, in the Seven Epistles (ch. ii., iii.), the Lord's exhortations to the Church Catholic. "Of any polemical tone," writes Neander, "directed against the Apostle Paul, not a trace can be found in the Book. It cannot be taken as a proof of this that in ch. xxi. 14, according to the Twelve Tribes of the Theocratic people, only Twelve Apostles are mentioned as the foundations of the spiritual Jerusalem." (Pflanzung, Bohn's transl. vol. ii. p. 163). "It is not by any means incredible" writes Mr. Sanday (The Fourth Gospel, p. 156) "that St. John should actually have seen the Pauline Epistles . . . Pauline doctrine is not reproduced crudely, but is assimilated with the rest of the Johannean system, and has received the genuine Johannean stamp." If the Old Test. descriptions of Israel and Jerusalem are transferred in the Apocalypse to Christianity, what is this but the echo of such references as we meet with in the Epistles of St. Paul—say in Gal. iii. 29; iv. 26; vi. 16. If in Rev. vii. 4, 144,000 are sealed from the Tribes of Israel,—at ver. 9 the Redeemed are a multitude "from all nations, and Tribes, and peoples, and tongues" (see also Rev. v. 9; xix. 6; xxi. 24). Could St. Paul recognize more fully the calling of the Gentiles?

In his Commentary on the Epistle to the Colossians (p. 41) Bishop Lightfoot points out "Correspondences between the Apocalypse and St. Paul's Epistles." The message, he observes, "communicated by St. John to [the neighbouring Church of] Laodicea prolongs the note which was struck by St. Paul in the letter to Colossæ." After the interval which elapsed until St. John wrote, "the same temper prevails, the same errors are rife, the same correction must be applied:"—(1) "St. Paul finds it necessary to enforce the truth that Christ is the image of the invisible God, that He is the primary source (ἀρχή), and has the pre-eminence in all things (Col. i. 15-18),"—St. John in almost identical language, "speaking in the person of our Lord, declares that He is the Amen, the primary source (ἀρχή) of the Creation of God (Rev. iii. 14)." The phrase ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, so closely resembling St. Paul's language, does not occur in the messages to the other six Churches as a designation of our Lord, nor do we there find anything resembling it: "If St. Paul entreats the Colossians to seek those things which are above (Col. iii. 1) . . . and in the companion Epistle, which also he directs them to read, reminds the churches that God raised them with Christ (Eph. ii. 6); . . . in like manner St. John gives this promise to the Laodiceans in the name of his Lord" (Rev. iii. 21). These words do not occur in the other six Epistles, or any words resembling them: "This double coincidence affecting the two ideas which may be said to cover the whole ground in the Epistle to the Colossians, can hardly, I think, be fortuitous, and suggests an acquaintance with and recognition of the earlier Apostle's teaching on the part of St. John" (ib., p. 42).

(2). "After a parting salutation to the Church of Laodicea, St. Paul closes with a warning to Archippus, apparently its chief pastor, to take heed to his ministry (Col. iv. 17).¹ Some signs of slackened zeal seem to have called forth this rebuke. It may be an accidental coincidence, but it is at least worthy of notice, that lukewarmness is the special sin denounced in the Angel of the Laodiceans, and that the necessity of greater earnestness is the burden of the message to that Church." "If the common view, that by the 'Angel' of the Church its chief pastor is meant, were correct, and if Archippus (as is very probable) had been living when St. John wrote, the coincidence would be still more striking (ib., p. 43, note). See note F. on ch. i. 20.

¹ "Where," asks Bishop Lightfoot elsewhere (Epist. to Philem., p. 375), "was Archippus exercising this ministry, whatever it may have been? At Colossæ or Laodicea? His connexion with Philemon (ver. 2) [we may infer that he was a son of Philemon and Apphia]

(3). "In the Apocalyptic message the pride of wealth is sternly condemned in the Laodicean Church" (Rev. iii. 17, 18). Having been laid in ruins by an earthquake, Laodicea became famous from the fact that unaided by imperial assistance, she recovered her former importance. "But is there not a second and subsidiary idea underlying the Apocalyptic rebuke? The pride of intellectual wealth, we may well suspect, was a temptation at Laodicea hardly less strong than the pride of material resources. When St. Paul wrote, the theology of the Gospel and the comprehension of the Church were alike endangered by a spirit of intellectual exclusiveness in these cities. He warned them against a vain philosophy . . . (Col. ii. 8, 18, 23). He tacitly contrasted with this false intellectual wealth 'the riches of the glory of God's mystery revealed in Christ' (Col. i. 27; ii. 2, 3) . . . May not the same contrast be discerned in the language of St. John? The Laodiceans boast of their enlightenment, but they are blind, and to cure their blindness they must seek eye-salve from the hands of the great Physician" (ib., p. 44).

would suggest the former place. But in the Epistle to the Colossians his name is mentioned immediately after the salutations to the Laodiceans and the directions affecting that church; and this fact seems to connect him with Laodicea. On the whole this appears the more probable solution." Theodore of Mopsuestia adopts this conclusion: "Ἄλλος δὲ φησιν, ὡς ἔστιν ἐκ τῶν γεγραμμένων εἰκόσαι, παρὰ Λαοδικεύσιν ὄντι καὶ τὴν διακονίαν ἐγκεχειρισμένον τῆς διακονίας.—ap. Cramer, Catena in Ep. ad Col. iv. 17. Theodoret argues against it on critical grounds, without alleging any traditional support for the objection:—τινὲς ἔφασαν τοῦτον Λαοδικεῖας γεγενῆσθαι διδάσκαλον, ἀλλ' ἡ πρὸς Φιλήμονα ἐπιστολὴ διδάσκει ὡς ἐν Κολλοσσαῖς οὗτος ἔκει· τῷ γὰρ Φιλήμονι καὶ τοῦτον συντάττει.

CHAPTER IV.

2 John seeth the throne of God in heaven. 4 The four and twenty elders. & The four beasts full of eyes before and behind. 10 The elders lay down their crowns, and worship him that sat on the throne.

AFTER this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come [Ver. 1 λέγων. Ver. 2 om. 1st καί.—ἐπὶ τὸν θρόνον. Ver. 3 om. ἦν.—σαρδίῳ. Ver. 4 [A, B read θρόνους εἷκ. τέσσαρες (sic),—"τέσσαρας sine teste," Tisch. ;—B, P read θρόνοι].—om. εἶδον τοὺς.—om. ἔσχον. Ver. 5 φωναὶ κ. βρ.—ἃ ἐστίν. Ver. 6 ὡς θάλ. Ver. 7 ἀνθρώπου. Ver. 8 τὰ τέσσα.—ἐν καθ' ἐν αὐτῶν.—ἔχον.—γέμουσιν. Ver. 10 προσκυνήσουσιν.—βαλοῦσιν. Ver. 11 ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν.—ἦσαν.]

CHAP. IV.—XXII. 5.

II. THE REVELATION PROPER.

The second of the three great Divisions of the Book.

CHAP. IV.

The First chief Vision of the Revelation Proper opens here:—see Introd. p. 89.

THE PRELUDE (iv.—v.).

As the first appearance of Christ (ch. i. 13) is closely related to His introductory warning to His Church (ch. ii. ; ch. iii.), so is God's appearance (ch. iv.) the prelude to the revelations of coming judgment. In like manner, the taking of the Sealed Book, together with the adoration of the Lamb (ch. v.), is the introduction to the imagery of the succeeding Visions, and the disclosure of their theme. The object which the Seer has in view throughout is to place before the eye of faith that Heaven to which Christ has gone before, and whence He will return to judge the world. The symbolic veil had been rent in twain when the Lord had suffered (Matt. xxvii. 51); and now the entrance to the true Sanctuary, of which the Temple of old was but the shadow (Heb. viii. 5), is entirely and for ever thrown open. We are shown the Temple of God with its Altar of Incense and its Altar of Sacrifice,—with its inner Court and its outer Court,—with the "Ark of His Covenant," and the "Tabernacle of the Testimony" (ch. vi. 9 ; viii. 3 ; xi. 1, 2, 19 ; xv. 5). The Visions of the Holy City, and of the Mount Zion, and of the New Jerusalem, complete the Apocalypse (ch. xi. 2 ; xiv. 1 ; xxi. 2) ; and the Book closes before the throne of God and of the Lamb (ch. xxii. 1).

The four and twenty Elders (ver. 4) and the four Living Beings (ver. 6) are the representatives of the Church and of animated Creation.

THE APPEARANCE OF GOD (1—11).

1. After these things] I. e., 'after receiving the Seven Epistles' (see ch. i. 11)—a formula frequent in this Book, and usually introducing a new Vision, or form of Vision, e. g.

ch. vii. 9 ; xv. 5 ; xviii. 1 ; xix. 1—cf. on ch. xxii. 2, and see ver. 2, below. Some (Eichhorn, Bengel, Hengst., &c.) consider that an interval had occurred at the end of ch. iii., during which St. John was no longer "in the Spirit;" and during which, as at the close of the successive scenes of the entire Vision, he committed to writing what he had seen and heard,—in this case the Seven Epistles. On the other hand, Ebrard and Dürst. justly observe that, from ch. i. 10 to ch. xxii. 16, no break occurs in the ecstatic condition of the Seer, there being throughout but one Revelation with its changing though connected images.

In fact, the formula "after these things" (μετὰ ταῦτα) introduces a new and more striking scene; and the formula "I saw" (or "I heard") indicates the varying features of the successive Visions—e. g. ch. i. 10 ; v. 1, 6, 11 ; vi. 1 ; &c. Hence, there is no special reference here to the End of all things; or to the Church, as it will then be, triumphant.

I saw,] In the Spirit, as in ch. i. 10. The Vision is presented to the Seer; and he then proceeds to record it:—see ch. i. 2 ; and cf. ch. vi. 2, 5, 8.

and behold, a door opened in heaven,] 'A door set open' (see ch. iii. 8),—i. e., 'the image of an open door was before me,' after the figure of "the gate of heaven," Gen. xxviii. 17 (cf. Ezek. i. 1 ; Matt. iii. 16 ; Acts x. 11) : and the meaning clearly is that St. John may behold, as through an opened door, what takes place in heaven, as in Acts vii. 56. Some, however,—De Wette, Alf., Bisping,—suppose that the Seer was taken up through the door into heaven; and that "henceforth, usually, he looks from the heaven down on the earth."

Victorinus understands by "the opened door," the preaching of the Gospel.

and the first voice which I heard, [a voice] as of a trumpet speaking with me,] 'The voice which I heard at first in ch. i. 10.' The construction is "Behold, a door . . . and the voice . . . saying." Whose voice is not defined (cf. ch. x. 4, 8)—see on ch. i. 10, where the voice is followed at ver. 17 by that up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

2 And immediately I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone:

of Christ, not loud as "of a trumpet," but as "of many waters," ver. 15. On the other hand, Stier, relying on the words "I will shew thee," protests against any interpretation which introduces here a personal Angel distinct from Christ.—Reden Jesu, Engl. tr., vol. viii. 93, 207.

saying,] The gender (masc.) of the participle denotes that the "voice" is put for the "speaker" (cf. ver. 8; ch. xi. 4, 15; xix. 14; Mark ix. 25, 26; Eph. iv. 17, 18)—that speaker, although left indefinite, being the same already heard.

Or one saying,] See Winer, § lix. 4, and 11—the nominative in irregular apposition (cf. the Hebrew idiom, שֵׁן לְשׁוֹן).

Come up hither,] In spirit:—the Seer now attains a higher spiritual standpoint.

and I will shew thee] In answer to Stier's inference from these words that the speaker must be Christ, see on ch. i. 1; and also, ch. xxi. 9, 10.

the things which must come to pass] As being divinely determined—see on ch. i. 1; and cf. Matt. xxiv. 6.

hereafter.] After the things now present, as in ch. i. 19; ix. 12:—so the A. V.

Or, with a full stop at pass, translate After these things—words which may very well be taken as the beginning of ver. 2; see above, on the use of this formula.

2. Immediately] (Omit "And;" see vv. ll.).

Or "After these things immediately I was in the Spirit:"] See on ver. 1—a new scene being now presented to the Seer.

I was in the Spirit:] "I found myself in the Spirit"—see on ch. i. 9. Züllig would interpret, "my spirit was caught up thither, while my body remained on earth;" but this is certainly wrong,—see on ch. i. 10. Already "in the Spirit," the Seer had beheld the door set open; and a fresh outpouring of the Spirit is now granted him, in order to gaze upon this new, and more sublime Vision: cf. Ezek. xi. 1, 5. This Vision, in its full significance, reveals GOD as the GOD of the Redeemed, the Father upon the throne;—in the midst of the throne (ch. v. 6) the Lamb still bearing the tokens of the Cross;—and before the throne the Seven-fold Spirit with His lamps of fire (ver. 5). In the four and twenty Elders, the Church of the Old and the Church of the New Covenant are imaged forth; and in the four Living Beings, we see the symbolic representatives of Creation. From among the "innumerable company of angels," one Angel, throughout this Book, acts as "a ministering spirit" (Heb. i. 14)—as the Angelus interpres: see on ch. i. 1. We may here compare the Vision of Micaiah:—see the note on 1 Kings xxii. 19.

and behold, there was a throne set in heaven,] See Ezek. i. 26–28. Here, in Ezek. i., and in Ezek. x. 19, the throne corresponds to the place on which the cloud of glory rested between the Cherubim;—see Note C, on Gen. iii. 24. The expression "was set" simply indicates position, after the manner of St. John, see John ii. 6; xix. 29; xxi. 9,—as Düsterd. points out in opposition to Bengel who sees in this verb (ἐκειτο) a reference to the breadth of the throne; and in opposition to Hengst. who explains the phrase by the throne resting on the Cherubim: cf. ver. 6.

and one sitting upon the throne;] (As to the preposition here, see the note on ch. i. 20). Observe the title so constant throughout the Book, "He that sitteth on (or upon) the throne,"—e. g. ch. vii. 10; xix. 4; xxi. 5; cf. Dan. vii. 9. The great majority of writers take this title to mean the Eternal Father, as distinguished from the Son ("the Lamb," ch. v. 6; vi. 16; vii. 10), and from the Holy Spirit (ver. 5):—see above. On the other hand, N. de Lyra, C. à Lapide, Calov., Words., understand the Triune God,—GOD in His absolute Being,—as indicated by the Trisagion, ver. 8, from Whom the Lamb may fitly take the Sealed Book, ch. v. 7: cf. Dan. vii. 13, and such passages as Isai. vi. 1–3; John xii. 41. C. à Lapide comments: "The Son as Man may well be said, especially in a sublime Vision like this, to come to GOD,"—see Words. in loc. The references, in ver. 5 and in ch. v. 6, to the Second and Third Persons of the Trinity do not oppose this view; neither does the doxology in ver. 11. The Person is not specified, because only what is seen is described. Ewald would explain, 'because the name of Jehovah is incommunicable;' and De Wette, 'out of a sense of holy reverence, as in ch. xx. 11' (in opposition to this latter interpretation, cf. ch. xii. 5; xix. 13; xxii. 1).

3. and he that sat [was] to look upon.] For the omission of "was," see vv. ll. Alford translates, "And he that sat, like in appearance to"—as if one of a series of nominatives placed correlatively after "behold" in ver. 2; see also ver. 1. Or "like in and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4 And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty sight," as the A. V. renders in the next clause. The Greek term (ὄρασις) is translated "Vision" in ch. ix. 17, and in Acts ii. 17—the word being found in the New Test. only in these two places and twice in this verse. For the imagery and language, see Ezek. i. 26, 27, LXX.; cf. also the description in Ex. xxiv. 10.

like a jasper stone and a sard:] (See vv. 11.). The last and the first stones in the Breastplate, Ex. xxviii. 17, 20. Jasper (Heb. Yaspeh, Gr. ἰασπίς, Lat. Jaspis, Arab. Jasp.) is the first of the Twelve Foundations in ch. xxi., where this stone is described (ver. 11) as being "clear as crystal." "Greenness, and more or less translucency, were the two essential characters of the ancient jaspis." The modern jasper is quite opaque, and corresponds to the acabates of the Romans. The jaspis of the ancients was our chalcedony (silica and alumina):—see King, Precious Stones, pp. 202, 206. The antique sard (Heb. Odem, Gr. σάρδιον, Lat. Sarda, Vulg. Sardius, see ch. xxi. 20) or oriental carnelian—the sixth Foundation in ch. xxi.—was a dull red cloudy stone of many gradations of colour. The name is derived, writes Mr. King (l. c., p. 296), from the Persian sered, yellowish red,—although Pliny (H. N. xxxvii. 31) derives the name from Sardis, where it was first discovered. Its modern name carnelian is usually derived from carneus, as if the colour of raw flesh.

On this Vision of the Divine Glory, cf. Ezek. i. 4, 26; x. 1; Dan. vii. 9.

and [there was] a rainbow] Here and in ch. x. 1 St. John uses the word Iris;—cf. Ezek. i. 28. The Septuagint Version—shunning, as is probable, the allusion to heathen mythology—always uses for "a rainbow" the word which expresses the "bow" as a weapon of war (τόξον); and which is so employed in ch. vi. 2. As to the occurrence in the Apocalypse of heathen symbolism, see on ch. ii. 10.

Or translate and a rainbow] A nom., as above, after behold.

round about the throne,] As the emblem of God's covenanted mercy,—Gen. ix. 16. This symbol, as Burger well remarks, casts light upon all the Visions that follow; in which God is revealed only as One Who keeps His Covenant and promise.

like] In the masc., ὁμοίως,—which Winer (§ 11, s. 64) takes to be an adjective of two terminations, as in Attic Greek adjectives in -ιος, (cf. Luke ii. 13; Acts xxvi. 19; 1 Tim. ii. 8, 9; Tit. iii. 9; James i. 26),—although the feminine termination occurs in ver. 6; ch. ix. 10, 19. Ewald (Comm., ed. 1828, p. 46) suggests the rendering: "Iris circa thronum; similis est thronus smaragdo;" in his edition of 1862, he adopts the usual rendering, "a rainbow like." (Lücke suggests a various reading, ὁμοία ὥς, or ὁμοίως).

an emerald to look upon.] Or, as in the alternative rendering at the beginning of this verse, "like in appearance unto an emerald." Alford translates, "like to the appearance of an emerald,"—taking συναρμόδιος to be "the possessive adjective of two terminations":—the substantive occurs in ch. xxi. 19.

The emerald, of bright green colour, "was the most precious gem in the Roman jeweller's list. . . . The Romans were plentifully supplied with the true emerald. The smaragdus of Nero's age must be restricted to the true emerald, perhaps including the green ruby:"—King, l. c., pp. 167, 311; and Nat. Hist. of Precious Stones, p. 288; see also Pliny, H. N. xxxviii. 16, &c. It is the fourth Foundation in ch. xxi. 19; cf. ch. xxi. 20, on the word "beryl." St. John describes exactly what he saw; although, as not existing in nature, his imagery cannot be exhibited by means of sensible representations, either by the form of the rainbow, or by its colour—as he beheld it—green.

The imagery of this passage is plainly founded on the words of Ezekiel: "As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about."—Ezek. i. 28. Disregarding this fact, Bisping concludes that, as the word Iris denotes, in general, every coloured circle,—e.g. the pupil of the eye, the fringe around flame, the halo round the moon,—a rainbow cannot be intended; and this he infers from the fact that a rainbow is characterized by seven colours, while the Iris here is of one colour, namely that of an emerald. It would be difficult to quote a more jejune interpretation.

The pagan affinities which may be traced in the writings of Renan have led him to observe of the description here, that "the Olympian Jupiter was a symbol far superior to this."—l. c., p. 473.

4. And round about the throne [were] four and twenty thrones:] Or render with Alford, as above, "And he that sat like in appearance to . . .; and round about the throne four and twenty thrones:" the nom. again following "behold" in ver. 2.

elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

5 And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire and upon the thrones [I saw] four and twenty elders sitting,] "I saw" is not in the Greek—see vv. 11.; and the accusative depends on the verb (εἶδον) understood (De Wette, Dusterd.). Alf. regards the accusative as "loosely placed" with the nominatives after behold—see on ver. 2. Note also the omission of the article ("the four and twenty Elders") which is read in the Textus Receptus. In the Old Test., "the Elders" are the chiefs and natural representatives of the people of Israel; see Ex. iv. 29; xii. 21; xix. 7; xxiv. 1, &c.; cf. Heb. xi. 2. In the New Test. the early representatives of each church were also thus named, Acts xiv. 23; xx. 17; xxi. 18, &c. Here, accordingly, the "four and twenty Elders" (cf. "the Ancients," Isai. xxiv. 23, LXX.) are the representatives of the universal Church of God, and their number symbolizes the Twelve Patriarchs, and the Twelve Apostles:—so Victorinus, the earliest extant commentator. To this same effect Bossuet writes in loc.: "It is the collective body of the Saints of the Old and the New Testaments, who are here represented by their chiefs and their leaders." This follows (1) from ch. v. 8-10; (2) from Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30,—cf. Eph. ii. 4-6; (3) from ch. xxi. 12, 14, where the Twelve Tribes and the Twelve Apostles are conjoined; (4) from the union of the Old and the New Covenants in ch. xv. 3; (5) from the functions, distinctly representative, of the Elders, as described in ch. v. 5, 8; vii. 13. Burger's interpretation, that Twelve is the number of the Church (see Introd. § 11); and that the doubled twelve signifies the Church triumphant, consisting of its two elements—the Church of the Old, and the Church of the New Covenant—does not essentially differ from this conclusion.

The chief manuscripts, however, read here the accus. (θρόνους)—see vv. 11.; which is an argument against this construction.

On the word "thrones," see on ch. ii. 13.

St. Hippolytus (in the Arabic version of his commentary,—see Note A on ch. xii. 3) understands the Great and the Minor Prophets.

Reuss (who for "Elders" substitutes "old men," "vieillards,") insists that they are Angels of higher rank, placed immediately round the throne of God:—they represent, as their "white garments" prove, the celestial priesthood; and their number, 24, recalls the classes of the Levitical priests. It is an error to hold that the Oriental imagination represents Angels as young persons of perfect beauty. But, on the other hand—

That they are not Angels (Hoffmann and others), their name "Elders" proves;—their number, twenty-four, is not borrowed from the number of the courses of the priests, 1 Chron. xxiv. (Vitr., Ewald), for there is here no reference to the priestly office;—nor do they represent "the elders" of the church at Jerusalem (Grotius), for there is no proof that the number of the elders at Jerusalem was twenty-four: for a catalogue of similar opinions, see Dusterd. in loc. By a needless modification of the ancient opinion, Bleek and De Wette argue that the number of the Twelve Tribes is here doubled, in order to denote the accession of the Gentiles. Words. (after St. Jerome, Prol. Galeat.) takes the "Elders" to typify, primarily, the twenty-four Books of the Old Testament (see the catalogue in the sixth of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England); and, in a secondary sense, the Jewish Church; while the Four Living Beings (ver. 6) represent, in a similar manner, the Four Gospels, and the Christian Church.

arrayed in white garments; and upon their heads] Omit "they had,"—see vv. 11. On the colour "white," see on ch. i. 14 and cf. ch. iii. 4, 5; vii. 13, 14.

crowns of gold.] The conqueror's crown (1 Cor. ix. 25), the emblem of the victory of the Church; see Note D. on ch. ii. 10, where it is shown that the "crown" (στέφανος)—the term employed in this verse—does not denote the emblem of royalty, as it does in modern times: see, on the other hand, the argument of Archbishop Trench, quoted on ch. ii. 10. Dean Vaughan (l.c., p. 129), likewise considers that kingly crowns are signified here. In ch. v. 10, observes Dean Vaughan, the Elders describe themselves as priests and kings; the white raiment, and the 'holy crown of pure gold,' with its well-known inscription, is the peculiar possession of the Levitical priests; see Ex. xxxix. 30. The twenty-four Elders represent the Redeemed made priests as well as kings to God. And he notes again (p. 160),—we have here "the white robe of priesthood, and then the kingly crown." As stated, however, on ch. i. 6, the concrete term "king" is not applied to Christians in the New Testament; and thus there can be no reference here to the kingly crown.

5. proceed lightnings] Not the past tense, as the A. V. renders here and elsewhere. "The present tense," writes Archbishop Trench, "is used in the New Testament, and burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

6 And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.

especially by St. John in the Apocalypse, to express the eternal Now of Him for Whom there can be no past and no future."—On the Auth. Vers. of the New Test., p. 143.

and voices and thunders.] See vv. ll. Cf. the imagery in Ex. xix. 16, which explains the reference in the word "voices," as to which commentators differ. De Wette and Ebrard would limit the imagery to God's power over Nature; to which Bisping adds His revelation by Nature to the reason of man,—Gen. i. 2; Ps. civ. 30: but the present description (cf. ch. viii. 5; xi. 19; xvi. 18) rather sets forth, as Dusterdieck observes, the unlimited power of God, as it is represented in the language of the Old Testament.

Aretius applied this clause of the verse to the Holy Spirit, in consequence of the use of the word "proceed,"—see John xv. 26.

And [there were] seven lamps of fire] Properly torches (λαμπάδες, cf. Ezek. i. 13, LXX.; Matt. xxv. 1, &c.; Acts xx. 8, cf. ch. viii. 10; John xviii. 3; and see on ch. i. 12). The former construction, as at the beginning of ver. 4, is resumed. Alford omits "there were," and understands, as before, a nominative after "behold" in ver. 2; see also verse 6.

which are the seven Spirits of God;] See on ch. i. 4. The peculiar expression "torches of fire" in this place, and the parallel expression "seven eyes" (ch. v. 6), point to the all-searching, all-illuminating operation of the Holy Spirit Who is beheld in this Vision under the symbol of the "Seven Lamps of Fire"—see on verse 2; and cf. Ps. cxxxix. 7; 1 Cor. ii. 10.

THE FOUR LIVING BEINGS (6-8).

6. and before the throne, as it were a sea of glass] Or a glassy sea. See vv. ll. The meaning is, either 'as if the material of the sea were of glass,' or as if it were in appearance transparent as crystal:—cf. ch. xv. 2; xxi. 18, 21. Perhaps the heavenly counterpart of the azure vault as seen from earth (Stern, s. 204). To the same effect De Wette compares Ex. xxiv. 10; Ezek. i. 26; and Dusterdieck's objection, that the sea is not beneath but before the throne, has not much force. Ebrard thinks that as the stormy sea represents the godless nations (ch. xvii. 15), so here the pure and calm sea represents Creation in its true relation to its Creator. Burger notes:—In Dan. vii. 2, 3 (cf. Isai. lvii. 20) the confusion of nations is represented by the winds striving upon the great sea; from whence, as in Rev. xiii. 1, the forms ascend which symbolize the successive Empires of the world. The troubled surface which Daniel beheld becomes, when seen before the throne of God, calm and clear; reflecting, as from a mirror, every fulfilment of the Divine purposes,—especially those which relate to the stability of the Church on earth, amid the commotion of Empires and of peoples. And thus, in absolute contrast, the dark and troubled sea of Daniel's vision, is here seen by St. John "as it were a sea of glass, like unto crystal." In ch. xv. 2, where the image recurs, the sea of glass is "mingled with fire," because the fiery wrath of God is hastening to the Judgment, and is there, in like manner, reflected from the untroubled surface of that sea.

De Burgh sees here and in ch. xv. 2 a reference to "the molten sea" or great laver of brass in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings vii. 23-26, 38), now introduced in order to typify the purification by baptism of all who are made kings and priests, see ch. v. 10:—so also Victorinus, Bede, De Lyra, &c.

like unto crystal;] Compare Ezek. i. 22,—"And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal."

Crystallus, "rock-crystal"—cf. ch. xxi. 11; xxii. 1. "The crystal (pure silica) is reckoned by Theophrastus (30) amongst the stones used in rings, where he speaks of it with the amethyst; adding 'both are transparent.' . . . The crystal was in enormous request amongst the luxurious Romans under the Empire for the purpose of making drinking-cups. . . Glass had been brought to such perfection when Pliny wrote, as to imitate the crystal with wonderful exactness. . . . This colourless transparent glass, approaching as nearly as possible to the true crystal, was much admired."—King, l. c., pp. 173, 178; see Pliny, H. N. l. xxxvii. 9, &c.

and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne,] Not as being under the throne, supporting it (Reuss), for they are free to move, see ch. xv. 7;—nor as bending over it, as it were overshadowing it (Hengst.);—nor "in medio illius aræ semicircularis quæ erat ante thronum" (Vitrunga);—nor again as De Wette and Bleek who regard the throne itself as being semicircular with two Cherubim at the centre, and two in the circumference behind (Bisping places one in the centre,

7 And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four beasts had each of three in the circumference of the semicircle);—but, one at each of the four sides of the throne, and in the middle of the side: so Zullig, Dusterd., &c. See ch. v. 6.

four living beings] (Omit "were;"—the constr. as before). We should not, with the A. V., render ζῶον by "beast," for this properly belongs to a different word, θηπλον, as in ch. vi. 8; xi. 7; &c. (compare the use of the two words in ch. xiv. 3, 9);—nor, as Alf. observes, can we well render ζῶα by "Living Creatures," as in the Authorized Version of Ezek. i. 5, on account of their being now conjoined with the idea of Creation in vv. 9, 11 (cf. ch. v. 13, 14);—but simply "Living Beings," a name which is both indefinite, and expresses the conception of Life as the symbol requires: see below on verse 8, and Note A at the end of this chapter.

full of eyes] In these Four Living Beings the Seer has combined the Seraphim of Isaiah vi. 2, 3 (from which description are borrowed the six wings as well as the Trisagion of ver. 8), and the Cherubim of Ezekiel (see Ezek. i. 5, 6; x. 5, 12)—whence, more directly, are borrowed the "Four Living Creatures," or "Beings," together with the "faces" (here separated, there united), as well as the "body full of eyes round about." See ch. xv. 7, where—apparently from before the throne (ch. xv. 2-4)—one of the Living Beings delivers to the Seven Angels the Seven Vials. See on ver. 8.

7. And the first living being [was] like a lion.] The constr. as in ver. 5. Alford, as before, omits "was;" and understands a nom. following "behold," in ver. 2. In Ezekiel (i. 6, 10; x. 14) the Cherubim have each "four faces"; here they have but one face each. For the etymology of the word Cherubim, and the traditional accounts respecting them, see Note B at the end of this chapter; and Note C on Gen. iii. 24.

and the second living being like a calf.] The noun here rendered "calf" (as also in Luke xv. 23; Heb. ix. 12—μῆσχος) denotes in the LXX. an ox, a steer: e. g. Ex. xxii. 1; Ezek. i. 10. It is used by Herod., ii. 41; iii. 28 for "a young bull,"—a form which the god Apis was believed to assume.

and the third living being had its face as of a man.] See vv. 11. In Ezek. i. 5, the human form predominates; and the form here seems to be the same,—cf. ch. v. 8; xix. 4 (so Vittr., Hengst.). Bengel, on the contrary, infers from this verse, not a human form, but a human countenance. All, however, that this verse tells us is that the human countenance was the characteristic of the third Living Being, as the characteristic of the fourth was to fly.

and the fourth living being [was] like a flying eagle.] See Note B.

These four forms are to be taken as the heads of the four classes of animated creatures—rational beings, birds, tame animals, and wild animals. That is, we have here, ideally represented, the collective, living Creation on which the judgments of the first four Seals (ch. vi. 1-8) are inflicted—each of the Living Beings inviting the Seer to behold. So also, when the wrath of God is poured out on the created Universe (ch. xv. 7; ch. xvi.), one of the Living Beings gives to the ministering Angels the Seven Vials. The number Four, too, is the recognized "signature" of the assemblage of created life: it is, in fact, the "signature" of the world (cf. ch. vii. 1; xxi. 13),—not of the world as "without form and void," but as a Cosmos, as the revelation of God so far as Nature can reveal Him; see Introd. § 11 (a). The later interpreters of these mysterious forms (Victorinus, Andreas, Beda) see in St. John himself the eagle that soars into the highest heaven, and looks upon the unclouded sun. In the words of Adam of St. Victor:—

"Coelum transit, veri rotam
Solis vidit, ibi totam Mentis figens aciem;
Speculator spiritualis
Quasi Seraphim sub alis, Dei vidit faciem."—ap. Trench, Sacred Latin Poetry, p. 71.

The earlier interpreters (e. g. Iren. iii. 11, 8) made St. Mark answer to the Eagle, and St. John to the Lion:—see Note B at the end of this chapter.

Mr. F. D. Maurice sees here "types of powers met with in the worship and the art of all the nations of the earth" (i. e., p. 76)—the Lion, the first Asiatic conqueror; the Calf, the worship of the Egyptian and the Hindoo; the Human figure, the ideal of the Greek; the Eagle, the dominion of Rome. The Seer beholds what was to prepare him for the downfall of his own country's worship. Each idolatry was a perversion of a truth. Each had its "eyes behind," which turned to Him that sat on the throne. The "eyes before" looked to the work of His hands."

8. And the four living beings.] See vv. 11. having each one of them six wings.] Gr. "one by one of them having six them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, ¹Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Al-¹mighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

¹Gr. they have no rest.

wings apiece" (see John ii. 6; ? viii. 9). The gender of the participle (masculine, ἐχων,—see vv. 11), is conformed to the personality of the Being signified:—see on verse 1. Cassiodorus (Complex. in Apoc., ap. Migne, t. lxx., p. 1408) explains the "six wings" as signifying "the Age of the world"—"qui tali numero compleri posse dignoscitur" (see Note A on ch. xx. 2, as to the six Ages of the World.)

are full of eyes round about and within:] See vv. 11. The statement of ver. 6 is repeated here, in order to include the wings, as in Ezek. x. 12:—around and inside each wing, and on the part of the body beneath it. Ewald and Hengst. refer "round about" to "before" in verse 6: and "within" to "behind," i.e., towards the throne. Reuss, who maintains that the throne was supported by the Four Living Beings (see Ezek. i. 26; Ps. xviii. 10), understands by "within" the part beneath the throne:—for the result of this erroneous interpretation see on ch. v. 8. The "six wings" in Isai. vi. 2 (each Seraph "with twain covered his face, and with twain covered his feet and with twain did fly,") denote awe, for the Living Beings dare not look upon God,—humility, for they stand in His presence,—obedience, for they are ready to execute His commands. The "eyes" on the whole body signify the never-resting, wakeful activity of organic life,—the vitality of organic Creation: see the next clause. After the fourth Seal (ch. vi. 7) and the Adoration in heaven (ch. vii. 11), the Four Living Beings again appear in ch. xiv. 3; xv. 7; xix. 4. When the state of perfection has arrived in which the Divine idea of Creation is realized (ch. xix. 6), they disappear from the Apocalypse.

and they have no rest, day and night, saying,] "Day and night" may be taken with "rest," or with "saying." Sleep is the brother of Death, and hence these emblems of organic Life know no sleep: the expression of their life is a never ceasing song of praise, Ps. xix. 1-3. Of this unceasing activity the "eyes," as stated above, are the symbol. As to the gender (masc.) of the participle "saying," see on ver. 1.

THE TRISAGION.

"Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God, the Almighty," Cf. ch. xv. 3. Or, "Holy, holy, holy [is] the Lord God, the Almighty." The Trisagion answers to the Hymn of the Seraphim in Isai. vi. 3. On the title, "the Almighty," see on ch. i. 8.

which was and which is and which is to come.] Or which cometh (ὁ ἐρχόμενος). See on ch. i. 4; and note the different order here—past, present, future. Some (e.g. I. Williams, p. 71) refer "which was" to the Creator; "which is" to the Redeemer; "which is to come" to the third Divine Person:—but cf. ch. xi. 17. See on ver. 10.

It is generally admitted that the Four Living Beings here, and in Ezek. i. 5, are of the same character as the Cherubim of the Tabernacle of Moses (Ex. xxv. 20; xxxvii. 9), and of the Temple of Solomon (1 Kings vi. 24). From this general pattern we cannot suppose that they greatly deviated. That pattern, as described in Ezek. i. 5, 10 (cf. Ezek. x. 1), consisted of four elements—a man, a lion, an ox, an eagle. When the different descriptions are compared, it results that the figure of the Cherub had no fixed, definite form; and that the conception was that of a symbolical image. Thus, in Ezek. i. 6; x. 14, each Cherub has four faces and four wings; and of the four faces of each, that only is precisely described which was in front, and presented itself first to the beholder. In Ezek. xli. 18, 19, "every Cherub had two faces." In Ex. xxv. 20, the faces look one to another and also "toward the Mercy-seat;" accordingly each could have had but one face. Nor is the description of either writer uniform. In Ezek. i. 10, there are four faces; in xli. 18, but two. In Ezek. x. 14, where it is said "the first face was the face of a Cherub," the rest of the verse shows that this was the face of an ox, first presented to the prophet's eye:—cf. also Ezek. x. 8, with Ezek. viii. 3, and i. 10, 11. In Ex. xxvi. 1, 31; xxxvi. 8, 35, the curtains of the Tabernacle were embroidered with coloured figures of Cherubim, and so was the Veil of the First Temple (2 Chron. iii. 14); in Ex. xxv. 20, 21 (cf. 1 Kings vi. 23-30) "two Cherubim of gold, of beaten work," covered "the Mercy-seat with their wings." And thus the representations of this symbol were not the same;—in the one case there was a picture, in the other a sculptured shape. They were also the mark or token of the furniture of God's house (1 Kings vi. 29, 35), where they are connected with palms and flowers, thus representing the animal and the vegetable creation united:—cf. Ezek. xli. 18, 19, 25. In Ezek. i. 18, 19, the "wheels" alone seem to be "full of eyes" (for the connexion of the Cherub with "wheels" cf. 1 Kings vii. 29, 30, 33; 1 Chron. xxviii. 18, "the chariot of the Cherubim"); here, and in Ezek. x. 12, the body also of the Cherub is included. This absence of fixed form excluded idolatry; for the indefiniteness of the whole conception proved that nothing more than a symbol was intended. The form varied according to circumstances—one or other element predominating with a view to what was signified; and hence it is not necessary to suppose that the form varied at different times. Accordingly, at any one period, there may have been four, or two, or one face,—six, or four, or two wings,—predominance given to this or that animal form (see Ezek. i. 5); provided that the four chief elements in any manner showed themselves. And thus, all four together formed but one existence, called by Ezekiel (in ch. i. 20, 21; x. 15, 20) “the living creature,” or “being” (Heb. חַיִּים—which the LXX. renders, in the first two places, by ζωή, “life,” and elsewhere by ῥῶον, as St. John in the Apocalypse). In fact, as the Cherub was but a symbol, and the only matter of moment was its meaning, its precise appearance and form were merely collateral details.

9 And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever,

This diversity of form, as well as the analogous forms to be found among other ancient peoples, has led Dillmann (Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon, art. Cberubim) to deny that any form was prescribed in the Mosaic revelation (see, however, Ex. xxv. 18–22). The texts Gen. iii. 24; Ps. xviii. 10 (“He rode upon a Cberub”); Ezek. xxviii. 14, taken together, as well as in connexion with kindred conceptions to be traced among different nations, render it probable that we have here to deal with a conception common, from the earliest times, to the Israelites and to other races. The similarity is adduced of the Indian Vishnu seated on the Garuda, described as a being “lighting up the whole world” (“sarvā vidyotayan diṣaḥ,”—Mabābbārata, i. 1239 ff.); and of the Greek Okeanos (Æsch., Prometh., 286) seated on the griffin (ib. 395).

As to the griffin (γρυψ) it has been noted that while the serpent from the earliest ages has been a symbol of both good and evil, and the dragon only of evil, the griffin is the symbol only of good (see Smith's Dict. of the Bible, and Dict. Christ. Antiq.; Jameson, Sacred and Leg. Art., p. xxxvi.).

The word Cberub, it should be observed, has no etymology in the Hebrew, or, generally, in the Semitic languages. Jewish theologians in the time of Christ—distinguishing them from the Angels generally, or Messengers of God, on account of their standing nearer to the throne, and on account of their name and form—placed the Cberubim, and the Seraphim (Isai. vi. 2), and the Ophanim (“wheels,” Ezek. i. 16), in the highest rank of spiritual beings in heaven: “Then the Seraphim, the Cherubim, and Ophanin surrounded it; these are those who never sleep [cf. Rev. iv. 8], but watch the throne of His Glory” (Book of Henoch, lxx. 9, Laurence's transl. p. 83; cf. lx. 13, p. 66).

Dillmann considers that all such conceptions, whether Jewish or Heathen, are to be traced back to Gen. iii. 24:—see Note A at the end of this chapter; and also Bähr, Symbolik des Mos. Cultus, i., s. 311 ff.

As no significance is attached in the Old Test. to any single element of the Cherubim, so in the Apoc. there is no special significance attached to any one of the Four Living Beings. Each of them may perform a distinct office (see ch. vi. 1–7; xv. 7), but it is in their combination only that the Living Beings symbolize animated Creation. Each of them represents the highest form of the different orders of created life.

The result, therefore, is that the throne of God is surrounded (1) by the Church of all time—symbolized in ver. 4 by the “Four and twenty Elders,” and (2) by His animated Creation—symbolized in ver. 6 by the “Four Living Beings” who represent the creaturely life of Nature. Hence, the grand doxology of the Church Universal or mankind redeemed, and represented by the Twenty-four Elders (vv. 10, 11),—a doxology of which Creation is the theme.

“Redemption” is first referred to in ch. v. 9.

9. And when the living beings shall give] “As often as (ὅταν), whensoever they shall give,”—the future tense implying the eternal repetition of the act: “a frequentative signification after the manner of the Hebrew imperfect” (Bisping); see Lücke, s. 451. De Wette insists on the force of the future, “henceforth, for all time to come,”—“previously, it was not so” (cf. ch. vii. 15–17); for not until the Redemption had been accomplished could the Church Universal (see on ver. 4) join in this adoration.

glory and honour and thanks] Compare ch. vii. 12.

to him that sitteth on the throne,] See on verse 2.

to him that liveth for ever and ever.] See on ch. i. 6:—the essential title of God, cf. verse 10; ch. vii. 2; Deut. xxxii. 40.

Reuss, who rejects the opinion that either Angels or created existences were intended by the author, sees in the Four Living Beings merely symbols of ‘force,’ ‘creative power,’ ‘wisdom,’ and ‘omniscience’:—“There is here an idea at once theological and philo-

10 The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

11 'Thou art worthy, O Lord,' ch. 5. 12. to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

sophical and above all profoundly true, under this figure of symbolized attributes proclaiming the glory of God, which the conception of created existences does not attain to."

10. the four and twenty elders] See ch. v. 8, 14; xi. 16; xix. 4.

shall fall down before him that sitteth on the throne, and shall worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and shall cast] The tenses fall down, and worship, and cast are all future,—see vv. 11., and on verse 9.

The words him that sitteth . . . him that liveth are repeated from verse 9, and give St. John's interpretation of the doxology in verse 8.

their crowns] The heavenly prize:—the emblem of immortality (see on ch. ii. 10);—or, it may be, which they wear as the Redeemed, as representatives of the victorious Church. Writers here quote Tacitus (Ann. xv. 29) who tells how Tiridates cast down his diadem ("insigne regium") in homage before the effigy of Nero: so also Dion Cassius (lib. xxxvi) tells how Tigranes cast down his diadem before Pompeius;—cf. Joseph. Antt. xv. 13. On this subject, see Note D on ch. ii. 10.

11. Worthy art thou, our Lord and our God,] See vv. 11. Some authorities add, the Holy one (ὁ ἅγιος,—so B, the Syriac, And"). Düsterdieck would restrict "our" to the twenty-four Elders as representing the Redeemed; but Alford justly replies that "Creation is only a part of Redemption"—see below. Compare the doxology in ch. xi. 17.

to receive all glory, and honour, and power:] Gr. "the glory and the honour, and the power:"—the article expresses universality (see on ch. i. 6; vii. 12), or, as Bengel notes, it may refer back to the ascription of "glory" &c. by the Living Beings in ver. 9. Düsterd., however, considers that the Living Beings there ascribe "thanksgiving" to their Creator; while the Elders here, although belonging to Creation, yet, looking on Creation from without, in place of "thanksgiving," render praise as a tribute to God's creative "power," which they proceed to specify in the words that follow. It may be noted that in ch. i. 6; v. 13, "dominion" (κράτος) is ascribed to God or Christ;—in ch. v. 12; vii. 12, "might"

(δύς);—here, "power" (δύναμις). God, it is true, has all "power" in heaven (see ch. xv. 8); but the world is not yet brought into subjection to the Divine power; and so we read of the ascription of "power" here, and in ch. v. 12; vii. 12; xii. 10; xix. 1, to God as due to Him on Earth. In ch. xi. 17, He is represented as having "taken" that "power."

for thou didst create all things,] The article before "all things," in the Greek, signifies that the Universe is meant. Creation, as has been noted above, is the theme of this doxology,—see on verse 8.

and because of thy will] Or, "by reason of," 'on account of' (διὰ τὸ θέλ., so Winer renders, § 49), cf. ch. i. 9; xii. 11; xiii. 14; John vi. 57:—Vulg. "propter voluntatem tuam."

they were,] See vv. 11. "They existed,"—implying the fact of being, as contrasted with previous non-existence. So in Gen. i. 3, "Let there be light, and there was light:"—not ἐγένετο, or ἐγενήθησαν, "came into being," as in Ps. xxxiii. 9, LXX. (De Wette, Hengst., Ebrard), which is but equivalent to "were created," in the next clause, and is not the sense of ἦσαν;—nor "in Thy eternal purpose, before they were created" (De Lyra);—nor "all things were, and were upheld, from the Creation to the present" (Bengel);—nor "were created, and [cf. the next clause] were created anew by Christ" (Grotius). See Düsterd. in loc.

and they were created.] These words give expression to the definite fact on which the statement "they were" depends.

Mede observes that this passage is the Eucharistic Hymn of the Ancient Liturgies. Hengst. notices the recurrence of the number three in vv. 8—10, viz. "Holy, Holy, Holy;" "Lord God Almighty;" "shall fall down," "shall worship," "shall cast."

Düsterdieck notices a reading of the uncial manuscript B, to which Ewald is favourable,—ὡς ἦσαν: "Cum non erant, creata sunt," i.e., "they were created out of nothing;" and Ewald, in his edition of 1861, further says of the reading which all good authorities support:—"ist so wenig Hebräisch oder sonst in irgend einer Sprache klar dass man nothwendig mit einigen Urkunden ὡς ἦσαν hinzusetzen muss."—s. 163.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. IV.

NOTE A ON VER. 3—THE JASPER, THE SARD, THE EMERALD.

The selection of these three stones as symbols of the Divine glory is in accordance with what early writers tell us of the estimation in which they were held by the ancients. Thus, Plato (Phebo, 110) speaks of the gems admired by the Greeks—the sard, the jasper, the emerald; and he describes the “true world” [Paradise] as a region in which all the rocks consist of that substance whereof the precious stones of this lower earth are but fragments that have escaped the universal ruin of all things here below. To regard the emerald as merely denoting the principal colour (so Ewald, Stern, Hengst., &c.); or, with Züllig, to take green together with the colours of the two other stones as the three fundamental colours of the common rainbow, does not suit the character of this description, in which the chief Figure glitters like “a jasper stone and a sard,”—His Nimbus, or Aureole, being an emerald bow. Hence, no sensible representation of Deity is given; and the glory in which God is veiled so dazzles the eye of the Seer, that the impression left by the most brilliant components of light alone remains (1 Tim. vi. 16). When Ewald speaks of this perfectly unique alternation of colours as typifying for St. John “a heavenly light never yet beheld,”—we hear the echo of Wordsworth’s famous line, “The light that never was on sea or land.” Ewald, indeed, writes of this description with enthusiasm;—the doctrine, so dear to St. John, of the mysterious Trinity suggests the choice of the three colours: “Who shall here speak (he continues) of a human countenance, or of a human form? Only an appearance as that of a rainbow, yet infinitely brighter than that of a rainbow, makes its nearness felt.” “As a sea was there,” notes I. Williams, “but of glass, so a rainbow, but of emerald.”

It is not necessary to dwell on the spiritual significations which have been discovered in this imagery: e.g., in ancient times (Victorinus, Primas, Bede), that, as the colour of water is green, and the sard is red, we have emblems of baptism and the deluge, and also of the judgment by fire;—or, in modern times (Ebrard), that the combined glitter of the jasper and the sard typifies the essential unity of God’s holiness and justice;—or, as suggested by Burger, that the green of the emerald, “which is the most beneficent colour of the rainbow,” symbolizes Hope.

NOTE B ON VER. 7—THE FOUR LIVING BEINGS.

The connexion of the Four Living Beings with the Cherubim of the ancient Tabernacle and Temple has been stated already:—it remains to point out the import of the symbol.

The ‘Living Beings’—the ζῶα of the Apocalypse—are manifestly borrowed from the חַיִּיִּם (ζῶα, LXX.) of Ezekiel (ch. i. and ch. x.). The Apocalypse here introduces (vv. 6–9), surrounding the Throne, a symbolical representation consisting of the same four elements which are described in Ezek. i. 10 (cf. Rev. v. 6–14; vi. 1–7; vii. 11; xiv. 3; xv. 7; xix. 4). These “Living Beings” (for which the Authorized Version erroneously substitutes “Beasts”) have nothing in common with the “beasts” of Rev. vi. 8, or the “wild beasts” of Mark i. 13; nor yet with the “Beast” of Rev. xi. 7; xiii. 1–18; xiv. 9, 11; xv. 2; xvi. 2, 10, 13; xvii. 3–17; xix. 19, 20; xx. 4, 10—in all which places the word θηρίον is used.

We read of the ceaseless movements of the ‘Four Living Beings’ both in the present passage, and in Ezek. i. 14;—while, in a still higher reference, the continuous action of the Godhead is ascribed to the fact that the Father and the Son “have life in themselves,” John v. 17–26. Absolutely and pre-eminently, the Cherubim are called “Living Beings.” The idea of life is essential to the symbol; and thus they naturally image forth those existences to which life in its chief sense belongs.

Further:—The four elements of which the symbol consists (ver. 7), are instances of animated creation: the ‘Living Being,’ therefore, or Cherub, in its true conception and regarded as a whole, is a symbol which represents, κατ’ εἶκοσιν, creaturely life;—which exhibits the most perfect and the fullest degree of created being;—and which stands at its highest grade.¹ The number four also, which is no arbitrary number in Jewish symbolism (see Introd. § 11, (a)), is the recognized signature of Creation, especially so far as it is the witness and manifestation of God. The Cherub, accordingly, is such a being as, standing at the head of created life, and uniting in itself the most perfect examples of created existence, is the formal manifestation of Divinely imparted life. This is illustrated by the nature of the four elements, as the Talmud (quoted by Spencer, De Legg. Hebr., iii. 5, 4, 2) explains: "Quatuor sunt superbi in mundo—Leo inter feras; Bos inter jumenta; Aquila inter volucres; Homo, vero, super omnia: at Deus eminent super universa."

¹ Hengstenberg (Comm. on Ezek., Append. p. 507, Eng. tr.) considers that as soon as we recognize in the Cherub the ideal unity of the animal creation, the interpretation of the word follows of itself: it means “as a multitude,”—viz. 4 (which does not belong to the root) and 20. The Jewish expositors, he thinks, did not perceive this, because they imagined that the Cherubim were of angelic nature: the truth being that they represent the animated creation on earth, while Angels are the “creatures” of heaven. Hence Jehovah “sitteth upon the Cherubim,” Ps. xcix., and He is “God of Hosts” (Sabaoth), Ps. lxxx. 15; the phrases being co-ordinate (ib., p. 503). Cf. 1 Sam. iv. 4.

Of the significance of the Ox regarded as symbolic of excellence among tame animals, the worship of Apis among the Egyptians is a proof. There was also an imitation of this form of idolatry among the Hebrews (to which they had already yielded while in bondage, Josh. xxiv. 14; Ezek. xx. 6-8) exhibited in "the molten calf" of Ex. xxxii. 4. As expressly stated by Philo (De Special. Legg., ii. p. 320) this form of idolatry was derived from an Egyptian origin; and it was again exhibited in the "sin" of Jeroboam (1 Kings xii. 28; 2 Kings x. 29). Preeminence among wild animals is assigned to the Lion (as instanced in the lions beside Solomon's throne, 1 Kings x. 19, 20) adopted as the natural symbol of sovereignty. The power of vision in the case of the Eagle (cf. also Ezek. x. 12; Rev. iv. 6, 8) is emblematic, in the Cherub, of the Divine omniscience; as his power of flight (cf. "a flying eagle," Rev. iv. 7), so constantly referred to in Scripture (e. g. Deut. xxviii. 49; Job ix. 26; Prov. xxiii. 5; Jer. iv. 13; Hab. i. 8), is emblematic of the Divine omnipresence. These characteristics, added to reason in Man, render the Cherub an ideal being, the type of Creation in its highest forms, and of Life in its most perfect energy: and so all the four חַיִּים, חַיִּים, of Ezekiel i. 5—the "living creatures" of A. V.—are represented by that Prophet, in ver. 20, as one חַיִּים, חַיִּים, Life. As the entire Creation is a witness to the Divine power of life, so the Cherub, concentrating in its four elements the highest created energies, appears as one individual symbol representative of all animated existences; testifying to the power, majesty, omniscience, omnipresence, and absolute wisdom of God, as manifested by the universe of created Life. This testimony, we here (Rev. iv. 8, 9; v. 11-14) learn, is unceasingly borne by "the Four Living Beings;" and the idea which their forms symbolize is expressed in the words of Ps. ciii. 22, "Bless the Lord, all His works, in all places of His dominion." The Cherubim always appear in Scripture the ministers of the Divine will, just as Creation is bound to obey it. Thus we find the Cherubim (1) at the Gate of Eden—Eden the state of Life—and placed there "to keep the way of the Tree of Life" (Gen. iii. 24; Ezek.

xxviii. 11-16); and (2) surrounding, as here, the mystic throne of God:—observe if God sits upon His throne (1 Kings xxii. 19; Ps. ix. 4) He sits on the Cherubim (1 Sam. iv. 4; 2 Sam. vi. 2; 2 Kings xix. 15; 1 Chron. xiii. 6; Ps. lxxx. 1; Isai. xxxvii. 16).

In Rev. v. 8, 11, the "Living Beings" are specially distinguished from Angels, who utter a song of praise of their own. The later Jews, however, seem to have considered the Cherubim to be of Angelic order; for in place of the Four Living Beings of Ezekiel and St. John, the book of Enoch (ch. xl. 9) places around the Throne the four Archangels, Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, Phanuel:—and R. Eliezer (Pirke) says that the four Cherubim of Ezekiel are these four Archangels, as leaders and representatives of the four Angelic Orders. Elliott, too (Hor. Apoc. i. 87-92), still insists that their nature is the "angelic, or is-angelic state of the glorified Church:—in reply to which opinion ch. vii. 11 is conclusive, where the Four Living Beings are distinguished from "all the Angels."

The following meanings have also been assigned:—The Four Living Beings represent (a) The four Evangelists, or Gospels (see on ver. 7). According to the earliest commentator Victorinus, the Man is St. Matthew; the Lion is St. Mark; the Calf is St. Luke; the Eagle is St. John: and so St. Jerome, Proem. super Ev. Matt.;—with St. Irenæus (iii. 11, 8), St. Mark and St. John here change places;—with St. Augustine (De Cons. Ev. i. 6), St. Matthew and St. Mark are interchanged;—with St. Athanasius (Synops. Script., t. ii. p. 202), the order of St. Mark and St. Luke is inverted. And thus we see that this system of explanation is purely arbitrary, however generally it may have been adopted. Words. (see on ver. 4), I. Williams (who does not specify the particular Evangelists), and others understand generally by the symbol "The four Gospels;" and I. Williams (p. 70) thinks it probable that the origin of this symbol "is connected with Assyrian hieroglyphic."¹ (b) The four Patriarchal Churches:—The Man is Alexandria, the seat of learning;

Hengstenberg (l. c., i. 501) would infer that this symbol belongs, in its origin, not to the province of revelation but to that of natural religion.

¹ In the article Cherubim, in the Encyclopædia Britannica (9th ed., 1876), it is stated that "fresh light" has been thrown upon this subject from the cuneiform inscriptions. Combining Ps. xviii. 10; 2 Sam. xxii. 11; Deut. xxviii. 49, the writer infers that "the cherub was either an eagle or a quadruped with eagle's wings. This result would seem to justify connecting the word with the Assyrian kurubu, a synonym of kurukku, or karakku, the 'circling' bird,—i. e., according to Friedrich Delitzsch, the vulture." On the other hand Ezekiel (xxviii. 13-16) describes him "as the attendant and

¹ From this early reference to the Cherubim
New Test.—VOL. IV.

the Lion is Jerusalem, exhibiting constancy in the faith, Acts v. 29; the Calf is Antioch, "quia primo in ea vocati sunt discipuli Christiani;" the Eagle is Constantinople, the See of such men as Gregory Naz. (De Lyra). (c) The four great Apostles,—Peter, James the Lord's brother, Matthew, and Paul as "the Eagle" (Grotius). (d) As the standards of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, Dan (Num. ii.)

guard rather than as the bearer of Deity." "Now, according to a talismanic inscription copied by Lenormant, kirubu is a synonym for the steer-god, whose winged image filled the place of guardian at the entrance of the Assyrian palaces;" in Ezek. i. 10, one of the four faces of a cherub was that of an ox; "we should, therefore, connect the word cherub primarily with the Assyrian kirubu, but also, as proposed above, with kurubu. The two forms seem to be co-ordinate and expressive of some quality common to the king of birds and the colossal steer. Their etymology is altogether uncertain." Of parallels to the Cherubim to be found outside the Hebrew religion, the most complete "is that of the winged γρυπές (griffins, a secondary form of kerubim), who not only watched over the treasures of the gods (cf. Herod. iv. 13, 116), but were also the bearers of Deity, if at least Plutarch and Eustathius may be followed in identifying the τρεπασκελὴς οἰωνός of Æschylus (Prom. 395), with the griffin" (see Hermann, ad loc.).

represented the Church of the Old Test., so the Four Living Beings represent the Church of the New Test. (Mede). (e) The four Gospels and also the four cardinal Virtues (Andreas);—the four Virtues of the Apostles (Alcasar);—the four mysteries of the faith, the Incarnation, Passion, Resurrection, Ascension (Aretius);—the four faculties of the human soul, "Homo est vir rationalis; Leo irascibilis; Bos concupiscibilis; Aquila conscientia" (Corn. à Lap.). (f) The four Orders—"pastorum," "diaconorum," "doctorum," "contemplantium" (Joachim); or, as Vitringa, all the doctors of the Church. (g) Finally, the four Beings in Ezekiel, notes Renan (L'Antechrist, p. 381) symbolize the attributes of Divinity—wisdom, power, omniscience, creation.

On the symbolism as explained in the text, see Bähr, l. c., i. s. 340–360, whose results are accepted by De Wette, Züllig, Hengst., Düsterd., Alf. &c. Ebrard only differs in regarding the Four Living Beings as symbolic not of Creation itself but of the creative power of God. Stern also asks "May we not refer the Cherubim of the New Covenant to the chief influences on the spiritual life of Divine Grace within the Church?" Yet in his explanation of ver. 9 (s. 209) he takes them to represent "all the creaturely life of Nature"—"alles creatureliche Leben der Natur," as above.

CHAPTER V.

1 The book sealed with seven seals: 9 which only the Lamb that was slain is worthy to open. 12 Therefore the elders praise him, 9 and confess that he redeemed them with his blood.

AND I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a [Ver. 4 om. ἐγώ.—om. καὶ ἀναγνώσκει. Ver. 5 om. ὦν.—om. λῦσαι. Ver. 6 [A reads καὶ ἰδοὺ, which N, B, P, 1 omit].—om. τὰ before ἀπεσταλ. [A reads ἀπεσταλμένοι]. Ver. 7 om. τὸ βιβλίον. Ver. 8 κυθάραν. Ver. 9 [N, B, P read ἡμᾶς, which A omits.—cf. ver. 10]. Ver. 10 αὐτοὺς [Erasmus, without the authority of any MS., altered the reading of his codex into ἡμᾶς, after the nos of the Vulg.].—βασιλείαν.—βασιλευουσιν [N, P, 1 read βασιλεύουσιν,—but Erasmus, followed by Luther and the A. V., altered this reading of his codex into βασιλευομεν, after the regnabimus of the Vulg.]. Ver. 11, καὶ τ. ζ., καὶ τ. πρεσβ., καὶ ἦν ὁ ἀριθμὸς αὐτῶν μυριάδες μυριάδων καὶ χιλ. χ., κ. τ. λ. [The codex of Erasmus reads καὶ τῶν ζῶν καὶ χιλιάδων λέγοντες. Here, Er. inserted merely καὶ πρεσβυτέρων (without the art.) after the Vulgate "et seniorum." The Textus Receptus reads καὶ τ. ζ. καὶ τ. πρεσβ. καὶ χιλ. χ. λέγοντες. The Vulgate: "et erat numerus eorum millia millium, dicuntur"]. Ver. 13, om. the 1st ἐστίν.—ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.—om. ἃ [A reads ἐστίν].—[N, B, P read λέγοντας,—A. 1 read λέγοντα].—[A, B read τῷ θρόνῳ,—N, P, 1 read τῷ θρόνῳ]. Ver. 14 om. εἰσοσπείσσας.—om. ὧντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων [Both insertions were introduced into the reading of his codex by Erasmus—followed by Luther, and the A. V.—after the Vulgate, "Ei viginti-quatuor seniores ceciderunt in facies suas: et adoraverunt viventem in secula seculorum"].]

CHAP. V.

The manifestation of God described in the fourth chapter (see on ch. iv. 2), is now followed, as an introduction to the Visions which disclose the future of the Divine Kingdom, by a revelation of the majesty and glory of Jesus Christ in presence of book written within and on the back-side, sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is the Hosts of heaven, and of the representatives of assembled Creation. After the Vision of the ideal Church, comes the Vision which shows how the great mystery is to be fulfilled. Of that mystery the Book with the Seven Seals is the type. The Seal is the symbol of an event still hidden in mystery, but Divinely decreed; and this image is borrowed from Isaiah xxix. 11, 12.

Apart from this reference to Isaiah, and a few other references to the earlier prophets, the entire conception of this Vision is original and peculiar to St. John.

THE SEALED BOOK (1-7).

In ch. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xx. 12, 15; xxi. 27, we read of "the Book of Life,"—that Book of God's counsels of Mercy out of which the Redeemed are to be judged (cf. Ex. xxxii. 32; Ps. lvi. 8; cxxxix. 16; Dan. xii. 1; Phil. iv. 3). Here we read of the secret counsels of God as to His Kingdom, of which the mystery—to be disclosed only by a special revelation—is symbolized by the sevenfold Sealing (cf. ch. x. 4; xxii. 10; Isai. xxix. 11; Dan. xii. 4, 9). Christ alone, the Revealer of God's counsels, can unfold this mystery. See ver. 9, and compare ch. i. 1.

1. And I saw] See on ch. iv. 1; as there stated, a particular feature of the Vision is now introduced.

upon the right hand] Not "in the right hand" (Vulg., Vit., Hengst.)—in favour of which ch. xvii. 8 and ch. xx. 1 are appealed to; nor, "on the right side of Him that sitteth" (Ebrard)—which ver. 7 proves to be an error; but, according to the usage of the Apocalypse, "upon" the hand from which the Book is taken (ἐνί, with an accus.:—see on ch. i. 20). It lay upon the open hand for him to take who might be "worthy"—see ver. 7, and cf. ch. xx. 1.

of him that sat on the throne] See on ch. iv. 2.

a book written within and on the back] See on ch. i. 11. Cf. "a roll of a book," Jer. xxxvi. 2;—"it was written within and without," Ezek. ii. 9, 10. "The back" or outside of a roll of parchment was written on when its inner side was full (ὑποσθόγραφον, Lucian, Fit. Auction., 9;—"a tergo," Juv., Sat. i. 6;—"in aversa charta," Martial. viii. 22;—"commentarios opisthographos," Plin., Ep. iii. 5).

Grotius renders: "written within; sealed without" ("intus scriptum, extra signatum").

In this fulness of the Roll commentators see an emblem of the completeness of the contents—an idea which is also implied by the number Seven of the Seals. Origen's commentary on St. John's Gospel opens with a reference to this place: "The Book written within," illustrates the spiritual; that written "on the back," the literal sense (Opp., vol. iv. p. 1). Compare the Tables of the Law, Ex. xxxii. 15. Elliott needlessly understands by the writing "within and on the back," two divisions of written matter:—(1) The writing "within," he considers, described the three contemporaneous Visions which follow, the first part consisting of ch. vi. and ch. vii.; the second part of ch. viii. 1—ch. ix. 19; the third part of ch. ix. 20—ch. xi. 19. (2) The supplementary part (ch. xii. 1—ch. xiv. 8), or that which was written "on the back" of the Roll, contained the account of the rise and character of the Beast from the Abyss, or Papal Rome (L. c., vol. i. p. 114; vol. iii. p. 4): see the remarks introductory to ch. xii. Compare also Mr. G. S. Faber's division of the Apocalypse already quoted, Introd. § 12, (2), note³. See within on ch. x. 8, and ch. xv. 1.

close-sealed with seven seals.] Or sealed down,—the verb is found only here. The end of the parchment is fastened down by the Seals to its staff, so that the Roll cannot be opened: cf. Luke iv. 17, where our Lord unrolls the Book. A profound mystery is hereby denoted,—see Deut. xxxii. 34. All the Seals are visible to St. John: each involves its own mystery; and the opening of each is followed by a special Vision—e. g. ch. vi. 2; but "nought could be read in the Book till after the unsealing of all the Seven Seals" (C. à Lapide). Cassiodorus explains: "Iste septem sigillis, id est Septiformi Spiritu, conspicietur esse signatus; quia mysteria Domini usque ad tempus præfinitum habentur semper incognita."—Complex. in Apoc., p. 409. Düsterd. considers that, as each Seal is opened, the Vision which follows symbolizes a portion of the contents of the Roll; and that the Roll embraces all "the determinate counsel of God," but is itself not read. Alford concludes that the successive openings of the Seals "are but so many preparations for that final state of perfection in which the Lamb shall reveal to the Church the contents of the Book itself;" but that what the Book shall thus reveal is not stated by St. John. Schleiermacher observes that there is no ground for regarding this as "the Book of Destiny," for all that is said refers to the "Seals," not to the "Book" (Einl. ins N. Test., s. 459).

We have no materials for judging of the contents of the Sealed Book. Even were the worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and events prophesied in this Book disclosed in the Visions which follow the opening of the several Seals,—and thus the contents of the Book itself expressed figuratively,—all must still remain a mystery; inasmuch as the disclosure is made through images and symbols, the full signification of which the final accomplishment alone can reveal. Bishop Wordsworth, on the other hand, writes:—"When one Seal is broken, a portion of the Roll is unwrapped and its contents are disclosed; then a second Seal is broken; and so on, till the Seven Seals are opened. . . . This Roll reveals a brief view of the successive sufferings of the Church of Christ from St. John's age to the end of the world." To the same effect Elliott and others;—viz., that we have Seven distinct writings, each sealed with one Seal, and each manifesting its own revelation. As to what the Roll itself represents, Dr. J. H. Todd (Lectures on the Apoc., p. 91) reckons up sixteen different opinions; and he gives the enumeration as incomplete. Victorinus takes the Book to be the Old Testament; and explains that none but Christ (ver. 5) could preach what had previously required the typical teaching of sacrifices and various oblations. The opinion of many ancient and modern writers (see above) that the Roll contained the sum of the Divine counsels (Acts ii. 23), however unsatisfactory, necessarily includes the majority of the less comprehensive interpretations:—e.g. that what was written within signified the New Testament, and what was written on the back the Old (Primas., Beda, &c.); or that the Roll gave an account of the rejection of the Jews (Grotius, Hammond, Wetstein). Hengst. (after Schöttgen) regards "the Seals-group," ch. vi. 1—ch. viii. 1, as expressing the whole contents of the Roll, arguing that ch. iv. and ch. v. lead us to look for nothing but God's judgments on His enemies (Alcasar similarly explains ch. vi. 1—ch. xi. 19). Others, however, understand that from the seventh Seal (ch. viii. 1) a further development proceeds on to the very end, until which time the seventh Seal continues—the Visions which follow being "evolved," as it were, from this Seal, and "the patience and the faith of the saints" who wait for the day of the Lord (ch. xiii. 10; xiv. 12) being thus exercised. According to Mede (l. c., p. 458), however, the Trumpets alone are "evolved" from the seventh Seal, which is "the Seal of the Trumpets;" and he understands this Sealed Book as containing the destiny of the Roman Empire, and the "Little Book" of ch. x. 2, 8 as containing the destiny of the Church. Burger also concludes that the contents of the "Sealed Book" are made known as soon as the seventh Seal is broken (ch. viii. 1); and that these contents are represented in the Seven Trumpet Visions.

As a "Futurist," Todd (l. c., p. 98) relying upon ch. x. 8, Ezek. ii. 9, together with Ps. xl. 7 and Heb. x. 7, considers that the Roll "denotes the office or commission with which our Lord shall be invested, and in virtue of which He shall come again in glory to judge the world;"—and to the same effect De Burgh (p. 130), who takes the Sealed Book, and the whole Apocalypse itself, to be solely occupied with the account of the last great Crisis.

Mr. Maurice, as a "Preterist," takes the Sealed Book to be "the expression of God's purpose and will;" adding: "The belief that there is such a Book in such a hand, has sustained the strongest, sternest minds among men; it has enabled them to endure the world's despair and their own" (l. c., p. 84).

The truth is that we do not read of any connexion between the opening of the Seals and the reading of the Book or Roll; nor, indeed, does the text state that the Roll was unfolded.

2. a mighty angel] As in ch. x. 1; xviii. 21: either as being of higher rank (De Wette, Stern, Zullig:—De Lyra specifies the Angel Gabriel); or with reference to that "great voice" which rings through Creation.—see ch. x. 3; xviii. 2.

proclaiming with a great voice, Who [is worthy]. Morally entitled, as John i. 27; cf. Matt. viii. 8.

On the absence of the verb substantive here (N, A, P omit ἔστιν), see Intro. § 7, IV. (d).

3. And no one in the heaven, or on the earth, or under the earth,] Grotius explains "under the earth" by the sea (cf. Ex. xx. 4, ὑποκάτω, LXX.).—but the evident meaning is the whole realm of Creation, cf. ver. 11: Phil. ii. 10. Ebrard understands Hades, the place of departed souls (not of demons).—compare Isai. xiv. 9, &c.

or to look thereon.] As illustrating the fact that no one "was able to open the Book," Origen compares Rom. iii. 10—12.

4. And I] The pronoun is not expressed.—see vv. 11: commentators, however, who to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, ^{Gen. 49.} the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, read the pronoun, explain that it is emphatic, "I, on my part"—under the circumstances related in vv. 2, 3.

was weeping much, because no one] I. e., because the promise of ch. iv. 1, seemed likely to fail:—"Without tears," writes Bengel, "the Revelation was not written, neither without tears can it be understood." Hengstenberg's idea that there is here a weakness of faith on St. John's part cannot for a moment be entertained. The Seer was waiting in the humility of faith until the Lamb had opened the Roll; cf. Matt. xxiv. 36; Mark xiii. 32; Acts i. 7.

"The Seer, when he wept," notes Mr. Maurice (according to the "Preterist" theory), "might have hoped that the open Book would have told him the judgment on the great Babel-empire of the world; that the seventh Trumpet might have announced the fall of Rome. No! when it sounds, Jerusalem will fall" (p. 186).

worthy to open the book, or to look thereon:] Omit the words, "and to read"—see vv. 11.

The interpretation of ch. iii. 7 given by Irenæus is to be noted here,—see in loc.

5. and one of the elders] Representing, as Vittr. notes, the body of the Elders—the Church. Of course attempts have been made to determine which of the Elders is the speaker:—some fix upon St. Matthew, in whose Gospel (xxviii. 18) the omnipotence of Christ is declared; De Lyra says St. Peter, who had already died as a martyr. Cf. ch. vi. 1, where one of the Living Beings in like manner addresses the Seer. On the form of expression "one of the Elders" (εἰς ἐκ τῶν) see John vi. 8; Matt. xxvi. 14; and cf. ch. xvii. 11.

behold.] To which corresponds "And I saw," ver. 6.

the Lion which is of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David.] (Omit ὧν—see vv. 11.). Cf. Gen. xlix. 9; Isai. xi. 1, 10; Rom. xv. 12; Heb. vii. 14:—this harmony of remote texts illustrates the fact that Scripture is "one organized whole."

hath conquered, to open the book] Cf. ch. vi. 2. According to the usage of the Apocalypse, the verb "to conquer," "to overcome," is to be taken absolutely—as e. g. in ch. ii. 7, 11, 17, and especially in the full sense of ch. iii. 21. It denotes here the past victory of Christ ("Victor fuit in Resurrectione"—De Lyra). This, although not expressed, appears not only from the epithets applied, but also from the interpretation given in ver. 9,—"because Christ is the Lamb Who was slain, He has gained the right, and is therefore worthy to open the Book." This is a pregnant construction; "He conquered, [so as] to open,"—"the infin. epexegetic," see Winer, § 44; cf. ch. i. 1. "The glory of opening the Book of God's counsels . . . is one part of the 'Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him' of Phil. ii. 9" (Vaughan, l. c., p. 143). Like Irenæus (see on ver. 4) Origen also refers here to ch. iii. 7. On the other hand, many (e. g. Vittr., Bengel, Ewald) take the words in the same sense as the A. V., viz. "hath prevailed to open" ("obtinuit id quod tu desperandum putabas," Grot.), referring to the analogy of the Hebrew—e. g. Ps. li. 4 (l. 6, LXX., νικᾷν). But ch. iii. 21 is sufficient, of itself, to decide that the former is the correct sense; and hence the fitness of "one of the Elders"—one of those who know the fruit of the Redemption—being chosen to indicate that Christ, exalted to His Throne, is the impartor of all Revelation.

and the seven seals thereof.] The words "to loose" are to be omitted—see vv. 11. The reading of the uncial MS. B (ὁ ἀνοίγων)—"He that openeth the Book and the Seven Seals thereof hath overcome"—does not alter the sense here adopted, and adds another epithet to Christ.

6. And I saw] What the Elder (ver. 5) had announced. A new feature of the vision is introduced—see on ch. iv. 1. Omit "and, lo"—see vv. 11. Or render (with A) And behold, in the midst, &c.

in the midst of the throne and of the four living beings, and in the midst of the elders.] Not "on the throne" (as Ebrard), viz. "sitting in the midst, on the throne, at the centre of two concentric circles, the inner formed by the four Living Beings, the outer consisting of the twenty-four Elders,"—which is forbidden by the fact that the Lamb is seen "standing," and by ver. 7; but, as Dusterd., who refers to ἀναμείνον, ch. vii. 17, and to ἐν μέσῳ in ch. xxii. 2 as here; and who relies upon the repetition of "in the midst" as a Hebrew idiom (cf. Lev. xxvii. 12, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

14, LXX.), explains—'In the space in the centre which is the throne together with the four Living Beings (as in ch. iv. 6); and which is surrounded, as its outward limit, by the circle of the twenty-four Elders' (ch. iv. 4). Or we may understand (as De Wette), before the throne on "the glassy sea;" or (as Bleek), within the semicircle of the throne, and therefore "in the midst of the Elders" also.

a Lamb] This epithet (ἀρνίον) is applied to our Lord twenty-nine times in the Apoc.,—the word occurring elsewhere in the N. T. only in John xxi. 15, where our Lord says, "Feed my lambs." The other form (ἀρνίς) of this epithet is found only in John i. 29, 36, and in Acts viii. 32, where it is borrowed from Isai. liii. 7 (LXX.):—see also 1 Pet. i. 19. Alford observes (Prolegg., p. 228) that this personal name, the Lamb, in whatever form, is common only to the Apoc. and the Fourth Gospel. On the difficulty which has been raised respecting the authorship of the Apocalypse, owing to the application of this name under its different forms to Christ, see Intro., § 7, IV. (c).

The diminutive form (Arnion) which is employed here brings forward more suggestively, as De Wette points out, the idea of meekness and innocence:—Christ had just been spoken of as a "Lion;" He now appears as "a Lamb." Lucke (s. 678) contrasts this use of the diminutive, as well as the reference contained in the word "slain," with the idea of power conveyed by the symbol of "the Seven Horns." See Words., quoted on ch. xi. 7.

standing,] I. e., in posture as if living. St. John now sees, what he had already heard, ch. i. 18; cf. Rom. vi. 9: the Lamb is beheld standing as in life, and yet—as though it had been slain,] For the verb cf. Ex. xii. 6; and see on ch. vi. 4. This verb (σφάττω), found eight times in this Book and "used, so to speak, as a vox solennis, with a special fulness of meaning," occurs elsewhere in the New Test. only in 1 John iii. 12, where it is "designed to exhibit before the reader's eyes the unmitigated fearfulness of the act of Cain:"—cf. Haupt on 1 John iii. 12. See Intro., § 7, IV. (f).

As though it had been slain, i. e., bearing in His body the marks of His sacrificial death—the print of the nails and the wound of the spear (see ch. i. 7, and John xx. 20, 27; Luke xxiv. 39), tokens which shall also fill His enemies with terror (ch. vi. 16). The words "as (though) it had been" mark the contrast between "standing" and "slain"—the former setting forth the Lord's risen life (cf. ch. i. 18); the latter the abiding power of His sacrificial death. Wordsworth contrasts the words "as though it had been slain" of ch. xiii. 3.

The Lamb has a double emblem—seven horns,] The first emblem. This denotes universal dominion (Matt. xxviii. 18); the Horn—an idea borrowed from the strength of the ox—being the symbol of power (cf. Deut. xxxiii. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 1; 1 Kings xxii. 11; Luke i. 69), and the number Seven the "signature" of perfection:—see Intro., § 11. This symbol is applied (but with different accessories) to beings of very opposite qualities: to the Lamb as here;—in ch. xii. 3 to the Red Dragon and in ch. xiii. 1 to the Beast from the sea, who have each Ten Horns. As being well known from its frequent occurrence in the Old Testament, this symbol is not explained by St. John, as are the and seven eyes,] The second emblem of the Lamb:—the symbol of perfect knowledge. Cf. Zech. iii. 9; iv. 10.

See the notes on Dan. viii. 5, 6, which refer to the symbol of strength and intelligence, still to be seen on the sculptures at Persepolis—the goat with "a notable Horn between his eyes." which are the seven Spirits of God,] I. e., the "Seven Eyes" are the "Seven Spirits," as we learn from ch. i. 4; iii. 1; iv. 5, compared with Zech. iii. 9; iv. 10. See 2 Chron. xvi. 9.

Bengel and De Wette would include the "Seven Horns" also in the explanation—which is not grammatically impossible (Alf.).

Besides omniscience, this emblem also denotes the active operation of Godhead, whereby the Divine energy works on and in the world. Both symbols conjoined signify the plenitude of omnipotence and omniscience. And thus we learn "the position occupied by the Saviour in Heaven, as the Lamb that was slain;" and then "the presence in all the earth of that Divine Spirit, Who is the very eye of Christ."—Vaughan, l. c., p. 156. The symbolism also expresses the relation of the Divine Spirit to the Lamb,—for "the Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son."

Henceforth "the Seven Lamps of fire" (ch. iv. 5) are no more seen before the throne.

sent forth] See vv. 11.

7. And he came, and he taketh [it]. Omit "the Book"—see vv. 11. The perfect (ἐλάφειν), as in ch. vii. 14; viii. 5, is used for

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of 'odours,^{1 Or. incense.} which are the prayers of saints.

"the narrative aurist,"—see Winer, s. 340, who compares 2 Cor. i. 9; ii. 12, 13; xi. 25; Hebr. xi. 28. If the force of the perfect tense, occurring here among the aurists, be given—as appears to be more natural—viz. "and he hath taken it," the description becomes highly dramatic; see ch. xi. 17. To ask (as Vittr.) how the Lamb could take? or to speak (as Stuart) of "æsthetical difficulties," is to overlook the principle that the symbols of Scripture are not capable of sensible representation,—see on ch. iv. 3, 7. Ebrard insists on the sense "received," as suiting the relation of the Son to the Father.

The Book is taken as it lay upon the open hand, see on ver. 1.

that sat on the throne.] See on ch. iv. 2. Christ knows that it is His office to take the Book, and that He has the power to open it.

THE WORSHIP IN HEAVEN (8-14).

8. And when he took the book,] In ver. 7 this same verb is in the perfect tense: here, the aurist has rather its own force than that of the pluperfect, "be had taken," as in the A. V. In support of the pluperfect Düsterd. refers to Matt. vii. 28; and to ch. vi. 1, 3, &c.

It now became known that it was the Lamb who was worthy to unseal the Roll,—see ver. 2.

the four living beings and the four and twenty elders] They who in ch. iv. represent animated Creation and redeemed Humanity, and who had adored God the Father, before the throne, in alternate hymns of praise. These now unite, with one voice, in adoring the Lamb, for He shares the homage paid to "Him that sitteth on the throne" (ver. 13), as He shares the throne itself (ch. iii. 21; xxii. 1). And thus the doctrine is here represented typically, which St. Paul had expressed in words—see Phil. ii. 8-11. To this united hymn of praise the host of Angels returns the response in ver. 12.

For the interpretation of Reuss, who takes the Elders ("vieillards") to represent the celestial priesthood, see on ch. iv. 4.

fell down before the Lamb,] In that tone of sarcasm which marks his commentary, Reuss notes that the image here is not allied to those which have preceded, "car les animaux portant le trône de Dieu ne sauraient se jeter à terre sans ébranler ce dernier." It is his own exegesis, however, which is at fault—see on ch. iv. 4, 8.

having each one a harp,] (See vv. 11).

Writers here also raise "æsthetical difficulties" as to assigning harps to the Four Living Beings described in ch. iv. 7;—needlessly, as noted above on ver. 7. It is more to the point to urge that the Elders alone seem to be intended here,—inasmuch as they, being representatives of the Church, are better suited to offer up "the prayers of the saints" than the symbolic representatives of Creation (cf. ch. xiv. 2, &c.; xv. 2): so Düsterd.

On the "Harps" and "Vials," see note A at the end of this chapter.

and golden vials] The "vial" or "bowl" (Lat. patena)—a word common in classical Greek—was a broad, flat, shallow cup. The LXX. use it to express the "bason" (Ex. xxvii. 3) or "bowl" (Zech. ix. 15; xiv. 20) of the Authorized Version, which was a vessel used for receiving the blood of the sacrifices, and casting it upon the Altar. The reference here is to the use, in the Temple worship, of incense-cups (A. V. "spoons," i.e., small gold cups—see the note on Ex. xxv. 29) to receive the frankincense (ch. xviii. 13) which, lighted with coals from the Brazen Altar that stood in the court immediately in front of the Tabernacle (see the notes on Ex. xxvii. 1-3), was offered on the Golden Altar before the Veil (Ex. xxx. 1-9):—see ch. viii. 3; cf. Ezek. viii. 11. The word "vial" is employed in the classical sense of κατήρη in ch. xv. 7:—cf. ch. xiv. 10.

full of incense,] Minute directions were given (see Ex. xxx. 34-36) for the composition of the symbolical incense; the use of which, like the prayer which it represented, belonged to Jehovah alone (Ex. xxx. 37, 38). The High Priest was to renew and kindle it every morning and evening (Ex. xxx. 7, 8); and in the service of the second Temple all priests offered it by lot,—see Luke i. 9. In the typical worship of the Old Testament, the ascending smoke of the burnt offering—"the sweet savour unto Jehovah" (see the note on Lev. i. 9)—and especially of the incense was the symbol of prayer: Lev. xvi. 12, 13; Ps. cxli. 2; Isai. vi. 4; Luke i. 9, 10:—cf. Acts x. 4; Tobit xii. 15. See Note A at the end of this chapter, and Note C on ch. viii. 3.

which are the prayers of the saints.] By the "saints," here as elsewhere, are to be understood all the members of the Church of God (ch. xi. 18; xiii. 7; cf. Eph. ii. 19).

De Wette, Ebrard, Düsterd., Alf. take the word vials to be the antecedent to "which;"—but ch. viii. 3 as well as the analogy of Hebrew symbolism fix the reference to 9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10 And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

θυμιάματα, incense, the gender of the article (feminine) presenting no difficulty, e. g. ch. iv. 5; Mark xv. 16; 1 Tim. iii. 15. See Winer, § 24, s. 150; and Introd., § 7, IV., (f).

8. And they sing a new song,] “New” (see on ch. ii. 17, and cf. ch. xiv. 3), because, previously to the redeeming work of Christ, the earlier Church, though it also is represented by the Elders, could not have uttered this song. A new point is now attained in the development of God’s kingdom—namely, the accomplishment of that work of redemption, as stated in what follows. The comment of Victorinus is that the New Testament is now added to the Old.

The present tense, “sing,” denotes the never-ceasing worship of heaven,—see on ch. iv. 2, 8. Cf. Ps. xxxiii. 3; xl. 3; xcvi. 1; &c. saying, Worthy art thou] See ver. 12; and ch. iv. 11.

and didst redeem us unto God with thy blood] The authorities for retaining “us” perhaps predominate, see vv. ll.:—if the pronoun be omitted, render: “didst redeem unto God with thy blood [men] of every” &c.: see ver. 10. The tenses point to the definite, past act of the Crucifixion—cf. ch. i. 5. The sense literally is, Thou didst purchase us [or men] unto God in, or with,—the verb being rendered by the A. V. “redeem” only here, and in ch. xiv. 3, 4. In the ordinary sense of “to buy” or “purchase” it is found in ch. iii. 18; xiii. 17; xviii. 11; John iv. 8; vi. 5; xiii. 29. The compound verb (ἐξαγοράζω) is used only by St. Paul—e. g. Gal. iii. 13. Winer notes that the prep. in is, after the Hebrew idiom (as in 1 Chron. xxi. 24), the prep. of price: “The value of what is bought is contained in the price (to which the ek of price corresponds).”—s. 348. Cf. “to loose us by” (λύειν ἐν τῷ αἵματι), ch. i. 5.

out of every tribe, &c.] Or render as above, [men] of every tribe. The fourfold enumeration here, as usual in this Book (e. g. ch. vii. 9; x. 11; xi. 9; xiii. 7; xiv. 6; xvii. 15), is symbolically exhaustive—all the inhabitants of the earth: see Introd., § 11, (a). Burger notes that, since the date of “the confusion of tongues” (Gen. xi. 7–9), mankind has been separated according to this four-fold division of which we had already met with an illustration in Gen. x. 5, 31. This separation has ceased in Christ.

10. and didst make them [to be] unto our God a kingdom and priests;] I.e., the redeemed:—on the words them, and a kingdom, see vv. ll. Cf. also the note on ch. i. 6, and on ch. ii. 10.

and they reign on the earth.] See vv. ll. This last clause is an addition to ch. i. 6. The redeemed are united into a kingdom; as citizens of this kingdom they are priests, for they are admitted to the closest, the most intimate relations with God (cf. ch. vii. 15): and as such they share in the kingly rule of their Prince,—they reign.

The expression “to reign,” notes Reuss (on ch. xx. 4), is borrowed from Jewish theology which promised to Israel, during the Messianic epoch, supremacy over all peoples. It occurs in the Apocalypse in a new signification:—Christ establishes His Kingdom, that is to say He causes truth, justice, holiness to triumph, and consequently inaugurates an era of happiness for those who are His own. These latter are members of the Kingdom,—they enjoy the blessings which depend on it. This is the meaning of the phrase “to reign” in the Christian sense.

Christ’s “kingdom is not of this world” (John xviii. 36).

The Church is here regarded not in its disembodied state, but as it is now upon earth,—with the Lamb in the midst of it, sending forth into all the world that sevenfold plenitude of His power and wisdom which the “Horns” and “Eyes” symbolize, in order to the perfecting of the saints unto the day of His Coming (see Christ’s Second Coming, by Dr. David Brown, 6th ed., p. 447). Good MSS. also read “they shall reign” (see vv. ll.), and the tense does not really affect the meaning. The future tense, however, is taken by the advocates of the “Pre-millennial Advent” and of the Millennium generally to denote the personal reign hereafter, with Christ, of those who “sing the new song” (ver. 9)—a literal reign on the earth during the literal “Thousand Years” (ch. xx. 4). Burger, who accepts the future tense, notes: “‘They shall reign as kings,’—not in worldly power on the earth as it is now; but, when restored to that state originally designed for man (Gen. i. 26, 27), over ‘the new earth,’ ch. xxii. 5.” As to the whole question of the reign of the saints on earth, see the notes on ch. xx. 1–6.

“In this difficult passage,” notes Ewald,

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders : and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands ;

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and

“(the Arabic) Hippolytus [see Note A on ch. xii. 3] reads didst redeem us [the 24 Elders] and didst make them [viz. believers] . . . and they shall reign. And he understands the reign on the earth to mean the period of the Thousand Years, after the first or partial resurrection of the just.”

11. And I saw,] The Angelic host, as distinguished from the Elders and the Living Beings.

and I heard a voice of many angels] The host of Angels now take part in the hymn of praise which the Elders had sung. From the symbolic representatives of the Church they have now learned “the manifold wisdom of God,” Eph. iii. 10; 1 Pet. i. 12; therefore, they at once unite in the hymn of praise.

Tischendorf (with K) reads as it were a voice.

round about the throne and the living beings and the elders;] The Angels—encompassing the throne and the Living Beings and the Elders—surround the scene described in ch. iv.; see ch. vii. 11 (cf. 1 Kings xxii. 19): “Thus the redeemed Creation stands nearer to the throne of God than even the Angels, see Heb. ii. 5, &c.” (Bisping). The strain of adoration begun in vv. 8, 9 is continued here : in ver. 13 it is echoed by universal Creation.

and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;] Gr. myriads of myriads, and thousands of thousands. Cf. Dan. vii. 10; Hebr. xii. 22; Jude 14. Various ranks and orders of Angels, as well as their separate offices, are distinguished in the Apocalypse:—the Archangel Michael, ch. xii. 7 (cf. Dan. xii. 1; 1 Thess. iv. 16);—the “mighty” Angels, ver. 2; ch. x. 1; xviii. 21;—the Angels “having great authority,” ch. xviii. 1;—Angels entrusted with special commissions, ch. xiv. 6; xv. 7; xvii. 1, 7;—Angels which have a special function, ch. vii. 1, 2; viii. 3; xiv. 18; xvi. 5; xx. 1;—and there are other more minute distinctions.

On the Greek text here see vv. 11.—the A. V. follows the Complutensian text; while Tyndale, Coverdale, the Great Bible, the Bishops’ of Geneva of 1557, follow, more or less closely, the Textus Receptus and the Vulgate:—see Scrivener’s Paragrapb Bible, Intro., App. E., p. cii.

12. saying with a great voice,] The word saying is not construed with myriads, but (the words “and the number,” &c., being taken as a parenthesis) with “angels” understood in the nom.—as if the sentence had commenced with “and the angels lifted up their voice, saying :”—see Winer, § lix. 11.

Worthy is the Lamb that hath been slain] Cf. ch. xiii. 8.

to receive] As ascribed to Him in ch. iv. 11. the power, and riches, and wisdom, and might, &c.] Cf. 1 Chron. xxix. 11, 12. In this doxology—sevenfold as when again offered by the Angels in ch. vii. 12—one article is prefixed to the seven nouns; and is not affixed to each as in the classification which is given in the note on ch. i. 6: hence, Bengel (whom nearly all modern writers quote) observes that these seven words of praise are to be uttered as one single word. Bengel would also, unnecessarily, refer the number seven to the number of the Seals. Note that the word “riches”—not merely spiritual “riches” (cf. John i. 16; Eph. iii. 8), but the fulness of every “gift” of God (cf. James i. 17; Acts xvii. 25)—is found only here in a doxology, and in connexion with “power.”

13. And every created thing] At length the various hymns of praise (ch. iv. 8, 11; v. 9, 12,) are all combined in one harmonious chorus. The manner in which Creation welcomes the redemption “of the children of God” (see Rom. viii. 19–23) is here declared.

which is in the heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth,] “Under the earth” refers, as in Phil. ii. 10, to those in Hades,—see on ver. 3; not the demons, “qui inviii parent Christo” (Vitr.).

and on the sea,] See vv. 11. “The sea” is first referred to (symbolically) in ch. iv. 6. On the frequent use of “the sea” in the Apocalypse, both literally, and as a symbol—the Apostle’s exile at Patmos rendering it an object familiar to him, see Intro., § 4.

and all things that are in them,] The usual summary of collective Creation, as in Ex. xx. 11; Ps. cxlvi. 6; Phil. ii. 10.

heard I, saying,] See vv. 11; and for the gender, cf. on ch. iv. 1.

honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

All blessing, and honour, and glory, and dominion,] As in ch. i. 6, the article is prefixed to each noun. The Father's praise is celebrated in ch. iv. 8-11; the Son's in ch. v. 9-12; here, both are glorified,—cf. Rom. xvi. 27; 1 Pet. iv. 11. Bengel again refers the number four in this doxology to the four classes of Creation in the preceding clause; see on ver. 12.

[be] unto him that sitteth on the throne,] See vv. ll.:—the genitive, or, perhaps, the dative, is to be read here; cf. on ch. i. 20.

In this triumph of Redemption, redeemed Creation (ver. 8) first takes part; then the Angels (ver. 11), as “ministering spirits” who do service for the sake of them who have now inherited salvation (Heb. i. 14); and then, as here, every created thing. This symbolic scene represents the great thought of St. Paul, that Christ has reconciled all things on earth and in heaven, and has united them in Himself—Eph. i. 10; Col. i. 20.

The connected Visions of ch. iv. and ch. v. are now brought to a close; and this conclusion introduces ver. 14.

14. And the four living beings said, Amen.] As in ch. iv. 8 these representatives of Creation had commenced the series of hymns, so now they pronounce the “Amen,” which forms the customary close of Divine worship,—see 1 Cor. xiv. 16.

And the elders fell down and worshipped.] See vv. ll.:—the verse closes here. The Elders, the representatives of the Church Universal, in silent adoration add their assent;—the last tones of the hymns die away, and the opening of the Seals begins.

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. V. 8.

NOTE A ON VER. 8—THE HARP, THE VIAL, THE INCENSE.

The Harp,—Heb. כנור, LXX. (1 Sam. xvi. 16, 23) κινύρα, in the Psalms always κιθάρα, as here. In 1 Sam. xvi., David played “with his hand;” Josephus (Antt. vii. 12, 3) says the harp (κινύρα) had ten strings (cf. Ps. xxxiii. 2) and was played with a plectrum, whereas the nabla, or psaltery, was played with the fingers. At all events the κιθάρα here, was rather a guitar or lute, than a harp:—see Winer, Real-Wörterb., art. Musik. Instrum.; and the note on 1 Sam. x. 5. It has been “usual to consider the Aramaic word (קיתר) in Dan. iii. 5, a transcript of the Greek κιθάρις.”—see Excursus on Dan. iii.

The Vial:—The word φιάλη is used in the LXX. as the equivalent of the Hebrew מִזְבֵּחַ (e. g. Ex. xxvii. 3; Num. vii. 13, 84; Zech. ix. 15), rendered in A. V. “bowl” or “bason” of silver; while the incense-cup, Heb. כַּף (A. V. “spoon” of gold, Ex. xxv. 29), is expressed by θυσιαστής,—both Greek terms being found in 1 Kings vii. 36; 2 Chron. iv. 21: see the engraving of the Shewbread Table with its incense-cups in the note on Ex. xxv. 23. Josephus connects them with the Table (δύο φιάλαι χρυσαί λιθανωτοῦ πλήρεις, Antt. iii. 6, 6; 10, 7). Bishop Wordsworth notes: “The word φιάλη (connected with φίω, suff-fo, which may be compared with θίω and thus, ‘incense’) does not signify a vial, or bottle, but a broad shallow vessel. as the Latin patera from pateo, whence also paten, like a saucer or bowl-like dish (see the authorities in Wetstein, p. 769).” In ch. xv. 7 (cf. ch. xiv. 10) St. John uses the word φιάλη, in a different sense, to signify the smaller cup by which wine was drawn out of the larger κρατήρ, or mixing vessel, in which the wine for a meal was mixed with water. So Plato (Crito, p. 120, a), χρυσαίς φιάλαις ἐκ τοῦ κρητῆρος ἀρτυρόμενοι—see Alford's note on Rev. xv. 7.

Incense, *θυμίαμα*¹ (the plural only is used in the Apocalypse), was the symbol of prayer: “Isai. vi. 3, 4 is almost equivalent to an express interpretation The same may be said of Luke i. 10, where the people are said to have prayed in the fore-court, whilst the priest was in the Holy Place burning the incense.”—Kurtz, Sacrificial Worship, Engl. tr. p. 295. A silver shovel—A. V. “firepan,” Ex. xxvii. 3 (מִטְחָה)—was filled with live coals, and then emptied into a golden one smaller than the former, so that some of the coals were spilled (cf. Rev. viii. 5); and when the incense was brought in the incense-cup (כַּף), the priest cast it on the fire (Mishna, Tamid, v. 4), profound silence being kept by the people praying without (cf. Rev. viii. 1):—see Smith's Dict. of the Bible, art. Incense.

¹ Hebrew Ketoreth (קֶטֶרֶת), Ex. xxx. 1. See also Isai. lx. 6, Lebonah (לְבוֹנָה); and Note C on ch. viii. 3.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The opening of the seals in order, and what followed thereupon, containing a prophecy to the end of the world.

AND I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thun-

[Ver. 1 ἐπὶ σφρ.—φωνῇ.—om. καὶ θλέπε (added by Erasmus to the reading of his Codex after the et vide of the Vulgate; and so in uv. 3, 5, 7). Ver. 4 ἐκ τῆς γῆς [A omits ἐκ].—σφάξουσιν. Ver. 6 ὡς φωνῇ. Ver. 7 [B, C, P omit φωνῇ].—λέγοντος. Ver. 8 ἠκολούθει.—ἀποκτείνεια follows τῆς γῆς. Ver. 10 om. ὁ before ἀληθ.—ἐκ τῶν κατοικ. Ver. 11 ἐδόθη [I merely reads καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς ἵνα ἀναπαύσονται, which Er. filled up after his manner].—αὐτοῖς ἐκάστω.—στολὴ λευκῇ.—om. οὐ.—πληρωθῶσιν. Ver. 12 om. ἰδοὺ.—ἡ σελήνη ὅλη. Ver. 14 ὁ οὐρ. Ver. 15 οἱ χιλιάρχοι καὶ οἱ πλουσιοί.—om. οἱ ἰσχυροί (not read in 1; Er. supplied καὶ οἱ δυνατοὶ after the et fortes of the Vulgate).—om. πᾶς before ἐλεύθ. Ver. 17 αὐτῶν.]

CHAP. VI.

The Second chief Vision (ch. vi. 1–viii. 1) of the Revelation Proper opens here,—see Introduct. p. 89.

THE SEVEN SEALS.

The Seven Seals are now opened, this chapter containing the first six. The Seven are divided into the groups of four (uv. 1–8) and three Seals (uv. 9, 12; ch. viii. 1),—the former group being distinguished from the latter by the agency of the Four Living Beings, and by the word of invitation, “Come,” in uv. 1, 3, 5, 7. Similarly the first four Trumpets (ch. viii. 7–12) are separated from the last three at ch. viii. 13. As stated in the remarks introductory to ch. ii., in the case of the Seven Epistles and of the Seven Vials (ch. xvi.) there is a different division,—namely into groups of three and four, at ch. ii. 18, and ch. xvi. 8: but in each of the groups of Seals, Trumpets, and Vials, an intervening action parts the first six from the seventh, at ch. vii.; at ch. x. 1–xi. 14; at ch. xvi. 13–16. Of the Seven Seals, six only announce Visions partaking of the common character of judgments; while the seventh (ch. viii. 1) forms the solemn and mysterious close. So in the case of the Trumpets, at the seventh (ch. xi. 15–18) the hidden meaning is merely indicated; just as at the pouring out of the seventh Vial (ch. xvi. 17) the Voice from the throne merely declares “It is done.”

The Vision which accompanies the opening of each Seal is either intended simply to prepare for the final revelation of “the mystery of God” (ch. x. 7; cf. ch. xi. 15); or, in a more definite sense, is a symbolical representation of the corresponding portion of the Sealed Book,—see on ch. v. 1. There is, accordingly, a mysterious silence on the opening of the seventh Seal—the Seal which extends to the end of all things. The Visions that follow represent to the Seer events which either partly precede and partly accompany the seventh Seal (on the principle of Recapitulation—see the remarks introductory to ch. viii.); or which give a general survey of the progress of the Church of God in the world until the Divine purpose is accomplished, although by no means a picture of events in chronological succession such as the “Continuous” system of interpretation requires. This system, when applied, breaks down in every case. The Lord’s discourse on the Mount of Olives, Matt. xxiv., as the earliest commentators have observed, is the key to the Visions of the Seals. The first four are committed, as it were, to the Four Living Beings who are “round about the throne” (ch. iv. 6), and who now summon the Seer to behold. The symbolism recalls the Four Horses of Zech. i. 8–10, “whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth;”—cf. Pusey on Zech. vi. 1–8.

THE FIRST FOUR SEALS (1–8).

1. And I saw] Not the opening of the Seal, as if the meaning were “I was a beholder when” (Hengst.); nor does “I saw” include the bearing also which followed, as part of the prophetic intuition (De Wette and Ebrard)—see on ch. i. 2; v. 11. The sense is, St. John “saw,” when the Seal was opened, what he describes in ver. 2 where the words “I saw” are repeated.

when the Lamb opened one of the seven seals,] (See uv. 11.). The first Seal, although not stated: see the next note.

and I heard one of the four living beings] Not necessarily although probably (cf. ch. v. 5; xv. 7) identical with the first, the Lion; according to the order in ch. iv. 7—in which order Vitruvius, Bengel, and others, place the Living Being who summons in each of the first four Seals. Thus, the Lion’s strength, in the first Living Being, is the type of victory. Applying the idea differently, Wordsworth (who adopts the explanation of the Living Beings given by St. Augustine) understands here the first Gospel, that of St. Matthew, inviting the Church to contemplate Christ, “the Lion of the Tribe of Judah,” as Conqueror and King—see note B, on ch.

der, one of the four beasts saying, Come and see.

2 And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a

iv. 6: and Words. explains that in the next three Seals "the Power introduced is opposed to Christ." Bossuet also identifies the Four Living Beings with the Four Evangelists; and thence infers that we are to understand in these four Seals the execution of the secret counsels of God according to the rules which are laid down by Christ in the Gospels:—but see on ch. iv. 8.

saying, as with a voice of thunder,] (See vv. 11.). This voice (cf. ch. x. 3; xiv. 2) belongs to each of the Four Living Beings, although mentioned only in the case of the first that speaks. Hengst. would explain the mention here of the "Voice," by the pre-eminence of the first Rider.

Come.] The words, "and see," added here and in vv. 3, 5, 7, are to be omitted—see vv. 11. The insertion of these omitted words, in the form found in John i. 47 (καὶ ἴδε), is supported by the Codex Sinaiticus and by some other MSS.

This summons, by its very form, separates the first four Seals from the last three where it does not occur. Hofmann, Kliefoth, Alford, relying on ch. xxii. 17, 20, and on the different form of expression in ch. x. 8, would explain this "cry"—this groaning and travelling together of Creation for the manifestation of the sons of God (Rom. viii. 19, 22)—as addressed to Christ, not to St. John. This cannot be the sense:—let the opening words only of ver. 2, "I saw," in accordance with this invitation, be considered; and also the appeal in ver. 10. Burger takes the four invitations (vv. 1, 3, 5, 7) to be addressed to the Riders respectively:—each is summoned in order that St. John may see him.

2. a white horse.] For the imagery, see, as noted above, Zech. i. 8–11. Düsterd., indeed, denies that the texts are parallel; but cf. the "How long," Zech. i. 12, 13, with ver. 10 below. On white as the colour of heaven see on ch. i. 14; ii. 17. With the Hebrews the horse was the emblem of war—Job xxxix. 25; Ps. lxxvi. 6; Prov. xxi. 31; Jer. viii. 6; Ezek. xxvi. 10. With the Romans the white horse was the emblem of victory:—"equos . . . candore nivali," Æn. iii. 537; "Victoriæ omen," Servius, Schol. Cf. Il. x. 437; Herod. ix. 63; Plut., *Camil-*lus, 7.

and be that sat thereon] The interpretations here are various:—(1) The words "behold a white horse, and be that sat thereon" are repeated exactly in ch. xix. 11; and there is a pretty general agreement that here also the Rider is Christ—the Beginning and the End, the First and the Last—from Whom, thus, all the Visions commence.

(2) In a sense not absolutely different, some explain that as the Riders in the next three Seals are evidently personifications of bloodshed, scarcity, death, we have here, too, Christianity personified: so Stern—see Note A at the end of this chapter. Alford differs, regarding the Rider as "only a symbol of Christ's victorious power:" and Godet also (l. c., p. 298) sees here "the emblem of the Gospel, which, by being preached, is about to run victoriously through the earth." (3) In a different sense of personification De Wette takes this symbol to personify war as a triumph,—the next three Seals personifying war as a catastrophe. According to him, if Christ is symbolized under the figure of the Rider, either here or in ch. xix. 11, it can be merely by antithesis, for the victory of the Gospel is won only by the peaceful preaching of the word:—but see Matt. x. 34; xxiv. 7. (4) In Jer. xxi. 7 (cf. xxxii. 36) he who escapes war, famine, and pestilence is to fall into the hands of the king of Babylon; and hence Reuss understands the conqueror, who here precedes these three judgments, as personifying ambition and pride which bring with them destruction and ruin. Bengel, in like manner, understands conquest personified, the Emperor Trajan being the chief representative of the idea, and the first Rider; Bishop Newton understands Vespasian; Herder, Bispington, and others understand simply the personification of War.

(5) Elliott (after Mede, Vitruvius, and others) considers that as the Empire of the Medes and Persians was figured to Daniel under the image of "a ram" (Dan. viii. 3), and Greece by "a goat" (Dan. viii. 5), so the destinies of the fourth—the last of Daniel's kingdoms (Dan. vii. 23), the Roman Empire—are here foreshown by the emblem of a horse with a Rider.

(6) Dr. J. H. Todd (Lect. on the Apoc., p. 99) explains that "the revelations made on the opening of each Seal all portray the circumstances of our Lord's Second Coming, representing that event under various aspects." See also on ch. v. 1.

Some of the leading schools of interpretation (see Introd. § 12) are here exemplified—the Symbolical; the Historical or Continuous; the Futurist. For illustrations of another school, the Preterist, see note A at the end of this chapter.

had a bow;] Gr. having. On the word "bow," see on ch. iv. 3. We have here merely emblems of the Rider's appearance bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

3 And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

as a Conqueror: the Old Test. supplies the accompaniments of the picture—Ps. xlv. 4, 5; Hab. iii. 8, 9; Zech. ix. 13, 14. It was not as a Conqueror that He first came—Zech. ix. 9.

and there was given unto him a crown:] The context (cf. also ch. xiv. 14) imposes the sense, "the conqueror's crown:"—when Christ goes forth as King, He wears "many diadems" (ch. xix. 12). For the opposite interpretation, viz., that this also was a kingly crown, not the garland of victory, see on ch. ii. 10. By this token the Lord is distinguished from the other Riders. In relation to the hostile world Christ appears as a warrior;—in relation to the Father He appears as a Lamb (John i. 29).

and he came forth conquering, and to conquer.] Gr. "and that he might conquer:" cf. ch. iii. 21; v. 5. He already proceeds as a conqueror, setting out to take possession of His kingdom:—but the end is not as yet attained. The earth is still to be subdued; and to this purpose the other Visions are subordinate. The triumph is secured under the seventh Trumpet; and then the Elders return thanks for the consummation (ch. xi. 16, 17). When the Gospel was proclaimed men would naturally expect the future reign of peace and happiness over the earth; but such an expectation the Lord had from the first declared to be groundless: "I came not," He said, "to send peace on earth, but a sword" (Matt. x. 34). To unfold this theme is the object of the first six Seals—as, indeed, of the greater part of the Apocalypse. Instead of peace, there appears throughout this Book a secret gathering of armies as for some great war or battle—from this single mysterious Rider in this first Seal, to the summoning the birds of heaven "unto the great supper of God" (ch. xix. 17): e.g. ch. xvi. 12–16.

3. And when He opened the second seal,] The tense is the aorist in the case of each of the Seals.

the second living beings saying,] We need not understand literally "the Calf," of ch. iv. 7. According to the arbitrary symbolism, however, which takes the Four Living Beings to be the four Gospels (see note B on ch. iv. 6), Words. sees here the Gospel of St. Luke, of which he regards the "Calf"—"the sacrificial animal"—to be the emblem, as display-

4 And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

ing the sufferings of Christ, and here inviting the Seer to behold "the suffering inflicted on the martyrs."

Come.] On the form of this invitation, omitting the words "and see," cf. on ver. 1.

The Vision which followed the opening of the first Seal has ended,—the form of the first Rider has disappeared.

4. And another [horse] came forth,] As before, the symbol of war. The expression "another," used only in the case of this Seal, may denote the contrast between the first and the others (Hengst.).

As a "Preterist" (see on ch. i. 7) Mr. F. D. Maurice writes: "I need not say how wildly that horse was plunging in the days after the death of Nero, and before the establishment of Vespasian" (l.c., p. 104).

a red horse:] The colour of the war-horse, Zech. i. 8; vi. 2, and of the Dragon, ch. xii. 3—'fiery-red,' or 'blood-red' (cf. 2 Kings iii. 22, LXX.). The colour of each horse corresponds to the mission of its Rider (see ver. 8):—here, it is to shed blood.

and to him that sat thereon it was given] Gr. "and to him that sat upon him, unto him it was given," cf. ch. ii. 26, iii. 8, 21. On the redundant pronoun, see Winer, § 22, 4, a.

to take peace from the earth,] I.e., peace absolutely, the ancient expositors dwelling on the parallels, Matt. x. 34; xxiv. 7. If the prep. be omitted (see vv. 11), render—the peace of the earth. Elliott understands "the peace left by the former Seal." "The earth" is used in a general sense: not, as Grotius understands, to signify Judæa:—or, as others, the Roman world;—or, as Renan (l.c., p. 385), the revolt of Judæa and the insurrection of Vindex (A.D. 69).

and that they should slay] For the constr. cf. on ch. iii. 9:—see vv. 11. The verb (σφάττω) is found only in the Apocalypse and in 1 John iii. 12 (cf. ch. v. 6); and to it, as the sacrificial term, corresponds strictly the term here used for "sword," although this word (μάχαλα, or sacrificial knife, cf. Gen. xxii. 6, 10, LXX.) is also used promiscuously—e.g. ch. xiii. 10; John xviii. 10. See on ch. i. 16.

one another:] It is clearly meant that the inhabitants of the earth (see ch. iii. 10) shall

5 And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, ^{the word} 'A ^{signifieth} measure of wheat for a penny, and ^{a measure} three measures of barley for a penny; ^{one half} and ^{quart, and} see thou hurt not the oil and the ^{the wheat} wine. ^{part of a} ^{quart} slay one another; and hence, the exposition of De Lyra, Stern, and the ancient interpreters is untenable, who see here only the persecutions of the Christians. The same interpretation, however, is supported by Bishop Wordsworth; and he refers to the martyrs spoken of in ver. 9, that "had been slain by the sword of him who rides on the red horse:" in this sense the second Seal personifies persecution; and he quotes the lines:—

"Lament, for Diocletian's fiery sword Works busy as the lightning . . .
Against the followers of the Incarnate Lord
It rages."—Wordsworth, Eccles. Sonnets, vi.

It is more in accordance, however, with the context, and also with the saying (Matt. x. 34) "I came not to send peace, but a sword," to take the symbol as referring to that "beginning of sorrows" foretold by our Lord (Matt. xxiv. 8), and now represented under the personification of bloodshed about to come on the whole earth. Applying this thought to but one period of history, Bishop Newton sees here the "horrid wars and slaughters" in the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian.

5. And when he opened the third seal, I heard the third living being saying, Come.] That "the rise of heresy,"—denying Christ's humanity—"next in order to persecution," is portended by this Seal is inferred by Words. from the human face of the third Living Being, ch. iv. 7, who now invites to behold.

And I saw, and behold, a black horse;] The colour of gloom (cf. ver. 12); implying the destruction caused by the Rider (cf. vv. 2, 4, 8)—who personifies scarcity. According to Allegorists this colour is the emblem of the Church's mourning at the corruption of the true faith, and the consequent loss of souls.

and he that sat thereon had a balance in his hand.] The meaning of the word "balance" (ζυγός or ζυγόν, primarily a yoke, cf. Matt. xi. 29) is determined here by its use in Lev. xix. 35, 36; Prov. xvi. 11; Isai. xl. 12; and especially by Ezek. xlv. 10 (LXX.) where the expressions used here (see χοῖνιξ, ver. 6) are found in juxtaposition. Woodhouse and others insist on the meaning "yoke"—understanding "the yoke of ceremonies." What is meant, however, is that corn is weighed, not measured; and hence scarcity is symbolized (see Lev. xxvii. 26; Ezek. iv. 16, 17), not absolute famine as in the next Seal (ver. 8). Here again we see "the beginning of sorrows"—Matt. xxiv. 8. It is to allegorize, not to symbolize, when some writers (e.g. Vitr.) refer here to Amos viii. 11: "I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord"—a conclusion supported by Words. This, however, is to take that which is conveyed by the symbolical language of the verse, viz. literal scarcity, to be itself in its turn the symbol of spiritual scarcity: see note B at the end of this chapter.

6. And I heard as it were a voice in the midst of the four living beings] Distinct from their voices:—the "as it were" (see vv. 11.) denotes that the speaker being left undetermined (see on ch. i. 10) remained unknown to the Seer. The voice issues from the Throne—from the midst of the representatives of Creation, the woes denounced against which it is the object of the voice to mitigate. "The mercy seat" was between the Cherubim, Ex. xxv. 22; Heb. ix. 5.

The prices which this voice goes on to announce imply severe dearth:—

saying, A measure of wheat for a penny,] (The "gen. of price." Winer, s. 185). Gr. "a chœnix of wheat for a denarius;"—the "chœnix" being defined, "a man's food for a day" (ἡμερησίους τροφήν, Suidas):—"About a quart measure, equal to two sextarii in liquid measure, and to two libæ or pounds in dry measure. The denarius was a day's wages for a labourer (Matt. xx. 2), and the daily pay of a soldier (Tac., Ann. i. 17). The chœnix was only the eighth part of a modius; and a modius of wheat was usually sold for a denarius, and sometimes for half that sum—Cicero, Verr., iii. 81; De Divin. 10" (Words. in loc.). The chœnix, however, falls below the amount of a quart, and the denarius approaches towards the value of a shilling,—see Lightfoot, On a Fresh Revision of Eng. New Test., p. 167. Although there are no English equivalents, it is important to aim at precision here, "because the extremity of the famine only appears when the proper relation between the measure and the price is preserved."—ib., p. 169. The Rider is to see that this shall be the price of food, and the limit of the dearth.

and the oil and the wine hurt thee not.] The Rider's office as destroyer is here

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8 And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given ^{Or, to him.} unto them over the fourth part of the to cease,—“the oil and the wine” are to be produced as usual. For this use of the verb “to hurt” cf. ch. ii. 11; vii. 2, 3, &c.: it does not mean “to waste” (Rinck);—or “to commit injustice in the matter of” (Elliott); and accordingly another limit to the severity of this judgment is prescribed: cf. Matt. xxiv. 22. No particular scarcity is referred to, such as the dearth in the days of Claudius (Grotius, Wetstein, &c.);—or that under Nero, A.D. 68, see Sueton., Nero, 45 (Renan). The general class of judgments spoken of by our Lord (Matt. xxiv. 7) is intended, wheat, barley, oil, and wine, forming the ordinary sources of nourishment—see Ps. civ. 14, 15; cf. Joel i. 10. Bishop Newton again notes: “This third period commencing with Septimius Severus” [A. D. 193].

Mr. Maurice thinks that this is not “a Vision of war at all. . . . The images here are all of peace. The sword is changed for the balances. Men are studious about barter and exchange. They are tender about oil and wine” (p. 105).

7. And when he opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living being saying.] The participle (T. R. reads λέγοντα) agrees with “Living Being,” as in vv. 1, 3, 5—see vv. 11. Some MSS. of weight omit “the voice.”

Come.] As before, in ver. 1. The invitation may proceed from the fourth Living Being, “like a flying Eagle” (ch. iv. 7). Words here understands the Gospel of St. John who, in Rev. xx. 14, declares the triumph of Christ over Death, Hades, and the Beasts: and he interprets that under the second Seal the Church endured persecution; under the third Seal, heresy; and that here, the evil is multiform.

8. And I saw, and behold, a pale horse:] The pallid green of terror and of death (“pallida mors”). The word is used of grass in ch. viii. 7; ix. 4; Mark vi. 39.

and he that sat upon him,] Not the same prep. as in the three previous Seals—here ἐπάνω (not ἐν), “above,” as in John iii. 31. For the construction, cf. ch. iv. 1.

his name was Death:] To this Rider alone is a name given:—he is Death personified (see the note on Job xxvii. 15), and therefore offers the broadest contrast to the Prince of Life who leads the procession. The preceding nom. is here taken up by the pronoun “his” in the dative; cf. ch. iii. 12, 21.

—see Intro. § 7, IV., (f), the last note; and cf. John i. 6.

and Hell followed with him.] Gr. Hades—the place of departed souls, which is also personified in Ps. xlix. 14; Isa. xiv. 9. It is combined with Death in ch. i. 18 (where see the note) as ever following in his train. Hengst. (so too Stern) understands the place of torment,—“for the word is used in the New Test. only in reference to dead sinners, Luke xvi. 23” (cf. also ch. xx. 14): but this assumes that the ungodly alone are to be subject to the trials here spoken of—see on ver. 17. Ewald understands “the Angel of Hell who is called in Hebrew Abaddon” (ch. ix. 11): the Angel of Hell follows Death; as “the Destroyer” desires to draw all men down to his Abyss, by means of the four evil agencies which here follow. Eichhorn and Ebrard take it to mean, by metonymy, “the dwellers in Hades,” “the entire number of the dead:”—but this sense is opposed both to the whole tone of the passage, which implies personification, and also to the true reading “was given unto them,” for here, as in ch. xx. 13, “Hell” is regarded as a person, the companion of “Death.” See vv. 11.

And there was given unto them] Viz. unto Death and Hell. The marginal reading of A. V. “to him” (Vulg., “data est illi”) is supported by B alone of the five uncial MSS. In his arbitrary criticism Reuss adopts the reading “to him,” viz. to Hades; and he understands Death merely to signify “contagious maladies,” as in ch. xviii. 8—see below.

authority over the fourth part of the earth,] “The fourth part” is peculiar to this place. Düsterd. explains, “a tolerably great part;” a still greater part, viz. one-third—the fraction which continually recurs, e.g. ch. viii. 7–12; ix. 15, 18; xii. 4—being usually specified. Somewhat similarly Volkmar explains that the famine of this Seal is not as yet to attain its utmost severity (Joel i. 10, &c.); it becomes more intense under the first Trumpet, when a greater part of the earth, one-third, is afflicted (ch. viii. 7);—Züllig, followed by Alfrod, considers that the fourth part contains an allusion to the four Seals of this group; the commission of each Rider extending to the fourth part of the earth;—Elliott adopts the version of the Vulgate: “super quatuor partes terræ.” “over the four parts of the earth;”—Hengst. understands the partial and provisional character of this judgment;—I. Williams earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for ascribes to this Seal the universality which the number four denotes; and similarly Mede (p. 446), "Expono de potissima et multo maxima orbis Romanæ parte." Ebrard confesses a "docta ignorantia." The fact noted on ver. 6, that these judgments are but preliminary and have not as yet reached their utmost intensity, is a strong confirmation of the justice of Volkmar's interpretation. See vv. 11.

to kill with sword.] Not the "sword" of ver. 4—see on ch. i. 16 where the term here used occurs. As in ch. ii. 16, the prep. (ἐν) prefixed to the first three nouns denotes the instrument or means. These words are very closely followed in the Sibylline verses, B. iii. 316, 317—see note E on ch. ii. 20. Cf. "gladium, et famem, et mortem, et interitum,"—4 Esdras xv. 5.

and with famine.] As the "sword" here differs from the "sword" in ver. 4, so does this "famine" differ from the scarcity of vv. 5, 6 as being more intense;—although even its severity is to become greater under the first Trumpet, ch. viii. 7.

and with death.] "Death" is to be taken merely in connexion with the sword and with famine (being accompanied by the same preposition ἐν) as one instrument of Divine punishment:—either natural death as opposed to the other kinds of violent death specified in this verse; or, as many understand, pestilence (referred to in ch. xvi. 2). God's "four sore judgments upon Jerusalem" (Ezek. xiv. 21) are expressed in the LXX. by the same four words as in the text,—the Hebrew term for "pestilence" (deber) being rendered (as also in Jer. xiv. 12; xxi. 7) by the Greek term for "death:" see on ch. ii. 23; xviii. 8. In popular living Greek τὸ θανατικόν is the ordinary term for the plague—see Moulton's ed. of Winer, p. 30. (Note,—the word "pestilences" (λοιμοί) of the Textus Receptus in Matt. xxiv. 7 is not genuine).

and by the wild beasts of the earth.] (Cf. Mark i. 13; Lev. xxvi. 22; Deut. vii. 22; 2 Kings xvii. 25). A different prep. (ἐν) is now used:—"wild beasts" are themselves agents, and this judgment is independent of the other three. Volkmar suggests the beasts in the Roman amphitheatre. Words, seen in this term used with the article (θηρίον, "a wild beast," occurs for the first time in this place) a reference by anticipation, as in ch. xi. 7, to the Beast from the Abyss—this Seal foreshadowing the sufferings of the Church "from the various workings of the Evil One." In Matt. xxiv. 7, instead of "beasts" we find "earthquakes," which occur under the sixth Seal, in ver. 12.

According to Bishop Newton, "This period commenceth with Maximin" (A.D. 235).

The first four Seals have now been opened. They announce, I. Christianity—"conquering, and to conquer;" and then, II. War; III. Scarcity; IV. Death. We have here a fulfilment of the Lord's words in Matt. x. 34; xxiv. 6, 7. The Rider upon each horse personifies what is announced on the opening of each Seal. This feature of the Vision is common to all the first four Seals, as well as the accompanying voice of one of the Four Living Beings who, taken together, symbolize living Creation; and through whom Creation, "groaning and travailing in pain together until now" (Rom. viii. 22), prepares for Christ's coming. This preparation extends throughout the whole course of the Church's history. The Church is ever "militant on earth;" she must never cease labouring "that she may conquer" (ἵνα νικήσῃ), ver. 2. If this be so, the fulfilment of these four Seal Visions is not to be looked for in any series of successive events, past, present, or future; although each of them may be applicable, at different periods of history, to particular events, and may admit of recurring fulfilments. On the whole, Ezek. xiv. the proclamation of God's judgments on the Ancient Church should be studied here.

THE LAST THREE SEALS (9—viii. 1).

The Fifth Seal (9—11).

9. And when he opened the fifth seal.] In this first of the second group of Visions all is changed. We are here reminded of those who during the long conflict of the Church have suffered for Christ. The incidents revealed in the Visions of the first group prepare for the consummation, still remote, of all things. The opening of the fifth Seal, its Vision having for its object to restrain the too ardent hopes of believers, is not accompanied by any special incident; although the martyrs' cry for vengeance recalls the memory of the Lord's prediction, Matt. xxiv. 9, to which this Seal corresponds. This Vision, in short, is not a continuation of, nor does it resemble the preceding four:—it points onward to the great theme of the Apocalypse, the Lord's Coming; it adds to the groans of Creation the sighs of the martyred Saints.

I saw under the altar] The imagery is the word of God, and for the testimony which they held :

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And white robes were given taken from the Temple-service. "The Brazen Altar" (Ex. xxxix. 39)—called "the Altar of burnt-offering" in Ex. xl. 29)—stood "at the door of the Tabernacle;" and "at the bottom" of this Altar "all the blood" of the victim was poured, Lev. iv. 7; viii. 15 (cf. the words "slain" in this verse, and "blood" in ver. 10). This was called by preeminence "the Altar" (cf. Hävernicks on Ezek. xliii. 13, &c.). The souls of the martyrs correspond to the blood of the sacrifice poured out beneath the Altar, for "the blood thereof is the life thereof" (Gen. ix. 4; Lev. xvii. 14). The same image is used by St. Paul—cf. Phil. ii. 17; 2 Tim. iv. 6 (see St. Ignat. ad Rom., c. ii). The Seer beholds the "souls" of departed saints—of those whose bodies had been "slain" on earth—see ch. xx. 4; Matt. x. 28. Conscious of the past, praying for the Coming of Christ, they measure the lapse of time—"Lord, How long?" Cf. also the patristic references given by Words. in loc. (For ὑποκάρω see on ch. v. 3).

De Wette and Bleek understand here the Golden Altar of incense in the Holy Place before the Veil (Ex. xxx. 6-9); and that what is now symbolized is the bearing of the martyrs' prayer—see ch. v. 8; viii. 3. This is quite unsatisfactory. Alf. says vaguely, "an altar of sacrifice."

According to Bossuet, the Altar is Christ—see Col. iii. 3, 4.

It may be noted that mention of an "Altar" is for the first time introduced here. As St. John is describing the Vision introduced in ch. iv., where he beheld the worship in Heaven, it is natural to find among his symbolic images the adjunct of that worship's earthly counterpart (Heb. viii. 5; xiii. 10).

the souls] "The souls" only,—for 'the Resurrection of the Dead' has not yet come to pass: cf. ch. xx. 4.

of them that had been slain for the word of God,] Or on account of, because of, by reason of (διὰ with an accus.). Cf. ch. i. 9; John iv. 41.

and for the testimony which they held:] Except in St. John's writings—e.g. John v. 36; 1 John v. 10—this form of expression is found only in 1 Tim. iii. 7. The meaning is either "the testimony" of Jesus, borne by Him (see on ch. i. 2) and which they had received from Him who is "the faithful Witness" (ch. i. 5),—the testimony which was committed to them to bear; or, objectively, "the testimony concerning" Jesus, as in Acts xxii. 18, and in bearing which they had shed their blood (so Ewald, De Wette, Alf.):—see ver. 10. In fact, as in ch. i. 2, 9, we may understand the phrase either subjectively, or objectively—see on ch. xi. 3, and cf. ch. xii. 11, 17; xix. 10; xx. 4. The words, "which they held fast," do not mean "which they held fast" ("quam firmiter tuebantur,"—Ewald); but 'which they had received from the faithful Witness, and which they continued to hold':—cf. John xiv. 21. (B reads, "the testimony of the Lamb").

10. and they cried with a great voice,] I.e., "the souls:" it is quite needless (with Hengst. and Düsterd.) to regard "the slain" as the nom. agreeing with λέγοντες,—cf. ch. iv. 8. Züllig observes that the thought expressed in Gen. iv. 10 is here dramatized.

saying, How long,] Cf. Zech. i. 12; and see on ver. 2. On "the delay of the Divine justice" see on ch. i. 3; cf. Ps. lxxiv. 19; lxxxiii. 1; Luke xviii. 7, 8.

The answer is given by "the Angel of the waters,"—see ch. xvi. 5-7.

O Lord,] Gr. "O Master" (ὁ Δεσπότης),—a title found only here in the Apocalypse; the correlative of "servant," see ver. 11: cf. Luke ii. 29; 1 Tim. vi. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 18.

the holy and true,] See on ch. iii. 7: not "subjective truthfulness" (Vittr., Bengel, Hengst., &c.);—cf. ch. xxi. 5; xxii. 6.

dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on] Gr. "exact vengeance from." For the prep. (ἐκ—see vv. ll.) cf. ch. xviii. 20; xix. 2: see the different prep., ἀπὸ, Luke xviii. 3.

them that dwell on the earth?] I.e., "the world," "all people," in contrast to the servants of God:—ch. iii. 10; viii. 13; xiii. 8, 14; cf. John xvii. 14; Matt. xxiv. 9. The prayer of the martyrs, accumulating from age to age, has for its sole object "the honour of holiness and the truth of their Lord" (Bengel); cf. on ver. 16:—it but expresses by anticipation that longing of the whole Church which is at length uttered in ch. xxii. 17, 20.

I. Williams would here understand the souls of the Old Testament Saints (Matt. xxiii. 35) who are awaiting, as stated in Heb. xi. 39, 40, for "the promises:" and this because it is not said that these martyrs had died "for the testimony of Jesus," as it is said in ch. xx. 4; because, too, this cry for vengeance is not in the spirit of the Gospel.

Renan finds here and elsewhere "the echo of the persecution of Nero," from which, as he asserts, the Apocalypse has directly resulted unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there

(l. c., p. 167). He refers, however, to the cruelties of Domitian (p. 173) which might possibly suit these "allusions;" but this would not square with his theory as to Antichrist.

11. And there was given them to each one a white robe;] (See vv. 11). As in ch. iii. 4, 5; vii. 14—the symbol of the "righteous acts of the saints," ch. xix. 8 (cf. Zech. iii. 4). Even before the great consummation, the martyrs have a foretaste of heaven. According to Bossuet, the "white robe" is the glory of holy souls awaiting the Resurrection.

On the colour "white," see on ch. i. 14.

that they should rest] In heavenly peace, as implied in ch. xiv. 13; cf. Dan. xii. 13.

Bengel and De Wette explain—"cease from their cry, as uttered in ver. 10."

yet for a little time.] Cf. ch. ii. 21. This interval (χρόνος not καιρός,—see on ch. i. 3) comes to an end at ch. x. 6.

Bengel makes this "Chronus" (or 1111 years, see Intro. § 11, (b), IV.) to extend from the persecution of Christianity under Trajan to that of the Waldenses,—viz. from A.D. 98 to A.D. 1209. I. Williams suggests that this period may extend till the end of the "Thousand Years,"—ch. xx. 5.

until] The answer to the "How long?" in ver. 10. See vv. 11.

both their fellow-servants, and their brethren which should be killed even as they were.] Two classes are denoted, the "fellow servants" of the martyrs—i. e., the company of the faithful; and also "their brethren" who should like them be put to death. The A. V. seems to imply but one class,—the same body of the faithful who are "fellow servants" in relation to the "Master" (ver. 10); and "brethren" as belonging to the communion of believers: so De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd., Alf. The former sense seems to be more in accordance with the text,—see on ch. xx. 4.

Bengel writes, "The first martyrs were chiefly from Israel; their 'fellow servants' were in after times from the heathen; and their 'brethren' from Israel."

should be fulfilled.] See vv. 11. I. e., "completed in number"—cf. Luke xxi. 24; Col. ii. 10; or, adopting the reading of N. B. P., 1 (πληρώσω), "shall have fulfilled [their course]."

According to Bossuet, ch. vii. explains the cause of the delay here spoken of, and how the number of the elect is to be accomplished.

"The era of martyrs" under Diocletian [A.D. 303].—Bishop Newton.

THE SIXTH SEAL (12-17)

12. And I saw when he opened the sixth seal,] Ch. xvi. 17-21 presents many features parallel to the following description. This Seal brings us to the very eve of the final catastrophe. As vv. 3-8 depict the signs which prepare for the Lord's coming,—see Matt. xxiv. 6, &c.; and as the fifth Seal corresponds to Matt. xxiv. 9, so here the imagery of Matt. xxiv. 29 (with the "earthquakes" in ver. 7), is taken up:—cf. vv. 16, 17, with Matt. xxiv. 30, &c.; Luke xxiii. 30. The most striking features of earlier prophecy are also combined here—Isai. ii. 19; xxxiv. 4; l. 3; Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8; Hos. x. 8; Joel ii. 30; Nah. i. 6: so the ancient, and many modern expositors. This, indeed, seems to be the obviously just interpretation; and yet there is no prediction as to which commentators are less unanimous. (1) So early as the time of Andreas (l. c., p. 34) some, adopting the "Preterist" system, interpret the sixth Seal of the siege of Jerusalem by Titus: thus Grotius and others. To the same effect, the rationalistic school interpret this Seal as proving that the different predictions do not refer to the future at all; but merely describe the events before, or during the lifetime of St. John. Every thing, they argue, represented by the first six Seals, is to be found in the historical records of the period extending from the appearance of Jesus Christ to the composition of the Apocalypse, i. e., on this system, down to A.D. 68, viz. Messiah coming forth to exercise spiritual rule over the nations;—then, war, pestilence, famine, as the annals of the Empire show;—then, Nero's persecution;—then, the earthquakes and natural convulsions of the period: see Krenkel, Der Ap. Johannes, s. 67. Mr. Maurice sees in this Seal "the shaking and downfall of heavenly powers;" asking "What can these powers be? Are they not the demons of the old mythology?"—l. c., p. 113.

(2) Several modern writers, on the "Historical" principle of interpretation, refer the sixth Seal to the triumph of the Church in Cent. iv., after the great persecutions. Thus Elliott—who sees here the fall of Pagan Rome dating from the Edict of Toleration (A.D. 311)—writes: "This Vision surely betokened some sudden and extraordinary revolution in the Roman Empire" (l. c., i. p. 203).

was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree ^{10 Or, green figs.} casteth her 'untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

14 ^{11 Is. 34 4.} And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 ^{b Luke 23. 30.} And said to the mountains and

(3) On the "Futurist" system, the sixth Seal is "one of the clearest and most magnificent descriptions of the Day of Judgment which is to be found in the Bible."—J. H. Todd, l. c., p. 106, &c.

It is to be borne in mind that, on any system, what is described in vv. 12–17—as in the case of the preceding five Seals—is all the subject of a Vision, and does not represent actual objective events.

and there was a great earthquake;] (Omit "lo," see vv. 11). Le., an earthquake took place—"came to pass:" cf. Isai. xiii. 13; Hagg. ii. 6; Heb. xii. 26. The vengeance prayed for under the fifth Seal has come.

as sackcloth of hair.] Cf. Isai. l. 3.

and the whole moon] (See vv. 11). Cf. Joel ii. 31. Living Creation was the theme of the first four Seal-Visions; the fifth introduces the prayers of the martyred saints until the Lord should come; the sixth now records the convulsions of material nature on the eve of His appearing.

13. and the stars of the heaven fell unto the earth,] Compare Matt. xxiv. 29; Luke xxi. 25–27. "Stars" being the symbol of rulers (Num. xxiv. 17; Isai. xiv. 12), Hengst. sees the immediate fulfilment of this prediction in the overthrow of the possessor of the old Roman power, 'the bright morning Star,' when the Apoc. was written. "The heaven," he writes, "is the princes' heaven, the entire order of kings and nobles. The stars are individual princes and nobles." . . . "Julian's exclamation, 'Thou hast conquered, O Galilean,' was a fulfilment of our Prophecy."

as a fig tree casteth her unripe figs,] Cf. Nah. iii. 12. Either the winter fig which seldom ripens; or the "untimely" fig of spring—a sense which the parallel of Matt. xxiv. 32 suggests.

when she is shaken, of a great wind.] In vv. 12–14 Hengst. again notices the enumeration by sevens.

14. And the heaven was removed as a scroll when it is rolled up:] "Scroll," or "book" as in ch. i. 11. Isai. xxxiv. 4 supplies the imagery of this passage. The stars having fallen, the firmament (Gen. i. 14) "stretched out as a curtain" (Isai. xl. 22; Psal. civ. 2) disappears as "a scroll when it is rolled up." See vv. 11. (1 reads ὁ οὐρ).

As "the sea," observes Hengst., denotes the nations generally (cf. ch. xvii. 15), it is but an extension of this figure to describe kingdoms as islands and mountains: see ch. xvi. 20. Or the words may simply signify that the foundations of the earth are subverted—that there is a perfect and complete catastrophe in all the realm of inanimate Creation.

15. And the kings of the earth,] As in ch. xix. 18, we have here not only a reference to the inhabitants of the earth generally (as at ver. 10, and Matt. xxv. 32), but an enumeration also of social and other distinctions:—King and slave alike flee "from the wrath of the Lamb."

The "Kings," writes Bishop Newton, are the Emperors "Maximian, Galerius, Maximin, Maxentius, Licinius [A.D. 304–324], &c.":—that is (as Dr. S. R. Maitland comments on this class of interpretations in his Second Enquiry, p. 152), literal kings "on a symbolical earth, with figurative mountains and islands, under a symbolical heaven with a figurative sun, moon, and stars, and suffering from a figurative earthquake."

and the princes,] Düsterd. observes that this term (οἱ μεγιστᾶνες, found in the N. T. only here, in ch. xviii. 23, and in Mark vi. 21, and which belongs to later Greek) is used to denote statesmen and courtiers, as distinguished from military commanders.

and the chief captains, and the rich, and the mighty,] (See vv. 11). "Chief captains" or "military tribunes" (χαλιάρχοι). By "the mighty" are meant those possessed of physical strength,—cf. ch. x. 1; Ps. xxxiii. 16 (LXX.).

and every bondman and freeman,] See vv. 11.

in the caves] Cf. John xi. 38; and for the imagery, Isai. ii. 19. As in vv. 12–14, Hengst. calls attention to the sevenfold enumeration in this verse also.

16. and they say to the mountains and to the rocks,] On this verse, cf. Hos. x. 8.

rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb :

17 For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

Fall upon us,] See Luke xxiii. 30.

the wrath of the Lamb:] See on ch. xxi. 8. We find "wrath" as a Divine attribute in ch. xi. 18; xiv. 10; xvi. 19; xix. 15 (here ὀργή: in ch. xiv. 10, 19; xv. 1, 7; xvi. 1, the Divine "indignation" is θυμός); but it is "wrath" against the godless world, and therefore love, grace, and mercy, towards God's servants. Without its exercise His servants must feel doubtful of His favour, and must despair of His protection,—cf. vv. 9, 10; ch. xix. 2.

17. for the great day of their wrath] (See vv. 11.). Gr. "The Day, the great [Day],"—the two articles rendering the phrase emphatic, and fixing the meaning, "the Day of Judgment," cf. Isai. xlii. 4; Joel i. 15; ii. 2. "It is the expression of that presentiment of the end of the world, which in the great catastrophes of Nature seizes upon men" (Godet).

and who is able to stand?] See Nah. i. 6; Mal. iii. 2. This question the Seer next applies himself to answer. The natural judgments which accompany throughout all time the struggle of the Church with the unbelieving world,—judgments from which the faithful are not exempt,—are the subject of the first four Seals. From the fifth Seal we derive lessons of fortitude and patience during the Church's trials, while she awaits her Lord's Coming, until the time predicted in Matt. xxiv. 31 shall arrive. The supernatural judgments by which that time is to be ushered in are the subject of the sixth Seal: but before these latter judgments fall, before earth and sea are subjected to them, the servants of God are sealed on their foreheads (ch. vii. 3), and thus rescued from the tribulation to come upon the earth. This intervening action (similar to that described in ch. x. 1—xi. 14; ch. xvi. 13—16) is the theme of ch. vii.; and separates the sixth Seal, which closes here, from the seventh in ch. viii. 1.

Vitringa sets aside this symmetrical arrangement, common to the Seals, Trumpets, and Vials, by making the Vision of the sixth Seal consist of three scenes, viz. ch. vi. 12—17; ch. vii. 1—8; ch. vii. 9—17. Godet takes all the first six Seals to represent, each of them, not a particular event, but "the categories of the principal judgments by which God supports, throughout all time, the preaching of the Gospel" (Matt. xxiv. 6, 7); "disciplinary measures," in short, which the tableaux of the Seals exhibits,—a tableau which is applicable to every period of the history of the Church, that can be called preparatory: "The first Seal denotes all the preachings of the Gospel:—the second, all the wars;—the third, all the famines;—the fourth, all the contagious maladies;—the fifth, all the persecutions;—the sixth, all the earthquakes which the earth has seen, or will see, until the last scene for which the Trumpets must give the signal."—Id., p. 350.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. VI.

NOTE A—THE SEAL-VISIONS.

It is not without importance to bear in mind, as the chief Visions of the Apocalypse come before us, the methods of exposition adopted by the early writers of the Church, either where they comment directly on the Book, or where they refer generally to its words. It will also be useful to add to the notes on the text some further illustration of the systems followed by modern expositors. No attempt, however, will be made to give an exhaustive history of Apocalyptic interpretation.

ST. IRENÆUS (A.D. 180) seems to have been the earliest expositor of the Seal-Visions. He understands the "Sealed Book" ("pater-num librum") to contain those things of which Christ said: "All things are delivered unto me, of my Father" (Matt. xi. 27).—Adv. Her. iv. 20, p. 253. Irenæus interprets the first Seal to signify Christ Himself, of whom Jacob struggling and conquering (Gen. xxv. 22) was the type, and of whom "Joannes in Apocalypsi ait, 'Exivit vincens, ut vinceret'" (ib., c. 21, p. 258).

TERTULLIAN (circ. A.D. 200), having casually alluded to the Red and Pale Horses (vv. 4, 8), limits his exposition to the fifth Seal, which is occupied, he thinks, with the period extending to the universal Resurrection: "In Apocalypsi Joannis ordo temporum sternitur, quem martyrum quoque animæ sub altari sustinere didicerunt" (De Resurr. c. 25);—"Quomodo Joanni in Spiritu paradisi regio revelata, quæ subjicitur altari, nullas, alias animas apud se præter martyrum ostendit?" (De Anim., c. 55);—"Martyrum animæ placidum quiescunt. . . Nam et rursus innumera multitudo albat et palmis victoriæ insignes revelantur; scilicet de Antichristo triumphantes, sicut unus ex Presbyteris 'Hi sunt,' ait, 'qui veniunt, &c.'," (ch. vii. 14),—Scorpiace, c. 12.¹

ANONYMUS ad Novatianum (circ. A.D. 255, ap. Galland. t. iii. p. 375)—the first writer who notices the sixth Seal—commenting upon the "Little Horn" of Dan. vii. 8 observes: "Joannes autem manifestus et de die iudicii et consummatione sæculi declarat, dicens, 'Et cum aperuisset Sigillum sextum,' &c."

VICTORINUS (circ. A.D. 290), in expounding the Seal-Visions, adopts the primitive clavis Apocalypica: "Ait enim Dominus in Evangelio." The first six Seals present a pictorial illustration of the Lord's prophetic words in Matt. xxiv. Victorinus (ap. Galland. t. ii. p. 57) explains the opening of the Seals to be the opening of the Old Testament, and a prediction concerning those who are to preach in the latter times. In the first Seal the Rider on the White Horse, crowned and bearing a bow, is sent to preach the word—his sayings being like arrows, and his crown that which is promised to preachers by the Holy Spirit. The next three Seals are the wars, famines and pestilences ("bella, fames, pestis,") foretold in Matt. xxiv.—the third Seal extending to the times of Antichrist, "quando magna fames est ventura, quandoque omnes lædentur." In the fifth Seal, the souls are seen under the Altar; and as the Golden Altar signifies heaven, so the Brass Altar here signifies the earth, "sub qua est infernus, remota à pœnis et ignibus regio, et requies sanctorum" (ib.).²

ANDREAS explains the Seals thus:—(i) The Apostolic age, and the triumph over Satan in

¹ Mr. C. Maitland (l. c., p. 164) observes that "this passage contains the earliest identification of the fifth-Seal-martyrs with those who suffer under Antichrist." Mr. Elliott, on the other hand, considers that the two classes are here expressly distinguished.

² Up to this point, observes Dr. Todd (Lect. on the Apoc. p. 276), "the interpretation given by our author of the first five Seals is evidently a remnant of the ancient literal exposition. And it is remarkable that where the figurative interpretation begins the corruption of the text of this commentary becomes manifest. At the sixth Seal the figurative interpretation begins:" the "great earthquake" is the last persecution,—the moon becoming blood denotes the pouring forth by the Church of her blood for Christ, &c. &c. Dr. Todd, however, is not correct in placing the beginning of the "figurative" interpretation at the sixth Seal. Not to speak of what Victorinus says on the first Seal, he

the conversion of the Gentiles;—(ii) The age next after the Apostolic, noted for the martyrdom of the Saints, Matt. x. 34;—(iii) The mourning over those who fall away, and who are to be tried in the balance of Divine justice; the oil and wine denoting the healing of such by Christ, Luke x. 34;—(iv) The results of the persecution under Maximin (Euseb., H. E. ix. 8);—(v) The Martyrs' cry for vengeance;—(vi) A transition to the days of Antichrist; or (observes Andreas), as some hold, the seige of Jerusalem under Vespasian;—(vii) The seventh Seal (Rev. viii. 1) contains the Trumpets; and the opening of that Seal signifies the dissolution of all earthly rule, which the Seven Trumpet-Angels effect by plagues of chastisement and punishment.

The commentaries of TICHONIUS¹ (circ. A.D. 380), and PRIMASIVS (circ. A.D. 553) are in many respects founded on the same principles. Both writers see in the first Seal, Christ and His Church proceeding to victory; and both, after Victorinus, regard the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th as signifying bella, fames, pestis. The fifth Seal denotes martyrdom generally. The sixth they refer to the last persecution.

writes on the third: "Vinum et oleum ne laseris, id est, hominem spiritualem ne plagis percuteris" (ib.).

¹ The commentary of Tichonius is quoted both in the usual commentaries on the Apocalypse, and in the critical editions of the text—to give an instance taken at random, see Tischendorf's notes on Rev. xxi. in his 8th ed.

The African grammarian Tichonius was a Donatist (Neander, Kirchengesch., i. 527; Robertson, Hist. of the Church, i. p. 416, 3rd ed.); and among his writings Cave reckons his "Comment. in Apocalypsin Johannis, cui plurima, inquit Cassiodorus, venenosi-sui dogmatis sæculenta permiscuit." It is nearly certain that this commentary is no longer extant. The opinion of Erasmus in his ed. of St. Augustine's works (t. ix., Paris, 1541), respecting the commentary which is there ascribed to Tichonius, was that short notes had been collected 'a studioso quopiam,' and afterwards formed into Homilies. This commentary is also to be found in the ed. of the divines of Louvain (Opp. St. August. t. ix., App., p. 352, Antv. 1576), who repeat the opinion that the exposition had been compiled 'a quopiam studioso.' In this same opinion the Benedictines also concur (see Opp. St. August. t. iii., Antw. 1700). Cave says that this supposed commentary consists of fragments taken from the expositions of Victorinus, Tichonius, Primasius, Beda, and others (Hist. Lit., i. p. 294; cf. C. Oudin, i. p. 890). Nic. Zegerus seems to have been the first who attributed this commentary to Tichonius.

The "Septem Regulæ" of Tichonius are authentic, and distinct from his commentary on the Apocalypse:—see Introd. § 11, (b), L.

BEDA (circ. A.D. 730) understands the Seals as disclosing the future fortunes and trials of the Church, generally giving two senses—one allegorical and one literal. St. John observes the regular order down to the number six, and then, omitting the seventh, "recapitulates" ("Nunc vero recapitulat ab origine eadem aliter dicturus,"—l. c., Introd. ad cap. viii.). The first Seal discloses the glory of the primitive Church;—the three following the world's war against her;—the fifth the glory of those triumphed over in the world's war;—the sixth, the times of Antichrist. Then comes a "Recapitulation";—and then "in septimo cernit initium quietis æternæ."

"Down to the year 1120," writes Mr. Ch. Maitland (l. c., p. 315), "every writer that had handled the Seals had agreed in the meaning of the first, sixth, and seventh. The first had been taken to mean the Gospel triumph; the sixth the precursors of the last judgment; the seventh the 'beginning of the eternal rest.'" About A.D. 1111, or 1120, Ambrosiaster (or Berengaudus) and Rupertus Tuitiensis interpreted the sixth Seal of the destruction of Jerusalem [but see, above, the account of Andreas], thus giving an historical application to a part of those prophecies which hitherto had been applied exclusively to the end."

ANSELM of Havelberg (circ. A.D. 1149) extended the allegorico-historical application. The Seals represent "the seven states" of the Church: At first she is white with purity;—then red with martyrdom, down to the age of Diocletian;—she is blackened by heresy from Arius to Nestorius and the Manichæans;—and pale with hypocrisy during the remainder of the dispensation;—she is expectant till the martyrs' reward is conferred;—she is convulsed under Antichrist;—and at rest in the silence of heaven: "Recte ergo media et non integra hora dicitur" [Rev. viii. 1].—Dialog., lib. i., ap. d'Achery, Spicileg. t. i. p. 166.

MODERN EXPOSITORS.

I. Historical.

MEDE (ob. 1638) considers that the two chief prophecies of the Apoc. begin after ch. iv. The First embraces the Seals, and the Trumpets included in the seventh Seal; the Second, which is that of the "Little Book" (ch. x. 8), extends to the end of the Revelation. Both proceed from the same starting-point—the former giving the history of the Empire; the latter of the Church: and both coalesce in the Church triumphant. The Seven Seals accordingly are a syllabus of Roman History. We there see (1) the Empire in peace after the Jewish war under Vespasian;—(2) The Empire under Trajan and Aurelian;—(3) The balance of justice under Septimius and Alexander Severus;—(4) The evils under Decius, Gallus, and Valerian;—(5) The persecution under Diocletian;—(6) The overthrow of paganism and the changes under Constantine;—(7) The last Seal, as explained by the Seven Trumpets (ch. viii. 6) which unfold its complex import, reveals the inroad of the Barbarians, and the fall of the Empire. According to this scheme the sixth Seal was fulfilled under Constantine; and the same result is adopted by Bishop Newton, Daubuz, Lowman, Doddridge, Hales, and others.

VITRINGA (ob. 1722) discerns in the Sea's (1) The Church in peace from Nerva to Decius for 150 years;—(2) Persecutions after A.D. 250;—(3) The heresies and calamities from Constantine to Cent. ix.;—(4) The Saracenic and Turkish inroads;—(5) The sufferings of the Albigenses and Waldenses, and others down to the age of the Reformation;—(6) The fall of the Jewish nation;—or the changes under Constantine;—or the commotions in Europe in the Reformation period;—or The destruction of Antichrist;—(7) The "half-hour's silence" (ch. viii. 1): i. e., he takes the seventh Seal to mean the prolonged peace of the Church after the fall of Antichrist; the Trumpets, relating to the Roman Empire, being entirely separated from this Seal, which predicts the internal history of Christianity.

BENGEL (ob. 1752):—The first four Seals denote the bloom of Imperial power, (1) in the East under Trajan; (2) in the West; (3) in the South; (4) in the North, according to the position of the Four Living Beings (ch. iv. 6): they relate to what was visible, and to time past. The last three Seals relate to things invisible:—(5) the righteous dead; (6) the unrighteous dead; (7) the Angels.

G. S. FABER:—The first four Seals are identical with Daniel's Four Monarchies, the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, Roman. The fifth Seal represents the persecutions of the Church under the Roman Emperors;—the sixth, the Establishment of Christianity under Constantine;—the seventh is left unexplained.

CUNNINGHAME:—(1) The progress of the Gospel from the beginning;—(2) the conflicts of the Church with Arians and Donatists;—(3) the dark ages of the Papacy;—(4) the Inquisition, and the persecution of the Albigenses and Waldenses;—(5) the dawn of the Reformation;—(6) the French Revolution, including events still future;—(7)

KEITH:—(1) The growth of Christianity;—(2) Mohammedanism;—(3) The Papacy;—(4) Infidelity;—(5) Persecution to follow;—(6) The last great catastrophe;—(7)

ELLIOTT:—(1) The "golden age" from Nerva, A.D. 96, to the second Antonine;—

(2) The military despotism, commencing with Commodus, A.D. 185;—(3) Taxation under Caracalla's edict, A.D. 212;—(4) God's "four sore judgments" which preceded the fall of the Empire, dating from A.D. 248;—(5) The persecution under Diocletian, A.D. 303;—(6) The fall of Pagan Rome dating from the edict of toleration, A.D. 311 (Paganism having been swept away, ch. vii. represents the Church established in its place);—(7) With ch. viii. 1, begins the short interval between the death of Theodosius the Great, A.D. 395, and the rising of the barbarian hordes.

WORDSWORTH. The Seals give a prophetic view of the successive sufferings of the Church from the First Advent of Christ, until the End:—(1) Christ comes with the Gospel;—(2) Satan causes Ten persecutions; First, under Nero; Second, under Domitian; Third, under Trajan; Fourth, under Marcus Aurelius Antoninus; Fifth, under Septimius Severus; Sixth, under Maximinus; Seventh, under Decius; Eighth, under Valerian; Ninth, under Aurelian; Tenth, under Diocletian; making a period of about 240 years, i.e., from A.D. 64 to A.D. 304. This is the enumeration of St. Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xviii. 52;—(3) The third Seal represents not only a season of spiritual scarcity, a famine of the Word of God (Amos viii. 11), but also Satan "riding forth on the black horse of Heresy;"—(4) The evil is multi-form—the Barbarian invasions, A.D. 410–455; Mohammedanism, A.D. 622; spiritual Dearth, and Death consequent on heresies and schisms; the rise of the Papacy, Cent. ix. and x.;—(5) St. John sees the souls of the martyrs in their rest, ch. xiv. 13;—(6) "The last age of the Church and the world;"—(7) In "the half hour's silence" (ch. viii. 1) St. John has a glimpse of the future peace of Eternity (ch. xxi.; xxii.).

Mr. Tyso¹ gives in a tabular form, as follows, the results attained by several of the "Historical" commentators on the Apocalypse as to the dates of the opening of the several Seals:—

Seals.	De Lyra.	Mede.	R. Fleming.	Daubuz.	Frere.	G. S. Faber.	Thos. Scott.	Cunninghame.	Keith.
1	Began A.D. Christianity 33	A.D. 70	A.D. 33	A.D. 34	A.D. 312	B.C. 657	A.D. 34	A.D. 31	A.D. 96 (Christianity).
2	Nero . . .	117	66	66	383	538	100	319	622 (Mohammed).
3	Titus . . .	211	138	202	400	331	138	500	606 (Popery).
4	Domitian . .	237	190	235	533	30	193	1200	1789 (Infidelity)
5	Diocletian . .	270	250	303	628	311	270	1552	Persecution.
6	Diocletian . .	304	306	312	1789	313	324	1792	The last Catastrophe.
7	Liberius . .	"	"	325	"	"	388	"

II. (a) Ordinary "Preterists":—

GROTIUS understands by "the earth," in the second Seal, the land of Judæa;—the dearth, under the third Seal, he takes to be the famine which prevailed in the reign of Claudius;—the sixth Seal relates to the events during the siege of Jerusalem by Titus.

BOSSUET (ob. 1704) takes the Rider in the first Seal to be Christ, in Whose train follow the three agents of the wrath of God (2 Sam. xxiv. 13);—in the second Seal to be War;—in the third to be Famine;—in the fourth to be Pestilence. In the fifth Seal, the Altar is Christ (Col. iii. 34). The sixth Seal signifies the Divine vengeance—which is to fall first on the Jews, and then on the persecuting Empire, but which is deferred until the number of the elect from among the Jewish people is accomplished. Bossuet finds the great Catastrophe of the Apocalypse in the conquest of Pagan Rome by Alaric.

WETSTEIN, who places the date of the Apocalypse before the destruction of Jerusalem, assumes that the first part of the Book has respect to Judæa and the Jews; and the second to the Roman Empire. The "Sealed Book" is the book of divorcement sent to the Jewish nation from God; and the Seven Seals are to be interpreted thus: (1) The victorious Horseman is Artabanus king of the Parthians who slaughtered the Jews in Babylon;—(2) The red horse means the assassins and robbers of Judæa in the days of Felix and Festus;—(3) Famine comes under Claudius;—(4) The pestilence which follows famine and pillage;—(5) The Christians, persecuted in Judæa, are about to be avenged;—(6) Commotions in Judæa, preparatory to rebellion;—(7) A brief respite—"the Silence" (ch. viii. 1)—conceded to the entreaties of King Agrippa.

STUART considers that the "Sealed Book," comprising chapters vi.–xi., symbolizes the humiliation of the Jewish persecuting power and the triumph of Christianity; and that this is the import of the series of symbols throughout ch. vi.–xi.—chapters which describe what he calls "the First Catastrophe" (see on ch. x. a).

¹ "An Exposition of the Books of Daniel and the Revelation," London, 1838. By Jos. Tyso.

ISAAC WILLIAMS—who may here be classed as a “Preterist”—takes “with Victorinus the discourse on the Mount of Olives for the key” to the first six Seals. The Vision of ch. v. represents the power given to Christ at the Resurrection; and we have here in order an emblematic history of His victory on earth from that period. As to the writing “on the back,” the first six Seals, embracing a period of forty years “in which the Spirit pleaded with Jerusalem before its destruction,” describe the Lord’s coming in judgment on the Holy City, each having, at the same time, a hidden sense—the writing “within.” “The seventh Seal contains the Seven Trumpets within it . . . the judgments and sufferings of the Church.”—Joel i. 15 (LXX).

(b) Rationalistic “Preterists.”

The exposition of modern Rationalists may be represented by Volkmar and Renan:—

VOLKMAR:—(1) The Book of Judgment when its first Seal is opened exhibits the all-pervading victory of Messiah, followed by “the sorrows” (Matt. xxiv. 8) which introduce His Kingdom;—(2) The Parthian and Arabian wars, with the Jewish war after the year 66;—(3) Repeated famine, A.D. 44;—(4) Pestilence, A.D. 66;—(5) The martyrs at Rome, A.D. 64, are compared to victims slain on the Divine Altar (cf. Phil. ii. 17; 2 Tim. iv. 6; Ignat. ad Rom. ii. 4), their blood flowing beneath it (cf. Lev. iv. 7);—(6) The world-convulsions which, according to all prophecy (e. g. Isai. xiii. 10), precede the Day of Judgment, and which the Seer now clearly beholds under the reign of Galba, A.D. 68;—(7) The seventh Seal is opened amid the notes of the Seven Trumpets which announce the Judgment.

RENAN thus prefaces his conclusion:—The rage of the Christians against the Roman Empire had led to the belief that the Anti-christ Nero was to be judged by Messiah in presence of the universe (p. 351), a belief which was “the parent of the Apocalypse.” According, therefore, to a truly just historical conception, the Author of the Apocalypse fixes the origin of the Messianic agitation at the moment (A.D. 69) when Rome extended its Empire to Judæa. Accordingly the Seals present (1) The Roman Empire to which, in St. John’s days, all resistance is vain;—(2) War, the revolt of Judæa and the insurrection of Vindex;—(3) The scarcity of the year 68;—(4) Death;—(5) The cry of the souls of the martyrs of the year 64;—(6) The convulsion of the Universe at the Last Judgment;—(7) The “Silence” (ch. viii. 1) indicates that the first act of the mystery is ended, and that another is about to begin (pp. 384–391).

III. “Futurists.”—

J. H. TODD:—The Lord’s Second Coming is represented in the Seal Visions under different aspects:—“Wars and famine, pestilence and death, are to be the signs; a great and fearful persecution of the Church shall fulfil the number of the martyrs; and then shall the end be” (p. 104).

DE BURGH:—“The Seals have not yet been opened. What we have now to expect from the opening of the Seals, is the unfolding, according as they are opened, of the acts of Christ when ‘He takes to Himself His great power to reign’—ch. xi. 17” (l. c., p. 150).

IV. Symbolical.

STERN:—The Seals denote (1) Christianity personified;—(2) The personification of every World-power thirsting for Christian blood, and chiefly the Roman Empire;—(3) The personification of false doctrine;—(4) The personification of unbelief and utter apostasy;—(5) The prayers uttered by the souls of the martyrs;—(6) Commotions in Church and State. The falling of the stars denotes the falling away of Church rulers from the faith; and the removal of islands and mountains symbolizes the overthrow of all ecclesiastical and civil order;—(7) The Trumpets are introduced by the seventh Seal.

NOTE B ON VER. 6—ALLEGORICAL INTERPRETATIONS.

The third Seal has been the subject of extensive allegorizing.

Beda writes:—“Equus niger falsorum caterva est fratrum, qui statim recte professionis habent, sed socios lædunt per opera tenebrarum.”—Vitringa explains the dearib to mean spiritual famine (see on ver. 5), “caritas annonæ spiritalis,” viz. from Constantine to Cent. ix.;—C. à Lapidè: The Horse denotes heretics like Arius; the Rider the Devil, or Heresiarchs; the balance and measure signify Scripture; the penny is the merit of faith and holiness; wheat is the emblem of the Gospel; barley of the harshness of the Old Law; oil and wine are the medicine of our Samaritan, Christ;—N. de Lyra: The black Horse is the Roman army under the Rider Titus; wheat and barley denote the Jews; oil and wine the Christians.

CHAPTER VII.

14. Their robes were washed in the blood of the Lamb.

3 An angel sealeth the servants of God in their foreheads. 4 The number of them that were sealed: of the tribes of Israel a certain number. 9 Of all other nations an innumerable multitude, which stand before the throne, clad in white robes, and palms in their hands.

AND after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the [Ver. 1 om. καί.—τοῦτο. Ver. 2 ἀναβαίνοντα. Ver. 3 om. οὐ.—σφραγίσωμεν. Verses 5-8 ἐσφραγισμένοι is to be read only in the first and last place. Ver. 9 περιβεβλημένους. Ver. 10 κράζουσιν.—τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν τῷ καθ. ἐπὶ τῷ θρόνῳ. Ver. 11 εἰσπήκεισαν.—τὰ πρόσωπα. Ver. 14 Κυρίε μου.—ἰλεεύ. αὐτὰς ἐν. Ver. 17 ζῶης.—ἐκ τῶν ὀφθ.—[The words καὶ ἐξαλείψει κ. τ. λ., not found in 1, Er. (after the Vulg.) supplied in his 2nd ed. from ch. xxi. 4].]

CHAP. VII. THE TWO EPISODES (1-17).

This chapter, by its two episodes commencing "After this" (ver. 1) and "After these things" (ver. 9), separates the first six Seals from the seventh (ch. viii. 1); just as in the case of the Trumpets there is the double interlude in ch. x. 1-xi. 14; and in the case of the Vials the episode of ch. xvi. 13-16.

Commentators differ as to the connexion here:—Vitringa, as we have seen (on ch. vi. 17), includes ch. vii. under the sixth Seal. Ewald connects ch. vii. 9-17 with ch. vi. 11. Many (Stern, Hengst., Words, &c.) refer more or less to the judgments of all the six Seals—especially of the sixth—on the principle of Recapitulation (see the remarks introductory to ch. viii.).

Bossuet connects this chapter on the one hand with the fifth Seal,—"the short time" spoken of in ch. vi. 11 being accounted for by the Sealing of the elect from among the Jews; and on the other hand with ch. viii. by comparing ver. 3 ("the earth," "the sea," "the trees") with the first two Trumpet Visions, ch. viii. 7-9.

As already observed on ch. vi. (see on vv. 8, 17), the language of the Seer does not imply that the elect are to be exempt from the judgments and trials there specified. The Seven Epistles (ch. ii.; iii.) promise no such immunity during the period of the Church's warfare. The contrary is predicted by our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 20-29; and the same follows from ver. 14 below. Assuming, on the other hand, that the Sealing of the elect does signify preservation from temporal calamities and physical suffering, many others (Mede, Bengel, De Wette, Ebrard, Züllig, Düsterd., Alf.) connect this chapter with the seventh Seal, under which the final judgment is to be looked for. Accepting any of these results, the seventh chapter, by its two episodes—the Sealing the servants of God who are of Israel (ver. 4), and the assembling of the great multitude who are of all nations (ver. 9)—gives the answer to the question of ch. vi. 17: "And who is able to stand?" The time set forth in Matt. xxiv. 30 has arrived; but the Angels must first gather together "the elect from the four winds" of heaven (ver. 31). To the faithful of all times, oppressed by the thought of the coming judgment, the consolation is held out—(1) In vv. 1-8 that God's protection will be over those who shall be exposed to the approaching Trial, whether we understand by it the trials which the Church has had from the beginning to encounter under the first six Seals, or those still future under the seventh Seal; and (2) In vv. 9-17 that the celestial glory is reserved as their reward.

The result then seems clearly to be that by the Sealing of the servants of God no one definite act, to be performed at some one definite point of time, is intended; but that this entire Vision represents a continual process of preservation under the trials and afflictions of all times, down to the end.

As the Vision of God's throne (ch. iv.) precedes the Seals, so here the Vision of the Blessed precedes the Trumpets (ch. viii. 7, &c.) with their warnings of judgment and of woe.

Compare the parallels supplied by Ex. xii. 7, 13; Ezek. ix. 4-6.

THE SEALING OF ISRAEL (1-8).

1. After this] (Omit And—see vv. 11). I.e., after the Vision of the sixth Seal. The Vision of the Sealed, according to Mede, is given twice,—here, in order to denote those who are to be preserved under the calamities denounced by the Trumpets; and again, in ch. xiv., to encourage those who retain their faith after the Beast has appeared, and when the rest of mankind have worshipped him. Hengst. and others, as stated above, place the events described in this Vision before or during the Seal-Visions, or, at least, before the close of the sixth Seal.

wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God : and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to

I saw four angels] Perhaps 'Angels of the winds'—see Dan. vii. 2; Zech. vi. 5; or, generally, four "ministering spirits" to whom the office here described is given, cf. ver. 2; ch. viii. 2; xv. 1. So Düsterd., who notes: "Neither 'evil angels' (Aret., Zeger, Laun., Calov., Beng., Rinck., and others); nor 'the Angels of the winds' after the analogy of the 'Angels of the waters' in ch. xvi. 5, cf. ch. xiv. 18 (Alcar., C. à Lap., Stern, Heinr., Züll., De Wette)."

standing upon the four corners of the earth,] I.e., the points from which the four winds proceed—cf. Jer. xlix. 36; Matt. xxiv. 31. Four is also the signature of the earth—see Intro., § 11, (a). The phrase includes the whole region that lies within them, i.e., the whole earth even to its "four corners"—see Isa. xi. 12: cf. ch. xx. 8.

holding the four winds of the earth,] The interpretation of ch. vii. being symbolical, the meaning of this verse is that the Divine judgments of the first six Seals—of which "the four winds" are now the emblem—are, from age to age of the Church's history, to be so regulated that God's elect shall be safely carried through their spiritual trials, although exposed like mankind in general to the calamities which are to come upon the earth.

According to the sense given to the "winds," whether literal or symbolical, we must also understand, argues Düsterd., "the earth," "the sea," "the trees;" and he takes the sense to be literal storm-winds which shall desolate the entire earth,—an outburst, after the signs of the sixth Seal, of still greater calamities held back until after the Sealing of the servants of God, but which are immediately to precede the actual entrance of the final catastrophe. Mede takes the "winds" in a figurative sense, as denoting wars and calamities which, like tempests, may come from any quarter of the earth. Hengst. notes that "the four winds of the earth" are in Scripture the symbol of the Divine judgments (here, those announced in ch. vi.):—he takes "the sea" to be the symbol of the nations and peoples, and "the trees" to signify the kings and great men, ch. vi. 15. Thus Words. also: The Angels are to restrain the winds, or blasts of destruction, from blowing on the earth, i.e., on earthly powers opposed to those of heaven;—from blowing on the sea, the emblem of nations in agitation;—from hurting the trees, the great and powerful ones of the world: God's design in this world is the preservation and beatification of His servants and the punishment of the opposing powers of this world, here represented by the earth, sea, and trees, is subordinate;—not directly designed by Him, but consequent on their sins, cf. Matt. xxiv. 40. According to Bengel, "the earth" is Asia; "the sea," Europe; "the trees" Africa. Grotius takes "the earth" to be Judæa;—"the winds" any calamity;—"the sea" a great people, such as that of Jerusalem;—"the trees" imply what is formed from trees, such as cities, or the Temple;—and on the whole, the peaceful rule under King Agrippa is meant.

that no wind should blow on the earth, or on the sea, or upon any tree.] (K, P, I read πᾶν, as in ch. ix. 4; xxi. 27; B, C read τῇ; A reads "on a tree"—ἐν τῷ δέντρῳ). Land and sea include the surface of the earth; the trees are the objects most exposed to storms.

2. another angel] Also indefinite: one contrasted with the other four (ver. 1), and on whom they minister,—cf. ch. viii. 3; x. 1; xiv. 6, 8, 17. Not necessarily "an Archangel" (Stern); nor can it be Christ (Hengst.), or the Holy Ghost (Vitr.)—see the words, "of our God," ver. 3. Referring to the epithet "the day-spring" (ἀνατολή), in Luke i. 78, Words. understands by this "Angel," if not "Christ himself," "a special messenger from Christ." Victorinus takes this Angel to be the prophet Elijah, who is to anticipate the times of the Antichrist, and restore and give peace to the Church.

ascend from the sun-rising,] Cf. ch. xvi. 12. The Angel who brings protection comes from that one of the four regions (ver. 1) whence rises the source of light and blessing for the earth:—"In view of Patmos," notes Stern, "and the lands where the Gospel first shone."

the seal of the living God:] Cf. ch. ix. 4. Strictly "a seal,"—although the possessive gen. which follows renders the noun definite. Düsterdieck suggests that there may be "different seals for different objects,"—the object here being to impress this Seal upon the foreheads of the servants of God. By this token their faithful continuance in God's service, notwithstanding the coming woes, is insured. This "Seal" is of an entirely different nature from the "mark of the Beast" (χάρagma) in ch. xiii. 16; xiv. 9, 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4, which denoted servitude to a master. The title "the living God," means that God as the Living One (Jer. x. 10) now gives life. (Note that here only we have not the full title, "that liveth for ever and ever,"—cf. ch. iv. 9, 10; x. 6; xv. 7).)

whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

4 And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there and he cried with a great voice] As in ch. i. 10; v. 2; vi. 10; &c.

to whom it was given to hurt] Gr. "to whom it was given unto them" (which does not suit the English idiom—see on ch. iii. 8, and cf. ch. vi. 4). That is to those whose function it was to set free the four winds, and thus cause the ruin.

Some writers hold that the restraining the winds is the cause which "hurts,"—Rinck inferring this from the fact that in what follows no command is given to set them loose;—Bengel, because the winds, if set free, must "cool" the scorching heat of the approaching plagues, ch. viii. 7, &c.: but cf. ver. 3.

the earth and the sea,] The trees specified in vv. 1, 3, are here omitted, because they are to be understood as belonging to "the earth," and hence, from this omission, Düsterd. infers that neither the earth, nor the sea or the trees are to be understood symbolically. Auberlen understands "the earth and the sea" to signify the worldly element, as opposed to the kingdom of God (p. 245):—see on ch. xii. 9, 12.

3. Saying, Hurt not] By loosing the four winds. The act of protection now commanded shields the Church during her warfare with the world; and the final withdrawal of this—when the sealing is complete whereby the servants of God from age to age are marked out (cf. ch. ix. 4), and when the elect are at length gathered together—is to be followed by the peace of heaven (vv. 16, 17).

the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees,] Cf. the judgments of the first two Trumpets—see ch. viii. 7-9.

till we shall have sealed] (See vv. 11). "We," not "I"—i.e., this other Angel, and the four who minister to him, see on ver. 2. The symbolical act of "Sealing" signifies that God will protect and preserve: see below, and on ch. ix. 4.

the servants of our God] A title, notes Bengel, specially belonging to holy men in Israel—Gen. i. 17; Deut. xxxii. 36; Isai. lxi. 6. Cf. ch. xix. 10; xxii. 9.

Grotius and "Preterists" generally understand the Jewish Christians who fled from Jerusalem to Pella, escaping, through having been "sealed," the results of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem.

on their foreheads,] Cf. Ex. xxviii. 36-38. The unholy imitation of this Divine Sealing, the slave-brand of common life, was on the band, or on the forehead, as the most conspicuous place—see ch. xiii. 16; xiv. 9; xx. 4. We here recall the vision in Ezek. ix. 4-6 (see the note in loc.) where "the mark"—as the Hebrew text shows—was the letter Tau (ט) the last of the Hebrew alphabet, and of which the old form was that of a cross. We are thus reminded of the sign of the Cross in holy baptism which has taken the place of circumcision, Rom. iv. 11. (Compare also the reference to baptism as "the Seal of the Lord" [τὴν σφραγίδα τοῦ Κυρίου] in the affecting narrative of the interview between St. John and the youthful convert who had become a robber, as told by Clemens Al., Quis dives salv., c. 42; Euseb. H. E. iii. 23, together with the note of Valesius). The "Seal" moreover in this place, although the text does not say so, may have contained the names of God and of Christ—see ch. iii. 12, and also ch. xiv. 1 where the "Sealed" again appear. Renan (l. c., p. 389) observes that "the Seal has for its legend, as all the seals of kings, the name of Him to whom it belongs, ליהוה, Isai. xlv. 5." The effect we learn at ch. ix. 4; the sealing however does not denote protection from tribulation (see ver. 14), but preservation from apostasy under tribulation—cf. the "if it were possible" of Matt. xxiv. 24. This "Sealing" may denote who "the Elect" are, to whom our Lord refers, Matt. xxiv. 22.

Ebrard, who considers (s. 311) that "the time from the conversion of Israel until the Second Advent of Christ (ch. xii. 10-14) is stated to be only 3½ days," regards the Sealing as another form of the figure of the flight to the wilderness in ch. xii. 14:—see on ch. viii. 6.

THE 144 THOUSAND (4-8).

4. And I heard] The sealing is assumed to have taken place between vv. 3 and 4.

the number of them which were sealed,] Probably as announced by the Angel—the other Angel of vv. 2, 3. The act of Sealing is not described in the Vision; just as it is omitted in Ezek. ix. where, after the command had been given at ver. 4, it is stated at ver. 11: "I have done as thou hast commanded me."

an hundred and forty and four thousand,] (Omit and there were). This number gives the square of twelve, multiplied by the cube of ten. The number 12 (= 3 × 4) combines were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand.

"the signature" of God and "the signature" of the world. The division into Twelve Tribes fixes the relation of Israel, God's ancient Church, to the number Twelve. Christ too by the number of His Apostles has fixed the same relation for the Christian Church ("Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 28); and thus, by the use of this number He has declared His Church to be the Covenant people with whom God shall ever dwell. Again: the number 1000 (= 10³) is the symbol of universality—see Intro. § 11, (a). For 12 × 1000, see ch. xxi. 16; and for 12 × 12, see ch. xxi. 17. It is evident that the literal number 144,000 cannot be intended here: a vast number—less than a number indefinitely great, but greater than a large number designedly finite, e.g. "a thousand" (ch. xx. 2)—is what we are to understand; see on ch. viii. 1.

The number 144,000 involves the idea of election (De Wette). See ch. xiv. 1.

sealed out of every tribe of the children of Israel.] I.e., out of all the Tribes—for this cumulative sense of "every" (nās) joined to a substantive without the article, see Winer, § 18. 4, s. 101. That "Israel," and more specially the Jews are taken in this Book in the highest and best sense, is clear from ch. ii. 9; iii. 9; and thus the language here indicates "the blessed company of all faithful people"—"the Israel of God," Gal. vi. 15, 16; cf. Rom. ix. 6-8. It was by this metaphor the Apostle of the Gentiles signified that the Church of the latter Covenant is continuous with the Church of the former Covenant: and now, St. John, foreshadowing how the Church of the Redeemed is to be gathered in from amid the sin and confusion of the world, announces, in the figurative language of St. Paul, that it is "the Israel of God" alone which can supply citizens for "the New Jerusalem." In this sense the Epistle for All Saints' Day is taken from this chapter. The reference to the Twelve Tribes of Israel, ch. xxi. 12, and to "the New Jerusalem," ch. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10, seems to fix upon the words this spiritual meaning; while the fact that the same number is chosen out of every Tribe indicates that both names and numbers are here symbolical (cf. the equal division of the Holy Land among the Twelve Tribes, Ezek. xlvii. 13, 14). In fact, the definite number 144,000—representing "the Sealed" on earth throughout all time—is again represented indefinitely in ver. 9, by the "great multitude which no man could number;" in other words, by the Church of the Redeemed in heaven (cf. ch. v. 9 with ch. xiv. 1, 3):—to this effect Origen, Mede, Vitruvius, Ewald, De Wette, Dollinger, Hengst., Words., Alf., &c.; see on ch. ix. 4.

There are many, however, who refuse to identify those who are here sealed, with the palm-bearing multitude in ver. 9. They consider "the Sealed" to represent Jewish believers, chosen out of the literal Israel. These as belonging to the Twelve Tribes which are here distinctly specified, form a definite number (cf. Isai. liv.-lxvi.; Rom. xi.); and thus vv. 1-8 relate to believers from Israel, but vv. 9-17 to believers whether Jews or Gentiles (see the remark of Vitringa, quoted in note A on ch. xi. 1).—so Grotius, Bullinger, Bengel, Stuart, I. Williams, J. H. Todd, De Burgh, Ebrard, Züllig, Düsterd.,—Auberlen (and so Burger) further noting that these "form the nucleus of glorified humanity, to which the Gentiles are joined" (p. 355). That Israel should first be mentioned, and then (ver. 9) all true servants of God, Düsterdieck explains by the two judgments under the seventh Seal—viz. that on Jerusalem (cf. ch. xi. 8), and that on Babylon, i.e., Rome. He regards ch. viii. 1-ch. xi. 14 as the object of the passage here—vv. 1-8 representing what the seventh Seal will bring upon unbelieving Israel, while vv. 9-17 relate to the redemption of believers in general, as well as to the tribulation of Babylon. Godet also (l.c., p. 350) takes the 144,000 Sealed to denote the elect of Israel; but he understands Jews reserved by God—until Antichrist comes—to maintain in the bosom of their nation (which, as a whole, almost apostatizes to paganism) true belief in Jehovah and His law, like the 7000 in the days of Elijah (1 Kings xix. 18). These Elect are not even yet members of the Church: they do not form part of the army of the Lamb until ch. xiv. 1-5. And thus, until the very end of all things, there will be in the literal Israel an elect few, faithful to God and to the Law of their fathers; and also in the pagan world (see on ch. xvii. 1) a multitude of souls prepared to reign with the Lamb (see on ch. xi. 13).

It seems a conclusive answer to this last theory to point out that both the 144,000 Jews and the innumerable multitude of ver. 9 are, according to it, alike included in the one number 144,000 of ch. xiv. 1 who are expressly said in ch. xiv. 3, 4 to have been "redeemed from the earth," and "from among men."

This Vision, writes Mr. Maurice (p. 128), "endorses the hopes which earnest men, Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephtalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were either Jews or Christians, have entertained of the ultimate restoration of Israelites to more than all the privileges their fathers enjoyed."

Interpreting differently, Stern takes the 144,000 to represent the Elect on earth in the days of Antichrist; and the "great multitude" of ver. 9 to be the Redeemed in heaven of every period of the Church, and therefore to include the 144,000. Neander—understanding the 144,000 to mean only believers of Jewish descent, and as "a round number" to represent the converts of Acts xxi. 20—asserts that this verse contradicts ch. xiv. 1 which enumerates the whole number of the elect from all the world (Pflanzung, Engl. tr., i. p. 398). To the same effect, Bleek (s. 230). Such an argument, however, sets aside the spiritual and symbolical use of numbers in the Apocalypse.

By the "Historical" school of commentators this prophecy has been variously referred to the Jewish and Gentile converts in the age of Constantine;—to the Albigenses and Waldenses;—to the Reformation;—&c., &c.

5. Of the tribe of Judah [were] sealed twelve thousand:] The words "were sealed" are to be read only here and in the case of Benjamin, ver. 8.

Note, that of the Twelve sons of Jacob, six were sons of the first wife, Leah; two of the second wife, Rachel; two of the first concubine, Bilhah; two of the second concubine, Zilpah.

Of the tribe of Reuben twelve thousand:] (And so until the end of ver. 8—see vv. 11). As to this catalogue of the Twelve Tribes it is to be noted that in no two places throughout the Bible are the names and the order the same. In the O. T. there are several such catalogues giving e.g. (1) the order of birth, Gen. xxix., xxx., xxxv. 18; (2) the order of Jacob's blessing, Gen. xlix.; (3) the order of Moses' blessing, Deut. xxxiii. (where Simeon is omitted); (4) the order of blessing and cursing, Deut. xxvii. 12, 13; (5) the order of "the princes," Num. i.; (6) the order of the encampment, Num. ii.; (7) the order of the inheritance, Josh. xiii.—xix.; (8) the census before the invasion of Canaan, Num. xvi.; (9) the order by the wives and concubines, 1 Chron. ii. 1, 2 (Dan, as in Gen. xlix., coming after the sons of Leah, for which a reason may perhaps be found in Gen. xxx. 3-6); (10) the order of the gates of "the City" ("the New Jerusalem"), Ezek. xlviii.

31-34. This last catalogue presents the closest resemblance to that of St. John, if we arrange Ezekiel's catalogue in the order of north, west, south, east, placing the name of Judah first (as St. John places it with manifest reference to ch. v. 5; cf. Hebr. vii. 14)—viz. north, JUDAH, Reuben, (Levi); west, Gad, Asher, Naphtali; south, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun; east, Joseph, Benjamin, (Dan). In this catalogue of Ezekiel Levi is included; and also Joseph, in whose stead Manasseh and Ephraim (see Josh. xiv. 3, 4) are frequently placed,—e.g. Num. ii. 18-20. Accordingly St. John, closely following the order of Ezekiel, omits Dan (in whose room Manasseh appears—placed however after Naphtali, Dan's brother by Bilhah, and in connexion with Gad and Asher the sons of the other concubine Zilpah); and places Levi next after his elder brother Simeon: see Zullig, in loc. This arrangement is doubtless implied in the symbolism of ch. xxi. 12. And thus in the case of the sons of Leah and Rachel (with the exception of the case of Judah, who is placed first) the order of age is followed,—the last-born, Benjamin, being placed last.

Grotius, on the other hand, writes: "Nul-lus servatur ordo quia omnes in Christo pares;" and he rejects all meanings which assign a motive for the arrangement here: and so Alford. Reuss ascribes the order to "pure chance" (p. 74).

6. Of the tribe of Manasseh twelve thousand:] As observed on ver. 5, the name of Dan, given in the catalogue of Ezekiel, is omitted by St. John, and the name of Manasseh is introduced in its stead.

Bossuet thinks that the name of Dan is omitted here merely in order to preserve the number Twelve, Joseph appearing twice—once in his own person, ver. 8, and once in the person of Manasseh.

The Fathers, generally—referring to Gen. xlix. 17, "Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an adder in the path," and also to the imagery of ch. xii. 9; xx. 2, where the serpent symbolizes the power of evil—explain the omission of Dan by the belief that Antichrist was to rise from this Tribe. Thus, St. Hippolytus (De Antichr., c. 14) observes that as Christ has been born from the tribe of Judah, so, according to Jacob's words (Gen. xlix. 17), will Antichrist be born from the tribe of Dan:—for other authorities, see the note on Gen. xlix. 17. Thus too Beda, Andreas, C. à Lap., Stern (who recapitulates the evidence of the sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, Greek and Latin Fathers, ss. 235-244). "The reason," notes Hengst. on ch. xi. 13, "for the excluding of Dan is, that the only narrative of the O. T. in which Dan played a part is that respecting the worship of idols in Judges xviii. 1-31; so that the declaration in Rev. xxii. 15, 'without are idolaters,' is here symbolically represented by the omission of Dan." "Here, therefore," adds Words., "is a protest against idolatry, as wholly disqualifying for admission into the number of God's saints:"—cf. ch. ix. 20; xxi. 8. The Jewish writers represent the name of Dan as a by-word for idolatry,—Targum of Jonathan, on Ex. xvi. 8 (Wetst. p. 776). Grotius, Dusterd., &c., support the opinion that as the Tribe of Dan did not return from the Captivity (see 1 Chron. iv.-vii.) the Tribe must have been long extinct. It is maintained, however, by Bertheau, that the author of the Book of Chronicles has virtually included Dan in his place among the tribes, by his mention of "Hushim" (1 Chron. vii. 12) who are styled in Gen. xvi. 23 "the sons of Dan." Be this as it may, the name as applied to the Tribe disappears after 1 Chron. xxvii. 22, and is kept alive only in the name of the northern city (Laish);—see Josh. xix. 47; Judges xviii. 7, 29; 2 Chron. xvi. 4; Jer. iv. 15, &c.: cf. the note on Jer. viii. 16, and also note A at the end of this chapter.

This omission of the Tribe of Dan from the later history, when we consider its warlike prowess and the fame of Samson (Judges xiii.), is no doubt very remarkable.

As to the omission of Ephraim, while his brother Manasseh is introduced by St. John, it may be observed that Ephraim as well as Dan was addicted to idolatry (Judg. xvii.; xviii.; 1 Kings xii. 25, 29), Ephraim being also foremost in the defection from the house of David (2 Sam. ii. 9; Isa. vii. 9, 17). Ephraim is the "confederate" of the enemies of Judah (Isa. vii. 2, 5; cf. Hos. v. 3, and passim).

7. Of the tribe of Levi twelve thousand:] Levi had no inheritance in the earthly Canaan (Josh. xiv. 3, 4); but he is not excluded from the heavenly. In this substitution of one name for another (see on ver. 5), we are reminded of the awful mystery of the blotting a name from out of the Book of Life:—see on ch. iii. 5. We may compare, too, the rejection of Judas (John vi. 70) and the substitution of another in his stead.

8. Of the tribe of Benjamin [were] sealed twelve thousand.] The actual order of time is here followed in the placing of Benjamin last, as, in the order of Christian conceptions, Judah is placed first. And thus the 144,000 symbolize the Church of the Redeemed throughout all time:—from the day when "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" went forth "conquering and to conquer" during the successive ages represented to the Seer in the Visions of the first six Seals, down to the final Judgment, and to the day which shall behold engrafted into the Church the last born of the Israel of God.

THE PALM-BEARING MULTITUDE (9-17).

9. After these things] These words introduce a new Vision—see on ch. iv. 1. The day predicted by Christ has now come. His Church, consisting of "the Sealed" in every age, has received its last member; and the Lord has sent forth "His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt. xxiv. 31).

I saw, and behold, a great multitude.] See on ver. 4. In one view St. John now beholds in heaven the entire company of the Redeemed. These had been symbolically represented in the previous Vision, while on earth, by the 144,000 who had been successively "Sealed" from among the Twelve Tribes; and they are now assembled before the throne. See on ch. xiv. 1.

which no man could number,] For the construction—"the redundant pronoun"—see on ch. iii. 8.

Ebrard (and so also Todd and Godet—see on ver. 4) refuses to identify this company with the 144,000, because (1) this multitude cannot be numbered; (2) it is gathered from among all nations; (3) those who compose it have not been Sealed so as to escape the judgments, but have actually come "out of the great tribulation" (ver. 14). To the same effect Auberlen: "During the Millennium an innumerable multitude of all nations are added to the 144,000 sealed ones from the Twelve Tribes of Israel in heaven: and upon earth the world of nations is added to the kingdom of Israel" (p. 355).

As a "Preterist" Grotius understands and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

those Christians who escaped the calamities of the Jewish war; especially the numerous Christians to be found in Syria.

On the other hand, not to repeat what has been already said, we notice the repetition of this same number, 144,000, at ch. xiv. 1, 3, where the whole body of the Redeemed is to be understood; and this company is here said to be innumerable, because (as De Wette well observes) the fact of an election, which necessarily involves the idea of a rejection, is not now the theme, but merely the bliss of the Church in glory. In short the number 144,000 stands for a vast multitude—the definite for the indefinite—according to the laws of symbolism already stated. It is to be observed also that in neither ch. v. 9, nor ch. xiv. 3, is there drawn any distinction between Jewish and Gentile believers—a distinction which is so often urged: both receive here (see ver. 3) the title "servants of God." Compare, too, our Lord's words, Matt. xix. 28.

Volkmar (see on ch. ii. 2) asserts that in this chapter St. John divides Christians into two classes—one class consisting of Hebrew Christians from the Twelve Tribes (vv. 3-8); the other of believers from all peoples (vv. 9-17). This assertion Renan repudiates altogether: "The distinction," he writes (p. 397), "between heathen converts and the Jewish Christians does not exist for the author of the Apocalypse" . . . "Israël est ici certainement le vrai Israël spirituel, le 'Israël de Dieu,' comme dit Saint Paul" (Gal. vi. 16).

out of every nation, and of [all] tribes and peoples and tongues,] See ch. v. 9, where the same fourfold classification occurs. On the bearing of these words as indicating the harmony of Johannean doctrine with that of the Apostle of the Gentiles, see note A on ch. iii. 19.

standing before the throne] The Seer reverts to the scene described in ch. iv.

arrayed in white robes,] See on ch. vi. 11. Winer (§ 59, 11) suggests that in the nomina-tive, "multitude," St. John had in mind "behold," as in ch. iv. 1; and in the participle in the accus. (see vv. 11.) the verb "I saw." Cf. the note on ch. xix. 8.

and palms] The Greek noun (φοίνιξ, cf. Ps. xcii. 13, LXX.) occurs, in the N. T., only here and in John xii. 13.

On ch. ii. 10, as we have seen, Archbishop Trench considers that in this Book there is no "image drawn from the range of heathen antiquity:"—"The palms in the hands of the redeemed who stand before the throne (ch. vii. 9) may seem an exception . . . but really are far from being so. It is quite true that the palm was for Greek and Roman a token of victory, but this 'palmyferous company,' to use Henry More's words, these happy palmers, do not stand before the throne as conquerors, but as those who keep the true Feast of Tabernacles—the Feast of Rest," cf. Neh. viii. 15; 2 Macc. x. 6, 7; Joseph. Antt. xii. 13, 5. See also Hengst. on the present verse.

The Feast of Tabernacles, the third of the three great Festivals (Lev. xxiii.), commemorated the passage of Israel through the wilderness; it also commemorated the joy after harvest, when labour ceased, and the period of rest began (Deut. xvi. 13-15). Hengst. and Words. refer, in confirmation of St. John's reference to this Feast, to ver. 15 where it is said that "God shall spread his tabernacle over them;" cf. John i. 14. Alford, who will not exclude the heathen custom, having noted that the palm-branch was a mark of festal joy observes that "this practice extended beyond the Jews;" and he quotes Virgil's phrase, "palmæ, pretium victoribus" (Æn. v. 111). Ewald also quotes Pausanias (Arcad. 48) in proof that the conquerors at the Olympic games bore palm-branches, and garlands of palm leaves. Tertullian notes on this place, "Scilicet de Antichristo triumphales,"—Scorp. 12 (see above on ch. ii. 10). According to Bossuet the palms signify that "the great multitude are martyrs"—viz. those described in ch. xx. 4.

The "Palm-bearing multitude" synchronizes, according to Mede, with the seventh Trumpet;—this is the seventh of his second class of synchronisms (p. 430): for a brief summary of this system, see Introd. § 12 (2). Cf. the imitation of this passage in 2 (4) Esdras ii. 42-47.

10. and they cry with a great voice, saying,] See vv. 11. :—the tense expresses their unceasing occupation.

Salvation unto our God] See vv. 11. :—"The salvation [which we have attained, be ascribed] unto our God." They utter the "Hosanna" (see John xii. 13—the "Save now" of Ps. cxviii. 25) shouted by the people during the Feast of Tabernacles; cf. 2 Macc. x. 6, 7. "Indeed, the Palm branches were called Hosannas,"—Words.; see also Smith's Dict. of the Bible, art. Hosanna.

11 And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, 12 Saying, Amen : Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

which sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb. The same adoration is here, as elsewhere (cf. ch. v. 13; xii. 10), offered to God and to the Lamb.

11. And all the angels stood] I.e., "had placed themselves" during the scene described in vv. 9, 10—see vv. 11: so Dusterd. Alf. renders, "were standing," and explains that the pluperf. "is in sense imperfect, just as the perfect, 'I have placed myself' = 'I stand,' is in sense present."—cf. ch. viii. 2.

round about the throne, and [about] the elders and the four living beings;] I.e., as in ch. v. 11, the Angels encompassed the throne and the Elders and the Living Beings. On the participation of Angels in the work of Redemption, see Luke ii. 9-14; Matt. iv. 11; xxviii. 2; John xx. 12; Acts i. 10; &c.

and they fell before the throne upon their faces;] The Elders fall prostrate in ch. v. 14; xi. 16; here, the Angels also, continuing the song of praise. See vv. 11.

12. Amen:] See ch. v. 14. The Angels confirm by an Amen! the song of praise uttered, in ver. 10, by men redeemed; and then take up themselves the strain. In this sevenfold ascription, the article is prefixed to each of the nouns, as to Salvation in ver. 10.

All blessing, and glory, &c.] Gr. "The blessing, and the glory, and the &c.:" see on ch. i. 6; iv. 11. Bengel arbitrarily refers this sevenfold ascription to the Seven Trumpets, ch. viii. 2, the first Angel sounding "The blessing," the second, "The glory," and so on (see on ch. viii. 12). Hengst. connects this song of praise with that in ch. v. 12, because this begins, and that ends with the two words "blessing" and "glory."

[be] unto our God] As in ch. i. 6.

13. And one of the elders] When events are to happen through the agency of Creation, one of the Four Living Beings speaks, as in ch. vi.: an Angel introduces Visions which are not expounded, as in vv. 2, 3; ch. xiv., &c.: here, as in ch. v. 5, where Visions relating to the Church are explained, "one of the Elders" by 13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, whom the Church is symbolized (see on ch. iv. 4) is the speaker.

These which are arrayed in the white robes, who are they, and whence came they?] The Elder, notes Beda, "questions in order that he may teach,"—"interrogat ut doceat:" cf. Isai. lxiii. 1; Jer. i. 11; Zech. iv. 2, &c. Commentators here give as illustrations of these questions, Jonah, i. 8; Virgil, "Qui genus? Unde domo?"—Æn. viii. 114.

14. And I say unto him,] The verb is in the perfect—"I have said:" see on ch. v. 7.

My Lord,] See vv. 11. For this form of address, which expresses reverence for the being who asked the question, cf. Gen. xxiii. 6, 11; Zech. i. 9; iv. 4, 5, 13—see also the notes on ch. xix. 10; xxii. 8, 9. In John xii. 21, the same form without the pronoun is used.

thou knowest.] I.e., "I know not, but would hear from thee,"—cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 3.

These are they which come] The present tense (see on ch. xv. 2) is to be preserved here, as the tenor of the whole Vision requires. Ewald and Ebrard render, as rendered in the A. V., "which came." A simple designation of persons is intended—all, whether Gentiles or of Israel, all who come (οἱ ἐρχόμενοι) unstained out of the trial, and whom the Seer now beholds in glory as they stand before the throne.

out of the great tribulation,] "The tribulation, the great one"—the twofold article being specially emphatic: see ch. iii. 10; vi. 17; and compare our Lord's words, Matt. xxiv. 21, 29. Not merely all earthly trouble, Gen. iii. 16; v. 29, as Bengel holds; or "the whole sum of the trials of the saints of God viewed by the Elder as now complete" (Alf.): the reference assuredly is to the last great Trial to be expected under the seventh Seal, as well as to the preparatory tokens of that Trial under the sixth Seal, ch. vi. 13-17.

Renan would restrict the application to the persecution under Nero, A.D. 64, for which "the great tribulation" was, he argues from Heb. x. 33, the ordinary description,—l. c., p. 217.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that ^{ch. 21. 3} sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

16 They shall hunger no more, ^{15. 49. 10} neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

17 For the Lamb which is in the

and they washed their robes,] In the life now past and gone,—see ch. iii. 4. Alf. thus gives the substance of Düsterdieck's note: "the aorist is that so often used of the course of this life when looked back upon from its yonder side."

in the blood of the Lamb.] Cf. ch. i. 5; 1 John i. 7. "It is a delicate feature of genuine ethics," notes Düsterd., "that they who, in this earthly life, have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb, appear in that other life arrayed in white garments (cf. ch. iii. 4; xix. 8)." The earlier commentators (Arethas, Beda, N. de Lyra) were wont to apply this passage to the purifying effect of martyrdom—De Lyra understanding by "the blood of the Lamb" the blood of the martyrs, "quia est sanguis membrorum ipsius": so, too, Ewald owing to his identifying this place with ch. vi. 10. Hengst. interprets the washing, of the forgiveness of sins; the making white, of sanctification.

15. Therefore] "On this account"—because the condition expressed in Eph. v. 27 is now attained.

are they before the throne of God;] I.e., as now seen in the Vision. To be there is itself bliss,—cf. John xvii. 24; 1 John iii. 2.

and they serve him] Cf. ch. iv. 8, &c.; v. 8, &c.; xxi. 3. The verb (λατρεύω) is used as in Matt. iv. 10—"Him only shalt thou serve."

in his temple:] "Sanctuary," Naos, as in ch. xi. 1:—cf. on ch. iii. 12; xxi. 22. The earthly life of the faithful is already represented as the being made priests unto God—ch. i. 6; v. 10.

shall spread his tabernacle over them.] Ebrard renders, "ist ein Zelt über sie"—"is a tent over them." The verb (σκηνοῶ) which, in composition, often occurs elsewhere in the New Test., is found only in St. John's writings,—viz. in John i. 14; Rev. xii. 12; xiii. 6 (with the prep. ἐν); ch. xxi. 3 (with πᾶς); and here (with ἐν), where it is difficult to express in English the reference to the Divine glory or Shekinah, overshadowing the mercy seat:—see Ex. xxv. 8; Lev. xxvi. 11; Isai. iv. 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii. 27; and the note on Ex. xxvi. 1. The distinction between the Tent as the outer shelter, and the Tabernacle as the "Dwelling place of Jehovah" (a distinction marked in the Hebrew by the definite article prefixed, bammisbkan), is very clear in Ex. xl. 34-38: "The glory appeared as a light within, and as a cloud on the outside,"—note in loc.; cf. Ex. xvi. 10; Num. xiv. 10; xvi. 19, 42; 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. "The rich store of allusions contained in the word (σκηνοῶ) ought to be carefully treasured up in the mind of the reader, as showing that the prophecies and types of the Old Test., especially in the pilgrimage through the wilderness, and the festive ceremonial of the Hebrew ritual, will have their full accomplishment in the heavenly glory of Christ and His saints (see Ex. xxix. 43; Ps. lxxviii. 18; 1 Cor. x. 11)."—Words.

Note the tenses in vv. 14, 15; the "great multitude" is assembling before the eyes of the Seer in front of the throne;—"They washed their robes";—"They are before the throne," "they serve";—and lastly, in the future, "He that sitteth on the throne shall spread His Tabernacle over them," for the Redeemed whom St. John beholds have not as yet actually accomplished their warfare.

16. neither shall the sun strike upon them,] Gr. neither in any wise:—compare the negative in ch. ii. 11.

nor any beat:] For the contrast, see ch. xvi. 8, 9. This passage is borrowed from Isai. xlix. 10.

17. in the midst of] Cf. the position in ch. v. 6, with which this position agrees although the phrase is different. For the phrase here (ἀντίστον) cf. Matt. xiii. 25; Mark vii. 31; 1 Cor. vi. 5:—literally, "versus medium throni." The Lamb is placed towards the middle of the throne; between Him who sits upon it, and the Four Living Beings with the twenty-four Elders, who stand around. The form of a "Lamb," as well as this position, designates Christ as the reconciling Mediator (Düsterd.)

shall be their shepherd.] This image is that already used in the Fourth Gospel, John x; xxi. 16. For the signification "to rule" see on ch. ii. 27; cf. ch. xii. 5; xix. 15.

and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life:] See vv. 11; and cf. John vii. 37-39; xvi. 13: the verb in this latter place (the same as here) is used of "the Spirit of Truth;" to Whom St. John expressly applies the former passage. Cf. ch. xxi. 6; xxii. 1.

midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: "and God shall wipe^{ch. 25. 8.}

away all tears from their eyes.^{ch. 21. 4.}

wipe away every tear from their eyes.] See ch. xxi. 4; Isai. xxv. 8. (Note, the verb δαρπύω is found in the N. T. only in John xi. 35). Not without many tears have they come "out of the great tribulation," ver. 14: but "they that sow in tears shall reap in joy," Ps. cxxvi. 5.

Godet (l.c., p. 270) takes the present passage, vv. 15-17, as an instance in which we find reunited several of the characteristic features of the Fourth Gospel:—ver. 15 to dwell (under a tent), John i. 14;—ver. 16 to thirst, John vi. 35;—ver. 17 the Lamb, John i. 29;—ib. to tend, John xxi. 16 (cf. the image of the shepherd, John x. 1-16);—ib. to guide, John xvi. 13. On the other hand this verse supplies an illustration of the efforts to prove that the Apocalypse was not written by the author of the Fourth Gospel. Lucke indeed admits (s. 683) that the imagery here corresponds better than in any other instance to that of John x. 3: the verb moreover rendered "to guide" (ὁδηγέω) both corresponds to the image of 'tending as a shepherd,' and is also a Johannine word (e.g. John xvi. 13); but, nevertheless, he argues, in John x. 3 the verb which develops the pastoral image is different!

Ch. xxi.; and ch. xxii. might now seem to be the fitting sequel of this Vision; but other trials are still in store for the Church. All is now ready for the opening of the seventh Seal.

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. VII. 6.

NOTE A ON VER. 6—THE OMISSION OF THE TRIBE OF DAN.

Hartwig (Apol. der Apok. ii. 227 ff.) and Ewald (Jabrb. d. bibl. Wiss., 1856, viii. s. 98 ff.) argue that ΔΑΝ was originally written in the copies in place of ΜΑΝ. which they assert to be the abbreviation of ΜΑΝΑσσῆ (ver. 6); and that through an error the transcribers have substituted ΜΑΝ. (and thence ΜΑΝΑσσῆ) for the true reading ΔΑΝ. They appeal in support of this alleged abbreviation to the unimportant cursive MSS. 9, 13; which however distinctly read ΔΑΝ in place of ΓΑΔ in ver. 5. On the other hand Irenæus, referring to Jer. viii. 16 (Adv. Her., v. 30, 2), Origen, Andreas, and Arethas (in loc.) read ΜΑΝΑσσῆ in full, and state expressly that Dan was omitted. Bengel and Eichhorn, urging the signification of the name Manasseh (Gen. xli. 51—i.e., 'causing to forget,' מְנַסֵּחַ, oblitus est), consider that the name itself intimates that another name, viz. Dan, was forgotten, or rather "in a mysterious manner excluded and suppressed." In support of his opinion that the tribe of Dan had been long extinct Grotius quotes a Jewish tradition: "Jam olim ea tribus ad unam familiam Hussim reciderat, ut aiunt Hebræi, quæ ipsa familia bellis interitis videtur ante Esdræ tempora;"—but this notion seems to have arisen from a reminiscence of Gen. xli. 23. On the enigmatical words of 1 Chron. vii. 12, "Hushim, the sons of Aher," Bertheau refers to Gen. xli. 23, where Hushim are "sons of Dan" (note the substitution of the name "Shuham," Num. xxvi. 42); and considers that "Aher" (אֲחֵר) is not a proper name, but simply means "the other"—viz. the other son of Bilhah (Naphthali being named in ver. 13) whose name the writer wished to pass over in silence, for the name of Dan was in disrepute as having set up a worship of its own—see Judges xviii. The words, accordingly, הָשִׁים בְּנֵי אֲחֵר ("Hushim, sons of the other") stand for וְבְנֵי הָשִׁים, "and the sons of Dan, Hushim." Keil objects to this explanation, arguing from the repeated mention of Dan by the Chronicler (1 Chron. ii. 2; xii. 35; xxvii. 22)—the omission from one Hebrew text (1 Chron. vi. 46, E. V. ver. 61) of the words "Ephraim, and of the Tribe of Dan"—which occur in Josh. xxi. 5—being 'an error of the copyist. See Keil, Comm. in loc., Engl. tr. p. 135.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 At the opening of the seventh seal, 2 seven angels had seven trumpets given them. 6 Four of them sound their trumpets, and great plagues follow. 3 Another angel put teth incense to the prayers of the saints on the golden altar.

AND when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

[Ver. 1 ἄνθ. Ver. 3 τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου [A, P, I read τὸ θυσιαστήριον].—δώσει. Ver. 5 ἔσονται καὶ φωναὶ καὶ ἄσπρ. Ver. 6 οἱ ἔχοντες.—αὐτοῦς. Ver. 7 *οἱ ἀγγέλοις.—ἐν αἵματι.—*add καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατεράν. Ver. 9 διεφθάρσαν. Ver. 10 τῶν ὑδάτων. Ver. 11 ὁ Ἄψ.—ἐγένετο τὸ τρίτον τῶν ὑδάτων.—τῶν ἀνθρ. Ver. 12 μὴ φάνη (or φανῇ). Ver. 13 ἀετοῦ πετομένου.—[N, B read τοὺς κατοικοῦντας;—A, P, I read τοὺς κατοικοῦσιν.]

CHAP. VIII.—THE SEVENTH SEAL.

No single Vision follows the opening of the seventh Seal, as in the case of each of the first six. A solemn Silence ensues; and a new series of Seven Visions is exhibited, the last of which (ch. xi. 15) is followed in like manner by another series of Seven (ch. xv.; xvi.), and has no direct sequel casting light upon its meaning.

There is no reason for imagining (with Heinrichs) that "the Sealed Book" itself (ch. v. 1) becomes now for the first time visible, after its seven wrappers ("involutura") have been taken away. As the Seal is the emblem of an event decreed by God—mysterious, and still unrevealed; so the Trumpet when sounded is more than the simple revelation of an event to come—it is a "manifestation of will, which calls for its speedy accomplishment" (Godet, p. 296). After the analogy of the Seals, the Trumpets also are divided into groups of four and three (see ver. 13). Two distinct episodes, moreover, intervene between the sixth and seventh Trumpets (ch. x.—ch. xi. 14), as in the case of the Seals (ch. vii.):—see the remarks introductory to ch. vi.

Two opposite principles of interpretation have been commonly employed in order to explain the connexion between the Visions of the Seals and the Trumpets:—

(1) The principle of "Recapitulation." This principle is supported by the authority of St. Augustine ("recapitulando dicit tanquam ad id rediens, quod præterierat, potiusve distulerat."—De Civ. Dei, xx. 14). In modern times it has been adopted by Vitringa, Bossuet, Hengst., Words., Alf., Elliott, and others. It is to be understood, however, that "recapitulare" is not identical with "repetere:"—"to recapitulate" is not "to go over the same ground again" ("Licet repetat per Phialas, non tamen quasi bis factum dicitur . . . Quod in Tubis minus dixit, heic in Phialis est."—Victorinus). In "Recapitulation" there is a parallel, not an identical series of events. "Repetition," however, in the sense of scripture, is but a token of the certainty of the event—cf. Gen. xli. 32; Ps. lxii. 11. To this class belong the "Synchronisms" of Mede. (2) The principle of which Andreas, C. à Lapide, Bengel, De Wette, Stern, Bleek, Ewald, Reuss, and others, are the advocates—viz. that the series of the Trumpet-Visions is developed in order out of the seventh Seal; which Seal, as Dusterdieck expresses it (s. 15), "by means of the seventh Trumpet proceeding from it, extends to ch. xxii. 5."

Vitringa, however, considers the Trumpets to constitute a new Vision: he understands them as foreshowing the history of the Roman Empire, or external condition of the Church; as the Seal-Visions had foreshewn the Church's internal condition.

1. And when] See vv. 11.—in place of ὅτε (see ch. vi. 1, &c.) the MSS. A, C read ὅταν, which is used with the aor. indic. by the Byzantine writers. Of this use, writes Professor Moulton, there are, in the N. T., "two well-attested examples, Mark xi. 19; Rev. viii. 1"—see Winer, § 42, 5, s. 227; and cf. ch. iv. 9. Alf. notes: "It occurs in the opening of this Seal only, giving it an indefiniteness which does not belong to any of the rest."

he opened the seventh seal,] See on ch. vi. 3. As before, it is the Lamb Who opens this Seal. According to Alf. this "lets loose the roll." Burger also concludes that, on this opening of the seventh Seal, the contents of the Sealed Book are made known, and that the Seven Trumpet-Visions represent its contents:—but see on ch. v. 1.

there followed a silence in heaven] Gr. "came to pass"—see on ch. i. 9. This image seems to have been borrowed from the silence kept by the people while the priest offered the incense. The Silence here is preparatory to the sacerdotal act of the Angel in ver. 3:—cf. Luke i. 10; 2 Chron. xxix. 25–29.

The opening of the seventh Seal, writes Mr. Maurice as a strict "Preterist," introduces "the greatest catastrophe that has yet befallen the Universe"—the destruction of Jeru-

2 And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto salem. "There is silence in heaven in the contemplation of it" (p. 136). The Seven Trumpets are to sound around Jerusalem as they had sounded round Jericho.

Here only, notes Bengel, is there "a silence in heaven." Elsewhere we read of continual voices—e.g. ch. iv. 8; v. 9, 12; xi. 15.

about the space of half an hour.] In the word "about" we have a form of expression usual with St. John, see John i. 39; vi. 19; xi. 18.

The Vision of the seventh Seal is closed, and no further revelation is granted to the Seer in connexion with it as in the case of the preceding Seals—not even such as that granted in ch. x. 4 which he was commanded not to write. The "Silence in heaven" (see on ch. xi. 15) symbolizes this absence of a revelation; and the "Silence" lasting for but "half an hour" denotes that the consummation of all things, to which the seventh Seal directly leads up, is to follow the opening of that Seal after a period absolutely short. (For a period absolutely long, see on the "Thousand Years," ch. xx. 2.) The relative shortness of duration—relative, that is, to the divine apprehension—is elsewhere usually expressed by such phrases as "The time is at hand," "I come quickly:" see on ch. i. 1, 3; and also Note A at the end of this chapter.

The preparation for a new series of Visions now begins at ver. 2. This series which covers the same period of time as the Visions of the Seals is a "Recapitulation," as the ancient expositors express it. It is commonly assumed that the opening of the seventh Seal follows, in the order of time, the events referred to in ch. vii. Thus Alf. notes: "The coming of the Lord has passed, and the elect are gathered in. Accordingly the last Seal is now opened,"—but for such a conclusion there is no proof. The seventh Seal follows the sixth, just as the sixth follows the fifth, and the fifth the fourth—the episodes of ch. vii. relating to the entire course of the Seals from the beginning, and not revealing events subsequent in time to the sixth Seal: see the remarks introd. to ch. vii. It may well be, no doubt, that the "Silence" has a further spiritual meaning; it may be that, as Words. after Victorinus notes, "St. John has now a brief view of the 'eternal peace' of heaven" ("cernit initium quietis æternæ"). Beda also connects in this manner ch. vii. with ch. viii. ("In sexto sigillo maximas ecclesiæ pressuras; in septimo requiem cernit. . . . Nunc vero recapitulat ab origine, eadem aliter dicturus").

The "Silence" is broken by the Trumpet notes which announce the wrath of the Lamb.

The Third chief Vision (viii. 2—xi. 19) of the Revelation Proper now opens:—see Introd. § 12.

THE TRUMPET-ANGELS.

2. And I saw] According to Dusterdieck, the introductory Vision, vv. 2–6, is seen during the symbolic "Silence." According to Ebrard, the brief "Silence" merely introduces the events which now follow; and it is included under the seventh Seal. On this point, however, nothing is told us, and on it nothing depends. The "Silence" is itself symbolic as stated on ver. 1; and, quite irrespectively of it, another series of Visions begins as it were de novo. This series of Visions Dusterdieck, on the other hand, with the majority of commentators, regards as "evolved" out of, and as continuing the Seal-Visions. His reason is that on the principle of "Recapitulation" "the organic connexion of the Visions as a whole would be torn asunder" (s. 296). Renan offers the following criticism: "The 'Silence' denotes that the first act of the mystery is terminated, and that another is about to commence. The same thing occurs in the Song of Songs. Hebrew literature ignores the law of unity.—l. c., p. 391.

the seven angels which stand before God;] (For the verb stand see on ch. vii. 11). Cf. ch. xv. 1; we may also compare the words of Gabriel in Luke i. 19. The definite article manifestly denotes a special reference; and commentators (as early as Clemens Alex., Strom. vi., p. 493) quote here the words of the book of Tobit (xii. 15): "I am Raphael, one of the Seven Holy Angels (ἑνὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἑπτὰ ἄγγέλων) which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the Holy One."—Victorinus to the same effect quotes Mark xiii. 27. Alford considers that what is here referred to "was part of that revelation with regard to the . . . Angels which seems to have taken place during the captivity." The Seven are "Archangels," 1 Thess. iv. 16; Jude 9; cf. Dan. x. 15 (Stern, De Wette);—"The Seven Spirits of God," ch. i. 4; iv. 5; v. 6 (Aret., Bossuet, Ewald);—"Seven Angels chosen merely on account of the Seven Trumpets" (Hengst., Ebrard,—the latter considering that the art. is used in order to contrast the seven here, with the four Angels of ch. vii. 1). Luther and Vitringa take the article to be "a Hebrew superfluity."

Dr. add to the prayer.

him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.

and there were given unto them seven trumpets.] In order to proclaim the judgments described in vv. 7, 8, &c. Ewald refers to the use of trumpets on days of rejoicing (Num. x. 10), observing: "The Last Judgment is the greatest Festival in history,"—cf. Josh. vi.; Hos. viii. 1; Joel ii. 1. Mede regards the Trumpets as included in the Seals, the seventh Seal being "the Seal of the Trumpets"; and these two Visions, extending from ch. iv. 1 to ch. x. 8, form, according to Mede, the first chief division of the Apocalypse (Works, p. 424). Words. regards the final triumph of the righteous as the moral of the Seals; the punishment of the wicked as the moral of the Trumpets—the Vials (ch. xvi.) executing upon the empire of the Beast the judgments of the Trumpets. Max Krenkel (Der Ap. Johannes, s. 68) connects the Trumpets and Vials differently:—On the unconverted world (contrasted with "the servants of God," ch. vii. 3; ix. 4) St. John sees impending a double series of judgments; of these the first Seven are the Trumpets, and the second Seven are the Vials, ch. xvi.

On the word "Trumpet" see Note B at the end of this chapter.

THE INTRODUCTORY RITE (3-5).

3. And another angel] According to St. John's usage (see on ch. vii. 2), and contrasted with the Seven specified in ver. 2,—"another Angel" who offers upon the Altar, as was done in ch. v. 8, the incense which typifies prayer. A spirit of prayer is now poured forth, in order that the servants of God may prepare themselves thereby to meet the coming judgments.

Many commentators, both ancient and modern (Beda, Vittr., Elliott, &c.) take this Angel to be Christ—a sense which confuses the entire meaning of what follows. The text leaves the reference indefinite, and does not support the special interpretation of Grotius, "the Angel of the Church's prayers" (cf. ch. xiv. 18, xvi. 5);—or of Züllig, that the same Angel reappears in ch. xiv. 18, and, as having "authority over the fire," now takes his place at the Altar of burnt offering.

came and stood over the altar,] Or "at," see vv. 11; compare Amos ix. 1 (LXX.), and Dr. Pusey's note; the Angel seems to have placed himself so that his form appeared "over the Altar." The whole description implies that "the Altar" here (note the force of the article) is that already described (see on ch. vi. 9),—viz. "the Brasen Altar" of burnt offering which stood in the court immediately in front of the Tabernacle (Ex. xxxviii. 1-7), as distinguished from "the Golden Altar," or Altar of incense which was "before the Veil that is by the Ark of the Testimony" (Ex. xxx. 1-6):—see Ex. xxxix. 38, 39; xl. 5, 6. Both Altars are mentioned in this verse. In the earthly Temple the priest took "a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the Altar"—the Altar of burnt-offering (Lev. xvi. 12)—and went with it to the Altar of incense within the Sanctuary. Having there received the incense from the proper minister, he placed "the incense upon the fire before the Lord" (Lev. xvi. 13). According to this ritual, the Angel here brings from the Altar of burnt offering coals of fire on the "golden censer" which was part of the furniture of the Altar of incense, or "Golden Altar," Num. iv. 11, 14 (see also Num. xvi. 6, 7). The "fire-pan" (Ex. xxvii. 3), or "censer" conveyed the fire; the vessel which held the incense to be offered is called a "vial" in ch. v. 8 (where see the comment, and Note A; cf. Num. vii. 13, 84). The Angel next receives the incense from another who bore "the vial"; and then offers it "upon the Golden Altar which was before the throne:"—so Vittr., Beng., Züllig, Stern, Hofmann, Ebrard, &c. Were one Altar only intended here, why should it be described at first without, and then, as in ch. ix. 13, with the epithet "Golden"—by which epithet we know that the Altar of incense (Ex. xxxvii. 26) was expressly distinguished from the Altar of burnt offering (Ex. xxxviii. 2)? Dürstediack however argues (and Alford, as usual, follows him) that we are not justified in supposing that we have in these Visions of heaven beginning with ch. iv. 1 any counterpart of the Jewish Tabernacle;—the singular reason being added that to assume this would be inconsistent with ch. xi. 19 where the Temple of God in heaven is first opened. The fact is that each new Vision affords a deeper insight into the heavenly scenes, and adds some new feature to what had been revealed before. In ch. iv. 1 the Seer beholds "a door opened in heaven";—here he witnesses the ritual worship of the heavenly Temple;—in ch. xi. 19 the Temple is thrown open, and the Ark of the Covenant disclosed;—in ch. xv. 5 "the Temple of the Tabernacle of the Testimony" is opened. Dürstediack, nevertheless, concludes that there is but one Altar—that spoken of in ch. vi. 9, which resembles in some respects both the Altar of burnt offering and that of incense. De Wette, Hengst., Bleek, Words., &c., see only the Altar of incense here; and this, observes the writer of the article Altar in Smith's 'Dict. of the Bible,'

4 And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: and there were voices, and thunder-

"is the only Altar which appears in the heavenly Temple."

The Altar, notes Bossuet (cf. on ch. vi. 9), is Christ; and it is to this the Angel brings, as if they were incense, the prayers which Christ alone can receive. From this interpretation Bossuet derives a proof of the intercession of Angels.

having a golden censer;] The material is of gold (see Ex. xxvii. 3) as in the descriptions of heaven throughout the Apocalypse—cf. ch. iv. 4; v. 8; xv. 6, 7, &c. On the word rendered "censer," see note C at the end of this chapter: its use in ver. 5 fixes its meaning here; it bore the fire, and upon the fire was placed the incense—see Num. xvi. 6, 7.

and there was given unto him] I.e., as just explained, given to him by the ministering Angel who corresponded to the priest at the Altar of incense. This Angel held the golden cup or vial containing frankincense, and poured it upon the fire in the censer—as obviously required by the parallel of the Temple service. Elliott is clearly wrong in stating that it was given to Christ, as "the One Mediator" and High Priest, by the saints, "the 144,000, the sealed ones," who offered the prayers;—for the incense is distinctly marked as being different from the prayers of which it is the symbol.

much incense,] See Note A on ch. v. 8.

that he should add it to the prayers of all the saints] (As in margin. Gr. "give"—see vv. 11; compare ch. iii. 9). I.e., that he should incense the prayers of the saints—see ver. 4. Incense is not here, as in ch. v. 8, the type of prayer; but typically bears up the prayers to "Him that sitteth on the throne." "The dative here," notes Words., "is a dativus commodi; the incense was given to the prayers, and made them pleasing to God. Cf. Winer, § 31, s. 193:—see Num. xvi. 46, 47. Similarly Calov., Vit., Ewald, De Wette, Ebrard, Düsterd., Alf., Burger. From this follows the statement of ver. 4. Grotius ventures to change the dative into an accus., and renders: "Accepit multos suffitus, ut eos suffitus, qui sunt omnium sanctorum preces, injiceret in altare."

upon the golden altar which was before the throne.] I.e., the Altar of incense, as already stated, which is not to be confounded with the Altar of burnt offering at the beginning of the verse. The Altar of incense stood before the Veil which separated the Holy place from the Holy of Holies; and now, in place of the Ark of the Covenant, we contemplate the throne of God. Cf. Heb. ix. 3, 4.

4. And the smoke of the incense, with the prayers of the saints,] (Omit "which came"). Or for the prayers. The Angel offers up the incense which had been given to him, so that it may mingle with the prayers (see ver. 3) addressed to God—e.g. ch. vi. 10. Ebrard. and Hengst. explain, "the smoke of the incense added to, or given to, or belonging to the prayers of the saints went up" &c.—the dative, like the Hebrew ל (Gen. ix. 5; Deut. i. 3; 2 Sam. iii. 2; LXX.), being equivalent to a genitive. Düsterd. renders, "the smoke of the incense went up to the prayers"—cf. Winer (§ 31. 6). Reuss thus interprets the image: "Cette fumée est en quelque sorte le véhicule pour les prières."

went up before God out of the angel's hand.] Cf. Ps. cxli. 2; Acts x. 4. The thought in vv. 3–5 is that God will hear the prayers of His afflicted Church. Hengst. infers from this that the exposition is erroneous which sees in the Trumpet-Visions either the persecutions of the Church, or heresies; those events only being intended which are "salutary to the Church, destructive to the world."

5. And the angel taketh the censer;] Having used it as described in ver. 3, and having poured out its contents on the Altar, the Angel again takes the censer, while the smoke is ascending.

Note the perfect among the aorists, either in the sense of "the narrative aorist;" or, retaining its force, "hath taken"—see on ch. v. 7.

and he filled it] Note the aorist.

with the fire of the altar.] I.e., the Altar of burnt-offering, to which he now returns—not the Golden Altar of incense: see on ver. 3. Düsterd. and Words., as before, understand, in a general sense, the "fire of the Altar which had consumed the incense."

and cast it into the earth;] Or upon—the prep. is eis. "It"—i.e., the fire thus taken from the Altar of burnt offering, the Altar of ch. vi. 9.

This symbolical act typifies the answer to the prayers which had ascended with the incense. Cf. the similar action, preceding judgments, in Ezek. x. 2, as well as our Lord's words: "I came to cast fire on the earth"—Luke xii. 49. As regards the prep. (eis) here and in ver. 7, see on ch. xvi. 1, 2.

ings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.

6 And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

7 The first angel sounded, and and there followed thunders, and voices, and lightnings, and an earthquake.] Gr. there came to pass. See vv. ll.

The outbreak of Divine judgments is always thus introduced—see ch. iv. 5; xi. 19; xvi. 18, in which passages the order is “lightnings and voices and thunders.” Such judgments are here represented as consequent on the prayers “of all the saints” (ver. 3): see on ch. vi. 10. When the priest had offered the incense in the Temple service, and had come out and blessed the people, the Levites burst forth into song accompanied by the full swell of the Temple music, the sound of which say the Rabbins could be heard as far as Jericho (Mishna, Tamid, iii. 8): see Smith’s Dict. of the Bible, art. Incense, where a reference is suggested to this verse.

Mr. Maurice notes that ver. 2 recalls the ministry of the Priests before Jericho; and that vv. 3–5 recall the ministry of the Priests in the Tabernacle: “And now the Holy City is to be judged” (p. 140).

THE SEVEN TRUMPETS (6—xi. 19).

6. This verse resumes, and corresponds to ver. 2. In the Trumpet-judgments, as subsequently in the Vials (ch. xvi.), we are reminded of the plagues of Egypt. The first Trumpet reminds us of the seventh plague, of hail, Ex. ix. 24;—the second, of the first plague, “the waters turned to blood,” Ex. vii. 19, 20;—the fourth, of the ninth plague, of darkness, Ex. x. 21;—and the fifth, of the eighth plague, of locusts, Ex. x. 12. This similarity was pointed out by St. Irenæus (Adv. Hæc. iv. 30, 4, p. 268), who notices how the departure of Israel from Egypt was the type of the coming forth of the Church from among the Gentiles. This idea is the foundation of the imagery here—so far as it exhibits the judgments to come on the oppressors, in all times, of the people of God. What the prophet had said of the literal Israel, the Evangelist applied to Christ—what Hosea (xi.), had spoken of the Body, St. Matthew (ii. 15) refers to the Head: and now St. John employs the judgments on the Egyptian oppressor to symbolize the judgments denounced on the enemies of Christ’s Body—the Church—during the whole period of her future conflict with the world. That the application is purely figurative is indicated by the indefiniteness of the selection, neither the number nor the order of the plagues of Egypt being observed. “When the Apocalypse was written,” notes Bishop Wordsworth, “the Church of Christ was persecuted by the power of this world—the power of heathen Rome. . . . The Church of Christ was then in Egypt; the Cæsars were her Pharaohs.” We are also to observe that the Trumpet-judgments—themselves more intense than the Seals (cf. “the fourth part,” ch. vi. 8)—return with increased intensity in the Vials. Here, only “the third part” of men (ch. ix. 18), of the earth, of the sea, of the luminaries of heaven, is subject to the plagues;—in the Vials, the whole Creation. There is no mention now of the guilt or the innocence of the sufferers (except, perhaps, in ch. ix. 20); in the Vials, the plagues are judgments on the ungodly: see ch. xvi. 2, 5–7, 9–11, 21.

So much as to the Vision which follows. On its relation to the Vision which precedes, Todd (l.c., p. 127) writes: “A great number, perhaps a majority of commentators, ancient and modern, admit the principle that the Trumpets are a recapitulation of the Seals;” and he describes the Seals and the Trumpets as “the two great parallel Visions of the Apocalypse” (ib. p. 225). Ebrard considers that, like the first four Seals, the first four Trumpets relate to a series of judgments inflicted generally on the ungodly, but that single events are represented by the last three; and, assuming (s. 311) that a relation subsists between “the five months” of ch. ix. 5, and the $3\frac{1}{2}$ “times” or “days” of ch. xii. 14 (see on ch. vii. 3), he places all the six Trumpets before the time of the sealing of converted Israel.

Düsterdieck, who makes the Trumpets to follow the opening of the seventh Seal, observes: “The half-hour’s silence in heaven is now at an end; after the fire—the import of which is manifested by the threatening signs that immediately follow (ver. 5)—has been cast upon the earth, the Trumpets sound” (s. 304).

And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets] See ver. 2. Vitr. and Hengst. compare Josh. vi. 4, and the fall of Jericho. “The last trump” (1 Cor. xv. 52) suggests the idea of successive Trumpets. For the imagery here, cf. Joel ii. 1, 15;—the Trumpet had been wont to sound in Zion only for religious uses (Num. x.; xxxi. 6; 1 Chron. xv. 24), but Joel announces that in Zion itself, the “holy mountain of God,” the trumpet was to be used for sounds of alarm and fear—cf. Jer. iv. 5; Ezek. xxxiii. 1–6; see note A at the end of this chapter. “The judgments pre-there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

8 And the second angel sounded, dicted by Joel represent all judgments unto the end."—Pusey, in loc.

prepared themselves to sound.] The signal had been given by the presenting of the incense on the Altar, and the casting of the fire to the earth. In a similar manner at ch. ix. 14 the loosing of the Angels follows the voice from the Altar.

The Trumpet-Visions are divided into the two distinct groups of the first four (ch. viii.), and of the last three or "Woe-Trumpets" (ch. ix. 12; ch. xi. 14). Under the first four inanimate nature suffers; in the last three the judgments fall on men. See Note A on ch. ix. 14.

THE FIRST TRUMPET (7).

7. And the first sounded.] (The A. V. omits the first And). In the case of this Trumpet alone is the word "Angel" omitted—see vv. 11; in the Vision of the Vials (ch. xvi.) it is omitted throughout. Except in the case of the sixth Trumpet (ch. ix. 13-15), where the Angel is commanded to act, the Angels merely announce the coming judgments. In the first four Trumpets, as at ch. xiv. 7; xvi. 2-8, the visible Creation is represented by its four chief divisions—the dry land, the sea, the rivers, the luminaries of heaven: see on ch. vii. 3.

Note the allusions, under the Trumpets and Vials, to the description of Creation in Gen. i.

and there followed hail and fire, mingled with blood.] (See vv. 11). Cf. the note on ver. 5:—the participle "mingled," in the neuter plural, refers to both "hail" and "fire." Düsterd. explains that the hailstones and balls of fire descended in a shower of blood;—others understand lightning and hail;—"blood" is not mentioned in Ex. ix. 24, and some take it to imply here the destruction of life. The connexion of fire with blood recalls the imagery of Joel ii. 30, which, as St. Peter (Acts ii. 16) declared, began to be fulfilled at the Day of Pentecost. The mention of "hail" connects this Trumpet with the plagues of Egypt; and suggests the deliverance of Israel from bondage, which symbolizes the calling of the Church of Christ from the world:—see on ver. 6. And thus the Trumpet-Visions open, somewhat after the manner of the Seal-Visions, with the rise of Christianity and its progress amid trials and sufferings.

and they were cast into the earth.] Or upon,—as in ver. 5. Or "it was cast," i.e., the fire (but see the gender, neuter plural, of the participle).

The "earth," notes Vitranga, signifies in the Apocalypse the Roman Empire; the "sea" the barbarous races, as in ch. xii. 12.

and the third part of the earth was burnt up.] This addition to the Textus Receptus appears in all the uncial MSS. The sense seems to be that all in this third part is burnt up, except the classes of animals and plants afterwards specified. The proportion a "third part" occurs throughout most of this Vision—in the first four Trumpets (vv. 7-12), and in the sixth (ch. ix. 15, 18): it also occurs in ch. xii. 4 (cf. Ezek. v. 2, 12; Zech. xiii. 8, 9).

The judgments increase in intensity. Under the fourth Seal (ch. vi. 8) the fourth part of the earth is afflicted; here the third part; under the Vials (ch. xvi.) all Creation. Further: as in the sixth Seal (ch. vi. 12-16)—which represents the fulfilment of our Lord's prediction in Matt. xxiv. 29, 30, and which brings us to the very eve of the final catastrophe—the judgment is universal, on all Creation; and as the third part denotes but a partial fulfilment, it results that the first four Trumpets precede the sixth Seal.

Among commentators, Words. takes the "third part" to denote simply "a large part." Mede (p. 459) understands St. John as comparing the Roman Empire to the Universe whose parts are earth, sea, rivers, sky, stars—the Seer denoting by "the third part" of the earth, &c., wherever the phrase occurs, the extent of the Empire which embraced the third part of the known world (see on ch. xii. 4): "the third part," he adds, is always taken "partitive" (p. 474),—see on ch. ix. 18. According to Elliott, the Empire under Constantine was divided into three parts; and the "third part" in the first four Trumpets refers to the Western division, the Eastern and the Illyrian (or central) divisions being as yet spared:—see Note A at the end of ch. ix.

and the third part of the trees was burnt up.] I.e., all on that third part; or, it may be, the third part of the trees on the whole earth, as in ch. ix. 15. The destruction is caused by the fire, not, as in Ex. ix. 25, by the hail.

all green grass.] I.e., on the whole earth. Vitr. explains, "all the grass of the third part of the earth"—cf. vv. 10, 12. The general import of the desolation under the first Trumpet, Bossuet observes, "is vividly repre-and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea : and the third part of the sea became blood ;

9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died ; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

sented by the comparison of a beautiful and rich country which is laid waste by hail." Many commentators of very different classes see in this Trumpet the judgment of war : e.g. I. Williams ("The first Trumpet is the fall of the blood-polluted Jerusalem");—Bengel (The wars of Trajan and Hadrian);—Wetstein, Herder ("Arma civilia");—Hengst. ("The scourge of war so far as it respects the opposition of the heathen world to Christ");—Words., Elliott (The Gothic invasion of Cent. iv.—"this Trumpet is like a retributive sequel to the second Seal"). Vitringa understands the pestilence and famine under Decius and Gallus;—Stern refers to the early heresies, and the persecutions in which bishops and priests ("the third part of the trees"), and all believers ("all green grass") suffered;—Ebrard considers that the spiritual famine is signified, which those countries endure where the light of the Reformation has not been diffused (s. 582).

As to the symbolism itself:—By the trees, notes Hengst., are denoted the high and mighty, according to the established imagery of the Old Test.; the grass indicates the people (Isai. xl. 6, 7); trees and grass occur in ch. ix. 4, as a designation of princes and subjects : see Introd., § 10, (b). Words. sees here "the princely Oaks and tall Cedars of the proud dynasty" of the heathen Empire whose pomp and glory like "green grass" is to be scorched by the Sun. However we interpret, it is to be noted that in the first Vial (ch. xvi. 2) it is men who are smitten, not the grass and trees.

Renan, with other rationalists, refers to the fearful storms of the years 63, 68, and 69 :—"vis fulgurum non alias crebrior," writes Tacitus (Ann. xv. 47; Hist. i. 3, 18).

THE SECOND TRUMPET (8-9).

8. And the second angel sounded.] See on ver. 7.

and as it were a great mountain] In the Old Test. a mountain is the type of a great kingdom—Zech. iv. 7; cf. Dan. ii. 35; Jer. li. 25. The words "as it were" denote that a literal mountain is not meant :—compare the symbolical action in ch. xviii. 21, which rests on Jer. li. 63. The healing and life-diffusing stream of Ezek. xlvii. 8, 9, which is the source of the image here, forms the contrast to the burning and death-bringing mountain (Hengst.).

was cast into the sea.] Compare ch. vi. 14 :

see also Ps. xlv. 2; Matt. xxi. 21. The image is that of a volcano, "a burnt mountain" (Jer. li. 25). Referring to St. John's position in Patmos, Dean Stanley (see Introd., § 4) writes: "The extraordinary aspect of Thera (the modern Santorin), even when its volcanic fires were dormant, may well have furnished this image,"—loc., p. 230. The results which now follow also signify that this description is figurative. Some, however (e.g. Stuart, Düsterd.), understand the natural result of a meteor cast down from heaven, which now causes putrescence in the sea.

and the third part of the sea became blood.] Cf. the first plague of Egypt, Ex. vii. 19, &c., which is the original of this description; although, as Stuart observes, "the image of the burning mountain is new, and appropriate to John." Several applications of the prophecy are founded on this idea. The volcanic mountain, withering with its lava all around, is Imperial Rome uprooted by the barbarians—its solid mass dissolved into a swelling sea agitated by the winds and waves of revolutions. So Bengel, who notes that from Patmos Europe appeared to St. John encompassed by the "sea";—thus, too, Words. and others. The sea, according to Hengst., symbolizes the world and the nations (ch. xiii. 1; xvii. 15); and, combined with the burning mountain, denotes that an apostate world—not exclusively the Roman Empire—shall be punished by war and conquest. According to I. Williams, the "mountain" is the Church of Christ "cast into the sea" of the nations (Matt. xxi. 21) by the prayer of faith, amidst the conflagrations of Jerusalem. Accordingly the Angel of the Covenant in ch. x. 2, 5 "stands on the earth and the sea," intimating that Christ's kingdom is established, embracing both Jew and Gentile (p. 146).

9. and there died the third part of the creatures which were in the sea.] This may mean the third part of the creatures in all the whole extent of the seas; or perhaps, all in that third part which this Trumpet affects—death following naturally, as in Ex. vii. 21 (see on ver. 7).

[even] they that had life.] Gr. "bad souls"—viz. "the living creatures": cf. ch. xvi. 3; Gen. i. 30 (the nom., in irregular apposition, refers to "creatures" in the gen. plur.; cf. ch. ii. 20; iii. 12). From the mention of the earth, the sea the trees in ch. vii. 3, Alf. infers that the place of the first two Trumpet-

10 And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters;

11 And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third plagues "must be sought after that sealing:" but this assumes that the "Sealing" is one act, once for all performed—see on ch. vii. 3.

Writers usually allegorize here, and see in this Trumpet the signal of war:—e.g. Grotius, Vitringa, Bengel, Stern. In like manner Hengst interprets, by the light of Matt. xxiv. 7, all the Trumpet-Visions except the last as signifying war. He understands the sea to mean "the sea of the world," in the sense of ch. xvii. 15—the death of the living creatures in it signifying the death of men, and the ships symbolizing communities in towns and villages. Words. (see on ver. 8) writes:—"They, who, amid the judgments that came upon Rome, clung to their mere animal life (ψυχὴ), died in body and soul."

and the third part of the ships was destroyed.] By the destruction of "ships" Words. understands the destruction of the instruments of commerce and luxury (cf. Isai. ii. 16)—referring here to Alaric's attack on the Roman arsenal at Ostia; see Gibbon, ch. xxxi. Similarly, Elliott refers to the destruction of the navies of Rome by the Vandals. The "living creatures," notes Stern, are men living in the sea of this world:—"the ships" mean primarily, little states, which, together with the fiery power of the Roman Empire, are engulfed in the "sea" of the nations; and secondarily, Christian churches, ruined by the Arian heresy, inasmuch as the entire Church is typified by a ship (Luke v. 1-10).

THE THIRD TRUMPET (10-11).

10. and there fell from heaven a great star, burning as a torch,] (On the word "torch" cf. ch. iv. 5; John xviii. 3). I. e., falling as a meteor which falls as it shines, and only shines in falling: see on ch. ix. 1. A Star, in the Apoc., is the symbol of a ruler—see ch. i. 20; vi. 13; &c. The Star does not appear in the third Vial (ch. xvi. 4):—no Star alleviates that darkness. "It is 'the Star' of the Apocalypse, the Angel of the Church falling from Christ's hand or keeping;—the corruption of Divine truth;—heresy turning the waters of Baptism into the 'wormwood' of death" (I. Williams). And so Words. explains: "A luminary of the Church. . . . A fallen Star is emblematic of a false teacher;"—and he refers to the temporal results seen "in the fury of the Asiatic Monophysites, of the African Circumcellions, of the Arian Vandals under Genseric, A.D. 417." "In the Seals," he observes,

"heresy is represented as a trial of the Church and as a severe suffering to be endured by her (ch. vi. 5, 6). In the Trumpets, heresy is treated as a judgment inflicted on men for sin, and brought upon them by themselves."

and it fell upon the third part of the rivers,] Elliott sees in this Trumpet Attila, "the scourge of God" (A.D. 450), during whose invasion "all the river and fountain waters of the Western Empire ('the third part of the waters') became, as it were, deadly as wormwood." Renan, unable to find a literal event of the time corresponding to this Vision, refers to the foolish popular tales ("inepties") with which Tacitus fills his pages.—I. c., p. 395. Alford mentions, "as an illustration," "the deadly effect of strong spirituous drinks." See Note A at the end of chapter ix.

and upon the fountains of the waters;] Ver. 11 seems to imply the third part of the fountains; but cf. "all green grass," ver. 7, and see ver. 12. "The fire with which the great Star burns is the fire of wrath, war, and plunder" (Hengst.).

Under the second and third Trumpets, as under the second and third Vials (ch. xvi.), "the sea," and "the rivers and the fountains of the waters" are included under what are described generally in the narrative of the second and third Days of Creation as "the waters under the heaven." These waters are defined by a common name, "Seas," in Gen. i. 10. One symbol is thus presented here under two aspects; and the distinction between these two aspects consists in the distinction between the judgments signified. In the one case the living "creatures which were in the sea," in the other "men" perish:—see vv. 9, 11.

11. Wormwood:] The Artemisia absinthium of botanists—of frequent use as a medicine among the ancients, see Pliny, H. N., xxvii. 28 (Heb. נַחֲשֶׁת, laanab; LXX. κυστία, γολή, δδύμη, ἀνάγκη. In Prov. v. 4, Aquila renders by ἀψιθόιον). "The Orientals typified sorrows, cruelties, and calamities of any kind by plants of a poisonous or bitter nature. . . . Kitto (Phys. Hist. of Palestine, 215) enumerates four kinds of wormwood as found in Palestine—Artemisia nilotica, A. Judaica, A. fruticosa, and A. cinerea. . . . The Hebrew laanab is doubtless generic."—Smith's Dict. of the Bible. The word is used metaphorically in the Old Test.—in Deut. xxix. 18, of the idolatry of Israel; in Jer. ix. 15; xiii. 15; part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

12 And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them

Lam. iii. 15, 19, of calamity and sorrow; in Amos v. 7, unrighteous judges "turn judgment to wormwood." (The gender, usually fem., is here assimilated to that of ὁ ἀσθήρ, see vv. 11.)

and the third part of the waters.] See vv. 11.:—the Textus Receptus omits "of the waters."

became wormwood;] I. e., bitter as wormwood. The name, describing the nature of the Star, declares (as the name "Death" in ch. vi. 8) its effect, viz. causing bitterness—cf. Heb. xii. 15.

and many men] See vv. 11. Gr. "many of the men," or, "of mankind"—a phrase found only here: cf. ch. ix. 20.

died of the waters.] The prep. (ἐκ) denoting whence the result proceeded,—“by reason of,” see ver. 13; ch. ix. 2; xvi. 10, 11.

In these judgments, as in the Seals, blow follows blow. In this case, men; under the previous Trumpet, the creatures which were in the sea, perish.

because they were made bitter.] It is plainly irrelevant to discuss whether wormwood is, in its nature, a deadly poison or not: it denotes here, as in the Old Test., a noxious influence. The application to the history of heresy "which corrupts and embitters the pure springs of Scripture—the fountains of truth" (Lightfoot, Stern), is usual: see above. The contrast also which this plague presents to the sweetening the waters of Marah, Ex. xv. 23–25 (cf. 2 Kings ii. 19–21), is often dwelt upon.

THE FOURTH TRUMPET (12).

12. And the fourth angel sounded,] This Trumpet corresponds to the ninth Egyptian plague of "darkness," Ex. x. 21; and we pass from visitations upon the elements of earth, to judgments in the firmament of heaven.

and the third part of the stars; that the third part of them should be darkened, and the day should not shine] Or, if the verb is accentuated as a passive, "should not appear"—see vv. 11.; and cf. ch. xviii. 23.

for the third part of it,] I. e., during the third part of the day there was to be total darkness—cf. ch. vi. 12; Matt. xxiv. 29. Here we have one of the many proofs of the principle of "Recapitulation": this Trumpet is clearly not subsequent to the sixth Seal, when the whole "sun became black as sackcloth"—see on ver. 7.

Bengel, Zullig, Stuart explain that the luminaries being shorn of one third part of their brightness, a sombre gloom would be diffused over the earth.

and the night in like manner.] I. e., either perfect darkness during a third part of the night; or the partial darkness arising from the third part of the moon and stars having been obscured. Hengst., as before, thinks that war is meant, the darkness importing trouble and distress;—and so symbolical interpreters generally, according to whom this Trumpet denotes the confusion of nations or the obscuring of spiritual truth. Thus: the sun, writes I. Williams (p. 292), is the symbol of our Lord in the Incarnation; its being smitten here is the withdrawal of Christ's light in the spiritual darkness which preceded Mohammedanism; after heresy follows infidelity; yet the faith is but partially eclipsed—the sun, the moon, and the stars are not fallen, they are still in heaven. Similarly Stern, who adds to the rise of Mohammedanism, the separation of the Eastern and Western Churches.

In the exposition of the first four Trumpets we meet with illustrations of the various schools of interpreters:—

I. The judgments are literal—affecting, like the plagues of Egypt, inanimate nature. (a) "Preterists," and Rationalists refer all to the times before the Apocalypse was written: e.g. Renan (p. 395), refers the fourth Trumpet either to the numerous eclipses about A.D. 68 (Tac., Ann., xv. 47; Hist., i. 86), or to the remarkable storm of January 10, A.D. 69 (Tac., Hist., i. 18; Plut., Galba, 23). (b) "Futurists," such as Todd and De Burgh also regard these judgments as literal visitations which are "to usher in the great tribulation of the latter times;" and so Bisping and Burger. Bleek only differs by understanding a general poetical description, borrowed from the Old Test., of great natural convulsions to be connected with or to precede the Lord's Coming.

II. The judgments are symbolical—they refer to the history of the Church: and (a) to the heresies which opposed her teaching. Thus De Lyra sees in these four Trumpets the heresies of Arius, Macedonius, Pelagius, Eutyches;—Luther sees here Tatian, Marcion, Origen, Novatus. (b) Again on the "Historical" system Mede explains the four by was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

13 And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

the events of the Empire from Theodosius the Great (A.D. 395) to the humiliation of Rome by the Exarchate. (c) Vitringa combines (a) and (b) interpreting the first Trumpet of the wars of Alexander Severus; the second, of the Gothic invasion; the third, of Arianism; the fourth, of the overthrow of the Roman Empire—see also Note A at end of ch. ix.

III. Düsterdieck, who rejects the symbolical interpretation, considers that as Matt. xxiv. 6-8 is related to ver. 29, so are the Seals to the first four Trumpets which, following the sixth Seal, announce new tokens of the coming end:—see, however on ver. 7.

THE THREE WOES (13—ch. xi. 14).

13. This verse introduces the last three of these judgments, or the Three Woe-Trumpets:—

And I saw, and I heard an eagle,] See vv. ll. Gr. "one eagle"—cf. ch. xviii. 21; xix. 17 (on the indefinite sense of the numeral, see Winer, s. 106). Some suggest "a single" or "solitary eagle." St. John beholds in his Vision a literal eagle (cf. the Altar which speaks, ch. xvi. 7), whose cry as it flies on its prey (cf. Hab. i. 8) is here employed to announce the coming Woes: this consideration renders not unsuitable Ebrard's reference to Matt. xxiv. 28. Ebrard sees in "the great eagle" of ch. xii. 14, and the flight to the wilderness there described, a reference to this place: he also suggests that the reading of the A. V., "an Angel," has arisen from a transcriber's "correction" of the text here, in imitation of ch. xiv. 6. Herder understands the eagle of the Roman Legions;—Hofmann thinks that the resemblance between the Greek term for "woe" (ōvāi) and the scream of an eagle suggested this symbol to St. John;—Hengst. that the Eagle is named here in contrast to the Dove in John i. 32;—Stern, Stuart, De Wette explain by an Angel in the form of an eagle;—De Lyra, and I. Williams see St. John himself;—Zeger, St. Paul;—Words. writes: "One eagle. This oneness marks a special messenger . . . probably Christ Himself, who is called 'the great eagle,' ch. xii. 14, cf. Deut. xxxii. 11, 12." Victorinus reads "an Angel," whom he takes to mean the Holy Ghost speaking by St. John, as he had spoken by Malachi (iv. 5) of Elijah (see on ch. vii. 2);—Elliott (as Joachim formerly) takes the "Angel" to be Pope Gregory the flying in mid-heaven,] "The meridian," found in the N. T. only here and in ch. xiv. 6; xix. 17:—clear as the sun at noon, and visible to all. From ch. xix. 17 Züllig argues that the space midway between the earth and the concave of the sky is meant.

Great protesting against the title "Universal Bishop;"—Züllig also rejects the authority of MSS. and of Versions, and maintains the reading "an Angel" whose successor is the Angel of ch. x. 1.

saying with a great voice,] Three judgments more awful still—those of the three Woe-Trumpets—are now announced: see ch. ix. 12; xi. 14.

Woe, woe, woe, for them that dwell on the earth,] (See vv. ll. :—ōvāi is also followed by the accusative in ch. xii. 12). Woe for the ungodly world as distinguished from the Church: see on ch. iii. 10; vi. 10; and Words. concludes that, however terrible the remaining judgments may be, the Church, "who is not of the earth," is here assured of the Divine protection—cf. Ps. xci. 4. On the other hand, Mede (p. 466) explains that the Christian inhabitants of the Roman world had given themselves over to idolatry while the first four Trumpets were sounding; and that this sin, added to the previous slaughter of the martyrs, now draws down a more grievous punishment in the remaining Trumpets: this punishment of idolatry he infers from ch. ix. 20. So too, in effect, Elliott.

by reason of the other voices,] For the prep., see on ver. 11.

of the trumpet] Bengel takes the singular distributively;—Düsterd. explains that one idea is common to the voices, viz. that each proceeds from a Trumpet.

of the three angels who are yet to sound.] As three Trumpets remain, each is named "a Woe"—see ch. ix. 12; xi. 14. What follows will indicate, observes Bossuet, that the Seven Vials are connected by the "Three Woes" with the Trumpets, as the Seven Trumpets are connected with the Seals. A terrible cry, ringing through the air, denouncing calamity, is signified by the "Woes," as in Ezek. ii. 10.

Bengel's interpretation is that the "Woes" extend over the earth from Persia to Italy and the West. In this space lies Patmos, whence St. John beholds the Eagle. The "Woes" are not found in the first four Trumpets, nor in the Seven Epistles, nor in the Seals, nor in the Vials. The first "Woe" is contained in ch. ix. 1-11; the second in ch. ix. 13-21; the third (touched on but not described in ch. xi. 18) is unfolded in ch. xiii., having been previously indicated in ch. xii. 12, "Woe to the earth and sea"—words added to the announcements of the first and second "Woes."

In the remarks on ver. 6 the symbolical character of the first four Trumpets has been indicated; as well as the relation of the judgments announced by them to the never-ceasing conflict of the Church with the world. On the principle of "Recapitulation" the Trumpets follow, from the very first, a course parallel to the Seals; and, while they set forth calamities more intense than the Seals, they are themselves succeeded by a class of judgments still more intense represented by the Vials. The three Trumpets also which remain present to the Seer, in the three "Woes," judgments far more formidable than any which had gone before.

The first four Trumpets announce plagues inflicted immediately by Divine power; the remaining three—at least the fifth and sixth—are inflicted by the agency of the Spirits of the Abyss: for the seventh, see Bengel above. The first four Trumpets precede the sixth Seal: see on vv. 7, 12.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. VIII.

NOTE A ON VER. 1—THE SILENCE IN HEAVEN.

Many interpretations have been given of the "silence in heaven:"—The "Silence" is "the type of the patience of the saints, a symbol of the Church's peace [on earth] when her triumph is assured" (Vitr.);—"a transition merely to new events" (Züllig, who compares Ex. xiv. 13);—"the silence in heaven," according to Hengst., "in reality belongs to the earth;"—in like manner N. de Lyra sees here a prediction of the decree of the Emperor Julian which imposed "silence" on the Christians "tam in Ecclesia quam in militia academia et scholis."

Elliott explains the half hour to mean the short interval between the death of Theodosius (A.D. 395) and the rising of the barbarian hordes;—Bengel too (on his chronological system, see Introd. § 11, (b), IV.) understands four common days, or rather half a week;—Ebrard also compares the short space of three and a half days (ch. xi. 11) of which short space the half-hour here is the 168th part;—and so Arethas (in loc., ap. Cramer). On the other hand Vitringa takes the half-hour to mean the long state of peace ("per longum temporis intervallum") which the Church is to enjoy under the seventh Seal;—Lange understands the Millennium. On a different system, Mr. E. King (Morsels of Criticism, vol. ii. p. 79), places the half-hour between the seventh Seal and the first Trumpet as a period of "twenty-five years precisely, from 312 to 337; and then began the storm of hail."

Hengst. takes the "Silence" itself to mean "the dumb astonishment" of the enemies of Christ, Matt. xxiv. 30 (cf. Hab. ii. 20; Zeph. i. 7; Zech. ii. 13). Dusterd. (after C. à Lap.) understands the expectancy of the dwellers in heaven looking for the catastrophe of the last Seal, the "stupor cœlitum" suitable to the requirements "ornatûs et dramaticæ scenæ;"—Ebrard, who rejects the principle of "Recapitulation," refers to ch. iv. 8, where the Four Living Beings, the symbol of living Creation, sing praise night and day; understanding by this discontinuance of their song, the indication of some awful event approaching. Nature is about to be convulsed, and Creation ceases its strain of praise.

NOTE B ON VER. 2—THE TRUMPET.

The word used in Joel (שׁוֹפָר, shopbar) is not that used in Num. x. 2 (חֲצוֹצְרָה) (chatsotserab)—the straight trumpet as seen on the arch of Titus; the shopbar, or "cornet" (shawm, P. B. version of Ps. xcvi. 6 where both words are found), being regarded by many as of pastoral origin, and derived from "the ram's horn" (Josh. vi. 5). So St. Jerome on Hos. v. 8: "Buccina pastoralis est et cornu recurvo efficitur unde et proprie Hebraice sopbar, Græce κερατινὴ appellatur." On the other hand, Credner takes the chatsotserab, and the shopbar to be the same instrument (Joel, s. 164, &c.); see too Note A, on Josh. vi. 4. They are held to be different by Winer (Bibl. Real WWB, art. Musik. Instr.). The shopbar is the signal-trumpet of the jubile, Lev. xxv. 9, 10; the war-trumpet of Job xxxix. 25; Jer. iv. 5; vi. 1.

NOTE C ON VER. 3.—THE WORD RENDERED "GENSER."

This term, ὁ λιβανωτός, is thus defined by Grimm (Lex. Gr. Lat. in N. T.): "(1) apud profanos thur, ἐκ τοῦ λιβάνου destillans (1 Chr. ix. 29; Hdt., Menand., Eurip., Plat., Diod., Hdtian., al.); (2) thuribulum (ap. profanos ἡ λιβανωρίς)." The word is found only in 1 Chron. ix. 29, where it certainly means the frankincense itself; and in Rev. viii. 3, 5, where the context requires the meaning "censer." On the Hebrew term, לבונה, Gesenius notes: "Gr. λίβανος, λιβανωτός) libus, Lev. ii. 1, 15; v. 11; xxiv. 7; Num. v. 15; Isai. lx. 6, à colore albo dictus," &c.:—λίβανος is used to signify "frankincense"¹ in ch. xviii. 13. The term מַחֲטָה (LXX.

τὸ πυρεῖον), rendered "firepans" in Ex. xxvii. 3, is rendered "censers" in Lev. x. 1; xvi. 12; Num. iv. 14; xvi. 6, &c. These seem to have been shallow metal vessels, which served to burn small quantities of incense, or for other purposes (e.g. snuff-disks, Ex. xxv. 38, LXX. ὑποθήματα; in Ex. xxxvii. 23, ἐσπορυστρὶς, i.e., "a vessel for pouring liquids," esp. oil into a lamp). The employment of this utensil to carry burning embers from "the Brasen Altar" to the Altar of Incense seems to furnish "their only claim to the name of censers." See on Num. xvi. 6; cf. the note on Ex. xxvii. 3,—and also note A on ch. v. 8.

¹ "Frankincense," said to be so called from its liberal distribution of odour, the gum-resin olibanum, is the produce of the Boswellia thurifera, and is imported from the Levant.—Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science.

CHAPTER IX.

soundeth. 14 Four angels are let loose, that were bound.

¹ At the sounding of the fifth angel, a star falleth from heaven, to whom is given the key of the bottomless pit. 2 He openeth the pit, and there come forth locusts like scorpions. 12 The first woe past. 13 The sixth trumpet

AND the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

[Ver. 2 [N, B omit καὶ ἦνοιξεν . . . τῆς ἀβύσσου]. Ver. 4 ἀδικήσουσιν.—om. μόνους.—om. αὐτῶν. Ver. 5 βασιανισθήσονται. Ver. 6 οὐ μὴ εὐρήσουσιν.—φείγει. Ver. 10 [N, A read ὁμοίους].—κέντρα, καὶ ἐν τ. οὐρ. αὐτῶν ἡ ἐξουσία. Ver. 11 om. 1st καί. Ver. 12 [N, A read ἔρχεται]. Ver. 13 om. τεσσάρων. Ver. 14 λέγοντα.—ὁ ἔχων. Ver. 15 [A, P read καὶ ἡμέραν,—B reads κ. εἰς τὴν ἡμέρ.—N, 1 omit καὶ ἡμέραν]. Ver. 16 τῶν στρατ.—δις μυριάδες.—om. καὶ before ἤκουσα. Ver. 18 ἀπό.—τῶν τριῶν πληγῶν.—om. the 2nd and 3rd ἐκ. Ver. 19 ἡ γὰρ ἐξουσία τῶν ἱππῶν ἐν . . . ἐστίν, καὶ ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν. Ver. 20 [C reads οὐ μετεν.—N, B read οὐδέ,—A, P, 1 read οὐτε].—προσκυνήσουσιν.—τὰ εἰδῶλα. Ver. 21 [N, C read φαρμάκων].]

CHAP. IX. THE FIFTH TRUMPET (1-11).

1. And the fifth angel] Announces the first Woe—see ch. viii. 13.

a star from heaven fallen] Not falling, but having already fallen—the part. perf. active; cast down as in ch. vi. 13, not descending voluntarily as in ch. xx. 1. This Star, like the Star of ch. viii. 10, belongs to the imagery of this Vision, and represents typically that what follows results from the Divine command.

According to Reuss, this verse presents the most recent trace of the antique Semitic mythology—see Judges v. 20.

unto the earth:] Not upon the rivers, as in ch. viii. 10:—the prep. is eis as in ch. viii. 5, 7.

and there was given to him] Here, as in ch. i. 20, the personal import of the Star is implied. In the Old Testament conception of "the host of heaven," a Star and an Angel are kindred ideas—Job xxxviii. 7; Ps. ciii. 20, 21, and some personal agent of the divine justice is evidently intended. We can hardly understand, with Andreas, Bengel, Bleek, De Wette, 'a good Angel' (cf. ch. xx. 1). The analogy of Isai. xiv. 12; Luke x. 18 (cf. Rev. xii. 9) suggests that an evil angel is described—so Arethas, Beda, Vitruvius, Todd, Alf., &c. He is Satan himself according to Tertullian (Hermog. c. 11);—according to Words. "a Christian Teacher" is to be understood (ch. i. 16, 20; viii. 10), representing "the heretical apostasy of some who were designed to be Lights in the Church;"—"Hell," notes Bossuet, "does not open itself; it is always some false teacher that sets it open." De Lyra sees in the Star the Emperor Valens;—Elliott sees Mohammed;—Volkmar, "the demon Nero." Not content with the symbolical meaning of "a Star" (Introd. § 10, a, note 2), Hengst. adds that the giving to him the "key" "shows that the appearance of the Star was intermingled with that of the human form." With reference to the character of this "Woe," he observes that the absence of all individual features shows that this "Ruler" is no single historical personage, but a whole series of real persons. And so, regarding war as the judgment inflicted in all the Trumpets, Hengst. adds: "The last great

2 And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

3 And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and embodiment of this Star was Napoleon; but he shall not remain the last."

It has been observed that here, as under the third Trumpet (ch. viii. 10), it is not said to be "a Star of heaven," but that his fall is from thence as of one unduly exalted.

the key] Given by Christ Who holds the key (ch. i. 18):—permission is now given to let loose the demon host. The "key" is the symbol of authority—see on ch. iii. 7.

of the pit] "Deep shaft" or "well" (φρέαρ),—cf. Luke xiv. 5; John iv. 11, 12.

of the abyss.] An adjective of two terminations, and signifying "bottomless"—in Scripture it is used as a fem. subst. (ἡ ἀβύσσος, scil. χάρα), as in Rom. x. 7. It is the equivalent in the LXX. of the word (tebôm) rendered "the deep" in Gen. i. 2:—cf. "the depths of the earth," Ps. lxxi. 20. Here, and in vv. 2, 11; ch. xi. 7; xvii. 8; xx. 1, 3, it denotes the abode of the Devil and his angels—their present abode, perhaps (see Luke viii. 31), as distinguished from "the lake of fire," ch. xx. 10. Ebrard, on ch. xx. 1, thinks that no literal locality is meant, but a symbol of the limits assigned by God to Satan's power, from the date of his fall to the Last Judgment:—Satan is here permitted to exert his full influence upon men; and so St. Augustine (De Civ. Dei, xx. 7) says of the Abyss, "Quo nomine significata est multitudo innumerabilis impiorum." The fifth Seal and the fifth Trumpet both belong to the invisible world—the one to the domain of heaven, the other to the world of darkness. See on ch. xi. 7.

THE FIRST WOE (2-11).

2. And he opened the pit of the abyss:] Thus, notes Ebrard (see on ver. 1), is explained Satan's appearance in ch. xii. 3. (Some good authorities omit these words—see vv. 11.)

On the rationalistic scheme, the phenomena exhibited in "the volcanic centre of the Bay of Naples" suggested the symbolism here and in ch. xix. 20; xx. 10, 14, "ten years before Nature, by a singular coincidence, reopened the crater of Vesuvius."—Renan, pp. 330-335.

and there went up a smoke out of the pit,] Cf. Gen. xix. 28; Ex. xix. 18. We may, perhaps, with Hengst., take the smoke to denote a hellish spirit which penetrates to the earth (cf. ch. xvi. 13)—a contrast to "the smoke of the incense" in ch. viii. 4.

and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.] (On the preposition ἐκ, cf. ch. viii. 11, 13.)

Düsterd. thinks that two results follow:—both the sun and the air are darkened, and not one of them only (Bengel); the air is darkened as the consequence of the obscured sun. Bochart (Hieroz., ii. p. 495) suggests as the source of this symbolism the fires which husbandmen kindle in order to destroy locusts. Vittr., Eichhorn, Züllig, Volkmar refer to the dense clouds of locusts which impede the sunlight:—so it befell Egypt (Ex. x. 15).

Mede's interpretation (p. 467) has found favour with many:—The smoke is Mohammedanism which covered with a new darkness the world already illumined by the Sun of Righteousness. And so Words.—Heretical teachers ("the Star") caused the opening of the Abyss; and Mohammedanism owes its origin to heresies, schisms, and corruptions in Christendom; "all the features of this Vision attract the mind to Arabia. I. Williams also notes that this plague does not assume a definite character, as in ver. 3, until the "foul vapours of idolatry and infidelity had obscured the Sun of Righteousness: this plague is not of devastating armies only, or of any spread of infidelity, but of both combined; under circumstances, too, "such as attended the progress of the prophet-conqueror of Islam" (p. 152).

The general applicability of this Trumpet to Mohammedanism is deserving of notice. Even were this to be admitted, the first "Woe" would not be exhausted in this one application.

3. And out of the smoke came forth locusts upon the earth:] It is to be noted that the "smoke" only is said to come up "out of the pit," while the locusts themselves come forth "out of the smoke." These words, therefore, do not decide whether a demon-host from the Abyss is intended; or whether the locusts symbolize a host of human warriors, instigated by Satan:—see on vv. 5, 11. Literally speaking, locusts are noxious creatures from which man has no means of defending himself.

There is much however here which points to an outbreak of moral evil, the hellish smoke being the veil beneath which the locusts ascend from the Abyss:—cf. the eighth plague of Egypt, Ex. x. 12-15. In the description of Joel ii. the imagery is taken from the flight and inroad of locusts:—"The alleunto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power.

4 And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.

gory (notes Dr. Pusey in loc.) is so complete that the prophet compares them to those things which are, in fact, intended under them, warriors, horses, and instruments of war; and this the more because neither locusts nor armies are exclusively intended. The object of the allegory is to describe the order and course of the divine judgments. . . . Wonderful image of the judgments of God, Who marshals and combines in one, causes each unavailing in itself, but working together the full completion of His inscrutable will.—The Minor Prophets, p. 112. The locust (Heb. arbeh, Joel i. 4) is the common name of a species forming a group or subgenus of the gryllus of Linnæus. They have coloured elytra (the superior or first pair of wings in four-winged insects), and large wings disposed in straight fan-like folds, exhibiting bright blue, green, or red colours:—see Brande and Cox, 'Dict. of Science'; and the notes on the Book of Joel.

and power was given them.] Or authority, as described in ver. 10. See also ver. 19.

as the scorpions of the earth] These words imply that these locusts are not of the earth (cf. ver. 5), but are possessed of a deadly power resembling that of the scorpions referred to in Deut. viii. 15. Scorpion—"A well-known Arachnidan articulate, in which no spinnerets [organs with which insects form their webs] exist at the extremity of the body, their place being supplied by a venomous apparatus."—Brande and Cox, l.c. There is no contrast to the so-called sea-scorpions described by Bochart (Hieroz., ii. p. 635).

The interpretations are various and often arbitrary:—The locusts symbolize (1) evil spirits (Andreas);—(2) heretics (Beda);—(3) historical events, e.g. the Roman wars in Judæa (Grotius); or the Gothic invasion (Vitringa); or the Vandals (Aureolus); or the Mohammedans (Mede); or "the commencement of the latter Three Times and a Half, the Saracenic Woe," A.D. 604 (Faber.);—(4) events yet unfulfilled, e.g. "veræ locustæ" (the Jesuit Less); "literal locusts" although of supernatural origin (De Burgh); and similarly Todd, who holds that the "Star" is Satan, and the locusts evil spirits (perhaps in form resembling locusts), whose king is the Angel of the Abyss (ver. 11), sent forth by Satan against the Jews when restored to Canaan;—(5) restless speculations as to the future (Maurice);—(6) religious controversies: thus,

Bullinger and Brightman see in the "Star" the Pope, and in the locusts the mendicant orders; and Scherzer sees in the "Star" the papacy, and in the locusts the Jesuits. The figure of the fallen Star was applied by a class of Protestant expositors (e.g. David Chytræus, A.D. 1575) to Pope Gregory the Great; and Bellarmine gives an elaborate reply (De Rom. Pont., iii. 23). Bellarmine himself sees in the "Star" Luther, and in the locusts Protestants (Alcasar noting, "Nimium honoris Luthero deferri existimo, si Apoc." &c. &c.);—(7) Bisping, confessing his perplexity, assents to the allegorical interpretation of De Wette who takes the locusts to be a type of some unknown judgment which intensifies that of Ex. x. 12.

Mr. Birks (Elem. of Sacred Propb., p. 377) takes the locust "Woe" to illustrate Mr. Faber's "maxim" (Provincial Letters, i. p. 122) of "the systematic employment of miniature in hieroglyphical symbolization." "The locusts are a miniature symbol, insects for men or invading armies. The time . . . therefore is expressed (ver. 5) in a miniature form." Dr. Pusey (loc. cit.) also writes that locusts "are little miniatures of a well-ordered army."

See note A at the end of this chapter.

4. And it was said unto them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth,] Like literal locusts. of these locusts, therefore, the Old Test. knows nothing—see Ex. x. 15; Joel ii. 3. Cf. the restriction ch. vi. 6; and also Ex. ix. 26. (See vv. ll.).

neither any green thing, neither any tree,] Gr. "neither every green thing, nor every tree"—cf. ch. vii. 1. This plague is to fall upon nothing except the persons of men.

but only such men, as have not the seal of God on their foreheads.] (See vv. ll.). Baptism is "the seal of God" under the New Dispensation—cf. Rom. iv. 11; Eph. iv. 30. As to the immunity of the Sealed (ch. vii. 3) from all the impending calamities, see the remarks introductory to ch. vii. The present verse, at the most, merely proves that the Sealed are not to suffer from the locusts which come up from the Abyss. Alf. employs this consideration to set aside the application of this Trumpet to Mohammedanism: "It is surely too much to say that [all God's elect] escaped scathless from the Turkish sword." Elliott, who so inter-

5 And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months:

and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.

prets it, refers to the command of the Koran enforced by Abubeker in his invasion of Syria (A.D. 632): "Destroy no palm trees, nor burn any field of corn. Cut down no fruit trees," &c.—Gibbon, ch. li. According to the symbolical school of interpreters, the trees in ch. vii. 1, 3, correspond to the kings and nobles in ch. vi. 15;—trees and grass in ch. viii. 7 correspond to princes and subjects, the high and the lowly: and so here. That all suffer from this plague except the Sealed shows, notes Hengst., that the Sealed of the Tribes of Israel in ch. vii. comprehend all believers:—see on ch. vii. 4.

5. And it was given them that they should not kill them.] I.e., that the locusts should not kill the unsealed; as is also evident from what follows, and from ver. 6. Physical evil is not now the judgment, but the outburst of moral evil. This latter is the plague of the fifth Trumpet.

but that they should be tormented] That the unsealed should be tormented. (See vv. 11.; the indic. fut. follows iva, as in ver. 4: cf. the use of both the infin. and the fut. in ch. vi. 4—see Intro. § 7, IV., f.)

Wordsworth notes that the Mohammedan persecution differed from that of ancient heathen Rome which martyred Christians as such, in that the duty prescribed by the Koran was merely to subject Jews and Christians, if they refused to profess Islamism, to many disabilities (see Gibbon, l.c., ch. li.). During the seventh and eighth centuries the Saracens in Asia, Syria, and North Africa, did not persecute the Christian inhabitants on account of their faith if they paid the tribute, but there were many occasions for arbitrary oppression, cruelty and insult. Cf. on ver. 4. "Mohammed," writes Gieseler, "was at first tolerant towards other religions (Sura ii. and v.). At a later period, by the ninth Sura, he made a religious war a duty, in order to root out idolatry and make Jews and Christians tributary" (Kirchen-Gesch., i. s. 723). Mede's explanation is that while the Saracens ravaged the Roman Empire they were unable to capture either Rome or Constantinople;—or, as Elliott (after Bishop Newton) notes, could not annihilate the Christian body politic, but were repulsed time after time, both in East and West.

Burger understands literal armies assembled in preparation for war. As yet they do not "kill," but they "torment" and harass the land in which they are encamped:—see on ver. 16.

New Test.—VOL. IV.

five months:] A period repeated in ver. 10, and generally taken to be a feature of the symbolism of this passage—locusts being popularly believed to continue their ravages from April to September (Bochart, ii. 495). Others perceive a reference, in the number five, to the number of this Trumpet:—cf. on ch. vi. 8. In either way of regarding it, this period of "five months" would signify an indefinite, but comparatively brief duration. To settle the chronology here, Bishop Newton considers the greatest difficulty of all:—to Mr. G. S. Faber, it appears an "easy task."

The following are among the interpretations given:—

(1) On the "Year-day" theory, $5 \times 30 = 150$ mystic days = 150 common years: accordingly the "five months" signify the duration (a) of the Gothic rule [it may be perhaps five common years, one, under Alaric, and four under Ataulphus] (Vitranga);—(b) of Arianism (Calov.);—(c) of the Saracenic devastation of the Empire, from A.D. 830 to A.D. 980; and it may be, as this period occurs again in ver. 10, that it is to be taken twice, as 300 years, viz. from the rise of the Abasside Caliphate, A.D. 750, to the capture of Bagdad by Togral Beg, A.D. 1055 (Mede). [Sir I. Newton counts these 300 years from A.D. 637 to A.D. 936, five months at Damascus, and five at Bagdad.] Mede however is obliged to add five years in order to obtain the duration of the rule of the Caliphs: and he is followed, with variations, by Daubuz, Bishop Newton, Keith, Faber. Elliott counts this judgment of 150 years on Christian idolaters from Mohammed's announcement of his mission, A.D. 612, to the settlement of his "locusts" at Bagdad, A.D. 762;—(d) I. Williams, following Mede, refers to Gen. vii. 24—the 150 days during which the Deluge lasted, "judicial and corrective, yet remedial, as differing from the final judgment" (p. 156). To the same effect Züllig.

(2) Bengel on his system (see Intro., § 11, b, IV.) understands five prophetic months as representing $79\frac{1}{2}$ common years—from A.D. 510 to A.D. 589—during which the Jews were persecuted in Persia.

(3) Hofmann (ii. s. 340) regards the number as borrowed from the five sins specified in vv. 20, 21.

(4) Hengst. regards $5 = 10$ as the broken 10—the "signature" of what is incomplete; this Trumpet being incomplete as compared with the seventh, while in neither this nor the seventh Trumpet do we find the number one bird. In fact, the five, in relation to the

6 And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of twelve months, are of relatively long duration, "and still not the longest." And so Words.: "Islamism has its 'five months,' but the Gospel of Christ is everlasting" (Rev. xiv. 6).

(5) "The meaning must be a short period," notes Stuart; and thus Todd, who understands five literal months, refers to Matt. xxiv. 22. Burger also takes the time to be literally "five months."

(6) Bleek explains: "a round number, like the ten days in ch. ii. 10."

(7) Renan writes: "Cinq mois (tout un été),"—l. c., p. 396. He would refer to the invasion of the Parthian cavalry, were it not that this is the subject of the sixth Trumpet, ver. 16. There may have been, he adds, in some province a plague of actual locusts.

and their torment] I. e., not, as Alf. explains, "that of the sufferers," but the torment caused by the locusts:—see the words which follow.

[was] as the torment of a scorpion,] I. e., caused by a scorpion (the same construction as before, "the genitive of the subject").

when it striketh a man.] They hurt, not the earth as locusts, but men by their fiery sting.

6. And in those days] When the Vision shall be fulfilled.

men shall seek death,] Words. notes: "Observe here 'the men,' the men who have not the Seal of God, ver. 4; cf. ver. 10." We may refer to Job iii. 21; Jer. viii. 3.

and shall in no wise find it;] (See vv. 11.).

Note here the prophetic instead of the descriptive style, and the use of the prophetic future:—the Seer ceases to be the exponent of what he saw, and he describes what is to happen hereafter; see ch. iv. 1. In ver. 7 he returns to describe the locusts.

and they shall desire to die, and death flieth from them.] (See vv. 11.). The poetic parallelism of the words has led some (Heinrichs, Bleek) to conjecture that this verse is a quotation from a lost poem.

Beda here quotes the saying of St. Cyprian under the Decian persecution: "'Volentibus,' inquit, 'mori, non permittebatur occidi.'" Bengel illustrates this passage by the persecution of the Emperor Julian, in which the Christians were not put to death. Some would compare this verse with ch. vi. 16.

Burger refers to Dan. xii. 1; Matt. xxiv. 21—the first four Trumpets have desolated external Nature on which man depends for food and earthly existence; and now a judgment still more bitter renders life itself a burden to him: in the confusion also and disruption of social life he has to reap the harvest which he planted when he departed from God. Mr. Keith evades the difficulties of this verse by taking "the men" who "seek death" to be the locusts, or Mohammedans, themselves; and their seeking death and death fleeing from them, to imply their doctrine of predestination: "They sought death in the faith that death could not thereby find them a moment sooner. . . . They desired death, but death fled from them for whom it had no terror."

7. Having described the issuing of the locusts from the Abyss and the torment which they are to inflict, St. John proceeds in vv. 7–10 to depict more accurately their extraordinary shape. The tenth verse alone has express reference to what is said in vv. 3–5: the other features of the description—the lion's teeth, the woman's hair, the faces of men—relate rather to the supernatural than to the natural symbolism; and, while not applying to the injury to be inflicted by the locusts, afford room for allegorical exposition.

And the shapes] Gr. "the likeness"—cf. Ezek. i. 16; x. 21 (LXX.); i. e., the forms corresponding to the type: so Rom. i. 23; Phil. ii. 7. Hengst. renders "likenesses," observing that four verses are devoted to a description of what the locusts are like, both generally and in detail.

[were] like unto horses prepared for war;] For the resemblance of the natural locust to the horse, see Joel ii. 4; cf. Job xxxix. 10:—as commonly noted, in German Hew-pferd. in Italian Cavaletta means a locust.

and upon their heads as it were crowns like unto gold,] I. e., neither literal crowns, nor literal gold. In this feature of the imagery Eichhorn and Heinrichs see the helmets of soldiers. They are "crowns of victory," as in ch. vi. 2 (Words.). Elliott (who represents the locusts in an engraving) understands the Arab turban.

and their faces [were] as the faces of men.] As before, a literal sense is excluded. Elliott supplies here the beard which the Arabs wore, women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name ^{† That is to say, A destroyer.} Apollyon.

and by which "they were easily distinguished from the general mass of the men of Christendom."

8. And they had hair as the hair of women.] The antennæ of the locusts were like woman's hair. Hengst. sees here a token of barbarism, long hair being opposed to ancient civilization.

as were [the teeth] of lions.] Note the recurrence of this image in ver. 17; and cf. Joel i. 6, where see Dr. Pusey's comment:—"They appear to be created for a scourge; since to strength incredible for so small a creature, they add saw-like teeth. . . . Some are armed with two jaws toothed like a saw, and very powerful."

9. as it were breastplates of iron.] The natural thorax of the locust is, in the case of these supernatural locusts, compared to iron.

[was] as the sound of chariots, of many horses rushing to war.] One idea,—the sound produced by chariots drawn by horses.

10. And they have tails like unto scorpions, and stings.] (See vv. 11.) The plain meaning is:—"they have tails like to the tails of scorpions, and stings in their tails;" for the constr. cf. ch. xiii. 11. On the other hand, Bengel, Winer, De Wette, Hengst. argue, from ver. 19, that the tails of the locusts are not merely like the tails of scorpions, but like the scorpions themselves.

and in their tails is their power to hurt men five months.] See vv. 11. The A. V. here translates a text different from that given in all the Uncials. Compare too the reading of the Textus Receptus in ver. 19.

The nature of the plague committed to the locusts (vv. 3–5) is here described, and the details already given are resumed. It appears probable that, throughout this imagery, the description is in accordance with the popular idea of the locust entertained in the East. Niebuhr (quoted by Züllig, ii. s. 113), gives an Arabian adage: "In head like the horse; in breast like the lion; in feet like the camel; in body like the serpent; in tail like the scorpion; in antennæ like a virgin's hair." The crowns like gold and the faces of men (ver. 7) seem to be the more specially symbolical features of this description.

By the tails in this verse, Mede (l. c., p. 409) understands the African Saracens,—those most remote from the East; the assailants of the Empire from the East being represented by the upper part of the body of the locusts. Italy was ravaged chiefly by the hordes from Africa.

11. They have over them as king] (Omit And—see vv. 11.) They are thus again distinguished from natural locusts who "have no king," Prov. xxx. 27. According to Hengst. (see below), the "king" here, corresponds to the "Star" in ver. 1.

the angel of the abyss.] Cf. ch. xvi. 5. The def. article points to a special agent—the agent, as Hengst. thinks, symbolized by the "Star" in ver. 1. Burger hints at the possibility of understanding a human agent ("Angel" = "Messenger") of Satan. Some see in this Angel Satan himself (Ebrard, Elliott);—some, a chief among Satan's angels (ch. xii. 7, 9): e.g. Stuart particularizes "Samael, i.e., the chief of the evil angels;"—some an angel who in a particular sense is chief of the Abyss: so Bengel, De Wette, Düsterdieck. In the face of the Greek article Reuss specially notes that we must understand "an angel, not the angel—un ange de l'abîme . . . non pas l'ange."

his name in Hebrew] On the constr. cf. ch. vi. 8, and on the word rendered in Hebrew—a phrase peculiar to St. John—see ch. xvi. 16; John v. 2; xix. 13, 17, 20; xx. 16: the phrase is different in Acts xxi. 40; xxii. 2; xxvii. 14—"in the Hebrew dialect." See Intro. § 7, IV. a.

[is] Abaddon.] A Hebrew noun signifying "destruction:" it is combined with "death" in Job xxviii. 22; and with the grave or Hades (Sheol) in Job xxvi. 6; Prov. xv. 11. Thus, including the idea of the "Abyss," it is used as the abstract of Apollyon "the Destroyer:"—cf. Heb. ii. 14.

and in the Greek [tongue] he hath the name Apollyon.] The abstract personified; cf. the different term used in Heb. xi. 28. We note here St. John's "manner"—the Hebrew term is given and its Greek equivalent: e.g. Rabbi, Messiah, John i. 38, 42; iv. 25;—Cephas, i. 42;—Siloam, ix. 7;—Thomas, 12 One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, xi. 16;—Gabbatha, xix. 13;—Golgotha, xix. 17;—compare Rev. i. 7; iii. 14; xii. 9. Bengel, Stern, Hengst., &c., contrast the title "Jesus the Saviour" with "Abaddon the Destroyer." Ebrard interprets:—"He is Satan the 'destroyer,' the 'murderer from the beginning.'" He is called the Destroyer, observes I. Williams, from the peculiar character of Mohammedanism, which has not utterly destroyed Christianity, but bound it up in Mohammedanism,—a corruption worse than death," see ver. 6. Bleek simply writes "Napoleon;" and Volkmar notes: "It is natural that writers, since 1800, have sought in the Antichrist for Napoleon as well as for Apollyon." ("Natürlich, dass man seit 1800 in dem Antichristen gleich Apollyon den Napoleon gesucht hat").

Bengel's comment is that this leader in the first "Woe" has a Hebrew and a Greek name; in the third "Woe" (ch. xii. 9) a name Greek and Hebrew—"the Devil and Satan." See on ch. xiii. 3 the suggestion of Burger as to the relation of this passage to that which describes "the Beast from the sea."

12. The first Woe is passed:] Gr. The one Woe. These are not, as some hold, the words of "the Eagle" (ch. viii. 13) but of the Seer summing up the contents of vv. 1-11. The fact of the feminine form of the word "Woe" (ἡ οὐαί) here, and in ch. xi. 14, Winer explains by the underlying idea of tribulation or wretchedness (θλίψις, ταλαιπωρία).

behold, there come] (Omit "and"). The verb is in the singular: it precedes the nominative plural—see vv. 11.

yet two Woes hereafter.] The second Woe extends from this point to ch. xi. 14. The first (see ver. 1) proceeds from the Abyss, and is produced by a power which had fallen from God. The signal for the second Woe is given from God's presence, and proceeds from the Golden Altar (see vv. 13, 14). The description of this Woe is divided into sections of which the first is given in vv. 13-21, introducing its chief infliction. The present verse is taken to imply that the Woes are to be "not contemporaneous, but consecutive"—some interpreters placing a comparatively short, others a long interval between the first and the second. Thus, Bengel (see on ver. 5) makes the first Woe, during the five prophetic months, to end A.D. 589, and the second to begin A.D. 634;—Bishop Newton makes the first Woe to end A.D. 762, and the second to begin A.D. 1281;—Mr. Faber makes the first Woe to end A.D. 762, and the second to begin with the reign of Othman, June 9, A.D. 1301 (Sacr. Cal., vol. ii. p. 411);—Elliott places the end of the first Woe, i.e., the abatement of its intensity, in the year 755—the reward, as it were, for the decrees of the Council held by Constantine Copronymus in 754, which condemned the use in churches of any artistic representation. In 755 the Caliphate was divided, and the scorpion locusts were carried to the Euphrates—see ver. 14. In 842, however, image worship was triumphant once more, and, the Moslem power being again loosed, the Turk became the chief of Islam.

Bisping who adopts Kliefoth's and Keil's interpretation of Daniel's "Seventy Weeks," places the second and third Woes in the seventieth Week, i.e., under Antichrist at the end of all things. The judgment on unbelieving Israel falls in the first "half-week," under the second Woe (ch. xi. 13); while under the third Woe, or second "half-week" (the 42 months of ch. xi. 2), the Last Judgment comes on the rest of the antichristian world (J. c., s. 173):—see ch. xi. 14.

THE SIXTH TRUMPET (13-21).

13. And the sixth angel sounded,] The second "Woe-Trumpet."

and I heard] What is heard, and what is seen (cf. ver. 17) are placed side by side in these Visions—cf. ch. vi. 1-8.

a voice] Gr. "one voice"—see on ch. viii. 13.

from the horns of the golden altar] Omit four—see vv. 11. Düsterd. thinks that four was suggested to a copyist as a contrast to the preceding "one voice," and as a parallel to the "four Angels" in ver. 14. Vitringa lays emphasis on the numbers—one harmonious voice out of the four horns. Hengst. reads "the four horns," and connects with the four Angels, ver. 14, and the four sins, ver. 21. The 'Codex Sinaiticus' merely reads "the voice of the Golden Altar,"—cf. ch. xvi. 7. The preposition "from," "out of (ἐκ)" excludes the sense given to the words by Stern, that the voice proceeds "from" God seated behind the Altar (cf. Acts xix. 34). "The Golden Altar" (ch. viii. 3) is the Altar of incense before the Veil (Ex. xl. 26). "Horns" projecting upwards at the corners (see Ex. xxx. 2) were attached to this Altar like those of the Altar of burnt-offering: see the note on Ex. xxvii. 2.

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

The voice—of which the source is not defined—issues, as in ch. xvi. 7, from the Altar, from the space included between the “borns,” and where the prayer of the saints (see ch. vi. 10) had been offered (ch. viii. 3, 4). In ver. 14 we read the answer to that prayer.

THE SECOND WOE (14—xi. 13).

The judgment of the second Woe-Trumpet is inflicted by a vast army of horsemen, ver. 16, &c.; and this is followed by two episodes (as in the case of the sixth Seal—see on ch. vii.), the first of which is contained in ch. x., where it is announced (ver. 6) that the delay adverted to in ch. vi. 11 was approaching to its close; the second episode being contained in ch. xi. 1–14.

Todd considers that the second Woe consists of two periods, (1.) ‘The hour, day, month, and year’ during which the third part of men will be slain (ver. 15); (2) the 1260 days of the Two Witnesses, ch. xi. 3 (p. 176):—see on ver. 15.

14. saying] Or one saying—see vv. 11. For the gender and concord of the participle see on ch. iv. 1.

to the sixth angel,] Here only is the Angel commanded to act—see on ch. viii. 7.

which had the trumpet,] (See vv. 8.) The Trumpet belonging to this Vision—‘the nom. in irregular apposition;’ cf. ch. ii. 20. Tregelles takes the participle (δ ἔχων) as the vocative, “Thou that hast.”

Loose the four angels which are bound] The article, “the four Angels,” refers to the following “which are bound,” cf. ch. viii. 2. There does not seem to be any reference to ch. vii. 1, as Beda, Elliott (see on ver. 12), and others hold;—Stuart makes the number refer to the four quarters of the desert whence the hosts are to come;—others (De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd., Words.) refer the number four which in the Apoc. denotes universality to the four quarters of the earth (cf. ch. vii. 1; xx. 8): it would thus signify the universality of the judgment;—Ebrard explains that they are the four leaders of the demon host, to the four divisions of which they correspond (Ewald), contrasting in number with the one king of the locusts (ver. 11) and not having any of the insignia of royalty;—Züllig considers that three types are combined under this Woe: (1) death, as in the last Egyptian plague, Ex. xii. 29; (2) the four kings of Gen. xiv. 9, typifying the four Angels of destruction (opposed to the one Destroyer, ver. 11); (3) to the same effect, the four destroying kingdoms, Jer. li. 27, 28. Alf. takes them to be personifications merely, as they are immediately resolved into a host of cavalry. De Wette takes the four Angels to be “Angels of destruction,” although not evil Angels.

Beda, Bengel, Ewald, Stern, Stuart, I. Williams, consider that they are evil angels (cf. Tobit iii. 17; Ps. lxxviii. 49). Bossuet, Hengst., Words., are certain that they are good Angels—Angels of God for punishment, and hitherto restrained or “bound” by the Divine command; and Wordsworth observes that the word “Angel” placed absolutely, as here, nowhere signifies in the Apoc. an evil Angel: he refers to ch. vii. 1, 2. Some have even suggested their names—Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, Raphael: see Andreas in loc. (p. 51).

So long as these Angels are “bound,” they stand “prepared,” as in ver. 15.

at the great river Euphrates.] Compare the sixth Vial, ch. xvi. 12. (On the preposition here (ἐν) see ch. xxi. 12; John iv. 6). This is not a geographical, but a symbolical description which rests on the earlier history. Indeed, if we bear in mind the figurative character of this Vision, we cannot understand the Euphrates literally. In the Old Test. the chastisements on Israel proceeded thence—Isai. vii. 20; viii. 7; Jer. xlv. 10; and, according to one class of expositors, St. John using the language of the Old Test. (Gen. xv. 18; Deut. i. 7; Josh. i. 4) now employs the Euphrates as the boundary of the region whence the demon-host is to come upon the earth—so Hengst. and Düsterd. “The great river,” writes Stern, is “the symbolic limit which separates the Church from her enemies.”

In a different manner Wordsworth also takes the verse figuratively:—it is the river of Babylon; the four Angels represent the Divine word, summed up in the fourfold Gospel, which had been long bound in the mystical Babylon; by the aid of printing it has been translated into all languages; and thus the four Angels have been loosed.

Elliott (and Alford adopts his conclusion) sees no difficulty in taking the Euphrates literally, and the rest of the Vision mystically: he appeals to such instances of Scriptural allegory as that in Ps. lxxx. 8:—“Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt” &c., where Egypt is literal and the Vine mystical. “It was the almost universal opinion of the ancients,” notes Dr. Todd, “that Antichrist shall arise from this region” (p. 152); and on this principle, taking the Euphrates to mean the literal river, Mede, Vitruvius, Daubuz, 15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared ¹for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

Faber, Elliott, &c. refer this Trumpet to the invasions of the Tartars and Turks. Bengel makes vv. 13, 14 describe the activity of Mohammed, A.D. 589-634.

Again:—N. de Lyra understands by the Euphrates the Roman Empire; and he takes the four Angels to be the Emperor Anastasius, the Ostrogoth Theodoric, and the anti-Popes Symmachus and Laurentius. "Preterists" (Hammond, Wetstein) usually refer to the Tiber, because Babylon (ch. xiv. 8) is Rome. Ewald and rationalistic "Preterists" refer to the literal Euphrates as the frontier of the Empire: thence the Parthian legions menaced the Roman power. In this sense Renan (p. 398) takes the four Angels to be the Assyrian, the Babylonian, the Median, and the Persian kingdoms; he refers to Josephus (B. J., vi. vi. 2), and to Tacitus (Hist., iv. 51), where we read that Vologesus offered to aid Vespasian with 40,000 cavalry. This Trumpet, continues Renan (p. 400), differs from the preceding five which refer to events already past when the author wrote; here it is not so,—"mais il est probable que l'auteur la tenait déjà pour un fait accompli." He applies vv. 14-21 and ch. xvi. 12-16 to the period of Jewish enthusiasm shared by St. John which followed the defeat of Cestius Gallus, Nov. 5, A.D. 66 (Jos., B. J., ii. 18, 9; Tac., Hist. v. 10; Sueton., Vesp. 4), when it was expected that, by the aid of the Parthians, the Roman power would be overthrown (l. c., p. 272).

Mr. Maurice makes this loosing of the Angels denote that the barriers between the Babel kingdom, and the kingdom of Israel which Jerusalem represented, should exist no longer; and thus Jerusalem becomes the centre and capital of the Babel society (p. 164). For other expositions see note A at the end of this chapter.

15. which had been prepared] Cf. ch. viii. 6. They had been "prepared," but bound.

for] I. e. "unto," "against," "in reservation for (eis)"—as in ver. 7.

the hour and day and month and year.] The article prefixed to the first noun and not repeated gives unity to the common conception of time, fixing a determined moment—the hour of a definite day,—the day of a definite month, &c.—cf. Num. i. 1; Hag. i. 15; Zech. i. 7: "the hour of God's judgment, the day of His wrath" (Words.). The article may also indicate the great appointed conflict at Armageddon (ch. xvi. 16) as well as that which is described in ch. xx. 7, 8,—the opposing host being spoken of in ch. xix. 14.

Chronological calculations have also been founded on these words, as if there were no article at all, or as if it had been repeated before each noun: (1) On the "Year-day" theory, a year = 360 days = 360 prophetic years; and hence Sir I. Newton counts 360 + 30 + 1 = 391 years (the "hour" being altogether omitted)—viz. from A.D. 1063, when Alp Arslan "passed the Euphrates at the head of the Turkish cavalry" (Gibbon, ch. lvii.), to A.D. 1453, the date of the capture of Constantinople by the Turks. (2) Mr. Elliott, noting that we have here not "a time" (καρπός, ch. xii. 14), but "a year" (ἐνιαυτός), departs from the usual "Year-day" theory. He arbitrarily assumes a year in this place to be 365½ common days,—while he reckons 30 days to the month, and "twelve hours to the prophetic day." He thus obtains 365½ + 30 + 1 + ½ = 396 prophetic years + 121 days. As a common year, however, is about eleven minutes less than 365½ days, and as this deficiency amounts in 396 years to three days, the true result is 396 years and 118 days—or the interval between January 18, 1057, when the Turks marched from Bagdad, to May 29, 1453, when they took Constantinople. These dates indeed require 396 years + 130 days, which exceed Mr. Elliott's calculation "by but 12 natural days, or less than half a prophetic hour" (vol. i. p. 527): see Introd. § 11, b, II. Mede had adopted the same principle, and thus obtained the interval between 1057 and 1453; but he was puzzled as to "the hour:" this he takes to mean "the opportune time" (the first "and" being "exegetical"), "parati in tempus opportunitum, nempe in diem, mensem, et annum."

(3) Mr. Birks thinks fit to adopt the reading of Codex B which places an article before "day," and translates: "The Angels prepared for that hour and that day were loosed both a month and a year," i. e., for 390 prophetic years—see Ezek. iv. 5—a period not found elsewhere in Scripture.—Elem. of Sacr. Prophecy, p. 378.

(4) Bengel, as already stated, makes a prophetic hour = 8 common days, and a prophetic day = about half a common year (see Introd. § 11, b, IV.). He reckons here 213 years, from A.D. 634, the last days of Abubeker, to A.D. 847, the death of Mutezam; and he makes this same space of time to be the duration of the sixth Trumpet. From this point he places the interval of 100 years between the second and third Woes. The third Woe thus began A.D. 947, and had not expired in Bengel's time.

(5) Daubuz (l. c., p. 328) interprets: "For a Year, Month, Day, and Hour, namely, so as to be ready upon any occasion or warning to put this great event [the destruction of the Eastern Empire by the Ottomans] in execution."

16 And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.

(6) Todd takes the words (as he renders them) "an hour, a day, a month, and a year" to imply duration, and to signify the first of the two periods into which "the events constituting the second Woe" are divided; the second period being the 42 months, or three years and a half, of ch. xi. 2:—see on vv. 12, 13.

that they should kill] Referring to "prepared," as in ch. viii. 6; or, it may be, to "were loosed," see above, ver. 14.

the third part of men.] Apparently "the third part" of "them that dwell on the earth" (see ch. viii. 13, and cf. ch. vi. 10) as distinguished from those who are sealed: see ver. 4, and the note on ch. viii. 7. It is now added that such persons are to suffer death, in the same proportion as the trees and ships in ch. viii. 7, 9, 11 suffer.

Elliott understands the Eastern-third of the old Roman Empire—see on ch. viii. 7.

What the Angels proceed to do is left untold: they are, probably, the leaders of the host in ver. 16; and hence the destruction which they are here said to cause is ascribed in ver. 18 to the fire, &c., proceeding from the horses' mouths.

16. And the number of the armies of the horsemen] Gr. "of the cavalry." Burger (see on ver. 5) identifies this host with the locusts under the fifth Trumpet; comparing the imagery in vv. 8 and 17, in vv. 9 and 17, in vv. 10 and 19.

was twice ten thousand times ten thousand:] I.e., twice the number spoken of in Dan. vii. 10:—"two myriads of myriads," or 200 millions. The vastness of the number shows that no literal army is intended:—cf. ch. xx. 8. This description seems clearly to be based on that of the countless hosts of God, Ps. lxxviii. 17 (on which see the note); Hebr. xii. 22; Jude 14. Horsemen also constitute the Armies of Heaven in ch. xix. 11, 14, 19.

I heard the number of them.] (Omit "and"—see vv. 11.) Ewald suggests that the Seer heard the number from one of the Elders, as in ch. vii. 13;—"he was told what the number was; count them he could not" (Stuart): see on ver. 17. Two armies are described in the Apocalypse:—(1) that which is described here and in ch. xvi. 14, 16; xx. 8, and of which the aspect had been foreshown in Ezek. xxxviii. 4, 15; and (2), in opposition to this host, the Armies of Heaven of which we read in ch. xix. 14. The vastness of the number, according to Hengst., excludes the idea of a particular war—"we have here to do only with a personified species."

17. And thus I saw] "After this manner," according to the following description." Stuart refers "thus" to what precedes—"In such vast numbers did I see them." Some take it pleonastically—see on ch. ii. 15. On the union of "I heard" and "I saw," see on ch. i. 2; vi. 1.

in the vision.] (As in Dan. viii. 2; ix. 21:—cf. Acts ii. 17, and on ch. i. 1). These words, notes Düsterd., are added to "I saw," in contrast to the "I heard" in ver. 16. Ebrard infers from this addition that we must not think of literal horsemen; and so Stuart, who sees in this Trumpet the most remote of all the symbols in the Apoc. from the real objects of the natural world. Mede interprets "in appearance" not "in reality"—"non revera, sed aspectu"; and he refers to ch. iv. 3, where see the note.

and them that sat on them, having] The participle "having" refers to both horses and horsemen, both bearing armour—so Züllig, Ebrard, Düsterd., Alf. On the other hand, Bengel, Ewald, De Wette, Hengst. consider that the Riders alone wear breastplates.

breastplates [as] of fire and of hyacinth and of brimstone:] "The hyacinthus of the Romans is invariably blue and lustrous; it was the favourite epithet "applied to the flowing hair of southern beauty, the black of which exactly represents the violet reflex of the raven's plumage."—King, Precious Stones, p. 197. For the distinction between the "hyacinthus" of St. John, and the "jacinth" of the Authorized Version, see the note on ch. xxi. 20. This description suggests the blue flame which issues between the fire and the brimstone, and which is represented as "smoke," below and in ver. 18: the three colours relate to what proceeds from the horses' mouths. Züllig understands "copper, steel, and brass";—Stuart explains "particoloured";—I. Williams takes the three colours to signify different degrees in intensity of evil (ch. xiv. 10; xix. 20; Ps. xi. 6);—Hengst., with whom every Trumpet signifies war, understands "wild exasperation, the thirst for murder, heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship the desire of desolation:" and he concludes that but for the variations in the imagery the six Trumpets might be compressed into one.

[are] as the heads of lions;] There is, doubtless, here, as many have noted, a reference to ver. 8, where behind their deceptive female hair, the locusts have the teeth of lions. The horses' heads are now plainly lions' heads—this Trumpet does not conceal its destructiveness. See, on vv. 5, 16, the remarks of Burger on the connexion between the fifth and sixth Trumpets.

and out of their mouths] I. Williams notes that the word "mouth" is three times repeated (vv. 17—19), as under the sixth Vial, ch. xvi. 13.

proceedeth fire and smoke and brimstone.] By a usual poetic figure, the horse breathes forth "fire and smoke"—"volvit sub naribus ignem" (Virgil, Georg., iii. 85; Ovid, Metam., vii. 104), to which "brimstone," as associated with evil, is here added: cf. ch. xiv. 10; xix. 20; xxi. 8. Mede and Elliott understand the Turkish artillery. Alf gives a singular interpretation:—"The plagues proceed "separately," he notes; one of them "out of the mouths of each division of the host." It is remarkable that these divisions are three, though the Angels were four."

The fifth and sixth Trumpets, notes Reuss, bring on two plagues peculiar to the East—locusts, and the simoom.

18. By these three plagues] (See vv. 11). Gr. from (ἀπό) equivalent to the German durch (Winer, § 47, a. 332)—viz. by the fire, the smoke, and the brimstone.

was the third part of men killed.] See on ver. 15, and on ch. viii. 7. The army of horsemen is not prohibited from killing, as the locusts were in ver. 5.

Mede explains that the sufferers belonged to those styled "the third part of men"—i. e., the inhabitants of the Roman Empire (see on ch. viii. 7); and they consist of some only of the inhabitants of that "third part" just as in ch. xvii. 16 only some of the "Ten Horns" are meant; see also Judges xii. 7.

by the fire and the smoke and the brimstone.] (Omit "by" twice—see vv. 11). Gr.

"by reason of" (ἐκ)—for the preposition see ver. 2; ch. viii. 11.

which proceeded out of their mouths.] The participle (with its art.) agrees with the last noun, but applies to all three.

Elliott refers this verse to the fall of Constantinople; and quotes Gibbon's description of the Ottoman artillery (ch. lxxviii.).

19. For the power of the horses is in their mouth, and in their tails:] See vv. 11. The Codex of Erasmus here differs from all the Uncials; and the A. V. translates a text different from the Textus Receptus. "The Authorized Version agrees with Beza (1589) against Stephens (1550)."—Scrivener, Introd. to Par. Bible, p. ciii. Cf. the imagery of ver. 10, for their tails [are] like unto serpents, and have heads;] Wetstein, Bengel, Herder, &c. quote, as the source of this imagery, what the ancients (Plin., H. N., viii. 35; Lucan, Pharsal. ix. 719) relate of a genus of serpents or ophidian reptiles called amphisbena "in which the tail and head are equally obtuse, and the scales of the head so similar to those on the back as to render it difficult to distinguish one extremity from the other. Hence these reptiles have been supposed to have the power of creeping backwards or forwards with equal facility."—Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science. Bengel notes that certain tribes (of Turks) fight even while they retreat;—Grotius sees a reference to the custom of foot-soldiers mounting behind horsemen;—Stuart observes that the Turcomans train their horses to assault with their hinder part, as well as with the front;—Elliott refers to the horsetails borne as symbols of authority by the Turkish Pashas, the tails having heads denoting that authority;—Stern, Ebrard, Hengst. see here a type of the malignity and treachery practised by these armies.

and with them they do hurt.] Inflict pain by the bite of the serpent-heads. Elliott renders, "they (i. e., the Turkish Pashas) commit injustice"—a sense opposed to the use of the verb in ch. ii. 11; vii. 2, 3; ix. 4, 10; xi. 5.

20. And the rest of mankind.] Le., the remaining two-thirds, see ver. 18:—Gr. the men; cf. ch. viii. 11.

which were not killed with these plagues.]

Ps. 115. 4 & 135. 15- devils, "and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk :

21 Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

(Gr. "in"—as in ver. 19, "with them do they hurt"). That is the plagues of ver. 18.

Ebrard refers vv. 20, 21 to all the first six Trumpets, which have not succeeded in causing the ungodly to repent; the two-thirds of men who survive, not having been converted:—but see the true reading, "these three plagues," in ver. 18. So also Züllig, who regards these verses as explaining why a seventh Trumpet is to be added,—because had men repented in consequence of the preceding six, they would have been spared the more fearful judgment yet to come. He adds that "the men of the earth" are classed in the Apoc. as Jews (ch. vii.; xv.) and Gentiles (ch. x. 11; xiv. 6-9); accordingly, the gross idolatry of the Gentiles is first censured, and then sins common to both Jews and Gentiles.

Elliott refers these verses to Western Christendom—to "the men of the West" who were not killed as a body politic, and whose religion and crimes (e.g. the persecution of the Albigenses, &c.) throughout the Middle Ages he considers are here described.

repented not of] (Omit "yet"). Gr. "from" see on ch. ii. 21. The meaning is explained by the clause "that they should not worship." The final catastrophe is inevitable:—man will not accept the loving forbearance of God, 2 Pet. iii. 9. Neither by the Trumpet-plagues here, nor by the Vial-plagues (ch. xvi. 21), are mankind moved to repentance.

the works of their hands,] Either, generally, "the sins of their life,"—so De Wette, Ebrard, Bleek; or (for it is not merely "their works" as in ch. ii. 22; xvi. 11) "the idols wrought by their hands," "their idolatry," as we read in Acts vii. 41 (cf. Deut. iv. 28; Ps. cxxxv. 15; Isai. ii. 8),—so Bengel, Hengst., Düsterd., Words, Alf, Bisping, Burger. The rest of the verse indicates that this is the meaning.

that they should not worship devils,] Gr. "the demons," as in 1 Cor. x. 20, evil spirits of an inferior order, see on ch. li. 10; xvi. 14. The verb is in the future (after iva), see vv. 11.

and the idols of gold,] See vv. 11.

and of silver, and of brass, and of stone, and of wood; which can neither see, nor hear, nor walk:] Cf. Dan. v. 23, whence this enumeration is taken. In this verse, sins against God condemned in the first Table of the Decalogue—viz. demon-worship (cf. 1 Tim. iv. 1), and its equivalent, idolatry (cf. 1 Cor. x. 19-21)—are recited. See on ver. 21.

21. and they repented not of] As in ver. 20. The repetition of the verb "repent" seems to have no greater significance than to connect more clearly the two verses.

sorceries,] Gr. "the use of drugs," denoting the magic rites of the heathen (ch. xviii. 23). The word is used by the LXX. to describe the "enchantments" of the Egyptian sorcerers (Ex. vii. 22), and of Babylon (Isai. xlvii. 9, 12), the form varying when used to describe the "witchcrafts" of Jezebel (2 Kings ix. 22). In Gal. v. 20 it is placed next to idolatry; elsewhere in the N. T. the word occurs only in ch. xviii. 23:—cf. ch. xxi. 8; xxii. 15, both of which texts are cognate to this verse. Suicer connects the word with the use of drugs in causing abortion and infanticide; and thus its connection here with idolatry on the one hand, and with murder and fornication, on the other—i.e., with carnal and spiritual fornication—can be accounted for.

fornication,] The use of the singular in the case of this word alone, is well explained by Bengel: "There is one, never-ceasing impurity with those who are not clean in heart" ("Alia scelera ab hominibus per intervalla patrantur; una perpetua propeia est apud eos, qui munditie cordis carent"). The sins condemned in the second Table of the Decalogue, are now recited,—see on ver. 20.

The great obscurity of the several Trumpet-Visions, especially of the two Visions of this chapter, is admitted by all. As in the first four Trumpets we discern judgments under various forms of physical evil, so in the fifth and sixth we seem to discern manifestations of moral evil. In the fifth, the locusts issue from the Abyss (ver. 3), and their "King" is "the Angel of the Abyss" (ver. 11). Their mission is not to "hurt" material Creation (ver. 4), or to "kill" (ver. 5),—but by their poisonous influence (venomous as that of scorpions, vv. 3, 5, 10) to torment and injure men. The period of "five months" may, as already suggested, be only a feature of the imagery suggested by the symbol of natural locusts; or it may refer simply to the number of the Trumpet. Or, again, the sense may be that this is not the great outbreak of evil in the last times to which all prophecy points,—but that this short and "broken" period indicates a partial exercise of Satanic power, confined to no particular generation. The sixth Trumpet seems no less distinctly to announce a still more intense, perhaps the final (see ver. 15) onslaught of the powers of darkness. The binding of the four Angels (ver. 14) leads on the mind to the binding of Satan himself (ch. xx. 3); the mention of the Euphrates, the river of Babylon, at once suggests the thought of that great City which is specially chosen as the symbol of the God-opposing World-power (ch. xiv. 8; xvii. 5); the Army of Heaven is composed of horsemen (ch. xix. 14), but here we see the antagonistic host as foreshown in Ezekiel xxxviii. 4 (cf. ch. xvi. 16; xx. 8); the addition to natural imagery which we find in ver. 17, brings before us the symbols of hell employed elsewhere in the Apocalypse (ch. xiv. 10; xix. 20; xx. 10; xxi. 8);—in a word, every token points to the great outbreak of evil. In the case of both Trumpets, moreover, the monstrous features added to the natural forms of locusts and horses confirm the reference of these two judgments to the exhibitions of moral evil in all its aspects; and accordingly there is nothing singular in the very general application of the fifth Trumpet to Mohammedanism—the most striking, as it has been the most formidable manifestation of the antichristian Power hitherto developed under the Christian dispensation.

Godet (l. c., p. 353) regards the first six Trumpets as forming one picture, exhibiting the preparation for the decisive trial which will determine the appearance of Antichrist: they are the signals of the dissolution of the old social order, and then of the establishment and the ruin of the empire of Antichrist (see on ch. xiii. 1). Accumulated convulsions in the earth, the sea, the rivers, the air (the first four Trumpets); then convulsions in society which a diabolical epidemic undermines (the fifth Trumpet) and the foundations of which an invasion of barbarians overturns (the sixth Trumpet), such are the judgments which pave the way for the last Adversary.

When Renan (l. c., p. 326, &c.) dwells upon the accumulated catastrophes of the Roman Empire from A.D. 59 to A.D. 79, may we not, in reply, ask him, Why should not similar catastrophes be repeated—nay, catastrophes still more intense—on the eve of the dissolution of our old world, and the birth-pangs of a new Heaven and a new Earth? In such commotions the physical and the moral worlds are not to be separated. The two domains are united by mysterious affinities. As Palestine has followed, in its alternations of desolation and of fertility, the destiny of Israel, why may not the fate be the same of the earth in relation to man?—cf. Godet, l. c., p. 355.

Burger concludes that since, according to the two intervening Visions in ch. x.—xi. 14 which precede the seventh Trumpet, the kingdom of Antichrist appears under that last Trumpet as a perfected World-kingdom, the preparation for this kingdom consists in the events under the fifth and sixth Trumpets; so that all is now ready for ch. xiii.:—see on ver. 16.

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chapter IX.

Note A—THE TRUMPET-VISIONS.

ANCIENT EXPOSITORS.

VICTORINUS is the earliest expositor of the Trumpet-Visions. "The Trumpet," he writes, "is a word of power." What the Trumpets here announce the Vials (ch. xvi.) repeat; not as if the thing were twice done, but in order to show the certainty of God's decree—as in Gen. xli. 32 ("Quod ergo in tubis minus dixit, hoc in phialis est. Non aspiendus est ordo dictorum, quoniam sæpe Spiritus Sanctus, ubi ad novissimi temporis finem percurrerit, rursus ad eadem tempora redit, et supplet ea quæ minus dixit; nec requirendus est ordo in Apocalypsi, sed intellectus")—see the remarks introductory to ch. viii. The Trumpets and Vials, therefore, describe: (1) The plagues sent on the world;—(2) The madness of Antichrist;—(3) The blasphemy ("detractio") of the peoples;—(4) The variety of the plagues;—(5) The hope in the kingdom of the saints;—(6) The fall of cities;—(7) The fall of that great City, Babylon, i. e. of the city of Rome.

ANDREAS (see Note A on ch. vi.) regards the Trumpets as evolved, so to speak, from the seventh Seal, and as denoting the dissolution of earthly governments: (1) In the first Trumpet, the hail denotes God's wrath, and the fire and blood the ruin caused by the barbarians;—(2) The sea denotes, "tropically," the present life, and the "great mountain" is the Devil burning with fiery wrath against men;—(3) The fallen star (cf. Isai. xiv. 12) is Satan who brings the plagues;—(4) The fourth Trumpet is akin to Joel ii. 31.

In these four plagues, God's mercy restricts the judgments to the third part.

(5) The "Star," i. e., a divine Angel, lets loose shortly before the end of all things the demons whom Christ at His Incarnation had bound, and the "five months" denote "the shortened days" of Matt. xxiv. 22;—(6) "The four Angels" of ch. ix. 15 are not Archangels, but demons of the worst kind who had been bound at Christ's coming, and who are now let loose by the divine Angel of ver. 13. Their being bound in the Euphrates he illustrates by the instance of the demons in Matt. viii. 32.

BEDA follows, for the most part [Tichonus¹ and] Primasius. The Seven Angels signify the Church; and the Trumpets signify, (1) The destruction of the ungodly by fire and hail—the heat of Gehenna, and bitter cold; “blood” denoting the spiritual death of the soul;—(2) The casting of the Devil by the Church into the sea of this world, as Christ promised His disciples in Matt. xxi. 21;—(3) Heretics falling like stars from the Church, and corrupting the waters of Scripture;—(4) The glory of the Church obscured by the falling away of false brethren;—(5) Heresy becoming more intense, as Antichrist draws near; but heretics cannot kill the soul (ch. ix. 5);—(6) The open war of Antichrist against the Church: “Cornua altaris aurei Evangelia sunt Ecclesie præminentia” (ch. ix. 13);—(7) The Day of Judgment.

MODERN EXPOSITORS.

THE FIRST FOUR TRUMPETS.

I. “Historical” Interpreters:—

MEDE takes the Trumpets to signify, (1) The subversion of the Roman world by the northern nations, who are symbolized as “bail” (Isai. xxviii. 2); the “trees” are the chief men (Isai. xxxvii. 24; Zech. xi. 2), and, by analogy, the “grass” signifies the people at large. This Trumpet begins with the death of Theodosius, A.D. 395;—(2) The Roman world, or “sea,” is assailed by Alaric and Genseric, A.D. 410, and A.D. 455;—(3) The fallen “Star” is Romulus Augustulus, A.D. 476 (“de cælo potestatis suæ revulsum”), to whom the title “Wormwood” applies as a prince of bitterness and sorrow;—(4) The glory of Rome under the Ostrogoths is quenched by Belisarius and Narses, A.D. 542, who abolished the Consular dignity (the “sun”), and the authority of the Senate (the “moon” and the “stars”).

BIRKS: (1) A furious invasion of the Roman Empire, especially its Greek or Eastern provinces (A.D. 250–268, see Gibbon, chap. x., xi.), “with the pause of judgment,” A.D. 270–365;—(2) The extinction of the Western Empire, A.D. 365–476;—(3) Heresy, either Arian or Nestorian;—(4) A notable eclipse of the Imperial splendour of the third or Greek Empire, A.D. 540–622. The expression “the third part,” writes Mr. Birks, “is found once in ch. xii. 4, and fourteen times in the Trumpet-Visions;” and as, when the Apocalypse was written, the judgment of the Grecian, the third of Daniel’s four Empires (Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome), was still to come, Mr. Birks concludes that “whenever the ‘third part’ is specified in this Vision, the direct reference is to the Greek or Eastern Empire.”—The Mystery of Providence, p. 65.

The opinions of “commentators of considerable eminence and reputation” as to the first four Trumpets are thus summed up by Mr. Birks (l.c., p. 103):—(1) “The first Trumpet begins, according to Lowman, in the time of Constantine; according to Mr. Cunninghame and Mr. Frere, with the death of Valentinian, A.D. 376, and ends with the death of Theodosius, A.D. 395. But Mede, Newton, Dr. Keith, and Mr. Elliott, make it begin with the death of Theodosius, and reach to the death of Alaric, A.D. 410. Cressener and Whiston include in it both periods. Mr. Faber agrees with Mede and Newton, in its commencement, but continues it forty years after Alaric’s death, A.D. 395–450.”

(2) “The second, according to Lowman, Mr. Cunninghame, and Mr. Frere, reaches from Theodosius to Alaric, the exact interval which Mede, Newton, Dr. Keith, and Mr. Elliott assign to the first. Cressener refers it to the Transalpine invasions, A.D. 410–448; Sir I. Newton to the Visigoths and Vandals, 407–427; Whiston, Mr. Faber, and Dr. Keith to the Vandals only, but within different limits, A.D. 406–450, 439–477, and 429–477 respectively.”

(3) “The third Trumpet by Sir I. Newton is applied to the Vandals, A.D. 427–530; by Whiston, Mr. Cunninghame, and Dr. Keith, to Attila and the Huns, A.D. 441–452; by Mede, Cressener, and Lowman, to the troubles of Italy, or setting of the Western Cæsar, A.D. 450–476; by Mr. Faber, to the same within narrower limits, A.D. 462–476; and by Mr. Frere to the Nestorian heresy.”

(4) “Lastly the fourth is referred by Mr. Cunninghame to the fall of the Empire, A.D. 455–476; by Whiston, to the extinction itself, A.D. 476; by Mede, Cressener, Lowman, and Dr. Keith, to the subsequent eclipse of Rome, A.D. 476–540; by Sir I. Newton to the Wars of Belisarius, A.D. 535–552; by Mr. Faber, and Mr. Frere, to the reign of Phocas, and the Persian invasion of the East, A.D. 602–610.”

II. (a) Ordinary “Preterists,”:—

BOSSUET sees in the first four Visions:—(1) The desolation of the Jews under Trajan;—(2) The last desolation of the Jews under Hadrian;—(3) In the “Star” Barchochab (“Son of the Star”), the cause of the desolation under the second Trumpet;—(4) The darkening of prophecy by the malice of the Jews at this very time; Christ is “the sun,” the Church is “the moon,” the Apostles, “the stars.” “On marque seulement la troisième partie, quand la menace ne regarde ni la totalité ni la plus grande partie.”

WETSTEIN:—(1) The burnt trees and grass denote the villages and country parts of Judæa, where the sedition first showed itself;—(2) The burning “mountain” which stained the sea with blood, and also (3) The "Star" which made the waters bitter, signify the slaughter of the Jews at Cæsarea and Scythopolis;—(4) The obscuration of sun, moon, and stars denotes anarchy in the Jewish commonwealth.

¹ See Note A on ch. vi.

HERDER: The first four Trumpets are signals of tumults, massacres and contests in Judæa, internal and external, under Florus and the Zealot Eleazar (Maran Atha, in loc.).

(b) Rationalistic "Preterists":—

VOLKMAR: In the first four Trumpets the Seer beholds the calamities which the world endured A.D. 63 (Tac. Ann. xv. 47), A.D. 68 (Tac. Hist. i. 3), and A.D. 69 (Hist. i. 18): the prodigy of blood as rain was always believed at Rome—"sanguine pluit" (Liv. xxxix. 46); the Seer has also in his view, a Volcano, a falling Meteor, and an Eclipse.

To the same effect RENAN.

III. "Futurists":—

TODD assumes that the judgments predicted in the first four Trumpet-Visions are to be understood literally. He appeals to the manner in which "our Lord has predicted a visitation of the same kind as one of the signs of His future coming" (Luke xxi. 25, 26); and concludes that the judgments foretold on the sounding of these Trumpets are future and equally literal (p. 135).

DE BURGH: "I consider [the first four Trumpets] future; and of this we have a two-fold evidence":—(a) "The variety of explanations offered on the supposition of fulfilment"; (b) "The necessity, on that hypothesis, for a forcible accommodation of the whole language." Thus if, as expositors contend, the trees, grass, &c., figuratively mean persons, then these four Trumpets affect the inhabitants of the earth as well as the last three; whereas under them inanimate objects alone are affected, while we read in ch. viii. 13: "Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the Trumpets of the three Angels, which are yet to sound!" Cf. also ch. ix. 4, where "the grass, trees, &c." are distinguished from men (l.c., pp. 186–188).

On the fact that scarcely any two expositors agree in the division of the same subject among these four Trumpets, Mr. Faber observes: "So curious a circumstance may well be deemed the opprobrium of Apocalyptic interpretation, and may naturally lead us to suspect that the true key to the distinct application of the four first Trumpets has never yet been found, or, if found, has never yet been satisfactorily used."

THE THREE "WOE-TRUMPETS."

The three remaining Trumpets, generally styled the "Woe-Trumpets," are introduced in ch. viii. 13. It will be convenient to give here a summary of the principal opinions as to the fifth and sixth Trumpets (ch. ix.), reserving for the present any remarks on the seventh, ch. xi. 15.

(5) Dr. Todd reduces the various interpretations of the "locusts" in the fifth Trumpet-Vision to four classes: (1) The ancient opinion that they are evil spirits; and their appearance still future;—(2) The medieval or controversial opinion, that they denote heretics. This is the opinion of Bede, Haymo, Berengaudus, &c., each applying the prophecy to the heretics of his own day. Under this head may be classed Roman Catholic writers (e.g. Bellarmin) who see in the locusts only Luther and the Protestants; as well as Protestant writers (e.g., Ussher, Bochart, Forbes, Paræus, &c.), who apply the Prophecy to the Pope, the Monks, the Inquisition;—(3) The "Historical" interpretations: These were begun by Aureolus, De Lyra, and their followers who apply the prophecy to the Vandals, A.D. 441–536, and have since been adopted by subsequent writers, some of whom (including the "Preterists"—e.g. Hammond, Rosenmüller, Ewald, &c.) have had recourse to earlier times, and interpret the locusts of the Roman wars in Judæa, ending in the destruction of Jerusalem. Modern commentators, since the time of Mede, generally suppose this prophecy to have been fulfilled in the victories or the religion of Mohammed; although Vitringa rejects this theory, and returns to the more ancient application of it to the Goths and Vandals;—(4) "Futurists" (e.g. the Jesuit Lessius, and De Burgh) think that literal locusts are intended—"veræ locustæ," as Lessius expresses it, "licet peregrinæ et monstrosæ" (l. c. p. 148).

(6) Dr. Todd again sums up the opinions of modern writers as to the sixth Trumpet:—

(1) "Preterists." Grotius takes the four Angels to be the generals of Vespasian, Titus; Mucianus, and Tiberius Alexander, whose armies penetrated as far as the Euphrates. Hammond supposes them to be the generals of Vespasian: these were bound, because Vespasian was for a long time hindered by the affairs of Rome from coming against Jerusalem, and bound in the Euphrates, i.e., in Rome, for the Euphrates surrounded Babylon and is here put for the city Babylon, i.e., for Rome.

(2) The "Historical" commentators. Four nations are intended, viz., the Arabs, Saracens, Tartars, and Turks, who dwelt beyond the Euphrates, and were now permitted to cross it. So Paræus, Cotter, &c. Others of the same school (Durham, Forbes, Piscator) understand the Mohammedans, who are called four either to denote a sufficient number, or to indicate that this plague would extend to the four corners of the earth. Mede, Sir I. Newton, and Bishop Newton suppose the Turks to be the subject of the prophecy; because they divided themselves after they had crossed the Euphrates into four Sultanries; and the loosing of these four took place after the Crusades, i.e., about the year 1300; or, as Daubuz supposes, when the Ottomans were invited over by Cantacuzen, A.D. 1346. Faber takes the four Angels to be four Turkish dynasties, viz., Persia, Kerman, Syria, and Rhoum, A.D. 1092; who killed the third part of men, i.e., destroyed the Roman Empire in the East, A.D. 1453; and so Keith and Habershon. With Lowman and Doddridge the Angels are the Saracens, who were loosed A.D. 513, and who are spoken of as four merely to denote the universality of their ravages. Mr. Cunningham supposes the number four to be mystical, signifying complete, entire; and the Euphrates to be put for the Turkish nation (p. 154).

As to "the hour, day, month, and year" (ch. ix. 5) some maintain that only a fixed or appointed time is denoted (so Grotius, Hammond, Daubuz, Lowman, Doddridge). Bishop Newton, on the "Year-day" theory, makes the period 391 years and 15 days, from the first victory of the Turks over Christians, A.D. 1281, to the last, the taking of Camenec from the Poles, A.D. 1672. Mr. Faber understands this period to be 396 years, 3 months, beginning with the reign of Othman, June 9, 1301, and ending with Prince Eugene's victory at Zenta, Sept. 1, 1697. Mr. Cunningham takes it to be the period of their preparation for destroying men, or 391 years from A.D. 1057, to A.D. 1448; and so Mr. Keith, who reckons 396 years, 103 days, from A.D. 1057 to A.D. 1453. Mr. Habershon makes it the period during which the Turks will hold Constantinople, viz., 391 years, and one month, from May 29, 1453, to June, 1844.

Mr. Tyso (see Note A. on ch. vi.) sums up, as before, the conclusions of the "Historical" commentators as to the dates of the several Trumpet-Visions:—

Trumpets.	De Lyra.	Mede.	R. Fleming.	Daubuz.	Frere.	Faber.	Thos. Scott.	Cunning- hame.	Keith.
1	Arius . .	A.D. 365	A.D. 339	A.D. 395	A.D. 376	A.D. 395	A.D. 388	A.D. 376	A.D. 395
2	Macedonius	410	405	410	395	439	412	393	413
3	Pelagius .	475	475	442	439	472	450	441	441
4	Eutyches .	542	568	454	628	603	476	476	476
5	Valens . .	591	622	612	632	604	606	533	622
6	Heretics	846	1067	1356	1062	1301	1281	1302	1057
7	Favourers of Heretics.	..	1516	1517	1792	1789	..	1792	..

This list of "Historical" interpreters may be closed with a rather doubtful example:—

I. With Stern (5) the fifth Trumpet denotes heresy, including the errors, from the end of Cent. iv., of the Cathari, the Albigenses and Waldenses, down to the Pantheists of our own day;—(6) the sixth, the beginning of the last persecution, shortly before the coming of Antichrist. Then, at "the hour, day, month, and year" which God has determined on in His counsels, the Judgment falls.

II. (a) Ordinary "Preterists":—

(5) BOSSUET understands by the fifth Trumpet the heresies which, having their origin among the Jews against the Person of Christ and the Trinity, were subsequently revived by Theodotus of Byzantium (who succeeded Cerinthus), and by Artemon (A.D. 196). Heresy is a "scorpion," which secretes its noxious venom; the sting is in the tail—i.e., concealed behind, for heresy has a fair aspect (vers. 5, 10). This Trumpet also indicates the war of Persia against Rome, and the calamities thence arising which made men weary of life (ver. 6). The "locusts" (ver. 7) have "as it were crowns like unto gold," i.e., of false gold, unlike the crowns in ch. iv. 4—heretics put forth a vain imitation of Truth. (6) The sixth Trumpet brings us down to A.D. 260, 270, and the Council against the heresy of Paul of Samosata, when the second "Woe" begins (ver. 12). The Persian army crossed the Euphrates; and then, in the fall of Valerian, began the fall of Rome. In vv. 16, 17 is described the armour of the Persian cavalry, which marched with the force of lions. The "serpents" in ver. 19 denote the arrows which, after the Parthian fashion, the Persians shot back upon the foe.

(b) Rationalistic "Preterists":—

VOLKMAR: His principle is that the Eagle of ch. viii. 13 is the type of the Roman Empire. (5) The "fallen Star" in the fifth Trumpet is Nero, who leads a demon-host from the Abyss against Rome and the Roman world, but not against the Christians (the "Sealed" of ch. vii. 4; ix. 4), who however had been subject to the other natural plagues, except the pestilence in ch. xvi. 2. After Nero, or "Apollyon" (ver. 12) follow two "Woes"—Galba, now the reigning Emperor, and a seventh not yet come (ch. xvii. 10). (6) Nero, returning as Antichrist, brings his hellish host nearer from the boundary of the Parthian Kingdom—the Euphrates.

III. "Futurists":—

TODD: (5) As a "Futurist" this writer treats the "locust" Vision as related to the Sealing of ch. vii. 3. After the restoration of the Jewish people to the land of Canaan, Satan will raise against them the agency of evil spirits; and these, either under the appearance of literal locusts, or by the instrumentality of natural locusts or of a human army, will not injure vegetation, but will merely injure (not destroy) men, except the Sealed of the children of Israel. The torment of each is to continue for five literal months, or five literal months make up the entire duration of this judgment; —(6) The region of the Euphrates is hereafter to become the scene of the last great struggle between "the Prince of this World" and the people of God,—the army of horsemen being now permitted to kill the third part of men, while the locusts were permitted only to torment.—(l.c., pp. 136-151).

CHAPTER X.

1 A mighty strong angel appeareth with a book open in his hand. 6 He sweareth by him that liveth for ever, that there shall be no more time. 9 John is commanded to take and eat the book.

AND I saw another mighty angel come down from hea-

[Ver. 1 ἡ ἰσὺς. Ver. 2 ἔχων. Ver. 4 om. τ. φωνὰς ἐαυτῶν.—om. μοι.—μὴ αὐτὰ [1, agreeing with the Comm. of Andreas, reads καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα γράφεις. This, Er., after the et poli ea scribere of the Vulgate, changed into καὶ μὴ ταῦτα γράψῃς]. Ver. 5 τ. χεῖρα αὐτοῦ τὴν δεξιάν. Ver. 6 [N, A om. καὶ τ. βάλασσ. κ. τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ].—οὐκέτι ἔσται. Ver. 7 ἐτελέσθη.—τοῖς ἐαυτ. δούλους τοὺς προφήτας. Ver. 8 λαλοῦσαν.—λέγουσαν.—βιβλίον.—τοῦ ἁγγ. Ver. 9 δοῦναι. Ver. 11 λέγουσιν.]

THE TWO EPISODES (x. 1—xi. 13).

Two episodes, that of the "Little Book" (ch. x. 2) and that of the "Measuring of the Temple" (ch. xi. 1-13), now separate the end of the sixth from the beginning of the seventh Trumpet-Vision (ch. ix. 21; xi. 15); just as the two episodes of ch. vii. 4, 9 separate the sixth and seventh Seals. The relation of this tenth chapter to the general drift of the Vision is more difficult to discern than in the case of ch. vii. Among ancient writers, some (e.g. Primasius, Beda, Berengaudus,) understand by ch. x. the propagation of Christianity; while others (e.g. Andreas and Arethas) merely regard it as introductory to what follows. Mede and Bishop Newton consider this chapter as intended to explain how St. John received the prophecy of ch. xi.—xiv.; and as giving an account of his "inauguration" ("sic fuit Joannis inauguratio," Mede, l.c., p. 478) into his prophetic office. Mede also regards the "Second Woe," ending at ch. xi. 14, as identical with the plague of the sixth Trumpet; while he makes the second chief prophecy of the Revelation to be that of the "Little Book," which sets out from the same beginning of Apocalyptic time as the Seals, and proceeds from ch. x. 8 to the end. I. Williams thinks that as, in the first Seal, we see the single Horseman in Judea, and in the first Trumpet the Church going forth from the ruins of Jerusalem,—so here we have a Vision of the expansion of the Gospel throughout the world;

the Book given to St. John being "his inauguration into the deeper knowledge of the kingdom," and all that follows after ch. xi. being "Recapitulation," and unfolding mysteries heretofore unrevealed. "The Little Book," writes Mr. Maurice, "is to interpret those puzzling passages of human history which exhibit periods of revolution and anarchy;"—"a Book of judgment" (p. 172).

De Wette, Alford, and others limit the "Second Woe" to ch. ix. 13-21; and Hengst connects ch. xi. 14 with ch. ix. 21. Ebrard, on the other hand (s. 348) would restrict the "Second Woe" to "the mystic earthquake" of ch. xi. 13, explaining the interlude thus:—As in ch. vii. 1 the course of the Divine judgments is arrested before that final judgment with which the delay allowed by Divine grace comes to an end; so here God strives to bring men to repentance, first through those unrevealed acts symbolized by "the Seven Thunders" (ch. x. 4)—an effort which the close of Ps. xxix. tells us will not be without fruit; and secondly, by "the mystic earthquake" (or "Second Woe") which occurs after the Law and the Gospel have ultimately failed, and which destroys the tenth part of the kingdom of Antichrist. On an opposite principle, Vitringa (pp. 422, 485) regards the calamities described from ch. ix. 13 to ch. xi. 14, as all belonging to the "Second Woe," that is, to the sixth Trumpet; while Bengel excludes from the "Second Woe" the whole passage from ch. x. 1 to ch. xi. 13.

ven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

Bisping notes:—Before the "Third Woe," comes the judgment on Israel; and these two Episodes form the transition from the first to the second half of "the last World-Week" (s. 164):—see on ch. ix. 12.

CHAPTER X.

THE LITTLE BOOK (1-11).

1. And I saw another mighty angel] Cf. ch. v. 2; xviii. 21. This Angel corresponds to the "another Angel" of ch. vii. 2; and the epithet "mighty" points to an analogy between him and the Angel of ch. v. 2, where, in like manner, a "Book"—the "Sealed Book"—is the theme. De Wette understands the word "another" as distinguishing this Angel from the Angel of ch. viii. 13 ("the Eagle"); or of ch. ix. 13; or of some one of the Trumpet-Angels. With the early expositors generally, Mede, Hengst., Words., Bisping understand Christ; the symbols—the "cloud" (ch. i. 7), the "feet as pillars of fire" (cf. ch. i. 15), and especially the "rainbow," (ch. iv. 3)—denoting how God tempers justice with mercy. To the same effect Hippolytus ("Ancolitus"—see Note A on ch. xii. 3; Lagarde, l. c., p. 26), writes that St. John here, and Daniel (xii. 1-7) both beheld the Word of God. Vitringa, arguing from the oath in ver. 6, concludes that it can be no created being (cf. Hebr. vi. 17); and he leaves it uncertain whether the reference is to Christ or to the Holy Ghost. On the other hand, Bengel argues from ver. 6 that this Angel cannot be Christ; and so Stern: we may also note how the description here differs from that in ch. i. 13-16 where Christ appears. In "the mighty Angel" Daubuz sees Luther;—Keith and Elliott, the power of Christ manifested in the Reformation, and discerned by Luther;—"the descent of the Angel," writes Mr. Cunningham (The Seals and Trumpets, 4th ed. ch. viii.), "is the French Revolution of 1789."

coming down out of heaven,] Alford considers that the Seer, as in ch. iv. 1, is still in heaven:—but cf. vv. 8, 9. Hengst. justly observes that there is a latitude as to St. John's position: when the Vision is seen on earth, he is on earth—e.g. "in the wilderness" (ch. xvii. 3); but when the Vision is in heaven, he is there (ch. xi. 16; xix. 1).

clothed with a cloud,] The cloud, charged with lightnings and thunders, is the symbol of judgment—see ch. viii. 5; xi. 19; xvi. 18.

and the rainbow [was] upon his head,] ("Upon"—see the note on ch. i. 20). The "rainbow"—the well-known emblem of mercy, Gen. ix. 13. Compare ch. iv. 3; Ezek. i. 28.

and his face [was] as the sun,] The emblem of the glory with which he was invested—cf. ch. i. 16; xviii. 1; Luke ix. 26.

as pillars of fire,] Not merely shining, as in ch. i. 15; but intimating the fire of judgment, ch. xx. 9. Referring to ch. iii. 12, Hengst. understands by "pillars" unchangeable steadfastness.

2. and he had in his hand] (Gr. and having—see vv. 11.). As commentators point out, his left hand—see ver. 5.

a little book] The diminutive of the word used in ch. v. 1:—see note A at the end of this chapter, and on ver. 8. This Book, as to the contents of which nothing is revealed, is, apparently, altogether distinct from the "Sealed Book" of ch. v. It probably contains the commission given to the Seer in ver. 11:—cf. Ezek. iii. 2, 11.

open,] In contrast to the "Sealed Book" of ch. v.:—it lies unrolled on the Angel's hand, see ver. 8. The "Little Book," notes Bisping, (see on ver. 8), forms part of the "Sealed Book," and because its seventh Seal had been broken (ch. viii. 1) this portion of it is "open": and so Burger;—it is open, notes Ebrard, in contrast to the concealed meaning of the Thunder-Voices, ver. 4;—it is open, notes Stuart, because, as it concerns the pagan persecutors of the Church, it has less mystery than the "Sealed Book" which contains the destiny of God's people.

and he set his right foot on the sea, and his left on the earth,] Intimating the judicial authority committed to him over the whole world, as contrasted with the partial judgments of the first four Trumpets (ch. viii. 7-12):—cf. Ps. viii. 6. Bleek takes the words to mean the colossal form of the Angel, visible to the Universe. Among allegorizing interpretations, C. à Lapide and Alcazar refer to Christ's preaching to Jews and Gentiles;—Bengel understands Europe and Asia;—Keith, England (the sea), and Germany (the land);—Hengst. interprets, as in ch. viii. 8, "the sea of the nations," and he takes this passage (vv. 1-7) as intended to calm the disquietude which the contents of the "Little Book" were likely to produce;—according to Elliott, the Angel with the "Little Book open" is a prediction of the Reformation.

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

3. and he cried with a great voice, as a lion roareth:] Denoting the menacing tone of the voice. What the utterance was the text does not explain—cf. Hos. xi. 10; Am. iii. 8. Alford regards this entire description as a literal representation of the Vision;—Bengel would refer the cry to ver. 6;—Ebrard thinks that the Angel by his cry gives the signal to the Seven Thunders, as in ch. ix. 14 the Angel of the sixth Trumpet gives the signal to the four Euphrates-Angels.

and when he cried, the seven thunders] It is to be noted that the Jews were wont to speak of thunder as "the seven voices": this usage was founded on the seven-fold repetition of "the voice of the Lord" in Ps. xxix.—see Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, i. 426. Accordingly, there is here a personification, as if the seven spirits of thunder uttered their voices together:—cf. ch. xiv. 2. They issue, as it were, from the cloud which veils the Angel, and are the echo of his lion-voice.

Beda takes the Seven Thunders to be identical with the Seven Trumpets;—Mede understands seven Oracles of unknown import, which divide the seventh Trumpet into certain periods;—Ebrard, seven events occurring between the sixth and seventh Trumpets, which conduce to the repose of the saints and the discomfiture of God's enemies;—Vitringa, the seven Crusades (see Gibbon, ch. lix.);—Dau-buz, the seven kingdoms that received the Reformation;—Elliott, the Bull fulminated from the Seven-hilled City against Luther;—Burger thinks that God's judicial omnipotence is intended; and he compares the expression "the Seven Spirits" in ch. i. 4; iv. 5; v. 6.

Many explain the article—"the Seven Thunders"—by the constant use of the number seven in Apocalyptic imagery (e.g. ch. i. 20); and thus, seven being the symbol of completion, Words. understands "all the thunders." Hengst. observes that, except in Mark iii. 17, where St. John himself is described as a "son of thunder," the word "thunder" is found in the New Testament only in St. John's writings:—see John xii. 29, on which verse our Lord Himself gives a comment, in vv. 30, 31, with reference to His glory, and to the future judgment.

their voices.] Gr. "their own voices"—voices of a character peculiar to them; with a reference, perhaps, to their remaining unwritten.

4. And when the seven thunders uttered [their voices].] See vv. 11:—Gr. spake.

I was about to write:] Viz. what they had uttered: according to the command in ch. i. 11, and as the Seer seems to have understood the words—see ch. i. 19.

It seems to be intimated here that St. John was employed in writing during the intervals of his Visions.

and I heard a voice from heaven] As to the indefiniteness of the speaker, see on ch. i. 10.

saying, Seal up the things] Omit "unto me"—see vv. 11.

which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.] (On the text of codex 1—as of the Complutensian and other Andreas-texts,—see vv. 11.) Although understood by St. John, what was uttered is not revealed to us (Acts i. 7); while in ch. xxii. 10 he is commanded not to seal the prophecy, "for the time is at hand." The details of the catastrophe are passed over in silence by the Seer in this passage, and a similar silence as to details may be noted in ch. xi. 15–19. Stuart considers that what is thus passed over in ch. xi. 15–19 is that which the Thunders here declared, and that which St. John is forbidden to write, through pity for the weakness of men. Reuss interprets: All is known to the prophet; yet he must not yield to the natural impatience of mortals by at once describing the final result:—he must disclose the events in succession, "according to the regular evolution of the facts."

The command not to write, observes Andreas (l.c., p. 55), is a command to fix the voices in his memory; the fulfilment is reserved for the last times. Until that time when their fulfilment gives light, the voices, notes Hengst., are only provisionally sealed (cf. Dan. viii. 26; xii. 4). In the continuous narrative of the Apocalypse, observes I. Williams (p. 478), there occurs this exception; and the silence here may account for the difficulty in attempting to elucidate the nature of the last conflict with Antichrist:—"We learn from St. John and from St. Paul, that their churches had been informed of the coming of 'the wicked one,' or personal Antichrist; and that they knew well of the power that withholdeth: but of these things the next generation had no knowledge":—see St. August., De Civ. Dei, xx. 10.

5 And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And swore by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer :

7 But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin lifted up his right hand to heaven,] (See vv. 11.). The gesture of one who swears,—Gen. xiv. 22 : cf. Dan. xii. 7. His left hand held the "Little Book."

5. which I saw standing on the sea and on the earth] Viz. in ver. 2.

6. and swore by him] (For the constr. cf. Matt. v. 34, &c.). In order to remove the possible doubts of the suffering Church, or of the unbelieving world (2 Pet. iii. 4).

that liveth for ever and ever,] A title taken from Deut. xxxii. 40 ; cf. Isai. lvii. 15.

the heaven, and the things that are therein, and the earth and the things that are therein, and the sea and the things that are therein.] (MSS. of very high authority omit "and the sea, and the things that are therein"—see vv. 11.). The form of this oath confirms the conclusion that the Angel, in ver. 1, is not Christ.

that there shall be time no longer :] Or that there shall be delay no longer :] See vv. 11. For the word rendered "time" (chronos), see on ch. i. 3 ; ii. 21).

There are different interpretations here:—

(1) That there should be the end of that portion of finite duration which we call time, and the beginning of eternity ; viz. that all shall be finished under the seventh Trumpet, now about to sound (cf. ch. vi. 11) :—"There will be then, says Aretas, no evening ; no sun to mark the courses of time ; the sun shall be hidden by a far greater Light, as the stars are now by the day. (Ecumenius : Time will be then no more, inasmuch as it will not be measured by the sun, but life everlasting exceeding the numbering of time. The seventh Seal, and seventh Trumpet are as the seventh Day in Genesis, which has no evening."—I. Williams, l.c., p. 180.

(2) Rendering differently,—and this seems to give the correct meaning,—"There shall be no longer delay," "respite," "an interval" : cf. ch. ii. 21, and the verb in Matt. xxiv. 48 ; Luke xii. 45. Düstér. argues that the seventh verse imposes a "chronological" sense : and he adds, "The Angel swears that between the present point of duration—subsequent to the close of the sixth Trumpet, ch. ix. 21, but before the end of the second Woe, ch. xi. 14—and the fulfilment of the mystery under the seventh Trumpet, no time shall intervene." So Hammond, "There shall be no longer delay,"—as in Hab. ii. 3, "it will not tarry" (οὐ μὴ χρονίσῃ) ; cf. Heb. x. 37. So also many others,—"the little time" referred to in ch. vi. 11 having now come to an end. Thus Hengst. : The Church is consoled by the promise that there shall not be under the seventh Trumpet the same delay in the coming of God's kingdom as there had been before.

(3) Ebrard understands "a space of time wherein to repent" ("Gnaden-Frist"), as in ch. ii. 21. Bishop Wordsworth : "There shall be no longer any delay or respite for repentance save only in the days of the last Angel." See on ver. 7.

(4) Mede explains : The time of the Four Monarchies, or rather of the last kingdom—i.e., the Roman—the last period of the "time, times, and half a time" [ch. xii. 14, where, however, καρπός is used]—shall be no longer ; and the fourth, or Roman Beast being slain (Dan. vii. 23–25 ; xii. 7), the kingdom shall be given to the saints of the Most High (p. 476).

(5) Bishop Newton, Lowman, Daubuz, &c., accepting the reading of the Textus Receptus, take the words to signify : "The time [of the fulfilment] shall not be yet, but it shall be when the seventh Trumpet sounds."

(6) Bengel (see Intro., § 11 (b), IV.), taking a "Chronus" to be 1111½ years, counts from the earlier part of A.D. 725 ("Eudo Saracenos A. 726 vicit") ; and renders : "there shall not elapse a Chronus." Hence he places the end of all things in the year 1836. On this verse he also founds his period of a "Non-chronus," greater than 999½ (1000) years, and less than 1111½ years ; and counting from A.D. 800, the date of the origin of the German Empire under Charles the Great, he again obtains as the time of the end A.D. 1836.

7. but in the days] The connexion, according to the second interpretation of ver. 6, is : "There shall be no delay : on the contrary, when the seventh Angel is about to sound, then is finished," &c.

Words. (see above on ver. 6) understands, "except," or "save only"—see Matt. xx. 23 ; Mark x. 40 : God, in His mercy, will give a brief respite on the eve of the final consummation, in order that the ungodly may repent.

Bengel considers that the seventh Angel will sound continually during the days at the end of which comes "the last Trump" (1 Cor. xv. 52) of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

ment on the great Babel-Empire of the world. . . . The seventh Trumpet might have announced the fall of Rome. No! when it sounds Jerusalem will fall" (l.c., p. 186).

11. And they say unto me.] (See vv. 11.) The plural is indefinite as in ch. xii. 6—"on dit," "man sagt." Auberlen observes that (as in Dan. vii. 5, 13) the third person plural refers to heavenly powers—see the note on Dan. vii. 5. Ewald refers to the Angels generally, in contrast to the chief Angel spoken of in vv. 4, 8, 9.

Thou must] Not the subjective necessity, resulting from eating the "Little Book" (as Bengel, Hengst.); but the objective, arising from the command of God—see ch. i. 1, &c., and cf. Acts xxiii. 11.

prophesy] Here only (cf. ch. i. 3; xxii. 7, 10, 18, 19) is St. John said to "prophesy." His new consecration (vv. 9, 10) now places him side by side with Ezekiel, Daniel, Zechariah; and points to the change in the Apocalyptic announcements introduced by ch. xi. 1-14, and beginning at ch. xii. 1.

again] As in the former part of the Book, and in addition to it; i.e., as in the Seals, and the first six Trumpets.

The eating the "Little Book," and "to prophesy," are related one to the other as "revelation" and "prophesy," ch. i. 1, 3.

Victorinus—see Intro., § 2, b, No. (23)—applies this verse to St. John's return personally, on the death of Domitian, from Patmos to Ephesus, and there publishing the Apocalypse. Many ancient writers—Arethas, Eucumenius (ap. Cramer, Catena), Primasius, Beda, &c.—take the word "again," as referring to the subsequent composition of St. John's Gospel. Mede understands, "to repeat former utterances;"—Bengel, "to speak as did the old prophets;"—Todd, "to perform, under the New Test., as regards the Gentiles, the office which the prophets of the Old Test. had performed for Israel," cf. ch. xi. 1, 2, with Ezek. xl. 3;—Elliott explains that the Reformers were to preach, not, as before, in their papal ordination, but by Christ's commission.

concerning many peoples and nations and tongues] I.e., "In the case of," "with reference to"—the datives, as in John xii. 16, being the object of the prophecy: see on ch. xiii. 16. Ebrard, referring to Ezek. iii. 4, renders, as does the A. V., "before" (but cf. Acts xxv. 26; xxvi. 2, where the prep. governs the genitive).

and kings.] Bishop Wordsworth considers that the commission now given to "prophesy" has been executed in ch. xi.-xvii.; and he compares the repetition here of kings, peoples, &c., with ch. xvii. 12, 15. Hengst. translates "peoples and nations and tongues, and many kings"—"by the mention of many kings we are taken out of the relations of the Seer's own time, in which the Christian Church had to do with only one king, the Roman Emperor."

The new commission now conferred, notes Stuart, shows that the Vision of the Sealed Book is closed; and that St. John needed new directions for the future: when the seventh Trumpet shall have sounded his task will still proceed, the scene and persons being changed. According to Renan, the first six Seals and Trumpets refer to events already past when the author wrote. The Apocalyptic drama was indeed over; but in order to prolong his Book, St. John gives himself a new prophetic mission; and what follows relates, for the most part, to the future (p. 400).

The present verse, taken in connexion with John xxi. 22, 23, has received a strange interpretation from some early writers,—e.g. Arethas and Eucumenius (ap. Cramer, Catena), and Ephraim of Antioch (ap. Photius, Cod. 219),—viz. that St. John still survives, and that he will reappear with Enoch and Elijah, in the days of Antichrist.

The first of the two episodes—intended, like the two in ch. vii., for the support and consolation of the Church—ends here on the eve of the seventh Trumpet, as there on the eve of the seventh Seal. The presence of the "mighty Angel" of ver. 1, who pauses to announce (vv. 6, 7) that the delay spoken of in ch. vi. 11 was about to close, and that the great and final catastrophe was soon to be accomplished, is heralded by the Thunders which are the usual prelude of the Divine judgments—see ch. viii. 5; xi. 19; xvi. 18. The command not to write what the Thunder-Voices had proclaimed may, like the silence as to the judgments under the seventh Trumpet (ch. xi. 15-19), signify a merciful reserve—a tender regard to human fears—when declaring the Divine wrath: at all events, no information is given in either case as to the events of the Great Day. The announcement of vv. 6, 7, is followed by the delivery of the new commission to St. John to "prophecy again;" and this commission—"the mystery of God" having been fulfilled under the seventh Trumpet—naturally relates to that part of the Apocalypse which begins at ch. xii.

From this point begin Mede's "Synchronisms"—see Introd., § 12, (2).

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. X.

NOTE A ON VER. 2—THE WORD βιβλαρίδιον.

The word βιβλίον, τό, is a dim. from βιβλος, ἡ (see ch. i. 11; iii. 5; cf. Matt. i. 1; Luke iv. 17), the inner bark of the papyrus (βύβλος);—the paper made of this bark. βιβλίς, ἡ = βιβλίον, a cord of βύβλος. βιβλίδιον, τό, is a dim. from βιβλίς. βιβλιδάριον, τό, a second dim. of βιβλίς, —Arist. Fr. 596—see Liddell and Scott. "Among the diminutives of the N. T., writes Winer (s. 87), βιβλαρίδιον is deserving of remark; formed first from βιβλάριον, which Pollux quotes, instead of the older forms βιβλίδιον, and βιβλιδάριον (as ματιδάριον from ματιδίων). Lob. Patbol. 281."

This form is not found in profane writers.

CHAPTER XI.

3 The two witnesses prophecy. 6 They have power to shut heaven, that it rain not. 7 The beast shall fight against them, and kill them. 8 They lie unburied, 11 and after three days and a half rise again. 14 The second woe is past. 15 The seventh trumpet soundeth.

AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and

[Ver. 1 om. καὶ ὁ ἄγγελος εἰστῆκε. — ἔγειρε. Ver. 2 ἔξωθεν (twice, in place of ἔσωθεν and ἔξω). — καὶ δύο [N, P om. καί]. Ver. 4 καὶ αἱ δ. λ. — τοῦ κυρίου. — ἐστῶτες. Ver. 5 θίλει. — θελήσῃ. Ver. 6 τὴν ἔξουσ. — om. ἐν. — τὰς ἡμέρας. — ἐν πάσῃ πλ. Ver. 7 [After τὸ θηρίον A inserts τὸ τέταρτον]. Ver. 8 τὸ πῶμα. — τῆς πόλεως. — ὁ κύρ. αὐτῶν. Ver. 9 βλέπουσιν. — τὸ πῶμα. — ἀφίουσιν. — μνήμα. Ver. 10 χαίρουσιν. — εὐφραίνονται. Ver. 11 εἰς αὐτοὺς [so N, B — cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 10; — A reads ἐν αὐτοῖς, — C, P, 1 read αὐτοῖς]. — ἐπέπεσεν. Ver. 12 [N, B read ἤκουσα]. Ver. 15 ἐγένετο ἡ βασιλεία. Ver. 16 om. the 2nd καί. Ver. 17 om. καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος. — [N, C read καὶ ὅτι εἰληφ., — A, B, P om. καί]. Ver. 18 τοὺς μικροὺς κ. τ. μεγάλους. Ver. 19 ὁ ἐν τῷ, οὐρ.]

CHAP. XI. THE SECOND EPISODE (1-13).

The second of the two episodes, separating the sixth and seventh Trumpets, and intended to support and console the Church under the calamities about to befall the world, is contained in ch. xi. 1-13. St. John, having taken rank after his new consecration (ch. x. 11) among the Prophets of the former Covenant, now proceeds to perform a symbolic action such as we read of in their case—see Isai. xx. 2; Jer. xix. 1. Preparation is also made for that change in the character of the Apocalyptic announcements which we notice after the end of this chapter. We are now introduced to symbolism of a type different from that heretofore employed:—we read (ver. 2) of "the Holy City" the City of God, the Church, in contrast to "the Great City" (ver. 8; cf. ch. xiv. 8; xvii. 5; xviii. 10), which is the emblem of the World (cf. rv. 9, 10);—we read the mysterious description of "the Two Witnesses" which exhibits the history of the Church in the world;—we have also, presented by anticipation in ver. 7, the Beast from the Abyss, who fills so large a space in the Visions that follow.

Alford considers that this passage, rv. 1-13, is a compendious summary of the prophecies which follow, "for it introduces by anticipation their dramatis personæ."

Interpretations:—I. On the "Preterist" scheme Döllinger and Alford agree in distinguishing "the Holy City" from "the Great City,"—Döllinger understanding by "the Great City" the pagan Roman Empire;—Alford understanding "Rome pagan and papal, but principally papal." According to Stuart, "the symbolic transaction" of rv. 1, 2 denotes "the preservation of all which was fundamental and essential in the ancient [Jewish] religion, notwithstanding the destruction of all that was external in respect to the Temple, the City, and the ancient people of God"; and the mention of the Two Witnesses means that faithful Christian teachers were to proclaim the angel stood, saying, Rise, and the altar, and them that worship measure the temple of God, and therein.

the Gospel to the Jews, during the invasion of Judæa and the siege of Jerusalem, while the Jews, by destroying them, would bring upon themselves an awful doom. Dürstendieck, on an opposite principle, understands the whole passage (vv. 1-13) literally. He identifies the phrases "Holy City" and "Great City,"—both of them denoting the literal Jerusalem destroyed by the Romans,—and he accounts for the variation between this description and our Lord's prediction in Matt. xxiv.; Luke xxi. 20-24 by saying that our Lord announces the definite fact of the destruction of the City, while St. John envelops the details in symbolism. This passage, as well as ch. xiii., and ch. xvii., Dürstendieck (Bibl. u., s. 51) regards as furnishing "direct chronological testimony" that when the prophecy was written the destruction of the Holy City had not as yet come to pass; and this he infers from a comparison of vv. 2, 8, with St. Luke xxi. 24. (But see Intro. § 4, b; together with the notes on ver. 2, and on chapters xiii. and xvii.)

For the interpretation of the Rationalistic "Preterists" see on ver. 1.

II. On the "Futurist" scheme, De Burgh interprets literally:—"The City" (vv. 2, 8) is the literal Jerusalem; but all is to be referred to the future, and to the Jewish people which is hereafter to be again subjected to the Gentiles. To Israel are to be sent two literal prophets, Moses and Elijah: these are to be put to death by Antichrist; and his doom, intimated in ver. 13, is followed "quickly" by the seventh Trumpet with which the judgment of the Jews is ended, and the judgment of the Gentiles—i.e., of apostate Christendom—follows, at the time of the Lord's Coming. Similarly, Todd refers to the future when Jerusalem shall be inhabited again, the Temple rebuilt, and all once more destroyed by the Gentiles whose power in the "Holy City," or the duration of Antichrist's dominion, is to be 1260 days, during which time the two (literal) Witnesses are to prophesy. See also on ch. xvii. 16 the aspect of this interpretation given by Godet.

III. On the "Historical" scheme, Bishop Newton, Elliott, &c., refer this episode to the Reformation and the causes which led to it—among which are reckoned the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, and the effect of this event on the revival of learning in the West. See on ch. ix., where the interpretations of the fifth and sixth Trumpets supply the points of connexion.

IV. Interpreting "Allegorically," Wordsworth understands this passage as signifying the word of God which measures the Church's faith (vv. 1, 2); from which the transition (vv. 3-13) is easy to the Old and New Testaments—i.e., the Two Witnesses by which the Holy Ghost gives light to the Church. Hengst. divides this section into two, (1) vv. 1, 2 give the promise that the faith of the elect shall not expire; (2) vv. 3-13 certify the continuance of the office of witnessing:—the full import is given in the Lord's words, Matt. xxiv. 9-13.

I. Williams sees here a recapitulation of the past:—In the sixth Trumpet the nations proceed against the Holy City for its idolatry, and here "the Holy City" is trodden under foot: in fact the same thing which was before represented—"the Church of God possessed by the world"—is seen over again in deeper insight and knowledge (p. 183). Ribera, Viegas, Bossuet, Stern, note that the New Test. (cf. ch. iii. 12; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 21, 22; 1 Tim. iii. 15) regards the Temple as the type of the Church: and they see here in "the Temple" with its worshippers the true members of the Church; in "the Court" without, weak and wavering members who fall away under Antichrist; while the Church itself extends through the conversion of the heathen and the Jews owing to the preaching of the "Two Witnesses."

Mede, who has divided the entire of the Revelation into three chief parts,—(1) The Seven Epistles, beginning at ch. i. 10; (2) The Sealed Book, beginning at ch. iv. 1; (3) The Little Book, beginning at ch. x. 8,—regards ch. xi. as containing the first Vision of the Little Book, and as embracing the whole course of Apocalyptic time from the beginning to the end (p. 491). This result depends on his method of "Synchronisms"—see Intro. § 12, (2).

THE MEASURING OF THE TEMPLE (1-2).

1. And there was given me. It is not said by whom—cf. ch. vi. 11; viii. 2; and see ver. 3. In the parallel Visions ch. xxi. 15: Ezek. xl. 3 the reed is in the Angel's hand.

a reed like unto a rod.] Large as a staff—see ch. ii. 27; Matt. x. 10; cf. 1 Cor. iv. 21. Words. takes the reed (καλαμος) to be "the Hebrew kaneh," whence the word canon is derived (see Ezek. xl. 3, LXX.: in Zech. ii. 1 it is "a measuring line"); and he explains it to mean "the Canon of Scripture." [The word, however, here is not canon which is used as a measure or limit in 2 Cor. x. 13, 15, 16; and ethically to denote "a rule" in Gal. vi. 16].

The "reed," notes Elliott, is a type of the outward authority to preach given to the fathers of the Reformation by the Elector John.

saying,] Or [and] one said.] (Omit the words "and the angel stood"—see vv. ll.) The participle in the nom. is out of construction, cf. ch. iv. 1; and hence Bengel follows Andreas in taking the "reed" to be the speaker—Andreas explaining allegorically; Bengel referring "by metonymy" to the giver.

Rise, and measure] See vv. ll.; i. e., "Up and measure," cf. John v. 8. The mention of worshippers proves that the measuring is symbolical. To "measure" (cf. ch. xxi. 15) is to separate for sacred purposes, see Ezek. xl. 3, and the notes on Ezek. xl.—xliii.: what is excluded from the measurement is, accordingly, more or less mingled with evil. Hence, in this place, what is measured—the true believer typified—is to be exempted from the judgments in which what is not measured (ver. 2) is involved: cf. Num. xxxv. 5; 2 Sam. viii. 2, and the "Sealing" in ch. vii., which is a figure corresponding to "measuring." Differently:—(1) Alf. understands the taking the dimensions of that which is to be measured, as in ch. xxi. 15; so that the servants of God may be thus distinguished from those who have the mark of the Beast. (2) To measure is said to denote "to destroy"—see 2 Kings xxi. 13; Isai. xxxiv. 11; Lam. ii. 8; Amos vii. 7-9. (3) It denotes "to rebuild," Ezek. xl., whether literally in the future, or allegorically by the restoration of the true Church.

the temple of God.] The Naos, or Sanctuary, including the Holy place and the Holy of Holies as distinguished from the Hieron—the Temple-court, the whole compass of the sacred enclosure. Hieron, not found in the Apoc., occurs eleven times in the Fourth Gospel, e.g. John ii. 14 (see on ch. iii. 12). De Wette notes that St. John cannot conceive a kingdom of Christ upon earth without a Temple: it is not so in the heavenly Jerusalem, ch. xxi. 22. "The Temple of God," notes Words., is always the Church in the Apoc.—see ch. iii. 12; vii. 15; &c. Cf. the reference to the Temple in ver. 19.

and the altar.] The Altar of Incense, "the Golden Altar" of Ex. xxx. 3; Num. iv. 11, which alone was within the Naos—see on ch. viii. 3. Hengst. (so too Grotius, Vittr.) takes it to be the Altar of Burnt offering in the outer Court, "the real place of resort of the people," but here transferred to the Sanctuary, the ideal dwelling of the people; and Burger agrees, arguing from the absence here of the epithet "golden," which is found in ch. viii. 3; ix. 13.

and them that worship therein.] Viz. in the Naos, to which now not the priests alone, but all Christians have admission. Vitringa explains, "those who worship at the Altar" (apud illud, i. e., as above, the Altar of Burnt offering); protection being thus secured for the true worshippers (cf. ch. vii.), the "living stones" of the true Temple—see 1 Cor. iii. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 16. Godet (see on ch. x. 8) takes those who worship at the Altar to be the body of faithful Jews when Antichrist, in the last days, reigns in Jerusalem:—see on ch. xvii. 16. Bisping understands generally believing Israelites, as distinguished from Judaism hostile to Christ, on which the judgment is now about to fall.

On the other hand, Diüsterdieck understands the literal Temple and Altar at Jerusalem: the measuring of the worshippers signifies their preservation during the approaching overthrow of Israel—St. John "idealizing" (not "allegorizing") in his use of Jewish symbols. In this result are expressed the principles of modern rationalistic exegesis as to the date and meaning of this Book (see Introd. § 4, b.). The literal Temple is assumed to be still standing, and the Apocalypse, accordingly, to have been written not under Domitian but before the City was taken by Titus:—the patriotic feelings of the Seer impel him to give up only the outer Court (ver. 2) and a tenth part of the City (ver. 13) to destruction. To foretell the deliverance of the City to the Gentiles was, writes Renan, in the first months of the year 69 no great exercise of the power of prophesying ("il ne fallait pas un grand effort prophétique"—p. 400). Another writer of the same school, Krenkel (l.c. s. 71), observes: "The author expresses as definitely as possible the expectation that the Roman besieging host will certainly destroy the City, but spare the Temple." And Volkmar: "Since the Seer expects the deliverance of the Temple, he could have known nothing of the predictions in Mark xiii.; Luke xxi.; Matt. xxiv. This increases the probability that these discourses in the Gospels were composed post eventum." To all this Reuss adds: "Our text declares in the most positive manner that the Temple will not be injured."

In reply to such conclusions one may fairly ask,—If St. John had here predicted the preservation of the Temple which, as all the world knew, was destroyed by Titus, how can the acceptance be explained of the Apocalypse as inspired Scripture during the first and second centuries? (See below on ver. 2.)

For the opinion of other "Preterists," see the note on ver. 2; and note A at the end of this chapter.

2 But the court which is without the temple ¹leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gen-

¹Gr. cast out.

2. And the court which is without the temple] (See vv. 11. The codex of Erasmus reads "within;" and so Luther rendered "den innern Chor des Tempels"). The "Temple" is Naos as before. There is no need (with Mede, Vitruvius, Ewald, Züllig) to distinguish between an "inner" and an "outer" Court (1 Kings vi. 36; Ezek. xli. 1, 21): nothing is said here of any such distinction (cf. note A at the end of Ezek. xlii.);—what is here meant is every part of the Hieron (see on ver. 1) except the Naos. Mede distinguishes between an (assumed) "inner Court," or the primitive state of the Church, before idolatry pervaded it; and the "outer Court," or the Church after it became idolatrous during the apostasy of the 42 months. Stuart argues for this distinction between an "inner" Court comprising the Naos, and an "outer" Court, by referring to Ezek. xl. 17, 19—but see the notes on these verses.

leave out.] Gr. cast out, "exclude from thy measurement"—an expression involving the idea of rejection. Or leave without, see vv. 11. It is emphatically added—and measure it not.] Include it not in the symbolic act which is to guard and preserve the Sanctuary and thus, in a figure, ensure the safety of the Church of God from the assaults of the world.

for it was given] Or for it hath been given. The natural force of the aorist is that it had actually been given over (ἰδούθη) "unto the Gentiles" (see Luke xxi. 20–24) when St. John wrote. St. John is referring to the Temple already destroyed; just as in ch. xii. 5 he refers to the birth of Christ which was likewise past.

Düsterdieck explains 'already given over in the Divine counsels,' 'by a Divine decree;' and this he supports by a reference to the future tense that follows. Bleek, who also places the date of the Apoc. before the destruction of the Temple, concludes that the Sanctuary and Altar of Incense only are to be under God's care during the siege, not the Court and Altar of Sacrifice—St. John thus indicating that, under the new Covenant, not bloody victims but the prayers of the devout, of which the Altar of Incense was the symbol, are pleasing to God. So the "Preterists." Other writers—"Futurists," who in like manner understand the literal Jerusalem (e.g. Todd, De Burgh)—refer this passage to the time of the Lord's Second Advent, the measuring of the Temple denoting its restoration, after which the Holy tiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

City is to be once more trodden under foot by the Gentiles. In opposition to this conclusion of the "Futurists," the orthodox "Preterists" take the passage to have been fulfilled in the early days of the Church; e.g. Bossuet, in the persecution of Diocletian;—and Hammond, in the rebuilding of Jerusalem by Hadrian, and his setting up heathen worship there.

Many writers of the "Historical" school (Vitruvius, Bishop Newton, Faber, Elliott) suppose the prophecy to denote the separation of the Reformed from the corrupt portion of the Church in Cent. xvi.

Godet (see on ch. x. 8) takes the Court trodden down by the Gentiles to be the Jewish nation unfaithful to their ancient Law. See Note A at the end of this chapter.

The "First Temple," according to Sir I. Newton (i.e., p. 467), was "illuminated by the Lamps of the Seven Churches." This is now demolished; and a new Temple is built for those who will not worship the Beast (ch. xiii.)—namely, the 144,000 who are styled in this chapter the "Two Witnesses." The number two he derives from the "Two Wings" of the "Great Eagle" (ch. xii. 14), and it is again represented by the "Two Candlesticks" in ver. 4.

unto the nations.] I.e., the enemies of Christ,—Gentiles as opposed to Jews who throughout the Apoc. denote true believers, see ch. ii. 9; iii. 9. The overflowing of the Church (so far as it had become corrupt) by the world is here indicated; and this is symbolized by the fact, already consummated, of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus.

and the holy city shall they tread under foot] See Luke xxi. 24. Jerusalem is styled "the Holy City" in ch. xxi. 2, 10; xxii. 19; Neh. xi. 1, 18; Isai. xlvi. 2; lii. 1; Matt. iv. 5; xxvii. 53. In the Apoc.—as in Gal. iv. 26; Heb. xii. 22—Jerusalem is the symbol of the Church in her collective and diffusive character. The measuring "reed," like the "plumb-line" in Amos vii. 7, sets apart the true Israelites from those who are like "beaten men and publicans" (Words.); and the City now trodden down includes the entire Temple (Hieron), except the Sanctuary (Naos) marked out as still God's dwelling place. "The knowledge of the Church as it came from heaven was sweet as the Angels' song that announced it at Bethlehem; but . . . bitter as the roll of Ezekiel is the history of its reception among men. This is now first shown in the measuring of the Temple"—I. Williams, p. 183.

forty and two months.] Note the insertion of kai—as in John ii. 20; v. 5—though the larger number precedes. According to usage the copulative is inserted only when the smaller number precedes, e.g. ch. iv. 4; vii. 4; xix. 4; John xxi. 11: cf. Winer (§ 37, 4);—see vv. 11.

This period of prophetic time almost all commentators assume to be represented under three forms in the Apocalypse:—(1) here and in ch. xiii. 5 as 42 months;—(2) as 1260 days (= 42 × 30) in ver. 3 and in ch. xii. 6;—(3) as “a time (or year, καὶρός) and times and half a time” (= 3 × 360 + 180 = 1260 days) in ch. xii. 14 (cf. ver. 6), and see Dan. vii. 25; xii. 7. The “Year-day” theory takes the 42 months or 3½ times to be equal to 1260 years: see Introd. § 11, b. 11., and note B at the end of this chapter.

According to Andreas (l.c., p. 58) the forty-two months denote the shortness of the time.

Joachim of Floris († 1202) makes the 1260 days to be the “World-age” of God the Son—which it exceeds by 260 years: he argues from the 42 generations in St. Matthew’s genealogy, each of which he counts as 30 years.

Among those who interpret the period of 42 months literally is Dionysius of Alexandria, who referred it to the persecution under the Emperor Valerian (A.D. 253–260), which lasted three years and a half (Euseb. H. E., vii. 10). Coming to modern times, Stuart writes: “It is certain that the invasion of the Romans lasted just about the length of the period named until Jerusalem was taken. . . . This is a natural, simple, and easy method of interpretation to say the least.” So the rationalistic school generally. This is also the interpretation of Mr. F. D. Maurice (l.c., p. 190).

[It may be well to state here the conclusion of St. Augustine as to these measures of time: “Tempus quippe, et tempora, et dimidium temporis, annum unum esse, et duos, et dimidium: ac per hoc, tres annos et semissem, etiam numero dierum posterius posito, dilucescit; aliquando in Scripturis et mensium numero declaratur.”—De Civ. Dei, xx. 23].

On the identity of these three designations of time, Mede (l.c., pp. 419, 481, 597) founds his first “Synchronism” (viz. (1) The Woman, ch. xii. 1, 14; (2) The Beast from the Sea, ch. xiii. 1, 5; (3) ch. xi. 2; (4) ch. xi. 3); and he explains why the profanation by the Gentiles is measured by months, and the preaching of the Two Witnesses by days, because the moon presiding over months is the symbol of idolatry and darkness, the light of day denoting truth. I. Williams also suggests that the duration of evil is expressed by months, that of good by days,—and so here in two successive verses (p. 187).

The question of the Apocalyptic numbers

has been considered in the Introd., § 11, b. It is there contended that the numbers in this Book properly belong to the province not of chronology but of symbolism. That periods of definite time are not intended here seems, as has been often observed, to follow of itself from the variety in the forms of expression; while the recurrence of the same extent of duration in all three, indicates that the events, to which these periods are assigned, are contemporaneous. In all three cases we have “the broken week” of years—half the mystic “week” of Dan. ix. 27, to which Daniel himself points in ch. vii. 25—the time, in short, in which the power that resists all that is of God, the “mouth speaking great things” (Dan. vii. 8; see Rev. xiii. 5) “shall wear out the saints of the Most High” (Dan. vii. 25); and this, it is submitted, is precisely that course of events with which the present verse is concerned. Whether the time be expressed by years, months, or days, all intimates a breaking off, as it were, of time—like the half-hour space of silence in ch. viii. 1. The days “are shortened” for the elect’s sake, Matt. xxiv. 22. Among the Jews this period of 42 months was a chronological expression significant of a time of suffering:—e.g. the time of famine in the days of Elijah (Luke iv. 25); or the desolation of Jerusalem by Antiochus Epiphanes, Dan. xii. 7; 1 Macc. i. (cf. Vitruv., pp. 449, 463):—“The waste of sacred things by Antiochus [Epiphanes] lasting for three years and a half [Joseph. Antt., xi. i. 5], the Jews retained that very number as famous, inasmuch as they often made use of it when they would express anything very sad and afflictive” (Lightfoot, Chronogr. Inquiry, vi. 4, quoted by Words.). Auberlen observes of the three and a half years that “this number does not, like Ten, designate the power of the world in its fulness, but a power opposed to the Divine (which unfolds itself in the number Seven), yet broken in itself, and whose highest triumph is at the same time its defeat. For immediately after the three and a half times, judgment falls on the victorious powers of the world, see Dan. vii. 25, 26” (p. 137). And thus, as we were directed above, by the use of the aorist, “it was given” to an historical foundation for this symbolism,—viz., to the destruction of the Temple by Titus,—so, counting from that event, the mystic 42 months extend to the close of the Church’s conflict with the World-power, and the judgment on Antichrist, and the final victory of Christ. It should be noted, too, that this result is not obscurely indicated in our Lord’s words: “Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times (καιροί) of the Gentiles be fulfilled” (Luke xxi. 24)—with which passage the language of the present verse

Or, I will give unto my two witnesses

3 And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. ^{that they may pro-}phesy.

agrees in a remarkable manner. Ebrard, with whom Auberlen agrees as to this "church-historical period" of the 42 months, makes the close of the period to be the conversion and return of the Jews to Palestine (Zech. xii. 4, 6). See also Burger quoted on ch. xii. 6.

On the question "Are these three periods successive or contemporaneous?" see Note D on ch. xiii. 5, and Note B at the end of this chapter.

THE TWO WITNESSES (3-12).

3. And I will give unto] The object of the verb is not introduced either directly, or in the form of an infinitive as in ch. vi. 4; vii. 2; but, according to a Hebrew idiom (cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 26), it is supplied by the independent clause which follows, "and they shall prophesy." It is not necessary to supply such an accus. as "power" (A. V. and De Wette); or "constancy and wisdom" (De Lyra, C. à Lapide); or "the Holy City" ("dabo illam," as Beza, contrary to the context). The speaker is the "voice from heaven" (ch. x. 4, 8), in the name of Christ. Afterwards (perhaps in ver. 4, certainly in ver. 8), the Angel of ver. 1, or St. John himself, is the speaker. In ver. 11, where the prediction passes into narrative, St. John continues the description. Some consider that it is Christ Himself who now speaks: they argue from the word "my," and from the expression "their Lord," in ver. 8.

my two witnesses.] Gr. "the two Witnesses of me:"—as to the emphatic article see on ver. 4.

In the previous verses has been represented the ordinary condition of the Church in the world (Matt. xiii. 47, 48) throughout the Christian period. Together with the faithful few, the "seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal" (1 Kings xix. 18), who are in every age marked out by the Divine measuring reed, and who are here symbolized by the Sanctuary and the Altar,—is included the diffusive body of professing Christians, lukewarm like Laodicea (ch. iii. 15-19), whose faith is assailed by the evil World-power, a power ever hostile to the Church, and which from time to time tramples upon her. Under this latter aspect, the Church is symbolized by "the Court without the Temple" which God has not measured. She is still "the Holy City" which "the Nations," the enemies of Christ, "tread under foot"; and the questions arise, 'How is the Church under her former aspect to be preserved holy?' and, 'How under her latter aspect can the light of true faith be preserved from extinction within her borders?' The answers seem to be supplied by that most obscure passage (vv. 3-13) on which we now enter. The key-note of the Apocalypse, as indeed of all St. John's writings (John i. 7; 1 John v. 9, 10), is "the Witness of Jesus"—"the testimony to be borne to Him" (see ch. i. 9; vi. 9; xii. 11, 17; xx. 4); for it is added expressly in ch. xix. 10 that "the Witness of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy."

As there are here "Two Witnesses" on the side of God, so in ch. xiii. there are two Beasts on the side of Satan—one representing the physical World-power, the other the intellectual World-power. This analogy may, perhaps, suggest that the "Two Witnesses" are designed to symbolize, one of them, the Church's outward organization and polity, the other, her spiritual and evangelical teaching.

As a reason for taking this verse to be symbolical, Ebrard notes that our Lord laid stress on His having "Witnesses" (John v. 31, 39; xv. 26): this "witness," it is here promised, will still be maintained; and accordingly the testimony to be borne is personified as "My two Witnesses," who are to "prophesy" throughout the mystic period (42 months, or 1260 days) of the Church's conflict with the World-power (cf. the Riders in the Seal-Visions, ch. vi.).

Such explanations of the "Two Witnesses" as the Law and the Gospel,—or the Old and the New Testament,—or the two Sacraments, are of course included under the symbolical system of interpretation.

Mede and Hengst. take the "Witnesses" to be real persons. They observe that Christ always sent forth His disciples two and two together—as in earlier times Moses and Aaron were sent, and Joshua and Caleb, and Elijah and Elisha, and Zerubbabel and Joshua, and Haggai and Zechariah. Burger notes that what Haggai and Zechariah (by whom he understands "the two Olive Trees" of ver. 4 as explained in Zech. iv. 14) were once to the Jews, so will the "Two Witnesses" be to the Church of the last days. As the ground of this form of personification, numerous expositors, ancient and modern, have pointed to the "Two Witnesses" "who appeared in glory," and whom St. John himself beheld on the mountain of Transfiguration (Luke ix. 28-31)—Moses and Elijah, the Law-giver and the Prophet of the Old Test.; and it may be remarked that in Mal. iv. 4, 5, Moses as the "servant" of God is "the prophet" named together with Elijah. Many historical confirmations are supplied by the de-

Zech. 4.
v. 11, 14.

4 These are the ^btwo olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth,

5 And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if scription which follows. That Moses satisfies this explanation, is illustrated by Deut. xviii. 15. Mr. Sanday (Authorship of the Fourth Gospel, p. 30), on John i. 21, "Art thou Elijah? Art thou the Prophet?" refers to Rev. xi. 3-12, adding: "We have the Two Witnesses again, representing Moses and Elias, whose martyrdom is to be the beginning of the end." The "martyrdom" of the Witnesses would thus be the temporary obscuration of faithful testimony.

Enoch and Elijah are suggested by many of the ancient writers, and numerous other explanations have been offered:—for some account of these see note E on verse 3; and also Maldonatus on Matt. xvii. If the "Witnesses" are to be identified with actual persons spoken of in the Old Test., this can only be in the sense in which John the Baptist was Elijah, Luke i. 17; Matt. xvii. 10-13. Compare too the words of Christ in Matt. xi. 14 respecting John, "This is Elijah which is to come" (ὁ μέλλων ἔρχεσθαι).

Alford pronounces that "No solution has ever been given of this portion of the prophecy."

and they shall prophesy] Like the old prophets, proclaiming God's judgments (see ver. 5), and preaching repentance, and especially bearing testimony to Christ (see ch. xix. 10). Some—e. g. Alford—understand, as in ch. x. 11; 1 Pet. i. 10; Jude 4, the simple announcement of the future; but this is not consistent with their office as "Witnesses."

a thousand two hundred [and] threescore days,] I. e., during the 42 months.

Bisping and Burger (see above on ver. 2) argue that these 1260 days are not identical with the 42 months; but that the "Witnesses" prophesy during the first half of the last World-week, while the 42 months constitute the second half. Düsterd. thinks that the use of "days," intimates that the "Witnesses" are to prophesy daily during this whole period of a literal 3½ years. Elliott notes:—"My Witnesses," so-called,—two in number, but sufficient, though few; for "the testimony of two men is true" (John viii. 17); and so Stuart, vol. ii. p. 226. They are the line of Witnesses for Christ, adds Elliott, such as the "Magdeburg Centuriators," Foxe's "Martyrology," &c., from the early commencement of the Apostasy, through the dark ages of the Papal Antichrist, for 1260 years: they are ever in a state of mourning, for the corruptions against which they cry.

clotbed in sackcloth.] As preachers of repentance (cf. Isai. xxii. 12; Jer. iv. 8; Jonah iii. 5; Matt. xi. 21). Wordsworth considers that the ignominious treatment which the Word of God is to receive is represented by the mournful garb of the "Witnesses." Note the points of resemblance to the history of Elijah:—the sackcloth (2 Kings i. 8), and the garb of his antitype the Baptist (Matt. iii. 4);—the 3½ years of the famine predicted by him (1 Kings xvii. 1; Luke iv. 25; James v. 17);—the facts mentioned in vv. 5, 6.

4. These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks,] Gr. lampstands. See vv. 11. The articles, as in ver. 3, refer, not to well-known persons, but to well-known types. See Zech. iv., which is the source of this description, and where (ver. 14) Zerubbabel the anointed Ruler, and Joshua the anointed Priest (Zech. iii. 1) are the persons typified. This verse (cf. Ebrard in loc.) supplies two additional types, to which "the Two Witnesses" correspond. Moses the Law-giver, and Zerubbabel the Ruler, represent the Law; Elijah the Prophet, and Joshua the High Priest, represent the Gospel:—"They bear," notes Hengst., "the name of lamps and of olive-trees, as the concentration of the light which belongs to the Church of God, and as an instrument of Divine grace for her." The design of the reference here is, doubtless, to enforce the truth stated in Zech. iv. 6; viz. that the purpose of that Vision was to encourage Zerubbabel not to trust in the arm of flesh, but in the Spirit of Jehovah—a truth entirely in accordance with the present context (see the notes on Zech. iv.). In Zech. iv. 2 but one Candlestick with seven Lamps is spoken of; and the explanation of the Lamps given by Zechariah in ver. 10, is given more fully by St. John in Rev. iv. 5; v. 6. If we bear in mind that St. John intentionally departs from the symbolism of Zechariah by identifying the "Two Witnesses" with the "two Candlesticks," we avoid the difficulties which many writers evidently feel. For instance:—

According to Sir I. Newton (see on ver. 2), of the Seven Churches of Asia Minor, five "were found faulty; . . . the other two [Smyrna and Philadelphia] were without fault; and so their 'Candlesticks' were fit to be placed in the Second Temple . . . The 'Two Witnesses' are not new churches: they are the posterity of the primitive Church, the posterity of the 'Two Wings' of the Eagle [ch. xii. 14] . . . When the 'First Temple' was destroyed, and a new one built for them any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

6 These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, who worship in the Inward Court, Two of the Seven Candlesticks were placed in the New Temple" (l.c., p. 467).

I. Williams suggests that by the "two Candlesticks" here in place of the one, is signified "division in the Christian Church," not only of the East from the West, but of the sections of Christendom now disunited: "The primitive martyrs, or witnesses, are the one 'man child' (ch. xii. 5), but after the Holy City is profaned they are two" (p. 194). Words. explains this variation by saying, that as the Candlestick represents the Church (see ch. i. 20) which with its Seven Lights appears before God (see ch. ii., iii.), there is but One Church of Christ, consisting of Jews and Gentiles, while in a certain sense there are two Churches. And as here the Two Candlesticks "drink in oil from the two Olive-trees, the Jewish Church, on its side, is reminded that it cannot have light without the New Testament; and the Christian Church is taught, on its side, that it cannot burn brightly without the Old."

Todd (p. 182) thinks that St. John, by "the Two Candlesticks," refers to the "two Olive Branches" of Zech. iv. 12. These are to be distinguished from the "two Olive Trees" of ver. 11 "which the Angel, by giving but one answer to the twofold question of the prophet, plainly identifies with the 'two Anointed Ones' (ver. 14);" and which, as "emptying through the two golden pipes the golden oil out of themselves," St. John may have regarded as lamps.

The freedom, however, with which St. John borrows the symbolism of former prophets (cf. ch. xiii. 2 with Dan. vii. 4-6), as well as the obvious necessity for his description here of using the number "two" throughout, renders any laboured explanation of the varied image needless.

Observe that in Jer. xi. 16; Rom. xi. 17, the "Olive-tree" stands for the Church. For the word "Candlestick" see on ch. i. 12.

which are standing before the Lord of the earth.] See vv. 11.; and cf. Zech. iv. 14. The construction of the masc. participle with the fem. article, points to the persons denoted by the symbols (cf. ver. 1, and ch. iv. 1).

Note, on the reference to the Book of Zechariah in this verse, that Zech. iii. and iv., on which the passage rests, are preceded by the words in which "the measuring" of Jerusalem is commanded (Zech. ii. 1, 2).

5. And if any man desireth to hurt them,] See vv. 11. The present tense here points to the continued enmity of the world to the Church, during the entire course of the Witnesses' testimony (cf. on ver. 7).

fire proceedeth out of their mouth,] The first token of the "Witnesses."

Take as comment: "I have put my words in thy mouth;" "Behold I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them" (Jer. i. 9; v. 14). See in ch. i. 16 a similar figure; and cf. Eccus. xlviii. 1, where Elijah is spoken of.

and devoureth their enemies:] See above, Jer. v. 14; and "I have slain them by the words of my mouth," Hos. vi. 5. History supplies the illustrations—the fire that consumed the opponents of Moses (Num. xvi. 28, 35), and that which came down at the word of Elijah (2 Kings i. 10, 12; cf. Luke ix. 54); see above on ver. 3.

and if any man shall desire to hurt them,] See vv. 11. In this change of tense the usual style is resumed.

even so must he be killed.] Namely, by fire (cf. Eccus. xlviii. 3); and according to the jus talionis, see ch. xviii. 6.

In opposition to any form of allegorical description, Alf. says: "Individuality [Personality] could not be more strongly indicated" than it is in this verse. Not so, however, as Ebrard justly notes:—St. John could not more clearly tell us that he does not mean literal persons, than by pointing in ver. 4 to Zerubbabel and Joshua, and then to Moses and Elijah, as satisfying the same figurative language:—see above on ver. 3. Bisping (s. 176) nearly agrees with Ebrard.

6. These have the power to shut the heaven,] (See vv. 11.). As Elijah did, 1 Kings xvii. 1; Eccus. xlviii. 3; and for the same space of time, Luke iv. 25; James v. 17.

The second token of the "Witnesses."

The "power to shut the heaven" Beda considers to be the "potestas clavium":—Elliott refers to Isai. v. 6, and Amos viii. 11, which he takes to mean the "shutting up of heaven"; and he recognizes in this connexion, among the line of Witnesses for Christ's truth and against the apostasy of Eastern origin, the Paulicians from Cent. vii. [who virtually held the Manichæan heresy, see Gibbon, ch. liv.; Robertson, Hist. of the Chr. Church, vol. ii. p. 164; Archbishop Trench, Medieval Church Hist., ch. xv.] who, with the Christians of Piedmont in the West, were blended together, in one line, from the and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

7 And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast end of Cent. xii., in the Waldenses;—Words.: “If any one despises them [by “them” he understands ‘the Scriptures’], . . . they can shut heaven, like Elias, and exclude all who reject them. The dews of divine grace are withheld from all who scorn them.”

during the days] (See vv. 11.). I. e., the 3½ years (Luke iv. 25; James v. 17)—the “1260 days” of ver. 3.

and they have power over the waters to turn them into blood,] As Moses did—see Ex. vii. 19. Cf. ch. vi. 8.

The third token of the “Witnesses”:—all three pointing to Moses and Elijah as representing the “Law” and the “Prophets.”

and to smite the earth with every plague,] (See vv. 11.). And not merely with the plagues with which Moses smote Egypt,—Ex. viii. 16; ix. 15; 1 Sam. iv. 8 (LXX.). On the historical foundation of the symbolism, see on vv. 3, 5, above:—“Quis non videt,” writes Maldonatus on Matt. xvii. 14, “Mosem quasi digito demonstrari?”

as often as they shall desire.] Mede (p. 483) considers that this power, once displayed in Egypt, is now to be exhibited under the Vials (ch. xvi.); and in like manner Godet considers that the judgments spoken of here and in ver. 5, as inflicted by the “Two Witnesses” preaching repentance at Jerusalem, are those of the Seven Vials described in ch. xvi. which are inflicted on the human race subjected to Antichrist. It is this, he argues, which accounts for the presence of the Beast at Jerusalem, as we read in ver. 7 (I. e., p. 311).

7. And when they shall have finished their testimony,] Viz. at the end of the 1260 days (“ἔσται with the aor. conj. for the Lat. futurus exactus, John iv. 25; xvi. 13.”—Winer, §42).

Alf. translates “When they had finished.” He objects to Mede’s interpretation “when they shall be about finishing;”—to that of Daubuz, “whilst they shall perform;”—to that of Elliott, “when they shall have completed,” not the whole course of their witness, “but any one complete delivery of it.” I. Williams translates, “when they shall be accomplishing”—i. e., while “Antichrist is throughout [the 1260 days] contending with the Two Witnesses.” Hengst. seems to give the true sense: “They shall only be overcome when they have finished their testimony, when God has no further need for their service, when their death can produce more fruit than their life. . . . What is said here of the Witnesses of Christ, was exemplified in Christ himself.”

the beast that cometh up out of the abyss] (See ch. ix. 1, 11.). The coming up of the Beast from the Abyss is twice mentioned—here and in ch. xvii. 8. The Hebrew system of the Universe included four regions, viz. heaven, earth, sea, and abyss. Satan first appears in heaven as the opponent of Christ (ch. xii. 1–5)—he has endeavoured from the very beginning to frustrate the Incarnation. This attempt having failed, the opposition of Satan is transferred to the regions of the sea and the earth (ch. xii. 12; xiii. 1, 11), and the enmity of the Beast from the sea begins with ch. xiii. 1. But the Beast is subsequently to emerge from the Abyss as the enemy of the Church of God, as he emerged from the sea; and it is by this Beast from the Abyss that the “Witnesses” are here said to be put to death. The Beast may be expected to rise from the Abyss when Satan comes out of it (see ch. xx. 1–7);—namely when Gog and Magog are to collect their hosts (ch. xx. 8), and the old Pagan principle of antipathy to the Church is to be renewed. Whether the slaughter of the “Witnesses” be or be not future,—whether they are to be personal leaders of the Church, or whether they are merely an expression of the fact that the Church, as personified in Zechariah’s prophecy, was shadowed forth by the Olive-trees which grew on each side of the Altar,—in any case, they are to make head against the Beast, who appears in this place not as the Beast from the sea, but as “the Beast from the Abyss”—from “the Abyss” as Satan’s special instrument, the revived form of the World-power.

The noun rendered “Beast” (see on ch. iv. 6) here, in ch. xiii., and in ch. xvii., has in itself an evil signification: it denotes a wild or predatory animal (cf. Acts xi. 6). This, the concrete representation of the anti-christian World-power, is first introduced in the present episode by anticipation, as Babylon is introduced in ch. xiv. 8. He appears for the first time in action in ch. xiii. 1.

Wordsworth (on ch. xvii. 3) suggests that St. John uses in the Apoc. the term (“Ἀρνίον”) denoting the Lamb as a contrast to the term (“θηρίον”) denoting the Beast; there being “an exact correspondence of syllables and accents”—see on ch. v. 6.

Some (Ebrard, Zullig) question the identity here and in ch. xvii. 8, of the “Beast from the Abyss,” with the Beast from “the sea,” ch. xiii. 1; but the article clearly indicates the identity—see on ch. xiii. 1; xvii. 3. As yet, indeed, the Beast is not described as connected with some mysterious spiritual iniquity—see ch. xiii. 11; xvi. 13; xvii. 5; but the that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and imagery of Dan. vii. is manifestly suggested by the context. Hence, doubtless, the reading of the Alexandrine MS., "the fourth Beast" (see Dan. vii. 7):—this reading, observes Renan, is explained by that of the Codex Sinaiticus, "the Beast which then cometh up;" see note C at the end of this chapter. By the present participle (τὸ ἀναβαίνον) the continuous activity of the World-power in opposition to "The Witnesses" is intimated, as in ver. 5.

Ewald (see Note C on ch. xii. 3) states that (the Arabic) Hippolytus "correctly sees here, not the locusts or their leader,—as several modern writers,—but Antichrist, to be described more accurately hereafter."

Many in recent times further regard this Beast from "the Abyss" as being the personal Antichrist, "the man of sin" of 2 Thess. ii. 3. Bisping takes him to represent "the Antinomian spirit of Judaism, which will know nothing more of Moses and the Prophets;" the "coming up out of the Abyss" signifies the devilish wickedness that shall hereafter characterize Judaism, which will not believe on Christ. He becomes at last the hellish Dragon himself who gives his power to antichristian Judaism.

shall make war with them, and overcome them, and kill them.] (For the repetition of this idea, see ch. xiii. 7; and for a different result of the conflict, see ch. xvii. 14). This is the last manifestation of unbelief. For a time, but for a short time, the World-power will extinguish the outward testimony of the Church, although "the Temple of God, and the Altar, and they that worship therein" are still preserved by the Divine care.

Mede concludes that the description of the fate of the Witnesses is taken from the narrative of the Lord's Passion.

Various interpretations:—

The Beast is the Imperial general Belisarius (De Lyra);—With Aretius, Vitr., and others, he is the Pope;—Elliott notes that the Witnesses being symbolical, the death spoken of was to be symbolical also: this prediction, he adds, can be satisfied by no period of European history other than the opening of Cent. xvi., just before the Reformation, when, as Milner writes, the Waldenses were too feeble to resist the Popedom, and the Hussites, divided among themselves, were reduced to silence;—Renan's comment is: "The Beast which ascends from the Abyss (the Roman power, or rather Nero reappearing as Antichrist) will kill them" (p. 402): it is Nero who has suggested the whole conception of the Apocalypse: "Caligula a été l'Anti-Dieu, Néron sera l'Anti-Christ. L'Apocalypse est conçue" (p. 179).

8. And their dead bodies] Gr. their dead body, and so in ver. 9—see vv. 11. The singular is used collectively—"what is fallen of them" (τὸ πτώμα, "id quod lapsus est, seu cecidit, corpus mortui, cadaver"—Grimm). Cf. Matt. xiv. 12; Mark vi. 29.

Wordsworth's explanation is: "They are two and yet one; the Old and New Test. are two, and make one Book." Bisping notes:—The type of the profanation of the Law and the Prophets; the Old Test. is "a dead letter" ("ein blosser Leichnam") for the unbelieving Jews.

[lie] in the street] Gr. And their dead body lieth on. There is no verb in the original; but the present, rather than the "shall lie" of the A. V., better suits the series of present tenses in vv. 9, 10, down to "shall send" in ver. 10;—see vv. 11. Their corpses remaining unburied on "the broad way" (as the word imports) denotes the contempt with which the Witnesses were treated. The Jews were especially careful to bury their dead (Gen. xxiii. 4; 2 Sam. xxi. 9-13; Isai. xiv. 19, 20):—for the sentiment of the heathen on this matter see Winer, R. WW. B., s. 172: and compare Hor. Od. i. 28; Sophocl., Antig., and Ajax.

[of the great city,] Observe, not "the Holy City," as in ver. 2. The phrase "the Great City" occurs eight times in this Book—here; ch. xvi. 19; xvii. 18; xviii. 10, 16, 18, 19, 21. It is never used of Jerusalem; it is not read in ch. xxi. 10. "The great" is always the epithet of Babylon—ch. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 2; cf. also Dan. iv. 27 (30). See the explanation of the Angel in ch. xvii. 18.

This result is, in effect, adopted by Vitringa, who understands the City or Empire of Rome;—by Döllinger, who understands the Empire of Rome;—by Alf., who understands "the Great City which will be the subject of God's final judgments."

Elliott, and, with variations, his school, understand Rome Papal, where the "Witnesses" were triumphed over, and where their Lord was (figuratively) crucified.

On the other hand, "the Great City," writes Todd (p. 188), "can denote Jerusalem, and Jerusalem only." So Bisping and others.

which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt.] "Spiritually," i. e., "typically," cf. 1 Cor. x. 3, 4. Auberlen, appealing to 1 Cor. ii. 7, 14, takes the word "spiritually" to cor-

Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

9 And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not respond with the word "mystery," in ch. xvii. 5 (i.e., p. 275). "The Great City" being now described as a country—"Egypt"—cannot strictly mean any city; and, being styled "Sodom," it cannot represent Jerusalem "the Holy City" (see on ver. 2). Both Sodom and Egypt are again referred to in ch. xviii. 4; and Sodom specially in ch. xix. 3. Further, Jerusalem is never called Egypt:—in Ezek. xxiii. 3, 4, it is Israel which is spoken of; and in Isai. i. 9, 10, the Jewish nation is the subject of the comparison with Sodom; cf. Ezek. xvi. 48, and see the note on Ezek. xvi. 44. The common reference to Isai. iii. 8, 9, is scarcely relevant; and the same may be said of Jer. xxiii. 14; cf. Matt. x. 6, 15.

The conclusion then is that as we read in the Apoc. of "the City of God" of which Jerusalem is the type; and of "the City of the World" of which Babylon is the type, and which is expressly styled in this Book "the Great City," we are to interpret this verse of the latter,—of Babylon,—of "the Great" World-city. This is called Egypt on account of its oppression of the people of God, and Sodom on account of its moral corruption.

Jerusalem, as described by our Lord in Luke xiii. 33, 34, has suggested a third characteristic of the World-city—a characteristic symbolized here by the putting the "Two Witnesses" to death. This thought is expressed in the words which now follow:—see the remark of Züllig quoted below.

[where also their Lord was crucified.] (See vv. 11.). And slain as well as they:—the Witnesses cannot expect any other fate than that which befell their Lord (John xv. 20).

The majority of commentators, relying upon this close of the verse, insist that Jerusalem is meant—the "Holy City" of ver. 2, now no longer "holy" after its desecration. So Hengst. and Ebrard who compare Jerusalem to Egypt, on account of the religious corruption with which it infected Israel (Ezek. xxiii. 3, 8, 27); and to Sodom, on account of its morals (Deut. xxxii. 32). We thus have "the degenerate Church;" and Hengst. goes on to explain that the word spiritually is to be supplied to the expression 'where our Lord was crucified,'—"Outwardly the Lord was crucified in the city called Jerusalem; but spiritually in the degenerate Church." Düsterd. notes that the comparison of Jerusalem to Sodom and Egypt rests simply on the fact that Sodom and Egypt resembled each other in their enmity to God and His people. Züllig, taking the "Great City" to mean Babylon, explains that not two, but three symbolic names are here given to Jerusalem, viz. Babylon, Sodom, Egypt:—the name Jerusalem, he adds, is not introduced, because the city has been desecrated, and no longer deserves the name which does not reappear until we come to "the New Jerusalem." To the same effect Auberlen. Jerusalem, representative of the Old Test. Church, has become like the godless and doomed World-city and World-power, because she rejected and crucified the Lord. So the New Test. Church is called after the World-city, Babylon, Rome, because she has forsaken Christ (p. 275). And thus, disregarding the marked distinction between "the Holy City" and "the Great City," many understand in this place Jerusalem,—which is called "spiritually," i.e., allegorically, "Sodom and Egypt;" and historically the city where Christ was crucified: see Todd quoted above. Burger leaves the question undecided.

9. And from among the peoples and tribes and tongues and nations] For the constr. cf. ch. ii. 10; v. 9; John xvi. 17; 2 John 4—see Winer, § 47, s. 328. See on ver. 10.

do [men] look upon their dead bodies] Gr. dead body:—see vv. 11.; and for the use of the present tense in prophetic narrative, cf. ch. xviii. 9, 11. "As if though silenced in death they continued Witnesses still."—I. Williams, p. 203. Understanding the literal Jerusalem, Düsterd. notes that men from all nations (ch. v. 9), Jews and Gentiles (see ver. 2), are assembled there, and behold the outrage offered to the remains of the "Witnesses."—see on ver. 8.

three days and an half] (Accus. of duration, as in ver. 3). Corresponding to the years of their ministry—the 3½ years which are equivalent to the 42 months and 1260 days in vv. 2, 3; i.e., half the mystic Seven: for "the victory of the world," notes Hengst., "is always a transitory one." "Futurists" take the 3½ days literally, e.g. Todd and De Burgh (and so Tertullian, Victorinus, Andreas, &c.): with Bengel and Ebrard they place them at the end of the world in the time of Antichrist. Ebrard adds that the duration of the punishment for treading down Jerusalem, and the duration of the tyranny of Antichrist are related as 3½ years to 3½ days (and so Vitringa). Züllig perceives an allusion to our Lord's lying three days in the grave (to the same effect Volkmar), and also to Hos. vi. 2. Bleek regards the period as "a round mystical number to denote a space of several days." Reuss, on the other hand, understands "A suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.

11 And after three days and an half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

very short space of time, according to the style of the Apocalypse"; and Stuart refers to the short time during which the bodies of the dead remain without putrefaction. Prosper, Primasius, Beda, and others explain these days as years; and, on the "Year-day" theory, Elliott understands the interval between the ninth session of the Lateran Council, May 5, 1514 (where the exclusion of heretics from burial was one of the Papal enactments confirmed), and the day of Luther's posting up his theses at Wittenberg, October 31, 1517—the interval being three years and 180 days, "precisely to a day, three and a half years." On this conclusion Alford observes that the three years from May 5, 1514, to May 5, 1517, being years of 365 days each," Elliott's "half year from May 5, 1517, to October 31 of the same year is 180, or half 360 days: i.e., wanting 2½ days of the time required according to that reckoning." Alford should have added that three civil years of 365 days (omitting bours) = 1095 days, and that the year 1516 was a leap year; consequently, instead of Elliott's 1260 days, the interval stated by him gives us $1096 + 182\frac{1}{2} = 1278\frac{1}{2}$ days—a period unknown to the prophecy: see Intro., § 11 (b), 11.

and suffer not their dead bodies to be laid in a tomb.] For the two readings here see vv. 11; and for the verb "to suffer" cf. Mark i. 34; xi. 16.

Note that in this third place, we have the plural "dead bodies"—πτῶμα.

Mede (p. 485) suggests that these beholders may be the friends of the "Witnesses;" and that they do not permit them to be buried because they are convinced that they will miraculously rise again—see ver. 11.

10. And they that dwell on the earth] The godless world—as proved by ch. vi. 10; viii. 13: see on ch. iii. 10.

rejoice over them, and make merry;] (Both verbs are in the present tense,—see vv. 11, and on ver. 8). I.e., rejoice at the outrage offered to the "Witnesses."

and they shall send gifts one to another;] A custom usual in times of festivity—cf. Neh. viii. 10, 12; Esth. ix. 19, 22.

Note the future tense—see vv. 8, 9.

tormented] Hengst. explains: "They have no weapons other than the word. Their word, weak and contemptible in itself, has ally in the hearts and consciences of those against whom it is directed." Sardis and Laodicea (ch. iii. 3, 15) had nothing of this spirit. Others (e.g. Bengel, Düsterd., Stuart, Alf.) refer this expression solely to the plagues mentioned in vv. 5, 6.

them that dwell on the earth.] Whose representatives now appear in "the Great City"—see ver. 9.

11. And after the three days and an half] Viz. those spoken of in ver. 9.

the Spirit of life] Or the breath of life: Gr., a spirit, or a breath; compare Luke viii. 55. "Spirit" in the original is indefinite:—see ch. xiii. 15; and Ezek. xxxvii. 5.

entered into them.] See vv. 11.

and they stood upon their feet;] See Ezek. xxxvii. 10 (LXX.), the language of which Vision is closely followed here—see also 2 Kings xiii. 21.

and great fear fell upon them which beheld them.] On the verb "beheld" here, and in ver. 12, see Intro. § 7, IV., (c). Compare Matt. xxvii. 54, to which place Düsterdieck justly refers.

Elliott notes:—After vain agitation to put them down, the Lutheran Reformers proclaimed that they were but the "Witnesses" of Christ risen up again; i.e., when in 1530 they united themselves at Smalcald under the name of Protestants.

12. And they heard] In support of this reading, Hengst. refers, not at all appropriately, to John v. 28. In opposition to the weight of authority, Düsterd. (so also Beng., Ewald, De Wette, Stuart, Elliott) accepts the reading "I heard," for so we find the Seer expressing himself, in ch. vi. 6; ix. 13:—if the voice, adds Düsterd., were directed to the "Witnesses" themselves the description would have been after the manner of ch. vi. 11; ix. 4.

from heaven] Elliott interprets not the heaven of the Divine presence, but the heaven of political power, to which the "Wi-

13 And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earth-quake were slain ^{1Gr. names of men.} of men seven thounesses" ascended; thus predicting the triumph in Germany and elsewhere of Protestantism, after the peace of Passau, 1552 (so Bishop Newton):—Elliott similarly takes "beaven" to mean "earth" in ch. viii. 1.

And they went up into heaven in the cloud;] Cf. 2 Kings ii. 11; Acts i. 9. The symbolism is founded on the facts of the Lord's Passion and Ascension (see on ver. 7 Mede's remark). This is indicated by the reference in ver. 8 to His Crucifixion. The Ascension, notes Hengst., is not mentioned in St. John's Gospel, yet is attested here:—cf. the "great fear," ver. 11, with Matt. xxvii. 54; and "the earthquake," ver. 13, with Matt. xxvii. 51; xxviii. 2. In confirmation of the allegorical interpretation of the "Two Witnesses,"—e. g. the Law and the Gospel,—Ebrard observes that the words ἀνάστασις and ἐγείρεσθαι are avoided in this description; and that a resurrection or ascension to heaven of two actual persons, or of the collective body of believers, before the Third Woe and the Seventh Trumpet (vv. 14, 15), would be impossible.

See Note D at the end of this chapter.

13. And in that hour] In which the "Witnesses" were glorified (ver. 12), vengeance falls on their enemies.

there was a great earthquake,] See on ch. vi. 12. Some who include this verse under the sixth Trumpet identify the time of the sixth Trumpet with that of the sixth Seal.

The earthquake synchronizes, notes Mr. Faber, with the death and ascension of the "Witnesses:" "it denotes the Revolution in England, in 1688, when the Papists were excluded from political power."—Sacred Calendar, vol. iii. p. 8. Elliott expounds it to be the mighty disruption of Saxony, Prussia, Sweden, and Denmark from the Papacy.

and the tenth part of the city fell;] I.e., "the Great City" of ver. 8. Bengel, Herder, Züllig, Bisping, &c., understand Jerusalem:—see above on ver. 8.

Carrying out his idea, Elliott writes: The Great City, including in its Empire just ten kingdoms, fell. England, one of the most notable of these kingdoms, threw off the Papal yoke.

and there were killed in the earthquake seven thousand persons:] Gr. "names of men, seven thousands." Cf. ch. iii. 4; Acts i. 15. Stuart and Alf. understand a precise statement, as from a catalogue of enrolment. Words. explains "persons known and distinguished." The idiom, however, does not seem to have any special force.

The number "seven thousand," and the mention of "the tenth part," contrasted with the fourth, and the third part of ch. vi. 8; viii. 7, lead many (Stuart, Lücke, Ewald, De Wette, Düsterd.) to understand "a comparatively small part";—Words., on the other hand, takes the 7000 to denote "a complete overthrow." Züllig and Ebrard argue that since, taken literally, the words mean the inhabitants of the destroyed "tenth part," the population of the city amounts to 70,000; but, as Ebrard adds, "since 'the city' is not a geographical locality, there is here no statistical notice," and the Vision is symbolical:—the "tenth part" refers to the division into ten kingdoms of the (fourth) World-power, over which Antichrist is to extend his rule (Dan. vii. 24; ch. xvii. 12, 13). Ebrard sees in the 7000 inhabitants of each of the ten kingdoms an antichristian imitation of the Church of God,—for seven is God's sacred number.

Mede identifies the events of this verse with what is described under the fifth Vial, ch. xvi. 10; and understands a great political commotion, when the entire City—for Rome Papal is in extent but the tenth part of Rome Pagan—is destroyed. Two destructions of Babylon are thus foretold, (1) here, and in ch. xvi. 10, of the City of Rome; (2) in ch. xviii. and ch. xix. of the citizens and Roman state, a catastrophe reserved for the last Vial. "It is a great mistake in Mede," notes I. Williams, "to suppose this fall of the tenth part of the city to be the same as that described under the fifth Vial: under the Vials there is no repentance: this is corrective. . . . The tenth is but a limited part; and that number (as well as the 7000) has about it secret intimations of good." The symbolism here he considers to be founded upon the account in 2 Kings xxiv. 16 of the leading "seven thousand men of might" captives to Babylon with Jehoiakin from Jerusalem, ten years before its destruction:—here, therefore, he adds; "the prophetic account of the spiritual Israel is clothed in the history of the national and local;" consequently, this, "the Second Woe," can never be the fulness of Woe:—"there is correction, and there is repentance" (p. 206). Ewald also sees in this "tenth" part a token of gracious mercy.

Elliott explains the Cbilas (= 1000) to mean a province; and he takes the words to signify "the seven Dutch United Provinces," which during Elizabeth's reign separated from the Papal rule. Mr. Cunningham explains the sand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

death of the 7000 by the abolition of the Monastic Orders in England; and, like Mr. Faber, he places the full accomplishment of this prophecy in 1688, when England was finally lost to Rome.

and the rest were affrighted.] The large remnant of the inhabitants of the City, including doubtless many of the heathen, are mercifully led to repentance. For an opposite effect, see ch. ix. 20, 21.

and gave glory] The token of repentance—see ch. xiv. 7; xvi. 9; cf. Josh. vii. 19; Jer. xiii. 16.

to the God of heaven.] A title found, in the New Test., only here and in ch. xvi. 11: in both places it is used in contrast to the gods of the heathen. De Wette notes that the expression is taken from the later books of the Old Test.—Ezra i. 2; Neh. i. 4; Dan. ii. 18.

Todd observes: "No circumstance in the prophecy appears to have created more difficulty to the historical commentators than this that the remnant who had escaped the earthquake 'gave glory to the God of heaven.' Bishop Newton considers it unfulfilled. Mr. Faber thinks that they who gave glory to God were the Protestants; Mr. Cunningham, the Papists."—p. 190. Elliott explains that "the remnant, or Papists, whether in England, Holland, or Germany, were affrighted; and the Witnesses gave glory to the God of heaven."

The interpretation given by Godet rests on his belief that Antichrist will return from Rome, which he has destroyed (see on ch. xvii. 16), and will fix his residence at Jerusalem: "The remnant of the people [of Israel restored by Antichrist to their own land], and in particular they who have been specially reserved [see on ch. vii. 4] for these supreme moments, give glory to God, and are converted to Him. Thus we shall find in ch. xiv. the 144,000 surrounding the Lamb, between the moment of the coming of Antichrist, and that of his destruction" (l.c., p. 357). It is thus assumed that a double Israel, carnal and spiritual, is to be re-established as a Nation; with "the Great City" (ver. 8), Jerusalem, as its capital. Bisping understands some future judgment which is to fall on Jerusalem; and terrify to repentance the greater part of unbelieving Israel.

According to Mr. Maurice, "when Vespasian ascended the throne, the world did again accept a righteous and orderly government; . . . did homage 'to the God of heaven' (p. 201). "The very restoration of order in Rome was the signal for the doom of Jerusalem." This is what St. John means when he says "The Second Woe is past—the Third Woe cometh quickly" (p. 281).

14. The second Woe is past:] The respite promised in ch. x. 6, 7, is about to end. Ebrard (see the remarks introductory to ch. x.) considers the earthquake of ver. 13—a judgment which the event only will explain—to be the "Second Woe," and to be the second merciful trial given to bring men to repentance: this feature of the present episode he sees in the symbolism, which leads us back to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus; and this, as the penalty for rejecting Messiah, forms a parallel to the judgment of ver. 13 (which repeats Matt. xxviii. 2-4) for rejecting and slaying Christ's "Witnesses." Bisping also places the judgment on unbelieving Israel, under the "Second Woe" described in ver. 13; and he places the Last Judgment on the whole Antichristian world, under the seventh Trumpet, or "Third Woe"—i.e., during the 42 months of ver. 2 or the second half of Daniel's last Week (Dan. ix. 27). See on ver. 2, the interpretation of Burger.

Bengel (see on ch. ix. 12-15) makes this Second Woe to begin A.D. 634; to end A.D. 847; and to consist of the havoc produced by the rise of the Saracenic power. Elliott (see on ch. ix. 12), who makes the "Second Woe" to be the Turkman power, considers that that power passed away in the wars of 1769-1774, and 1787, against Russia and Austria; and that Turkey ceased to be a Woe to Christendom, A.D. 1790, in the peace then concluded. Mr. Birks lays down, as the interpretation of the most learned and able commentators, that the two Woes relate to the Saracens and the Turks.

THE THIRD WOЕ.

behold, the third Woe cometh quickly.] (Omit "and"). Burger notes that according to the oath of the Angel, ch. x. 6, 7, the seventh Trumpet which brings on the end, follows the sixth Trumpet without delay.

Although some refer to ch. xii. 12, no further mention is made of this Woe: it might fall under the sixth, or the seventh Trumpet. It may, with some, be considered as including the Vials in which "is finished the wrath of God" (ch. xv. 1, 7)—so Stern. Med. places it under the seventh Trumpet. If it fall under the sixth, we may compare Matt. xxiv. 21; Rev. iii. 10; vii. 14. According to Hengst., the seventh Trumpet or "Third Woe" is included in vv. 15-19—in ch. viii.

15 And the seventh angel sounded ; saying, The kingdoms of this world and there were great voices in heaven, are become the kingdoms of our Lord,

5, lightnings and an earthquake symbolically announced that the world's judgment is approaching; now, in ver. 19, this symbolical announcement is fulfilled. Since great events, writes Ewald, are not fulfilled as speedily as hope may picture, new Visions are interposed before the end predicted in ch. x. 7:—thus the end of this "Third Woe," announced once more in ch. xii. 12, comes later; and this also in a threefold form, see ch. xviii. 10, 16, 19.

On the "Historical" scheme, Bengel makes a pause of a hundred years to intervene between the "Second Woe" and the "Third" which, therefore, begins A.D. 947—see on ch. xii. 12. Mr. Faber, who makes the Second Woe to end in 1697 (see on ch. ix. 12, and note A at the end of ch. ix.), places 92 years between the end of the "Second" and the beginning of the "Third Woe," because the word "quickly" describes any space of time not exceeding a century (i.e., vol. iii. p. 225—355): he thus makes the "Third Woe" begin in 1789—with the French Revolution—when "the anger of the nations" (ver. 18) began. Since 1789 men have lived in the times of the "Third Woe." This is to continue until "the destruction of them that destroy the earth" (ver. 18) at the battle of Armageddon (ch. xvi. 16) in the year 1865—"the exhaustion of the seventh Apocalyptic Vial"—"the commencement of St. John's 1000 years (Rev. xx. 2, 3)."

On the "Futurist" scheme—The subject of the "Third Woe," writes De Burgh, is intimated in the words of ver. 15: "Here we turn over a new page of this prophetic history. All that we have considered of it, with the exception of the general signs of the Lord's Coming given in the first six Seals, treats of God's judicial dealing with the Jewish nation: but from this place we have the judgment of the Gentiles"—p. 221 [see Vitringa's remark quoted in note A on ver. 1]. Todd considers the "Third Woe" to be the Second Advent of Christ, and the establishment of His kingdom, in accordance with Matt. xxiv. 30, "Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn."

THE SEVENTH TRUMPET.

15. And the seventh angel sounded ; Ch. ix. 13-21 is continued here. A new series of Visions is interposed, as after the opening of the seventh Seal. The Third Woe which "cometh quickly" is deferred for a short time until all is ready for the final consummation—the last conflict with Antichrist. No circumstantial narrative is given as to what now takes place:—see on ch. x. 4. Ebrard restricts the seventh Trumpet to vv. 15-18, which form, he considers, the complete close of the "second Vision" of the Apocalypse:—see on ver. 18. De Wette also makes the Trumpet-Visions close at ver. 18. Lücke regards vv. 15-17 as satisfying the longing for the future consummation; and vv. 18, 19 (see ch. x. 11) as leading on to further revelations of the future. Several writers, observes De Burgh (p. 437), contend that the seventh Trumpet was fulfilled by the Reformation; others by the French Revolution; "strange to say, by only a few is it referred to that with which it is so manifestly identical—the 'LAST Trumpet' mentioned, 1 Cor. xv. 52." Todd sees here "the final triumph and complete establishment of Christ's kingdom,"—p. 220; and at p. 213 he sums up the opinion of "the ancients," who, "reasoning from Dan. xii. 11, 12, supposed that the interval between the destruction of Antichrist and the general judgment (foretold by the seventh Trumpet) would be 45 days only. This opinion supposes the three prophetic periods of 1260, 1290, and 1335 days to have the same beginning. The witnesses are slain at the end of the 1260 days [vv. 3, 7], but 'the abomination that maketh desolate,' i.e., Antichrist, continues for 30 days [Dan. xii. 7, 11] after they are slain, and consequently for 26½ days after they have risen from the dead. Then Antichrist is slain at the end of the 1290 days; but the conflict between the Church and her enemies is not finally determined in favour of the former for 45 days more" [$26\frac{1}{2} + 3\frac{1}{2} = 30$; and $1290 + 45 = 1335$],—Dan. xii. 12; see St. Jerome in loc.

Bisping thus introduces this section: "Second Act:—The second half of the last World-week, ch. xi. 15—xx. 10. . . . By way of introduction this Vision represents how that which the seventh Trumpet is to bring on the world is prepared in heaven."

That the fall of the Temple follows immediately the blast of the seventh Trumpet, Mr. Maurice infers from the words of ver. 19 (i.e., p. 241):—"i.e., 1260 days, or about four years between the commencement of the Jewish rebellion, and the termination of the war by Titus."

and there followed great voices in heaven,] The voices here, and the song of the Elders (vv. 16-18) may be contrasted with the "silence" at the opening of the last Seal. What we hear is not on earth, but in heaven, as at the opening of the seventh Seal (ch. viii. 1), and at the pouring out of the seventh Vial (ch. xvi. 17):—under the last Seal, too, and under the last Vial (ch. viii. 5; ch. xvi. 18) we have "the lightnings and voices," &c. as in ver. 19. In ver. 18 we are told that the

and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.

16 And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God,

17 Saying, We give thee thanks,

O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

18 And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judgment of the dead is come; in ch. xvi. 17 the voice announces from the throne "It is done;" and from ch. vi. 17 we learn that the end follows the sixth Seal. Here we have an illustration of the principle of "Recapitulation" (see the remarks introductory to ch. viii.): "The three Visions," as Alf. notes, "are not continuous, but resumptive: not, indeed, going over the same ground with one another, either of time or of occurrence, but each evolving something which was not in the former, and putting the course of God's providence in a different light." It is to be observed that the Four Living Beings (ch. iv. 6) do not appear in the seventh Trumpet as here described: they appear again, in ch. xiv. 3; xv. 7; xix. 4. The "great voices" are thought by some to proceed from them, as the four and twenty Elders (ch. iv. 4) are mentioned in ver. 16: so Ewald—but see on ver. 18. De Wette ascribes the "voices" to the Angels;—Bengel to the dwellers in heaven, Angels and men;—Hengst. to the innumerable multitude of ch. vii. 9;—but to this Disterd. objects, because in ch. vii. that multitude is seen in heaven by anticipation; it does not actually appear in heaven until ch. xv. 2, and ch. xix. 1: the course of the Vision here has not yet attained so far.

The speakers, however, seem to be left undetermined (cf. ch. xii. 10—12; xiv. 2)—whether we regard the participle which follows to be masc. (with A, B), or fem. (with K, C, P).

saying.] If the participle be masc., this is a case of irregular apposition, as in ch. iv. 1; or we may render "in heaven, and they said."

The kingdom of the world] See vv. 11. Cf. ch. i. 6; xii. 10. The gen. of the object (cf. the gen. with ἐν in ch. xvii. 18)—the royal dominion (note the sing.) over the world.

is become [the kingdom] of our Lord and of his Christ.] The government of the world is become His, as King: hitherto "the Prince of this world" has ruled; see Psal. ii. 2. Züllig, referring to ch. xii. 10, renders: "The World-kingdom of our Lord, and of His Anointed hath appeared."

The last Trumpet has sounded; and the voices celebrate, by anticipation, what is referred to in ch. x. 7; ch. xix. 1. The result of the enmity to God is told in ch. xix. 20.

and he shall reign for ever and ever.] "He" denotes either God, as ver. 17; or Christ, "Whose kingdom shall have no end."—Nicene Creed.

16. And the four and twenty elders.] (See vv. 11.). Representing the Church in heaven:—see on ch. iv. 4.

which sit before God upon their thrones.] Cf. ch. iv. 4;—the Elders who offer to God the prayers of the saints (ch. v. 8). For the word "thrones," see on ch. ii. 13.

fell upon their faces.] Cf. ch. iv. 10; v. 14. In ch. vii. 11 the Angels similarly fall prostrate.

17. Saying, We give thee thanks.] This verb, of very frequent occurrence in the New Test., is found only here in the Apocalypse; and, in St. John's other writings, only in John vi. 11, 23; xi. 41.

O Lord God, the Almighty.] Cf. ch. i. 8; iv. 8. God is also addressed by this title in ch. xv. 3; xvi. 7, 14; xix. 6, 15; xxi. 22.

which art and which wast.] Omit "and art to come"—see vv. 11., and the note on ch. i. 4: cf. also ch. xvi. 5.

At this stage of the prophecy God is no longer "He who is to come," as in Matt. i. 10. His coming is now past and over.

and because thou hast taken thy great power.] See vv. 11. (Omit "to thee" which is not in the Greek). The perfect with aorists—see on ch. v. 7.

God has now assumed the "power" which He was "aworthy" to take (ch. iv. 11); and of which the Trumpet judgments, in answer to the prayers of the saints (ch. vi. 10; viii. 3—6), are the manifestation:—see ch. xix. 6.

and didst reign.] (The aorist, following the perfect). God had never ceased to rule over the world:—He always possessed the "power," but hitherto had not exercised it. As in Ps. xcix. 1 (LXX.), the Lord's reigning, and the wrath of the nations (see next verse), are connected with each other.

18. And the nations were wroth.] See Ps. xcix. 1 (LXX.) as in verse 17. The Elders now describe the character of the seventh judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which 'destroy the earth.

^{10x, corrupt.}

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen Trumpet. The wrath of the nations is called forth by the progress of the hated kingdom of God, as it began to take place after the Word was made flesh (Hengst.). How that wrath was instigated we are told in ch. xii. 17.

and thy wrath came,] See ch. vi. 16, where we are brought to the eve of the great catastrophe which, in ch. x. 7, is placed under this Trumpet. The omission of the Four Living Beings also points (see on ver. 15) to the dissolution of Creation. They reappear in the Vision which introduces the Vials (ch. xv. 7), and before the Last Judgment (ch. xix. 4—cf. ch. xiv. 3). Neither the description of the throne, in ch. iv., nor the other Visions of the blessed—except at the end of ch. xx.—seems final like this, which is all anticipatory.

and the time of the dead to be judged,] Said by anticipation, and actually occurring at ch. xx. 11–15. Vitringa understands by the judgment of the dead, the vindication of the cause of the martyrs by God (see ch. vi. 9–11), as in Ps. lxxii. 4; so also Stuart, who refers to Hebr. x. 30.

and [the time] to give their reward to thy servants the prophets,] See ch. xviii. 20; cf. Matt. v. 12; x. 41.

and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, the small and the great;] See vv. 11.; cf. ch. xiii. 16; xix. 5, 18; xx. 12. "The small and the great" are in the accus., while the previous nouns are in the dative,—a fact which sets aside the distinction into two classes by Hengst., viz. (1) the servants of God, comprising the prophets and saints; (2) those that fear His name, comprising "the small and the great" (Ps. cxv. 13).

and to destroy them which destroy the earth.] Gr. "οὓς διαφθείρουσιν τὴν γῆν" (τ. διαφθείρουσας), as in ch. xix. 2; Jer. li. 25 (LXX.):—cf. Isai. xiv. 20. We have here, wrath, judgment, destruction, and at the same time distribution of rewards: but it is the execution of judgment which brings redemption; and the reward of the faithful consists in this that the earth is freed from its oppressors (Hengst.). The Elders' song, writes Todd, sums up the events connected with the Second Advent—chiefly the Millennial Reign (ch. xx. 6), the wrath of the nations (ch. xx. 8), the wrath of God (ch. xx. 10), the judgment of the dead (ch. xx. 12), the reward of the faithful (ch. xxi.; xxii.). Elliott observes that before what is here described by anticipation comes to pass, the Seer answers the questions, "Who are the corruptors of the earth?"—"What is the history of the Beast?"—"Is he identical with Antichrist?" In answer to them a new parenthetic series of Visions begins; and ver. 19 serves as a sign of connexion to show where the seventh Trumpet-Vision is resumed, viz. at ch. xv. 1.

According to the scheme of Ebrard the second Vision of the Apocalypse, which began at ch. iv. 1, ends here:—the third Vision extends from ch. xi. 19 to ch. xiv. 20, and is introduced by the same natural phenomena as the second in ch. iv. 5. In the first Vision St. John beheld the Son of Man in His judicial relation to the Churches;—in the second, which now ends, Almighty God in his judicial relation to the godless world;—in the third Vision, beginning with ver. 19, the relation of the ungodly subjects of the Prince of this world to the Church of God (s. 419).

Burger makes the seventh Trumpet to end here; and all that follows to belong to events which mark the last conflict.

19. And the temple of God, that is in heaven, was opened;] (See vv. 11.). The Sanctuary, Naos,—cf. ver. 1. We now see "the pattern" of that earthly Sanctuary which supplied the symbolism in ver. 1 (Ex. xxv. 8, 9, 40; Heb. viii. 5). The Sanctuary lies open (ch. xiv. 15, 17; xv. 5–8; xvi. 1, 17) until "The Word of God" comes to judge (ch. xix. 13), and the accomplishment is fully seen in ch. xxi. 22.

and there was seen in his temple the ark of his covenant;] This verse is parallel to ch. iv. 1; xv. 5: like them, in anticipation of what is still future, it introduces a new Vision. The pause at this point before the new series of Visions is accompanied by the usual tokens.

The Ark of the Covenant is now introduced for the last time in Scripture. In this Stern sees a symbolical allusion to the fulfilment of God's dealings with Israel converted by the preaching of the "Witnesses"—see Rom. ix. 25–33. Ewald and Bleek refer here to "the hidden manna" (ch. ii. 17), which, having been lost with the Ark of the Covenant, when the Temple was destroyed by the Chaldeans (2 Kings xxv. 9), was wanting in the second Temple. According to Jewish tradition, Jeremiah had taken the Ark and all that the Most Holy place contained, and concealed them before the destruction of the Temple in a cave at Mount Sinai, whence they are to be restored to the Temple in the days in his temple the ark of his testament : and thunderings, and an earthquake, and there were lightnings, and voices, and great hail.

of Messiah (2 Macc. ii. 4-7): see also Wetstein in loc. Hengst. seems to indicate the true meaning of the symbol:—The Ark of the Covenant is made visible in order to signify that the Covenant has received its most signal accomplishment. God has now “remembered his Holy Covenant,” and his people may now “serve Him without fear”—Luke i. 72-74.

and there followed lightnings, and voices, and thunders,] Which are the only physical phenomena seen in ch. iv. 5.

and an earthquake,] The earthquake is also specified in ch. viii. 5; xvi. 18.

and great hail,] Which is again introduced in ch. xvi. 21:—hail is also mentioned under the first Trumpet (ch. viii. 7). The judgment-hour indicated by the symbolism of ver. 1 has now arrived; and from the Sanctuary where God is enthroned the judgments proceed—see ch. xiv. 15, 17; xv. 5; xvi. 17.

This description of the sounding of the seventh Trumpet (vv. 15-19) runs strictly parallel to what we have read as to the opening of the seventh Seal (ch. viii. 1-5). Parallel to the “silence in heaven” (ch. viii. 1) we have here the “great voices in heaven,” and the Elders’ hymn of thanksgiving (vv. 15, 17, 18);—parallel to the offering of incense and prayer at the Altar (ch. viii. 3-5) we have here the worship of the Elders (ver. 16), and the opened Temple, and the sight of the Ark of the Covenant;—the same natural phenomena too (here increased in intensity) which announce coming judgments are manifested in both Visions (ch. viii. 5; xi. 19). These various details the Seer, instead of giving a continuous narrative, “Recapitulates.” As the series of the Trumpets starts from the same point as the series of the Seals, and ends with the same consummation,—so now, beginning with ch. xii., we have once more a new “Recapitulation” of God’s dealings with the Church and with the world, during the same period. The description is now coloured by symbolism of a different character from what has hitherto been employed:—see the remarks introductory to this chapter. This verse, therefore, may be regarded as the preparation for the final judgment, but it does not describe the final judgment itself.

Here the Third Division of the Revelation proper comes to an end.

With other writers the connexion is different. Hengst. regards this verse as describing the last judgment; and he considers ch. xvi. 18-21 to be simply an extension of what is here revealed;—According to Lücke (s. 355) the chief series of Visions ends here. Such a close both satisfies the longing expressed in vv. 15-17, and points to a further disclosure of the future, as suggested in ch. x. 11; it thus forms a prelude to the Visions which follow, and which constitute the contents of the last Trumpet;—I. Williams considers that “the whole arrangement of the Seals and the Trumpets seems to cease with this chapter; and it is better to consider the subsequent prophecies as supplemental and independent, without any reference to the previous division: all that follows might be considered as the ‘Little Book’” (p. 209);—Burger makes this verse to be the transition between the seventh Trumpet, which came to an end in ver. 18, and the Visions that follow;—Stuart, following Eichhorn and Heinrichs, makes the seventh Trumpet to signify “the triumph of Christianity over opposing and embittered Judaism:” even the Most Holy place is thrown open, “another symbol expressing that Judaism is now at its close;”—Grotius refers the passage to the Jews in the days of Barchocab (ver. 13); adding on this verse: “Per hoc jubentur Christiani qui in Judæa erant animos ad cælum attollere, ubi Deus habitat, ubi arca fœderis servatur;”—De Lyra refers all this passage to the victory of Narses (A.D. 553) over the Arian Goths, the Angel of the seventh Trumpet being the Emperor Justin II.;—Elliott (see on ver. 14) enumerates a series of natural convulsions at the end of Cent. xviii.—such as the reopening the fires of Vesuvius and the eruption of Shaptaa Jokul in Iceland; the earthquake in Calabria protracted from 1783 to 1786; the hailstorm in France in 1788, followed within a month by the convocation of the States-General, which was the signal for the [First] French Revolution, May 5, 1789: see on ch. xv. 1.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XI.

NOTE A ON VER. 2—THE MEASURING THE TEMPLE.

The following illustrations of the meanings assigned to this passage may be added.

1 (a) Ordinary “Preterists”:—

STUART, following EICHORN and LANGE considers that “the symbolic transaction” described in vv. 1, 2, prefigures “the preervation of all which was fundamental and essential in the ancient religion, notwithstanding the destruction of all that was external in respect to the Temple, the City, and the ancient people of God" (l.c., p. 214). "Nothing can be more certain than that the destruction of the City and Temple of Jerusalem is threatened, and not merely profanation by the presence of the heathen" (p. 218).

(b) Rationalistic "Preterists" also refer this symbolism to the literal Temple, and the literal Jerusalem. The Holy City is Jerusalem not yet laid in ruins by the Roman army; and this result is taken to prove that the Apocalypse was written before the capture of the City, and the destruction of the Temple by Titus. This opinion has been already referred to in the Introduction (see § 4, b., i.), and is also considered in the note on the present verse. The Judaizing tendencies alleged by Rationalists to characterize the writings of St. John, as opposed to St. Paul, have likewise been shewn (see Note A on ch. iii. 19) to have no existence. The notion, therefore, of the school of Tübingen that the present passage expresses nothing more than the sentiments of a fervid Jewish patriot who could not bear to contemplate the destruction of the Temple, is a mere fiction of the imagination:—see Baur, Die kanon. Evang., s. 605.

II. "Futurists" look forward to a restored Jerusalem, and to a Temple rebuilt in the Last Times:—

DE BURGH: The natural inference here is "that this commission concerns the Jewish nation" (l.c., p. 205). "No doubt should remain that this commission and prophecy refer to the City Jerusalem, and the Jewish people. Notwithstanding this the chapter has been allegorized; and so allegorized by some of the most eminent expositors as to exclude all reference or allusion to either the Jewish City or people! Thus, according to Mede, whose authority ranks perhaps highest," &c., &c. And Dr. De Burgh understands here by the "Gentiles" the nations which shall hereafter be leagued with the Beast from the Abyss (ver. 7) who is described in ch. xiii., and who will realize the description of 2 Thess. ii. 4, in "the time of the Lord's last great controversy with the [Jewish] nation" (l.c., pp. 206–210).

With reference to the principle on which the "Futurist" system of interpretation is founded, it is well to bear in mind the words of Vitringa on Rev. vii. 1–8 (l.c., p. 303):—

"I would particularly draw attention to this, that throughout the whole of the Revelation no separate mention is made of the Jewish as distinguished from the Gentile Christians; and this on the clear and obvious ground that, under the new economy, all distinction of nations in the matter of religion is abolished. 'There is neither Jew nor Greek' writes the Apostle (Gal. iii. 28); and he adds: 'If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed' (ib. ver. 29). Nowhere, therefore, in the whole Apocalypse do prophecies occur with respect to the Jews, in so far as they are contradistinguished from the Gentiles in the matter of religion." So, also, Stern, who belongs to a very different school, writes on ch. xii. 1: "Es ist kein Unterschied, wie überhaupt in der ganzen Apokalypse nicht, zwischen Juden- und Heidenchristen erkennbar gemacht" (s. 301).

NOTE B ON VER. 2.—THE FORTY AND TWO MONTHS.

The "Forty and two Months," the "1260 days" (ver. 3), the "Three and a half years,"—otherwise the "Time, and times, and half a time" (ch. xii. 14),—assuming these three designations of time to denote the same length of duration, have been interpreted Spiritually, Chronologically, and Literally.

I. The SPIRITUAL interpretation is thus defined by Auberlen (see on ver. 2):—

The three periods are identical, and have an accurate chronological meaning which however we cannot at present arrive at. We know the meaning of the 3½ years from Daniel (vii. 25; xii. 6, 7; ix. 27). It is the time of the World-power in which the earthly Kingdoms rule over the heavenly (Rev. xi. 2, 3)—i.e., the time from the Roman destruction of Jerusalem to the Second Coming of Christ (cf. Luke xxi. 24 with Rev. xi. 2). According to Luke xxi. 24 the treading down of the Holy City is to last till "the times of the Gentiles;" or, according to Rev. xi. 2, till 42 months (1260 days = 3½ years) are fulfilled. Add to this that in Rev. xiii. 5 the 42 months designate the period of the Beast—i.e., the World-power (l.c., p. 252).

BOSSUET regards the "Forty two months" as mystical; and as denoting that the persecutions of the Church have a fixed and limited period in the Divine counsels.

II. The CHRONOLOGICAL (or "Year-day") interpretation (see Introd. § 11, (b), II.):—

MEDE, resting on the distinction already noted between "the inner" and "the outer court" of the Temple, assumes as the continuance of the pure state of the Church, which is denoted by the "inner court," the period of 365, or 393, or 430, or 455 years;—the beginning being counted from Christ's birth, or

1 "It is demonstrated by Villalpandus out of Ezekiel's measure, that the largeness of the outer court was such that it contained the inner court three times and a half in quantity." Now as the time allotted to the outer court is xlii months, the time allotted to the inner court, or pure state of the church, is xii months, or 360 days, + 5 (added by "Chaldean count")—i.e., 365 prophetic years.

Passion (A.D. 33), or from the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70), or from the reception of the Vision by St. John under Domitian (A.D. 95). To the dates (365, 455) he adds 1260, counting "days" as "years," and thus obtains for the continuance of the corrupt state of the Church, or "the outer Court," the periods down to A.D. 1625, or A.D. 1715 (pp. 588, 600).

CALOVIVS (1637) reckons from the time of Pope Leo the Great (A.D. 440) until A.D. 1700, when "a great event, leading to the fall of the degenerate Roman Church, must take place."

COCCEIUS, arguing that the duration "of the antichristian power" terminated at the date of the "Pacification of Passau," i.e., A.D. 1552, by subtracting from this date 1260 years, obtained A.D. 292—or the year in which "Constantius Chlorus Cæsaream dignitatem et patrociniū Christianorum suscepit"—as the "terminus a quo" whence to count the duration of the 42 months.

VITRINGA: The "terminus a quo" may be placed in the twelfth century (p. 465):—he counts this beginning from the date of the rise of the "Waldenses, Lugdunenses, and Albigenes." The whole period however of the 1260 years has not as yet expired ("hactenus non exiit, latetque in arcanis Dei consiliis"—p. 463). Vitringa, at the same time, looks with favour on an interpretation suggested by Scaliger, viz. that a "time" denotes in Scripture 100 years; and, therefore, that the 3½ "times" of the prophecy signify 350 common years. At all events counting from the persecution of the Albigenses we obtain exactly 350 years down to the preaching of Luther (see Introd. § 11, (b), III.).

ROBERT FLEMING:¹ His Discourses were published in 1701, and announced that in the years 1794 and 1848 certain Apocalyptic predictions were to be fulfilled. The historical coincidences are remarkable; and as the "Year-day" theory receives more justice at Fleming's hands than at the hands of writers who, either before or since his time, have taken "days" to denote "years," it is desirable to give a brief account of his system.

Fleming sets forth "Two preliminary considerations:"—(1) "That the three grand Apocalyptic numbers of 1260 days, 42 months, and 'a Time, Times, and an half,' are not only Synchronical, but must be interpreted Prophetically, so as Years must be understood by Days;"—(2) "That in order to understand the Prophetical years aright, we must reduce them to Julian years, or such as are in use with us now in Europe" (pp. 19-24). The synchronism of the three periods determines that a month = 30 days; and that 12 such months = a year. Accordingly 'a year' = 360 days, "without the additional five days and odd hours and minutes that are added, in the calculation of the Julian year;" and thus three and a half (prophetical) years = 1260 (prophetical) days; and three and a half Julian years = 1278 (common) days:—"Now, if according to this computation, we subtract 1260 Apocalyptic years from 1278 Julian or Gregorian ones (I call them so ore rotundo, overlooking the smaller measures of time), there remain 18 years to be cut off." . . . "If we may suppose that Antichrist began his reign in the year 606 [see Note D on ch. xiii.], the additional 1260 years of his duration, were they Julian or ordinary years, would lead us down to the year 1866, as the last period of the Seven-headed Monster [Rev. xiii. 1]. But seeing they are prophetical years only, we must cast away 18 years in order to bring them to the exact measure of the time. And thus the final period of Papal Usurpations (supposing that he did indeed rise in the year 606) must conclude with the year 1848" (p. 27). Again: Fleming places the "Donation of Pipin," "in or about the year 758, about the time that Pope Paul the First began to build the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul. Now if we make this the Æra of the Papal Kingdom, the 1260 years will not run out before the year 2018, according to the computation of Julian years; but reducing these to Prophetical ones, the expiration of the Papal Kingdom ends exactly in the year 2000 according to our vulgar reckoning" (p. 34).

To complete this calculation the Vial-Visions must be included:—The fourth Vial (Rev. xvi. 8), Fleming believes, "is poured out upon 'the sun' of the Papal Kingdom," and "must denote the humiliation of some eminent potentates of the Romish interest:" . . . "these, therefore, must be principally understood of the houses of Austria and Bourbon" (p. 65). As to the part of this Vial not fulfilled when Fleming wrote, he supposes "that it will come to its highest pitch in 1717, and that it will run out in 1794. In A.D. 475 the Western Roman power was destroyed, and the power of the Papal Kingdom was increased." Now $475 + 1260 = 1735$; and, as before, subtracting 18, we get 1717. Again:—Justinian, on his conquest of Italy, A.D. 551, "left it in a great measure to the Pope's management:"—but $551 + 1260$ "reaches down to the year 1811; which, according to prophetical account, is the year 1794. And then I do suppose the fourth Vial will end" (p. 69). The fifth Vial (Rev. xvi. 10) "will probably begin about the year 1794, and expire about A.D. 1848" (p. 77); which is the date given above as to the weakening of the Papacy, counting from A.D. 606. "The sixth

¹ Discourses on the Rise and Fall of the Papacy, 1701.

Vial (Rev. xvi. 12) will be poured out on the Mahometan Antichrist;" and the Eastern Kings and Kingdoms are now to renounce their heathenish and Mahometan errors. The sixth Vial runs into the seventh (Rev. xvi. 7);—"only you may observe that the first of these will probably take up most of the time between the year 1848 and the year 2000; because such long messages and intrigues (besides the time spent before in destroying the Turkish Empire) . . . must needs take up a great many years" (p. 79). "Supposing, then, that the Turkish Monarchy should be totally destroyed between 1848 and 1900, we may justly assign 70 or 80 years longer to the end of the sixth Vial, and but twenty or thirty at most to the last."

Fleming (p. 98) computes the date of the Millennium:—Relying on Dan. viii. 7, 11, he fixes the year 135 as the epoch from which to count—that is to say, the date of the second or final destruction of Jerusalem by Hadrian. Now 135 + 1290 (Dan. xii. 11) = 1425, "which in prophetic reckoning is the year 1407"—the date of the Hussites, Albigenses, Wickliffites, Waldenses, &c. But 1407 + 1335 (Dan. xii. 12) = 2742, "i.e., 2722 of prophetic reckoning: which, therefore, includes the begun downfall of the Papacy under the Seven Vials, and the final accomplishment thereof afterwards, together with the greatest part of the Millennium. And perhaps the begun apostasy of Jewish and Gentile Christians which is to issue in an universal war against the Saints (upon the expiration of the Millennium) may be begun about the year 2722."

ELLIOTT, like Fleming, introduces here the interpretation of the Vials. The solution of the great question, "When do the 1260 years of ch. xi. come to an end?" is involved, he thinks, in the meaning of the fifth Vial:—see Note A on ch. xvi.

BENGEL assumed that the 42 months denote the 666 years of the Beast (ch. xiii. 18):—for his chronological system see Introd. § 11, (b), IV.

III. The LITERAL interpretation:—

BRIGHTMAN would understand the 3½ years during which the Council of Trent was engaged in silencing the Old and New Testaments—the "Two Witnesses" of ver. 3 (p. 296).

Two opposite schools of expositors—the "Preterists" and the "Futurists"—also take the 1260 days, the 42 months, the 3½ years, to be literal days, months, years.

1. (a) Ordinary "Preterists":—

GROTIUS and HAMMOND count the 42 "months" as 1260 literal "days" from A.D. 50 to A.D. 54—"ex quo strui cœpit Templum Jovis Capitolini ad motum usque Judaicum duce Barchocheba."

STUART lays down that, 3½ being one half of the sacred number Seven, "this is a convenient designation of a moderate length of time, whether the designation is quite exact or falls a little short of exactness, or exceeds it in a small measure" (Exc. v., ii., p. 465). As to Rev. xi. 2, Vespasian attacked Palestine in the spring of A.D. 67. On the 10th of August, A.D. 70, Jerusalem was taken by Titus: "There can scarcely be a doubt, therefore," that the 42 months, as well as the 1260 days of ver. 3, mark the time during which the conquest of Palestine was going on (p. 468).

(b) Rationalistic "Preterists."

REUSS ("Theol. in the Apost. Age") explains that, terrified by the Pagan persecution in Asia Minor, St. John now declares that the End of all things is at hand (ch. ii. 5; xi. 14; &c.). The Seer even "ventures to limit the delay by figures borrowed from the revelation of Daniel:" "In three years and a half, from the moment at which the author wrote, all would be accomplished." During this period of three years and a half the Pagans will remain masters of Jerusalem, a place of safety being provided for the elect within the precincts of the Temple (pp. 373-376).

Renan, also identifying the three periods, accepts the common interpretation of 3½ years as the explanation of the 3½ "times." This is "a demi-sabemitta or week of years,"—"a sabemitta or period of seven years is often taken for a unit of time, the jubilee period being composed of seven sabemitta; see Neubauer, Journal asiatique, Dec. 1869." "This mysterious cipher borrowed from the Book of Daniel is the space of time which still remains for the world to live" (i.e., p. 401). And Renan describes the Apocalypse as "un écrit de circonstance qui borne lui-même son horizon à trois ans et demi, le secret de l'avenir entier de l'humanité" (p. 462).

2. "Futurists":—

De Burgh: The Jewish people and their City shall be given up to "the Beast" (ver. 7) for the period of 42 months, that is, 1260 days, or three years and a half, in which three different ways this same period is named in prophecy" (p. 210). He takes Dan. ix. 27 as referring to the time of Antichrist; and the duration of Antichrist's power being seven years, he divides these seven years into two periods of 3½ years, or 1260 days, each. During the former half Antichrist is in covenant with the Jews (Dan. xi. 23, 32), and during the latter half turns against them. De Burgh, accordingly, doubts whether the 42 months and 1260 days in Rev. xi. "be not different from the 42 months or 1260 days of the great power of the Beast in ch. xiii., the former being the first, and the latter the second half of the week (p. 440): cf. the opinions of Bispington and Burger quoted above on ver. 3. De Burgh seems to differ here from Todd—see on ch. ix. 13, 15, § (6).

TODD having expounded in a similar manner the measuring of the Temple as denoting "its restoration, after which the Holy City shall be encompassed with armies and trodden under foot of the Gentiles 42 months;" adds: "The remainder of the prophecy goes on to describe the events which shall take place in the Holy City during the 1260 days of its profanation by the Gentiles" (p. 171):—see on ch. ix. 13, 15.

See Note D on ch. xiii. 5.

NOTE C ON VER. 7—THE "FOURTH" BEAST.

Mention of "the Beast that cometh up out of the Abyss" is made only here and in ch. xvii. 8. The reading of Codex A, τὸ τέταρτον θηρίον,¹ is adduced by Zullig in proof that the Beast from "the Abyss" is the fourth instance of this symbol in the Apocalypse, the other three being (1) the Dragon, ch. xii. 3;—(2) the Beast "out of the Sea," ch. xiii. 1;—(3) the Beast "out of the Earth," ch. xiii. 11. These four are, (i.) the anti-Jehovah, Satan, who rules in the air, or in the heavenly regions;—(ii.) the Beast who rules over the Sea, the symbol of the peoples of the Earth, by the anti-Messias, Balaam (see Note E on ch. xiii. 18);—(iii.) the Beast who rules over the firm earth, the "False-Prophet;"—(iv.) an apparition from the Abyss, false-Judaism, and especially its last ruler (ch. xvii.) spoken of in Dan. vii. 7, 19; viii. 10. St. John does not copy Daniel carefully, for he makes three of the Beasts to have "Seven Heads" and "Ten Horns," and all are powerful; the third, or "False Prophet," however, has not strength, but prevails by the seduction of his tongue. Owing to the three having each "Seven Heads" and "Ten Horns," they have been often identified with one another: but this is an error. The first has upon his "Seven Heads" seven diadems (ch. xii. 3);—the second upon his "Ten Horns," ten diadems (ch. xiii. 1);—the fourth has no diadem either on "Heads" or "Horns" (ss. 156, 191, 192).

Ebrard argues to the same effect:—(1) In ch. xiv. 8 the Beast of ch. xiii. 1 is styled Babylon; but in ch. xvii. the Harlot, or Babylon, is distinguished from the Beast;—(2) The Beast in ch. xvii. 3 has no diadems;—(3) In ch. xvii. 3 the colour of the Beast is mentioned, not his form as in ch. xiii. 2;—(4) In ch. xvii. 3, 8 (cf. ch. xi. 7) this Beast from the Abyss is full of "names of blasphemy," while in ch. xiii. 1 the names are only on the Heads of the Beast (s. 455). On this subject cf. the note on ch. xvii. 3.

Düsterdieck points out the following differences:—(1) The conception of the Head "smitten unto death" and then "healed" (ch. xiii. 3) is not found in the description of the Dragon in ch. xii.;—(2) In ch. xvii. 11 an "eighth" Head is mentioned, which is not spoken of in ch. xii. or ch. xiii.;—(3) The "Ten Horns" in ch. xvii. differ in many ways from the Horns indicated in ch. xii. and ch. xiii.;—(4) The Head "smitten" and "healed" (ch. xiii.) is not referred to directly in ch. xvii. To these one may add, as above, (5) the position of the diadems on the "Heads" in ch. xii.; on the "Horns" in ch. xiii.; and the absence of any mention of them in ch. xvii.

Common, however, to all three chapters, are the two leading features of the "Seven Heads" and the "Ten Horns," borrowed from the symbolism of Daniel and indicating the identity of the Beast from the Abyss, and the Beast from the Sea—one Beast—who is the reflexion and the instrument of the Dragon.

NOTE D ON VER. 12—THE TWO WITNESSES.

Until the rise of the school of "Historical" interpreters in Cent. xiv., the belief as to the signification of the "Two Witnesses"—a belief which is now known as that of the "Futurists"—was almost universal in the ancient Church: viz. 'The "Two Witnesses" are to be two Prophets, who shall appear hereafter in the time of Antichrist for the confirmation and support of the persecuted Church:—they shall suffer martyrdom;—their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the literal Jerusalem for three literal days and a half (or for three years and a half, see below);—and their ascension to heaven shall be at once followed by the Second Coming of the Lord.' On the further question "Who the two Prophets are to be," opinions were somewhat divided:—

I. That one of the Witnesses is to be Elijah¹ (cf. 2 Kings ii. 11; Mal. iv. 5; Matt. xvii. 4, 11) all early writers were agreed; but there was not the same agreement as to the second Witness.

II. By far the greater number of the Fathers considered that Enoch (Gen. v. 22, 24; Heb. xi. 5; Eccles. xlv. 16; xlix. 14) is to be the second. Enoch and Elijah alone of mankind had not tasted death; and so St. Jerome writes in answer to a question respecting those "who shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. iv. 17): "Visque nosse, utrum sic occurrant in corporibus et non ante moriantur; cum et Dominus noster et Enoch atque Elias secundum Apocalypsim Joannis morituri esse dicantur: ne scilicet ullus sit, qui non gustaverit mortem" (Epist. 59, ad Marcellam, t. i. p. 326). And to the same effect St. Augustine: "Quid enim dicunt? Si peccati esse mors, quare non mortui sunt Enoch et Elias? . . . Et si non fallitur quædam ex Scriptura Dei conjectura fidei, morituri sunt. Commemorat Apocalypsis quosdam duos mirabiles prophetas, eosdemque morituros, et in conspectu hominum resurrecturos, et ascensuros ad Dominum: et intelliguntur ipsi Enoch et Elias; quamvis illic nomina eorum taceantur" (Serm. 299, c. Pelag. ber., Opp., ed. Migne, t. v. 1376¹). The reason here assigned for understanding Enoch and Elijah is most weighty.

¹ In place of the τὸ τέταρτον of A, Grotius suggests that we should read τὸ τεράστιον,—prodigious, strange, monstrous,—adding: "Nisi forte prima fera est Draco, altera ex mari, tertia ex terra orta, hæc vero quarta."

It reads τότε ἀναβαῖνον.

¹ E. g. Justin M. (Dial. c. Tryph. c. 49); Origen (In Joann., t. iv. p. 92); Lactantius (Instit. vii. 15, 16); Theodor. Mopsuest. (ap. Mai, Script. Vet. Nova Coll., t. vi. pp. 278-298); Sibyll. Orac. (B. ii., 187); Commodian. (Carm. Apol., 832, ap. Spicil. Solesm. i. p. 44):—cf. also Chrysost., Hom. lvi. in Matt. xvi.

St. Hilary Pictav. mentions Enoch with doubt (see under III. below). Andreas writes: τούτους τοὺς δύο μάρτυρας 'Ενὼχ καὶ Ἠλίας πολλοὶ τῶν διδασκάλων ἐνόησαν κ. τ. λ. (l. c., p. 58):—Arethas indeed states that this was the unanimous conclusion of the early writers. Cf. Irenæus (Hæc. v. 5); Tertull. (De Anima, 50); Hippolytus (De Anticbr. 43); Ephræm. Syrus (Orat. in adv. Dom.; Opp. t. iii. p. 141); Cbron. Pasch. (vol. i. p. 36); Damascenus (De Orth. Fide, iv. 26). See also the elaborate list of writers given by Stern (in loc.), who quotes Cassiodor. (Complex in Apoc., in c. x. 1); Ambrosiaster (Comm. ad 1 Cor.); Alcuin. (Comm. in Apoc. v.); Aquinas (De adventu Anticbr., Romæ, 1840, p. 41).

Bellarmino brings the charge of heresy against any who deny that the "Witnesses" are to be Enoch and Elijah.²

III. There were some, however, among the most eminent of the Fathers who felt that the reasons are strong for regarding Moses (see Matt. xvii. 3) as the second of the "Witnesses"—for Moses, too, it was argued, like Enoch and Elijah, did not pass through death, see Deut. xxxiv. 6; Jude 9; and so Victorinus notes: "Many suppose that Elijah and Elisha, or Elijah and Moses, are the Two Witnesses" (l. c., p. 59). St. Hilary Pictav., having distinctly specified "Moses and Elijah," adds: "Hos quidem prophetas duos prævenientes adventum Ejus esse intelligimus, quos Apocalypsis Joannis ab Antichristo perimendos esse dicit (Comm. in. Matt. c. xx. 10, ed. Ben., t. i. p. 769); and in this same work (c. xxvi. 5) St. Hilary, having expressed his doubt as to Enoch, again decides for Moses." Compare St. Ambrose (De Cain et Abel, i. 2, t. i. p. 186).

IV. To Enoch and Elijah, the Apostle John himself (John xxi. 22) is added by Methodius (ap. Suicer. Thesaur. i. 393); see also "Append. ad Opp. Hippolyti" (ed. Fabric. xxi. p. 14); Ephræm. Antioch. (ap. Photium, Cod. 229).

V. To Elijah some added the prophet Jeremiah. Thus Victorinus, in continuation of the words already quoted (see under III.), proceeds to say that Jeremiah is to be joined with Elijah, for it was predicted that he should be "a prophet unto the nations" (Jer. i. 5); and in order that he should fulfil this prophecy, which was not fulfilled during his former life, he must rise from the dead, must be a precursor of Messiah, and preach hereafter to many nations. St. Hilary, to the same effect, adds to the words quoted above under III.: "Licet variz vel de Enoch, vel de Jeremia, plurimorum exstiterint opinioniones, quod alterum eorum sicut Eliam mori oporteat."

VI. Nor was the figurative interpretation omitted by the early writers:—e.g. [Tichonius], Primasius, Beda understood by the "Two Witnesses," the "Two Testaments preached by the Christian Church to the world."

Coming to more modern times, C. à Lapide classified the opinions under three heads:—

i. "Qui per hos duos testes non duos singulares vivos, sed duo genera testium accipiunt:—E.g. Pannonius understood the Doctors of the Church who preach the Old and the New Test.;—Arias Montanus took them to be the Law and the Prophets;—the Calvinists understand the Old and the New Test., or the Scriptures and the whole body of the faithful;—Alcasar the wisdom and sanctity of the primitive Church; Moses and Elijah being also prefigured. [Still more recently Bishop Andrews (Contra Bellarmin., c. 11), and Bishop Wordsworth take the "Witnesses" to be the Old and the New Testaments].

ii. "Qui hæc de temporibus non futuris, sed jam præteritis exponunt:—E.g. Ubertinus and Eitsinger take the "Witnesses" to be Christ and John the Baptist; and Ubertinus thinks that the prophecy may also apply to St. Dominic and St. Francis;—P. Aureolus,

¹ On this discourse the editor notes: "Ex vetere libro Corbeiensi nunc primum prodit. Excerpta ex hoc sermone tria dedit Beda nondum vulgatus in Pauli Epistolas. Unum . . . ad 2 Cor. v.; duo ad 2 Tim. iv."

² Bellarmine pronounces "[sententiam] contrariam vel esse hæresim, vel errorem hæresi proximum."—De Rom. Pont., iii. 6.

De Lyra,¹ Antoninus suppose them to be Pope Sylverius and the Patriarch Mennas, the great opponents of the Eutychian heresy.

iii. "Communis sententia aliorum est, hæc ad ultima mundi et Anticristi tempora pertinere;" and C. à Lapidè names, as the companion of Elijah—Enoch, or Moses, or Elisha, or Jeremiah.

Coming to yet later times:—"We can understand no others," writes Stern, "than Enoch and Elijah." Heinrichs, Züllig, Bleek, repeat the reference to Moses and Elijah, while Ewald hesitates between Moses and Enoch. De Burgh concludes that "God will raise up two, of whom Joshua and Zerubbabel were but faint types" (p. 213); and Todd considers "that in the latter times two prophets will be raised up in the Jewish Church with miraculous powers similar to those once possessed by Moses and Elijah" (p. 194).

Among "Preterists":—Grotius refers Rev.

¹ On this opinion of De Lyra, Düsterdieck asks, "How can Sylverius and Mennas be more justly held to be 'testes veritatis,' than the Waldenses, whose testimony (as Vitringa and others maintain), delivered by John Huss and Jerome of Prague, came to life again in Luther and Melancthon?" Bishop Newton arrives at the same result as Vitringa, with a slight variation,—viz., the Waldenses and Albigenses; Huss and Jerome of Prague; Luther and Calvin; Cranmer and Ridley, and their followers. According to Mr. Cunningham, the "Witnesses" are Luther and his followers; and according to Mr. Faber the "Vallenses and Albigenses" who, he maintains, were the only two churches of the West which were "exempt from apostate idolatry during the whole term of the latter 'three times and a half.'" Vitringa, however, candidly admits: "Inter Albigenses . . . fuerunt zelotæ . . . qui liberi non fuerunt ab erroribus Manichæismi."—l. c., p. 466; see above on ver. 6.

xi. to the destruction of Jerusalem by Hadrian; and he takes the "Two Witnesses" to be "duo conventus Christianorum"—a Hebrew-speaking and a Greek-speaking church at Jerusalem; "The Beast" of ver. 7 being Barchochab, the destruction of whose party within the city is described in ver. 13, and whose destruction outside the city is referred to in ver. 15. With Herder, Eichhorn, and others, the "Witnesses" are the two High Priests Ananus and Jesus, who were put to death by the Zealots in Jerusalem (Joseph. B. J. iv. 2, &c.). Bossuet thinks that the "Two Witnesses" were meant to signify that in the early heathen persecutions martyrs would be taken from the clergy, represented by Joshua, son of Josedech, in Zech. iii. 1; and from the laity, represented by Zerubbabel;—the words "when they shall have finished their witness" (ver. 7), indicating the persecution of Diocletian, the last effort of Paganism to destroy the Church. Stuart (l. c., p. 226) takes the meaning to be that a competent number of faithful Christian witnesses should bear testimony against the corrupt Jews during the last days of their commonwealth. Following the same line Volkmar is quite certain that they can only be James "the greater" (Acts xii. 2) who was beheaded A.D. 44; and James "the less" who was stoned A.D. 61. Renan describes the "deux témoins comme deux personnages importants de l'Eglise de Jérusalem, deux . . . comme Elie et Jésus," and it is not impossible that they may be the two Jameses (see Volkmar above);—"peut-être aussi l'un de ces prédicateurs de pénitence est-il Jean-Baptiste, l'autre Jésus (Matt. xvii. 9-13)."—p. 405. On the other hand, Reuss decides: "Ces deux prophètes sont, à n'en pas douter, Moïse et Elie" (in loc., p. 92).

CHAPTER XII.

1 A woman clothed with the sun travaileth.
4 The great red dragon standeth before her, ready to devour her child: 6 when she was delivered she fleeth into the wilderness. 7

Michael and his angels fight with the dragon, and prevail. 13 The dragon being cast down into the earth, persecuteth the woman.

AND there appeared a great

[Ver. 2 καὶ κρᾶζει. Ver. 5 ἄρσεν.—πρὸς τὸν θρ. Ver. 6 ἔχει ἐκεῖ.—τρέφουσιν. Ver. 7 τοῦ πολεμήσαι μετὰ. Ver. 8 οὐδέ. Ver. 10 ἐν τῷ οὐρ. λέγουσαν.—ἐβλήθη. Ver. 12 οὐ. 1st ol.—om. τοῖς κατοικοῦσι. Ver. 13 ἄρσεν. Ver. 14 αἱ δύο. Ver. 15 ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ before ὁπίσω τῆς γυν.—αὐτήν. Ver. 17 τὴν μαρτ. Ἰησοῦ.—om. Χριστοῦ. Ver. 18 καὶ ἐστάθη.]

THE WOMAN AND HER THREE ENEMIES (ch. xii. 1—xiii. 18).

The Fourth chief Vision of the Revelation Proper now opens:—see Intro. §. 12.

The Seer now beholds "the Woman" by whom the Church of God is symbolized (ver. 1), and also her Three Enemies—the Dragon of ver. 3, and the two Beasts of

ch. xiii. 1, 11. The Dragon (Satan) had from the beginning proved himself to be the enemy of Christ, and had endeavoured to destroy Him at His Incarnation (ver. 4)—doubtless by the instrumentality of Herod. Not succeeding in this (ver. 5), Satan seeks to destroy the Church (vv. 13-17); and for this purpose, he employs two instruments—the two Beasts of ch. xiii. In the present chapter we are given the first of the pictures which represent the hostility of the Church's three Enemies. Most writers are agreed that we are now referred back to the origin of the Christian dispensation—in other words that St. John now "recapitulates." Hitherto, in the Apocalypse, "they that dwell on the earth" have been Christ's foes; henceforward Satan and his instruments appear in active hostility.

10, sign. ¹wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:

Auberlen divides this chapter into three parts:—the first two parts describe the condition, in St. John's time, (1) of the Church or Kingdom of God (vv. 1-6), and (2) of the kingdom of darkness (7-12). We are then shown (3) the relation of the two kingdoms from that time onwards (vv. 13-17)—p. 260.

There is, as usual, much diversity of opinion as to the details. Lücke (s. 355) regards ch. xii. 1-xxii. 5, as forming the second chief series of Apocalyptic Visions—the Seer now returning to the past, and taking his stand in the drama of the world's history. De Wette regards ch. xii.-xiv. as forming a new episode like ch. x.-xi. 13, and as introducing a new scene. Hengst. also connects as a distinct group chapters xii., xiii. and xiv.—ch. xiv. consoling the faithful oppressed by the Three great Enemies of God. Todd, in like manner, combines the same group of chapters:—these chapters contain, as he interprets, the first of the Visions "supplemental" to the Seals and Trumpets;—they "fill up the outline which had been before revealed" (p. 226).

Döllinger (The first age of the Church, Engl. tr., vol. i. p. 173) considers that the Seer reverts to the birth of Christ—the Child born of "The Woman" (i.e., the Church in its earlier Jewish and present Christian form)—Whom Satan waits to devour through his instrument Herod (Matt. ii.). Wordsworth understands a retrospect to the first age of Christianity; he sees here a prophetic view of the future history of the Church; but still, he adds, "not in her universality but in her relation to a particular power—the power of Rome." Elliott makes the fourth and supplemental part of the Apoc. which treats of the "Beast from the Abyss," or Popedom, to begin here: it extends from ch. xii. 1 to ch. xiv. 8, and was written "on the back" of the Roll, and forms a chronological retrogression (see on ch. v. 1);—a persecuting Beast had been spoken of in ch. xi. 7; and, as it was necessary to give the history of his rise and reign, hence this episode. On opposite principles Stuart takes ch. xii.-xix. to describe the "Second Catastrophe," or destruction of the Roman persecuting power; as ch. vi.-xi. describes the "First Catastrophe," or destruction of the Jewish persecuting power:—Satan had done his utmost to destroy the Church in Judæa, before he began to stir up active persecution abroad. Auberlen, developing his parallel between the Book of Daniel and the Apocalypse, observes that "Woman and Beast" form the same contrast here as in Daniel "the Son of Man and the four beasts:" the Son of Man in Dan. vii. 13 is seen to come from heaven;—here (ver. 1) the Woman is seen in heaven. The beasts rise from the sea in Dan. vii. 3;—and so in Rev. xiii. 1 the Beast. In both the human is opposed to the bestial; only with Daniel in male, with John in female shape. Herein the contrast between the kingdom of God and that of the world is symbolized. Daniel beholds the Man, the Bridegroom, the Messiah;—John beholds the Woman, the Bride, the Church of God in the world.—I.e., p. 240. See below on ver. 1.

As a "Futurist" Bisping thus explains:—Ch. xii. 1-17 sets forth the state of things at the close of the first half of the last World-week, when the Jews shall have, almost all of them, embraced Christianity (ch. xi. 13); when the Church of Christ shall have awakened to new life; when Christ shall have been, as it were, born anew within her. On this awakening of the Church, the rage of Satan is inflamed against her, and she must withdraw, in the face of persecution, from the world into concealment. But her triumph over all her foes has been already secured in heaven (s. 187).

CHAP. XII.—THE WOMAN (1-17).

1. And a great sign] See ch. xv. 1. "A sign"—cf. "he signified" ch. i. 1. The Vision is thus declared to be figurative; it exhibits two tokens of a revelation—the Woman, and the Dragon. The figurative character of this Vision, being more remote from things actual than were the objects seen in the preceding Visions, suggests this term.

was seen] Compare ch. xi. 19. in heaven;] Where the Seer beholds what is revealed, and whence the "Dragon" is cast out, compare vv. 3, 7, 9, and the words "the sign of the Son of Man in heaven," Matt. xxiv. 30: see also Luke ii. 34, "a sign which shall be spoken against." Bengel explains: "The Woman, the Church, though on earth, is, nevertheless by virtue of her union with Christ, in heaven,"—see Eph. ii. 6; Phil. iii.

20. According to Hengst., St. John is "in the Spirit;" and to be "in the Spirit and to be in heaven are the same,"—see Ezek. i. 1; and cf. Rev. iv. 1, 2; x. 1.

a woman] Scripture continually represents the relation of God to His Church as that of a husband to his wife:—Isai. liv. 5; John iii. 29; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 25, 32.

See Note A at the end of this chapter.

clothed with the sun,] We have here an ideal picture of the Church of God, the true Israel, the Bride, the spiritual mother of Jesus Christ. As such she wears the crown of "Twelve Stars." Düsterdieck thus sums up the import of this figurative description: "The 'Woman' who gives birth to the Messiah (ver. 5), and has yet other 'seed' (ver. 17), can only be the Old Testament Church of God, the true Israel. John had already been taught by the representations of the ancient prophets to ascribe 'seed' to this Church, and to regard her as Mother of her children, the faithful and godly (cf. Isai. liv. 1, 13; lxvi. 8): the description, moreover, of vv. 2, 5, has not arisen without a reminiscence of Micah v. 1-3" (s. 420). St. John, in fact, definitely represents the Gentile Church ("the rest of her seed," ver. 17) as belonging to the "seed of the woman" (see John iv. 22; Gal. iii. 7, 16), and, so far forth, as brethren of the Messiah. Compare Micah v. 3,—"The remnant of his brethren,"—on which Dr. Pusey notes: "'His brethren' are plainly the brethren of the Christ; either because Jesus vouchsafed to be born 'of the seed of David' (Rom. i. 3); . . . or as such as He makes and accounts and 'is not ashamed to call, brethren' (Heb. ii. 11), being sons of God by grace, as He is the Son of God by nature. . . . In the first sense, Micah foretells the continual inflow of the Jews to that true Israel who should first be called. . . . But . . . there is no reason to take the name 'brethren' here in a narrower sense than so to comprehend all 'the remnant whom the Lord shall call' (Joel ii. 32), whether Jews or Gentiles."—The Minor Prophets, p. 334. Hengst. expresses the same result: The "Woman" is not the community of Israel in contradistinction to the Christian Church (see vv. 6, 14-17); nor, on the other hand, the Christian Church in contradistinction to Israel; but "the Woman," or Zion (cf. Micah iv. 10), is properly the one indivisible community of the Old and New Covenant—the Israel perpetuated in the Christian Church out of which the false seed has been cast by its unbelief. Auberlen observes that the reference of the "Twelve Stars" to both the Twelve Tribes, and the Twelve Apostles (see Note A at the end of this chapter), implies that "the Woman" represents not only the ancient Jewish Church, but likewise the Church of God in its New Testament form:—after the Ascension Israel ceased to be the congregation of God (Dan. ix.); and yet in Rev. xii. 6, 13, "the Woman" is spoken of after the Ascension (ver. 5). The reference of this symbol to the Church cannot therefore be limited to any particular period or epoch (p. 247).

On the other hand, Ebrard excludes the Christian Church. After Hofmann, he refers to Isai. vii. 14; Micah iv. 10: and understands here the daughter of Zion, Israel—"qua receiver of the promises" (Rom. ix. 3-5). "Hæc mulier," wrote St. Augustine, "antiqua est Civitas Dei . . . Utque de nato quodam in Zion psalmus dicit. (Ps. lxxxvii. 3, 5) . . . et illa mulier, Civitas Dei, ejus luce protegebatur, cujus carne gravidabatur" (Enarr. in Psalm. cxlii., Opp., iv. p. 2264).

On the "Futurist" scheme, Stern, after St. Hippolytus (De Anticr., c. 61), considers that the 1260 days (ver. 6) do not allow us to mistake the time of Antichrist; and hence "the Woman" denotes "the Church-teaching of the Last Time." To the same effect De Burgh relies on Isai. lxvi. 5-9; he considers that "the Woman" is not an emblem of the Christian Church at all; and he can "find no accurate correspondence to the emblem except in the Jewish nation . . . pregnant with the expectation of the Coming of the Lord" (pp. 228-235); and so Todd: "The Woman . . . is the nation of Israel at the period of her future promised glory" (p. 243).

In direct contrast to such interpretations is that, whether ancient or modern, which explains (as Words.): "The Woman in this Vision is the Christian Church."

As a "Preterist" Bossuet (and so Elliott who takes "heaven" to mean "the heaven of the political world") interprets this prophecy of the persecutions of the Church under Diocletian, Galerius, and Licinius, from A.D. 303 to A.D. 323. This opinion rests upon the three periods in the hostility of "the Dragon": (1) before he is cast out of heaven (ver. 9); (2) after he is cast out (ver. 13); (3) the attack after the Woman's flight (ver. 15).

So early as Cent. iii., Methodius (ap. Cramer, Catena, p. 352), as subsequently Andreas (l.c., p. 62), rejected the opinion that the Woman was the Virgin Mary. St. Bernard, however, did not think the application to the Blessed Virgin unsuitable ("Putasne ipsa [Maria] est sole amicta mulier? Esto siquidem, ut de præsentis Ecclesie id intelligendum prophetice Visionis series ipsa demonstret; sed id plane non inconvenienter Mariæ videtur attribuendum."—Sermo de XII. prærog. B. V. Mariæ, § 3. The statement of C. à Lapide and others that St. Augustine made this application, is unfounded:—the Benedictine editors of St. Augustine's works point out that the sermons "De Symbolo, ad

2 And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

3 And there appeared another ¹Or, sign wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads

Catechumenos," in which this opinion appears; are spurious (ap. S. August. Opp., t. vi., p. 965; see Todd, p. 234). Hengst., nevertheless, writes: "That the Church here was seen in the type of the Virgin Mary, or that the Secr perceived in the Virgin Mary an image of the Church, is rendered probable by ver. 4" (see also below on ver. 6). Stern (s. 303) altogether rejects this interpretation.

To apply the symbolism here exclusively to either the Jewish or the Christian Church fails to meet the requirements of the language used. Burger tries to meet this difficulty by understanding "the Woman" to be the Church of Christ in her final condition, and including converted Israel (Rom. ix. 27).

and the moon under her feet,] See Cant. vi. 10. She appears in the glory of all the luminaries which adorn the heavens. The old writers understand by this description that the sun rules the day of the Gospel (Isai. lxi.). "The moon under her feet" signifies what the Law, the Legal Israel, became to the Christian Church—not a yoke or a bondage, but a foundation.

and on her head a crown of twelve stars;] Bengel notes that the Stars are not "stars of heaven" (ver. 4). On the word "crown," see on ch. ii. 10. The number of Stars in this place—the sacred number of the Tribes of Israel—represents, according to Victorinus, the Twelve Patriarchs—"the Fathers, of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came." The "crown of twelve Stars," notes Reuss, "recalls the ideal totality of the true Israel." This number, now represented by the Twelve Apostles, has become a crown of Stars:—cf. ch. xxi. 12, 14. Ewald (see Note C on ver. 3) states that (the Arabic) Hippolytus understands by the Woman, the Church;—by the sun which radiated around her, the Messiah;—by the Moon under her feet, John the Baptist;—and by the crown of Stars, the Twelve Apostles.

"Twelve," observes Stern, "being the signature of perfection, all Saints are symbolized here." Many refer to Gen. xxxvii. 9 as the source of the symbolism;—there, however, we read of but eleven stars.

"The old world has often been called a male world," writes Mr. Maurice (pp. 208-212): "The reverence for women was indeed cultivated in the Jew by all his institutions; but the dread lest some other than a male standard of worth should creep in to the state, was a chief reason why the elder Romans dreaded the incursion of the art and learning of Greece." In Greece Pallas and Aphrodite had disputed the supremacy with Apollo; and upon this subject of the male and female ideals the present Vision may throw a light. The "wonder" which the Apostle saw—the mother and the child—is "the wonder which has accompanied Christendom through all the different stages of its life and growth." It has "been present to all who have tried to satisfy themselves what the human is, and how it is related to the Divine." The description of the Woman "here is a very striking symbol of humanity. . . . But though more perfect than anything that the world had yet seen, it is still imperfect. Something is needed to connect this female ideal with the male ideal of the former ages. That must be expanded as well as this. There must be a man-child."

2. and she was with child:] Gr. "and being with child"—these words are in concord with "a Woman."

and she crieth out, travailing in birth,] (See vv. 11). For the application to the former Church of God, see Isai. lxvi. 7, 8, and the notes in loc. So likewise in a later age our Lord speaks of His Church in her early trials—see John xvi. 21.

and in pain to be delivered.] (On the constr. of the infin. see Winer, § 44, s. 291 ff.). "In this world the Church, like Eve, brings forth children in sorrow" (Words.). Ewald notes that the old prophets described under this image the "Woes of Messiah" (e.g. Isai. xxvi. 17; Hos. xiii. 13); and so Christ Himself, Matt. xxiv. 8. "What more appropriate symbol," writes Auberlen, "of the Old Test. Church?" . . . "The most ardent longing of the ancient Patriarchs . . . was nothing else but what Isaiah expressed: 'Unto us a Child is born,' &c.—Isai. ix. 6" (p. 244).

THE GREAT RED DRAGON (3-17).

3. And there was seen another sign in heaven;] In addition to "the sign" of ver. 1 there is here another figurative description—not the description of a person, but the symbol of Satan as representative and author of all that is evil on earth and opposed to God and Christ: see Ebrard, quoted on ch. ix. 2. "In heaven," notes Words., because the Church, "the kingdom of heaven" is assailed.

and behold, a great red dragon,] The word "red" (see ch. vi. 4) denotes either "flame-coloured" as the type of destruction (ch. ix. 17); or "blood-red" the type of murder, and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was John viii. 44—cf. ch. xvii. 6. With this description compare that of ch. xvii. 3.

The word "Dragon" in the N. Test. appears only in this Book: the term is that employed in the LXX. to render the tannin of Ex. vii. 9 ("a serpent"), and of Jer. li. 34 ("a dragon")—see the note in loc.). It is also used for the leviatban of Job xli. 1:—see the note on Isai. xxvii. 1, and also Note B at the end of this chapter. In vv. 9, 13–16 we find the names Satan and Devil, the Hebrew and Greek names; also Serpent and Dragon—the names Serpent and Dragon being interchanged in vv. 13, 15. We are thus referred to Gen. iii. 1. Isai. xxvii. 1 supplies the source, and explains the appropriateness of this symbol; for "Leviathan" ("the Dragon" in the LXX) is there the symbol of Babylon, the power hostile to the people of God. So in Ezek. xxix. 3, the "Dragon" (LXX.; Heb., tannim, or tannin) is the emblem of Pharaoh, King of Egypt (doubtless the crocodile is referred to—see the note on Ezek. xxix. 3); and Egypt was ever the bitter enemy of the elder Church. This reference to Pharaoh illustrates that title of Satan which is found only in St. John, "Prince of this world" (John xii. 31; xiv. 30; xvi. 11). Observe, "the Dragon" is not the emblem of Satan generally, but of Satan in the particular relation of "Prince of this world."

Mr. Maurice notes: During the 1260 days—the three or four years at the end of which Jerusalem fell—Rome was passing through a death-struggle: and this crisis signified the struggle "whether humanity shall have its true and righteous King, or whether another power shall rule over it, and receive its homage. That power is represented as a bloody Dragon" (p. 213).

seven heads and ten horns,] On the numbers seven and ten, see on ch. xiii. 1. As to the import of this symbolism we must compare ch. xiii., and ch. xvii. The questions, as to how the "Ten Horns" are to be divided among the "Seven Heads"—each of which bears a royal Diadem (see Note D on ch. ii. 10), and what the proper meaning or reference of these Heads, Horns, and Diadems is, are not to be answered from ch. xii. alone. Satan, as the source of universal hostility to God, now appears in a form similar to that of the Beast—the Antichrist of the Christian era (see ch. xiii. 1; xvii. 3). Of this St. John gives the explanation in ch. xvii. 9–12. The "Ten Horns" are taken from the description of the fourth beast of Daniel (vii. 7, 20). De Wette suggests that the "Seven Heads" are a symbol of wisdom, and the "Ten Horns" a symbol of power,—the numbers seven and ten being the well-known symbolic numbers, and having here no more definite meaning than the number "one-third" in ver. 4. Similarly Stern (s. 305) regards the "Seven Heads" as types of the wisdom of the idolatrous powers of the world. Without any definite reference Beda explains: "Diabolus potentia terreni regni armatur. In septem capitibus omnes reges suos, et in decem cornibus omne regnum dicit."

The "Seven Heads," writes Auberlen, are a caricature of the Seven Spirits of God (ch. i. 4; iii. 1; iv. 5; v. 6); while the "Ten Horns" represent the World-element (p. 267). See Introd. § 11, (a).

and upon his heads seven diadems.] The "diadem" (a word found in the N. T. only here, in ch. xiii. 1, and in ch. xix. 12) is the symbol of royalty—see, above, the title "Prince of this world." In accordance with this title the "Seven Heads," with their diadems, signify universality of earthly dominion.

The Dragon has Seven diadems on his Heads; the Beast in ch. xiii. 1 has Ten diadems on his Horns, and in ch. xvii. 3 has no diadems. There is no ground in the text for any opinion as to the relation of the "Ten Horns" to the "Seven Heads": and in a symbolical description of this nature it is generally as profitless to attempt an explanation in words, as it is tasteless to represent pictorially (as Alcasar, Bengel, Züllig, Elliott, and others have done) the form of the Apocalyptic emblems. In the present case, however, the whole question of interpretation is involved. Thus Vitranga (p. 523), distinguishing the symbolism here from that in ch. xiii. 1, and understanding by "the Dragon" the persecuting Roman Empire on the eve of the accession of Constantine,—under the sway of Diocletian, Maximian, Galerius, Constantius Chlorus, Maximin, Severus, and Maxentius,—argues that the middle and greatest Head (viz. Diocletian) bears the "Ten Horns," i.e., rules over ten provinces. Bengel, Hengst., Ebrard, &c. infer (see on ch. xiii. 1) that the "Ten Horns" are borne by the seventh Head;—De Wette and Züllig, think that four of the Heads have each one Horn, and each of the remaining three two Horns;—while Düsterd. concludes that, if St. John had any definite intuition here, he may have given one Horn to each Head, and placed the remaining three Horns between the fifth and sixth Heads: see on ch. xvii. 10.

Ebrard notes that because "the Dragon" is ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

5 And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations

"the Prince of this world," he bears as his Heads and Horns the Seven successive World-monarchies, and the last Ten contemporary kingdoms; while according to Renan we here regard "Satan under the features of the most powerful of his incarnations, the Roman Empire" (p. 407). Mede also regards "the Dragon" as the symbol of the heathen Roman Empire. Perhaps the earliest attempt to explain the "Seven Heads" as symbolizing the Seven World-kingdoms is that of St. Hippolytus in his commentary on the Apocalypse, some portions of which have been recovered in an Arabic manuscript described by Ewald. Of this some account is given in Note C at the end of this chapter.

The Horns are the symbols of power (see on ch. v. 6); and the numbers seven and ten signify completeness and extensive authority. See on ch. xiii. 1 as to the characteristics here described, which, as belonging to his chief representative and instrument, Satan now assumes; and compare Note C on ch. xi. 7.

4. draweth the third part of the stars of heaven,] The present tense here points to the work which the spirit of evil is always doing in the Church. "The Dragon" like the "Woman" is in heaven, but the "stars of heaven" here are not those of her crown. I. Williams observes that as this particular is mentioned before the persecution of the "Man Child," it must contain some earlier reference; and he suggests (as Andr., Arethas, Victorinus, &c., had done) that the reference may be to the angels (see Jude 6) whom Satan drew down with himself to perdition. To the same effect Burger;—who explains that "the Dragon" has subjected to himself, by means of these fallen spirits, this world and its kingdoms, and is thus able to use the words of Luke iv. 6. De Wette, Ewald, Bleek, understand some violence exercised on God's kingdom of light.

The "third part" seems to have the same meaning as under the Trumpets—see on ch. viii. 7. Mede accordingly explains these words to signify that the Roman Empire (see on ver. 3) has reduced to subjection "the third part" of the princes and dynasties of the world (p. 459).

On a different principle Elliott concludes that by the edict of Milan, A.D. 313, the Church gained toleration in Europe and Africa: in Asia, however, she was still persecuted—the Pagan Roman power being now reduced to one-third of its former extent. And thus the Dragon's tail drew down only a third part of the stars of the political heaven.

Vitringa, Bengel, and others understand

New Test.—VOL. IV.

here the persecution of the pastors of the Church;—Hengst. the overthrow of earthly rulers, as in Dan. viii. 10;—Stern the seduction by Satan of professing Christians who had once held high place in the Church.

Reuss notes that the Dragon's tail quenching the lights of heaven is the symbolical form of expressing the notion of the Prince of darkness.

and did cast them to the earth:] The symbolism here is plainly taken from Dan. viii. 10; as the "Ten Horns" are borrowed from Dan. vii. 7. Alf. sees in this description an emblem of "the magnitude and fury of the Dragon;"—Stuart merely a token of his power;—Ebrard notes that "the Dragon" is a power in heaven and on earth; this, he adds, agrees with his seduction of the angels.

and the dragon stood before the woman] Or, standeth, Pliny (H. N., viii. 3) states that unlike other serpents, the dragon "celsus et erectus in medio incedit."

which was about to be delivered, that when she was delivered, he might devour her child.] Words. notes: "His design is like those of his . . . instruments, Pharaoh in Egypt, and Herod in Jewry; the former against the male children of Israel who were to be cast into the river Nile (Ex. i. 22), the other seeking to destroy the Man Child, Christ Jesus" (Matt. ii. 13).

5. And she was delivered of a son, a man child,] (See vv. 11.). Gr. "a son, a male" (τέκνον being understood)—if indeed we should not read here, in place of the neuter, the masculine (ἄρσεν) as in ver. 13. Düsterd. refers to Jer. xx. 15 (Hebr.), and explains the form by the design of the Seer to draw attention to the sex of the Child. Beda thought that the design was to designate the Child as conqueror of "the Dragon" ("victorem diaboli qui foeminam vicerat"). Bengel, Hengst., and others, adducing Isai. lxvi. 7, see a reference, in the emphasis thus given, to the words which immediately follow. Bisping compares Gen. iv. 1, where Eve, when she "bare Cain," supposed that she "had gotten a man [אִישׁ] from the Lord"—"a Man Child" who was to bruise the Serpent's head.

who is to rule] Gr. "to tend as a shepherd." See Ps. ii. 9 (LXX.), and the note on ch. ii. 27.

all the nations with a rod of iron:] The reference to Christ, in ch. xix. 15, of these words from the Messianic Psalm, proves that what in Isai. lxvi. 7 was, primarily, but a personification has at length found its pro-with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should found realization in "the man Christ Jesus," in and by Whom alone can the Church bring forth her children. As in Gen. iii. the Seed of the woman and the seed of the Serpent, so in the Apoc. the Son of Man and the Beast are parallel antitheses. "At first sight," notes Words., "these words appear applicable only to Christ;" but what is true primarily of Him is transferred to the members of His body. What St. Paul says of himself (Gal. iv. 19) is true of the Church which 'travails in birth again until Christ be formed' in her children. What Ps. ii. 9 foretells of Christ, He himself applies to his faithful ones in ch. ii. 26, 27. And thus Christ Himself has interpreted the present Vision:—"The rod of iron, is the Holy Scripture, and by it the male children, the masculine spirits of Christ's Church rule the Nations, and overcome the World"—see ch. iii. 21. In opposition to this view, Alf., following Düsterd., writes: "The Man Child is the Lord Jesus Christ, and none other." Alf. rejects one half of the interpretation; while Ribera and Stern (s. 307), with equal certainty, reject the other half: "Chapter xii. 5, cannot be referred to Christ" ("nicht auf Christum bezogen werden dürfe"), because, after His Ascension he needed no more to be rescued from Satan whom He has conquered by his death and Cross; and Stern refers the whole passage to the newly converted, to those who are "born again" in the persecution of Antichrist:—so Bisping also, as quoted above. According to Renan the "Woman" is Israel, and the "Man Child" the Messianic ideal (Micah iv. 10). For Auberlen's explanation see Note A at the end of this chapter.

and her child was caught up] Because this phrase "caught up" is not used elsewhere of the Ascension, Burger refuses to see in this passage a reference to "the birth of the Lord in Bethlehem." In ch. vii. 9-14, he adds, the conquerors of "the Dragon" stand before the throne; and so here "the Woman"—the Church of Christ—is not destroyed, but her "men children" the conquerors of "the Dragon" are removed from the evil of earth by death, and "caught up" to the throne of God, and to the Lamb.

According to Sir I. Newton, after Constantine's victory over Maxentius (A.D. 312) the Church brought forth "a Man Child"—a Christian Empire, which (A.D. 323) by the victory over Licinius was "caught up unto God". (l. c., p. 466).

unto God, and unto his throne.] (See vv.

11.). As in ch. xi. 12, where the Ascension is referred to, so here the primary sense is the session of Christ at the right hand of God: "Christ our King and Priest 'has made us Kings and Priests to God.' By His Ascension into heaven we are even made 'to sit together with Him in heavenly places' (Eph. i. 20; ii. 6), and our 'citizenship is in heaven'—Phil. iii. 20" (Words.). The interpretation that from the first the Church, always in pain, is bringing forth Christ in His members, while "the Dragon" is always seeking to devour the new birth—Alford does not notice. He merely opposes to his own literal application to our Lord (and he pronounces every interpretation which oversteps this measure to be "convicted of error") the opinion of Elliott that the words are fulfilled by the "mighty issue of the consummated birth of a son of the Church, a baptized Emperor, to political supremacy in the Roman Empire, . . . united with the solemn public profession of the divinity of the Son of Man" (vol. iii. p. 24). Elliott indeed, merely follows Mede, who sees in the words a prediction of the triumph of Christianity in the Roman Empire; not only its spiritual triumph, but also the victories of Constantine and Theodosius over the enemies of the Church: and so, for the most part, Brightman, Vittr., Bishop Newton, &c. According to De Burgh the words are "simply intended to convey the entire failure of Satan to prevent the kingdom of Christ;" though that kingdom be delayed during the Woman's flight to the wilderness (p. 236). "The prophecy," writes Todd, "presents difficulties which I know not how to solve" (p. 243).

6. And the woman fled] It is generally allowed that this verse is interposed here in anticipation of ver. 14. The further hostility of "the Dragon" to the "Child" (ver. 7, &c.) cannot be detailed until the fate of the "Woman" has been recorded. Her flight (ver. 14) follows the victory of the Archangel, when "the Dragon," discomfited in his attack upon Christ, turns against her (ver. 13). In ch. xiii. 2-6 set forth the means which he employs for the purpose of uprooting the Christian faith.

Hengst. and Auberlen regard the flight of the Virgin Mary and the child Jesus through the wilderness to Egypt (Matt. ii. 13) as a type of the flight of the ideal mother of Jesus here and in ver. 14.

into the wilderness,] I.e., to the scene of her temptation, as it was of Christ's;—to the place of her conflict "prepared of God," and "where she is nourished" (ver. 14). The feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

7 And there was war in heaven : Michael and his angels fought against

"Woman" has no city on earth, because she seeks the City which is to come (Heb. xiii. 14)—she has only a place in the wilderness. See Deut. viii. 2-5; Hos. ii. 14—texts which recall the flight of the ancient Church when persecuted by "the Dragon" through Pharaoh.

Döllinger refers to the days of Antiochus when the faithful fled from Jerusalem, 1 Macc. ii. 29.

where she hath a place prepared of God,] (See vv. 11.). Gr. "where she hath there;" the "relative adverb" (ἐκεῖ) is redundant, as occurs in relative sentences: see the note on ch. vi. 4, and cf. below ver. 14. On the prep. (ἀπό) see ch. ix. 18.

The Harlot is afterwards found in a wilderness (ch. xvii. 3), but not in "a place prepared of God."

The "place prepared of God" in "the wilderness" corresponds, according to Burger, to the land of Canaan; and to this land of its fathers converted Israel is to return shortly before the great ascendancy of Antichrist:—see on ch. xi. 2.

that there they may nourish her] (N and C read the indic. after iva). The subject of the verb is indefinite; the passive is used in ver. 14:—see Auberlen's remark on the third person plural, quoted on ch. x. 11.

Compare Mark i. 13 — "The Angels ministered unto Him."

a thousand two hundred and threescore days.] See ver. 14, and the remarks on ch. xi. 2, 3 where the same, or an equivalent space of time, is referred to; see also Note B on ch. xi. 2. This period of the woman's sojourn in "the wilderness" (1260 days = the 3½ years or "times" of ver. 14) represents in the Apoc., according to Daniel's predictions, the duration of the conflict between the world and the Church,—"the time of the World-power, in which the earthly kingdoms rule over the heavenly" (Auberlen, p. 252),—the broken week of Dan. ix. 27. This period, we have seen, is described symbolically in ch. xi. 2, as that during which "the Holy City" is trodden down by the Gentiles. The "wilderness" is in prophetic language the type of Israel's exile (see Isai. xli. 17-19; Jer. ii. 2; Ezek. xx. 13; Hos. ii. 14-15). The Child being "caught up unto God" and the flight of the Woman—the Ascension of Christ and the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus—are parallel events; and this period of 1260 days embraces the whole duration of the Church's exile, from the date of that destruction to the End of all things. Ebrard understands here (see on ver. 1) that the "Woman," being the representative of Israel "qua the object of the promises," must be preserved; and accordingly that Israel is not extirpated by the fourth World-power, the Roman Empire, but preserved by God in its national separation from other peoples (s. 363). Bisping, as above, refers to converted Israel, but "during the last anti-Christian persecution, . . . during the whole of the last world-week" (see on ch. ix. 12; xi. 2).

Cocceius, Vitruvius, Bengel understand by the flight the passage of Christianity from the Jews to the Gentiles; and so Auberlen (p. 247),—"Whither does the Woman fly after Christ's Ascension? Undoubtedly from the Jews to the heathen." Hence it is said in ver. 5 of "the Man Child" that He is to rule the heathen with an iron sceptre. "The wilderness" and the land of the heathen mean the same thing: there the demons, rulers and princes of the heathen world, dwell (Isai. xxxiv. 14; Matt. xii. 43; Mark i. 13). See especially Isai. xxi. 1-10, "The burden of the desert of the sea,"—the burden of Babylon,—of which passage ver. 9 is quoted in Rev. xiv. 8; and in Rev. xviii. 2. The flight of the "Woman" into "the wilderness" is thus the passage of the Gospel to the Gentiles, as announced in Matt. viii. 11, 12; xxi. 43; Acts xiii. 46, 47; xxviii. 28.

According to Sir I. Newton (ibid.) the "Woman," by the division of the Roman Empire into the Greek and Latin Empires, fled from the "First Temple" (see on ch. xi. 2) into "the wilderness," or spiritually barren Empire of the Latins, where she is found afterwards sitting upon the Beast (ch. xvii.).

Züllig, arguing that all here is historical (which he infers from the use of the present in ver. 14), refers to the early persecutions such as that of Saul (Acts viii. 3), and the escape of the Christians to Lydian Asia;—Herder and Ewald refer to the flight of the Christians from Jerusalem to Pella;—Renan, too, on the theory that the Apoc. was written at the end of A.D. 68, or beginning of A.D. 69, considers that vv. 6, 13-17, prove decisively ("ce qui est décisif") that the flight to Pella (Matt. xxiv. 15; Eus. iii. 5; Epiphanius. De Mens. et Pond., 15) had already taken place, and therefore must have occurred in the early part of A.D. 68 (l.c., p. 296).

THE WAR IN HEAVEN (7-12).

7. And there was war in heaven:] The description here is in the strictest sense symbolical; the imagery and action being founded on other statements of Scripture. The primary the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

object of the present Vision is to foreshadow the conflict and the triumph of the Christian Church: and, in order to indicate at the same time how the Church of the elder and the Church of the later Covenant are but one, the description is founded on the historical events of the past, and is expressed in the language of earlier prophecy. St. John, as Bishop Wordsworth notes, "now reverts to an earlier period, in order to recite the antecedent history of the Dragon, and to explain the circumstances under which he was led on to persecute the Woman; and he traces that history till it is brought down, in ver. 14, to the same point as in ver. 6, namely, to the escape of the Woman in the wilderness." The old conflict of Satan with the powers of heaven was renewed at the Incarnation, and with the same result; and now, in language reflecting the past, the victory of the Cross is the theme. "The passage Rev. xii. 7-11 is referred," writes Archbishop Trench (Studies in the Gospels, p. 229), "by all good expositors to that destroying of the works of the devil which was the consequence of the triumphant life, and death, and Ascension of the Son of God. There is described in its full consummation that which the Lord, (St. Luke x. 18) with prophetic eye, has already beheld." To these words of the Lord, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven," may be added John xii. 31: "Now shall the Prince of this world be cast out." Here (as in ver. 3), "the Dragon" is seen in heaven; and we read to the same effect in Job i., ii.; Zech. iii. That Satan and his angels are now represented as being "in heaven," Stuart explains by the notion of the Jews that evil spirits inhabit the air,—Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12. "The dominion of Satan," writes Godet (l. c., p. 358), "over the mind of the nations by the fascination of idolatry is a phenomenon which results from the elevated position which still, at the present day, he occupies in the supersensible domain, 'in the heavenly places' (Eph. vi. 12):" and Godet regards St. Luke x. 18 as being "the text of the Vision in ch. xii. of the Apocalypse." Auberlen makes the event here described "the turning-point in the history of the Prince and the Kingdom of darkness":—That history has four periods, (1) To the first coming of Christ; (2) From Christ to the beginning of the Millennium; (3) The Millennium itself; (4) Satan is judged. He also sees three stages in the personal conflict of Christ and Satan—(1) The Temptation; (2) The casting out of devils (Luke x. 18); (3) The triumph of the Resurrection and Ascension (cf. Luke xxii. 53)—pp. 253-257.

The "war in heaven," with Ebrard, comes after the 1260 days of ver. 6:—Satan, permitted to accuse Israel during the 1260 days, is cast out (vv. 9, 10); and, for so long, the promises to Israel are not fulfilled: at the end of the days he is conquered by Israel's guardian Angel, Michael (Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1), and Israel is by this victory reconciled (Zech. iii.). To the same effect De Burgh ("I take this war in heaven to be literal," p. 236); and so Stern, who sees here a prediction that Satan will once more collect his powers before Christ's Second Advent:—he suggests too that Satan's presence in heaven foreshows a daring attempt to annihilate the Church in glory. Eichhorn, Herder, Stuart, De Wette, in like manner, suggest that "the Dragon" had pursued the "Cbild" even to God's throne, and that this was the cause of the war. For these assumptions the context gives no ground.

The war in heaven and the victory signify, notes Mr. Maurice (p. 222), that the "Man Child" presented men to God as redeemed and justified.

Michael] On this name see the note on Dan. x. 13. Michael is styled "the Archangel," in Jude 9. He is not to be identified with the "Cbild" (ver. 5), i.e., with Christ, as Vit. and Hengst. allege, any more than the other chief Angels in this Book. As Gabriel ("the man of God") represents the ministry of Angels towards men (Dan. viii. 16; Luke i. 19, 26), so Michael is the type of their strife with Satan, and especially maintains the cause of Israel (Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1; Jude 9)—as of old the cause of Israel after the flesh, so now of the true Israel, the Church.

Words. compares the meaning of the word Michael ("Who is like unto God?") with the words "Who is like unto the Beast?" ch. xiii. 4.

and his angels [going forth] to war with the dragon;] See vv. 11.—a constr. which is without a parallel in the New Test. or the LXX., no verb expressing a design preceding the infm. Words. supplies "go forth," that is, "to fight with;"—I. Williams translates "were to fight with;"—Alf., in his commentary, simply "to fight with," and, in his revised translation, "fighting with." De Wette adheres to the Textus Receptus:—see Note D at the end of this chapter.

and the dragon warred, and his angels; I. Williams explains vv. 7-12 as a parenthetic introduction,—"as the Epinikion or victorious Hymn of the Martyrs,"—as opening the eyes to the mountain filled with the armies of 9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, heaven (2 Kings vi. 17): "As the foregoing account had gone back to the Incarnation, and took the analogy from the earlier fall of Satan, so is this expressed in words that might relate to the same" (p. 226).

Elliott sees here the conflict between paganism and Christianity in "the heaven" to which the Christian body politic is exalted:—a war between "the Captain of the Lord's host" and the apostate Emperor Licinius. Sir I. Newton's conclusion is to the same effect.

The comment of Réville (l. c., p. 87) is, "The Devil, before being conquered in our world, must first be conquered in the heavenly world. Singular parallel to the Platonic theory of ideas!"

8. And they prevailed not:] See Jude 6, where we find another reference to the facts on which the symbolism here is founded.

not even was their place found any more in heaven.] See vv. ll.,—the true reading (οὐδέ), "not even," presents a climax: "The Dragon and his angels not only failed to conquer, but they could not even maintain their place in heaven." The power of Satan is now broken, and ver. 11 tells by what means. Hofmann, Auberlen, Ebrard interpret that "until the Ascension of Christ, the demons were in heaven like the other Angels." This notion is based on the words "any more" in this verse; and reference is also made to Job i. 6; ii. 1; while both in 1 Kings xxii. 19–22, and Zech. iii. 1, 2, Satan is represented, as in ver. 10, as "the Accuser." Ebrard further holds that Satan remains "in heaven" even after the Ascension, until the end of the 1260 days—i.e., until the end of the world.

Burger rejects all reference to the past—either to the fall of the Angels, or to what is meant in John xii. 31; Luke x. 18: Satan's enmity to Israel is intended, which comes to an end when Israel is hereafter converted, and Michael, Israel's guardian Angel, has overcome its Accuser.

Paganism, notes Elliott, met with its third and final defeat A.D. 324.

9. And the great dragon was cast down,] Compare ch. xx. 2; and also the reference to this passage by Papias, quoted in Introd., § 2, No. (3). Bishop Lightfoot points out that Arethas and Anastasius of Sinai illustrate the fact here referred to by Ezek. xxviii. 16,—Contemp. Rev., Oct. 1875, p. 845.

the old serpent,] Cf. Gen. iii.; 2 Cor. xi.

3; and the words "from the beginning," John viii. 44.

he that is called the Devil] See on ch. ii. 10; and cf. ch. xx. 2, 10, for the absence and for the presence of the article which is absent here.

and Satan,] See ch. ii. 9; John xiii. 27—in Hebræo-Aramaic, "the Adversary:" it is usually rendered by the LXX. "the Devil," e.g. Job i. 6; to which titles is further added here—the deceiver of the whole world;] Cf. ch. xx. 3, 8, 10. The Dragon appears now as the animating principle of the ungodly power of the world.

he was cast down] Cf. Isai. xiv. 12; Luke x. 17, 18—Babylon, the symbol of the evil World-power, being the subject of the former text, and the victory of Christ's ministers over the power of spiritual malignity being the subject of the latter.

to the earth, and his angels were cast down with him.] The being cast down from heaven to earth naturally denotes, under the figure of his original expulsion from heaven, the downfall of Satan's power:—see John xii. 31; 1 John iii. 8. The words of St. Paul in Col. ii. 15 are the key to the meaning of this verse.

The sea, Auberlen observes (p. 245), "is the mighty, troubled ocean of nations (ch. xvii. 15)." "The earth means the consolidated, ordered world of nations; with their civilization and learning; they produce the False Prophet" (ch. xiii. 11). Sea and Earth both stand opposed to heaven (ver. 12).

Elliott quotes the words of Constantine saying that he regarded Licinius as "the Dragon" deposed by God (Vita Constant., ii. 46; iii. 3).

10. And I heard a great voice in heaven saying,] See vv. ll.; cf. ch. xi. 12, 15. The heavenly host celebrate the triumph of the Cross (see on ver. 17):—the speaker, as elsewhere (cf. ch. x. 4), is not specified. The voice describes the import of what the Seer has just written—the victory of believers over the enemies of Christ's kingdom (vv. 10, 11); and denounces woe to the earth and the sea.

The "great voice," notes Reuss, according to the usage of this Book, signifies the voice of Angels; who now call men persecuted by Satan "brethren," and thus add to the consolation proclaimed in this heavenly song. The voice proceeds, notes Ewald, neither from the Angels, nor from the Twenty-four Elders (ch. xi. 16), but, as the term "brethren," proves, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

11 And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

12 Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the

from the glorified Martyrs of ch. vi. 9—11; xix. 1—3. As the song here harmonizes with, and, as it were, completes that in ch. xi. 16—18, Hengst. refers the voice to “the saints of the Old Test.” Ebrard considers it to come from all the Israelites converted down to the end of the 1260 days; or else those converted from all nations, as in ch. vii. 9.

Now is come] Or, Now is the salvation . . . become our God's.] The verb in the aorist is joined to a particle of present time:—in English this is represented by the perfect.

the salvation, and the power, and the kingdom of our God, and the authority of His Christ:] “The Dragon” having been cast down, “the salvation of God” (in the specifically Christian sense, Luke iii. 6), His power, &c., have come. De Wette, combining what is said in ch. vii. 10, and in ch. xix. 1, explains, “now it is seen that salvation is of God.”

for the accuser] See Note E on the form, “Katēgōr,” given in the Cod. Alex. Cf. the titles “Satan,” “the Devil,” “Serpent,” “the Deceiver” (ver. 9; ch. xx. 2, 3).

is cast down,] See vv. 11.—the verb is the same as in ver. 9.

which accuseth them] The present expresses the habitual character. Auberlen (pp. 255—257) takes the participle here to be an imperfect—which accused them; and he explains that Satan can no longer accuse men before God, because men are brethren of Christ, and, in Him, of the Angels. Christ, our “Advocate” in heaven, overcomes our “accuser.”

According to Burger, Satan continues to the end “the accuser” of the apostate and perverse, although he can do no more to injure converted Israel: he is not cast out of God's Creation until ch. xx. 10.

11. overcame him] See on ch. ii. 7 for this verb; and as to this expression of victory (the verb having an object) cf. 1 John ii. 13, 14. The victory is celebrated as past and over, the speaker being transported, as it were, to the End of all things—hence the aorist twice in this verse: see on ver. 17. The victors are, not the combatants of ver. 7, but the accused of ver. 10. Note here, in the middle of the Book, the mention once more of those who “overcome.” the verb occurs again in ch. xxi. 7.

because of the blood of the Lamb,] Not as the means, but as the ground or cause. As to the prep. (διὰ) with the accus., cf. ch. i. 9; vi. 9; John vi. 57; and see on ch. iv. 11. Winer however prefers the former sense, referring to ch. vii. 14 (s. 356).

and because of the word of their testimony;] I.e., because they have borne faithful testimony—see on ch. i. 9; vi. 9; their “word,” like “the blood of the Lamb,” being the objective ground of their victory.

and they loved not their life even unto death.] I.e., disregarded their life (ψυχήν). The rendering of A.V., “unto the death,”—there being no art. in the Greek,—has come down to us from Tyndale, 1534: in Acts xxii. 4 this phrase has come down to us from Wiclif, 1380: see Bishop Chas. Wordsworth, Shakspeare and the Bible, p. 10 (cf. ch. ii. 10). In John xii. 25 the verb (φιλέω) denotes the love springing from natural inclination (cf. John xxi. 17); the verb used here (ἀγαπάω), rather signifies love as the direction of the will, in the sense of John iii. 19; xii. 43—a sense predominant with “the disciple whom Jesus loved” (John xiii. 23; see also 1 John ii. 15).

This verse, as the conclusion of ver. 10, commemorates by anticipation the victory of believers, throughout successive generations, over “the Dragon”—a victory founded on the heavenly triumph over him: see ver. 12.

12. Therefore rejoice, O heavens,] See vv. 11.

and ye that dwell in them.] Gr. “have your tabernacle in them.”—see ch. xiii. 6, where this phrase is repeated; cf. also ch. vii. 15; xxi. 3. (The reference to “the inhabitants of the earth”—see below, and on ch. iii. 10: vi. 10—is to be omitted). These words refer to those whose actual abode is in heaven, and who there enjoy a rest troubled by neither “woe” nor conflict; but Hengst. refers them to the members of the Church on earth who, as the Old Test. expresses it, dwell spiritually in God's tabernacle. Auberlen also refers the words to the members of Christ on earth, as included among the inhabitants of heaven,—1 Cor. xv. 48; Phil. iii. 20.

Woe for the earth and for the sea:] Omit “to the inhabitants of”—see vv. 11. (For the constr. cf. ch. viii. 13). In vv. 1—5 Satan has attempted in “heaven” to frustrate Christ by opposing his Incarnation; he now transfers sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.

14 And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she his opposition to "the earth and the sea;" and, these three regions being exhausted, the fourth, the Abyss, alone remains—ch. xvii. 8; see on ch. xi. 7. Hengstenberg understands by "the sea," the restless world (see ch. xvii. 15). Vit. interprets "the earth" to mean the Roman Empire; "the sea" the barbarous nations. Auberlen explains, "Woe to them who still belong to the world, and trust to its power and culture"—see on ver. 9.

Many expositors look upon these words as the infliction of the "Third Woe," ch. xi. 14, —e.g. Bengel, who makes "the earth and the sea" to signify Asia and Europe.

because the devil is gone down unto you,] Not the passive, "was cast down" (ver. 9), denoting an involuntary fall; but the active, denoting the voluntary efforts of Satan.

having great wrath,] Kindled anew as the consequence of ver. 8: see 1 Pet. v. 8. He is still, writes Auberlen, as he was before, god of this world (2 Cor. iv. 4);—cf. Matt. xiii. 25, 39; Eph. vi. 11.

knowing that he hath but a short time] Not the word rendered by A. V. "season" (chronos) in ch. xx. 3, but kairos:—see on ch. i. 3, and cf. ch. xvii. 10. Wordsworth aptly quotes Matt. viii. 29. Ebrard refers to ch. xi. 11, identifying the "short time" here with the $3\frac{1}{2}$ days of Antichrist after the close of the 1260 days of ver. 6,—i.e., the $3\frac{1}{2}$ years or times of ver. 14. Bengel assumes that the "short time" is not much longer than the "time, times, and half a time" of ver. 14, and therefore = four times "a time" (or $4 \times 222\frac{2}{3}$ years), and therefore = 888 $\frac{2}{3}$ years; thus making the duration of the "Third Woe" (see above) extend from A.D. 947 to A.D. 1836, or the date of the Millennium: see on ch. xi. 14; and Introd., § 11 (b), IV. Bengel regards this casting down to the earth as the second stage in Satan's punishment (see for the third and fourth, ch. xx. 2, 10); in the first stage Satan had lost his principality:—cf. John xii. 31.

The just inference surely is that the shortness of the "time" allowed for Satan's Antichristian work is founded simply on the principle which pervades the Apocalypse, that "the time is at hand"—that the Lord "cometh quickly" (ch. i. 3; xxii. 20).

THE FLIGHT OF THE WOMAN (13–16).

13. The narrative of vv. 4–6 is now resumed. The reason of the Woman's flight is here told, and the manner of her flight is described in ver. 14.

that he was cast down to the earth,] The meaning is—'The "Dragon" seeing that he was without power to injure the "Child" now proceeds to persecute the "Woman."

which brought forth the man [child].] See ver. 5. Note the use of the relative, as in ch. ii. 24; ix. 4; xix. 2; xx. 4.

Elliott explains that Christianity was now assailed by Arianism and the temptations to superstition. Ebrard (s. 405) considers that the "Dragon" makes two attacks upon the "Woman" or converted Israel,—here, and in ver. 15. This, the first attack, he holds to be "relatively identical with the fifth Trumpet," see on ch. ix. 2. At the end of the five mystical months (ch. ix. 5)—i.e. the beginning of the $3\frac{1}{2}$ days of Antichrist—Satan finds Israel converted (ch. xii. 7–11), and then turns against her the plague hitherto directed against "the unsealed" (ch. ix. 4): but now Israel is sealed, see ver. 14.

14. And to the woman were given] Given by God, and for the purpose specified.

the two wings] See vv. 11.

of the great eagle,] This symbol, expressive of the flight of the Church, is taken from the language applied to the flight of Israel from Egypt (Ex. xix. 4; Deut. xxxii. 11, 12), and hence the definite article—"the great Eagle:" cf. Isai. xl. 31.

Hengst., after Züllig, presses the language of Ex. xix. 4, and concludes that the Lord Himself is meant, "I (Jehovah) bare you on Eagles' wings" (and so Words., who quotes Mal. iv. 2,—"the 'Wings of Christ.'") Ebrard explains the article by referring to the Eagle of ch. viii. 13 which announced the "Woes;" thus fixing the flight in the time preceding the fifth and sixth Trumpets. The flight here is not, Ebrard argues, that which is described in ver. 6, and which was from the "Dragon" who persecuted the "Woman" in heaven; here she flies from the "Dragon" who persecutes her on earth. In order to draw this inference, Ebrard is compelled to understand the word heaven typically—the Woman's flight to the wilderness in heaven being a figure to express the dispersion of Israel on earth—and the earth literally (s. 369).

Bishop Wordsworth takes "the two wings" to be emblems of the Two Testaments;—St. Hippolytus ("Ancolitus," ap. Lagarde, l.c., p. 25) interprets the "wings" to be Hope (or might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

15 And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

Prayer) and Love, see Note C on ver. 3;—Ribera notes that the Church receives not "the wings of a dove" (Ps. lv. 6), but of an "Eagle," because she flies not out of fear, but out of love to God, in order to soar to the Divine Sun;—Stuart sees here merely an image of rapid flight, St. John thus expressing what the Lord had said in Matt. xxiv. 16, &c.

Mede (followed by Bengel and Auberlen) understands by the "wings" the two divisions of the Roman Empire, and the protection which the Eastern and Western Cæsars afforded to the Church; and Auberlen refers to the "great Eagle" of Ezek. xvii. 3, 7 where the Kings of Babylon and Egypt are thus designated, of whom the former again appears in Dan. vii. 4 with "Eagle's wings" (p. 260). Elliott points to the union of the "two wings" of the Roman Empire under Theodosius, and the help given to the Church during the eighteen years of his reign.

As a "Futurist" De Burgh, who explains that the "Woman" is an emblem, interprets the wilderness literally as in Ezek. xx. 35–38—a passage which intimates that the former discipline of Israel in the wilderness "will be reacted precisely" (p. 242).

into her place,] See ver. 6—the "place prepared of God." "Futurists" understand by this the place of refuge of converted Israel during the persecution of the second half of the last World-week.

where she is nourished] Gr. "nourished there:"—on the redundant "there," see ver. 6, and cf. ch. xvii. 9. We have here another feature of Israel's history—see Deut. viii. 3, 16.

for a time, and times, and half a time,] For the word rendered "time," as in ver. 12, see on ch. i. 3. This designation of the period known already as 1260 days, or 42 months (see ch. xi. 2, 3, and ch. xii. 6; see also Note B at the end of ch. xi.) is taken from Dan. vii. 25; xii. 7. This verse proves the identity of the $3\frac{1}{2}$ years, or mystic "half-week" of Dan. ix. 27, with the 1260 days of ver. 6:—we may compare too the allusion to this mystic "half-week" by our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 15. There is no dual number in the Greek of the New Test., nor, regularly, in the Chaldee; and hence, both here and in Daniel (vii. 25; xii. 7, LXX.), "two times" or "two years" is expressed simply by "times:"—see Winer, s. 160. For Bengel's calculation see Note A at the end of this chapter. Ebrard here also refuses to identify ver. 6 and ver. 14: he denies that a "time"

= a year, no definite measure of duration being expressed. He sees here merely $3\frac{1}{2}$ mystic periods which, like the $3\frac{1}{2}$ days of ch. xi. 9, 11, denote a period of duration different from the 1260 days or 42 months—the half week of years; with him the $3\frac{1}{2}$ years symbolize the interval between the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus and the rise of Antichrist; and the $3\frac{1}{2}$ days, or $3\frac{1}{2}$ "times," express the duration of the rule of Antichrist;—he refers in proof to Dan. vii. 25. Ebrard seems to stand alone in this opinion. Bleek regards the $3\frac{1}{2}$ "times" to mean the same amount of duration as that spoken of in ch. xi. 2, 3; but he places the $3\frac{1}{2}$ "times" immediately after the Ascension, already past; while he refers ch. xi. 2, 3, to the days before our Lord's future Coming.

On the rationalistic theory that a prophet can only describe past events, Krenkel suggests the notion that "a time" signifies ten years:—he thus gets 35 years from the date of the Crucifixion, and consequently the year 68, or the year in which he places the composition of the Apocalypse.—l.c., s. 42.

from the face of the serpent.] A Hebrew idiom, cf. Judg. ix. 21 (LXX.): "nourished... from,"—i.e., "safe from," "far from." The prep. is not to be joined to the remote verb. "might fly."

Here and in ver. 15 "the Dragon" seems not to have the special form as described in ver. 3, but his original form of Serpent. In ver. 16 he appears again as "the Dragon."

15. cast out of his mouth after the woman] See vv. 11. The "Serpent" having failed to reach the "Woman," employs other means for her destruction.

water as a river, that he might cause her to be carried away by the stream.] St. John here uses the imagery of the Old Test., where imminent danger is expressed by the figure of a water-flood—cf. Ps. xviii. 4, 16; xxxii. 6; Isai. viii. 7; Jer. xlvii. 2; Dan. ix. 26; xi. 22. Hengst. takes the words to mean "the hostile overflowing of the Church, the beginning, of which gave rise to this Book,—the Roman persecution."

Understanding "the river" here, and the "many waters" in ch. xvii. 1, to be explained by ch. xvii. 15, many see in these words "the deluge of barbarous nations, the Goths and Huns,"—so Wordsworth; and Auberlen notes: "The streams of the migrations of nations. The Germanic tribes were to destroy the Roman Empire, and thereby, according to which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood

17 And the dragon was wroth with Satan's plans, Christianity also" (p. 261). More specially still:—Wetstein, as a "Preterist," applies the words to the armies of Cestius and Vespasian; and Mr. Maurice understands by the waters cast after the Woman, the sects or heresies of which Jerusalem had been a hot-bed. As to the "Historical" interpreters, Calovius sees here the Arian heretics;—Vitranga, the Saracens;—Cocceius, the hosts of Licinius and Maxentius at war with Constantine;—Bengel, the Turks checked in the Asiatic "earth" by the Crusades, and checked still further from 1725 to 1836;—Alford is disposed to see in "the stream" "the irruption of the Mohammedan armies." On the "Futurist" theory, De Burgh (again allegorizing) writes: "Probably an host of armies, just as Pharaoh sent forth his armies and pursued the Israelites, which armies God destroyed by bringing the waters to the help of his people" (p. 243);—C. à Lapide explains: 'The hosts of Antichrist';—Stern: 'A deluge of godless peoples, and infernal spirits, as Satan's instruments.' This verse Ebrard (see on ver. 13) regards as describing the second attempt of the "Dragon" against converted Israel. This attempt he connects with the sixth Trumpet, or (for he identifies them) the sixth Vial; and he makes it to follow the 3½ days of Antichrist:—see on ch. xix. 19. Bisping also understands a vain attempt of Satan hereafter to destroy the Church, the nature of which assault the fulfilment of this prediction alone can explain.

16. And the earth helped the woman,] "The earth," when it occurs in this manner, is ever used in a bad sense. . . . The stream which the Dragon sends after her is evidently that of the early persecutions; the earth helping her is the world becoming Christian; thence Antichrist arises [see ch. xiii. 11], and this is the ensuing history."—I. Williams (p. 231).

The imagery of this verse Burger regards as borrowed from the deliverance of Israel from Egypt through the Red Sea; and he relies on the language of Ex. xv. 12. Similarly, Bleek (after Ewald) sees a reference to the deliverance of Israel through the Red Sea.

opened her mouth, and swallowed up the river] As, in the history of Israel, Korah's company perished (Num. xvi. 30–33). So Hippolytus ("Ancolitus," l.c.), who however prefers the sense that the agents of the Dragon wandered to and fro on the earth in despair. Hengstenberg notes: Another earthly power rises against those who persecuted the Church; as the kingdom of the Medes and Persians brought that of Babylon to an end, so (as we read in ch. xvii.) Rome was to be destroyed by the "Ten Kings." Aubertin understands that "the cultured Roman world received the wild Germanic masses, and reconciled them to Christianity":—Rome is thus regarded "as a power of civilization," and he quotes Lange: "The earth, i.e., consolidated ecclesiastical and political order, devoured the stream [of the German nations], and amalgamated with itself the wild tribes" (p. 261).

Mede sees here the triumph of the orthodox faith, in the early Councils, over heresy. "Multitudo Christianorum in Conciliis orthodoxa fide prævalentium inundationem Diabolicam exhaustit, quemadmodum Terra aquam solet, cum siccitate prævaluerit" (p. 498).

Sir I. Newton understands the "flood" to be the Latin, and the "earth" the Greek Empire.

Renan (p. 297) considers it likely that we have here described an attempt of the zealots, or sicarii of Jerusalem, to drown in the Jordan the holy band ("la troupe sainte") of Christians flying from the siege to Pella.

which the dragon cast out of his mouth.] The Æthiopic version adds here: "and knew not that Wings had been given to her."

The narrative given in vv. 6, 13–16, now comes to an end; ver. 17 taking up the narrative at the end of ver. 5.

17. And the dragon waxed wroth with the woman,] It is important to fix the connexion of this verse with what precedes. Verses 1–5 tell us of the "Woman" and the "Dragon"; of the Dragon's hostility to her; and of her "Man Child," Christ, being caught up unto God. Verse 6 (anticipating ver. 14) tells of the flight of the "Woman," now become the Church of Christ, to the wilderness where she is preserved till the End. In vv. 7–9 is given the previous history of the "Dragon," which is brought down to the victory over him by the Cross of Christ (Col. ii. 15; 1 John iii. 8; Jude 6). The result is expressed in the hymn of triumph (vv. 10–12) which celebrates, as if the conflict were past and over, the successive victories, until the End of all things, of the Church of the Redeemed. Verses 13–16 resume and describe more fully what was told in ver. 6,—ver. 15 recording the never-ceasing efforts of Satan during the "time, times, and half a time;" and ver. 16 recording their failure. The course of the narrative ends here. Verse 17 now reverts once more to the point where the "Man Child" had been "caught up unto God," and proceeds in continuation of ver. 5—vv. 6–16 forming, as it were, an the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

episode. "The Woman," in ver. 5, was still the Church of the Elder Covenant; but after the Ascension she has become the Church of the New—which is now represented as "the rest of her seed" (see on ver. 1). With the Christian Church, therefore, the "Dragon," baffled in his attempt to destroy Christ, turns to make war; and in ch. xiii. we have an account of the agents by whose intervention he carries on the warfare.

The "Dragon," writes Sir I. Newton, was wroth with the "Woman" under the Emperor Julian. Such a result as this illustrates the defects of the "Historical" school. However true this application may be, it clearly does not exhaust the meaning of the prophecy.

and went away to make war with the rest of her seed,] (Cf. ch. xi. 7). I.e., the "Dragon," after his fruitless effort to "devour her Child," went away to assail "the rest of her seed"—the "brethren" of Christ (see on ver. 1; Micah vi. 3; Heb. ii. 11)—the Church of God. The assault is described in ch. xiii. 7. This war with the "Dragon" is the same as that in which the faithful are ever, in the end, victorious (see ver. 11), and also the same as that described in vv. 15, 16,—the repetition of the fact being a warning that the Church is never, while in "the wilderness," to enjoy external peace.

The words, "the rest of her seed" have been variously interpreted. Mede understands, "Those to whom the Woman was to give birth in the wilderness";—Hengst., "Those who survived the hostile overflowing in ver. 15, or were not affected by it";—I. Williams, "The Dragon makes war,—not with the Woman, who had fled in retirement of spirit to be with God, nor with the Man Child of her first born, but with her seed that remained in the world, and this by raising up Antichrist." On the other hand, Auberlen: "Having failed to destroy Christianity, the true Christians are always the objects of the Dragon's enmity, John xv. 18";—Ebrard and Bisping explain the "Woman" in vv. 1–6, as Israel destined to be converted, and after ver. 7 as actually converted; "the rest of her seed" are the Gentile Christians (Rom. iv. 12; Gal. iii. 7);—With De Wette and Bleek, the "Woman" is the whole Church; "the rest" are the individual members (so Burger, who refers to Rom. ix. 6);—Brightman: "The rest of her seed" are the Eastern Church;—Vitr.: They are the Western Church, viz. the Waldenses, Wiclifites, &c.;—Elliott, They are the faithful witnesses, Vigilantius, Augustine, &c.;—Stuart: Christians had for some thirty years after the Ascension been persecuted in Judæa, and then Nero's persecution broke out elsewhere against them, under Satan's instigation.

De Burgh, who sees in the "Woman" only the Jewish Church (see on ver. 1), understands here the 'third left in the land' (Zech. xiii. 8, 9), exclusive of the general restoration of Israel: "This remnant is none other than the 144,000 sealed:"—see ch. xiv. 1 (p. 245).

Renan regards "the rest of her seed" as the churches of the Dispersion "which keep the commandments of God,"—a feature added in order to exclude the churches founded by St. Paul, which "selon les judéo-chrétiens, manquaient aux préceptes noachiques et aux conventions de Jérusalem."—p. 410.

and have the testimony of Jesus:] (Omit "Christ"—see vv. 11.). Or hold:—cf. ch. xix. 10; 1 John v. 10; and see on ch. i. 2, 9.

18. [xiii. 1]. and he stood upon the sand of the sea.] See vv. 11.; and for the verb cf. ch. viii. 3.

The "Dragon" now takes his stand amid the scene described in Dan. vii.—a chapter which supplies the imagery that follows—where "the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea." It is "from the sea" the Beast comes up in ch. xiii. 1. "The sea" is the symbol of hordes of peoples—see ch. xvii. 15; xx. 8; and, in accordance with this idea, the Beast—the emblem of the World-power symbolized in the Book of Daniel by four beasts—rises from "the sea."

Düsterd. understands the literal sea;—Volkmar and others, the sea which covers the Abyss, i.e., Hell (cf. ch. xi. 7; xvii. 8);—others, the sea "at Cæsarea" (see H. Gebhardt, l.c., s. 237);—and Rationalists generally explain: "The Roman "Dragon" has persecuted the true Church which has escaped through the desert beyond Jordan to Pella where she is to be preserved for three and a half years until Messiah comes. The "Dragon," enraged at her escape, turns to persecute the other Christians who do not dwell in Jerusalem. But even before this, the Beast with the "Seven Heads" and the "Ten Horns" has placed himself on the coast of Palestine,—the Roman army standing not far from the Holy City" (see Schenkel's 'Bibel-Lexicon,' s. 158).

Elliott expounds: The flood of invading Goths is now absorbed in the Roman Empire. The Pagan Roman rule ("He who now letteth," 2 Thess. ii. 7) has to give place to Papal Rome. Out of this flood of Gothic nations rises the Beast of ch. xiii. 1, the substitute and successor of the "Dragon."

The reading of the Textus Receptus, "I stood," and the joining on of this verse to ch. xiii., render the description far less effective.

As thus read, moreover, the opening of the new Vision in ch. xiii. is out of all analogy with the usual manner of the Seer who begins his new scenes simply with the words "I saw,"—cf. ch. iv. 1; v. 1; vi. 1; vii. 1; viii. 2; x. 1.

Hengst., adopting the usual reading, renders

"I was placed:"—"John did not take up his own position, but he was set there," cf. ch. xvii. 3; iv. 1; and so he would render ch. viii. 3. Vitringa says: "An Draco spectator esset notabilis hujus eventus; num potius Joannes? . . . Joannes spectator fuit . . . ex cœlo subito veluti delatus in terram" (p. 567).

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XII.

NOTE A ON VER. 1—THE STAR-CROWNED WOMAN.

That "the Woman" signifies the Church, Jewish or Christian, is the opinion of the ancient interpreters:—

ST. IRENÆUS in his interpretation of ch. xvii. 12 seems to identify the "Woman" with the Christian Church. Antichrist and the Ten Kings, he writes, "effugabunt Ecclesiam"—Cont. Haer. x. 26, p. 323:—see ver. 14.

ST. HIPPOLYTUS in his treatise De Antichristo (l. c., p. 30) repeats the interpretation already quoted (see on ver. 1) from the Arabic version of his lost work on the Apoc. (see below, Note C). "The Church," he adds, "will never cease bringing forth, from her heart, the Word, which, when it is in the world, is persecuted . . . that male and perfect offspring Christ." The Child being caught up to God (ver. 5), denotes that He is no earthly king, as David wrote in Ps. cx. 1. The 1260 days of the "Woman's" flight (ver. 6) are the half-week of Antichrist (ver. 14); and the "Two Wings" of the Eagle which shelter her denote the faith of Jesus Christ.

VICTORINUS combines the two conceptions:—"Mulier antiqua Ecclesia est patrum et prophetarum et sanctorum Apostolorum, quæ gemitus et tormenta habuit desiderii sui, usque quo fructum ex plebe sua secundum carnem olim promissum sibi videret Christum ex ipsa gente corpus sumpsisse" (in loc.). And so Methodius, Primasius, Andreas, Beda. Beda writes: "Semper Ecclesia, Dracone licet adversante, Christum parit. Masculum autem dicit, victorem diaboli qui fœminam (Evam) vicerat. . . . Nam et Ecclesia quotidie gignit Ecclesiam mundum in Christo vincentem" (in loc.).

Turning to more modern comments:—

According to MEDE:—"The "Woman" is the primitive Church, clothed with the faith of Christ "the Sun of Righteousness;"—the "Moon" denotes the Jewish Law and ritual of Moses which she treads beneath her feet;—she suffers the pangs of labour in bringing forth her children, owing to the persecution of the Pagan Roman Empire which worships the "Dragon";—the "Man Child" is Christ formed in His members;—and the "Child" caught up to the throne of God means the elevation of Constantine to the throne of the Cæsars. As Israel wandered in the wilderness during forty-two journeys (Num. xxxiii.), so the Church, having passed from heathen persecution, wanders in the wilderness of the world until the second Coming of Christ, and this during "forty-two months." "The Great Eagle" is the Roman Empire; and "the Two Wings" are the Emperors of the East and West, by whose aid the Church, like Israel (Ex. xix. 4), has reached the wilderness ("in Eremiticum statum concessit"). The "flood" from the Dragon's mouth signifies the Arian heresy, and the "earth" the Councils of the Church by which heresy was suppressed. The "Dragon" thus defeated, proceeds to set up a vicarious kingdom—the secular and the ecclesiastical, in his stead (ch. xiii. 1, 11).

VITRINGA writes: "Visum hoc signum in cœlo tum quia ad Religionem pertinet, cujus objectum est in Cœlo; tum præcipue quia subjectum hujus Visi, Ecclesia Novi Fœderis est in cœlo (Eph. ii. 6) "In emblemate nihil obscurum Est augustum repræsentamen Ecclesiæ Novi Fœderis quod miror non vidisse Launæum et Cocceium, qui in hac Muliere vident imaginem Ecclesiæ fidelium Veteris Testamenti, quæ erat in spe parturiendi Christum." The "Woman" is clothed with the "Sun," "for she has Christ, the Sun of righteousness" (Mal. iv. 2) as her teacher; the "Moon" is beneath her feet, for, what is changeable in religion being now abolished, she has "a kingdom which cannot be moved" (Heb. xii. 28). [The interpretation which makes the "Moon" the emblem of change, seems to have been suggested by Gregory the Great (who also takes the "Woman" to be "the Holy Church," "quia superni luminis splendore protegitur"):—"In luna, quæ menstruis suppletionibus deficit, mutabilitas temporalitatis accipitur."—Moral. in Job., xxxiv. 7].

BENGEL sees in the "Woman" the Church of God, at first of Israel, now of the Gentiles;—in the "Sun" the Christian Empire;—in the "Moon" the Mohammedan power of which the emblem is the Crescent;—in the "Twelve Stars" the Tribes of Israel. The "Man Child" is Christ's kingly dominion, and His being caught up unto God implies that this dominion, under the seventh Trumpet, is at present hidden from the world. The 1260 prophetic days of ver. 6 = 677 common years (Introd. § 11, (b), IV. note *)—viz. from the introduction of vital Christianity into Bohemia by Boleslaus, A.D. 940, to its extinction there, at the era of the Reformation, A.D. 1617. From 940 to 1058 "the Woman" was most helpless. She was nourished there, however, for $3\frac{1}{2}$ "times" = 777½ common years, and this again gives us from A.D. 1058, to A.D. 1836. On ver. 16 Bengel notes that the Turkish power is now checked in the Asiatic "earth" by the Crusades and subsequent events; and it is further checked between 1725 and 1836. The naming the "Two Wings" of the "Eagle" imports that the Woman's flight was to happen while the Eastern Roman Empire still existed.

BISHOP NEWTON takes the travail of "the Woman" to denote the early trials of the Church, "until she brought forth a Man Child," i.e., Constantine, as her deliverer. The "Dragon," i.e., the Roman Empire, from the first was jealous of the Church; and Galerius especially laid snares for the life of Constantine, who, nevertheless, was "caught up" to the Imperial throne (ver. 5). The "war in heaven" (ver. 7) signifies the struggle of the heathen against a Christian ruler,—a war which ended in the destruction of paganism, or the "casting out" of ver. 9. Then follow the Arian persecutions, and the hostility of Julian. The "flood" from the Serpent's mouth (ver. 15) denotes the Barbarian invasion; and the "flood" swallowed up denotes the conversion of the Barbarians to Christianity. "The rest of her seed" (ver. 17), signifies that there shall then be left only a remnant of worshippers in the Church.

CUNNINGHAME, however, considers that the "Man Child" is Christ, formed mystically in His members; and he regards the prophecy as fulfilled by the Empire becoming Christian. The "Man Child" caught up to God signifies the preservation of the Church in every age. The "Dragon," "Satan," acts through the instrumentality of the Roman Empire. The "Woman's" flight denotes the corruptions of the Church; and she has dwelt in "the wilderness" since Justinian acknowledged the Pope to be her head. As to the rest, Cunninghame agrees with Bishop Newton.

G. S. FABER: "Heaven" is the visible Western Church, limited to the Roman Empire; and the "Woman" is a portion of that Church, namely the faithful worshippers: the "Dragon" represents the unfaithful worshippers, or secular powers of the Western Empire. The third part of the "Stars" (ver. 4) signifies the clergy of the West, who were caused to apostatize about A.D. 604. The birth of the "Man Child" denotes the separation of the "Vallensico-Albigensic Church:" the "Man Child" is therefore identical with the "Two Witnesses" (see Note D on ch. xi. 12—the last note ¹) and his being caught up to God denotes the protection of the Waldenses from their enemies. "The Wilderness" is the "heaven," or visible Western Church transformed by apostasy. The "War in heaven" (ver. 7) is a struggle between a faithful and an apostate priesthood;—i.e., it means the persecution of the Albigenses and other reputed heretics down to the English Revolution of 1688. After the Devil is cast out (ver. 9) he persecutes the "Woman" no longer by accusing her of heresy, but by the principles of infidelity in Cent. xviii., and by the French Revolution which is the "flood" from the Serpent's mouth. The "earth," or Roman Empire, helps the "Woman"; i.e., resists the spread of atheism; and the war with "the rest of her seed" is still going on, and will continue till the end of the 1260 days, i.e., until A.D. 1864 [604 + 1260].—Sacr. Calend., vol. iii. p. 111, &c.

Auberlen considers that the Apoc. sums up in the one word "Woman" the usus loquendi of the Old and New Testaments, whereby the apostasy of Israel from God to idols is represented as fornication—an expression which, together with the jealousy ascribed to God, is founded on the idea of the marriage relation between God and Israel (Ex. xxxiv. 14, 15; Lev. xx. 5, 6; Deut. xxxi. 16; xxxii. 16, 21; Isai. i. 21; L 1; Jer. iii. 1; Ezek. xvi. 1; xxiii. 1; Hos. i. 1; &c.). In the New Test. the figurative use of "the Bridegroom," "the Bride," "the Virgin," is frequent,—e.g. Matt. ix. 15; xxii. 1; xlv. 1; John iii. 29; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 23-32. Humanity, in so far as it belongs to God, is "the Woman;" therefore it is said emphatically of Christ—the Son of the Woman (ver. 5)—that He is a "Man Child," a Son. He is the true result of the Old Test. Church (Gal. iv. 4), but, as Son of God, His relation to the Church is that of husband to wife (1 Cor. xi. 7). The emblems connected with "the Woman" recall the Old Test. Church:—She is clothed with the "Sun" as bearer of divine light in the world; and she has under her feet the false religion of the world represented by the "Moon," which is an earthly light, not capable of overcoming the darkness, but shining through it. The "Twelve Stars" are the Twelve Tribes of Israel, with which the Apostles, who form the foundation of the New Test. Church, are placed in connexion by Christ (Matt. xix. 28; cf. Rev. xxi. 12, 14). And thus "the Woman" here signifies the same as the New Jerusalem, which is also a Woman (ch. xxi. 2, 9, 10), the latter being the Church exalted, the former the Church mistant. In ch. xi. 8 Jerusalem is called Egypt; and now there is once more the flight of the true Church from Egypt to "the Wilderness" as Israel fled of old:—and Auberlen regards the flight of Mary and the Child Jesus into Egypt (Matt. ii. 13) as a type of the Church's "flight"; while the giving her "the Two Wings of the great Eagle" (ver. 14) refers to the delivery of Israel from Egypt, in accordance with Ex. xix. 1-4. Thus the Apocalypse gives an outline of the history of the Prince and Kingdom of darkness—(1) To the first coming of Christ, when Satan, whose power is not yet broken, is still in heaven (see on ver. 7);—(2) From Christ to the beginning of the Millennium: then Satan is cast out from heaven to earth, and this is the period which this chapter records;—(3) The Millennium, when Satan is bound (ch. xx. 1-3);—(4) Having been let loose, he is judged and cast into the lake of fire (ch. xx. 7-10):—l.c., pp. 240-257.

NOTE B ON VER. 3—THE DRAGON.

On the words translated "Dragon," δράκων, Gesenius notes thus:—

On תנין, tannin:—" (1) bellua marina, piscis ingens, Gr. κῆτος, Gen. i. 21; Job. vii. 12; Isai. xxvii. 1. (2) serpens Ex. vii. 9, seqq., Deut. xxxii. 33; Ps. xci. 13;—draco, Jer. li. 34;—crocodilus, Ezek. xxix. 3 (ubi תנין pro תנין), qui Ægypti imaginem refert. Isai. li. 9 (Ps. lxxiv. 13, 14)." And on לִיָּוִיָּתָן, leviathan:—" pr. (animal) flexum, in spiras convolutum, (1) serpens, isque major, Job. iii. 8 [κῆτος]; Isai. xxvii. 1 (ubi Babylonix regni hostilis symbolum est);—(2) spec. crocodilus, Job. xl. 25 [LXX., ver. 20, δράκων];—(3) quævis bellua magna aquatilis, Ps. civ. 26, eaque pro hoste atroce, Ps. lxxiv. 14."

NOTE C ON VER. 3—THE LOST COMMENTARY OF ST. HIPPOLYTUS ON THE APOCALYPSE.

When examining, in the year 1829, the Oriental MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris, Ewald discovered an Arabic commentary on the Apocalypse, of which he has given some account in his "Abhandlungen zur orientalischen u. biblischen Literatur" (Göttingen, 1832). Lagarde has printed the Arabic text in an Appendix to his "Analecta Syriaca" (Leipzig, 1858); and he places the date of this Arabic manuscript in the fourteenth century. The title of the commentary is given by Ewald as follows: "Book of the Apocalypse and its interpretation: that is, the Vision beheld by John, son of Zebedee, one of the Twelve, the Evangelist, the chaste (der Keusche), according to the interpretation of the holy Hippolytus, Pope of Rome, and the holy Paulus Albuschi (or Elbuschi), bishop of Oschmunain (in Upper Egypt)."¹ The author, according to Ewald, is not a mere copyist from Hippolytus and the later Coptic theologian, for he often opposes the interpretation of the former. The author's date may also be inferred from his own words, at Rev. xi. 2; xvii. 9, as well as from his references to the Chronicle of Said Ebn-Batrich (Annales Eutychiei).² Ewald concludes that this commentary "was written in the year 1271 of the Incarnation."

The interpretation of St. Hippolytus, however, is all that we are concerned with here: and that Hippolytus wrote on the Apocalypse we learn from the list of his works inscribed on his statue³ which was dis-

¹ On the back, written in a different hand, occur the words,—"Explained by the holy John Chrysostom." This title Ewald at once rejects, and proves not to be genuine. In the genuine title the name Hippolytus is presented by the scribe under the forms Abolitus, or Ibobotus, or Ebolitus—which occur five times; or as Anco-litus—which occurs fifteen times. Ewald merely mentions this fact which does not cause him to doubt that Hippolytus is intended. Indeed we have here rather a confirmation that Hippolytus is meant; for Döllinger (Hippolytus und Kallistus, 1853, s. 41) tells us that the name was written correctly only by those who spoke Greek; and among the forms used by the common Romans he gives, what is substantially one of those found in the Arabic MS., Epolitus, or sometimes Poltus.

The title "Pope of Rome" puzzled Ewald:—"Mit welchem Recht hier Hippolytus römischer Pabst genannt wird, mag ich nicht entscheiden." Here again Döllinger comes to our aid:—In MS. 128 in the Nani collection at Venice is found a λόγος τοῦ Ἱππολύτου πάπα Πώμης (l.c., s. 93); nay, in the Coptic (Monophysite) Martyrology, translated from the Arabic by Assemani, at "February 5," we read: "Requies S. Patris Hippolyti Papæ Romæ;" and at "February 6": "Manifestatio corporis S. Hippolyti Papæ Romæ" (s. 94). For the frequent references to St. Hippolytus as "bishop of Rome," bishop of "Portus Romanus," &c., see the well-known controversy between Bunsen, Döllinger, Bishop Wordsworth, and others.

Papa was originally a special title of all bishops (Tertull. De Pudic. 13; Gregor. Thaum. Ep. Canon. 1): it appears to have been applied for the first time to mark out a bishop of Rome in the Roman Synod under Symmachus (A.D. 502), and then by Ennodius, bishop of Ticinum (A.D. 510):—see Gieseler, l.c., i. ss. 297, 670.

² "Eutychieus Ægyptius, Arabice Said Ebn-Batrich, Patriarcha Alexandrinus. Ecclesiæ suæ origines. Ex ejd. Arabico typis edidit ac versione auxit Joannes Seldenus," Lond. 1642; "Contextio gemmarum, sive Annales, Interprete Edwardio Pocockio," Oxon. 1658.

³ Winckelmann (quoted by Döllinger, s. 25) says that this statue is without doubt the oldest marble statue of Christian times. Its date, as Dr. Salmon (Hermathena, 1873, p. 83) proves, "cannot be much later than A.D. 235."

covered at Rome in 1551—[T]Α ΥΠΕΡ ΤΟΥ ΚΑΤΑ ΙΩΑΝΗΝ ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΥ ΚΑΙ ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΕΩC; and also from the testimony of Andreas—see Introd. § 2, (a), No. (1).¹

The most important interpretations of Hippolytus, as given in the Arabic account of his commentary, will be found quoted under their respective texts: the following properly come here:—

Rev. xii. 3 (ap. Lagarde, l. c., p. 25):—“Ebolitus, understanding by the Heads of this Dragon, kings, adherents, and servants of Satan, interprets the Seven Heads to mean Seven Kings: (1) Bochnasser [Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 604] of Chaldæa;—(2) Tadâr-yush-el-Mahi [Darius the Mede, Dan. v. 31; ix. 1; xi. 1];²—(3) Darius the Persian;³—(4) Alexander of Greece;—(5) he also counted the four lieutenants of Alexander as one kingdom;—(6) the Empire of Rome;—(7) and the kingdom of Dajjâl [Antichrist]; and he interpreted the Ten Horns thus, that they were Ten Kings who will perish with Dajjâl [Antichrist]. As for the Diadems he did not explain in detail the meaning of them.”

Ch. xvii. 8–10 (see Lagarde, l. c., p. 27) is expounded on a similar principle:—“Ancolitus” takes the Beast to be the same as that first seen by the prophet upon the sand of the sea, rising from the depths (ch. xiii. 1); and “Ancolitus” is of the opinion that this Beast is a symbol of the worship of idols.” His five Heads which “are fallen” (ver. 10) are the same as the first five in the interpretation of ch. xii. 3, with this exception that for “Darius the Mede” we find “Corsch al Maah,” i. e., “Cyrus the Mede.” This variation does not seem to be noticed by the Arabic commentator; but may, perhaps, be accounted for by the fact that in Dan. xi. 1 the LXX. and also Theodotion read

¹ My attention was called to this Arabic account of the commentary of St. Hippolytus by Dr. Salmon, who also kindly placed in my hands some materials respecting it which he had collected. Mir Aulad Ali, Professor of Arabic in the University of Dublin, has been so good as to supply the translation of the Arabic text printed by Lagarde.

² See the Excursus on Dan. v. 31. “Darius the Mede” was made King of Babylon by Cyrus (Dan. vi. 28), where he reigned from B.C. 538 to B.C. 536 (Dan. xi. 1).

³ If the “Darius king of Persia” of Ezra (iv. 5) is signified, we are to understand Darius Hystaspis, B.C. 521, the father of Xerxes;—if the Darius of Nehemiah (xii. 22), “modern commentators are generally agreed that Darius Codomannus, the antagonist of Alexander the Great, is intended. This prince ascended the throne B.C. 336”—see the note in loc. On the other hand, Keil makes the Darius of Nehemiah to be Darius Nothus, the second Persian monarch of that name, B.C. 425,—see in loc.

“Cyrus” (ἐν ἔτει πρώτῳ Κύρου,—cf. Dan. x. 1). The Arabic text proceeds: “And indeed these kings perished; but as to the one (6) which is found [ὁ εἷς ἔστιν—“the one is”—Ewald explains, “das jetzt seiende Haupt”], it is the Roman Empire;—(7) as to the last one, it never came. Therefore by general consent it is Dajjâl [Antichrist]: but this passage is the most difficult in the Vision.”

NOTE D ON VER. 7.—THE READING τοῦ πολεμῆσαι μετὰ.

“A. Buttman (p. 231),” notes Professor Moulton (l. c., p. 412), “takes τοῦ πολ. as depending upon ἐγένετο, κ. τ. λ., the subject of this infin. being ὁ Μιχ. κ. οἱ ἄγγ. αὐτ.: the use of the nominative for the accus. he regards as a constructio ad synesin, the infin. clause being equivalent to a subordinate sentence with a finite verb.”

Alf. observes that the construction “may easily be explained as one compounded of [τοῦ] τὸν Μ. καὶ τοὺς ἄγγ. αὐτοῦ πολεμῆσαι (in which case the τοῦ depends on the ἐγένετο, as in Acts x. 25), and ὁ Μ. καὶ οἱ ἄγγ. αὐτοῦ ἐπολέμησαν. In the next clause it passes into this latter.” To this statement that Acts x. 25 (ὡς δὲ ἐγένετο τοῦ εἰσελθεῖν τὸν Πέτρον) is parallel, Winer demurs—for we should have here, in order to render the words parallel, ἐγένετο τοῦ πολεμῆσαι. He also objects to the explanation of Ewald and Zullig that the idiom is an imitation of the (later) Hebr. form מלחמה, pugnandum ei erat, for the LXX. nowhere give such a translation. Winer (so also Lücke) is unable to explain the constr. (see § 44, s. 293); and he pronounces Fritzsche’s suggestion “artificial” [viz. “that ὁ Μιχ. κ. οἱ ἄγγ. αὐτ. form a parenthesis (the subject to a verb ἐπολέμησαν mentally supplied), so that τὸν πολ. is the gen. after ὁ πολ. understood”—see Moulton’s ed., p. 411]. Bleek takes up the opinion of Ewald, and regards the idiom as a Hebraism; the “Hebrew gerund” without הִיהָ often standing for the finite verb:—“(sic waren) zu kämpfen” = “hatten zu (oder mussten) kämpfen.” Heinrichs supplies ἦσαν, rendering “intenti erant in pugnam.” Stuart suggests the supplying ὡφθῆ, “on the introduction of a third party,” as in ver. 1. Conjectural emendations of the text need not be referred to—e.g. that of Düsterd., who conjectures that the words πόλεμος ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ were a marginal note originally intended to call attention to the passage, but subsequently inserted in the text: the constr. would then be as in Acts x. 25,—the final “infinitive-genitive” (cf. Acts iii. 2, 12) depending regularly on the conception of motion latent in the ἐγένετο—cf. John vi. 19, 25.

NOTE E ON VER. 10.—THE FORM κατήγωρ.

The Codex Alex. (A) gives, in place of κατήγορος, the Rabbinical form κατήγωρ = קטִיגוֹר—a form analogous to the Rabbinical description of Michael, as the συνήγορ = שִׁנְיָה, i. e., συνήγορος, or “advocate” of the godly:—Schöttgen (i. 119) gives references. We find in later Greek the similar form διάκων for διάκονος—see Wetstein in loc.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 A beast riseth out of the sea with seven heads and ten horns, to whom the dragon giveth his power. 11 Another beast cometh up out of the earth: 14 causeth an image to be made of the former beast, 15 and that men should worship it, 16 and receive his mark.

[Ver. 1. κέρατα δέκα καὶ κεφ. ἑπτὰ.—ὀνόματα. Ver. 3. om. εἶδον.—ἐκ τῶν κεφ.—ἐθαύμασεν.—om. ἐν.—λη ἢ ὄγῃ. Ver. 4. [1 omits καὶ προσεκύ. down to λέγοντες, and Er. supplied the omitted words after the Vulg.]. τῷ δράκ. ὅτι ἔδωκε τὴν ἐξ.—προσεκύ. τῷ θηρ.—καὶ τίς δύν. Ver. 5. [1 reads merely καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἐξουσία, and Er. supplied the omitted words from the Vulg.].—[2 reads ποιῆσαι ὃ θέλει]. Ver. 6. βλασφημίας.—om. καὶ bef. τοὺς. Ver. 7. [A, C, P om. καὶ ἐδόθη . . . νικῆσαι αὐτούς, by Homotetel.].—φυλὴν καὶ λαόν. Ver. 8. αὐτόν.—οὐ οὐ.—τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ.—τοῦ ἐσφαγ. Ver. 10. εἴ τις εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν, εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει [2, C, B, P, om. the 2nd εἰς αἰχμαλ.]. Ver. 14. ὃς ἔχει. Ver. 15. [A, C, P read αὐτῇ].—[2 reads ποιήσῃ].—ἵνα ὅσοι.—om. ἵνα bef. ἀποκτ. Ver. 16. δώσιν.—τὸ μέτωπον. Ver. 17. om. καί.—om. 2nd ἡ. Ver. 18. om. 1st τόν.—[A reads ἐξακόσιοι ἐξήκοντα ἑξ.,—2 reads ἐξακόσιαι ἐξήκ. ἑξ.,—P, Andreas read ἐξακόσια ἐξήκ. ἑξ.,—B, 1 read χξζ.,—C reads ἐξακόσιαι δέκα ἑξ.,—see Note G at the end of this chapter.]

CHAP. XIII.—THE TWO BEASTS.

The theme of ch. xii. was the enmity of the Dragon to the Woman. In ch. xii. 17, the wrath of the Dragon, and his resolve to make war against “the rest of her seed,” i. e., the Church of Christ, are described; and verse 18 (or ch. xiii. 1) represents the Dragon placing himself for this purpose “upon the sand of the sea”—in other words, beside the confused mass and turmoil of the nations. St. John next proceeds to foreshow the history of the Church in the world. In ch. xii. 12 is contained the denunciation of “Woe for the earth and for the sea”; and now two Beasts “come up,”—the one from “the sea” (ver. 1), and the other from “the earth” (ver. 11),—representing the instruments by which the Dragon carries on his work.

The symbolic image, or the “Seven-Headed Beast,” which the Seer now beholds is the chief point of connexion between the Apocalypse and the Book of Daniel. Here the Beast “comes up” from “the sea,” as do the four beasts in Dan. vii. 3;—here, the Beast has “Ten Horns,” like the fourth beast in Dan. vii. 7;—the Beast here is composed of the leopard, bear, and lion (ver. 2), i. e., of the first three beasts in Dan. vii. 4–6, the fourth beast being indicated both now and in Daniel by the “Ten Horns.” In Daniel, “the Vision represents the development of the World-power generally in four successive phases” (see the note on Dan. vii. 17); but here we have a comprehensive representation, under one form, of the universal World-power which in Daniel is symbolized by four beasts.

The other chief subject of Daniel’s prophecy was the “Little Horn,” ‘little’ in its beginning but soon increasing in power (see the note on Dan. vii. 8; and cf. Dan. viii. 9, 10), which had “eyes like the eyes of a man”—symbolizing craft, knowledge, intellectual culture, unceasing activity (see on ch. iv. 6, 8, and cf. Ezek. i. 18; x. 12), and which is usually taken to refer primarily to Antiochus Epiphanes, the Old Test. type of Antichrist. Corresponding to this symbol in Daniel’s Vision is the second Beast of this chapter, the Beast from “the earth” (ver. 11) or “False Prophet” (for this title see ch. xvi. 13; xx. 10: cf. ch. xix. 20 with ch. xiii. 13, 14). The first Beast is a material, political, World-power; the second Beast is a spiritual World-power—the power of learning and knowledge, of ideas, of intellectual cultivation. Both are from below, both are beasts, and therefore they are in close alliance. The worldly antichristian wisdom stands in the service of the worldly antichristian power.

As to the Beast of vv. 1–8, the following are the chief interpretations:—

I. This Beast is a symbol of Rome, either (a) The Roman Empire, Pagan—so Victorinus, Bossuet, Hammond, Ewald, De Wette, Stuart, Lücke, Bleek, &c.; or (b) The Roman Empire, Papal—so Mede, Vitringa, Bengel, Elliott, &c.

Many Protestant commentators see in this whole chapter Rome Papal under two aspects—the Beast of vv. 1–8 signifying the political,

AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up and the Beast of ver. 11 the ecclesiastical character of the Papacy. Thus, the early Reformers usually understood by the new form of the Roman World-power (or Babylon), which they held to be described in this chapter, a prophecy of that visible rule which the Roman See exercised over men in the Middle Ages, after the old form of the Roman World-power had revived as "the Holy Roman Empire." Later writers of this school introduce a distinction at this point. The Papal power, they observe, which is here symbolized, does not yet appear as the Harlot (ch. xvii. 1) or Church become apostate from Christ, but as a "Beast" or World-power—not as a Church but as a power ruling over the Church, seemingly in Christ's name; in fact, as being purely "of the earth, earthy," and at first exhibiting its action not as a corrupt Church, or Harlot, but as a false Mediator, and false theocracy (the Pseudo-Lamb of ver. 11). Not until ch. xvii., they add, does Babylon acquire the character, and present the "signature," of the Apostate Church. See Herzog's Real Encycl., art. Apokalypse.

II. The Beast denotes the God-opposing power of this world. Of this power, with some writers (e.g. Hengst., Ebrard, Auberlen), (1) Pagan Rome is the emblem: and these writers hold that there is a further reference, by means of one of the "Seven Heads," to Rome Papal;—(2) Other interpreters seek to exclude any reference to Rome.

III. These interpretations have been to some extent combined by Gebhardt (l. c., s. 235), who regards the Beast as the symbol of a single World-kingdom combining in itself all former World-kingdoms: and he concludes that the World-kingdom is personified by a single "King," viz. the "Head smitten unto death" of ver. 3,—a result supported by the gender of the pronouns in vv. 8, 14. The single World-kingdom Gebhardt identifies with the Roman Empire; and the single "King" with Nero.

IV. According to his system, Ebrard (s. 406) discerns in this chapter an exhibition of the power which is to persecute the Gentile-Christian Church during "the three and a half years" before Israel's conversion.

THE BEAST FROM THE SEA (1-8).

1. And I saw a beast] (In the Greek, and in all Versions except the "Authorized," ch. xiii. begins with these words:—see on ch. xii. 18.) For the word rendered "beast" (the term used in Dan. vii., LXX.) see on ch. iv. 6; xi. 7. We have to note in the Apoc. the contrast between "the Lamb of God" (John i. 36) and the 'wild beast' or chief instrument by which the Dragon works:—the name "Beast" of itself has an evil signification, see on ver. 11.

coming up out of the sea,] By the shore of which the Dragon had taken his stand (ch. xii. 18) in order to summon his agent from its depths. The Beast here is the same as that referred to by anticipation in ch. xi. 7, and more fully described in ch. xvii. Ebrard (and likewise Züllig, see Note C on ch. xi. 7) denies this identity, because it is said in ch. xi. 7; xvii. 8, that the Beast comes up out of "the Abyss," whence demons only proceed; while the Beast here is not a demon, but a World-power. De Wette also contrasts "the sea" with "the Abyss;" as if this Beast were born from the realm of darkness merely, or were one returning from the kingdom of death—i. e., as he explains, Nero—see on ch. xvii. It seems plain, however, even without referring to the relation between the "sea" and the "Abyss" (cf. Luke viii. 31; Rom. x. 7), that, as in ver. 11 "the earth," so here "the sea" belongs to the special imagery employed—imagery, too, which is confessedly taken from Dan. vii. where, at ver. 3, the four beasts "come up from the sea." The identity with Daniel's Vision depends on the similarity of the symbols, as pointed out in the introductory remarks above. In the symbolism of the Apoc. "the sea" denotes the troubled ocean of worldly affairs—"peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues" (ch. xvii. 15; cf. Ps. xlii. 3, 4; lxv. 7; xciii. 3, 4; Isai. viii. 7-9, lvii. 20)—out of which arises this ideal representation of the antichristian World-power.

On the subject of Antichrist see Note A at the end of this chapter.

having ten horns and seven heads] See vv. 11:—note the different order of the "Heads" and "Horns" in the description of the "Dragon" (ch. xii. 3) where Satan assumes a form similar to that of his instrument the Beast in this place. The "Horns" here appear first, because the Beast is seen "coming up" from the sea;—after he has risen (ch. xvii. 3, 7), the "Heads" are mentioned first. The "Seven Heads" are those of Daniel's four beasts, the leopard having four heads in Dan. vii. 6. As in Dan. vii. 7, 20 the "Ten Horns" belong to the fourth or last beast; so here they seem naturally to belong to the seventh or last "Head."

and on his horns ten diadema,] Not now on the "Heads" as in ch. xii. 3. Stern, understanding the "Ten Horns" to be the lesser powers which will hereafter unite with Antichrist for "the ruin of the seventh New Test World-power" (ch. xvii. 12, 13), concludes out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.

1 Or,
names.

that, because Antichrist will then for the first time personally reveal his own authority, —having until then resisted Christianity by means of his demonic influence,—he wears the “diadems” on his Horns not, like Satan in ch. xii. 3, on his Heads (s. 321). And Words. similarly concludes:—The “diadems” are not now on the Heads, the Beast acting not directly as the Dragon but mediately by other potentates (ch. xvii. 12). Ebrard explains:—Because the Beast here represents both the Roman Empire and the Ten kingdoms (ch. xvii. 12) which arise out of it. According to Auberlen (p. 268), the fact denotes that both “Heads” and “Horns” refer to kingdoms; because both are said (ch. xvii. 10, 12) to be “kings”—i.e. as with Daniel, the kingdoms whose personal heads they are. This seems to be the true explanation.

The variations here from ch. xii. 3 are urged by Düsterdieck in proof of his interpretation of the symbolism:—In ch. xii. 3, where the internal and essential relation of the “Heads” and “Horns” is pointed out, the “Heads” are seen before the “Horns,” and the “Heads” bear the “diadems.” In ch. xiii. 1, the “Horns” appear before the “Heads,” and the “Horns,” not the “Heads,” bear the “diadems.” In this way the concrete form of the Roman Empire as it actually existed is presented, and thus the order of appearance is explained: Ten actual Rulers first appear—Ten persons who are symbolized, as the actual possessors of the Empire, by the “Ten Horns” each provided with a “diadem”:—(1) Augustus, (2) Tiberius, (3) Caligula, (4) Claudius, (5) Nero, (6) Galba, (7) Otho, (8) Vitellius, (9) Vespasian, (10) Titus. The Beast, like the Dragon, has “Seven Heads”; and each now bears one crowned “Horn” (see on ch. xii. 3), because only seven of these ten princes had full rule over the Empire—Galba, Otho, and Vitellius being merely usurpers, see Introduction, § 4 (b); and the three crowned “Horns” corresponding to them are probably placed between the fifth and sixth “Heads,” i.e., on this theory, between Nero and Vespasian. In fact—quite irrespectively of Daniel’s having typified a fourth World-empire by a beast with ten horns (Dan. vii. 7)—the Ten crowned “Horns” and the Seven “Heads” in ch. xiii. 1 serve only for the purpose of designating a special characteristic of the Roman Empire which is symbolized by the form of the Beast regarded as a whole: and Düsterd. takes the ideas represented by the “leopard,” and “lion” and “bear,” to indicate the savage force of that which the Beast symbolized,—namely, the existing Roman World-Empire (cf. Jer. v. 6; Hos. xiii. 7, 8; Eccles. xxviii. 23). A conclusion so arbitrary supplies its own refutation.

The military despotism of Rome, writes Mr. Maurice, was established after the battle of Actium, and nearly synchronizes with the birth of Christ. That “despotism, after passing through its different stages of development in Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, was subjected to its great trial-day in the three turbulent reigns that followed, and came forth in its form of consummate brutality in the person of Vitellius; I take this to be the Wild-Beast in which the ‘Dragon’ saw his own image reflected” (l. c., p. 233). In common with many others, Mr. Maurice takes the “Ten Horns” to be the Legions in the different Provinces.

For the interpretation of the “Heads” and “Horns” as not denoting persons, or personal rulers, but the kingdoms over which they rule, see on ch. xvii. 10, 12. For the influence of the word “diadem” on the meaning of the imagery here, proving that, in consequence of its use, Roman Emperors cannot be intended, —see Note D on ch. ii. 10, and the notes generally on ch. xvii.

and upon his heads names of blasphemy.] See vv. 11.; and cf. ch. xvii. 3. By this addition of the names, Hengst. understands the assumption of the titles of Christ, “King of kings, and Lord of lords,” ch. xix. 12, 16. De Wette and others (following Beda, “reges enim suos Deos appellant”) understand the titles (e.g. “Divus”) by which Divine honours were wont to be ascribed to the Emperors: compare 2 Thess. ii. 4; and see below, ver. 4. If we believe Renan (p. 413), ‘the name Sebastos or Augustus assumed by the Emperors (who are denoted by the “Seven Heads”) was regarded as blasphemous by the Jews.’ The title Sebastos is, indeed, used by Festus (Acts xxv. 21, 25); but—in opposition to Renan’s remark—it is also used by St. Luke in Acts xxvii. 1. (Were we to read the singular, “a name,” the sense would be that each “Head” bore this name; and then Bengel, with others, would give as the “name” the Pope, Papa).

The correct interpretation of this symbolism depends on the signification of the “Heads”; and for an account of the interpretations of the “Ten Horns” and “Seven Heads,” see the notes on ch. xvii.:—meanwhile it is to be observed that the “Seven Heads” do not represent the kingdoms which were to arise out of the fourth World-empire; for that element of the symbol is represented by the “Ten Horns” bearing “diadems” (cf. ch. xvii. 12), and these,

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the

according to Dan. (vii. 7, 24), arise out of his fourth Monarchy. The symbol "Head" itself (explained in ch. xvii. 9 to be a "mountain") denotes a World-monarchy:—Babylon is thus spoken of in Jer. li. 25; cf. Isai. xiii. 2; Zech. iv. 7; and Daniel (ii. 38) writes: "Thou" [the personification of all this glory, the mightiest of the monarchs of Babylonia, the Babylonian kingdom itself] "art this bead of gold,"—see the note on Dan. ii. 38. The "Horns" denote "kings" or "kingdoms," but not "kingdoms in the same extensive sense as the 'beast' symbolizes a 'kingdom,'"—see the note on Dan. vii. 24. The mystic number Seven is the signature of what is absolute and complete, as Ten is the signature of worldly power—see Introd., § 11 (a): the "Seven Heads," accordingly, without any special identification, combined with the "Ten Horns," represent, in its different phases, the historical concentration of absolute worldly rule and power; and this is what the Beast is designed to signify.

A more special identification of the "Heads" is, however, required by the additional revelation of ch. xvii. 10. As St. John looks farther into the future than Daniel, so he looks farther into the past. He comprehends, in his picture of the conflict between the Kingdom of God and the kingdoms of the world, not merely the period which the words of Daniel (see on ver. 2) embrace, but the earliest time whence the conflict dates (see on ch. xii. 7),—The first World-power in conflict with the Theocracy was Egypt; after Egypt, came Assyria as predecessor of Babylon (Jer. l. 17),—Assyria and Egypt are coupled together in prophecy as pre-eminently God's enemies (e.g. Isai. xxvii. 13; Jer. ii. 18, 36; Zech. x. 10, 11). And thus we get (1) Egypt, (2) Assyria, (3) Babylon, (4) Medo-Persia, (5) Greece, (6) Rome, (7) that aspect of the world which the "Ten Horns" symbolize, and under which we live:—so Hengst., Auberlen, Burger represent the "seven successive World-monarchies" (Bisping, see on ver. 2, makes the seventh still future). Hofmann, Fuller, and Ebrard omit Egypt, and insert in its stead, between Greece and Rome, Syria under Antiochus Epiphanes. According to Words. the "Seven Heads" denote, (1) The Seven Hills of Rome (ch. xvii. 9), which in ch. xiii. is the seat of the Beast still in "his Imperial beast form, as the Fourth Great Monarchy of the World;" (2) Seven successive powers ending in the Beast (ch. xvii. 7–10). Godet takes the first four Heads to be, (1) Egypt, (2) Assyria (with Babylonia), (3) Persia, (4) Greece (with Antiochus Epiphanes). These four World-powers were the persecutors of Israel under the Old Covenant: then come three—to which is to be added "the eighth" of ch. xvii. 11, making four—"Heads" hostile to God under the Gentile period: viz. (5) Israel itself now reckoned among "the nations of the earth," and having "no king but Cæsar" (John xix. 15), (6) Rome, (7) a new Power to last but for "a little while" (ch. xvii. 10), and which is to sweep away like a torrent the European states into which Rome had been divided,—when "he who now letteth," or Rome, shall "be taken out of the way" (2 Thess. ii. 7). (8) Antichrist, not, as here, the Beast from the sea, but the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xi. 7); in other words, Israel,—the "Head" which had received the "death-stroke" from the Roman sword in the year 70,—which is to return as the eighth "Head," or entire Beast, as announced in ch. xvii. 11 (p. 366).

For the "Ten Horns" which mean "Ten kings," or kingdoms, see on ch. xvii. 12.

With reference to the following interpretation of the symbolism in the second verse, the authority on which it is founded must be borne in mind. We should have no right to apply Daniel's Vision of the four beasts to four Empires, or to understand ten kings or kingdoms by the Ten Horns, had not the Angel—"one of them that stood by" the Ancient of days—supplied the interpretation; see Dan. vii. 16, 17, 23, 24.

2. a leopard,] The third of the four beasts in Dan. vii. 6, whose "four heads," looking towards the four quarters of the earth, symbolically asserted that the same universal rule as that of the "kingdom of brass" (Dan. ii. 39) was guided by human intelligence. This was the Græco-Macedonian kingdom, "which with the swiftness of a leopard extended its power over those four mighty districts—Greece, Asia Minor, Egypt, and Persia or under such generals as Ptolemy, Seleucus, Philip, and Antigonus ruled 'over the whole earth.'"—see the note on Dan. vii. 6.

a bear,] The second beast in Daniel vii. 5; identified with the symbol of the "inferior" kingdom, of which the "breast and arms" were of silver (Dan. ii. 32, 39), and signifying Medo Persia, which in the history of the world's Empires was "inferior" to Babylonia:—see the note on Dan. vii. 5.

a lion,] The first of the four beasts in Dan. vii. 4; identified with that kingdom which ranked as "golden" (Dan. ii. 32, 38), and which signified the Babylonian kingdom:—see the note on Dan. vii. 4.

dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.

3 And I saw one of his heads as it were ¹wounded to death; and his ¹Gr. slain deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast.

The fourth of Daniel's beasts (see ch. vii. 7) is identified with the "fourth kingdom" in Dan. ii. 40. To this kingdom no form is assigned; it is too terrible; its power is too vast to be represented by any known beast: see Dan. vii. 19, 23—"The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom" (cf. "four kings," ver. 17). St. John does not specify Daniel's fourth beast in his description here, but indicates it by introducing its characteristic token, "Ten Horns," in ver. 1. As to the import of Daniel's fourth Kingdom there are three opinions:—(1) that it symbolizes the Roman Empire; (2) that it is the Kingdom of the successors of Alexander in Syria and Egypt; (3) that the fourth Kingdom is yet to come:—see the note on Dan. ii. 40. According to the second interpretation, the "four kingdoms" are Babylonia, Media, Persia, and Macedonia or Greece. In support of the first, or, as it is styled the "traditional," interpretation, there is "the sanction of the majority of the Fathers, of the Jonathan-Targum, Josephus, the Talmud, R. Albo, and other Hebrew writers of weight." It is also supported by Wordsworth and Pusey, by Caspari and Keil:—see the "Excursus on the Four Kingdoms" at the end of Dan. vii. Orosius (A.D. 450, Histor. lib. ii., c. 1) makes the third Empire to be the Punic instead of the Greek;—the fourth, as usual, he makes to be the Roman. The decision, however, as to this controversy does not belong to this place: suffice it to say that the four forms of worldly dominion which Daniel had symbolized separately (whether all four Kingdoms had passed away, or whether one of them, the Roman Empire, still existed when St. John wrote), are here combined into one form representing the universal World-power; and of that one form, as ch. xvii. will show more clearly, the Empire of Pagan Rome, as the Seer beheld it, supplied the outlines.

According to I. Williams, the Beast "from the sea" is not the fourth beast of Daniel, or the Roman power; "it will rather be found to grow out of that, the last of the four. For it corresponds with the "Little Horn" (Dan. vii. 8), which arises among the ten horns"; and these signify universal dominion: "St. John has a nearer and fuller view of the Little Horn of Daniel, which he sees as this great Beast of universal dominion" (pp. 233-5). According to Bisping, this Beast represents the World-power (the seventh king of ch. xvii. 10, still future for St. John) in that last form which Daniel describes, and at the moment in which Antichrist comes forth from it.

and the dragon] He who stood on "the sand of the sea," ch. xii. 18 (or ch. xiii. 1), in order thence to summon the Beast.

gave him his power, and his throne,] See ch. xvi. 10; and on ch. ii. 13.

and great authority.] And therefore rule as Satan's instrument over the kingdoms of this world—cf. Luke iv. 6: "The world," writes Archbp. Trench, "is not Satan's own; nor his at all except in so far as it has been 'delivered' to him; . . . he is now, in Christ's own words, 'the Prince of this world' (John xii. 31); in the words of His Apostle, 'the god of this world,' 2 Cor. iv. 4" (Studies in the Gospels, p. 46); and it is thus that the "Dragon" is spoken of in this verse. We have here, in this antichristian power, a counterpart to one of the "Two Witnesses" for Christ—see on ch. xi. 3.

Elliott interprets that the Dragon who had ruled over Rome Pagan, gave authority to the Beast to rule over Rome Papal.

3. And [I saw] one of his heads] "I saw" is omitted (see vv. 11.), and is to be supplied from ver. 1:—see below.

In general, ch. xvii. is to be consulted as to the meaning of this passage.

as though it had been smitten unto death;] Or as though it had been slain unto death;] Since he bore the scar of a mortal wound: the words which follow express how he could still exhibit vitality. The "Head" of the Beast which was "as though it had been smitten unto death," is placed in significant contrast to the "Lamb standing, as though it had been slain" in ch. v. 6: and thus—to apply in a different sense the explanation of Victorinus ("Christum qualem meruerunt Judæi")—the Beast becomes an object of worship (vv. 4, 12) to the godless world. In the choice of words in this verse Auberlen (p. 297) sees indicated "an outward resemblance between the Beast and the Lamb."

Mr. G. S. Faber, following the "Historic" method, concludes that on June 18, 1815, the seventh Head received its predicted deadly wound by the sword, when Napoleon's Empire fell (l. c., vol. iii. p. 281).

and his death-stroke was healed:] Cf. vv. 12, 14.

and the whole earth wondered after the beast;] (See vv. 11.). I. e., "wondered at, and followed after"—cf. John xii. 19. The godless world will wonder and worship (cf. ch. xvii. 8):—Christian faith had seemed to triumph in the victory of the Cross, but now the world triumphs. The true believer can never cease, on his side, to marvel at this, even as St. John himself marvelled (ch. xvii. 6, 7). The world wondered, notes Hengst., at the revival and continuance of the earthly power of heathenism, the success that attended its persecutions, the prostrate condition of the Church;—and this after the report of Christ's victory, and the consciousness of its truth. The fact is so important that it is twice reverted to, viz. in vv. 12, 14: the subject is also resumed at ch. xvii. 8.

The dependence of the first clause of this verse on the verb "I saw" imports, notes Hengst., that the "Head" had already been restored when it appeared to St. John;—and that St. John did not see first the wounding and then the healing: "What is meant is the stroke of his death, which Michael gave him with his sharp sword (ch. xii. 7);" so also Mede (p. 500). It may perhaps be the blow which was inflicted on Satan by the Cross of Christ (Col. ii. 14, 15), of which this trace is now exhibited by the Beast as Satan's representative. "Dead yet living; the false semblance, says Bede, of Christ and His resurrection" (I. Williams). If this verse be compared with our Lord's words in ch. i. 18, "I am the Living one, and I was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore,"—who can avoid seeing that a contrast is here designed between Antichrist, and Christ? (Bisping). Burger notes that this description points to a person, not to an institution, or a kingdom, or a people; he suggests that ch. ix. 1–21 may be connected with the rise of Antichrist; and that Apollyon (ch. ix. 11), the king of the locusts which issue from the Abyss (ch. ix. 2, 3), may be the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xi. 7), or Antichrist as described here. Antichrist Burger makes to be the last World-ruler after the previous seven have fallen; and to him "a something" is to happen which is symbolized by "the stroke of the sword" (ver. 14), his recovery from which coincides with his attaining the height of his authority as the last, or eighth World-power (ch. xvii. 11):—and thus is explained the 'wondering of the whole earth.' As to the interpretations:—

i. The revival of the World-power, after a grievous blow has been received, seems to be what is intended by St. John in the present passage;—it is especially noted in ver. 14 that after his wound the Beast still "lived." The deadly wound is always mentioned in connexion with its being healed—the non-existence of the Beast in connexion with its re-appearance: see ch. xvii. 8–11. The difficulty of the passage arises from this reference to one "Head;" and C. à Lapide suggests that one "Head" may embrace all. It seems, indeed, that each "Head" designates the entire existence of the Beast at some particular time. Thus it is that here and in vv. 12, 14 the wound of one "Head" is ascribed to the whole Beast; and so too in ch. xvii. 8, 11 the fact that the Beast "is not," is identical with its being "smitten unto death," as stated in this verse. All this appears to be generally admitted,—see on ch. xvii. 8; and cf. Auberlen, l.c., p. 298. It may be that the overthrow of the Beast's power is meant, especially as represented here by Pagan Rome which was equivalent to the whole World-power. So Hengst., who refers to ch. xvii. 10 for proof that the "Head" which the Beast bore in the time of St. John, was the sixth (see on ver. 2), or the Roman Empire. The victory of Christ was the one event in the world's history by which the whole Beast was smitten in the one "Head"; but yet the earthly power of heathenism continued—"the death-stroke," contrary to Christian hopes, "was healed," as shown, e.g., in the persecution of the Church.

ii. Ebrard does not allow (and Stern in like manner refuses to admit it) that the wound of one "Head" (the "sixth," or Rome) is here to be ascribed to the whole Beast from "the sea." Ebrard also distinguishes this Beast from that of ch. xvii., or the "Beast from the Abyss" (see Note C on ch. xi. 7):—St. John, he argues, here beholds in prophetic symbol this wounding of the sixth Head as an event still future, and as regarding one form only of the World-power, namely the overthrow of the Roman Empire by the Germanic and Slavonic Tribes:—consequently "the healing of the wound" does not denote the re-appearance of the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xvii. 8).

iii. Differently Auberlen:—Comparing the imagery of Daniel (see the note on Dan. vii. 4), he concludes that the Head "smitten unto death" was the seventh, or "Germano-Slavonic" kingdom. The first six World-kingsdoms had been heathen; it is only the seventh kingdom (or the German Tribes) which became a Christian World-kingdom, and this is meant by the "deadly wound." Christianity, however, has become worldly; a new heathenism breaks in upon the Christian world: and so the Beast's "wound" is healed. Mede also (p. 421) understands here the seventh or last "Head," to which, he considers, the "Ten Horns" belong; and he further considers that ch. xiii. is wholly occupied with that state of the Ten-horned Beast which is represented by the healing of the seventh Head (see on vv. 14, 15). Elliott's interpretation is that the seventh diademed Headship, that of Diocletian, was struck down by Constantine: that the Popes, especially Gregory the Great, began to be a new "Head" of Empire to Rome: and that thus the deadly wound of its last Pagan "Head" was healed.

4 And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast:

iv. According to his system (see on ver. 1), Godet makes the wounded "Head," or the fifth of the Seven, to be Israel which had received the blow (apparently) mortal from the Roman sword in the year 70, see ver. 14 (p. 367). With this conclusion of Godet, viz. that the wounded Head was the fifth—that is to say, on their system, Nero,—the rationalistic school is in agreement: see below, and on ch. xvii. 8–10.

v. Alford understands the Roman Pagan Empire, apparently exterminated, but restored in the establishment of the Christian Empire. And Words. notes: "The Beast now appears in another stage of his history," the Christian (see on ver. 1):—"The Imperial power of Rome was succeeded by the Papal," the wounded Head was the Imperial Head of Rome, wounded in A.D. 476, when, on the abdication of Augustulus, the Roman Empire ceased to be. The wound was healed when the Papacy succeeded to the Empire.

Nowhere is it more important for the correct interpretation of the Apocalypse to adhere to historical facts than here. Bishop Wordsworth, with other high authorities, regards the resignation of the purple by Augustulus as the extinction of the Roman Empire. As to this notion, Sir F. Palgrave writes: "Strange that historians should have encouraged each other in the error that the Empire extinguished, as they say, in Augustulus, was now [i.e., under Charles the Great, A.D. 800] restored.—Restored! never had it been suspended, either in principle, maxims, or feelings. The shattered, pillaged, dilapidated Empire was still one state, one community" (Hist. of Normandy, i., p. 29). "There was legally no extinction," writes Dr. Bryce, "of the Western Empire at all, but only a reunion of East and West" (The Holy Roman Empire, 3rd ed., p. 26). Again: on August 6, 1806, Francis II. resigned to the Emperor Napoleon the imperial dignity: "One thousand and six years after Leo the Pope had crowned the Frankish king,—1858 years after Cæsar had conquered at Pharsalia,—the Holy Roman Empire came to its end" (Ibid., p. 363). See Note B at the end of this chapter.

vi. Dr. Bryce has here justly placed Julius Cæsar—from whom the name of "Cæsar" passed on to his successors—as first of the rulers of Imperial Rome. As such Julius is spoken of by Suetonius, by Dion Cassius, by Josephus. This fact—see Introd., § 4, b.—of itself refutes the rationalistic interpretation of this passage. According to the whole school of Rationalists, St. John now repeats the popular fable (Tac., Hist., i. 2; ii. 8) that Nero [the sixth of the Cæsars] is really the fifth, or the "Head" "smitten unto death"; and that, being the fifth or last of the five "Kings" in ch. xvii. 10, he was to be restored to life after his suicide, and to become Antichrist. It was thus the "death-stroke" of the Beast was healed. It is true that even Christian literature refers to "the Nero-fable":—e.g. Sulpitius Severus, A.D. 400 (Chron., ii. c. 29), expressly applies this verse to Nero, with the preface: "Secundum illud quod de eo scriptum est."

In reply to this entire system of interpretation, see Note C at the end of this chapter; and also, the argument founded on the use of the word "diadem," as explained on ch. xvii. 10, and in Note D on ch. ii. 10.

vii. The interpretation of St. Hippolytus ("Ancolitus") is interesting:—The wounded "Head" means Antichrist's kingdom, and the "wound" signifies the world's contempt for Antichrist when he first appears. The healing of the "wound" denotes the return of the world to obedience to Antichrist as soon as he exhibits his deceiving signs, vv. 13–15:—see Note C on ch. xii. 3.

If the "Head" which received the "wound" is the symbol of the Roman Empire, "the stroke of the sword" (ver. 14) may signify the blow which the Empire received from "the sword" of the Barbarian invaders; while the healing of the "wound" may signify the continuance of the Empire, secular and political, in the sense expressed above by Sir F. Palgrave. The Spirit of Prophecy would thus indicate, by the element of evil adhering to every form of World-power, the permanence of the antichristian spirit throughout the future. This consideration supplies an answer to Düsterdieck's objection to the idea of "an abstract World-power" as symbolized by the Beast. In the Beast he sees no more than the beatben Empire of Rome, and in the "Heads" seven literal Emperors; and he pronounces it "impossible to regard as a Head of the Dragon-Beast an historical development which rests on Christian elements, and which (notwithstanding all un-Christian and anti-Christian degeneracy) has remained Christian, and has brought forth truly good fruits."—s. 435. It is this "degeneracy," however, which manifests the presence of Antichrist.

4. And they worshipped the dragon,] (On the text of this verse see vv. 11.). Some (e.g. Stuart) compare 1 Cor. x. 20; and also refer to the practice of Emperor-worship:—see below, and cf. Suetonius, Caligula, 22, &c.

because he gave his authority unto the beast;] See ver. 2; cf. Luke iv. 6: "Men worship Satan on account of the wealth and and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?

5 And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.

6 And he opened his mouth in power of the world which he bestows, under this sway of Antichrist" (I. Williams). As the Roman adored his Rome and its World-power, and offered sacrifice to the statues of his Emperors, so will men do at the end of all things in the kingdom of Antichrist (Bisping).

Who is like unto the beast?] Cf. the same form in ch. xviii. 18. See on ch. xii. 7 the reference to the meaning of the name "Michael."

and who is able to war with him?] ("and" is added—see vv. 11.). Compare ch. xii. 17: these words seem to refer to the great battle for which all things in the Apoc. are preparing—see ver. 7; ch. xix. 19. It is generally noted that this passage presents a blasphemous parody of the praise which is given in Scripture to the Living God:—"Who is like unto Thee, O Lord, among the gods," Ex. xv. 11; cf. Ps. cxiii. 5; Isai. xl. 18, 25; Micah vii. 18. The sense seems to be that the Devil, cast down from his kingdom in the idolatries of the heathen, still exercises his power revived and restored in Antichrist; that is, "by means of some spiritual idolatry equally extensive but of a more subtle kind, operating universally against Christ, through all time and place unto the end."—I. Williams, p. 241.

Mr. Maurice sees in vv. 3, 4, a description of the Empire after the death of Nero. The Beast then seemed to be "wounded to death"; but the wound was healed; "the Beast was not really gone, only one of the forms in which its nature had been for a while exhibited"; another more complete incarnation of the devilish was ready to take the place of the old (l. c., p. 237).

5. And there was given to him] I. e., to the Beast, in the form now seen, and by God's permission—cf. ch. vi. 4, 8; vii. 2; ix. 5.

These words, "there was given," notes Hengst., are very consolatory; and the phrase occurs in this chapter in three pairs, two of which belong to the first Beast, vv. 5, 7, and one pair to the second, vv. 14, 15.

a mouth speaking] These words and the words which follow, down to "given to him" (before ἐξουσία) are omitted in the codex of Erasmus—see vv. 11.

great things and blasphemies;] Cf. the description of the "Little Horn," Dan. vii. 8, 20, 25. The whole description is borrowed from Daniel;—the "war" also, ver. 7 (see Dan. vii. 21); and the 42 months (Dan. vii.

25; xii. 7). The note of Antichrist, the utterance of "blasphemies," is again added here—see ver. 1; ch. xvii. 3.

and there was given to him authority to continue] For this sense of the verb rendered "to continue" (ποιῆσαι), taking as its object the following accusative, see Acts xv. 33; 2 Cor. xi. 25; James iv. 13:—or we may render, in contrast to "speaking," "authority to do his work during" (see Dan. viii. 24; xi. 28, 30, 32, LXX.; A. V. "to practise," "to do"):—this latter sense is preferred by Vittr., Hengst., Düsterd., De Wette, Words., Alford. Bleek and Züllig take the meaning to be "to carry through his work," i. e., "to succeed." The marginal rendering "to make war" rests on insufficient authority. The Cod. Sinaiticus reads "to do what he willeth,"—see vv. 11., and cf. vv. 1, 2.

forty and two months.] This period, being that of the Woman in the Wilderness (ch. xii. 14)—of the Holy City trodden down (ch. xi. 2)—and also of the Witnesses (ch. xi. 3), again indicates that the sway of the Beast is co-extensive with the course of the Church: "it is," writes Hengst., "the signature of the world's dominion over the Church, or of the temporary subjection of the people of God."

Godet (l. c., p. 375), interpreting as a "Futurist," writes: This number—"the broken week" as before—the well-known period of Antichrist—signifies that in the midst of its development and at the height of its increase the power of Antichrist will be suddenly broken. Instead of completing his cycle, he will remain there like a tree blasted by lightning:—"The Lord shall consume the wicked one with the breath of His mouth" (2 Thesa. ii. 8). St. Jerome also sees here the latter "half week" of years in Dan. ix. 24 (Comm. in Dan. vii., t. v., p. 671):—see Note D at the end of this chapter.

The "Historical" school generally (e. g. Elliott) counts from the edict of Justinian which styles the Pope the "Head of all the Churches" (A.D. 533), or from the confirmatory edict of Phocas (A.D. 606). The former date added to 1260 years (or 42 months, see on ch. xi. 2) giving 1793—the date of the First French Revolution, which struck a blow at the Pope's supremacy; the latter date similarly giving 1866, a year still future when Elliott wrote:—see Note E at the end of this chapter.

One of the earliest attempts to apply the blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

7 And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names predictions of the Apocalypse to historical events is that of Dionysius of Alex. who applied to a contemporary, the Emperor Valerian, this description of the Beast. Valerian reigned for "seven" years (A.D. 253–260), and his persecution of the Church lasted during the latter "42 months," or 3½ years of his reign (Euseb. H. E., vii. 10).

It is important to notice that it never occurred to Irenæus, when writing of the mysterious number 666 (see on ver. 18), to identify the Beast with Nero. Nor indeed did this idea, as Rationalists hold it, occur to those early writers on the Apoc.—not even to Victorinus (see Note E on ch. xvii. 11)—who thought that the Beast or his "Heads" represented Emperors of Rome: see on ver. 3.

As a "Preterist" Mr. Maurice makes the 42 months to "denote the whole of that time of lawlessness which preceded the accession of Vespasian" (p. 239).

6. for blasphemies against God,] See vv. 11.; and cf. ver. 5.

to blaspheme His name,] For the nature of this sin see Lev. xxiv. 16; it is the note of God's servants "to fear His name":—see ch. xi. 18; Deut. xxviii. 58.

and his tabernacle,] The Temple of God bears this name of "Tabernacle" or "tent" which was its original form; because the Church, which the Tabernacle designates, is now once more in the wilderness (ch. xii. 6, 14). See Ex. xxvi. 1.

[even] them that dwell in the heaven.] Or "have their tabernacle" there. Omit "and"—see vv. 11. On the connexion between the Temple and those that worship in it, cf. ch. xi. 1;—and on Heaven as the abiding place of the faithful, see ch. iii. 12; xii. 12; Phil. iii. 20; Heb. xii. 22.

Düsterd., reading "and them that," &c., sees here three kinds of blasphemy,—(1) against God's Name; (2) against his Tabernacle; (3) against those to whom God has opened heaven as a Tabernacle.

7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them:] (On the omission of these words, see vv. 11.). This clause exactly resumes what had been said by anticipation in ch. xi. 7—"the Saints" here corresponding to "the Witnesses" there. Both passages rest on Dan. vii. 21, where what is said of the "Little Horn" is here applied to the Beast (see on ver. 5); while

Dan. vii. 22 supplies the Church with consolation under this prospect; cf. also ch. ii. 10, and see Hengst. in loc. "The Saints," according to the usage of the N. T. are the believers on earth—see Acts ix. 32; Rom. xv. 25; 1 Cor. vi. 1; &c. Cf. "the rest of her seed," ch. xii. 17. For a different result of the conflict see ch. xii. 11; xvii. 14.

and there was given unto him authority] See vv. 11. The verse begins with these words in many very ancient authorities—A, C, P, Ir., And.

over every tribe and people and tongue and nation.] See vv. 11. This fourfold enumeration embraces all the dwellers upon earth,—see on ch. v. 9. Mede notes here: "Prima ejus expeditio incubit in Albigenses et Waldenses." Renan understands the war which the Roman Empire (the Beast) waged against the Jews, adding: "The author [St. John] seems on the whole favourable to the Jewish revolt."—P. 413.

8. And all that dwell on the earth shall worship him,] I.e., the Beast, regarded as Antichrist; or, as some interpret, the accus. masc. "him" (see vv. 11.) implies that the worship of the "Dragon" is now meant—the worship of the "Dragon" following this description of the Beast, as the worship in ver. 4 follows the description in ver. 3; and the future tense (not the past as in ver. 4) signifying that the worship of the "Dragon" is to be the result of the activity of his instrument the Beast (see ver. 7):—so Düsterd. The masc. pronoun proves, writes Stern, that not an abstract antichristian principle is meant by the Beast, but a concrete, definite personality. Hengst. refers the masc. pronoun to the "King" in whom the Beast is personified (ch. xvii. 11).

[everyone] whose name] See vv. 11. is not written in the book of life] Or hath not been written. See on ch. iii. 5; xvii. 8.

of the Lamb that hath been slain] See ch. v. 12. In ch. xxi. 27 it is simply "the Lamb's book of life."

from the foundation of the world.] See Heb. ix. 26; 1 Pet. i. 19, 20; and cf. Matt. xxv. 34; Eph. i. 4. Bp. Pearson writes: "As he was 'the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world,' so all atonements which were are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

ever made, were only effectual by his blood." —On the Creed, Art. x: see ch. xii. 11. "That death of Christ which was fore-ordained 'from the foundation of the world,' is said to have taken place in the counsels of Him with whom the end and the beginning are one" (Alford).

Relying, however, on ch. xvii. 8, many (Hammond, Bengel, Stuart, Ewald, Hengst., Bleek, Düsterd., Burger, &c.) connect "from the foundation of the world" with "written." The theological significance of this interpretation is thus expressed by Dr. D. Brown (The Second Advent, p. 202): "As to the Book of Life . . . it is all but unanimously understood to denote the book of God's elect. . . . It is a catalogue of the names of all that are destined to life everlasting; . . . as having the 'names' of all that are in it 'written from the foundation of the world' (ch. xvii. 8; xiii. 8), it teaches the origin of the choice of each and all of them in the everlasting electing love of God. . . . When those 'on the left hand' find not one of their names in the book of life, they will discern therein God's eternal purpose, that they should be left to show what a fallen state is, . . . and that what God might righteously have done with all, He resolved to do with them as 'vessels of wrath fitted for destruction'—to glorify his justice in their everlasting destruction." (On this conclusion, cf. the note on ch. iii. 5).

Observe that in this description of the first Beast there is something wanting to complete our idea of Antichrist; there is none of that hypocrisy and deceivableness which other parts of Scripture lead one to expect. This is supplied by the second Beast (ver. 11); see 2 Thess. ii.; 1 John ii. 18.

9. If any man hath an ear,] The note of solemn attention, see ch. ii. 7:—what is to be heard follows in ver. 10. For a pause of a like nature, see ch. xiv. 12; xvi. 15.

10. If any man [is] for captivity, into captivity he goeth:] See vv. 11:—if not read in the text, the words "into captivity" are to be understood. Words. translates "If anyone [leadeth] into captivity, he goeth into captivity," nearly as A.V. The abstract term captivity is used for captives—"qui in captivitatē duxerit, ipse capietur." The form of words is taken from Jer. xv. 2; xliii. 11; cf. Zech. xi. 9:—see Note F at the end of this chapter.

if any man shall kill with the sword,

10 He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: "he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."

he must be killed with the sword.] (Cf. Matt. xxvi. 52). This verse is designed either as a consolation, or as a warning. As a consolation, it intimates that the persecutors of the Church shall experience the vengeance of God, and suffer the same evils as they had inflicted on the saints (Deut. xxxii. 43);—so Vitringa (p. 608), and this same note rings through the Apoc. (see ch. xviii. 5, 6; xix. 2; cf. ch. vi. 10). As a warning, it foreshows the fate of Christians in the days of the Beast's persecution—so Alford: 'As was the order of God's wrath towards His people of old, so shall it be with His saints under the persecution of the Beast.'

The former sense seems to be the true one: especially if we consider the import of the words which follow as to "the patience of the saints," showing that the Empire of the Beast would be of wide extent, and of long duration (Words.).

"Here" therefore, in the consolation just given, is the ground and source of the patience and the faith of the saints.] See ch. xiv. 12. "Here," i.e., during the rage of the Beast, is the place for patience and faith: in the endurance of persecution, must the patience—the "wisdom" (ver. 18; ch. xvii. 9)—of the faithful show itself.

Godet, dwelling on this reference to the saying of our Lord to St. Peter in Matt. xxvi. 52, writes: "In order that there may be no doubt as to the meaning, he adds: 'Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.' What he asks from the saints is resignation in face of persecuting violence" (St. John, vol. i. p. 274).

Ebrard points to three formulæ of exhortation:—(1) That which is given here; (2) The token of the Beast given in ver. 18 lest the saints should be deceived; (3) That given in ch. xiv. 12, 13.

So far, notes Mede, as to the "Secular Beast"—see on ver. 15.

THE BEAST FROM THE EARTH (11—13).

11. And I saw another beast] Of the same nature therefore as the Beast in ver. 1, with whom he is contemporaneous (ch. xix. 20). Mention is often made of the first Beast without the second (ch. xi. 7; xiii. 1; xvii. 3, 8, 11, &c.), but never of the second without the first. As Irenæus noticed (Adv. Her., v. 28, 2, p. 326), the Beast from "the earth" is identical with the "False Prophet" ("Post deinde et de armigero ejus quem et pseud-prophetam vocat");—compare ch. xix. 20 with ch. xiii. 13, 14; and see ch. xvi. 13; xx. 10 (cf. Matt. vii. 15; xxiv. 11, 24, 25).

11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

There is no Beast mentioned in the prophecies of Daniel directly corresponding to this other Beast, or the "False Prophet," though we have seen in vv. 5, 7, that certain particulars in the description of the "Little Horn"—viz. "the mouth speaking great things," and the making "war with the Saints" (Dan. vii. 8, 21)—are found in the former Beast of this chapter. The "Little Horn," however, has a special feature to which there is nothing analogous in the first Apocalyptic Beast—namely "eyes like the eyes of man," or the symbol of intelligence. This symbol answers to the character of the second Beast as "False Prophet." Accordingly we have, in this chapter, this one symbol of Daniel reflected under two forms. The emblem of Antichrist in Old Test. prophecy is now represented by two figures—those of the Beast and False Prophet—which are contrasted with, and correspond in number to the "Two Witnesses": see on ch. xi. 3. It may also be that as the first Beast is the Anti-Christ, so this second Beast, or "False Prophet," is the Anti-Pneuma (or 'Opponent of the Holy Spirit'); and thus, the two Beasts with the "Dragon" (see ch. xvi. 13) form a hellish trinity, in contrast to the Divine Trinity of ch. i. 4–6 (see De Burgh, p. 265; Ebrard, s. 263; Gebhardt, s. 247; Burger, s. 210). Or differently:—

We have not here, notes Bisping, "the many false prophets" of Matt. xxiv. 11; 1 John iv. 1, but 'antichristian prophecy,' in the last times, converging to one personal agent,—a false Elijah (see ver. 13) who shall prepare the way for Antichrist.

Haupt (The First Ep. of St. John, Engl. tr., p. 115) on 1 John ii. 18, asserts that "Scripture gives us to discern in the ways of God, that every principle is finally presented in its concentration in one person"; and considers that "the two diverse presentations of the Beast in the Apoc." are combined by St. Paul in 2 Thess. ii., "into one sole picture,"—"the Man of Sin," borrowed from the description of Daniel, and being, according to that analogy, a worldly potentate. How this combination of the many-headed Beast (or power of the world opposed to God) and "the lamb-like Beast" (or anti-christian pseudo-prophecy) comes to pass, the Apocalypse gives a hint in ch. xiii. 15, when it says: "It was given unto him" (i.e., to the Beast representing pseudo-prophecy) "to give breath to the image of the Beast that the image of the coming up out of the earth;] Another correspondence with Daniel:—the four symbolic forms, in Dan. vii. 3, to which the "Little Horn" belongs, came up from "the sea," as the first Beast here in ver. 1; but they shall also "arise out of the earth" (Dan. vii. 17), as we are now told of the second Apocalyptic Beast. In this the character of the second Beast is symbolized: "The wisdom that cometh not down from above is earthly, sensual, devilish:"—James iii. 15.

Beast should speak (ver. 15)." It is not until the hostile ungodly power of the world receives the spirit of pseudo-prophecy opposed to God—i.e., until both forms of opposition are united in one—that this enmity is raised to its highest form of activity.

Hengst. compares John viii. 23;—I. Williams understands by "out of the earth," "from the visible Church of God;" and he thinks that this Beast from the earth "may represent what is subsequently seen as the Harlot or Babylon";—Düsterdieck limits the mention of "the earth" to what is said in ver. 12 as to the exercise of this Beast's power over the earth and its inhabitants;—According to Alford the first Beast was an Empire rising up out of confusion into order; while this Beast from "the earth" arises out of human society and its progress [a view which Burger rejects as unscriptural]: and Alf. explains this as setting forth "the sacerdotal persecuting power," both Pagan and Christian—not Pagan merely (as Hammond, Grot., Ewald, De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd. maintain), or Christian merely (as Elliott and others hold, who "would limit it to the priesthood of the Papacy"), but symbolizing both;—The True Prophets, notes Burger, announced to Israel the counsels of God; this "False Prophet" announces to mankind the counsels of the "Prince of this World;"—Stuart observes that Satan is Prince of the powers of the air; the first Beast rises from the sea; here the second Beast is from the earth [or as Stuart translates "from the land" as opposed to "the sea"]; and thus all the elements are stirred up against Christians (ii. p. 273);—De Lyra made the Beast of ver. 1 to be the son of the Persian Chosroes, and the lamb-like Beast to be Mohammed;—The second Beast, writes Sir I. Newton (p. 467), was the Greek Empire; the first Beast was the Empire divided between Gratian and Theodosius;—Mr. Birks understands that the two Beasts of this chapter denote the civil and ecclesiastical Latin Empire.

two horns like unto a lamb,] I.e., like the horns of a lamb—cf. ch. ix. 10. On the 12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first word rendered "lamb" see on ch. v. 6. Words. suggests that this word (arnion) may have been chosen in order to mark its antithesis to the word rendered Beast (tberion)—see on ver. 1. The Lamb in ch. v. 6 has Seven Horns, and Hengst. supposes that the two horns of the lamb in this verse denote his inferiority in power to Christ. No further description is given of the form of this Beast, such as is given of the former Beast in ver. 1 and in ch. xvii. 3; and Dusterd. thinks that nothing more is meant than that this emblem of the "False Prophet" appears in form as a "lamb"—innocent and harmless in appearance, though speaking as a "dragon." Although the absence of the definite article does not directly point to "The Lamb" in ch. xiv. 1, nevertheless the use of a term applied elsewhere some twenty-eight times in this Book to Christ, and only to Him, cannot fail to indicate here the working of Anti-Christ. Note, that our Lord, in Matt. vii. 15, describes "false prophets" as coming "in sheep's clothing."

According to Hippolytus ("Ancolitus" l.c., p. 26) the "two Horns" represent the Law and the Prophets; and he thence infers that this second Beast is to be outwardly fair, although inwardly a ravening wolf.

By the "two Horns" Mede understands the "power of binding and loosing," claimed by the Roman Pontiff;—Vitranga, the Franciscan and the Dominican Orders;—Elliott, the Regular and the Secular Clergy.

and he spake as a dragon.] The absence of the definite article again forbids a direct reference to "the Dragon" of ch. xii. 3; xiii. 4; but we cannot doubt that the treacherous and seductive character ascribed to this lamb-like Beast in ver. 14, is included in the name of that evil power which is described in ch. xii. 9 as Dragon, Serpent, Devil, Satan, and points to Gen. iii. 1.

Krenkel (l.c., s. 59), noting that "Hebrew antiquity knows nothing of a speaking dragon," thinks that we should translate here "speaks as a serpent," according to Gen. iii. He observes that "dragon" is used as equivalent to "serpent" in the Clement. Hom. (ii. 32, 34):—see Note B on ch. xii. 3.

Stern notes that as before the Second Advent Enoch and Elijah (ch. xi. 3) will preach the kingdom of Christ, so a "False Prophet," enslaved to Satan, will strive to gain adherents to Antichrist.

As a "Preterist" Mr. Maurice makes this Beast from "the earth" to be that which sustained the Imperial tyranny of Rome,—namely, the religion of Rome (p. 243).

Among rationalistic "Preterists," Renan (p.

414) having observed that this symbol of the second Beast is by no means clear, nevertheless thinks that vv. 14–17 may indicate the thaumaturgy of the "mathematician" Babillus of Ephesus (Suet., Nero 36; Tac. Hist., i. 22), or the legends as to Simon Magus (l.c., p. 434). Réville, indeed, positively fixes on Simon Magus, whom St. John and St. Peter encountered at Samaria, Acts viii. 9–24 (l.c., p. 130). Krenkel understands by this Beast a spiritual power—the embodiment of False Prophecy—in the service of the Roman Empire (the first Beast), the existence of which in Cent. i. is proved by the references in Suetonius (Nero 36) and Tacitus (Ann., vi. 21) to "Astrologers," "Mathematicians," "Chaldeans." The chief type of the "False Prophet," according to Krenkel (ss. 80–82), was the historian Josephus, whom St. John thus notices as having abandoned the cause of his country (Sueton., Vespas. 5; Joseph., B.J. iii. 8, 9). Volkmar goes farther still, and holds that, in vv. 11–17, St. John is describing St. Paul as the "False Prophet" (see on ch. ii. 2), or, perhaps, the Pauline party in the Church. Volkmar also asserts that Rom. xiii. 1–11 is a perfect commentary on St. John's description here of the second Beast:—"As the Anti-christ of this Book is certainly Nero, so certain is it that his Christian prophet (Forerunner) is Paul" (s. 205). This is too much even for Keim (l.c., s. 160)—who however sees a reference to the "Paulinian party" in ch. ii. 2: see as to this question Note A on ch. iii. 19. Reuss merely says,—"False prophecy, by which men are seduced and led to worship the first Beast" or the Roman Empire, ch. xvii. (l.c., p. 378). And in his commentary he adds that, in the absence of details supplied to the author by the Old Test., we remark, in cases similar to the present, "un certain défaut de force plastique."—in loc.

12. And he exerciseth all the authority] I.e., 'performs all the acts of authority'—like the phrase "to do the will," John iv. 34; vi. 38, &c.: he performs them not, as the first Beast, by his direct power, but by words and miracles, and signs. This verse, notes Burger, exhibits "this second Beast as a parody of the Holy Ghost" (see on ver. 11); and he refers to John xvi. 13, 14.

of the first beast in his sight.] Under his supervision—cf. ch. viii. 2; Deut. i. 38. Notwithstanding his lamb's form, he exercises all the authority of the symbolic wild beast, which represents the other aspect of anti-christian power, in its presence and in its service—see ver. 14; ch. xix. 20.

beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

13 And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men,

14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those

And he maketh the earth and them which dwell therein] Hengst. notes, not absolutely all inhabitants of earth, but the earthly-minded, cf. Phil. iii. 19, and see on ver. 6.

to worship the first beast,] Gr. "that they shall worship":—for this construction, characteristic of St. John, see on ch. iii. 9, and Introd., § 7, IV. (f).

whose death-stroke was healed.] See ver. 3. The relation between the two Beasts or two forms of Antichrist—the secular World-power, and the spiritual World-power—is expressed in this verse. To the former Beast the "Dragon" had given his external power (ver. 4); to the latter intellectual gifts—the understanding to speak "as a dragon"; see on ver. 11. The "False Prophet" who causes the dwellers on earth to worship the Beast symbolizes the deification of the World and of the World-power. The old heathenism of the world had been, in point of fact, an apotheosis of created Nature, and this is still to be the work of Antichrist: "This," writes Auberlen, "is the new heathenism sunk back into deification of nature and humanity, and of which it cannot be predicted what forms of folly and beast-nature it shall yet assume" (l. c., p. 310).

"By the Seven-headed, Ten-horned Beast; the Two-horned False Prophet; and Babylon the Mother of Harlots" (ch. xvii.), Mede understands "the state and kingdom of Apostasie." . . . "The Kingdom of Apostasie was to be the Roman Empire."—the Beast, which has "Ten Horns" on the seventh "Head," upon the recovery of a deadly wound in one of his "Heads," rises from the sea and succeeds to the power of the "Dragon," "blaspheming God by another idolatrous worship." "This I would call Anti-christendom. The King of this Apostatical Kingdom is the Two-horned False Prophet, the Roman Bishop" (p. 922).

I. Williams notes that no explanation is given of this second Beast as there is of the first Beast and of the Harlot in ch. xvii. Observe also that Babylon, or the Harlot which sits upon the first Beast (ch. xvii. 5), arises after the "False Prophet" (ch. xiv. 8), and appears to be destroyed before him,—see ch. xviii.; xix. 20.

Renan is compelled to admit the difficulty which this verse creates for the rationalistic theory that the one head of the Beast "smitten unto death" signifies the Emperor Nero: "There is here," he writes, "a confusion between the entire Beast with 'Seven Heads' (the Roman Empire) and the Head 'smitten unto death' (Nero)" (p. 414). Observe however, that this so-called "confusion" between the wounded Head and the entire Beast is twice insisted upon by St. John himself,—viz. here, and in ver. 14. See Introd., § 4, b.

13. And he doeth great signs,] Or miracles (σημεῖα)—the word always used by St. John. That Antichrist is to possess miraculous power is, indeed, intimated by our Lord and by St. Paul (Matt. xxiv. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 9); but we cannot doubt that there is also a reference to the wonderful power over Nature which the spirit of man has attained to, and which has too often been abused to the deification of Nature and her laws, and to the disparagement of the Divine action which is ever present in Creation.

Many refer here to the magical arts common under heathenism; and Victorinus (Cent. iii.) comments: "Even at this day the magicians perform such signs by the aid of the fallen Angels" (l. c., p. 62).

so that he even maketh fire to come down out of heaven to the earth] Or, that he should even make fire to come down] On the constr. with iva, see Introd., § 7, IV. (f).

We have here another analogy to the description of the "Two Witnesses"—see on ch. xi. 5. Writing on Luke ix. 54, Abp. Trench notes: "How mighty a power this was in the eyes of [James and John] is evidenced by the fact that when in the Apoc. [John] records the great wonders and lying signs of the False Prophet, the only sign which he specially names" is that spoken of here.—Studies in the Gospels, p. 219. It is to be observed that this is the miracle which Christ forbade to be repeated if attempted in its literal sense.—Luke ix. 55, 56.

14. And he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth] See on ver. 12.

by reason of the signs] On the prep. (διὰ) with the accus., cf. ch. i. 9; iv. 11; xii. 11. For the word "signs," see on ver. 13.

which it was given unto him to do] Cf. ver. 7, and ch. vi. 4.

saying to them] The part. (λέγων) is in the nom.,—out of constr. as in ch. xi. 1: cf. below the masc. relative "who." The use of the masculine gender here and in ver. 8 Burger miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

15 And he had power to give ^{life} ^{to} unto the image of the beast, that the insists upon as proving "that by the Beast a man is represented."

that they should make an image to the beast,] I.e., in his honour (see on ver. 15). The foundation of this symbolism is to be found in the erection of statues to the Roman Emperors to which divine honours were paid. Thus Pliny writes to Trajan, shortly after the Apoc. was written, how he made it an ordeal for the Christians to offer incense before the image of the Emperor ("Cum imagini tuæ, quam propter hoc jusseram cum simulacris numinum afferri, thure ac vino supplicarent."—Epp., x. 97). We may also refer to "the image of Nebuchadnezzar's magnified royalty" in Dan. iii. (see notes on Dan. iii. 1, 14, 15). This worship of the Beast through his image denotes, as stated on ver. 12, the deification of the World and the World-power throughout the conflict between the Church and Antichrist.

Note: the "Image of the Beast" is mentioned ten times—four times in this chapter, and in ch. xiv. 9, 11; xv. 2; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4.

The "Ten-horned Beast," notes Mede (p. 421), is joined with the "False Prophet," three times—ch. xvi. 13; xix. 20; xx. 10. When "the Beast" is joined with his "Image"—ch. xiv. 9, 11; xv. 2; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4—the "Beast" is the "False Prophet"; and the "Image" is the Seven-headed Beast restored to the image of his former state as in ver. 3:—the "False Prophet" was its restorer (ver. 15), and by his will the "Image" is ruled (vv. 12, 15).

Words. understands by the "Image" the "personification of the Papacy in the visible form of the Pontiff for the time being;" and the "worship" the "Adoratio Pontificis" prescribed in the "Cæremoniale Romanum" to be performed after each Papal election; "it was performed to [Pope Pius IX.] on Wednesday, 17th June, 1846." Elliott sees here the Papal General Councils of Western Europe, which answer to the symbol of the "image" of the Ten-horned Beast, i.e., of "Papal Antichristendom, and Antichrist."

who hath the stroke of the sword, and lived.] Note, the pron. is masc. (see vv. 11.), showing the personality of the former Beast:—cf. above the gender of "saying."

"As with Daniel," notes Keil,—who takes the first Apocalyptic Beast to be the fourth Beast which Daniel (vii. 7, 8) had seen as the "Little Horn,"—"the World-power and its representative are conceived of as one and the same, so here also with John. This is seen in the insensible transition of the neuter to the masculine (τῷ θηρίῳ ὃς ἔχει).—On Daniel, Engl. tr., p. 277.

It is important to observe again that the wound of one of the Heads is here ascribed to the whole Beast:—see on ver. 3, and the remark of Renan quoted on ver. 12.

15. And it was given [unto him] to give life to it,] Gr. breath—as in marg.; or spirit, and therefore "life." See vv. 11.—the pronoun is in the feminine (αὐτῇ). If the pron. is taken to be masculine (with K, B, 1), render, And it was given unto him to give life to the image; and so A.V. Cf. vv. 7, 14.

[even] to the image of the beast,] In this verse commentators see a reference to the power of speech ascribed to images of the gods. Grotius quotes Roman historians as to the fact of speaking statues—those e.g. of Juno Moneta, of Fortuna Muliebris, of Silvanus. Renan refers in proof of this to Valerius Max. (I., viii. 3–5); and to the worship claimed for the effigies of the Emperors. It is not impossible that St. John may have intended here to signify that demon-power which was present in heathen idolatry, and to which St. Paul refers in 1 Cor. x. 19, 20. Nor again is it unlikely that he may have referred to the "worship" which "the spirit of the age" at all times receives, owing to the unconscious influence exercised by it over the minds of men. Indeed, that "art-worship" of which we hear so much at the present day seems to be leading men to the idolatry of a new heathenism.

that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause] "The Image" is the subject of both verbs. Eichhorn and Hengst. regard the second Beast as the nom. to "cause," rendering: "that the image of the beast should even speak; and that he should cause" &c.—see ver. 12. According to the Codex Sinaiticus (see vv. 11.) the sense is: that even the image of the beast should speak; and he shall cause &c.

Words. explains: "The Papal Hierarchy . . . give breath to the image which they themselves have made [the Pope], and then the image speaks." According to Bispin, all this will be fulfilled literally in the last days.

that as many as should not worship the image of the beast] See vv. 11.:—cf. ch. iii. 9.

image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

16 And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, ^{1Gr. to} to receive a mark in their ^{give.} right hand, or in their foreheads :

"The Image of the Beast" is found three times in this verse, signifying, doubtless, how great is the degree of this apostasy.

should be killed.] Pliny's letter to Trajan (see on ver. 14) has been quoted as the foundation of this symbolism ("supplicium minatus, perseverantes duci jussi").

This verse is, perhaps, the most difficult part of this most obscure description. In conformity with what has been already said of the nature of the two Beasts, may we not see in the "Image" of the first Beast those forms of seduction in which that emblem of the material World-power is reflected, and to which the second Beast, or intellectual World-power gives their vitality,—thus causing men (see ver. 14) to make of such objects "images" to receive their worship? Just before St. John writes "even now there are many Antichrists" (1 John ii. 18), he had written (ver. 16): "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world;"—and may not the temporal losses of those who disregard the appeals of ambition, or intellectual pride, or sensuality, or covetousness, be here symbolized by the fate of the early believers who would not join in the idolatrous practices of the heathen?

Mede (see on vv. 10, 14) interprets here:—"The 'False Prophet' [the Pope,—'Bestia Bicornis seu Pontifex Romanus'] gives to the 'Secular Beast' [see on ver. 10] the power of putting to death those whom he shall have condemned for heresy ['hæreseos, ut vocant, seu Imaginis violatæ']—that is to say 'Imaginis seu Bestiæ Secularis idololatricæ']"—p. 509.

16. And he causeth all,] Persons of all ranks and conditions, as in ch. vi. 15; xi. 18; xix. 18. For the constr. cf. ver. 12. The subject of the verb is either "the Image," or the Beast of ver. 11; doubtless the latter:—see on ver. 15.

the small and the great, and the rich and the poor, and the free and the bond, that there be given unto them] Gr. "that they give unto them"—see vv. 11; i.e., "that men should give unto them," or stamp on them,—the plural impersonal as in ch. xii. 6; xvi. 15. Words would render "to cause all men to give themselves a mark"—"intimating compulsion, under the semblance of choice," "they assume it voluntarily" (cf. ch. xiv. 9, 11;

xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4); so Grotius, Bleek, Dusterd., Burger, &c. De Wette gives the two versions: "dass Allen ein Maalzeichen gemacht wird;" and "dass Alle sich ein Maalzeichen machen."

a mark on their right hand, or upon their forehead;] (See vv. 11). The badge of Antichrist, in contrast to the "sign upon thine hand" and the "memorial between thine eyes," given to the people of God—Ex. xiii. 9; Deut. vi. 8; xi. 18. Archbishop Trench (see on ch. iii. 12), observing that the redeemed have "the name of God or the seal of God, on their foreheads (ch. vii. 3; ix. 4; xiv. 1; xxii. 4) with probable allusion to the golden plate inscribed with the name Jehovah" (Ex. xxviii. 36–38), adds: "Exactly in the same way, in the hellish caricature of the heavenly kingdom, the votaries of the Beast are stigmatics, having his name upon their foreheads."—The Epp. to the Seven Churches, p. 183. In Matt. xxiii. 5 we read of the "phylacteries" or "frontlets" called by the modern Jews Tephillim,—see Smith's Dict. of the Bible, art. "Frontlets;" see, too, the note on Ezek. ix. 4. For the Divine seal, of which there is here the unholy imitation, see on ch. vii. 3; xiv. 1.

Commentators also refer this "mark" or "brand" either to the heathen custom of branding slaves and soldiers (hence called στιγματῖαι) in token of their obedience to their master or general (3 Macc. ii. 29); or to the branding slaves attached to some temple (ερόδουλοι); as well as other persons devoted to the service of some deity:—thus Lucian, De dea Syra, 59 [στίζονται δὲ πάντες οἱ μὲν ἐς καρπούς, οἱ δὲ ἐς αὐχένια] supplies an excellent illustration of the passage here. Herodotus (ii. 113) also mentions the branding the temple slaves at Canopus with the sacred sign of Serapis:—as to the use of imagery borrowed from heathen customs, see on ch. ii. 10; vii. 9. The stigmata mentioned in Gal. vi. 17 are likewise cited (cf. Bishop Lightfoot, in loc., and see Philo. De Monarch. i. 8, vol. ii. p. 221); implying that consecration to the service of the Beast is what is signified here.

Reuss notes that this "mark" (χάραγμα) means an incision or "cutting" such as was forbidden under the Old Law to the people of God (Lev. xix. 28).

Hippolytus ("Ancolitus," l.c., p. 26) explains the "mark" on the hand to mean slavish obedience; and the "mark" on the forehead

17 And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

18 Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

to symbolize that men will exalt the Beast, as the forehead elevates a crown.

17. that no man should be able] Omit And—see vv. 11. The purpose and the result of imprinting the “mark.”

to buy or to sell,] I. e., to carry on social intercourse:—see on ch. xviii. 11; and cf. 1 Macc. xii. 36; xiii. 49.

Ancient expositors (Primasius, Beda, Haymo, quoted by Words.) see in the mark of the Beast an imitation of the Church's Creed, Symbolum—a term which (in the plural) also means, in the language of commerce, a covenant or treaty. Hence the reference to buying and selling, from which men are prohibited “unless they have the mark of the Beast; as merchants who sail in the same ship are known by the same sign.” And Aquinas (3, qu. 63, 3, 3, vol. xxiv., p. 311) says that the “Mark of the Beast” is the “professio illiciti cultus.”

By this prohibition Alford understands “the commercial and spiritual interdicts which have, both by Pagan and by Papal persecutors, been laid on nonconformity . . . down to the last remaining civil disabilities imposed on nonconformity in modern Papal or Protestant countries.”

Godet (l. c., p. 308) explains: The “Head” (ver. 3) which had been healed, and which now represents the entire Beast, returns as Antichrist (see on ch. xi. 13; xvii. 10)—as the eighth Head—and persecutes the Church (see ver. 6). The Church is now declared to be outlawed (“hors la loi”), vv. 16, 17:—“It is the time of the last persecutions announced in the fifth Seal.” This will be a time, notes Burger, when promises such as that in Matt. x. 41, 42, may acquire an unforeseen importance.

The meaning of this symbolism Renan holds to be that the Roman coinage bore the effigy of Nero (see on ver. 18), together with the titles ascribing divinity to him which the Jews looked upon as blasphemous; and that the Romans forced this currency on the Jews in all mercantile transactions (p. 419). Réville (l. c., p. 120) sees a reference to that gradual extension of the right of Roman citizenship by Nero, Galba, and others, to the remote Provinces, which imposed on the Christians the necessity of transacting all business, even the most simple, under the seal of the Satanic Roman power. Nothing, notes Reuss, can show more eloquently than these words the precarious state of the Christians in face of the state-law under Nero. Theirs was a “religio illicita.”

save he that hath the mark, [even] the name of the beast] Omit “or” in this place—see vv. 11. The true text thus tells us that the “mark” was “a name.”

or the number of his name.] “The mark” consists either of “the name” of the Beast written in express letters; or of “the number” which is the sum of the numerical value of the successive letters of the name—not necessarily a proper name: see ch. xix. 13, 16. “The number of the name” is equally significant with “the name” itself.

THE NUMBER OF THE BEAST (18).

18. Here is wisdom.] Gr. the wisdom—observe the article. See ver. 10, and ch. xvii. 9:—a note of attention as in ver. 9. Or, “Herein Wisdom shows itself,” in deciphering the letters of the name.

Auberlen explains (p. 343): “As the first Beast is to be met by patience and faith (ver. 10), the second Beast must be opposed by true wisdom;”—Ewald takes “Wisdom” (ἡ σοφία) to be a wise utterance in the sense of the Kabbala, viz. “Here follows the sublime saying which is intelligible only to the wise Kabbalist;”—Burger writes: “When he shall appear whose name gives the number 666, the Christian who has the true Wisdom knows what he has to expect from him.”

Reuss, having stated that this verse “gives in an enigmatic form the historical name of Antichrist” (viz. Nero), adds: “This verse is, then, so to speak, the key of the whole Book, and the explanation given of it will always be the touchstone of every system of Apocalyptic interpretation” (p. 378).

He that hath understanding, let him count the number of the beast;] Of the first Beast—see ch. xix. 20. The words “the number of the Beast” occur only here:—the words “the number of his name,” only in ver. 17, and in ch. xv. 2. Düsterd., Words. Alf., agree in seeing here a challenge to solve an enigma which the words that follow pronounce to be soluble: “It is a human number,” says Words., “and not a divine number which no one is able to count (see ch. vii. 9; xx. 8).” This inference by us means follows from the text. It is not inconsistent with the firmest belief in the inspiration of the Apocalypse, to hold that the name was unknown even to St. John himself (see Lee, On Inspiration, 4th ed. p. 209, &c.). At all events, so early a writer as Irenæus (who had conversed on this very subject with those who had seen St. John "face to face"—see above on ver. 5; and Note G at the end of this chapter) was of opinion that had St. John intended the enigma to be solved at that time, the Apostle would himself have given the solution—see the words quoted, Introd., § 2, (a), No. (10); and later still Andreas (l. c., p. 75) observes that if the solution be possible it must be left to time to reveal it.

for it is the number of a man:] (Gr. "a number of a man"). Note the connexion by "for" with the words that precede. The meaning is explained to be either (1) a symbolical number denoting a person—a man and bearing the name of a man,—thus implying that Antichrist will be a man (Beda); or (2) "the number of the Beast" is "the number of his name;" and its being "the number (or a number) of a man" signifies that we are to count as men usually count: e.g. in ch. xxi. 17 "a measure of a man" is said to mean an ordinary measure, just as in Isaiah viii. 1 "a man's pen" means the instrument which men commonly use in writing. Accordingly we are to understand by this phrase, "the number indicating the name of an individual man" (who is to be the Beast or Antichrist), obtained, by giving the sum of the numerical value of the letters of his name. "The mechanism of the problem," as it is called, is founded on the Jewish Gbematría, or geometrical calculation—see below.

Düsterd. objects against Grotius, Ewald, Züllig, and others who uphold the first interpretation, that we should then have had "the number of a certain man" or of one man" (cf. ch. viii. 13); and Ebrard thinks that by these words is meant not a mystic symbolical number at all,—like the number 144,000 of the Sealed, or the 42 months,—but a number which can be readily assigned; and he understands here by this employment of the number 6, the Roman Empire, which is the sixth World-monarchy (ch. xvii. 10).

and his number is Six hundred and sixty [and] six.] I. e., the number of the Beast is the number of his name—cf. ver. 17, and ch. xv. 2. This number, 600 + 60 + 6, is represented by three different Greek letters, χ , ξ , ς , corresponding to these three components; or, as in the earlier MSS., it is written in full (see vv. 11.). The remarks of Irenæus on the old "various reading," 616—to be found in some copies in his day, and still appearing in the important codex C and a few cursives—are worthy of particular attention: see Note G at the end of this chapter. The examples given below will explain the methods by which it has been sought to read the enigma. The method generally adopted is that known as the Gbematría (Γεωμετρία) of the Rabbins, and is as old as the beginning of the Cabbala; viz. that of assigning to each letter of a name its usual numerical value, and then giving the sum of such numbers as the equivalent of the name. Thus in the Sibylline Books (i. 324–331), and in the Epistle of St. Barnabas (c. 9), our Lord's name, Jesus, written in Greek characters, is, we are told, expressed by the number 888: viz., $1=10+\eta=8+\sigma=200+0=70+v=400+\sigma=200=888$.

The great majority of commentators, beginning with Irenæus, have made use of the Greek alphabet for this computation:—it was for Greek readers that St. John wrote; it was from the Greek alphabet that the formula "I am Alpha and Omega"—"A and Ω "—(ch. i. 8; xxi. 6; xxii. 13) has been taken; St. John usually adheres to the LXX. version of the Hebrew (e.g. in ch. ii. 27; xii. 5); and he usually translates Hebrew words into Greek, see on ch. ix. 11. Many, however, select the Hebrew alphabet, urging the Hebrew style of the entire Book; as well as the fact that all the names in the Apocalypse (except Antipas, ch. ii. 13) are either translated from the Hebrew, or left in Hebrew.—Nikolaos, Apollyon, Diabolos (ch. ii. 6; ix. 11; xii. 9), and in ch. xvi. 16 "the place called in the Hebrew tongue Ar-Mageddon." A third class of expositors employ the Roman numerals.

(1). Of this class of solutions that which has, perhaps, received the most general assent is one of the explanations of Irenæus (not, however, that which he himself most favoured), viz. Lateinos, which, written in Greek characters, gives: $\Lambda=30+A=1+T=300+E=5+1=10+N=50+O=70+\Sigma=200=666$. By this is indicated the Pagan Roman Empire ("Latini sunt qui nunc regnant," Iren.). It also, as Alford in loc. concludes, embraces "the Latin Empire, the Latin Church, Latin Christianity;" and Alf. goes on to note: "Short of saying absolutely that this was the word in St. John's mind, I have the strongest persuasion that no other can be found approaching so near to a complete solution." In his Prolegomena (§ v. 32), however, he declares, "That it is not the solution I have a persuasion amounting to certainty."

Dr. Adam Clarke (Pref. to the Rev., p. 2018) observes that the solution given by "J. E. Clarke" "amounts nearly to demonstration," viz. η Λατινή Βασιλεία,—($\eta=8+\Lambda=30+a=1+\tau=300+i=10+v=50+\eta=8$)= $407+(B=2+a=1+\sigma=200+i=10+\lambda=30+e=5+i=10+a=1)=259$; and $407+259=666$.

(2). The application of the Hebrew alphabet is not modern. Piscator, Jurieu, and others, in Cent. xvii., suggested Rômîth, i.e., "Roman" (Beast, or Kingdom, or Church—see Note G). In recent times a warm controversy has arisen among rationalistic commentators as to the priority of suggesting the solution which they take as the key to their system of exegesis. Ewald led the way in 1828, but he held to the reading 616. Then Hitzig at Zürich and Benary at Berlin, in 1836–1837, each insisted that the discovery of "Nero Cæsar" as the Beast was his own. M. Reuss of Strasbourg now intervened, claiming for himself the merit of the idea, which he had announced, he alleged, in 1835; while M. Réville declares that Professor Fritzsche was the original discoverer, at Rostock, in 1831. Accordingly, "Nero Cæsar," written in Hebrew, is alleged to be the name ($\aleph=50$, $\eta=200$, $\iota=6$, $\kappa=50$) = 306 + ($\rho=100$, $\sigma=60$, $\tau=200$) = 360, i.e. $306 + 360 = 666$. Here the Greek form of Nero (Nerôn) is represented in Hebrew characters; but if the final n (which is = 50) be omitted, and the Latin form Nero be taken, the Hebrew will give the number 616, or the reading rejected by Irenæus—a proof, writes Scholten (l. c., s. 46) that the name concealed under the number was known to the old copyists before Irenæus.

Does not the ignorance, however, of Irenæus (see on vv. 5, 17) as to any traditional explanation prove the exact opposite? while Ewald also points out that the quiescent Jod (= 10) that should appear in the word Cæsar when written in Hebrew letters (see Talm. Bab., Gittin, fol. 56), is omitted in this computation, which accordingly does not give "the name of the Beast." Renan (l. c., p. 416) shows that the name Cæsar as given in Hebrew inscriptions of the first century has the Jod: the Jod, adds Renan, was omitted by St. John as it would have given the unsymmetrical number 676.

As to this interpretation, on which the school of modern rationalism boasts itself so proudly, and on which the chief weight of the rationalistic exegesis of ch. xvii. rests,—it may again be asked how could it have been totally unknown to Irenæus, if known to those scribes who used the reading 616; especially since Irenæus, who had occupied himself with this very question, enumerates the different attempts made in his day to solve the mystery?—How, if the Western scribes had believed that "Nero-Cæsar" was intended, could the credit of the Apocalypse have been maintained, when the prophecy had been so signally falsified by the result?—Nay, even were it admitted that "Nero Cæsar" is the name denoted by 666, nothing would be gained for the argument as to the date of the Apocalypse, or as to that exposition either of ch. xiii. 3 or of ch. xvii. 10 which rests on the name Nero; because, as already pointed out (Intro. § 4, a), Domitian also was known as Nero:—

"Cum jam semianimum laceraret Flavius orbem Ultimus, et calvo serviret Roma Neroni."—

Juv., iv., 37.

"Frater [i. e., Titi] quem calvum dixit sua Roma Neronem."—Ausonius, De xii Cæs.

Gebhardt suggests that both Latinus, and Nero Cæsar were intended to be concealed under this name by St. John, who thus indicates that the Roman Empire, and Nero are alike symbolized by the Beast (l. c., s. 235).

(3). Bossuet has chosen Roman characters—DIOCLESAVGVSTVS, i.e., the Emperor Diocletian ($D = 500 + I = 1 + C = 100 + L = 50 + V = 5 + V = 5 + V = 5$) = 666. To this solution the Huguenots gave as a parallel LVDOVICVS (Lewis xiv.),—the name of Bossuet's Grand Monarque.

Reuss has well described the general character of the solutions depending on numerical computation, which have been hitherto proposed. This famous number "has been made to yield almost all the historical names of the past eighteen centuries, Titus, Vespasian, and Simon Gioras; Julius the Apostate and Genseric; Mahomet and Luther; Benedict IX. and Louis XV.; Napoleon I. and the Duke of Reichstadt; and it would not be difficult for any of us on the same principles to read in it one another's names."—p. 381.

Other solutions remain:—

(4). Bengel, following a different course, regards the number as chronological,—the neuter form of the numeral as found in certain Greek MSS. (see vv. 11.), and its masculine form in the Latin Vulgate, directing us to the word years as the noun to be understood (see Intro., § 11, (b), IV. The first Beast rises from the sea shortly after A.D. 1058 (see on ch. xii. 14):—i.e., the representative of the Papal Hierarchy, Gregory VII., came forward in 1073; and about or after 666 years from that date the Beast from the earth (ver. 11) arises, which may be Jesuitism. Pope Innocent III. had already applied the number 666 chronologically, in his Bull summoning the Fourth Lateran Council (see Hardouin. Concil., t. vii. 3, A.D. 1214);—Luther, while making the "Thousand Years" begin from the birth of Christ, and end with Pope Gregory VII., reckoned 666 years from that Pontificate as the duration to be assigned to the Papacy;—De Lyra (A.D. 1329) had in like manner explained the number 666 as denoting a period of time, viz. the interval between the Incarnation and the death of Mohammed;—and his contemporary Petrus Aureolus, like Pope Innocent III., took this period to denote the duration of Mohammedanism;—The Magdeburg Centuriators understand A.D. 666, when Pope Vitalian ordered the public services to be only in Latin;—Even Auberlen writes that the number 666 “certainly has, as all Apocalyptic numbers, its special and exact chronological signification” which time alone can explain: in the number six, moreover, as we are taught by the first six Seals and Trumpets, the judgments on the world are complete; and thus six is the signature of the world given over to judgment, the development of that number here (6 + 60 + 600) indicating that the Beast can only rise to greater ripeness for judgment. Six is the half of Twelve, which is the signature of the Church of God (as $3\frac{1}{2}$ is the half of Seven); and this development of the number six corresponds to the development of the number Twelve in the 144,000 of the sealed in ch. xiv. 1—“the judged World-power being contrasted with the glorified Church delivered from judgment” (l. c., p. 268). To the same effect:—“We have noticed,” writes Dean Vaughan (l. c., ii. p. 66), “the perfect Seven, and the imperfect half-seven; . . . We have noticed also that the number Twelve, which (with its multiples) is the Apocalyptic signal of the Church; the twelve Stars (ch. xii. 1), the four and twenty Elders (ch. iv. 4), the hundred and forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth (ch. xiv. 3). Can it be—the question has been asked, though we presume not to answer it—that the 666, the thrice repeated six, the reiteration of the half-twelve, is itself the symbol of the world, as the full and perfect Twelve is of the Church.” So also, in effect, Mr. Maurice and Burger.

Reuss considers that the absurdity of the chronological interpretation of the 666 is clear from the fact that St. John over and over again fixes the reign of paganism as lasting no longer than three years and a half.

(5). An explanation, first suggested by Heumann, taken up by Herder, and noticed by Volkmar (who however supports “Nero Cæsar”) as one intended by St. John, has been adopted by Godet: The number was originally represented by the letters $\chi\xi\xi$ —the true form. Now $\chi\xi$ is the name of Christ abridged; and ξ is the emblem of the Serpent,—as St. John styles Satan; and thus the emblematic sense of these three letters is ‘The Messiah of Satan.’” Further: Seven is the Divine number, and 777 the complete cycle of Divine perfection which the false Messiah vainly endeavours to attain: “John therefore sees in the cipher 666 the symbol of a threefold impotence—that of the Dragon to equal God, that of the Beast to equal Christ, that of the False Prophet to equal the Spirit” (l. c., p. 376). And thus ξ being the emblem of the “Serpent,” the custom of the Gnostic heretics—especially the Ophites, or ‘worshippers of the Serpent,’ who date from the first century (see on ch. ii. 24)—may be alluded to, of using for amulets gems with certain symbolic inscriptions, in this case the mark of the Beast, $\chi\xi\xi$. And so Mr. Galton (On the Revelation, in loc.), who concludes “that Antichrist will strive to do what St. Paul (2 Cor. vi. 15) tells us cannot lawfully be done, namely, to join Christ with Belial—an evil conjunction represented by $\chi\xi\xi$.”

It is to be borne in mind that the events under the seventh Trumpet (ch. xi. 15) have not yet come to pass.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XIII.

NOTE A ON VER. 1—ANTICHRIST.

Although the name “Antichrist” does not appear in the Apocalypse, the anti-christian influence is again and again referred to under various figures,—as the Beast of ch. xiii. 1;—as Babylon (ch. xiv. 8), the City of Confusion opposed to Jerusalem the City of Peace;—as the Harlot (ch. xvii. 1) opposed to the Bride;—as the lamb-like Beast, or “False Prophet” (ch. xiii. 11) opposed to the True Witness. A great outbreak of evil is hereby foreshown when the “Dragon,” and the Beast, and the “False Prophet” (ch. xvi. 13), shall be let loose “for a little time” (ch. xx. 3).

The word Antichrist ($\alpha\nu\tau\iota\chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\varsigma$ —found only in 1 John ii. 18, 22; iv. 3; 2 John 7) signifies (1) a false Christ ($\alpha\nu\tau\iota\ \chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\upsilon$,— $\psi\epsilon\upsilon\delta\omicron\chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\varsigma$), Matt. xxiv. 24, a man who gives himself out to be Christ—as the impostors, some sixty in number, who claimed among the Jews the dignity of Messiah; (2) an antagonist of Christ, an opposer of his doctrine such as St. John describes in his Epistles. “The character assigned by St. John in his Epistles to Antichrist properly so called, is one of open hostility to the Divinity and Humanity of Christ; but is not one of assumption of His attributes.”—Wordsworth on 1 John ii. 18.

New Test.—VOL. IV.

Is, then, Antichrist a person, or a principle hostile to Christ? That a personal Antichrist is to appear a short time before the Second Coming of Christ was the general opinion of the Fathers—“from the earliest,” writes Stern (s. 312), “down to Thomas Aquinas.” The text usually relied on seems to have been John v. 43. Thus St. Augustine writes: “De Antichristo dictum est, et omnes sic in- telligunt quod ait Dominus 'Ego veni in nomine Patris mei et non suscepistis me: si alius venerit in suo, hunc suscipietis.'—Serm. cxxx. 6. St. Jerome quotes the same text, with the words: "Rursumque de Antichristo loquitur ad Judæos."—ad Algasiam, Ep. cxxii. And St. Hilary: "Et hic quidem Antichristum significari non obscurum est, mendacio paterni nominis gloriantem."—De Trin. ix. 22.

The other texts usually adduced are Matt. xxiv. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 3-10.

There are three opinions as to a personal Antichrist: (1) He is Satan under a seeming human form;—(2) He is an incarnation of Satan, i. e., the prince of Hell united in essence to human nature, as it were an infernal imitation of the Logos become Man;—(3) He is an actual man who of his own free will has given himself over to the Devil. The first opinion was put forward in a treatise to be found among the works of St. Hippolytus (De Consumm. Mundi, l. c., App. p. 4). The second opinion is supported by St. Jerome (Comm. in Dan. vii. t. v. p. 671); St. Cyril. Hieros. (Cateches. xv. 11, 12, p. 229); and others. Many uphold the third opinion, that Antichrist will be an actual man; and among them Stern, who elaborately expounds in this sense the present chapter (s. 319).

The type of Antichrist before the Christian era was Antiochus Epiphanes. Auberlen (p. 64) and Dr. Pusey (Daniel the Prophet, pp. 91, 96) agree in regarding Dan. xi. 36 as setting prominently forward that typical relation: "The image of the Antichrist of the Old Test.," writes Dr. Pusey, "melts into the lineaments of the Antichrist himself;" and he quotes St. Jerome on Dan. xi. 35:—"As the Saviour had Solomon and the other Saints as types of His coming, so we may rightly believe that Antichrist had as a type of himself that most evil king Antiochus, who persecuted the Saints, and profaned the Temple."¹ "It cannot be proved with absolute certainty," writes Auberlen (p. 303), "that a personal Antichrist will stand at the head of the antichristian kingdom, . . . but the type of Antiochus Epiphanes is of decisive importance."²

That Antichrist is not a person is strongly maintained by others. St. John in his Epistles, writes Hengstenberg, makes no mention of a person: "He expressly states in 1 Ep. ii. 18, that the Antichrist is an ideal person, to be realized in a multitude of individuals:" we read of "many deceivers," "false Christs," "false prophets," 2 John 7; Matt. xxiv. 11, 24;—we read, 2 Thess. ii., of "the mystery of iniquity;" but mystery can be used only of a thing; and only of such could it be said "it already works." Hence, Hengst. concludes: "The question is not whether person or not person; but whether a real or an ideal person, such as we constantly meet with in the Psalms, of the wicked, the enemy, the adversary." So also Words. on 1 John ii. 18: St. John "appears here to represent Antichrist as an incorporation of those who set themselves against Christ This is also in accordance with St. Paul's prophecy (2 Thess. ii.) concerning the 'Lawless one,' or the 'Man of sin,' which represents a form of evil displaying itself in a continuous series of persons who are, as it were, incorporated and personified in one In like manner, it seems that the word Antichrist represents a succession of persons, in different times, animated by a spirit of violent hostility to Christ." This conclusion is not inconsistent with a possible development hereafter, in some personal agent, of the antichristian spirit.

Many parallel references to the antichristian spirit are to be found in the writings of St. John. The only distinction to be noticed—if it be a distinction—is that the idea is symbolized in the Apocalypse, and spiritualized in the Gospel and Epistles. Thus in Rev. xii. 9, 12, Satan is the "Dragon" cast down to earth;—in John xii. 31; xiv. 30; xvi. 11, he is presented as "the Prince of this world;" and in 1 John ii. 13, 14; iii. 12; v. 18, as "the evil one." It is in the Epistles, however, that the idea of Antichrist is most clearly spiritualized. There are "many antichrists" (1 John ii. 18), as there are "many false prophets" (1 John iv. 1); and "many deceivers" (2 John 7). Both in the Epistles and in the Apocalypse "false prophecy," which St. John identifies with the antichristian tendency, has Satan for its source. The spirit of Antichrist proceeds not from God but from the world (1 John iv. 3, 5), for "to be of the world," and "to be of the Devil," are synonymous expressions (1 John ii. 16; iii. 8, 12). In the Apoc. the antichristian principle is manifested by "false prophecy"; for the second Beast (ch. xiii. 11) seduces the inhabitants of the earth to worship the first Beast, working miracles after the manner of "the false prophets" (Matt. xxiv. 11, 24); nay, being expressly and repeatedly styled "the False Prophet" (ch. xvi. 13; xix. 20; xx. 10). The Antichrist of the first two Epistles is the "Deceiver":—and so is the "False Prophet" of the Apoc. (ch. xii. 9; xiii. 14). In 1 John iv. 1, we read of "spirits" of "false prophets" who are not "of God." In the Apoc. also the Satanic principle is likewise manifold in its manifestations: (1) as the "Dragon" (ch. xii. 17);—(2) as the Beast with "Ten Horns" (ch. xiii. 1);—(3) as the Beast with "Two Horns" (ch. xiii. 11);—(4) as the "three unclean spirits" (ch. xvi. 13). The "spirits" in 1 John iv. 1, who are not "of God," "are gone out into the world;"—in like manner, the Apocalyptic spirits of evil, "the spirits of devils," "go forth unto the kings of the whole world" (ch. xvi. 14). See Introduction, § 7, III., (f).

¹ Eusebius (Eclogæ Proph., in Dan. xi., ed. Gaisford) writes:—ἀρχέτυπον δὲ τοῦ Ἀντιόχου ὁ Ἀντίχριστος, καὶ τοῦ Ἀντιχρίστου εἰκὼν ὁ Ἀντίοχος.

² On the title given to Antichrist by the later Jews, Armillus, see Note B on ch. ii. 6.

Mede (Works, p. 722) held the opinion that "the time of the end," i. e., the end of the two prophetic periods of 1290 and 1335 days of Dan. xii. 11, 12 was to be marked by a new light imparted to the Church as to the interpretation of Prophecy—for so he interpreted the words "knowledge shall be increased" (Dan. xii. 4). Mede further supposed that this "increase of knowledge" was manifested A.D. 1120, by the discovery in that year of a new principle of expounding the predictions relating to Antichrist, who was no longer to be looked for in the person of an individual man, but in the series of Roman Pontiffs, or the Papacy. This "discovery" was contained in a treatise, to which Mede ascribed the date 1120, entitled "Qual cosa sia l' Antichrist"—according to which Antichrist was "discovered" to be a "cosa" (or "thing") and not a "person." Assuming that this treatise was circulated between the years 1120 and 1125, Mede concluded that this interval of five or six years must be the "time of the end" when the "days" of Daniel were to be accomplished. The document thus relied on was preserved among the relics of the Waldenses, and was first published by Joannes Paulus Perrin.¹ Mede states its substance to be that the condition of the Church at the time when it was written, and not any one person, was the Antichrist of Prophecy.

These Waldensian relics came into the possession of Sir Samuel Morland,² Envoy in 1655 from Oliver Cromwell to the Duke of Savoy, and among them was the tract known as the "Nobla Leyczon," in which the lines occur that caused Mede's mistake as to the date of the treatise. These lines were thus printed and translated by Morland:—

¹ Perrin's "Histoire des Vaudois" was printed at Geneva, A.D. 1618.

² They were deposited by him in the public Library at Cambridge, and were for a long time supposed to be lost. In the search for them which was caused by the discussion between Dr. S. R. Maitland, Dr. Todd, and Dr. Gilly respecting Mede's "discovery" and his conclusion therefrom, copies of the "Nobla Leyczon" were found among the Ussher MSS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, and also at Geneva; and, by the aid of these, Mede's mistake—already detected through the internal evidence—has been fully proved.

"Ben ha mil e cent an compli entierament, Que fo scripta lora, Car son al derier temp."

"There are already a thousand and one hundred years fully accomplished, Since it was written thus, For we are in the last time."

A typographical error in the first of these two lines led to Mede's mistake, and to the discussion to which that mistake has given rise. In Morland's copy of the "Nobla Leyczon," the line runs thus:—"Ben ha mil e * cent an" &c.,—there being an erasure before the word "cent," where, by the aid of a magnifying glass, the Arabic numeral 4, of the same form as others used in the volume, is visible. In another copy of the poem the reading is: "mil e .cccc. anz compli &c." Indeed a glance at the lines quoted above will show that the dialect is some hundreds of years later than Cent. xii. Bossuet (Hist. des Variations, xi. 12, 125) refers to Perrin's "Histoire des Vaudois," and observes that Peter Waldo's efforts were not made until 1160; and he argues against the date 1120 from the fact that in the "Nobla Leyczon" a work is quoted "que St. Augustin a intitulé des Milparlemens, c'est-à-dire des Mille paroles"—while this work is really a compilation made in Cent. xiii., and entitled "Milleloquium S. Augustini." Dr. Todd (Brit. Mag., vol. xvi. p. 605) has pointed out that what the "Nobla Leyczon" states as to Antichrist and the Last Times is taken from the speculations of the Abbot Joachim; he had already concluded, before the copies of this work were discovered, that the poem must be later than the first ten years of Cent. xiii.:—see on this subject the Preface to Dr. Todd's Work "The Books of the Vaudois, 1865."

Mr. Bradshaw, of Cambridge (quoted by Dr. Todd, l. c., p. 221) ascribes this tract "to the beginning of the 15th century at the earliest."

NOTE B ON VER. 3—THE HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE.

Mr. Freeman in his "Historical Essays" (London, 1871) reviews this work of Dr. Bryce. He writes:—"In combating the vulgar error that the Roman Empire came historically to an end in 476, though Mr. Bryce is doing excellent service to the cause of truth, he is not putting forth any new discovery. Thus much Sir Francis Palgrave has already established for the West, and Mr. Finlay for the East" (p. 135). "Mr. Bryce calls all due attention to the fact that the event of the year 476, so often mistaken for a fall of the Roman Empire, was, in its form, a reunion of the Western Empire to the Eastern The majesty of Rome still lived in men's minds; the Roman Emperor, the Roman Consuls, the Roman Senate and People still went on Unless we remember that the line of Emperors never ceased, that from 476 to 800 the Byzantine Cæsar was always in theory, often in practice recognized as the lawful Lord of Rome and Italy, it is impossible rightly to understand the true significance of the assumption of the Empire by Charles the Great" (p. 142). "During the whole of Cent. viii. the Imperial power in Italy had been gradually waning . . . the practical rule of the City had been transferred to the Frankish King. Still the tie was not formally severed; the image and superscription of Cæsar still appeared on the coin of his Western Capital, and Pippin and Charles ruled, like Odoacer, by no higher title than that of Patrician." [Mr. Freeman notes at p. 141 that there is no ancient authority for the statement, most unlikely in itself, that Odoacer assumed the title of "King of Italy"]. "The accession of Eirène filled up the measure of Western indignation." A woman could not lawfully sit on the throne of the Cæsars: "The throne was vacant; the Christian world could not remain without an Emperor (Chron. Moissiac. A. 801, ap. Pertz, Mon. Hist. Germ. i. 505); the Senate and People of the Old Rome asserted their dormant rights, and chose their Patrician Charles, not as the founder of a new Empire, not as the restorer of a fallen Empire, but as the lawful successor of their last lawful sovereign, the injured Constantine VI. This belief in the absolute continuity of the Empire is the key to the whole theory; but it is just the point by which so many readers and writers break down, and fail to take in the true character of the election of Charles as it seemed to the men of his own time" (p. 145). "From the death of Charles himself a state of division begins Then came the revival under Otto the Great [A.D. 962]. . . . The Holy Roman Empire had now assumed essentially the same form which it retained down to 1806" (p. 149).

Writers on Prophecy have not overlooked this fact of the permanence of the Roman Empire; and, from it they argue in support of their own theories. Thus Auberlen, having observed that "some find in the Fourth Monarchy also [of Daniel] a prophecy of the Papacy"—which, he adds, "may be designated as the English and French view"—proceeds thus: "It is a fact that the Roman Empire is essentially still existing in history. The old Roman Empire never thought of representing itself as a continuation of Alexander's Universal Monarchy; but the Germanic Empire knew no greater honour than to be a Holy Roman Empire of a German nationality. And even before it was dissolved, Napoleon had taken up the idea of the Roman Empire;

—his Universal Monarchy was essentially and avowedly Roman; his son was called King of Rome; his nephew, in order to found his power, distributed among the French army 'Roman Eagles.' The Roman Empire is the ideal which exerts fascinating power on the rulers of the world, which they are ever striving to realize, and will doubtless succeed in realizing. Of all phenomena of history none bears more essential resemblance to Antichrist than this demonic Napoleonism, which from the outset identified itself with the idea of the Roman Empire. In like manner it is the aim of the Czar's policy to surround his throne with the splendour of Constantinople and the Eastern Empire" (l. c., p. 221).

NOTE C ON VER. 3—THE FIRST OF THE CÆSARS.

The rationalistic interpretation of the Apocalypse assumes as a first principle that the "Heads" of the Beast symbolize seven Roman Emperors (see on ch. xvii. 10) counting from Augustus as the first of the series. This assumption makes Nero¹ to be the fifth Emperor. Some count backwards from the particular Emperor under whom they assume the Apocalypse to have been written; others count forwards but differ as to the Emperor from whom the series is to begin—whether, e. g., from Julius or Octavius (i. e., Augustus). Some even argue a priori that, inasmuch as the design of the Apocalypse is to describe how the contrast between the Kingdom of Christ and the Roman World-kingdom took its rise; and, since Christ was born under the reign of Augustus,² "Julius Cæsar was, for the New Testament history, a personage of no importance at all." (Lücke, s. 839³).

¹ Philostratus (circ. A.D. 217) quotes a saying of Apollonius of Tyana (born circ. A.D. 50) respecting Nero:—"In my travels I have seen the wild beasts of Arabia and India; but of this wild beast, commonly called a tyrant, I neither know how many heads he hath, οὐτε εἰ γὰρ ἑνὸς τε καὶ καρχαρόδου ἐστὶ."—Vita, iv. 35 (ap. Philostr. Opp., p. 178, Lips., 1709). Do not these words imply that Apollonius had seen the Apoc.? If so, the later date of the Book is proved.

² The birth of Christ under Augustus has led many, both in ancient and modern times, to count from this Emperor. Thus Clemens Al. tells us that some exhibit the series of Emperors from Augustus (i. e., "from the birth of the Saviour"—τῆς τοῦ Σωτῆρος γενέσεως); but others from Γάιος Ἰούλιος Καῖσαρ, μετ' οὗ Αἰγυπτὸς ἐβασίλευσεν.—Strom. i., t. i. p. 406.

³ Lücke quotes Tacitus, Annal., i. 4; Hist., i. 1; Aurelius Victor, De Caesaribus, c. i; Sextus Rufus, c. ii.; Hippolytus, De Antichr., c. 56; Andreas, l. c., p. 78; Malalas, Chronogr. ix.; Zonaras, Ann. x. 32.

Düsterdieck makes the further assumption that the Apocalypse cannot have been written later than the destruction of Jerusalem. He also relies on the words of ch. xvii. 10 ("the five are fallen, the one is"), and concludes that this "one"—the sixth Head or Emperor—must be Vespasian, and that the fifth is Nero; for he omits Galba, Otho, and Vitellius (see Note E on ch. xvii. 10): and thus, counting back from Nero, Augustus is the first Emperor.

Réville (Essais de Critique religieuse, 1860) appeals to the opening words of the Annals of Tacitus, where the historian, having glanced at the forms of government which had prevailed in Rome,—Kings, Consuls, the Dictatorship of Cinna and Sulla, &c.,—goes on to add: "Pompeii Crassique potentia cito in Cæsarem, Lepidi atque Antonii arma in Augustum cessere; qui cuncta, discordiis civilibus fessa, nomine Principis sub imperium adcepit." On this Réville comments: "Dans l'esprit de Tacite, César n'eut que le pouvoir de fait,—la potentia; Auguste seul eut l'imperium" (p. 125). The people, he continues, shared this opinion; for Tacitus again writes (Hist. i. 90) that, in the adulation paid to Otho, "Clamor vocesque vulgi, ex more adulandi, nimis et falsæ: quasi dictatorem Cæsarem, aut imperatorem Augustum prosequerentur" &c.—a passage which, of itself, goes to prove that Julius was the first of the Imperial line.¹

If it be asked, How could the question as to the succession of the Roman Emperors—if, indeed, it ever occurred to his mind—present itself to St. John? one naturally inquires 'How did the question actually present itself

¹ Réville proceeds:—"L'historien Florus (sous Trajan) reproduit la même division de l'histoire romaine, faisant aussi dater d'Auguste la dernière période de l'empire;" and he refers to the Proæmium of Florus which states that his narrative will give the period "from Romulus the king" "in Cæsarem Augustum septingentos per annos." "Plus loin il [Florus] observe 'qu'après le double meurtre de Pompée et de César le peuple romain semblait revenu à l'état de l'ancienne liberté.'" Here Réville stops short in the middle of a sentence; for Florus writes thus:—

"Populus Romanus, Cæsare et Pompeio trucidatis, rediisse in statum pristinae libertatis videbatur: et redierat nisi aut Pompeius liberos, aut Cæsar hæredem reliquisset Dum Sextus paterna repetit, trepidatum toto mari: dum Octavius mortem patris ulciscitur, iterum fuit movenda Thessalia" (iv. c. 3, p. 464, Amst. 1702). And shortly before, Florus had written: "Cæsar in patriam victor invehitur . . . Itaque non ingratis civibus omnes unum in principem congesti honores . . . novissime, dubium an ipso volente, oblata pro Rostris ab Antonio consule, regni insignia."—Ib. iv. c. 2, p. 462 (see Note D on ch. ii. 10).

to the mind of a Jew of that age? We find that the Jewish historian Josephus leaves no doubt as to his opinion; and the value of his opinion will be recognized by any one who remembers how closely he was connected with the Romans. Josephus clearly informs us that Augustus was the second Roman Emperor; that Tiberius was the third; that Caius (Caligula) was the fourth.¹ Nay, in an edict of Augustus granting privileges to the Jews, Augustus styles Julius his "father," and also "Emperor"—ἐπὶ τοῦ ἐμοῦ πατρὸς, Αὐτοκράτορος Καίσαρος.—Antt. xvi. 6, 2.

Turning from Josephus to the Roman historian Suetonius (born circ. A.D. 70), we find that his work "The Lives of the Twelve Cæsars" begins with the life of Julius and ends with the life of Domitian, including the lives of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius.²

Among the poems of Ausonius (circ. A.D. 370) occur the verses entitled "De xii. Cæsaribus," which begin as follows:—

"Primus regalem patefecit Julius aulam Cæsar; et Augusto nomen transcripsit et arcem."

The historian Dion Cassius (circ. A.D. 220) records that when Octavius had learned the contents of the will of Julius he at once assumed the name of Cæsar; and when this name and the succession had been ratified "according to the usual custom," from that time forth he was styled Gaius Julius Cæsar Octavianus. "I accordingly" writes Dion, —ἐγὼ δὲ οὐκ Ὀκταουϊανόν, ἀλλὰ Καίσαρα αὐτόν, ὅτι πᾶσι τοῖς τὸ τῶν Ῥωμαίων κράτος

¹ Josephus writes:—διαδέχεται δὲ καὶ τοῦτον Ἀννίος Ροῦφος, ἐφ' οὗ δὴ καὶ τελευτᾷ Καίσαρ [scil. Augustus], δεύτερος μὲν Ῥωμαίων Αὐτοκράτωρ γενόμενος.—διαδέχεται δὲ τῷ Καίσαρι τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, Τιβέριος Νέρων, τρίτος οὗτος ἤδη Αὐτοκράτωρ.—Τιβέριος δὲ τότε τὸν Γάϊον ἀποδείξας διάδοχον.—Γάϊος δὲ ἦν Αὐτοκράτωρ τέταρτος.—Antt. Jud. xviii. 2, 2; 6, 10.

² This fact is important as bearing on the rationalistic interpretation of ch. xvii. 10; and Lücke attempts to evade its force by quoting the epithet applied by Suidas (who wrote circ. A.D. 950) to the "Lives" of Suetonius, viz., Συγγενικὸν Καίσαρων;—clearly an erroneous epithet if he meant the kindred of Julius, for the Julian line was extinguished with Nero, and the new dynasty of the Flavii began with Vespasian. What Suidas did mean seems plain from the only other words which refer to the "Lives," and which follow this title, viz., περιέχει δὲ καὶ βίους καὶ διαδοχὰς αὐτῶν ἀπὸ Ἰουλίου ἕως Δομετιανοῦ.—Art. Τράγκυλλος. The idea ascribed to Suidas, and the foundation of the rationalistic theory seem to rest on the later custom, which dates, as Gibbon (ch. iii.) observes, from Hadrian (A.D. 117), of reserving the title of Augustus for the monarch, and of applying that of Cæsar to his relations.

λαμβάνουσιν ἡ προσηγορία αὕτη ἐκνεύκηκεν, ὀνομάσω (lib. xlv. 47, p. 484, ed. Reimarus, Hamb., 1750). And in accordance with this statement Dion shortly afterwards styles Julius the first, and Augustus the second Cæsar.¹

The testimony of a Roman Emperor ought to be conclusive as to the succession of his predecessors. Among the writings of the Emperor Julian—"the Apostate" (A.D. 360)—occurs the fable of "The Cæsars," in which the gods of Olympus receive the Cæsars at a banquet; the guests appear, and we read as follows: ὡς δὲ καὶ τὸ τῶν Καيسάρων συνεκροτέιτο συμπόσιον, εἰσῆει πρῶτος Ἰούλιος Καῖσαρ. Silenus looks at him, and addresses some jesting remarks to Jupiter; and then: παίζοντος ἔτι ταῦτα τοῦ Σεληνου, Ὁκταβιανὸς ἐπεισέρχεται, Τρίτος ἐπεισέδραμεν αὐτοῖς Τιβέριος, Then follow Caligula, the fourth Cæsar (referred to as θηρίον πονηρόν), and Claudius, the fifth; and then ἐπεισέρχεται λέγοντι τῷ Σεληνῷ, Νέρων μετὰ τῆς καθάρης, κ. τ. λ. (Opp., ed. Lips. 1696, pp. 308-310). Or to give the authority of a writer of the following century (A.D. 444), in the Chronicle of Prosper of Aquitain (ap. Thesaur. Antt. Rom., ed. Grævius, t. xi. p. 282) we read: "Ex hoc loco continua Romanorum adnotantur imperia, et regnat apud eos primus omnium C. Julius Cæsar Idibus Martiis C. Julius Cæsar in curia occiditur. Cæsar Augustus annis lvi." In the Chronicon Paschale (written circ. A.D. 630) we read:—ὁ δὲ Ἰούλιος Καῖσαρ πρῶτος Ῥωμαίων ἡρέθη μονάρχης βασιλεὺς (i. p. 355). Ῥωμαίων δεύτερος ἐβασίλευσεν Καῖσαρ Σεβαστὸς Αὐγουστος (ib. p. 360). And still later:—Georgius Syncellus (circ. A.D. 800):—Ῥωμαίων μονάρχης Γάιος Ἰούλιος Καῖσαρ ἔτη εἰς τούτου κληρονόμος υἱοθετηθεὶς ἦν αὐτῷ ζῶντι Ὁκταβιανὸς Καῖσαρ Δεύτερος Ῥωμαίων μονάρχης Καῖσαρ Σεβαστὸς Ὁκταούιος, ὁ καὶ Αὐγουστος ἐπικληθεὶς (ed. Dindorf, vol. i. pp. 574-577).

In fine Petavius—no mean authority—commenting on a catalogue of Epiphanius (De Ponder. et Mensur., c. xi., t. ii. p. 169) counts Augustus as the second Emperor (ib., p. 384): and to sum up in the words of an unexceptionable witness who here differs from the great majority of rationalistic critics, M. Renan writes (L'Antechrist, p. 407): "Julius Cæsar is always counted by Josephus as Emperor. Augustus is for him the second, Tiberius the third, Caius the fourth. Suetonius, Aurelius Victor, Julian, count in the same way."

The conclusion may be thus stated:—

¹ οὕτω γὰρ προσφιλῶς τῷ Καίσαρι τῷ προτέρῳ καὶ δι' ἐκεῖνον καὶ τῷ δευτέρῳ οἱ Ταρσεῖς εἶχον, ὥστε καὶ Ἰουλιόπολιν σφᾶς ἀπ' αὐτοῦ μετονομάσαι. ib. xlvii. 26, p. 508.

Mommsen¹ begins his chapter on "The old Republic and the new Monarchy," as follows: "The new Monarch of Rome, the first ruler of the whole domain of Romano-Hellenic civilization, Gaius Julius Cæsar, was in his fifty-sixth year (born 12 July, 652?) when the battle of Thapsus placed the decision of the future of the world in his hands" (p. 450). "Cæsar was invested with the title of Imperator for life, B.C. 708" (p. 468). . . . "We find on Cæsar's coins, alongside of the dictatorship, the title of Imperator prevailing, and in Cæsar's law as to political crimes, the Monarch seems to have been designated by this name; and, what is quite decisive, the authority of Imperator was given to Cæsar not merely for his own person, but also for his bodily or adopted descendants" (p. 470).² . . . "Cæsar, very judiciously connected himself with Servius Tullius, in the same way as subsequently Charlemagne connected himself with Cæsar, and Napoleon attempted at least to connect himself with Charlemagne" (p. 173) "As a worker and creator he still, after well nigh two thousand years, lives in the memory of the nations,—the first, and the unique Imperator Cæsar" (p. 558).

To the same effect Dean Merivale writes: "It is easy to say that it was not Cæsar but Augustus after him that established the Roman Empire. Nevertheless the man who first conceives and executes a great design may command more attention from mankind than one who works upon his lines, and brings his designs to completion; and so it was that from generation to generation men have been wont to regard the immortal Julius as the first of the Cæsars, and the first of the Roman Emperors." The Roman Triumvirates, p. 169.

In his history of 'The Romans under the Empire' Dean Merivale writes: "The stock of the Julii, refreshed in vain by grafts from the Octavii, the Claudii, and the Domitii, had been reduced to his [Nero's] single person, and with Nero the adoptive race of the great dictator was extinguished. The first of the Cæsars [Julius] had married four times, the second thrice, the third twice, the fourth thrice again, the fifth six times, and lastly, the sixth [Nero] thrice also."—vol. vi. p. 365.

¹ The History of Rome, vol. iv., part ii., Engl. transl., London, 1871.

² Augustus inherited under the will of his great-uncle Julius. Suetonius writes: "Ipse Augustus nihil amplius quam equestri familia ortum se scribit . . . Octavius pater . . . morte obiit repentina superstitibus liberis . . . item Augusto, quos ex Atia tulerat. Atia M. Atio Balbo et Julia sorore C. Cæsaris genita est . . . Infanti [Augusto] cognomen Thurino inditum est . . . Postea Cæsaris et deinde Augusti cognomen assumpsit, alterum testamento majoris avunculi," &c.

NOTE D ON VER. 5.—THE THREE GREAT APOCALYPTIC PERIODS.

As to whether these three periods, of 42 Months, 1260 Days, and 3½ Times, assumed to be equal in duration, are successive, or contemporaneous, writers differ:—

Godet (p. 360) makes the three years and a half to be the duration of the exile of the "Woman" (ch. xii. 14) which corresponds to the forty-two months of the reign of Antichrist (ch. xiii. 5), and to the 1260 days during which the Two Witnesses prophesy (ver. 3): "These three periods are really one and the same, applied successively, under these three forms, to the Church during the time of her emigration,—to Israel during the days of its future restoration purely external and national [see on ch. xi. 13],—and to Antichrist during the time of his dominion."

Alford notes: "We have no right to suppose them, in any two given cases, to be identical, unless the context requires such a supposition." Thus, in ch. xi. 2, 3, "it is plain that such a view [their identity] is not required by the context"; "the two periods are equal in duration, but independent of one another":—and he adds on ver. 3: "It is a pure assumption that the two periods, the 42 months and the 1260 days, coincide over the same space of time." See also De Burgh, quoted in Note B on ch. xi. 2.

To the same effect Burger notes:—The 1260 days of ch. xi. 3 are not the same period as the 42 months of ver. 2 and the 1260 days of ch. xii. 6,—but an equal period preceding this. If, then, the 1260 days of ch. xii. 6, or the 42 months of ch. xiii. 5 (= 3½ years) be taken together with the other 1260 days of ch. xi. 3 they make a period of seven years, divided into two equal parts. The first half is occupied with the preaching of the "Two Witnesses." With the victory of the Beast (ch. xi. 7),—who is proved by ch. xiii. to be the Antichrist,—its second half opens; i.e., the 42 months of ch. xi. 2, or the time of the decided ascendancy of Antichrist as described in ch. xiii. 5. Both halves together give the last "week" predicted in Dan. ix. 27. In Rev. xi. 1, 2, is described the state of the Church under the seventh Trumpet—see ch. x. 6, 7. From Rev. xi. 3–12 we learn what will immediately introduce this last period, and, at the same time, reveal what was not revealed under the first six Trumpets—namely, the Visitation with which God will strengthen His Church and vouchsafe the last testimony to the unbelieving world, before man's enmity to heaven has reached its utmost intensity. This latter Vision accordingly—that of the "Two Witnesses"—falls under the Second Woe, before the seventh Trumpet (ch. xi. 15); and the 42 weeks of ch. xi. 2, and ch. xiii. 5, beginning with the close of the 1260 days of the prophesying of the "Two Witnesses" and with the victory of the Beast (ch. xi. 7) over them, are included under the seventh Trumpet. This result, adds Burger, removes the difficulty of understanding how the victory of the Beast could take place at the close of the 42 months of his rule, which would be the case if the spaces of time described in vv. 2, 3, were the same: one perceives, too, why the "Little Book" (see on ch. x. 2) should form a part of the "Sealed Book" of ch. v., as relating to the state of the Church in "the last times;" while light is also thrown on ch. x. 11, because ch. xi. 1–12 certainly contains a prophecy "concerning many nations." Cf. the interpretation by Bisping of Dan. ix. 27, referred to on ch. ix. 12: In the midst of the [last or seventieth] "Week" of Dan. ix. 27—from which time the 42 months begin to run—Jerusalem "shall be trodden under foot."

Alf. concludes that the explanation of this period is "still among the things unknown to the Church";—"no solution at all approaching to a satisfactory one, has ever yet been given of any one of these periods."

NOTE E ON CH. XIII. 5.—"THE EDICT OF PHOCAS."

Gregory the Great (Bishop of Rome A.D. 590–604) was succeeded by Sabinian who held the see for only five months and sixteen days. After a vacancy of nearly a year, unaccounted for by Roman annalists, Boniface III., a Roman Deacon who had represented Gregory in a mission to the Court of Constantinople, became Pope. One object of this mission had been to obtain the resignation by the Patriarch of Constantinople of the title of "Œcumenical" or "Universal Bishop." This title was first used in Cent. v., and owed its origin to the customary extravagance of Eastern courtesy (see Gibbon on Oriental titles, l.c., ch. xvii.). It appears to have been given for the first time at the second Ephesine Council¹ by a bishop Olympius to Dioscorus, the Eutychian Patriarch of Alexandria (Mansi, vi. p. 855). At the Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451), in the complaint of two Deacons of Alexandria against Dioscorus, Pope Leo is styled "Ὁικουμενικὸς ἀρχιεπίσκοπος" (Mansi, vi. pp. 1005, 1012).

The Emperor Justinian had given the same title to the Bishops of Constantinople (Gieseler, Kirch. Gesch. i. 2., s. 678); and Pelagius II. (A.D. 578–590) and Gregory the Great both protested against it.

¹ A.D. 449, "The Robber-Synod." The words are: "Concilio cui præsul et primus est sanctissimus pater noster et universalis archiepiscopus Dioscorus."

Writers on prophecy assume that the Emperor Phocas (A.D. 606), at the instance of Pope Boniface III., issued an edict to the effect "that the Apostolic See of Rome was the head ('Caput') of all churches, for that the Church of Constantinople had taken to itself the title of first ('Prima') of all churches." This statement is found for the first time in a single, short, and unconnected passage in the history of the Lombards written at the close of Cent. viii. by Paul Warnfried, commonly called "Paulus Diaconus" (ap. Muratori, Script. Rer. Ital., i. 465). We next meet it, a hundred years later, in Beda, copied literally from Paul (De Temp. Ratione, ed. Giles, vi. 323). Again, after the lapse of three centuries, we find it inserted verbatim by Anastasius the Librarian in his lives of the Popes (Vita Bonifacii III.). After him it was copied by Siegebert of Gembloux in a treatise entitled 'Chronographia:' and from these works it has been simply repeated by all subsequent writers. Mr. Hallam (Middle Ages, 10th ed., ii. 160) thus comments on the use which has been made of this passage:—"I observe that some modern publications annex considerable importance to a supposed concession of the title 'Universal Bishop,' made by the Emperor Phocas in 606 to Boniface III., and even appear to date the Papal supremacy from this epoch." Perhaps, he adds, some loose expressions of Mosheim (Eccl. Hist. ii. 169) may have led to this mistake; "but there are several strong objections to our considering this as a leading fact, much less as marking an era in the history of the Papacy:—(1) Its truth, as commonly stated, is more than questionable. The Roman Pontiffs Gregory I. and Boniface III. had been vehemently opposing the assumption of this title by the Patriarch of Constantinople, not as due to themselves, but as one to which no bishop could legitimately pretend. There would be something almost ridiculous in the Emperor's immediately conferring an appellation on themselves which they had just disclaimed." (2) "The concession of Phocas could have been of no validity in Lombardy, France, or other Western countries, where nevertheless the Papal supremacy was incomparably more established than in the East." . . . (4) "Whatever the title 'Universal Bishop' meant, the Patriarchs of Constantinople," proceeds Mr. Hallam, "had borne it before, and continued to bear it ever afterwards (Dupin, De Ant. Discipl. p. 329):"—e. g. Heraclius, successor of Phocas, continued to give the title to the Patriarch of Constantinople:—see Gieseler, ib., s. 680.

Mr. Hallam, indeed, himself is in error when he proceeds to state that Popes Pelagius II. and Gregory I. disclaimed the title 'Universal Bishop,' "though it had been adopted by some towards Leo the Great in the Council of Chalcedon (Fleury, t. viii. p. 95)." In these words is repeated a mistake as ancient as the time of Gregory the Great who himself believed it (see his Epistles, lib. v. 18, 20, 41; viii. 30). The title "Head of the Universal Church," was, indeed, inserted by the Roman Legates in the Latin version of the Acts of the Council, but the original records, in Greek, give it no countenance. In the record of the voting concerning Dioscorus we read—ὁ ἀγιώτατος καὶ μακαριώτατος ἀρχιεπίσκοπος τῆς μεγάλης καὶ πρεσβυτέρας Ῥώμης Λέων (Actio iii., Mans, vi. p. 1048); while in the Latin version of the Acts which Leo sent to the Bishops of Gaul, the words appear thus: "Sanctus et beatissimus Papa, caput universalis ecclesiae" (Leonis Ep. 103 (82)). The fable which the "Catechismus Romanus" retains, that St. Cyril, at the Council of Ephesus, named the Bishop of Rome "Archiepiscopum totius orbis terrarum Patrem et Patriarcham" (pars ii., c. 7. qu. 24 § 4), first appeared in the "Aurea Catena" of Thomas Aquinas on St. Matt. xvi. 18. "It is even laid down" observes Mr. Hallam, "in the Decretum of Gratian that the Pope is not styled 'Universal'—'nec etiam Romanus Pontifex universalis appellatur,'—though some refer its assumption to Cent. ix. (Nouv. Tr. de Diplom., t. v. p. 93)."

On the words of Paul the Deacon quoted already to the effect that, in the year 606, Phocas styled the See of Rome "head" of the churches, because the Church of Constantinople had the title "first" of the churches, Mr. Hallam says: "This was probably the exact truth: and the subsequent additions were made by some zealous partisans of Rome, to be seized hold of in a later age, and turned against her by some of her equally zealous enemies" (ibid.)

NOTE F ON VER. 10.—THE TEXT OF VER. 10.

The Textus Receptus reads:—εἰ τις αἰχμαλωσίαν συνάγει, εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει. The Cod. Alex. (A) reads: εἰ τις εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν, εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει. This reading of A, writes Dr. Scrivener, "though apparently unsupported except by a Slavonic MS., and the best copies of the Vulgate," looks more probable" than that of N, B, C, P.—Introd., p. 568. The old transl. in Irenaeus gives:—"Si quis in captivitatem duxerit, in captivitatem ibit" (Adv. Hær. v. 28, p. 326).

The Armenian Version, notes Tisch., gives:

¹ The Vulg. gives: "Qui in captivitatem duxerit, in captivitatem vadit." Tregelles gives the more correct form: "Qui in captivitatem, vadit in captivitatem."

—"Sunt enim quidam qui in captivitatem tradentur;" and it goes on: "et sunt quidam qui gladio morientur, et sunt quidam qui ipsi ipsos occident." He gives as the Coptic:—"Ducens in captivitatem, ingrediatur."¹

The MS. used by Erasmus merely read: εἰ τις αἰχμαλωσίαν συνάγει. Er. completed the clause, but altered the reading given him by Valla, viz.—εἰ τις ἔχει αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει, as the Complutensian reads.

Hengstenberg supports the reading of the Text. Rec., quoting 1 Macc. xiv. 7: καὶ συνήγαγεν αἰχμαλωσίαν πολλήν—"it corresponds," he writes, "to the Hebrew הָלַךְ הַלָּל, and denotes the bringing together of captives (Luke xxi. 24) for the purpose of transporting them from their own to a foreign land:" cf. Amos i. 6. Bleek in like manner takes the abstract as put for the concrete ("So jemand Gefangene fuhret, der wandert in Gefangenschaft"), referring the words to the Beast and his adherents. Renan to the same effect translates: "Celui qui fait des captifs sera captif à son tour."—p. 412.

De Wette rejects the different readings proposed: "Perhaps the author wrote, εἰ τις εἰς αἶχμ., εἰς αἶχμ., and the ellipsis was filled up by different glosses."

NOTE G ON CH. XIII. 18.—THE NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

I. According to St. Irenæus Antichrist sums up in himself all the wickedness of former ages both before and after the Deluge; "the number of his name," therefore, is suitably set forth as 666 (καταλλήλως οὖν καὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἔξει τὸν ἀριθμὸν χξς'). Thus Noah was 600 years old when the Deluge came (Gen. vii. 6). In after times Nebuchadnezzar's image was in height three score (60) cubits, and in breadth six (6) cubits.—Dan. iii. 1. Accordingly the 600 years of Noah, together with the numbers (60 and 6) denoting the height and breadth of the image, signify the number of Antichrist's name. The number in Rev. xiii. 18, adds Irenæus (Adv. Hær. v. 29, 30) teaches us that the number of the name of the Beast exhibits, according to the computation of the Greeks, by the letters which are in it, 600 and 60 and 6:—"Some persons, however, have, through error, subtracted 50 from the middle number of the name (οὐκ οἶδα πῶς ἐσφάλησάν τινες ἐπακολουθήσαντες ἰδιωτισμῷ, καὶ τὸν μέσον ἡθέτησαν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ ὀνόματος, ὃ ψήφισμα ὑφελόντες, καὶ ἀντὶ τῶν ἐξ δεκάδων, μίαν δεκάδα βουλόμενοι εἶναι); but this was the fault of the scribes, as usually happens when numbers are set forth by letters, and when the Greek letter denoting 60 (ξ) is altered into the Greek letter Iōta denoting 10 (ι). Certain persons have even dared to look for a name represented by the false number (ἐτόλμησαν καὶ ὄνομα ἀναζητεῖν ἔχον τὸ ν' ἐσφαλμένον καὶ διημαρτημένον ἀριθμὸν); becoming liable to the punishment of him who adds or takes away aught from Scripture (Rev. xxii. 18, 19).¹ Irenæus then proceeds to state sundry explanations which had, in his time, been proposed; among which he gives LATINUS² observing:—"ΛΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ nomen habet sexcentorum sexaginta sex numerum: et valde verisimile est . . . Latini enim sunt qui nunc regnant."—ib., p. 329. If, he adds (in the passage No. (10), quoted in the Introduction, § 2, 2), it were right at the present time to proclaim openly the name of Antichrist, it would have been spoken by him who beheld the Visions of the Apocalypse,—"nomen autem ejus tacuit." Canon Farrar (The Expositor, May 1881, p. 345), apparently in illustration of this remark, writes: "Josephus was in high favour, first with Poppæa and then with the Flavian dynasty, yet he stops abruptly in his explanation of the prophecies of Daniel, with a mysterious hint that he does not deem it prudent to say more,—'Daniel did also declare the meaning of the stone to the King: but I do not think proper to relate it.'—Antt. x. 10, § 4."

¹ Griesbach gives as the reading of the Coptic and Slavonic, εἰ τις αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει, and as the reading of the Syr., εἰ τις αἰχμαλωσίαν ἀπάγει εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει.

R. Fleming (l.c., p. 30) observes "that even the Hebrew contains the number 666, in the numerical letters thereof, whether we make use of סדסדסד Romana, scil. Sedes, or לטינוס Romanus vel Latinus." From the number being found in Λατεῖνος Irenæus "concluded that he was to be a Roman." Thus, (7 = 200 + 1 = 6 + 2 = 40 + 1 = 10 + 1 = 10 + 2 = 400) = 666. And again (7 = 200 + 2 = 40 + 5 = 70 + 2 = 50 + 1 = 6 + 5 = 300) = 666. "And whereas Bellarmin objects that Latinus should be rendered by a single Iota and not by ei, he is exceedingly mistaken: for not only Irenæus renders the word thus, but all the Greeks do the same"—e.g. Ἀντονεῖνος, Σαβεῖνος.

¹ Dr. Scrivener (l.c., pp. 450, 543), aptly illustrates this alteration of the text by the reading ὡς ἐβδομήκοντα ἕξ, for διακόσια ἐβδομήκοντα ἕξ, in Acts xxvii. 37; where the "difference between B and the Received Text would consist of the insertion or the contrary of the letter ω: whether in fact the Evangelist wrote ωσοῦ or σοῦ, 'about 76' or '276'."

² The word Latinus has been objected to, because the term had no existence in the first century except in the poetry and local geography of the Campagna of Rome; and, as the name of a language, was utterly unknown in any form within the Apostolic sphere—see for example Luke xxiii. 38 (Ῥωμαῖκοις); John xix. 20 (Ῥωμαῖοι).

Of all the solutions current in his time Irenæus¹ prefers TEITAN, a word which consists of six letters, of two syllables—each consisting of three letters, and which may well designate Antichrist, as being the name of one of the giants who assailed the gods. For this last reason modern writers (Wetstein,² Knittel) have adopted it; and also from its similarity to "Titus," the name of the conqueror of Jerusalem. The name Titan is also mentioned by Victorinus, as being a name "quem gentiles Solem, Phœbumque appellant." Victorinus is also made to add that if we use Latin letters we get per antiphrasin "Diclux" (D=500, I=1, C=100, L=50, V=5, X=10)—"id quod Græce sonat Τειτάν, nempe id quod Latine dicitur Diclux, quo nomine per antiphrasin expresso intelligimus Antichristum." This suggestion of Diclux is a senseless interpolation; and the interpolator, whoever he was, was so ignorant as to make Victorinus, who lived circ. A.D. 294, also give as a solution Genseric (A.D. 429). Bengel indeed tells us that it was Ambrosius Autpertus (circ. A.D. 770) who composed DICLVX. out of DCLXVI.—the Roman numerals denoting 666.

Among the names given by Andreas, as if after Hippolytus, is Βενέδικτος. Andreas might indeed have heard of Benedict of Nursia (A.D. 530); but, as Bengel points out in his Gnomon, this name, signifying "The Blessed"—per

¹ Hippolytus (De Antichristo, c. 50, ed. Fabric. p. 25) also writes:—πολλὰ γὰρ εὐρυσκομεν ὀνόματα τούτῳ τῷ ἀριθμῷ ἰσοψηφὰ περιεχόμενα, and, following his master Irenæus (see Photius, Cod. 121), he gives Τειτάν, Εὐάνθας, Λατεῖνος, as his solutions. Hippolytus ("Ancolitus," l.c., p. 26: see Note C on ch. xii. 3) also adopts the reading 666; and adds to other explanations the word Δαντιαλοσ.

² Wetstein notes:—"Andreas: Τειτάν καθ' Ἰππόλυτον. Hesychius: Τειτάν . . . τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου ὄνομα. Beda: 'Hic numerus apud Græcos in nomine Titanis, id est gigantis, dicitur inveniri' [viz. T = 300 + E = 5 + I = 10 + T = 300 + A = 1 + N = 50 = 666; and Beda adds: 'Hoc sibi nomen Antichristus, usurpatum ire putatur de quo scriptum est exultavit ut gigas ad currendam viam,' &c.]. Eleganter [continues Wetstein] et apposite Ioannes Titum Flavium Vespasianum patrem et filios hoc nomine designat. Convenit nomen Τειτάν prænomini ipsorum Titus. Res ipsa etiam convenit. Titanes fuerunt θεομάχοι, tales etiam Vespasiani."

The idea of getting the reading 616 by dropping the final J in Nero's name, is not a discovery of modern rationalists; for Wetstein goes on to note: "Sin autem ex aliorum codicum lectione præferas 616, invenies hunc numerum demta litera postrema N in voce Τειτάν, quæ Titum clarius designat."

antiphrasin, "The Cursed"—is an interpolation made for the purpose of bringing in the name of Pope Benedict IX. (A.D. 1033-1044). The date of this Pope being thus 1000 years after the Passion, his name, accordingly, gave the date of the Kingdom of the Beast (ch. xi. 7). Arethas (l.c., p. 384) gives ὁ Νικητής, "The Conqueror," which is adopted by Stern.

Here it should be noted that it was only in the later written Greek character that final σ became s (σ really denotes 200); and that s is to be distinguished from ς—originally used for the numeral 6, but afterwards as a short form of στ. Hence we may see the error of Salmasius and Grotius, who think that St. John referred to "Ulpianus" (Ulpianus), in Greek Οὐλπιος, Ulpianus,—viz. (O = 70 + υ = 400 + λ = 30 + π = 80 + ι = 10 + ο = 70 + ς = 6) = 666.¹

II. The solution "Nero Cæsar"—the name being written in Hebrew letters as נרון קסר (=666), or נרן קסר (=616)—has been mentioned above in the note on this verse. The mode of writing this name in the Hebrew of St. John's day would be נירון קסר (see Tbalm. Babyl., Gittin, fol. 56). The name "Cæsar" (קסר) is found without quiescents in the inscriptions of Palmyra of Cent. iii. (Vogüé, Syrie centrale, Inscr. semit., pp. 17, 26); but the Nabathean inscription of Hebron which belongs to A.D. 47, presents קסר (Vogüé, ib., p. 100). Renan observes: "The omission of the ' may appear strange in the first century; it is probable that the author has designedly suppressed it in order to have a symmetrical cypher ἐξάκιστοι ἐξήκοντα ἕξ. With the ' he would have had 676"—p. 416.² In consequence of this difficulty, Ewald (s. 263) explains "Cæsar of Rome," and writes נרן קסר,—(p = 100 + ι = 10 + D = 60 + γ = 200) = 370 + (γ = 200 + ι = 6 + D = 40) = 246; and thus gets 370 + 246 = 616,—the number indicated by the reading which Irenæus rejected.

The reference to Rome in Hebrew letters has long since been suggested, and in more than one form owing to the difficulty of proving that such a group of letters has ever been used: e.g. רומיית = "Roman" Beast (חיה), or Kingdom (מלכות):—so Jurieu, Piscator, Launay, Daubuz,¹ Osiander;—or = רומה ורברבה "excelsa et praeampla:"—so Vitringa, (p. 633). Züllig's solution is the most elaborate of all:—The Rabbinical title of the Anti-Messias is Armillus,² a name which is equivalent to Balaam (see Note B on ch. ii. 6). Accordingly Züllig takes for the number the words "Balaam, son of Beor, the soothsayer"—בַּלְעָם בֶּן-בְּעוּר הַקּוֹסֵם, from which he omits ו twice (Num. xxiv. 3, 15), as well as the art. ה; and giving their values to the remaining letters he gets 666. (Mr. Elliott gives a solution, "suggested by a friend," in Arabic characters, which signify Catoolikee Lateen).

¹ The commentary ascribed to Tichonius (see Note A on ch. vi.) adopts the reading 616. We there read (ap. Opp. S. August., t. iii. p. i. App., col. 154, Ant. 1700): "Numerus, inquit, eius est sexcenti sedecim. Quem faciamus secundum Græcos maxime quia ad Asiam scribit, et εἶς, inquit, α et ω. 'Sexcenti et sedecim' Græcis literis sic fiant χις'. Quæ notæ solutæ, numerus est: redactæ autem in monogrammum et notæ faciunt et numerum et nomen. Hoc signum Christi intelligitur, et ipsius ostenditur similitudo, quam in veritate colit ecclesia."

² Ewald, however, refers to the Syriac, and also to Jewish writings (cf. Josepphōn, 2, 23, p. 156 f. Br.) for the form קסר as well as נרן—s. 263.

III. The Latin solutions are comparatively few: e.g. that ascribed to Bishop Bedell—PAVLO V. VICEDeo, (i.e., 'in the time of Paul V. Vicegerent of God'). Roman Catholic writers of course retorted: e.g. "Luther" gave the number, under his early name "Martin Lauter;"—or "Joannes Calvinus;"—or "Beza antitheos," counting at pleasure according to Saxon, or Greek, or Hebrew numerals. Thus "Martin Lauter" is represented as follows by Feuardentius (p. 200) in his notes on Irenæus (v. 30),—(M=30 + A=1 + R=80 + T=100 + I=9 + N=40)=260 + (L=20 + A=1 + V=200 + T=100 + E=5 + R=80)=406; and hence 260 + 406 = 666, where the letters of the Roman alphabet are counted, as in the Greek, by units, decads, hundreds. The same name reads in Hebrew characters, under the form לולתר, —ך=200 + ת=400 + ל=30 + ר=6 + ת=30=666. (See Belarmin., De Rom. Pont. iii. 10).

To give a few other examples:—

Weyers:—Γαῖος Καῖσαρ, Caius Caesar, or Caligula. Zuschlag (reading 616):—Δῖος Καῖσαρ, the Divine Caesar. Gensler:—Julian the Apostate, Ἀποστατήρ. Gensler takes an era called after some man or men, "for it is the number of a man;" and he takes the era of the Seleucidæ, which began B.C. 311. To this number he adds 355 which gives, according to him the date of Julian. The Vandal Genseric, Γενσηρικός (A.D. 429) is also named;—Mohammed, in Greek characters, viz. Μαομέτις, as given by Zonaras, Euthymius, and Cedrenus;—Napoleon, written Ναπολεόντι;—Paræus gives Ἰταλικά ἐκκλησία, "the Æolic termination," writes Mr. Elliott, "being given to Ἰταλικά," inasmuch as "the Latin is of Æolic origin." Hengstenberg, after Vitringa, gives the curious solution, viz., "In the whole Old Testament there is but one instance in which the number 666 occurs in connexion with a name. It is said in Ezra ii. 13: 'The sons of Adonikam 666.' The name Adonikam must therefore be the name of the Beast."—vol. ii. p. 52. (Beda notices, that 666 talents were the yearly revenue of Solomon 2 Chron. ix. 13).

¹ Daubuz observes that the Harlot's name "Mystery," in ch. xvii. 5, in Hebrew מִסְתֵּרִים, gives the same result.

² Canon Farrar (l.c., p. 336) states that in the Talmud "the Emperor Caligula is called Armillus because of the 'bracelets' (armillæ) which he had the folly to wear in public." No other reference however is given for this statement; it resembles the origin of the name Caligula (caliga). Pliny (H. N. xxxiii. 2, 37) says that the Emperors conferred the armilla on soldiers of merit, who were citizens:—"armillas civibus dedere quas non dabant externis." Suetonius indeed says that Caligula "manuleatus et armillatus in publicum processit" (Calig., c. 52); just as he mentions that Nero was accompanied by "armillata et phalerata turba" (Nero, c. 30); but the historian makes no mention of a name derived from armilla. Tacitus says nothing of such a name.

See Calmet, Dictionary of the Bible, art. "Antichrist;"—Züllig, "Excurs zu kap. xiii. 18;"—Elliott, Hor. Apoc. iii. p. 242;—A. Réville, Essais de Crit. Rel. p. 72, &c.

IV. Two specimens of interpretation may be added in conclusion:—

(1) "An interpretation of the No. 666, by Francis Potter, B.D., Oxford, 1642;" with a letter commendatory of Joseph Mede, who describes this tract as "The happiest that ever yet came into the world."

The author states "that in ch. vii. the Mystery of the number 144, which is the number opposed to 666, consists in the square root of it which is 12, and that therefore the mystery of 666 must be in the square root of it also." Now $(25)^2 = 625$; and the remainder as being "unusefull" (p. 66), may be disregarded. "The first decreed and limited number of Cardinals and parish Priests in Rome was 25;"—"The number of the gates of Rome was 25;"—"The Popish Creed consists of 25 articles, as the Apostles' doth of 12;" &c. In reply to the objection that 25 may as well be the root of any number between 625 and 676 (the square of 26) as of 666, the author says no,—for, among other reasons, "no other number whose root was 25, could be expressed by the numeral letters of the Beast's name, as concerning the word λατρεύς, and divers other names of this Beast in divers languages hath been, and may be observed." p. 190.

(2) Lange in Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie (art. Antichrist, i. 375), observes "that the numbers of the Apocalypse in general are not cabbalistic, enigmatical numbers, but symbolical numbers." The number 666, accordingly, may perhaps be explained after the analogy of the numerical symbolism of this Book; and the key to this solution may be found in the contrast between the "unrest" of apostates and the "rest" of the faithful—see ch. xiv. 11, 13. Lange sees, therefore, a threefold contrast to the sacred Seven:—"The 600 is perhaps the number of the endless, curse-laden time, which will amount to a pure Æon; 60 is the number of false prophecy in contrast to the 70 Elders of Moses (Ex. xxiv. 1) and the 70 disciples of the Lord (Luke x. 1); 6 is the number of endless trouble as opposed to 7 as the number of sabbath-rest."¹

The more this question is considered, the more one is inclined to accept the conclusion of Bellarmine:—

"Verissima igitur sententia est eorum qui ignorantiam suam confitentur."

¹ Hilgenfeld has published a Latin text of the apocryphal "Apocalypse (or ἀνάληψις) of Moses." He compares in his notes chapters i., viii., and x., with our Gospel of St. Matthew, with St. Paul in his Epistles, and with the Revelation of St. John. Matt. xxiv. 21, and Rom. ii. 15 resemble, he thinks, the words of this apocryphal writer; and Hilgenfeld concludes that Rev. xiii. 18 is founded on the following enigma of ch. ix.: "Tunc illo dicente homo de Tribu Levi, cujus nomen erit TÆE, qui habens vii. filios," &c. [cf. 2 Macc. vii., sq.]—Nov. Test. extra Can., Fascic. i. pp. 105, 112, 114.

CHAPTER XIV.

¹ The Lamb standing on mount Sion with his company. 6 An angel preacheth the gospel. 8 The fall of Babylon. 15 The harvest of the world, and putting in of the sickle. 20 The vintage and winepress of the wrath of God.

AND I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and [Ver. 1 τὸ ἀρνίον.—τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὸ ὄνομα.—[1 reads καὶ ὀνομαζόμενον (for γεγραμμένον), an error for καὶ ὀνομαζόμενον—as Andr. seems to have read]. Ver. 2 καὶ ἡ φωνὴ ἣν ἤκουσα ὡς κιθ. Ver. 4 om. 3rd εἰσιν. Ver. 5 ψεῦδος.—om. γάρ.—om. ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ (1 also omits these words, which Er. supplied from the Vulg. ante thronum Dei: Luther, "für dem stuel Gottes"). Ver. 6 ἐπὶ τοὺς.—καθήμενους.—καὶ ἐπὶ πάν. Ver. 7 λέγων. Ver. 8 ἄλλος δεύτερος ἄγγ.—om. ἡ πόλις.—ἡ for ὅτι.—τὰ ἔθνη. Ver. 9 ἄλλος ἄγγελος τρίτος. Ver. 10 om. τῶν before ἄγγ. [A omits ἀγίων]. Ver. 12 ἡ ὑπομονή.—om. 2nd ὡδε. Ver. 13 om. μοι.—[ἀπαρτί is read by Tisch., 8th ed.; others read ἀπ' ἀρτί].—ἀναπαύσονται.—τὰ γὰρ ἔργα. Ver. 14 καθήμενον ὁμοῦ υἱόν. Ver. 15 om. σοι.—om. τοῦ bef. θερίσαι. Ver. 16 τῆς νεφέλης. Ver. 18 ὁ ἔχων.—φωνή.—[1 omits τῆς ἀμπέλου]. Ver. 19 τὸν μέγαν [with A, B, C, P.—N reads τὴν μεγάλην.—1 reads τὸν ληνόν . . . τὸν μέγαν, which Er. changed into τὴν ληνόν . . . τὴν μεγάλην]. Ver. 20 ἔξωθεν.]

CHAP. XIV.

The Fifth chief Vision of the Revelation Proper now opens and is contained in this chapter:—see Intro. § 12.

The Seal-Visions, speaking generally, have occupied the section from ch. v. 1 to ch. viii. 1; and the Trumpet-Visions have extended from ch. viii. 2, down to ch. xi. 19, on which there is, apparently, an abrupt break between ch. xi. and ch. xii. In ch. xii. and ch. xiii. the origin and fortunes of the Church Militant, as well as the source of her conflict with the world, have been represented; and now, in order to fill up the break between ch. xi. and ch. xii., and immediately before the "Seven last Plagues" (ch. xv. 1), the present chapter is interposed. It contains three principal Visions—each opening with the formula, "And I saw,"—an episode (vv. 12, 13) separating the second Vision from the third. (1) In vv. 1–5, the servants of God are consoled as they contemplate the terrible prospect disclosed in ch. xiii.;—(2) In vv. 6–11 follow the announcements of the three Angels containing distinct references to ch. xiii.;—(3) In vv. 12, 13 the episode is interposed;—(4) In vv. 14–20 the Seer beholds the Vision of the Harvest and the Vintage. As in ch. vii. a Vision of the glory of heaven was given in order to animate and support the Church at the approach of "the great tribulation" (ch. vii. 14), so here, before the Seven Vials are poured out, there is given, in vv. 1–5, a Vision of the Redeemed, setting forth the recompense reserved for those "that overcome" (see ch. ii. 11; iii. 12, 21; and the note on ch. iii. 22).

THE LAMB ON MOUNT ZION (1–5).

1. And I saw,] For the same formula introducing a separate Vision, see vv. 6, 14; for the formula "I heard," see ver. 13;—cf. on ch. i. 2; iv. 1; v. 11.

and behold, the Lamb] (See vv. 11). Note the definite article, "the Lamb," the Lamb of ch. v. 6:—for the thought implied see ch. v. 9; vii. 14; xii. 11; xiii. 8. Christ, in the form of a Lamb, appears in contrast to the Dragon-form of Satan in ch. xiii. 4.

standing upon the mount Zion,] Here only, and in Heb. xii. 22, do we find "Mount with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder :

and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps :

3 And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders : and no man could learn that song but the Zion " ("Jerusalem which is above," Gal. iv. 26) mentioned in the N. Test. In Heb. xii. 18 the spiritual Zion is contrasted with the outward and earthly Zion which was the seat of the old Covenant; and as in ver. 2 the Voice is heard from "heaven," so here we have the heavenly Zion, the seat of the heavenly Temple which is related to the ancient Tabernacle, or "Tent of meeting" (Num. xvii. 4; cf. Ex. xxv. 21, 22), as the substance to the shadow (Ex. xxv. 40):—it is the place "where God and Angels meet with men, and the righteous are eternally blessed" (so Stern, Hengst., Ewald, Ebrard). This Dürstend. denies, regarding Zion as the emblem of the sacred home on earth of the New Test. Church, as it had formerly been the home of the Old Test. Church. More literally still, Burger understands the actual, earthly Zion, or Jerusalem, to which converted Israel is hereafter to return. At all events, Zion, "the City of the Lamb," is opposed to Babylon, the city of the Beast—see ver. 8 (Words.).

an hundred and forty and four thousand,] Observe the absence here of the definite article, and the use of it in ver. 3 when these same words are referred to. Accordingly the reference is now not directly to the 144,000 of ch. vii. 4, but to the innumerable multitude of ch. vii. 9. In ch. vii. 4 the 144,000 were the Sealed on earth; what is now intended is to exhibit by anticipation the Redeemed in heaven; and the same sacred number (see on ch. vii. 4) is employed by which the Sealed had been designated, because it is that very body, consisting of "the Israel of God," for whose consolation this Vision of heaven is designed.

The article is also wanting in the first clause of ch. xv., where we read "a sea of glass" (cf. ch. iv. 6). Burger explains this absence of the definite article by observing that, in ch. vii. 4, St. John had not then seen, but had merely "heard the number of them which were sealed;" and therefore that this is an absolutely new Vision:—what the Sealing had intimated, he now sees fulfilled.

having his name, and the name of his Father, written on their foreheads.] (See vv. 11.). All who have been "sealed" throughout the ages as the servants of God, and who have "come out of the great tribulation" (ch. vii. 14) are now beheld by the Seer—as if their conflict were past and over—bearing the Name wherewith they had been sealed. We observe here the fulfilment of the promise given in ch. iii. 12 (cf. Ex. xxviii. 36, 38); as well as the contrast to ch. xiii. 16:—for the contrasted mark of evil, see also ch. xvii. 5.

Some (e.g. Züllig, De Burgh, Burger) understand by the 144,000 the converted or the elect from among the Jews; and so, with a peculiar modification, Godet,—see on ch. vii. 4; x. 8; xi. 13. Ewald identifies the 144,000 here with "the armies which were in heaven," ch. xix. 14.

2. a voice from heaven,] Cf. ch. x. 4, 8. If we understand the scene to be the heavenly Zion (see on ver. 1), the Voice may be taken to proceed from the 144,000, although it is by no means necessary to suppose this. If we understand the scene to be the earthly Zion, then the voice (the speaker being left undefined) comes down from heaven, and the 144,000, "the Israel of God," listen to it on earth.

as the voice of many waters,] Cf. ch. i. 15; xix. 6.

and as the voice of a great thunder:] Cf. ch. vi. 1; x. 3, 4.

and the voice which I heard was as [the voice] of harpers harping with their harps:] See vv. 11.; and Note A on ch. v. 8. For the prep. "with" (év) see on ch. vi. 8. The strength of the heavenly Voice is attuned to harmony with the notes of the harp: cf. Ps. xliii. 4. These words join on to ver. 3—

3. and they sing as it were a new song] See on ch. v. 9, where the words "as it were" do not appear. The song is "new," because the adoration of the Lamb is introduced:—cf. Deut. xxxi. 19–22. The song is "new," notes Burger, because a new act of Divine power, viz. the Judgment close at hand, is now to be praised (cf. Ps. xxxiii. 3; xl. 3; xcvi. 1; cxliv. 9). Bengel sees a reference in the word "new" to the idea of "first-fruits," ver. 4; and so Bisping—the 144,000 are as it were "the élite of the Redeemed." De Burgh "conjectures" that the "new song" is the same as that in ch. v. 9, 10—the "song of Messiah's kingdom."

and before the four living beings and the elders:] Here we have once more the symbolism of ch. iv. 4–11.

and no man could learn the song] Cf. the similar thought, ch. ii. 17; xix. 12.

hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

4 These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.

save the hundred and forty and four thousand,] A comparison with ch. v. 9 renders it still more probable that the 144,000—who symbolize the innumerable multitude of ch. vii. 9—are beheld, by anticipation, in heaven; a result confirmed by the words which follow. On the other hand, Alf., following Düsterd. (see on ver. 1), pronounces it to be “essential to the right understanding of the Vision, that the harpers and the song are in heaven, the 144,000 on earth.”

[even they] which had been redeemed from the earth.] Gr. “bought,” “purchased:”—cf. the verb here and in ch. v. 9 with Gal. iv. 5. (The concord of the masculine participle with the fem. “thousands,” Düsterd. notes, is “ad sensum:” cf. ch. v. 13).

4. were not defiled] The tenses must be attended to in this passage. As noted on ver. 1, a Vision of the Redeemed, as if their course were past and over, is exhibited to the Church on earth: accordingly, here and in ver. 5 the past tense is necessarily used—“were not defiled,” “was found,” and each of these aorists is followed by the present, “they are,” expressive of a permanent state. Between these two “double-membered” propositions two others are interposed—one relating to the present, viz. “they follow,” the other relating to the past, “they were redeemed.” (Düsterd.)

for they are virgins.] They represent “the faithful Bride” married to the spotless Lamb—ch. xix. 7, 9 (Words.). These words may imply (if understood literally) the state described in 1 Cor. vii. 1, 7; or (if understood spiritually) the state of those, whether married or unmarried, who are spoken of in 2 Cor. xi. 2. When understood in this latter sense, the words may imply either purity of soul, as seems pointed at in ver. 5; or the chastity which is opposed to the “fornication” of Babylon (ver. 8)—viz. spiritual loyalty to God, as opposed to spiritual disloyalty: cf. ch. ii. 4, and also the spiritual sin of Jezebel, ch. ii. 20–22. Burger understands those who have not entered into the marriage state, and who thus, in the Last Days, have kept themselves free from all the cares of this life, according to 1 Cor. vii. 32, 33:—cf. Matt. viii. 19; Luke ix. 57.

That the words can only be understood spiritually seems to follow from the whole tone of Apocalyptic symbolism:—cf. the

These ^{1 Gr. were} were redeemed from among men, ^{bought.} being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb.

5 And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

mention of the Bridegroom and the Bride, of the Harlot and her fornications. Elsewhere we have the language of Ps. xlv., of the Canticles, of the Book of Hosea, above all of 2 Cor. xi. 2:—“I have espoused you to one husband that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.”

See Note A at the end of this chapter.

These [are] they which follow the Lamb] See vv. 11:—the present tense (see above) denotes their existing state of glory—cf. ch. vii. 17. Or, on the other view of this passage, the entire obedience of the Redeemed during their earthly life is implied, “following” their Lord even to death; cf. Matt. x. 38; John xiii. 36, 37; Heb. xiii. 13.

These were redeemed from among men,] See on ver. 3; and cf. the preposition here (ἀπό) with the “out of” (ἐκ) in ch. v. 9.

[to be] the first-fruits unto God and unto the Lamb.] Separated from the entire mass as the best absolutely—see Num. xviii. 12, and the notes on Ex. xxii. 29; Deut. xxi. 2–11; chosen by God as “first-fruits”—see James i. 18—they had while on earth been consecrated to His service: cf. Titus ii. 14. The opinion of many that these are first-fruits from among the Redeemed themselves, or that they are so called with respect to those who shall come after them, seems unsuitable. Still more so the notion of Reuss that the idea of “first-fruits” implies a privileged class, and accounts for the mention of a twofold Resurrection in ch. xx.

5. And in their mouth was found no lie:] See vv. 11. With the past tense, “was found,” compare “were not defiled,” ver. 4. The most general sense of “a lie” is to be understood—see ch. xxi. 8, 27; xxii. 15; a sense expounded in 1 John ii. 22: compare John viii. 44; and also the title “False Prophet,” ch. xvi. 13.

they are without blemish.] Omit the words “for,” and “before the throne of God”—see vv. 11. Ps. xv. is the best commentary on this passage.

The “Historical” interpretations at this point are of the usual character:—Cocceius refers to the protests of the Synod of Frankfurt, A.D. 794, against image worship;—The 144,000, according to Vitranga (p. 639), are the Waldenses and Albigenses, who first dared

6 And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every to abandon the communion of the Mystic Babylon, the harpers being Wiclif, Huss, and other Reformers;—Elliott sees in ver. 2 the Reformation; the "new song" being the union of all the Reformed Confessions, and the 144,000 the elect among Protestant nations who did not give way to a cold orthodoxy.

Among "Futurist" interpreters, De Burgh regards the 144,000 as being "the rest of the Woman's seed" (ch. xii. 17)—the "Woman" being the Jewish Church—who are to pass into the presence of the Lamb, exempted from death, and being "changed and translated, as shall be the Saints alive at the Lord's coming:" and he concludes that, "before the Vials of wrath are poured out, they shall be translated—the Jewish 'first-fruits,' and the Gentile 'harvest'" (pp. 272, 276). Todd (p. 116) considers that the event seen in this Vision "occurs after the revelation of Antichrist, and immediately before the proclamation 'that the hour of God's judgment is come.'"

Two of the Visions which now follow (vv. 6, 14) are introduced by the same formula, as in ver. 1, "And I saw"—the intervening episode (vv. 12, 13) including the words "And I heard" (see on ch. i. 2). These Visions announce judgment on the world which worships the Beast, and thus serve to cheer and support, throughout all the ages from the beginning, believers who are the sufferers from the Beast's oppression.

THE THREE ANGELS OF JUDGMENT (6-11).

Ebrard compares ch. xviii. with the Visions of this passage. Bisping (after Gerlach) takes vv. 6-11 to foretell that three great events at the end of the last World-week are immediately to precede Christ's Second Advent:—(1) The announcement of "the eternal Gospel" to the whole earth (Matt. xxiv. 14);—(2) The fall of Babylon;—(3) A warning to all who worship the Beast.

6. another angel] Different from those who appeared in the earlier scenes—see on ch. x. 1. It may be, as Hengst. suggests, an Angel different from the Angelus interpres of ch. i. 1, who is supposed to be the speaker in ch. x. 4; xiv. 13; &c.—see on ch. i. 1.

flying in mid-heaven,] Commentators refer to the Eagle in ch. viii. 13, which announced the "Three Woes." In vv. 7, 8, 9, are heard the sayings of the three Angels.

the eternal gospel] The word "Gospel" is found in the New Test. solely in its technical sense; and thus, as in Rom. i. 1, the definite article is not used here—the only place in St. John's writings where the word Gospel occurs.

Owing to the absence of the art. many exclude this sense, and render "an eternal gospel," of which the contents are contained in ver. 7—so Grotius, Ewald, Züllig, De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd., who appeal in proof to ch. x. 7; and thus the sense would be, "a message of good news," relating to the Lord's Second Coming. Burger says this Vision can denote nothing but a last admonition and summons to conversion shortly before the End. But, in these senses why "eternal"? Some see in this expression an allusion to God's predestination.

Bishop Wordsworth justly notes: "It is the same Gospel for all nations, and for all ages, even unto the end of the world. And St. Paul has said, 'If any man preach any other gospel' &c., Gal. i. 9." If we except these words (or Matt. xxiv. 35), the title or idea of "eternal" (cf. Heb. ix. 14) is not applied to "the Gospel" elsewhere in the New Test.

[For the classical use of the word αἰώνιος, see Plato, De Republ. ii. 363 D, where the opinion is mentioned of those who make the fairest reward of virtue in "Hades" to be μέθην αἰώνιον. Cf. De Legg., x. 904 A., ἀνὸν λειθρον δὲ δὴν γερόμενον, ἀλλ' οὐκ αἰώνιον, ψυχὴν καὶ σῶμα, κ.τ.λ.:—see also Tim., 37 D.; 38 B.; Locr. 105].

to proclaim unto] Or bring unto. The infinitive depends on "having," cf. John xvi. 12:—on the active form of the verb see on ch. x. 7. (For the insertion of the prep. ἐπί, see vv. 11.). Düsterdieck suggests as a parallel ch. x. 11—where the prep. has a dative. Hengst. explains the sense to be "over," and this, by the position of the Angel in the highest heaven; the proclamation "over" every "nation," &c. forms the counterpoise to the influence of the Beast—ch. xiii. 7. In Mark ix. 12, the signification seems to be 'towards,' 'with reference to;' and so, perhaps, here.

them that dwell] Gr. "sit"—see vv. 11. On the word "sit" cf. Matt. iv. 16:—for the thought, intimating the false security of mankind, see Matt. xxiv. 37, &c.; 1 Thess. v. 2.

and unto every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people;] See vv. 11. Cf. Matt. xxiv. 14: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

Elliott illustrates this description by the fervour which animated many of the 144,000 at the close of Cent. xviii. in the establishing nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

7 Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: ^band

^b Ps. 146.
5. Acts 14-15.

Evangelical Missions to the heathen. "The end is close at hand when this great era of Christian missions is inaugurated" (Alf.). On the other hand, as a "Futurist," De Burgh holds that "the preaching of the Gospel in this Dispensation has not hitherto had for its object the conversion of the world"—which is to be "the work of Christ's Second Advent;" and he understands the preaching of the Gospel in this verse as designed "to test, not convert, the nations" (p. 281). See on ch. xv. 4.

Victorinus takes this Angel to be Elijah, and the Angel in ver. 8 to be the other "Witness:" see ch. xi. 3.

7. and he saith with a great voice,] The part. (λέγων) is in the nom.—see vv. 11.

and give him glory;] Cf. ch. xi. 13.

for the hour of his judgment is come:] Cf. ch. vi. 17; xi. 18. The Judgment is introduced at ver. 14; and to the eve of that consummation this verse points. Elliott notes that this new era of missions points out the sounding of the seventh Trumpet, and the outburst of the French Revolution of 1789, to be the epoch.

the heaven and the earth and sea and fountains of waters.] The A. V. here omits the definite article where it occurs, and inserts it where it is absent. Cf. the divisions of the waters in ch. viii. 8-11; xvi. 3, 4. On the objects of Creation here specified the judgments of the Seals, the Trumpets, and the Vials are poured out. In ch. viii. 7-12 the first four Trumpets relate to this same four-fold division—the earth, the sea, the sweet waters, the heaven.

8. And another, a second angel, followed,] (See vv. 11.). This "second Angel" is expressly distinguished by this description from the "another Angel" in ver. 6. It belongs, notes Düsterd., to the dramatic animation of the scene that each new announcement is committed to a special angelic messenger.

saying, Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great,] (Omit city—see vv. 11.). This use of the aorist—in the sense of the "prophetic preterite"—expresses the certainty of the fall: cf. ch. x. 7; xi. 18; xviii. 2, and see on ch. xv. 1. The language is taken from Isai. xxi. 9, the verb denoting the violent fall and overthrow of kingdoms—cf. Ezek. xxx. 6; and see on worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

8 And there followed another ^cangel, saying, 'Babylon is fallen, is ^dfallen'

^c Is. 21. 6
^d Jer. 51. 8.
ch. 18. 2.

ch. xvii. 10. With the fall of Babylon, the capital of the ungodly World-kingdom, the Old Test. connects the redemption of the people of God (Isai. xiii. 19; xlvii. 1; Jer. li. 1-10). [B, C omit the second "fallen"].

This is the first mention of Babylon in the Apocalypse, and—if we except 1 Pet. v. 13—in the New Test.; the name of the Old Test. World-power being now transferred to the New Test. World-power (ch. xiii. ; xviii. 10). The title "Great" was applied to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. iv. 30). "Great Babylon" is now but "a possession for the bittern, and pools of water" (Isai. xiv. 23):—see the note on Dan. iv. 30. As in ch. xi. 7 there is an anticipatory mention of the Beast before he is fully described, so here the great event of the last Vial (ch. xvi. 19) is foreshadowed.

Babylon, in its first form on the plain of Shinar, was the living type of the idolatrous city. Shinar, as an ideal land of unholiness, is contrasted with Israel, "the Holy Land" (Zech. ii. 7, 12). "What was Nineveh under Sennacherib, was Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar. The type remained, though a city of the West became the ruling power of the earth" (Maurice, l. c., p. 323).

For the more special interpretation of "Babylon," see generally on ch. xvii.

Tertullian (Marc. iii. 13), Jerome (in Isai. xlvii.), Augustin. (De Civ. Dei, xviii. 22), Belarmine, Bossuet, Bleek, Döllinger, Hengst. &c., understand Rome Pagan;—It was usual among the Christians, writes Renan, "whether through precaution against the police, or from a taste for mystery, to designate Rome by the name of Babylon (1 Pet. v. 13; Apoc. xiv.-xviii.; Carm. Sibyll. v. 142, 158): the Jews called Rome 'Nineveh,' and the Roman Empire 'Edom,' see Buxtorf., Lex. Chald. (p. 36);—Vitr., Bengel, Elliott, &c., take it to mean Rome Papal;—Beda the evil world ("Diaboli civitas");—Herder, Züllig, &c., Jerusalem;—I. Williams, "Heathen Rome and adulterous Jerusalem" (p. 260);—Bisping, referring to ch. xvii. 18, "the chief City of the Antichristian World-power of the Last Days—the Capital of the Beast from the Sea."

The fact is once for all to be noted here that nothing is more marked in Scripture than the contrast which is maintained between Babylon as the type of the World, and Jerusalem as the type of the Church (cf. ch. xxi. 2). This contrast is introduced by the four-fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall dation of Babel soon after the Deluge; and it is completed by the establishment of the house of David in the City of Zion. Babylon is ever the scene of confusion;—"Jerusalem is built as a City that is at unity in itself." This is the theme of St. Augustine's great work De Civitate Dei: the contrast between the two Cities—the worldly and the heavenly—supplies him with an interpretation of the whole Bible. Their actual relations gave shape to the entire history of the ancient people of God. If Babylon be supposed to be an emblem of the Church, this main analogy of Holy Writ is lost sight of; and the meaning which we ought to deduce naturally from its history and its types is forgotten:—see Introd. § 12.

which hath made all the nations to drink] See vv. 11. Cf. the text of this verse with that of ch. xviii. 3.

of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.] On the idea of "fornication" here, see on ch. xvii. 1; and also on ch. ii. 14, 20-22. This whole passage as to Babylon is founded on Jer. li. 7, 8—see ch. xvii. 4. On the symbolism here see also Ps. lx. 3; lxxv. 8; Isai. li. 17, 22; Jer. xxv. 15.

As De Wette notes, two ideas are here combined:—Babylon has made the nations to drink of the wine of her fornication (ch. xvii. 2, 4); and in retribution God shall give her to drink the wine of His wrath (ver. 10; ch. xvi. 19): but the sense is not—as Züllig, Stuart, &c., explain—"inflammatory or intoxicating wine."

According to Elliott after the proclamation of the Angel of missions (ver. 6), and in order to encounter the growing political power which was subsequently gained in England by the Church of Rome in 1829,—the next great crisis in the Church was the founding of the Reformation Society in 1827. What follows in this Vision, he adds, is unfulfilled.

Note, the Cod. Sinait. omits from the word "saying," to "with a great voice," in ver. 9 (ἡκολούθησεν, βοᾷ μετὰ φωνῆς).

9. And another angel, a third, followed them, saying with a great voice,] (See vv. 11.). This announcement connects itself more closely than the two preceding with ch. xiii.

If any man worshippeth the beast and his image,] The spiritual "fornication" referred to in ver. 8 is thus defined.
New Test.—VOL. IV.

Wherever the "Beast" and "his Image" are coupled together, as here,—viz. in ver. 11; ch. xv. 2; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4,—Mede (p. 421) understands by the "Beast" the "False Prophet" (ch. xiii. 11); and by "his Image," the "Seven-Headed Beast" restored of ch. xiii. 3:—see on ch. xiii. 14, 15.

and receiveth a mark on his forehead, or upon his hand,] Cf. ch. xiii. 16. Ebrard notes that the Beast has not fallen with the fall of Babylon, which is but one of the "Heads" of the Beast: this he takes to be the sixth "Head"—see ch. xvii. 10, 11.

10. he also shall drink] I.e., as well as Babylon and the nations, see ver. 8, and cf. ver. 17:—or, even he. Hengst. and Alf. would regard the conjunction as "quasi-redundant."

of the wine of the wrath of God,] See on ver. 8.

which is prepared unmixed in the cup of his anger,] Gr. "which is mixed unmingled (or undiluted) in the cup"—the figure "Oxymoron." For the sense given in A. V., "to pour out," Grimm refers to ch. xviii. 6; and also to Bel and the Dragon, ver. 11; Antbol. xi. 137. So Düsterdieck, who explains that the universal custom of diluting wine with water (cf. Isai. i. 22) for ordinary use gave the verb the sense of "pouring out,"—see Wetstein. Züllig refers to Ps. lxxv. 8 (LXX): "In the hand of the Lord there is a cup and the wine is red; it is full of mixture," and he takes the word "unmixed" to mean not "unmixed or undiluted wine," but "undiluted mixture," consisting of the ingredients by which the Orientals added strength to their wine, viz. spices, myrrh, opiates, &c. (cf. Mark xv. 23); the sense being "he shall drink of the wine of God's wrath—the undiluted mixture poured out in the cup." Hengst. takes up the idea of this use of ingredients, but he attaches it to the verb, leaving to the adj. the sense of "undiluted wine"—so that "the wine of God's wrath is mingled [with strength-giving ingredients], itself being undiluted [with water], in the cup":—the wine of God's wrath, though its intoxicating power is increased, is tempered by no clemency. So also Words.

be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11 And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, in the presence of the holy angels,] Cf. Luke xv. 10; which of itself sets aside the interpretation of De Wette—"in the judgment of the Angels." An aggravation of their punishment is signified, notes Düsterd., by the fact that Angels are spectators; and he refers to ch. xi. 12; Luke xvi. 23, &c. See vv. 11.

11. of their torment] "Their," because "any man," ver. 9, is taken collectively.

goeth up] Cf. ch. xix. 3. The source of this description is Gen. xix. 28; Isai. xxxiv. 9, 10.

for ever and ever;] Gr. unto ages of ages:—note the absence of both articles here; see on ch. i. 6. Endless duration a parte post is signified.

and they have no rest] Cf. this eternal unrest of the apostate worshippers of the Beast, with the blessed rest reserved for the faithful:—see ver. 13.

day and night, they that worship the beast and his image, and whoso receiveth.] Hengst. observes that ch. xx. 10 supplies a decisive objection to the interpretation of Vitranga (p. 660) that an evil conscience in this life is meant, which allows no rest day and night.

Renan accounts for the imagery in this passage by the natural convulsions which he supposes the Seer to have witnessed. Renan is struck by the fact that the great eruption of Vesuvius, A.D. 79, occurred (according to him) some ten years after the Apocalypse was written; but he is equal to this difficulty: "We shall soon see," he writes, "this strange locality [which there is no proof that St. John ever visited] inspire the Author of the Apocalypse, and reveal to him the pit of the Abyss ten years before nature, by a singular coincidence, opened again the crater of Vesuvius."—pp. 331, 334:—see also on ch. ix. 2.

The older Protestant expositors usually understood by the three Angels (vv. 6–11) human personages. De Wette classifies such opinions; Launoy finds in the first Peter von Bruis, in the second Wiclif, in the third Luther;—Brightman sees Wiclif, Jerome of Prague, Luther;—Mede sees the opponents of image-worship, the Waldenses and Albigenses, Luther;—Calovius sees in the first and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

12 Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

13 And I heard a voice from Luther, who preached "the eternal Gospel," in the second Chemnitz ("alter Martinus"), among the third Calovius recognizes himself ("et alii, inter quos Ego indignissimus omnium"). Bengel fixes the periods of the three Angels:—The first Angel, John Arnd ("mid-heaven" being Germany), preaches "the eternal (αιώνιον) gospel," the gospel which lasts for an "Æon":—but as a "Chronus" (see on ch. vi. 11) = 1119½ years—an Æon, which is equal to two Chroni, = 2222½ years; and this period, accordingly, extends from the date of the Reformation (A.D. 1614) to A.D. 3836 (= A.D. 1836, + 2000 years the duration of the double Millennium—see on ch. xx. 2). The second Angel (ver. 8) Bengel makes to be Spener from 1633 to 1727; and the third (ver. 9) he regarded as not far distant; while he makes the Harvest and Vintage (vv. 15–18) extend from A.D. 1740 to A.D. 1836.

Hammond, as a "Preterist," refers the section vv. 6–11, to the period between Domitian and Constantine.

THE EPISODE (12–13).

12. In order to comfort and support the Church still militant on earth, three Angels have proclaimed the history of the Christian ages:—the diffusion of "the eternal Gospel" (vv. 6, 7); the fall of the World-power (ver. 8); the doom of the ungodly (vv. 9–11). And now, lest the faithful should be discouraged by the prospect opened out in vv. 10–11, the loving admonition already given in ch. xiii. 10 is once more repeated. See ch. xix. 9, 10.

Here is the patience of the saints,] The end which the preceding description is intended to enforce is here laid down:—see on ch. xix. 9, 10; xvi. 15.

they that keep the commandments of God,] Omit "here are," see vv. 11.; and for the constr. cf. ch. i. 5; ii. 20.

and the faith of Jesus.] Cf. ch. iii. 10: "the faith of Jesus" rests on "the testimony of Jesus," ch. xii. 17; see Mark xi. 22.

13. And I heard a voice from heaven.] See on ver. 2, the voice, as before, being left undefined:—on the dramatic effect thus heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord ^{from henceforth}: Yea, ^{Or, from henceforth} saith the Spirit, that they may rest ^{saith the Spirit, yea.}

produced see on ch. i. 1, 10. Hengst. suggests that the voice may proceed from one of the just made perfect; or from one of the Elders, ch. vii. 13, 14.

saying,] Omit "unto me"—see vv. 11.

Write,] On the command to "write" see on ch. i. 11; and cf. ch. xix. 9; xxi. 5.

Blessed] This epithet is applied only to men by St. John—John xiii. 17; xx. 29; ch. i. 3, &c. It is applied by St. Paul to God—e.g. in 1 Tim. i. 11.

In ver. 12 the judgments on the ungodly were urged as the motive for patience; here, the eternal blessedness of the faithful.

are the dead which die in the Lord] Compare 1 Cor. xv. 18; 1 Thess. iv. 13–18. Not merely martyrs (as many hold), not merely those who suffer in time of persecution, but each member of the Church;—every one in glory;—each of the 144,000 "redeemed from the earth" (ver. 3), whose "blessedness" is now the theme. "Which die,"—not "who have died:" thus including those, too, who die in later times.

from henceforth:] Cf. John xiii. 19; xiv. 7. The natural meaning is that, dating from the utterance of the heavenly voice, "the dead which die in the Lord" are blessed from that time forth; and that time begins with the era of Redemption.

The words "from henceforth" (see vv. 11.) are variously connected: some connect them with "Blessed," in the sense of immediate blessedness, cf. Luke xxiii. 43; Phil. i. 23 (Bleek, De Wette, Hengst.);—others with the verb "die," in the sense, "How much better it is to die before the evil to come," Eccl. iv. 2; Isai. lvii. 1 (Züllig);—or, "The time is soon coming when it will be better to die than live" (Cocceius, Hammond);—Mede refers the words to the deaths of future martyrs;—Alf. takes this complete blessedness to date from the time when "the harvest of the earth is about to be reaped;"—Stern refers to the time of Antichrist when they who die in the Lord are to enter into Paradise at once (and so far Ewald agrees, comparing ch. vi. 9–11; vii. 9–17), thereby escaping that course of purification after death which all who had died previously must pass through;—"From henceforth" is joined by others (see Margin) with the words that come after, the Spirit promising immediate blessedness after death, so Andreas, Primas., Beda, and the Vulgate: "Amodo, jam, dicit Spiritus." Lambert Bos (Exercitt. Phil., in loc., ed. 2, p. 300), reading ἀναπρί renders, in the same connexion, "perfectly," "absolutely," "altogether,"—"Omnino nā inquit Spiritus;" but, as Words. notes, whenever the Greek word rendered "yea" is used in the New Test. it stands first in the sentence.

Yea, saith the Spirit,] Cf. the Divine confirmation similarly added, ch. xix. 9. It is the Spirit which gives this assurance, as the milder echo of Christ's more powerful voice (Ewald)—cf. ch. ii. 7, 11, &c.; xxii. 17; 1 Tim. iv. 1. We have here the "Amen" of the Spirit of Prophecy. Züllig considers that two voices are heard—the first that of the speaker who is not defined; the other that of the Spirit of Prophecy, see Isai. lxi. Bisping and Burger take this second clause to be uttered by St. John himself, appealing in confirmation to the Spirit of Prophecy.

Or render, in the Lord. From henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that].

that they may rest from] Gr. "that they shall rest:" see vv. 11.; cf. ch. xxii. 14; Eph. v. 33.

See on ver. 11,—we may contrast this announcement of perfect rest, with the condition, there described, of those who worship the Beast.

This clause, stating the ground of the blessedness (the constr. being compounded of "that they may," and "in that they shall," cf. ch. ix. 20) Ebrard connects with "saith"—"the Spirit saith that they shall;" cf. Mark ix. 12, and see 2 Cor. viii. 7. Winer (s. 283) supplies from the previous clause "they die," i.e., "in order that they shall rest," cf. ch. iii. 9; vi. 11. Professor Moulton notes:—"May not iva be more simply connected with μακάριοι, as it is by Dusterd., Alf., A. Buttm.?"—p. 399. Burger explains, "Yea [the intent is] that they may rest," &c., cf. John ix. 3: and so Reuss "Si (quand) les fidèles meurent, c'est pour vivre," &c. On the future after iva see Introd. § 7, (f).

for their works follow with them.] See vv. 11.; and cf. ch. vi. 8 on the phrase "to follow with"—which, as Hengst. notes, is found out of the Apoc. only in Luke ix. 49 where St. John is the speaker. We may here refer to ch. vi. 11, as explained by ch. xix. 8, —1 Cor. xv. 58 supplying the commentary: see also the Lord's words Matt. xxv. 34–40. Ewald (s. 270) comments: "Yea, they shall rest in death from their heavy troubles! their works are so far from being lost through their death, that they follow them into eternity." Burger compares ch. ii. 2; xx. 12; 1 Cor. iii. 13–15.

from their labours; and their works do follow them.

14 And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, ^{a Joel} "Thrust _{13.}

THE HARVEST AND THE VINTAGE (14—20).

14. And I saw, and behold, a white cloud;] The colour of heaven, see on ch. ii. 17,—always in the Apoc. denoting Christ's presence.

and upon the cloud [I saw] one sitting like unto the Son of man,] (See vv. 11.). For this title of Christ see on ch. i. 13. Here, as in ch. i. 13—the only instances in which the title occurs in the Apocalypse—the articles are not found. Vitringa urges the absence of the article as a reason why we are to understand an Angel, and not Christ; and so Grotius, Bengel, Züllig, De Wette, Bleek,—Bleek further urging that the words "another Angel," ver. 15, prove that an Angel merely is intended (but see ver. 6, where, as in this case, there is no reference to an Angel previously spoken of). Bleek also argues that, were Christ introduced here, the Angel in ver. 17 would be placed on an equality with Him:—but the whole tone of this verse forbids such a conclusion, see below.

Winer (§ 59, 11, s. 473) suggests that the participle (καθήμενον) is a neuter following "behold,"—viz. "something sitting upon the cloud like a man," &c., the constr. then passing into the masc.

having on his head a golden crown,] The conqueror's crown,—see on ch. vi. 2. He has not as yet assumed His diadem as King, ch. xix. 12,—see on ch. ii. 10. We have here the fulfilment of Matt. xxiv. 30; Luke xxi. 27:—"Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven;" "Then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory."

and in his hand a sharp sickle.] As "Lord of the harvest," Matt. ix. 38:—on the imagery see Joel iii. 13; John iv. 35–38. On this Vision I. Williams notes: "The picture is itself a parable:—the golden-crowned Reaper on the symbolic cloud, and that cloud illumined by the presence of the Son of Man seated thereon, as on His throne!"—p. 263. The Son of Man is related to the three Angels which follow in vv. 15, 17, 18, as the Rider in ch. vi. 2 to the three who come after Him (ch. vi. 3–8); and He is distinguished from them by his titles "Son of Man," "He that sitteth on the cloud" (ver. 15), and by His "golden crown."

Mede, Hammond, and others understand in this whole passage not the final judgment, but some previous coming of Christ; and so Döllinger, who sees the judgment on heathen idolatry and the triumph of Christianity. On the other hand it seems that this Vision (vv. 14–20) is related to the final judgment; just as the sixth Seal (ch. vi. 12–17) is related to the completion of the mystery of God:—see ch. x. 7.

15. Now follow the three prophetic types of approaching Judgment—the Harvest (Isai. xvii. 5; Jer. li. 33), the Vintage (Joel iii. 13), the Treading of the grapes (Isai. lxiii. 2, 3). The thought conveyed is the nearness of the judgment. Many (Bengel, Words., Alf. De Burgh, &c.) regard the "Harvest" as signifying the gathering in of the godly; the "Vintage" and "Wine-press" as signifying the crushing of the wicked. This interpretation, however, scarcely agrees with our Lord's own interpretation of the "Harvest," in Matt. xiii. 30, 38–42. Godly and ungodly alike may well be included in both the "Harvest" and the "Vintage."

And another angel] See on vv. 6, 14 came out from the temple,] Or "the Sanctuary" (see on ch. xi. 1) in heaven, ver. 17, which, according to ch. xi. 19; xv. 5, had been opened, and from which the Angels with the Seven Plagues proceed (ch. xv. 6).

crying with a great voice to him that sat on the cloud,] These words also have been urged in order to show that Christ cannot be referred to in ver. 14—for He, it is said, could not receive a command from an Angel as here. To this it has been often answered that the Angel is but the messenger of the will of God: and as to the mysterious relation between the Son and the Father, we have the Lord's own words, John v. 19, 30.

Send forth thy sickle,] The verb here is πέμψον. For the cognate verb (ἀποστείλλω) see Mark iv. 29; and cf. Joel iii. 13 (ἐξαστείλατε, LXX.), from which the image is borrowed. A different verb (βάλλω) is used in vv. 16, 19. Hengst. thinks that the phrase "send forth thy sickle" rests on the personification of the sickle as an assistant.

The sickle was "a curved scimitar or knife" used for reaping or pruning. Its use in this passage both for the Harvest and for the Vintage denotes, Words. observes, that the term is to be taken figuratively.

in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God.

for the hour to reap is come;] Omit for thee—see vv. 11.; and cf. ver. 7.

for the harvest of the earth is over-ripe.] Gr. "is dried up," cf. Marg.:—in John xv. 6 the verb is rendered "is withered." Cf. Mark xi. 20; and see below, ver. 18.

(In the De Civ. Dei, iv. 8, St. Augustine speaks of the sown corn growing up "ab initiis herbidis usque ad aristas aridas").

16. And he that sat on the cloud] See on ver. 14.

cast his sickle upon the earth;] For the verb see on ver. 15; and cf. John xx. 25, 27. The extent of the reaping over the earth is denoted by the prep. "upon,"—see on ch. i. 20.

and the earth was reaped.] Burger also would restrict the Harvest to the "gathering together the elect," Matt. xxiv. 31;—but see on ver. 15, and cf. the words of Christ, Matt. xiii. 30.

17. And another angel came out from the temple which is in heaven,] Or "Sanctuary," as in ver. 15.

he also] As well as the Son of Man, ver. 14:—cf. ver. 10. Hengst. would regard this Angel also as Christ; for the treading the grapes must belong, he thinks, to Him to whom the reaping the harvest belonged; and this Angel, too, has "a sickle."

18. And another angel came out from the altar,] The Altar already mentioned in ch. vi. 9, 10; viii. 3—the Altar of burnt offering under which lie the souls of "those who had been slain because of the word of God;" and from which the Angel now comes forth to avenge their blood.

As to this Angel we read: (1) That this Altar is his peculiar place as "the ministering spirit" who brings the command to execute judgment;—(2) That, as described in the words which follow, it is he which hath] See vv. 11.

power over fire;] Gr. authority over the fire;] Either fire generally,—as e.g. "the Angel of the waters," ch. xvi. 5 (cf. ch.

xi. 6); compare also ch. vii. 1. Or, the fire spoken of in ch. viii. 3–5, which was the fire from the censer that kindled the judgments.

and he called with a great voice] See vv. 11.

to him that had the sharp sickle, saying,] Viz. the Angel in ver. 17.

Send forth thy sharp sickle,] The verb is the same as in ver. 15, and translates literally the Hebrew verb in Joel iii. 13.

the vine of the earth;] Not, it has been observed, the "vine out of Egypt" (Ps. lxxx. 8), or that to which Christ likened himself (John xv. 1), but "the vine of the earth." (See vv. 11.).

As noted by others (see on ver. 15), Burger also sees in the "Vintage" and "Wine-press" tokens of the judgment on the ungodly.

Ewald takes "the vine" to be a type of Palestine, and these words to indicate the Holy Land;—Grotius places the scene in Syria and Egypt;—Mede, Hammond, Wetstein, in Italy.

In vv. 15, 17, 18, we have three Angels following Christ (see on ver. 14) as in the first four Seals (ch. vi. 2–8); and three Angels having already appeared in vv. 6, 8, 9, the number Seven is thus a feature of this Vision also.

19. And the angel] Not, as in ver. 16, "He that sat on the cloud."

cast his sickle into the earth,] The verb is the same as in ver. 16.

and gathered the vintage of the earth,] Gr. "the vine."

and cast it into the winepress, the great [winepress], of the wrath of God.] (See vv. 11.). A masculine adjective, and a feminine substantive:—the confusion seems to have arisen from the substantive being both masc. and fem. The imagery corresponds with that of ch. xix. 15 (cf. Lam. i. 15); it is founded on Isai. lxiii. 1–6, where see the notes.

Primasius (ap. Migne, Patrolog., vol. 68, p. 890) illustrates this passage by Matt. xiii. 41; 1 Cor. iii. 9:—he reads the masc. (τὸν μέγαν), and translates, "and cast the proud one into the winepress" &c. ["Dicendo ira Dei

20 And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

sententiam hic pro ira Dei posuit quam superbo dicit inflictam, quem etiam magnum vocat."].

20. And the winepress was trodden] As in Isai. lxiii. 3—the usual phrase, see Judg. ix. 27; Neh. xiii. 15; Jer. xlviii. 33.

without the city,] (See vv. 11.). Hengst. gives the true meaning: "The 'city,' without any accompanying epithet, can only be that which was the City by way of eminence in Scriptural usage—the Holy City' (ch. xi. 2), Jerusalem; but this in the Apoc. is always a designation of the Church." Hence we have here a judgment on the world as opposed to the Church—cf. ch. vii. 1–8. Züllig, Ebrard, De Wette, Stern, Düsterd. explain the "city" to be the literal earthly Jerusalem, which the nations assail (ch. xx. 9). Ebrard places the scene in the valley of Jehoshaphat (Joel iii. 12–14). Hammond and Wetstein understand Rome.

and there came out blood from the winepress,] The juice of the grape being a type of blood—cf. Isai. lxiii. 3.

even unto the bridles of the horses,] I.e., such was the depth of the blood-stream. The mention of "horses" points forward to ch. xix. 11–15, where Christ and his armies appear on "white horses" (cf. ch. vi. 2), and where mention is again made of "the winepress."

a thousand and six hundred furlongs off.] An idiom peculiar to St. John—see John xi. 18; xxi. 8; cf. Acts x. 30. (The Cod. Sinait. reads "a thousand and two hundred"). Or render—"as far as a thousand . . . furlongs."

The furlong, or stadium (τὸ στάδιον—in plur. οἱ στάδιοι, or τὰ στάδια) is 600 Greek, or 606½ English feet; about ¼ of a Roman mile: see ch. xxi. 16. Sixteen hundred is the square of forty, or the square of four multiplied by the square of ten; and thus, as Four is the 'signature' of the earth (see ch. vii. 1) and Ten the 'signature' of completeness, this symbolic number denotes a space of vast magnitude:

see Introd. § 11, (a); and cf. the 144,000 = $4^2 \times 3^2 \times 10^3$ in ver. 1. Hengst. understands "a judgment encircling the whole earth." From the early expositors, Victorinus Primasius, Beda, onwards a reference to the four quarters of the earth has been insisted upon: e.g. Victorinus, "per omnes mundi quatuor partes" (l. c., p. 62). Ebrard considers that the signification of the number 40 ($40 \times 40 = 1600$) as the symbol of punishment (Num. xiv. 33; Judges xiii. 1; Ezek. xxix. 11) is intended. St. Jerome (Ep. ad Dardan. 129) takes this source of the number to be the distance "from Dan to Beersheba," which extends to a distance of scarcely 160 miles ("vix clx. milium"), although 160 Roman miles are equal to 1280, not 1600 stadii:—this explanation is accepted by C. à Lapide, Eichhorn, Züllig, &c. The Itinerary of Antoninus makes the distance from Tyre on the north to Rhinocorura (now El Arish on the border of Egypt to the south, to be 1664 stadii; and thus the meaning would be that the blood-stream covered the whole surface of Judza—so Grotius, Bengel, Bleek, Reuss, &c. (in Isai. xxvii. 12, the LXX. render "the stream of Egypt" by Rhinocorura). See Smith's Dict. of Gr. and Rom. Geogr., vol. ii. p. 709; and Note B at the end of this chapter.

Some who adopt this interpretation regard Palestine as a type of the Church.

Krenkel (l. c., s. 84) applies this description to the battle of Ar-Mageddon, ch. xvi. 16, the scene of which he places near Jerusalem; arguing from the mention of Mount Zion, ver. 1, and from the supposed allusion to the length of Palestine. On this, Stuart not unreasonably asks, "What has Palestine to do with the present battle?"—the measure comes as near the breadth of Italy as it does to the length of Palestine: and Stuart thinks that the breadth of Italy is meant. Mede sees here the extent of the Roman Empire. Brightman (see on ver. 11) interprets of England and its Reformation,—the Angel in ver. 18 being Cranmer.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XIV.

NOTE A ON xiv. 4.—ST. JOHN'S TITLE
παρθένος.

The words of this verse, together with the absence of St. John's name from 1 Cor. ix. 5, suggested the belief of many in early times that the Apostle was unmarried:—see Tertull. De Monogam. c. 17; Cyrill. Alex. Orat.

de Maria Virg., Opp. p. 380; August. De bono Conjug. c. 21; Jerome, ad Jovin., i. 14, 36; Epiphani. Har. 51, 12.

Hence the title παρθένος sometimes given to him, as in the superscription of the Apocalypse quoted by Lücke¹ from Codex 30 of

¹ "Schriften des Joannis," iii. s. 52.

Griesbach (Cent. xii.). The title which St. Augustine, in more than one place (Quæst. Evang. ii. 39; Inscr. Tract. x.), states was prefixed to St. John's first Epistle, viz. "Ad Parthos," is conjectured by Hug, Gieseler (Kirch. Gesch., i. 118), and others to have arisen from this title παρθένος. Ambrosiaster writes on 2 Cor. xi. 2: "Omnes Apostoli, exceptis Joanne et Paulo, uxores habuisse dicuntur."

NOTE B ON VER. 20.—THE STADIUM.

The Stadium (τὸ στάδιον, in plur. οἱ στάδιοι, or τὰ στάδια) or furlong was a Grecian measure taken in name and length from the foot-race course at Olympia. It was employed in the East after the age of Alexander the Great; and is mentioned in 2 Macc. xi. 5; xii. 9; &c.; and in the N. T. in Luke xxiv. 13; John vi. 19; xi. 18; 1 Cor. ix. 24; Rev. xxi. 16; and here. The Stadium = 600 Greek feet (Herod. ii. 149); or 125 Roman paces (Plin. ii. 21; cf. Censorin. 13), so that eight stadia = one Roman mile. It is equal to 606½ feet of our measure, i.e. 53½ feet less than our furlong:—see Winer, Real Wörterb., art. Stadium; Smith, Dict. of the Bible, art. Weights and Measures.

CHAPTER XV.

- 1 The seven angels with the seven last plagues.
3 The song of them that overcome the beast.
7 The seven vials full of the wrath of God.

AND I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

[Ver. 2 om. ἐκ τοῦ χαράγματος αὐτοῦ. Ver. 3 τοῦ δούλου.—For ἀγίων read ἐθνῶν (A, B, P), or αἰώνων (N, C: cf. 1 Tim. i. 17); [1. reads τῶν ἐθνῶν, which Er., relying on a copy of the Vulgate, where he found "rex sanctorum" (a corruption of the true reading of the Vulg., "rex seculorum"), altered into τῶν ἀγίων. This reading is preserved in A. V., and by Luther, "du König der Heiligen." Tregelles suggests a confusion in the MSS. between ΑΙΘΝΩΝ (=ἐθνῶν) and ΑΙΩΝΩΝ]. Ver. 4 om. σε.—δοξάσει. Ver. 5 om. ἰδοῦ. Ver. 6 οἱ ἔχοντες.—[A, C read λίθον,—B, P read λίνον καθαρόν,—N reads καθ. λίνους].—om. 2nd καί.]

THE SEVEN VIALS (XV. 1—XVI. 21).

The Sixth chief Vision of the Revelation Proper opens here:—see the remarks introductory to ch. xiv.

The Vision of the Seven Vials themselves is contained in ch. xvi.; but previously, in ch. xv., the Seer beholds "Seven Angels" (ver. 1) as in ch. viii. 2; and then, before the Angels execute their office, the "Just made perfect" sing the praise of God (vv. 2-4);—as in ch. viii. 2-5 there is a solemn offering of prayer and its results before the Trumpet-Angels "prepare themselves to sound." The Vials—unlike the Seals and Trumpets which are divided into groups of four and three (see the remarks introd. to ch. vi.)—are divided, like the Seven Epistles (see the remarks introd. to ch. ii.), into groups of three (ch. xvi. 2-4) and four (ch. xvi. 8-17) by the voices in ch. xvi. 5-7. As in the Visions of the Seals and Trumpets, the sixth Vial is separated from the seventh by the episode announcing (in vv. 13-16) the assembling of "the kings" for Ar-Mageddon. Compare also the episodes of ch. vii., and ch. x. 1—ch. xi. 14.

Here St. John again "recapitulates" (see the remarks introd. to ch. viii.); he re-ascends to "an earlier point in the Prophecy; and enlarges on the judicial chastisements to be inflicted on the Empire of the Beast." (Words.)

THE SEVEN VIAL-ANGELS (1-8).

1. And I saw] A Vision of the "Seven Angels" is already, before ver. 6, granted to the Seer. This is denied by Züllig; who thinks that the Angels are first seen in ver. 6, and that these words are a mere superscription to the chapter, which really begins at ver. 2. Bisping and Burger also regard this verse as merely anticipatory, concluding that the Angels do not receive the "Seven Plagues" until ver. 7.

another sign] See ch. xii. 3. On the word "sign," as indicating what is figurative, see on ch. i. 1; xii. 1, 3.

in heaven,] What is now prepared "in heaven" is carried out on "earth" in ch. xvi.

great and marvellous,] Surpassing the "signs" in ch. xii. 1, 3, and in this respect,—that the Angels who have power to inflict the coming trials themselves have the "Seven Plagues" (see vv. 1, 6) and direct the Divine judgments (ch. xvi. 9, 21). This "marvel" is not explained to the Seer as is that in ch. xvii. 6. The Angels all appear at once; although, unlike the Seven in ch. viii. 2, they do not receive the "Vials" until ver. 7.

seven angels] The absence of the definite article indicates that these Angels had not been seen before. There is no reason for

2 And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over taking them, with De Wette, to be Archangels. As implied in ch. xvi. 5, they have each a distinct office.

having seven plagues, [which are] the last,] I.e., the "Plagues" leading to the final judgment which belongs to the seventh Trumpet (see ch. x. 7):—ch. xvii. 1, indeed, seems to imply that the judgments which are then introduced follow those of the Vials, or, at least, synchronize with them. Düsterd. notes that ch. xvi. 15 points to something which is now near at hand. The Vials themselves bring us not to the "great day of final account, but to the fall of Babylon, and the consequences of that event which are immediately to usher in the Day of Christ's coming"—Todd, p. 75. Nevertheless, neither ch. xvii. 1, nor ch. xxi. 9 are conclusive as to the order of time.

for in them is finished the wrath of God.] See ch. x. 7; xiv. 8:—"the prophetic aorist, which speaks of a thing foreseen, and decided by God as already done."—Words.

Elliott considers that we are now brought to the opening of the French Revolution of 1789. So also Mr. Faber, who takes chapters xv.–xxii. to be the second portion of the Sealed Book (ch. v.), and to extend from A.D. 1789 to the end of all things:—see on ch. v. 1; and on ch. x. 8.

2. And I saw] The formula announcing a new Vision—see on ch. iv. 1; xiv. 1. He had already seen the "Seven Angels" (see on ver. 1), and now, before the Vision of ver. 5—before the Angels enter on the scene—this Vision of the Redeemed is interposed. Preparation is again made for the events in ch. xvi., as was the case in ch. xi. 15, &c. "For the third time," notes Reuss, "the promised and imminent accomplishment of God's decrees is celebrated beforehand by those who shall find in them rest and felicity" (ch. xi. 15; xiv. 1, &c.).

as it were a sea of glass]. Or a glassy sea. The material or the appearance is, as it were, of glass—see on ch. iv. 6, a scene identical with that beheld here. This is further shown by the presence of the Four Living Beings in ver. 7 (on the absence of the definite article, cf. ch. xiv. 1). This identity Ebrard questions, because we do not read here "like unto crystal," but mingled with fire;] As observed on ch. iv. 6 the "sea of glass like unto crystal" denoted the purity and calmness of God's rule. The intermingling of mercy with justice is there symbolized in ver. 5; and so here the same conjunction is signified by the altered words, "mingled with fire:"—fire denotes judgment; and thus both aspects of the Divine rule are now also exhibited. Many see here a symbolical representation of the Red Sea.

and them that come victorious from the beast,] I. Williams: "Not over as our translation has it, but rather from the Beast,—they have vanquished by flight, escaped from the net of the fowler" (Ps. cxxiv. 6). And so Ebrard, the present tense denoting that the act of overcoming still continues: as in ver. 3 "they sing," not "they sang."

De Wette rightly takes these words to be an ideal anticipation, as in ch. vii. 9. The palm-bearing multitude may be recognized as reappearing here, just as the 144,000 of ch. vii. 4 reappear in ch. xiv. 1.

and from his image, and from the number of his name,] Omit "over his mark, and"—see vv. 11. (Winer, § 47, s. 329, notes on νικᾶν ἐκ τινος—"Victoriam ferre ex aliquo"). These words refer back to ch. xiii. 4, 15, 16; xiv. 9. As Todd remarks (see on ver. 1), this Vision brings us down to the fall of Babylon, ch. xvi. 19; and therefore precedes the events disclosed in ch. xiv. 14–20. For Mede's interpretation of "the Image of the Beast," see on ch. xiii. 14; xiv. 9.

standing by the sea of glass] Or the glassy sea—as above. (For the prep., ἐν, with an accus., see ch. iii. 20; Acts xxv. 10; cf., too, ch. viii. 3; ix. 14). So Bengel, Ebrard, Words., Alford; and Abp. Trench writes: "It is, as Bengel gives it rightly, 'by the sea of glass' ('ad mare vitreum'), which 'sea of glass' we are not to understand as a solid though diaphanous surface, on which these triumphant ones stood or could stand; but 'as it were a sea of glass,' not a 'glassen,' but a 'glassy' sea,—a sea that might be compared to glass in its clearness and transparency" (On the A. V. of N. T., 2nd ed., p. 139). The usual sense of the prep., "upon the sea," is adopted by Stuart who takes "the sea" to be "the pavement of the court above (sea in the sense of an extended level surface), in the midst of which the throne of God stands:" and so Züllig regards the "glass mingled with fire" to signify 'a mosaic floor,' upon which the elect from among the Gentiles stand in the same Temple-court, behind the elect from among the Jews, the 144,000:—see on ch. xiv. 1. In support of the former rendering is the explanation of the symbolism given by many commentators:—Thus, I. Williams writes of the "sea" in heaven, "before as 'of glass' only, now of 'fire' also, from the trials of these last days:—they are his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.

¹Ex. 15. 1. 3 And they sing ^bthe song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; 'just and true are ^cPs. 145. 17. thy ways, thou King of saints.

4 ^dWho shall not fear thee, O ^eJer. 10. 7.

the waves of the Red Sea, which appear on fire as the Sun of Righteousness arises upon them, on the margin of which the true Israelites sing the song of Moses, and the saving Lamb" (l. c., p. 274);—and Words.: "Standing on its shore are seen those . . . who are delivered from his [the Beast's] sway as the Israelites were in their Exodus from the land of Pharaoh": to the same effect De Wette, Stern, Hengst.

The words are also applied allegorically: Grotius understands the mass of heathen Christians animated by the love of God;—Vitr., the conqueror stands on the firm ground of truth illumined by the fire of Divine justice;—Calovius, the sea denotes baptism, the fire the wrath of God;—De Burgh, the Baptism of water, and the Baptism of fire (Matt. iii. 11), "denoting their purification by trials."

The "sea of glass" notes Andreas (l. c., p. 85), signifies the multitude of the saved;—its being "mingled with fire" points to 1 Cor. iii. 15, those "saved as through fire."

having harps of God.] Instruments of music wholly dedicated to His praise—see 1 Chron. xvi. 42; 2 Chron. vii. 6; and cf. ch. v. 8; xiv. 2.

The "harps," writes Andreas, denote the harmony of the virtues modulated by the Spirit.

3. the song of Moses] More probably that preserved in Ex. xv. 1—the song of triumph after the passage of the Red Sea (see on ver. 2)—than that given in Deut. xxxii. Hengst. urges in confirmation of a reference here to the Red Sea, that the work of the Angels was to renew the plagues of Egypt—see on ch. xvi. "The song of Moses" is sung by delivered Israel after the Egyptian plagues: here the hymn of praise is sung by the Redeemed before the last victory of the Church over the antichristian world.

the servant of God,] (See vv. 11.). For this title see Ex. xiv. 31; Num. xii. 7; Josh. xiv. 7; Ps. cv. 26; Mal. iv. 4; cf. Heb. iii. 5.

and the song of the Lamb,] Many (e.g. Grotius, Vitr., De Wette, Hengst., Ebrard) explain that "the song of Moses" is here used "of," or "in honour of" the Lamb; and the analogy of ch. xiv. 1 leads Hengst. to add that "the Lamb sings this song along with His people." Düsterdieck (followed by Alf.) explains that this song was composed at once by Moses and the Lamb, and was taught to the singers (see ch. xiv. 3);—that it betokens, in fact, what we elsewhere learn from a comparison of ch. vii. 9, &c. and ch. x. 7 with ch. vii. 4, &c. and ch. xiv. 1, viz. the essential unity of the Churches of the Old and the New Test. (cf. ch. xii. 1, 17). So also Reuss:—"For the Author, the Church is the true Israel, cf. ch. ii. 9; iii. 9; vii. 4; x. 7; xi. 1; xiv. 1, &c." Andreas (l. c.) thinks that there are here two songs, one of the pious under the Old Test., the other of the New Test. believers;—Cocceius understands the harmony between Prophecy and the Gospel;—Züllig, that these worshippers "who were formerly idolaters express in this song their conversion to Moses and to Jesus." The meaning rather is that the song in which Moses celebrated the deliverance from Egypt, is now renewed, and receives its perfected close when God's people are finally delivered by the Lamb.

Writers point out how we have in the Apocalyptic song which follows distinct echoes of the Old Test.

saying, Great and marvellous [are] thy works,] See Ex. xvii. 11; 1 Chron. xvi. 9; Ps. cxi. 2; cxxxix. 14.

O Lord God, the Almighty;] See on ch. i. 8; cf. ch. iv. 8; xi. 17.

righteous and true [are] thy ways,] Cf. on ch. iii. 7; and see Deut. xxxii. 4 (the second Song of Moses); Ps. cxlv. 17.

The word "righteous" (dikaïos) is used by St. John to signify both the rectitude of the Judge, and the rectitude of the person judged who comes up to the required standard. It occurs in the Apoc. usually in the former sense,—e.g. here; ch. xvi. 5, 7; xix. 2; cf. John v. 30. In the latter sense it occurs in ch. xxii. 11; cf. 1 John iii. 12.

thou King of the ages.] Or thou eternal King. See vv. 11. The title given by this reading is found in 1 Tim. i. 17:—or, taking the alternative reading (for there is no authority for the reading of the Textus Receptus, and of the A. V., "thou King of saints"), we have thou King of the nations.] Perhaps all nations: the title is given to Jehovah in Jer. x. 7, as indicating His relation to all mankind—cf. Ps. xxii. 28. This reference to Jer. x. 7, and the mention below, in ver. 4, of "the nations" afford considerable sanction to this reading.

4. Who shall not fear, O Lord, and

Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

6 And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white glorify thy name!] (Omit 'thee,'—see vv. ll.). These words also rest on Jer. x. 7. They suggest a designed contrast to ch. xiii. 4, as being similar in form and subject:—see also Ps. lxxxvi. 8-10. The question asked rests on the first two of the following three clauses each beginning with "for," or "because."

for [thou] only [art] holy;] The word rendered "holy" (ἅγιος) is applied to God only here and in ch. xvi. 5. It is applied to Christ in Acts ii. 27; xiii. 35 (Ps. xvi. 10); and Heb. vii. 26. We have but one word "holy" to render both that which the Greek has here, and that which in ch. iii. 7 (ἅγιος) is used of Christ. The term here, if applied to Man, signifies one who diligently observes all the sanctities of religion; as applied to God it denotes that He is one in whom these eternal sanctities reside:—see Abp. Trench quoted on ch. iii. 7.

for all the nations shall come] See Ps. lxxxvi. 9; Isai. ii. 2-4; lxvi. 23; Micah iv. 2-4; Zech. viii. 22. These words contain the sum of the Old Test. predictions as to the conversion of the heathen. De Burgh (see on ch. xiv. 6) further quotes these words to prove "that not until the coming of Christ in Judgment does the conversion of the world take place" (p. 297); and he goes on distinctly to state that it is an error "to expect the conversion of the world as an event to grow progressively out of the present dispensation."—ibid. This, as a testing result of the "Futurist" system, is deserving of notice.

for thy righteous acts have been made manifest.] This third clause (note the tense) beginning with "for" refers to that which immediately precedes, and gives the reason why "all the nations shall come and worship before" God. "Thy righteous act:" i.e., "thy deeds in righteousness towards the nations,—thy judgments." This noun (δικαίωμα) is found in the Apoc. only here and in ch. xix. 8—in both places in the plural. In the plural it signifies (1) 'precepts,' 'ordinances,' Luke i. 6; Rom. ii. 26; Heb. ix. 1, 10; (2) as here, actions corresponding to the righteousness which is fulfilled by them,—a righteousness which is the sense of the word in the singular, e.g. in Rom. v. 18. The verb "to make manifest," found here and in ch. iii. 18, is frequent with St. John—e.g. John i. 31; iii. 21; 1 John ii. 19; &c.

Ebrard divides this Song into four Strophes:

(1) God is praised for His works;—(2) As King of the nations;—(3) All the world shall glorify Him;—(4) Because He alone is holy, &c. See on ch. xviii. 4-20.

5. And after these things I saw,] After the preliminary Vision of the "Seven Angels" (ver. 1), and after the heavenly Song.

and the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven] (Omit "behold"—see vv. ll.). The phrase, "the Tabernacle of the Testimony," is found in Acts vii. 44. It was so called as containing the Ark with the Law of God which testifies against sin (Ex. xxv. 16, 21; xxx. 36; xxxiv. 29; xxxviii. 21). The pattern existed in heaven (see Ex. xxv. 40; Heb. viii. 5), and was doubtless that which St. John now beholds—cf. Ex. xxix. 10, 11 (LXX.); Num. xvii. 7; 2 Chron. xxiv. 6; &c., in which texts we read only of the "Tabernacle of the Testimony." The "Sanctuary" or "Temple" (see on ch. xi. 1)—the structure which belonged to "the Tabernacle of the Testimony" as enclosing it—is what is here meant. By the gen. appositional, notes De Wette, the Temple is described as consisting of the Tent or Tabernacle made after the Divine pattern:—here it points to the Ark of the Covenant, ch. xi. 19. Ebrard notes: "The Temple, so far as it was the place of the Ark of the Covenant, and therefore 'The most Holy place,' is here opened." With this act of opening, adds Ebrard, the last and deepest mystery is unveiled. In ch. xi. 19 the Ark had become visible,—as in ch. viii. 3, before the Temple was opened, there had been a preliminary Vision of the Altar through the Veil. Now the Holy of Holies is opened, and the Veil is withdrawn. While the Church is still struggling and suffering, the Ark appears for a moment (ch. xi. 19); now, when the Holy of Holies is thrown open, St. John is shown the Church triumphant in the New Jerusalem—see on ch. xix. 11.

6. and there came out from the temple] Cf. ch. xiv. 15, 17. There is nothing in prophetic imagery more striking than this picture of the Seven Angels issuing, in solemn procession, from the Sanctuary.

the seven angels] See ver. 1.

that have the seven plagues,] The article (see vv. ll.), referring back to ver. 1, shows that in ver. 1 a preliminary Vision was exhibited. "The Angels have the seven linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

7 And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

plagues even before the "Seven Vials" are given to them" (Hengst.). See on ver. 1.

arrayed in linen, pure [and] bright,] (Omit "and,"—see vv. 11.). We cannot here refer (with Hengst.) to ch. xix. 8; for the word rendered "linen" in that verse is different (not λίνον, but τὸ βύσσινον). The meaning "linen" is very suitable here, as describing the angelic priestly attire (De Wette); cf. ch. iv. 4; Acts x. 30.

The reading (λίθων) of important MSS., and the comments of ancient expositors, do not allow us to reject the sense, arrayed with [precious] stones, pure [and] bright—(Gr. with stone: see ch. xvii. 4; and cf. ch. xxi. 11), a thought borrowed from Ezek. xxviii. 13 ("every precious stone was thy covering") where the stones named are found in the High Priest's breastplate (Ex. xxviii. 17-20):—see the note on Ezek. xxviii. 13, and Note A at the end of this chapter. This reading gives the sense that each Angel wore raiment studded with precious stones. It is to be noted moreover that the word rendered above by "linen" is found elsewhere in the New Test. only in Matt. xii. 20, where it signifies "flax:"—see Note A.

In connexion also with this reading, Ps. cxviii. 22; Isaiah xxviii. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 6 have been referred to.

and girt about their breasts] As our Lord appears in ch. i. 13, a different noun (μαστός not στῆθος) being used.

THE SEVEN VIALS (7—ch. xvi. 21.)

7. And one of the four living beings] See Note B on ch. iv. 7. As representing "the creaturely life of nature" one of the Living Beings now reappears, and takes part in sending forth the coming plagues "into the Earth" (ch. xvi. 1). Cf. the action here with that of the Cherub in Ezek. x. 2, 7.

gave unto the seven angels] We may also note the similar reappearance of one of the "Seven Angels" of ver. 1, in ch. xvii. 1, and in ch. xxi. 9:—of this fact see Ebrard's interpretation quoted on ch. xvi. 21.

seven golden vials] See Note A on ch. v. 8. The "Vials" point to the metaphor in ch. xiv. 10, "the cup of God's anger"—the "Vial" (cf. Amos vi. 6) was the shallow "bowl" in which they drew from the larger goblet (Alf. in loc. quotes from Plato's Crito, χρυσαῖς φιάλαις ἐκ τοῦ κρητῆρος ἀρυττόμενοι). For the figure of the pouring out God's wrath in judgment see Ps. lxxix. 6; Jer. x. 25; Zeph. iii. 8. The "Trumpets" (ch. viii. 2, 6) announce judgment on God's enemies; the "Vials" execute His judgment on the Empire of the Beast. The "Vials" are Seven in number because "in them is finished the wrath of God"—ver. 1. It is also to be noted that in ch. xxi. 9, the Angels still "have" the "Vials" which are still full; as if this judgment were even then future (see on ver. 1, and on ch. xvi. 21).

The function of the Four Living Beings here is more significant than that which is assigned to them in ch. vi. 1, 3, 5, 7.

liveth for ever and ever.] Düsterd. notes that this close of the verse adds, as in ch. i. 8, solemnity to the description:—cf. ch. i. 18; iv. 9, 10; x. 6; and see the pledge given of old to God's people in the Song of Moses, Deut. xxxii. 40. With this manifestation of Divine wrath compare ch. xix. 15.

Bengel observes that the "Vials" do not constitute the Third Woe (ch. xi. 14), but are merely the preparation for it. In common with the majority of writers he notes that these plagues run out quickly.

8. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God,] As in Isaiah vi. 4; cf. Ex. xl. 34; 1 Kings viii. 10; 2 Chron. v. 14; Ezek. x. 2-4. We have in the "smoke" (often "the cloud") a symbol of the glory of the Divine Presence. Many, with reference to the fire of judgment, understand the "smoke" as the token of Divine wrath. Both ideas are, doubtless, combined: "The shrine is opened which it was death to a stranger to approach (Num. iii. 10). . . . Nor is it again closed, though inaccessible for a time from the awful Presence of God's glory in the cloud, and His wrath in the smoke."—I. Williams, p. 278.

and from His power;] See on ch. i. 6. On God's present "power" in heaven, which is not yet recognized on earth, see ch. iv. 11. On this whole description, cf. Ps. xviii. 8-15.

and no one was able to enter into the temple,] E.g. as in Ex. xix. 21; Isaiah vi. 5, until the Divine wrath shall be appeased, and judgment accomplished, as the Seer proceeds to say,— till the seven plagues of the seven angels should be finished.] As Bossuet writes:

“While God strikes, man flies from His presence, or rather tries to conceal himself. When God ceases to send forth His plagues we may then again enter into His Sanctuary, to consider there the order of His Judgments.”

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. xv. 6.

Note A on ver. 6.—ON THE READING λίθον.

In Ezek. xxviii. 13, the Heb. text is: כִּלְאֵן בֶּן יִקְרָה מִסַּכְתָּה—LXX., πᾶν λίθον χρηστὸν ἐνδέδεσθαι. Tischendorf (ed. 8th) quotes Andreas (l.c. p. 85): λίνον ἢ λίθον καθάρων, καθὰ τινὰ τῶν ἀντιγράφων ἔχουσι, διὰ τὴν τῆς φύσεως αὐτῶν καθαρότητα καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸν ἀκρογωνιαίον λίθον Χριστὸν ἐγγύτητα (1 Pet. ii. 6).

“Compare also Haymo (as well as Beda and Ansbertus): ‘Vestiti lapide mundo et candido,’ i.e., ornati et amicti Domino Jesu Christo, juxta illud: Omnes qui baptizati estis Christum induistis. Qui bene lapis dicitur, quo electi circumdantur, &c. Or if we read: vestiti lapidibus mundis sicut in quibusdam cdd. invenitur, per hos lapides designantur virtutes, &c. Alia translatio habet: vestiti lino mundo, per quod puritas vitæ,” &c. (Tisch., ib.). The Coptic version has, “circumamicti vestibus linteis splendidis;”—the Vulgate, “vestiti lino mundo et candido.” In Matt. xii. 20, the only place in the New Test.—if we except this verse—where we find λίνον, the words are: καὶ λίνον τυφόμενον οὐ σβέσει, “and smoking flax shall he not quench.” The Greek word for “linen” or “fine linen” is ἡ βύσσος, Luke xvi. 19; or βύσσινος, η, ον, or neut. βύσσινον, scil. ἱμάτιον (Winer, s. 522), Rev. xviii. 12, 16; xix. 8, 14. In the LXX. for Hebr. שִׁשְׁ, we have βύσσος Ex. xxviii. 6, 8, 29, where the attire of the Jewish Priests is described and in ver. 39 (35) ποιήσεις κίδαρον βυσσίνην, “a mitre of fine linen.” (See on the word Cidaris, or Mitre, Note D on ch. ii. 10).

CHAPTER XVI.

2 The angels pour out their vials full of wrath.

6 The plagues that follow thereupon. 15 Christ cometh as a thief. Blessed are they that watch.

[Ver. 1 τὰς ἑπτὰ. Ver. 2 εἰς τὴν γῆν.—ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀνθρ. Ver. 3 om. ἄγγελος.—ζωῆς.—τὰ ἐν τῇ θαλ. Ver. 4 om. ἄγγελος.—om. and εἰς.—[A reads ἐγένοντο]. Ver. 5 om. κύριε.—[For ἐσόμενος read ὅσιος. Er. follows his codex in reading καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ὅσιος];—om. καὶ before ὁ ὅσιος [with N, P.—A, B, C omit καὶ ὁ]. Ver. 6 δέδωκας.—om. γάρ. Ver. 7 om. ἄλλου ἐκ. Ver. 8 om. ἄγγελος. Ver. 9 τὴν ἐξουσ. Ver. 10 om. ἄγγελος. Ver. 12 om. ἄγγελος. Ver. 13 ἐς βάτραχοι. Ver. 14 δαιμονίων.—ἀ ἐκπορεύεται [N, 1 read σημεῖα ἐκπορεύεσθαι].—om. τῆς γῆς καί.—τὸν πόλεμον.—om. ἐκείνης. Ver. 16 [N reads συνήγαγον].—[For τόπον, A reads ποταμῶν—cf. Judg. v. 19, ἐπὶ ὕδατι Μαγεδδῶ].—Ἀρμαγεδών. Ver. 17 om. ἄγγελος.—ἐπὶ.—ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ.—om. τοῦ οὐρανοῦ.—[For ἀπὸ τοῦ θρόνου, N reads τοῦ θεοῦ]. Ver. 18 ἀστραπαὶ κ. φῶς. κ. βρ.—om. οἱ [A reads ἄνθρωπος ἐγένετο].]

THE SEVEN VIALS (1-21).

As already stated (see the remarks introd. to ch. ii., and ch. vi.), the “Seven Vials” which form the subject of this chapter are divided, like the Seven Epistles (ch. ii.; ch. iii.), into groups of three and four (vv. 2-4; and vv. 8-17)—vv. 13-16 forming an episode between the sixth and seventh Vials: (1) In each of the first three the preposition “into” (εἰς) is used, as in ver. 1, to designate the object of “the wrath of God;”—in the last four, the preposition “upon” (ἐπὶ) is used for the same purpose in each. (2) The third Vial is separated from the fourth by a formal conclusion consisting of two solemn utterances in vv. 5-7, lauding the righteous judgments of God. (3) The first three are marked by their short and sharp description, each Vial occupying but one verse (vv. 2-4); while each of the remaining four is described with much greater minuteness, notwithstanding the brevity of this entire Vision (vv. 8-21). (4) The fourth Vial is connected with the group containing the fifth and the seventh, by the statement that under each of these Vials men “blasphemed” God—see vv. 9, 11, 21. (5) The fourth Vial differs essentially from the fourth Trumpet (ch. viii. 12)—for, though both affect the sun, “the sun” in ch. viii. 12

AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven

is darkened, while here (vv. 8, 9) its heat is intensified. To these reasons for the division into three and four, Hengst. adds (6): "The last four begin with the sun, and conclude with the air, while the first three keep below,—to the earth, the sea, the rivers and the fountains." Hofmann also divides the Vials into groups of three and four; and he argues for the internal unity of the first three Vials from the fact that they are directed against the two sins to be punished: (1) If men receive the "the mark of the Beast" on their forehead and hand, God marks them with a noisome sore;—(2) If they have poured out "the blood of saints" like water, not only the salt water of the sea, but the sweet waters of the fountains are changed into blood (l. c., ii. s. 362).

There is much diversity of opinion here; but this division agrees best with the general character of the description. Bengel, Züllig, Ebrard, Bleek, Volkmar, Reuss, Alf., Bisping, divide, as in the Seals and Trumpets, into groups of four and three,—the objects of the first four being the earth, the sea, the fountains of waters, and the sun (see ch. viii. 7–12): in the last three, special objects are particularized—the throne of the Beast and the river Euphrates, while a certain vagueness also marks the seventh, as in the Seals and the Trumpets. De Wette sees here groups of five and two—the former causing pain, the latter war and confusion; and he again divides the group of five into three and two by the pause in vv. 5–7, while the fourth and fifth Vials are connected by the parallel comments in vv. 9, 11. Düsterd. on the other hand concludes that there is no division here into groups as in the previous Visions; observing that if a separation were to be made it might with equal justice be made at ver. 3, or ver. 9, or ver. 11, or ver. 15:—and his conclusion is that all Seven are poured out, one after the other, with a rapidity corresponding to that with which the End approaches, before which these last plagues only (ch. xv. 1) are interposed. For this reason Bossuet thinks that the Vials are all poured out at once.

The analogy of the Vials to the Trumpets is obvious. This has been noticed by so early a writer as Victorinus (see his words quoted in Note A on ch. ix.); the chief feature in the analogy being the references to the plagues of Egypt, although the references are not strictly the same. St. Irenæus has long since pointed out that where the Prophets and "John the Lord's Disciple in the Apocalypse" speak of the End, the Nations are spoken of as enduring the plagues of Egypt (Adv. Her. iv. 30; see on ch. viii. 6):—

The first Vial reminds us of the sixth plague of boils, Ex. ix. 8–12 (the first Trumpet recalls the seventh plague, Ex. ix. 22–26);—the second Vial, like the second Trumpet, reminds us of the first plague, the waters "turned to blood," Ex. vii. 19, 20;—the relation of the third to the second Vial corresponds to that between the third and the second Trumpet, ch. viii. 8–10;—the fourth Vial, like the fourth Trumpet, relates to the source of light and heat, and thus refers to the ninth plague, of darkness, Ex. x. 21;—the fifth Vial (ver. 10) in like manner refers to the plague of darkness. We may observe too in these Visions that the same imagery, taken from created things, occurs for the most part under the same "Vial" or "Trumpet," and in the order of the days of Creation (Gen. i.). As in the Egyptian plagues, so in these judgments also what "God created to be beautiful and pronounced to be good" becomes evil to man, because he does not in them worship their Creator:—see ch. xiv. 7. If (as I. Williams notes) St. Augustine compares the ten plagues of Egypt to the Ten Commandments, so the Vials have a reference to the seven sins which quench the Seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost. Under the Vials there is no repentance (vv. 9, 11, 21).

1. And I heard a great voice out of the temple,] Or "Sanctuary," which was filled with the Divine Presence—see ch. xv. 8. Many think that as "no one was able to enter into the Temple" it must be the voice of God Himself. For a like call from God to His ministers of judgment, Hengst. compares Ezek. ix. 1, 8:—see on ver. 17.

saying to the seven angels, Go ye, and pour out the seven vials of the wrath of God] See vv. 11.; and compare ch. xv. 7.

into the earth.] The words are the same as in ch. viii. 5, 7.

The mutual relation of the three great Visions illustrates very clearly the principle of Recapitulation. The Seal is the emblem of an event still secret, but decreed by God;—the Trumpet sounded manifests the will that the Divine decree should be accomplished speedily;—the poured-out Vial is the symbol of that decree identified with its execution. "The Seals are the first assault of the King of Heaven on the stronghold of the rebellious world;—the Trumpets are the supreme call to submission and repentance;—the Vials are the chastisements which strike the hardened human race. . . . The Seals correspond to the first miracles of Moses before Pharaoh;—the Trumpets to the ten plagues;—the Vials to the disaster of the Red Sea" (Godet, l. c., angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

2 And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

3 And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

p. 297). The "Vials" are introduced in ch. xv. 1, as being the "last plagues;" they belong to the time when the End is near. The judgments accordingly fall, not on the fourth part of the earth, as under the "Seals" (see ch. vi. 8); nor on the third part as under the "Trumpets" (see ch. viii. 7-12; ix. 15, 18), but on all created things. The events of the preceding Visions are, as it were, taken up and completed:—thus the second, third, and sixth "Vials" are analogous to the second, third, and sixth "Trumpets" (ch. viii. 8, 9; ix. 14); and the seventh "Vial" is parallel to the sixth "Seal" (ch. vi. 12). We may also discern between the sixth "Vial" (ver. 12) and the seventh (ver. 17) an episode consisting of vv. 13-16; just as we noticed between the sixth and seventh "Seals" (ch. vii.), and the sixth and seventh "Trumpets" (ch. x.; xi. 1-14). The "Vials" indeed to a great extent fall under the seventh "Trumpet;" and many writers consider that the "Seven Trumpets" are contained in the seventh "Seal," when "the mystery of God is finished" (see on ch. viii.). There is also in the "Vials" an anticipation of the End: e.g. after the sixth "Vial" there is a gathering to battle as described in ch. xix. 17-21, the symbolical battlefield being indicated; and under the seventh the judgment on Babylon is referred to before the event itself (see ch. xvii.; xviii.; cf. ch. xiv. 8):—ver. 20 points on to ch. xx. 11.

Mr. Maurice (l.c., p. 296) takes the Trumpets as pointing to Jerusalem, and the Vials as pointing to Rome:—"Both denote a crisis through which the two cities were passing within the same three or four years."

Godet, who takes the "Vials" to symbolize the judgments upon mankind enslaved to Antichrist, identifies the Vial-plagues with the judgments spoken of in ch. xi. 5, 6.

THE FIRST THREE VIALS (2-7).

2. And the first went,] In the Trumpets, as Bengel notes, the word "Angel" is repeated (ch. viii. 8, 9, 10, 12; ix. 1, 14; xi. 15); now, such is the brevity of the style, the word is omitted throughout (see vv. 11.):—"The Vials make short work."

into the earth;] As in ver. 1. See vv. 11.—"into" (eis), not "upon," the preposition being the same in each of the first three Vials, see vv. 3, 4. In the second group of four and it became] As implied by A. V. in vv. 3, 4; or, "and there came"—nearly as A. V. in this place.

Vials, the preposition, in each case, is "upon" (ἐπὶ)—see vv. 8, 10, 12, 17.

a noisome and grievous sore upon the men] (See vv. 11.). The sixth plague of Egypt, Ex. ix. 8-12; see the note on Ex. ix. 9. The word rendered "sore" is found elsewhere in the New Test. in ver. 11 and in Luke xvi. 21; compare Deut. xxviii. 27, 35; Job ii. 7 (Hebr. חֲשִׁי, LXX., as here, ἔλκος). Hengst. notes that it is "not without meaning that men and cattle were alike smitten with this distemper. Its nature was so noisome that the magicians could not 'stand before Moses,' Ex. ix. 11." Observe "men" are smitten here, not the trees and grass as in the first Trumpet (ch. viii. 7);—and further "the men" now described, without exception, not "the third part" only.

which had the mark of the beast, and which worshipped his image.] See ch. xiii. 15, 16; xiv. 9.

For examples of the various explanations of the "Vials," see Note A at the end of this chapter.

3. And the second poured out his vial into the sea;] Omit "Angel"—see vv. 11.

and it became blood as of a dead man; So A. V.; that is, "the sea became:" cf. ver. 4, and Ex. vii. 20—the first Egyptian plague, as in ch. viii. 8. Or the meaning may be, "the Vial became," cf. vv. 2, 4. Or we may render, and there came, i.e., "there was," "there resulted" blood. The intensity of the second "Vial" above that of the second "Trumpet" (ch. viii. 8) consists not only in this that the whole sea is changed into blood, and that every living thing in it dies, but in this that the blood is not fluid, living blood—it is now that "of a dead man," and therefore tainted with corruption.

and every living soul died,] Gr. "every soul of life"—see vv. 11.; and cf. Gen. i. 20, 30: not "the third part" as in ch. viii. 8, 9.

[even] the things that were in the sea.] See vv. 11.:—the art. referring to what is implied by "every living soul." Cf. ch. viii. 9, whence we might borrow the noun signifying "creatures," viz. [even] the [creatures] that were in the sea":—see also

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.

ch. v. 13. The "sea" of "the nations" is to be understood, "the restless wicked world" (Hengst.)—cf. ch. xvii. 15, and see on ch. xiii. 1. The "sea" (adds Hengst.) cannot be understood literally, for it cannot be the object of God's wrath. A comparison with ch. viii. 8, 9 further shows that what is said here is symbolical.

"This is the fulfilment," writes I. Williams, "of the second day of the Creation (Gen. i. 6),—the dividing of the waters from the waters,—the sea of blood below, and the 'sea of glass mingled with fire' (ch. xv. 2) above, on which are standing the harpers of God."

4. And the third poured out his vial into the rivers and the fountains of the waters;] (See vv. 11.). The first Egyptian plague (Ex. vii. 20)—as in the preceding Vial and in the second and third Trumpets (ch. viii. 8, 10)—is repeated here. "This correspondence between the second and third Vials, and the second and third Trumpets is designed. It furnishes a sort of finger-post for the internal connexion of the two groups" (Hengst.). In the first Egyptian plague there was a twofold symbolism,—the blood (1) denoted the slaying of the first-born, and the destruction of the Egyptian host in the Red Sea (Ex. xii. 29, 30; xiv. 28); and (2), it rendered the water of the Nile impure, denoting the loss of Egypt's prosperity. The two emblems are combined in Ps. lxxviii. 44: "He turned their rivers into blood; and their floods that they could not drink." And thus in "the Trumpets" and "the Vials," the symbolism exhibits both death and the result of the impurity of the waters. On this use of the same symbol under two aspects, see the note on ch. viii. 10.

and it became blood.] The A. V., either adopting the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus (see vv. 11.); or, taking "the waters"—a neuter plural—to be the nom., renders "they became." As in vv. 2, 3, the sense may be and there came, i.e., "there was," or "there resulted" blood—the verb being in the singular. The third day of Creation is pointed to in this "Vial," when "the waters" were "gathered together into one place."

THE MORAL OF THE FIRST GROUP (5-7).

Here follows the formal conclusion of the preceding verses—the moral, as it were, drawn from them—separating the first group of three from the second group of four Vials: see the remarks introd. to this chapter.

5. And I heard the angel of the waters saying,] I. e., the "Angel set over the waters." Angels are set over the winds and over fire in ch. vii. 1; xiv. 18 (cf. ch. xi. 6); and hence we may infer that each of the Seven Vial-Angels is set over a distinct element. Or, the Angels who fill a special office in God's presence, as in ch. viii. 2 (cf. the Angel-Princes in Daniel—see the notes on Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1). "Angels of the sea" are spoken of in the Rabbinical writings—see Bava Batbra, f. 84, 2, b, ap. Wolf; and cf. Schoettgen, p. 1131, f. Düsterd. suggests that this Angel may simply represent the waters, as the Four Living Beings (ch. iv. 6, &c.) represent the life of Creation. Grotius and Ebrard explain that we have here a short description of the Angel who poured his "Vial" over "the waters," and therefore has power over them; just as the Angel in ch. xiv. 18 represents concisely the Angel mentioned in ch. xviii. 4. Hengst. refers to John v. 4 in illustration,—but the genuineness of that passage is questionable. Stern notes that the "Angel of the waters" might have complained to God at the change of the sea and rivers into blood, whereby an element essential to human life was tainted. On the contrary, the Angel confirms the justice of the punishment.

Righteous art thou.] Omit "O Lord"—see vv. 11. On the word "righteous" see ch. xv. 3; and cf. ver. 7.

which art and which wast, thou Holy One,] See vv. 11. The words in A. V., "and shalt be," rest on no authority whatever. Griesbach, who notices the reading (ἐσόμενος) of the Textus Receptus, merely says: "Cod. ap. Beza." Dr. Scrivener writes: "ἐσόμενος (for ὅσιος), a bold variation of Beza's last three editions, is adopted in our Version, and the Elzevir text of 1633."—Paragraph Bible, Intr., App. E, p. ciii. The Vulgate has "qui es et qui eras sanctus," with A, B, C (without the art.), which art and which wast holy.

because thou didst thus judge:] We may also render here: holy [art thou],—or [yea] holy,—because &c. These latter renderings, which regard "holy" as in apposition with "righteous," are supported by Düsterdieck and Wordsworth, but are not adopted by De Wette and Alf., who translate, with the Vulgate: "Thou art righteous who art and wast holy, because,

6 For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were scorched with ^{10r, burned.} great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.

10 And the fifth angel poured out

&c. Or a full stop may be placed at "judge."

The word "thus" (Gr. "these things") refers to the judgments described in vv. 2-4. For the word "holy" see on ch. xv. 4.

For the title here given to God—"Which art and Which wast"—see on ch. i. 4; xi. 17.

In vv. 5-7 is given the reply to the appeal of the martyrs in ch. vi. 9, 10, under the fifth Seal.

8. because they poured out] The former "because" is here repeated.

and thou hast given them] The perfect—see vv. 11.

blood to drink.] The sense being—'therefore righteous art thou.' Or there may be here a new clause: "Because they poured out . . . thou hast given them blood also to drink": i.e., 'the Vial is poured out, in retribution, on the waters.' Hengst. notes that 'to drink blood' is mentioned not as a crime (see ch. xvii. 6), but as a punishment,—cf. Isai. xlix. 26.

They are worthy.] Omit "for"—see vv. 11. The contrast between this solemn declaration of "the Angel of the waters," and the same words used in ch. iii. 4, is expressed in Rom. vi. 23.

Another voice is next heard in confirmation:—cf. ch. v. 9, 12, 13, 14.

7. And I heard the altar saying,] Omit the words "another out of"—see vv. 11. The great majority of writers see here a personification of the Altar,—including the souls of the martyrs beneath it, and the prayers of the saints offered on it (ch. vi. 9, 10; viii. 3),—for which preparation was made in ch. ix. 13, 14; and which was further intimated in ch. xiv. 18. Words would compare Gen. iv. 10; Heb. xii. 24; Luke xix. 40; as well as 1 Kings xiii. 2. Many, however, understand here (what the reading followed in the A. V. expresses) "the Angel of the Altar"—as in ch. viii. 3-5: "the Angel of the fire," notes Züllig, "replying antiphonally to the Angel of the waters." Burger refers, in illustration, to Josh. xxii. 26-29.

Yea, O Lord God, the Almighty,] See on ch. i. 8. The word "Yea" expresses assent to what was said by "the Angel of the waters."

true and righteous [are] thy judgments.] See ch. xix. 2.

THE LAST FOUR VIALS (8-17).

8. And the fourth poured out his vial] See vv. 11.; and on ver. 2.

upon the sun;] In this latter group of four, the preposition is different:—"upon," not "into" as in the former group of three.

and it was given unto him] Or it was given unto it, i.e., "unto the sun," on which the effect was produced, as on the "sea," and "rivers," vv. 3, 4—so De Wette, Bleek, Düsterd., Words, Alf. The phrase "it was given" simply intimates that "the penal results are due to the permission of God" (Words.):—cf. ch. ix. 5. Bengel and Hengst., however, more justly refer "unto him" to the Angel; see ch. vii. 2.

to scorch men with fire.] Were the article before "men" to be pressed, the sense would be "the men which had the mark of the Beast"—ver. 2; cf. ch. ix. 6. In this increased intensity of heat consists the plague:—for the contrast, see on ch. vii. 16; and cf. Isai. xlix. 10. Under the fourth Trumpet, ch. viii. 12, there is merely a diminution of light; the sun being joined with the moon and stars. "The fourth Vial is on the sun; as the sun was created on the fourth day; and as the sun was stricken under the fourth Trumpet."—I. Williams.

As relating to "the sun," this "Vial" also recalls the ninth Egyptian plague—see Ex. x. 21.

9. And men were scorched with great heat:] Or "the men," "mankind"—the art. occurring here as well as in ver. 8: cf. ch. viii. 11; ix. 20.

and they blasphemed] A note connecting this "Vial" with the fifth and seventh (vv. 11, 21), as one of the four "Vials" of the second group. Men blaspheme, as being conscious that the plagues come from God: they do not blaspheme under the sixth "Vial" (vv. 12-16) for there the judgment has not as yet fallen, but is merely prepared.

his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

11 And blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river the name of the God] Cf. ver. 11.

which bath the power over these plagues;] (See vv. 11.). The words "these plagues" are taken by some to mean the four "Vials"; and, hence, they divide the Seven into four and three:—but see ver. 11, under the fifth "Vial," which certainly refers back to ver. 2. All the "Vials" are meant.

I. Williams notes: "Light without Love. The sun burns; life itself is as death . . . They are 'tormented in the presence of the Lamb' (ch. xiv. 10). 'Vident intabescunt-que.'"—p. 293.

10. And the fifth poured out his vial] See vv. 11. With many writers, the second group of the Vial-Visions begins here:—The former group of four having been poured out on the earth and on the sun, the fifth Vial (vv. 10, 11) is poured out on the throne of the Beast;—by the sixth, as the result of this, Satan (vv. 12–16) assembles the world for the last conflict against God;—under the seventh (vv. 17–21), Babylon, the seat of the anti-christian World-power, is destroyed.

upon the throne of the beast;] As actually seen (ch. xiii. 2) when given by the "Dragon;"—upon the real centre of his authority (cf. on ch. ii. 13). Understanding by the Beast the ungodly World-power in its collective character, his "throne" is situated in different places at different periods:—in Babylon of old (cf. Isai. xlvii. 1);—in Rome in the days of St. John;—and so on to the end of time: "This is as certain as that the Beast has Seven Heads" (ch. xiii. 1) "Wherever the throne may stand, it will be struck by the fifth "Vial" (Hengst.)—see on ver. 19. Ebrard here recalls the "Angel of the Abyss" under the fifth Trumpet (ch. ix. 11),—"the Destroyer" who has given his "throne" to the Beast as the representative of the World-power.

and his kingdom was darkened;] The ninth Egyptian plague (Ex. x. 21) is more literally repeated here than under the fourth "Vial;"—see ch. viii. 12; cf. Ps. cv. 28. Wisd. xvii. 21 supplies the comment on this verse, "Over them only was spread an heavy night, an image of that darkness which should afterward receive them."

and they gnawed their tongues for pain,] (On the prep., ἐκ, cf. ch. viii. 11, 13). The word rendered "pain" (πόνος) is found only in this passage, in ch. xxi. 4, and in Col. iv.

New Test.—VOL. IV.

13:—see on ver. 11. This mention of "pain" or "distress" as the result of darkness naturally leads to the symbolical interpretation of this "Vial" and also of the four previous "Vials."

11. And they blasphemed the God of heaven] A title found elsewhere only in ch. xi. 13; in which place, in contrast to the present verse, repentance follows. To blaspheme God, as here, is the token of entire allegiance to the Beast—see ch. xiii. 6.

because of their pains and their sores;] See ver. 2. Under this fifth "Vial," the judgment of the first—and doubtless, those also of the second and third "Vials"—continues: the fourth "Vial" is but a different aspect of this plague.

and they repented not of their works,] See ver. 9; and ch. ix. 20, 21:—see also below, the note on ver. 21 as to the absence of any mention there of repentance.

12. And the sixth poured out his vial] See vv. 11.

upon the great river, the [river] Euphrates;] Cf. the sixth "Trumpet," ch. ix. 14; and see the note in loc. From beyond the Euphrates the hosts which invaded Palestine and resisted Israel used to come; and from that quarter Jerusalem, the type of the Church, was wont to be assailed; this imagery, therefore, symbolically represents the barrier, now to be removed, which opposed the progress of the ungodly World-power in its assault upon the Church. As to the source of the symbolism here, Hengst. strongly objects to the opinion of Eichhorn, Züllig, Heinrich, Stern, Hofmann, Ebrard, Words. (who quotes the authority of the ancient expositor Haymo), viz. that it is borrowed from the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, who effected his conquest of the city by diverting the waters of the Euphrates. In support of his objection Hengst. (following Forbes) urges that the Apoc. does not borrow from Herodotus and Xenophon, but from Scripture. To this the answer is obvious,—'Prophecy does distinctly foreshadow the action of Cyrus.' Of this there can be no doubt when one considers Jer. li. 31, 32, 36 (see the notes in loc., and on Dan. v. 30); or compares Isai. xiii. (on which chapter see the concluding note). This historical fact, therefore, may safely be regarded as supplying the outlines of the present imagery. Of course the Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

decisive war for which all the kings of the earth are gathered together (ver. 14) is not against a literal Babylon, but against the Church of God; and, as Bengel notes, "Ar-Mageddon lies in the land of Israel, and from the rising of the sun the way to it is over the Euphrates" (ver. 16).

and the water thereof was dried up,] Referring (see Jer. li. 36) to the means by which Cyrus captured the literal Babylon, A.D. 538 (Herod. i. 191; Xen. Cyrop. vii. 5); see the notes on Dan. v.; and cf. Isai. xlv. 27, 28. Cyrus drained "the great river" from its bed, and thus prefigured the fall of the mystical Babylon. As further sources of this imagery the passage of the Red Sea, Ex. xiv. (cf. Zech. x. 10-12),—or of the Jordan, Josh. iv. 23—may be compared. The language of this verse, in fact, recalls more than one remarkable allusion in the former Scriptures to the people of God—e. g. Ps. cxiv. 3; Isai. xi. 15, 16; li. 10; Jer. l. 38.

that the way might be prepared for the kings which [come] from the sun-rising.] See ch. vii. 2. That the destroyer of Babylon was to come from the East is constantly foretold—e. g. Isai. xiii.-xiv.; xli. 2, 25; xlv. 11; and hence the imagery of this verse, whereby the destruction of the mystical Babylon is foreshadowed.

As to the meaning of these words there is a great conflict of opinion:—(1) Beda, I. Williams, Words., variously interpret that by "the Kings from the sun-rising" we are to understand the saints who are made "kings" by Christ and form the armies of heaven that follow Him (ch. xix. 14);—who are spoken of by Isaiah (ch. lx. 3);—of whom the Magi from the East (Matt. ii.) were the first fruits;—and who are to contend at Ar-Mageddon with the antichristian powers of the world let loose from the river Euphrates under the sixth Trumpet (ch. ix. 15, 16). With reference to this interpretation see the notes on ch. i. 6 and ch. v. 10.

(2) On the other hand, Bleek, Ewald, De Wette, Düsterd., Alf., include "the kings" here among "the kings of the whole earth" ver. 14; and, therefore, regard them as instruments of the Dragon, and the Beast, and the False Prophet (ver. 13), in leading men to war not against Babylon but against the saints,—see ch. xii. 17; xiii. 7.

(3) The rationalistic school, e. g. Bleek, De Wette, Düsterd., Reuss, Krenkel, identify these Eastern Kings with the "Ten Horns" or "Kings" of ch. xvii. 12, who are introduced here by anticipation (as the Beast of ch. xiii. is referred to in ch. xi. 7), and whose fate is hinted at in ver. 16, but not fully described until ch. xix. 19, 20. Their relation to the Beast is not cleared up until ch. xvii. 12. This explanation connects itself with the notion that Nero (see on ch. xiii. 3) will return as Antichrist, with the Parthians, to destroy Rome. For this the way is now prepared. According to this interpretation, the plague of the sixth "Vial" consists in the assembling these kings, and annihilating them at Ar-Mageddon (ver. 16).

(4) Ebrard interprets in a manner peculiar to himself:—He identifies "the kings from the sun-rising" with the "four Angels" in ch. ix. 14, 15; they are here called "the kings," as being known to the Seer since the sixth Trumpet; and they are called "kings" because Satan is so styled in ch. ix. 11. The host which follows these kings from the East is related to the locust-host under the fifth Trumpet (ch. ix. 1-11), as the power of unbelief to the power of superstition. The difference existing between the fifth and sixth Trumpets, and the fifth and sixth Vials, Ebrard takes to be that in the former God's judgments are inflicted on godless mankind as such; and that in the latter, they are inflicted on the kingdom of the Beast, or Babylon, the resuscitated Roman World-power (ch. xiv. 8).

(5) Hippolytus takes these kings to be servants of Antichrist; and explains that God in His wisdom smooths the way for them to come and worship Antichrist, and be his allies ("Ancolitus," l.c., p. 27, see Note C on ch. xii. 3).

(6) Andreas makes the Eastern kings to be Gog and Magog (ch. xx. 8).

The first of these interpretations may appear to be the most probable, if we compare the beautiful words of Isaiah (li. 10, 11):—"He hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over. Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion." It is to be borne in mind, however, that the sixth Vial—and each "Vial" brings a "plague" upon the ungodly—is fully described in ver. 12, and is not continued in the verses which follow. In fact, as already observed, vv. 13-16 form an episode between the sixth and seventh Vials, herein resembling ch. vii. and ch. x.-xi. 14,—the shortness of this episode denoting the rapid approach of the End (cf. ch. x. 6, see Hofmann, l.c., ii. s. 362). The conclusion then seems to be that the drying up of the Euphrates recalls the destruction of Babylon, the seat of the ungodly World-

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

14 For they are the spirits of power, by Cyrus; and that this destruction symbolizes the judgment for which preparation is made under this "Vial."

Mr. Charles Maitland refers in illustration to the statement of the heathen historian Justin, that Alexander the Great "went into Syria, where he was met by many kings of the East with mitres" (Historia, lib. xi. 10). And Mr. Maitland adds that in 2 Esdras xiii. 39-44 St. John's expression seems to be applied to "the ten Tribes, which were carried away prisoners out of their own land . . . over the waters." . . . "And they entered into Euphrates, . . . for the Most High then shewed signs for them, and held still the flood, till they were passed over."—School of Propb. Interpr., p. 70.

THE EPISODE (13-16).

13. And I saw] The formula introducing a new Vision (see on ch. xiv. 1; xv. 2).

[coming] out of the mouth of the dragon.] There is no participle here signifying "going forth," "proceeding," and this Düsterd. supplies from the verb expressed in ver. 14. The Cod. Sinaiticus reads ἐδόθη for εἶδον: "And there were given from the mouth" &c.

The Vision of ch. xiii. 2, 11 still continues:—see on ch. xx. 8, to which place this episode may look forward.

and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.] On the expression "out of the mouth," cf. "the rod of his mouth" (Isai. xi. 4). The "False Prophet"—the second Beast of ch. xiii. 11—appears for the first time in this place, under this name (cf. ch. xix. 20; xx. 10); he represents the power which, under the semblance of being Christ's, really brings the Church under bondage to "the Prince of this World." It is to be observed that as St. John elsewhere (1 John iii. 8) speaks of "many Antichrists;" and as "Antichrist" represents "the Beast," so he elsewhere speaks of "many false prophets" (1 John iv. 1): see Note A, on ch. xiii.; and the note on ch. xiii. 11.

three unclean spirits.] The epithet "unclean" (cf. Matt. x. 1; Mark i. 26; Luke iv. 33) implies their demoniacal nature as described in ver. 14; and also refers to the form under which they appear.

as it were frogs.] (See vv. 11.). Such was their form in the Vision: and to the intuition of the Seer these three forms have the same reality as those of the Dragon and the two Beasts from whose mouths they proceed; or as the objects described in ch. ix. 1-11; or in ch. ix. 17 (Düsterd.). There may be a reference here to the second plague of Egypt, Ex. viii. 1-14. If we except that plague, and the references to it, there is no other mention direct or symbolical of "frogs" in Scripture (cf. Wisd. xix. 10). Commentators quote profane authors who take frogs to be an emblem of garrulity and of uncleanness—e. g. Cicero (ad Attic. xv. 16): see Züllig and Alf. in loc. Stern quotes Eucherius Bishop of Lyons (Lib. form. spir. intell., c. 5) who interprets this verse of heretics "who dwelling in the slime of sensuality cease not to croak with empty garrulity." Frogs, notes Renan (p. 427), "designate conjurors and harlequins (les prestidigitateurs et les arlequins,—Artemid., Oneirocr., ii. 15)." The frog, writes Volkmann, is the symbol of "magic." And so Mr. Maurice, who specifies Simon Magus: see Note A at the end of this chapter. "They seem to imply the pouring forth of wickedness of every kind, from the Devil and the world, and from that spiritual wickedness which usually attends on both."—I. Williams (p. 304). To inquire who or what is to be understood historically by these three unclean spirits, Düsterd. compares with the similar inquiry as to the "four Angels" of ch. ix. 14:—e. g. Grotius and Hammond apply to the contest between Constantine and Maxentius; the "three unclean spirits" being the "exstispicium, auspicium, et libri Sibyllini, quibus fidebat Maxentius";—Luther referred to Faber, Eck, and Emser "who croaked against the Gospel;"—Wolf and others to the Jesuits, Macchiavellists, and Spinozists;—Calovius to the Jesuits, Capucins, and Calvinists;—and so forth.

Burger contrasts with these forms of the "unclean spirits," the Dove, the form under which the Holy Spirit was beheld by John the Baptist—Luke iii. 22.

14. for they are spirits of devils.] Gr. of demons, see vv. 11. See on ch. ii. 10; and also the notes on ch. ix. 20; xviii. 2.

The symbolism of ver. 13 is here explained. Hengst. however (and so Ebrard and Bleek) takes this to be "a parenthetical remark," translating: "For there are spirits" &c., the words being a solemn preparation for ver. 15, as if it were "Watch and pray; for:"—"Nothing" he adds, "is better fitted to solve the enigma of the world's history, or to stir us up to watchfulness and zeal than the con-devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

15 'Behold, I come as a thief.' ^{Mat. 24:43} Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

16 And he gathered them toviction that we have to contend not with flesh and blood, but against evil spirits (Eph. vi. 12)."

working miracles;] Or signs—the word always used by St. John—a means of seduction already ascribed to the "False Prophet" (ch. xiii. 13), and now to each of the three enemies of God: cf. Matt. xxiv. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 9.

which go forth unto] See vv. 11. for both the relative and the verb. For the preposition—Gr. upon—cf. John xix. 33. From the verb here Dusterd. supplies the participle omitted in ver. 13.

the kings of the whole world,] (Omit "of the earth and"—see vv. 11.) The evil influence falls upon the rulers of the "world" [Gr. "inhabited earth"] as representatives of their subjects who worship the Beast—see ch. xiii. 4, 8, 12; xiv. 9, 11.

Réville (l.c., p. 121) explains that St. John includes under "the kings of the whole world," the "Kings from the Sun-rising" (ver. 12), and the "Ten Kings" or "Horns" of the Beast, ch. xvii. 12. Reuss refers in illustration of this verse to 1 Kings xxii. 20–23.

to gather them together to the war] See vv. 11:—i.e., 'in order to gather them together.' As to the constr., cf. ch. xii. 17.

For the details of "the war" we must look to ch. xix. 11, &c: see especially ch. xix. 19; and cf. Zech. xiv. 1–3. Two descriptions of this gathering are given, viz. in ch. xix. 17 and ch. xx. 8. For the relation of these "kings" to the "Kings from the Sun-rising" see on ver. 12. In ver. 12 the action of God preparing the way for His armies is symbolized (cf. Micah iv. 11, 12): the means whereby the Dragon musters his hosts are described here. We are naturally led by the analogy of the influence of evil spirits as described in the Gospels to compare the effect produced by the demons referred to in this verse, with the instances of possession of which we read elsewhere in the New Test.

of the great day of God, the Almighty.] See vv. 11. It is not stated by St. John against whom this war is waged; but the reference to the drying up of the Euphrates indicates that it is directed against Babylon.

Ebrard, from a comparison with Zech. xiv. 1–2 ("Behold the day of the Lord cometh . . . I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle") concludes "that this last World-war, after the fall of Babylon, will seek to direct its power of destruction against Christ Himself and His Kingdom" (s. 437).

On the "Great Day," cf. Matt. vii. 22; Luke xvii. 24, 31; 1 Thess. v. 2, 4.

We have to note throughout the Apocalypse a secret gathering of armies as for some great war;—from the single mysterious Horseman in the first Seal (ch. vi. 2), to the assembling of the fowls of heaven (ch. xix. 17): "For the Lord God of Hosts hath a sacrifice in the North Country, by the river Euphrates" (Jer. xlv. 10). The assemblage here is the signal for the Lord's Coming; and hence the exhortation in ver. 15, which is interposed parenthetically.

15. I. Williams finely says: "When the forces of good and evil are mustering for the last great conflict, in the midst of the sublime description, . . . suddenly, for the pause and interval of one verse, the Spirit takes the reader aside and whispers"—

(Behold, I come as a thief.) See ch. iii. 3; and cf. Matt. xxiv. 42, 44; 1 Thess. v. 2; 2 Pet. iii. 10. Either Christ Himself is the speaker; or St. John breaks off his narrative to introduce in Christ's own words (see ch. xxii. 7, 12, 20), a word of consolation amid the terrors which the mention of the "Great Day" excites:—compare ch. xiii. 9; xiv. 12.

keepeth his garments,] Compare ch. iii. 17, 18; vii. 14:—the reason is stated in the words which follow.

lest he walk naked,] On this figure see Isai. xlvii. 3; Ezek. xvi. 37; Hos. ii. 10; Nah. iii. 5. Hengst. explains the nakedness as denoting not the guilt, but the punishment; the exposure to the world that men lack what constitutes the Christian state.

and they see his shame.] Bleek draws attention to the unauthorized procedure of Beza who, against all external evidence, effaces this verse here, and transfers it so as to precede ch. iii. 18. Referring to the tendency to confine what we read in the Apoc. to time and place, I. Williams writes that this verse seems to say: "Think not of this as of some great battle in which you are yourself unconcerned; you are yourself, O reader, now in the midst of that conflict of which you read."

16. And he gathered them together] So A. V. Or, they gathered them together. (1) Bengel gether into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there takes the sixth Angel, ver. 12, to be the nom. here (cf. ch. ix. 14);—Hengst., Ebrard, Burger take it to be "God, the Almighty," ver. 14 (cf. Joel iii. 2);—Ewald takes it to be the Dragon, who comes forward as the head of the "anti-christian trinity" introduced in ver. 13.

The Vulg. renders "et congregabit illos."

(2) Dusterd., Bleek, De Wette, Words., Alf., take "the three unclean spirits" to be the nom. to the verb ("they gathered them together"), a neuter plural to a verb in the sing., as in ver. 14—the same verb, too, being repeated, and this verse resuming the narrative of ver. 14, for ver. 15 is, as above, a parenthesis. This seems to be the true constr.

(3) The Cod. Sinaiticus has the verb in the plural—see vv. ll.; and so the writer in Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon understands "the Kings" of ver. 12 combined with the Beast whose wound was healed (ch. xiii. 3): these, in confederacy with the "Ten Kings" of ch. xvii. 12 (explained to mean the Ten Proconsuls), now assail and destroy Rome (see the note on ch. xvii. 12).

The aorist here is "proleptic."

into the place] The Cod. Alexandrinus (see vv. ll.) reads "the river," i.e., the Kishon, Judges v. 19, 21;—see below.

which is called in Hebrew] Cf. ch. ix. 11; John v. 2; xix. 13, 17, 20; xx. 16.

Ar-Mageddon] In the Vulgate Armagedon. Or Har-Magedon.] See vv. ll. For the etymology see Note B at the end of this chapter. The name signifies 'The City' or 'Mountain' of Megiddo. Bisping (reading Ar) understands the City;—Bleek notes that the syllable Har refers to the position of Megiddo at the foot of Mount Carmel;—Reuss places it at the foot of Mount Tabor (Judges iv. 12)—see Stanley, Sinai and Palestine, p. 334. We read in the Old Test. of (not "the mountain," but) the plain or valley (LXX., πεδιον, 2 Chron. xxxv. 22; Zech. xii. 11); or waters (Judges v. 19, see vv. ll.) of Megiddo, in the plain of Esdraelon,—“the great plain of Esdraelon” of Judith i. 8,—“The battle-field,” writes Dean Stanley, “of Jewish history, and the chief scene of our Lord’s ministrations. Bounded as it is by the hills of Palestine on both north and south, it would naturally become the arena of war between the lowlanders who trusted in their chariots, and the Israelite highlanders of the neighbouring heights. To this cause mainly it owes its celebrity, as the battle-field of the world, which has, through its adoption into the language of the Apocalypse, passed into a universal proverb.”—Sinai and Palestine, ch. ix.

The plain of Esdraelon “has been a chosen place for encampment in every contest carried on in Palestine from the days of Nabuchodonozor, King of Assyria, unto the disastrous march of Napoleon Buonaparte from Egypt into Syria. Jews, Gentiles, Saracens, Christian Crusaders, and anti-christian Frenchmen, Egyptians, Persians, Druses, Turks, and Arabs, warriors of every nation that is under heaven, have pitched their tents on the plain of Esdraelon, and have beheld the banners of their nations wet with the dews of Tabor and Hermon.”—Clarke’s Travels, 4th ed., vol. iv. p. 268.

The plain of Esdraelon was of old the scene of four great battles, of which two (Judges iv.; vii.) were great victories, and two (1 Sam. xxxi.; 2 Kings xxiii. 29) were great disasters. Here in the remote past Deborah and Barak had annihilated the hosts of the Midianitish oppressors (Judges v. 19); and here in the latter days of the Jewish Kingdom, in battle with the overwhelming force of the Egyptians, Josiah received his death wound (2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20).

As to the name "Har-Magedon," we know that Joel (iii. 2, 12) has described the scene of Divine judgments in imagery borrowed from Jehoshaphat’s victory recorded in 2 Chron. xx. 22–26, although "the valley of Jehoshaphat"—i.e., the valley of "the judgment of Jehovah"—is nowhere else spoken of in Scripture: "The name is coined by Joel on account of its meaning, and for the purpose of recalling the historical association" (see the notes on Joel iii. 2, 12). Here, accordingly, the plain of Esdraelon, and the scene of Josiah’s death, supply the symbol of the great final conflict, although Har-Magedon is nowhere else spoken of. So profound indeed was the impression made upon the Jews by the defeat and death of Josiah, that the Prophet can describe the deepest affliction of Jerusalem by no stronger similitude than that of "the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon" (Zech. xii. 11). It is remarkable too that this very passage in the prophet (Zech. xii. 10) is expressly applied to our Lord (see ch. i. 7; John xix. 37), the meaning of the symbolism, as Hengst. notes, being that what the enemies of the Church of old had once accomplished at Megiddo against Josiah, they would now again accomplish against Jesus. Hengst. also observes that this reference to the victory of Pharaoh over Josiah suits well the Egyptian character of the "Vials."

came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done.

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was

"If," as Godet interprets (see on ch. xi. 13), "the antichristian Jewish Monarchy is hereafter to have its seat in the East, at Jerusalem, the rival of Rome, the choice of this battlefield, normal in Palestine, need not surprise us" (l. c., p. 381).

Hengstenberg makes the sixth "Vial" break off "of necessity here"; the "Seven Vials" forming of themselves a separate whole, and the battle in ch. xix. 11, &c., being not a continuation, but only a particular phase of the present conflict.

Ebrard, after Bengel, concludes that the war, or great conflict with unbelief, now begins; that it is continued under the seventh "Vial" (ch. xvii. 14); and that it comes to an end in ch. xix. 19.

On the other hand, the conclusion seems plain that a battle at "Har-Magedon" is not described here; but, as in the sixth Trumpet-Vision, the gathering together of armies in preparation for a decisive struggle. The fact that St. John has employed a word (Har-Magedon) not found in connexion with any locality or historical event, of itself points to a figurative interpretation. Nor indeed are we to think of literal warfare. Under Judaism we read of a literal Egypt, of a literal Amalek, of clean and unclean animals;—in other words, we recognize the outward sign, the corporeal type. Under Christianity we can only see the broad line which will finally separate the righteous and the wicked.

17. And the seventh poured out his vial upon the air:] See vv. 11. (For reading the preposition upon, ἐπί, see the note on ver. 2). "The air," Bengel observes, is the laboratory of thunder, lightning, hail. We also learn from Eph. ii. 2, that "the air" is the region of the power of evil. The seventh "Vial" accordingly is poured out upon the throne of the "Dragon" (Satan), as the fifth had been poured out upon the throne of the Beast (ver. 10). The Devil is cast into the lake of fire after the Beast and the "False Prophet"—see ch. xix. 20; xx. 10.

and there came forth a great voice out of the temple, from the throne,] (Omit of heaven, see vv. 11.); the Codex Sinaiticus reads, "of God," in place of "from the throne,"—as in ch. xi. 1). Writers generally understand, the voice of God Himself, as in ver. 1: this, they think, the words "from the throne" confirm, as well as the brief and sharp import of the voice,—a result which may well be questioned:—see below. Burger suggests that the voice proceeded from that saying, It is done.] This announcement refers back to ver. 1,—'That is done which was commanded': compare Luke xiv. 22; Ezek. ix. 11; Vulg. factum est; and also ch. xxi. 6, where the verb is in the plural. Ebrard regards the phrase "It is done" as parallel to the expression of ch. xi. 15 "is become," under the seventh Trumpet, and as introductory to the End. Hofmann observes that as the first Vial was poured out upon the earth, so the last is poured out upon the air, denoting that the terrors of the revelation of Christ will thus appear spread out over the universe; and he takes the words to signify the close of the Vision beginning with ch. xv. 1 (ii. s. 363). Vitringa (p. 734) translates by the expressive term "FUERUNT"; the nominative to the verb being "the old heaven and the old earth which ignorance and superstition had brought into the economy of the Church;"—similarly Beza. Grotius, applying to Rome, interprets "Fuit Roma." I. Williams refers to our Lord's last words on the Cross, "It is finished," John xix. 30.

Living Being who, placed beside the throne (ch. iv. 6), gave the "Seven Vials" to the Angels (ch. xv. 7).

The "Vials" run out quickly, notes Bengel: the "sores" under the fifth are the same as under the first; and as the first comes after the reception of "the mark of the Beast," so the seventh introduces the judgment on Babylon. The "Trumpets" affected temporal kingdoms; and here the "Vials," which are in the same order, affect the Beast now invested with power over those kingdoms.

18. And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders;] See vv. 11. Cf. ch. viii. 5; xi. 19:—the order in the latter text is exactly as here; there is also the earthquake, and, as below in ver. 21, "great hail." On this Hengst. notes, in opposition to the writers who find in the Apoc. a continuous history: "The seventh Vial agrees exactly in its main features with the seventh Trumpet. Here again we have arrived precisely at the same point at which we found ourselves there."

since there were men on the earth,] (Or, since there was a man on—see vv. 11. so mighty an earthquake, [and] so great.) In the case of this earthquake there is no repentance such as followed that in ch. xi. 13—see ver. 21.

The action, notes Reuss (p. 383), now begins, and three conflicts follow: (1) The fall of Rome (ch. xvii., xviii.); (2) The conflict with not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

19 And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, ^{to give} Jer. 25. unto her the cup of the wine of the ¹⁵ fierceness of his wrath.

Antichrist (ch. xix. 11-21); (3) The defeat of Satan (ch. xx. 7-10). Hengst. observes that while the Seals and Trumpets have to do simply with godless men, the reference here, in vv. 19, 20, is to the God-opposing powers of the world.

19. And the great city.] For this phrase see ch. xi. 8; xvii. 18.

At this point there are different lines of interpretation:—(1) Düsterdieck writes: "From the connexion with ch. xiii., and from the context here, it undoubtedly follows that the Great City which is divided into three parts, is identical with 'Babylon the Great' (ch. xiv. 8), i.e., with the capital of the World-kingdom which appeared in ch. xiii. under the form of the Beast from the sea (cf. ch. xvii.)": to the same effect Burger, and Bisping;—(2) Ebrard denies that the "Great City" is the same as "Babylon the Great." We have here "the Great City," and we first read of "the Great City" under its symbolical description as "Jerusalem"—although not "the geographical Jerusalem"—in ch. xi. 8, where it stands for the godless world absolutely. We first read of "Babylon" in ch. xiv. 8, where it stands for the World-power in its Roman form risen again after its overthrow, and organized anew under the name of Babylon by the "False Prophet;"—(3) Alcasar, De Wette, Ewald, Alf., decide that by "the Great City" or "Babylon" we are to understand Rome,—e.g. Alf. merely notes "Rome." Hengst. writes: "That Babylon denotes beatben Rome has already been proved at ch. xiv. 8." "Two Cities," he adds, "have in the Revelation the name of 'Great,'—Jerusalem in ch. xi. 8, and Babylon, that is Rome, in all the other passages and very commonly, ch. xiv. 8; xvii. 18; xviii. 10, &c.";—(4) Andreas, C. à Lapide, Bengel, Hofmann, Stern, &c. (appealing to ch. xi. 8, see the note in loc.) identify "the Great City" with Jerusalem; I. Williams (p. 311), in the same sense, takes "the Great City" to be "the Holy City" defiled, of which only a tenth part falls in ch. xi. 13. So too, according to (the Arabic) Hippolytus, Babylon is here the symbol of sinful Jerusalem; and his entire explanation depends on the assumption that the destruction of Jerusalem is described (see Ewald's account of his lost commentary, l.c., s. 10). Ribera (quoted by Stern, s. 362) notes that though this may seem to be said of Rome, nevertheless the Apostle clearly predicts in ch. xvii. that Rome is to be destroyed by the "Ten Kings" before the beginning of the reign of Antichrist, by whose aid Jerusalem is to become "Great."

The signification of this verse seems to be that, understood in the most general manner, "the Great City" is the centre of the World-power where "the throne of the Beast" (ver. 10) is always to be found, whatever the forms of evil may be under which that power is exhibited—whether unbelief, or superstition, or sensuality; and that by "Babylon," i.e., the great World-city as represented in the language of prophecy, the particular locality is symbolized where the throne of the Beast may exist at any one period of history:—it may be Rome as in St. John's day;—it may be Jerusalem;—it may be elsewhere at any subsequent time: see on ver. 10.

was divided into three parts.] Gr. "became into three parts," from the effects of the earthquake—cf. ch. xi. 13. It is to be noted that this division "into three parts" is spoken of, in connexion with Jerusalem, by Ezekiel (v. 2, 12). The number three probably refers to the threefold exercise of Satanic agency spoken of in ver. 13—so Ebrard. Hengst. to the same effect understands the three powers that bore rule in "the Great City," the Dragon, the Beast, "the False Prophet;" to each, as it were, a part. I. Williams takes the number "to indicate judgment on the Christian Church, inasmuch as the number three, and a third part, seems to mark the judgments on the Church under the Trumpets" (p. 311). Andreas saw in the "three parts" the Jewish, the Samaritan, and the Christian dwellers in Jerusalem (l.c., p. 95);—Hofmann (ii. s. 368) refers to the three hills, Zion, Akra, Bezetha, on which Jerusalem was built: he seems to identify the earthquake here, with that in ch. xi. 13;—Beda understands heathens, Jews, heretics;—and Bossuet the division of the Roman Empire under Honorius, Attalus, and Constantine, A.D. 407-411.

and the cities of the nations fell:] Not only the great centre of the World-power, but every lesser stronghold of evil. The "nations" may mean the "Gentiles" (see ch. xi. 2), as opposed to the Church, "the Israel of God"; or, if "the Great City" is taken to be Jerusalem (ch. xi. 8), "the cities of the nations" may be named in contrast to the City of the people of God.

Hengst. thinks that ver. 19 should end here.

20 And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone

At least, from here to the end of the verse the words are parenthetical; the fate of Babylon being reserved until ch. xvii.; xviii. Hengst. would extend the parenthesis to the end of ver. 20; perhaps rightly.

and Babylon the great] Babylon the Great, already introduced in ch. xiv. 8, is the locality where, at this crisis, "the throne of the Beast" is to be found.

In the land of Shinar the attempt was first made to array a World-empire against God (see Pusey on Zech. v. 11). Babylon, in its first form on the plain of Shinar, was the standing type of the idolatrous City. Shinar, as an ideal land of unholiness, is contrasted with Israel, "the Holy Land" (Zech. ii. 12). What was Nineveh under Sennacherib (2 Kings xix. 36) was Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings xxv. 1). The type remains, whatever may be the site of the World-city.

was had in remembrance in the sight of God.] Cf. Acts x. 31. Of this "the earthquake" was the token of warning. See ch. xvii. 1-5.

to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.] Gr. of the wrath of His indignation:—see ch. xiv. 8, 10; xix. 15.

The fall of Babylon is, according to De Burgh, "the principal event of the seventh Vial"; and the mention of it in this place he regards as a mere reference to what was announced already in ch. xiv. 8,—the "Vials" themselves with chapters xvii.-xix. being no more than a detail of the "Harvest" in ch. xiv.; accordingly we find ch. xix. closing, like ch. xiv., with the Vintage, or "treading of the wine press."

20. and [the] mountains were not found.] Compare the imagery under the sixth Seal, and especially ch. vi. 14. This verse may be taken as resuming the direct narrative in continuation of the words "the cities of the nations fell:" or, perhaps, it is to be included in the parenthesis—Babylon corresponding to the "Great City," and the islands and mountains to the "cities of the nations"; for islands like mountains (see on ch. vi. 14) denote kingdoms: "The difference is merely this, that, in the designation of kingdoms by islands, respect is had only to their separate existence; while they are called mountains in so far as they exercise dominion over others" (Hengst.):—cf. ch. xvii. 9, 10, "the Seven Heads are Seven Mountains," and "are Seven Kings."

"Islands and mountains," notes Burger,

"disappear, but the earth remains. The case is different in ch. xx. 11."

21. And great hail, [every stone] about the weight of a talent.] See on ch. xi. 19—the seventh Trumpet. We can scarcely refer here (with Stern and Alf.) to the seventh plague of Egypt (Ex. ix. 18, &c.), which is renewed in the first "Trumpet," ch. viii. 7:—this hail is preternatural. Wetstein, Düsterd., and others refer to Diodorus Siculus (xix. 45) who speaks of hailstones each a mina in weight (an Attic mina is the sixtieth part of an Attic talent) as being something marvellous; and also to Josephus (B. J., v. 6. 3), who tells of stones of the weight of a talent being hurled from the machines used in war. Hailstones are a symbol of Divine wrath (Isai. xxx. 30; Ezek. xiii. 11; cf. Josh. x. 11). This "Vial" seems to include all "the great tribulation" of ch. vii. 14; Matt. xxiv. 21.

someth down out of heaven upon men:] Some press the article here, "the men," as in vv. 8, 9,—viz., those who have "the mark of the Beast," see ver. 2.

and men blasphemed God] Or "the men," as before; not "all men." Bengel notes that in vv. 9, 11, where also men blaspheme, it is added that they "repented not." Of this nothing is said here; and he thence infers that the men were killed by the hail as the Amorites in Josh. x. 11. Hengst. interprets: "They no longer have time to repent; even when dying they can still blaspheme." This, however, scarcely follows from the text, which simply states that during this judgment men continued to blaspheme. Neither by the Vial-plagues here, nor by the Trumpet-plagues—see on ch. ix. 10—are men moved to repentance.

In ch. xi. 13, the effect of the judgment is different.

because of the plague of the hail;] On the prep. cf. ch. viii. 11.

is exceeding great.] From the fact that men continue to blaspheme; and also from the fact that in ch. xv. 1 we are told that with the "Seven Vials" the wrath of God shall be finished, Ebrard concludes that the seventh "Vial" does not end here. This Vial-plague he divides into two judgments: (a) The judgment on Babylon which occupies ch. xvii.-xviii.—chapters which merely expound ch. xvi. 19; (b) The judgment recorded in ch. xix. 11-21 (which, regarded from an opposite point of view, Ebrard calls "the marriage of the Lamb," ch. xix. 7). Be-about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

tween these two separate Visions ch. xix. 1-10 is the interlude. Ebrard adds in confirmation that as in ch. xvii. 1 it is "one of the Seven Angels which have the Seven Vials" who shows to the Seer the judgment on the Harlot Babylon; so in ch. xxi. 9, it is, in like manner, one of the same Seven Angels who shows him "the Bride, the wife of the Lamb," at the highest degree of her glory (l.c., ss. 453, 489, 528).

Burger considers that the events, which are comprehended with such brevity and in so summary a manner in vv. 18-21, are, on account of their importance, repeated and again described more minutely in the chapters which now follow. Chapters xvii.-xix. are related to these verses, just as ch. xv.-xvi. are related to ch. xiv. 19, 20. This connexion of ch. xvii.-xix. to ch. xvi. 18-21 explains why, in ch. xvii. 1, it is one of the Seven Vial-Angels who interprets for St. John the events which are comprised under the seventh Vial-Vision.

According to Reuss, Rome is punished provisionally, by the "earthquake," but its inhabitants persist in their impenitence. In ch. xvii. the closing scenes of the drama are exhibited.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XVI.

NOTE A ON CH. xvi.—THE VIAL-VISIONS.

The Ancient Expositors:—

In the remarks introductory to ch. xvi., as also on ch. viii. 6, some notice has been taken of what St. Irenæus has said respecting St. John's references to the Plagues of Egypt among the judgments announced in the Visions of the Trumpets and the Vials. He observes (iv. 30, p. 268) that the departure of Israel from Egypt "typus et imago fuit profectionis Ecclesiæ, quæ erat futura ex Gentibus: . . . siquis, autem, diligentius intendat his quæ a Prophetis dicuntur de fine, et quæcunque Joannes discipulus Domini vidit in Apocalypsi, inveniet easdem plagas universaliter accipere Gentes, quas tunc particulatim accepit Ægyptus."

For the reference of Victorinus to the Vials, see Note A on ch. ix., the substance of his interpretation being that the Vials are a final and more intense pouring out of the Trumpet-plagues. On ch. xv. 1, he merely writes:—"Semper enim ira Dei percutit populum contumacem septem plagis, id est perfecte, ut in Levitico (xxvi. 24) dicit, quæ in ultimo futuræ sunt cum Ecclesia de medio exierit." And of those who stand on the "Glassy Sea": "Id est, super baptismum suum stabiliter in fide constitisse, et confessionem in ore suam habentes, exsultaturos in regno coram Deo."—l.c., p. 62.

Prosper of Aquitaine (circ. A.D. 440, ap. Max. Bibl. Patr., t. viii., De Dim. Temp. c. xi.) refers to ch. xvi. 13:—the "three frogs," not mentioned by any earlier writer, he understands to be three unclean spirits, which will go through Asia, Africa, and Europe, "qui et signis persuadeant Antichristum ipsum esse Christum."

Andreas makes the Vials to signify: (1)

The ulcer of conscience—perhaps, too, an outward ulcer corresponding to that of the soul;—(2) The wars of Antichrist will stain the waters with blood;—(3) The second Vial is repeated. The Altar (ver. 7) at times stands for Christ, at times for Angelic powers;—(4) They who delay to come to God are constrained by the burning heat to repent;—(5) The Kingdom of Antichrist will be darkened, and deprived of the Sun of Righteousness; (6) Gog and Magog will come from Scythia; and Antichrist will cross the Euphrates from Persia to which the Tribe of Dan (whence springs Antichrist) was exiled, and with the aid of Kings and chiefs, will inflict on men bodily and spiritual death. (The unclean spirits (ver. 13) are likened to "frogs,"—διὰ τὸ ἰωδες αὐτῶν καὶ βορβόρωδες, καὶ ἀκάθαρτον, καὶ πρὸς τὰς διύγρους ἡδονὰς ἐρπυστικὸν τῶν πονηρῶν δυναμέων.);—(7) The Seventh Vial indicates convulsions, as once at Mount Sinai—Heb. xii. 27. "The Great City" is Jerusalem (πόλιν δὲ μεγάλην, οὐ πλήθει . . . ἀλλ' ἐν θεοσεβείᾳ . . . τὴν Ἱερουσαλὴμ ὑπολαμβάνομεν.—l.c., p. 95).

Modern Expositors:—

Speaking generally the early writers had referred the Vials to the future times of Antichrist. In more modern expositions we find the usual variety—"Preterist," "Historical," "Anti-Papal," "Futurist," and "Allegorical."

I. (a) Ordinary "Preterists":—

De Lyra saw in the Vials the events from the time of Hadrian to Godfrey of Bouillon (ob. A.D. 1100).

Grotius placed under the first six the events from Trajan to Constantine, and under the seventh the conquest of Italy by the Ostrogoths:—e.g. he takes the darkness (ver. 10) to mean the diminished splendour of the Roman Empire. The division of the City into three parts (ver. 19) he explains to mean the demolition by Totila (A.D. 544) of the third part of the walls of Rome.

Bossuet reads in the Vials the history of Valerian and Gallienus;—Wetstein that of Vitellius and Vespasian, applying ver. 2 to the sickness in the army of Vitellius; ver. 3 to the revolt of the fleet; and understanding the “three parts of the City” in ver. 19 to be “Vitelliani, Flaviani, et populus Romanus.”

Stuart: “The persecuting power of the unbelieving Jews ceased in the main with the destruction of Jerusalem. Hence, the tempest and earthquake which lay that place in ruins are the finale of the First Catastrophe” (ch. vi.—ch. xi. 19). The Second Catastrophe, or the destruction of the Roman persecuting power is contained in ch. xii.—ch. xix. The Vials in general follow the course of the Trumpets; and all “is a succession of annoyances.” The fifth Vial affects the throne of the Beast,—i.e., his Capital; the sixth brings in an overwhelming foreign enemy; the seventh paralyses the power of the Beast,—i.e., persecution is arrested when Nero dies.

(b) Rationalistic “Preterists”:—

Volkmar’s explanation rests on the Nero-Fable:—(1) The first Vial brought the pestilence in the time of Nero,—see Sueton. Nero, c. 39;—In (2) and (3) “the blood of saints and prophets” (ver. 6), is avenged;—(4) The conception of an Oriental. The scorching power of the sun torments sinners;—(5) This Vial is poured out on the throne of the Beast, the throne of Nero; the perplexity following whose death is typified by “darkness”—“Keiner vor sich sah, was kommen sollte”;—(6) The Kings of the Parthians combine with the returning Nero against Rome, in the first place (cf. ch. xvii. 16), and then against Zion (ch. xix. 19). The “frogs,” by their seductive or magical words, urge on the world to acknowledge Nero as the sole possessor of the throne of the Cæsars, viz. (i.) Satan offers the “Ten Kings” the sovereignty of the world (ch. xiii. 2; xvii. 16; Luke iv. 5, 6); (ii.) The chief Antichrist, the Beast, declares that he has received that throne as its sole legitimate occupier (ch. xiii. 2), and allures the “Kings” by the promise of glory to lend him their power (ch. xvii. 13); (iii.) The “False Prophet” (who according to Volkmar is St. Paul,—see on ch. xiii. 11), urges them, by an alleged doctrine as from God, to assist the returning Nero to destroy Rome, (ch. xiii. 15; Rom. xiii. 1–3);—(7) This Vial represents in symbol the final Judgment.

REUSS (Christ. Théol.): The first four Vials are poured out on the four parts of the Apocalyptic universe—earth, sea, rivers, sky; and this is summed up, as in the first four Seals and Trumpets, by describing the effect upon men of these plagues, viz. unbelief;—The fifth Vial is poured upon Rome;—The sixth on the Euphrates, making way “for the armies of the East, led by the Emperor Antichrist against Rome” (l.c., 379);—The seventh introduces the voice which proclaims that the time of waiting is passed.

Renan adds nothing special to this exposition of Reuss: “The cycle of preludes,” he proceeds, “is completed: nothing more remains than to see the judgment of God unfold itself. The Seer makes us first assist at the judgment of the greatest of all the guilty—the City of Rome (ch. xvii.)”—p. 429.

II. “Historical” Expositors:—

According to Bullinger in the first six Vials, the history is given of events from A.D. 1494 to his own time, A.D. 1516:—Brightman counted the first three from the date of Ferdinand and Isabella to his own time, A.D. 1590;—Mede, considering the Vials to predict events by which the Papal power has been diminished, interprets the first Vial as fulfilled in the history of the Waldenses and Albigenses; and the second in the Reformation. There his exposition of this Vision ends; and he considered the remaining five Vials to be unfulfilled when he wrote, circa A.D. 1600:—According to Bengel (see on ver. 17):—The first Vial concerns Asia. The second Europe. The third, Africa, especially Egypt. The fourth, “upon the Sun,” the whole world. The fifth, “upon the throne of the Beast,” affects the Beast’s devotees, apostate Christians. The sixth affects the nations near the Euphrates,—the Turks, if not already destroyed: the Mohammedan “Kings of the East” do not bring the plagues but rush into them. By this time the Dragon and the Two Beasts are leagued together, and each sends forth a spirit of his own which obscures every idea of God and gathers “Kings” to the service of their respective masters (ver. 12). The seventh concerns Antichrist and is coincident with the great plague with which the seventh Trumpet ends. The last raging of Antichrist lasts for three and a half common years, from 1832 to 1836, the earthquake of ver. 18 reducing the earth to a state fit for the good things which are to follow (see Introd. § 11, (b), IV.).

III. “Anti-Papal” Expositors:—

Vitringa: (1) In the first Vial he sees the Waldenses detecting the ulcers of the Church:—(2) In the second the wars of the Popes and the Emperors (A.D. 1211—A.D. 1506): but the age of Lewis the Bavarian (Cent. xiv.) is the time chiefly indicated, when God avenged “sanguinem innocuorum Albigen-sium . . . non longe ante illud tempus effusum” (p. 705);—(3) Then comes the vengeance taken by Ziska and Procopius for the blood shed in accordance with the decrees of the Council of Constance (A.D. 1414);—(4) The calamities inflicted on Italy, towards the close of Cent. xv., by Charles VIII., Lewis XII., and Francis I.;—(5) The darkness cast over the Papacy by the Reformation;—(6) the Euphrates means the Kingdom of France exhausted or dried up by the wars of Lewis XIV., and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes; so that opportunities are given to “the Kings from the sun-rising,” i.e., kings of a purer faith, to complete the work of the Reformation (p. 724); the “three frogs” signifying the Order of Jesuits (p. 728), and Ar-Mageddon, or the “Mountain of destruction,” the scene of the Christ’s future conflict;—(7) The effect of the seventh Vial on the air is not clearly told; but it doubtless has the same effects as the fourth and fifth, and thus signifies the obscuration in the mystical heaven of that earth over which the Beast claims to rule.

Bishop Wordsworth:—(1) The Vials of God’s wrath for the desecration of Holy Things [viz. the enforced celibacy of the Clergy; the ministry of the Confessional; &c.] have been poured on the Papal Empire, and have produced a loathsome disease like the boils of Egypt;—(2) The second Vial is explained by ch. xvii. 1, the “sea” being “the many waters” of ch. xvii. 1, 15;—(3) The third “foretold calamities to be inflicted on the resources of the Papacy;”—(4) “The meridian glory of this spiritual Empire has scorched the people of the Romagna and of Italy by the glare of its rays;”—(5) As in the fourth Vial “the usurpations and corruptions of the Papacy have already produced a baneful harvest of Infidelity and Blasphemy,” so in the fifth, “they did not repent from their deeds; but their hearts were hardened like that of Pharaoh, Ex. x. 27;”—(6) “The tide of the Papal Euphrates, which has long impeded the march of the Kings of the East [“the Saints”—see on ver. 12], is already ebbing and will one day be dried up, and open a way for them;”—(7) The last Vial brings with it a judgment on the mystical Babylon, which is the Capital City of the Empire of the Beast. Yet the Beast itself, and its ally the False Prophet, will not be destroyed with the fall of Babylon; and will be arrayed against Christ, in the conflict of Ar-Mageddon.

Elliott:—(1) The first Vial is the outbreak of social and moral evil which marked the French Revolution of 1789: this “sore” is traceable to the corruptions of the Papal system, the symbolic ulcer being a plague springing from the symbolic Egypt (ch. xi. 8), Papal Rome;—(2) As under the second Trumpet the Vandals fell upon the maritime provinces of Rome, so under the second Vial, England destroyed the maritime power of the countries of Papal Christendom;—(3) The third denotes the French Revolutionary wars along the rivers Rhine, Danube, Po;—(4) The darkening the Imperial sun of Papal Christendom by the abolition in 1806 of the title “Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire;”—(5) The solution of the great question ‘when do the 1260 years (ch. xi. 3) come to an end?’ is involved in the meaning of the fifth Vial (see Note B on ch. xi. 2). The Popedom-favouring Code of Justinian was first promulgated A.D. 529–533; and it was superseded by new anti-Papal Codes which originated from the French Revolution of 1789–1793:—the full outpouring of the fifth Vial taking place when, in A.D. 1809, the Pope’s temporal authority over the Roman States was abolished by Napoleon;—(6) Under the sixth Vial, the Euphrates, representing the same Turkish powers as under the sixth Trumpet (ch. ix. 13), is “dried up.” During the French Revolution the Turkish Empire remained comparatively uninjured; but in A.D. 1820 Moldavia, Wallachia, Greece, emerged from it as Christian principalities; nor has the drying up yet ceased. The Future must interpret the prophetic words “that the way of the Kings from the East (perhaps the Jews) might be prepared.”

At this point Elliott drops the veil.

Tyso, as before, gives a list of “Historical” expositors of the Vials:—

Vials.	De Lyra.	Mede.	R. Fleming.	Daubuz.	Frere.	G.S. Faber.	Th. Scott.	Cunninghame.	Keith.
	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	Began A.D.
1	Pope Adrian I.—772 .	1160 [see above]	1517	1000	1792	1792	Not yet poured out .	1792	1789
2	Charles the Great—800		1566	1096	1793	1792		The others are syn-chronical and will end about A.D. 1840	1793
3	Charles the Great—800		1617	1226	1796	1792			1796
4	Pope Leo III.—800 .		1648	1227	1800	1804			1800
5	Emperor Otto—962 .		1794	1251	1815	1808			1814
6			1848	1315	1820	1821			1820
7			1900	1517	1830

Mr. Thos. Scott (on ch. xv. 1) writes thus:—

"This chapter introduces the Seven Vials, all of which fall under the seventh Trumpet, as the Seven Trumpets were included under the seventh Seal: for they contain 'the seven last plagues' in which the wrath of God is filled up These plagues must, therefore, be coincident with the last Woe-Trumpet [ch. xi. 14], in great measure at least." No writer, adds Mr. Scott, "as it appears to me, has yet (A.D. 1815) succeeded in fixing the time when the 1260 years of the reign of the Beast will end:" "None seem to have proved that they will terminate more early than A.D. 1840; while many think they will not end till A.D. 2000. But whether sooner or later, it seems probable that the time is not arrived: and, therefore, that 'the pouring out of the Vials,' has not yet begun."

IV. "Futurist" Expositors:—

Todd considers the Vision of the "Seven Vials" to be supplemental to that in ch. xiv., and to presuppose it. It begins after the beginning of the former Vision (see ch. xv. 2), and ends "at a period short of the termination of the former Visions, bringing us at its conclusion, not to the great Day of final account, but to the fall of Babylon, and the consequences of that event which are immediately to usher in the Day of Christ's Coming" (ch. xi. 19-21).—p. 75.

De Burgh writes thus of the Vials: "I need not state that I consider them one and all as unfulfilled."—p. 299. "The Kings of the East" in the sixth Vial are "the Jewish people." "The event predicted is the general restoration which synchronizes with the Second Coming of their Messiah, and the downfall of the Anti-Messiah. One point, I think this mention of the Euphrates confirms, namely, that the restoration from Babylon was never completed." The people returned and the Temple was rebuilt, but no return was there of the things which alone constituted the boast of the nation; and yet this we are told is the restoration which forms the burden of prophecy" (p. 303). As to the relation of the Vials to the preceding Visions, he agrees with Todd; and adds: "And now at length [viz. at the seventh Vial] we are come to that place in this prophetic Book from whence all expositors are agreed (?) that the prophecy is as yet unfulfilled."—p. 307.

V. "Allegorical" Expositors:—

I. Williams: (1) As the first Seal called forth the elect from impenitent Jerusalem; and as the first Trumpet called out the true Israel of God from the ruins of Israel and of Rome; so the first Vial is poured on those Christians who had worshipped the Beast or his image;—(2) The second Seal was on the land of Judea, the second Vial is on the sea of the nations: there is a "dividing of the waters from the waters" (Gen. i. 6);—(3) "The fountains of waters" are the Scriptures, "the rivers" are the doctrines that flow from them; but now (as under the third Trumpet Arianism turned the waters into "wormwood") "the rivers and fountains are converted, like the river of Egypt, into blood" (p. 290);—(4) As the fourth Trumpet denoted the spiritual darkness which preceded Mohammedanism, in the fourth Vial "there is neither moon nor stars, neither Church nor saints, but the sun with no genial, but burning heat:" "in systems of rationalism, socialism, and spiritual republicanism, the Author of life and healing is held in blasphemy;"—(5) This cannot be limited to heathen or Christian Rome, or to the mystic Babylon; it may mean the Egyptian darkness on the throne and kingdom of the Beast. The period of the fifth Vial is the more entire reign of Antichrist;—(6) As the previous Vial was full of darkness, in the sixth Vial "is seen, as it were, a streak of Eastern light dawning upon that night: the Coming from the rising of the sun. But only faintly alluded to, for all the Vials speak of judgment;"—(7) The seventh Vial seems to be the utter overthrow of Satan: nothing is there stated but all is finished—γέγονε.

NOTE B ON CH. xvi. 16.—AR-MAGEDDON, HAR-MAGEDON.

'Αρμαγεδών, "Har-Magedon," Heb. מִגְדוֹן i.e., "Mountain of Megiddo." The reading 'Αρμαγεδών, Heb. מִגְדוֹן עַר, gives "City of Megiddo." On מִגְדוֹן Gesenius notes, "fort. locus turmarum, a מִגְדוֹן, גִּדּוֹן." The derivation given by Drusius is followed by many: "חרמה = excidium, et גִּדּוֹן = exercitus, or turma illorum."

For the name Megiddo, standing alone, see Josh. xii. 21; Judges i. 27; 1 Kings iv. 12; ix. 15; 2 Kings ix. 27; xxiii. 29.

In the LXX. we find as follows:—Judges v. 19, ἐπὶ ὕδατι Μαγεδδών. In Zech. xii. 11 (בִּקְעַת מִגְדוֹן, i.e., "in the valley of Megiddon") ἐν πεδίῳ ἐκκοιτομένου;—2 Chron. xxxv. 22 (the Hebrew again denoting "in the valley") ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ Μαγεδδών;—1 Kings xxiii. 30 (as the Hebrew), ἐν καὶ Μαγεδδών. St. John has given (in Har-Magedon) the Greek equivalent of "Mountain of Megiddo" (הַר מִגְדוֹן, see Stanley, Sinai and Pal., ch. ix.¹); or of "City of Megiddo" (ער מגידו). The former of these two significations (which gives the spiritus asper, ἀρμαγεδών) agrees with the interpretation given by Andreas (see also Arethas, ap. Cramer, Catena, pp. 420, 552), τὸ δὲ Ἀρμαγεδών διακοπή ἢ διακοπτομένη ἐρμηνεύεται (l.c., p. 93). This falls in with the rendering by the LXX. of Zech. xii. 11; and means "the cutting off of an enemy," agreeing with the derivation given above after Drusius. In that explanation, in place of חרמה, the word חרם is suggested—a word which is rendered in Mal. iv. 6, "a curse," or, as Gesenius translates, "devotio rei ad internecionem:" in Hab. i. 16, 17, it means "a net." Referring to Judges v. 19, and 2 Chron. xxxv. 22, (LXX.) Grimm writes: "Verum enimvero quum illæ duæ clades factæ esse dicantur ἐπὶ ὄρει et ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ, non intelligitur quid sibi velit mons Megiddo, qui alius esse non potest nisi Carmel. Quapropter equidem longe facilius et probabilius L. Capellum conjecisse censeo, Ἀρμαγεδών = Ἀρμαγεδών compositum esse e חרמה, excidium, et מגידו." For other explanations see the Critici Sacri.

¹ "Even if the aspirate were omitted," notes Dean Stanley (ibid.) "it is analogous to the case of Ar Gerizim." And in his note on ch. v. he writes: "The meeting with Melchizedek (Gen. xiv. 17, 18) is expressly stated in the fragment

Ewald (s. 293) considers it "beyond any doubt" that Rome is meant by Ar-Magedon, for it is to Rome that the "Kings" are gathered together (ch. xiv. 8; xvii. 16); and therefore, according to ch. xiii. 18, we must calculate by the Hebrew letters. Now the letters of Ar-Magedon (ארמגדון) give as their sum 304, which number is also given by "Rome the great," "Romab bagedolah" (רומה הגדולה): "therefore every good thinker and calculator can most accurately ("aufs genaueste") know what place is really meant" (s. 294).¹ In proof he notes that the Rabbins count יבא שילה (Gen. xlix. 10), and find it equal to משיח, or Messiah, making up 358. Ewald is followed (with a difference) by the writer in Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon (art. Apokalypse) who writes: "Ha-of Theodotus, preserved by Eusebius (Præp. Ev. ix. 22), to have occurred in 'Ar Gerizim,' the 'Mountain of the Most High.' It is clear that this, as in the analogous case of Ar-Mageddon, is simply the Greek version of 'the mountain of Gerizim.'" margedon, more correctly Hamargedol, for the word is a Cabbalistic anagram for 'Roma baggedola,' 'Roma Magna.'"

¹ Ewald grants that the word may come from מנדר, although the Mountain of Megiddo is not found in the O. T. If so Mount Tabor would suit Judges v. 19.

Had the etymology of the word "Har-Magedon" any significance, it would doubtless have been translated now by St. John, as he has translated Abaddon in ch. ix. 11; although some writers think that the expression "in the Hebrew tongue" clearly refers us to the etymology:—Thus De Wette adopts the meaning assigned by Drusius, "the destruction of their troop;" and he supposes that ver. 12 is to be completed from ch. xvii. 16, the Kings of the East (i.e., of Parthia) marching with Nero to Rome, and after its destruction returning with the kings of the West to Palestine. To the same effect Renan (p. 428):—In all this symbolism the Seer describes "an infernal plan (1 Kings xxii. 20, &c.) conceived between Satan, Nero, and that counsellor of Nero who has already figured under the form of the second Beast." In Har-Magedon Renan admits the reference to Zech. xii. 11; but, he adds, "the particular enigma of the name Har-Magedon is for us undecipherable." Züllig sets aside the reference to the battle-field near Megiddo (except as a paronomasia); he dwells upon the meaning of the syllable Har, which denotes a mountain, and he takes Magedon to signify "an assemblage of warlike hosts:"—he accordingly combines the Mount of Olives (Zech. xiv. 4) with (Joel iii. 2) "the valley of Jehoshaphat;" and this scene beside the walls of Jerusalem (see 2 Kings xxiii. 13, Marg.), he takes to be "Har-Magedon"—"the mountain region, where these hosts assemble." Nearly to the same effect is the explanation of Vitranga (p. 731). Dr. Pusey, too (on Joel iii. 2, 12) comparing Matt. xxv. 30, 31 with Joel iii. 12, and adopting the opinion that Christ is to descend to Judgment "over this valley of Jehosaphat," would place the valley between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, "uniting as it were Mount Calvary and Olivet,"—in other words, understanding Joel to mean the locality known in our Lord's time as "the valley of Kidron." It is to be noted, however, that not until after the time of Eusebius (Onomast., p. 52:—κοιλὰς Ἰωσαφάτ) was this spot known in Christian literature as "the valley of Jehosaphat."—see Winer, R. W. B., art. Josaphat.

CHAPTER XVII.

3, 4 A woman arrayed in purple and scarlet, with a golden cup in her hand, sitteth upon the beast, 5 which is great Babylon, the mother of all abominations. 9 The interpretation of the seven heads, 12 and the ten horns. 8 The punishment of the whore. 14 The victory of the Lamb.

[Ver 1 om. μοι.—ἐπὶ ὕδατων πολλῶν. Ver 3 γέμοντι [or γέμον τὰ] ὀνόματα.—[After ver. 3 P inserts ver. 18 which is also retained in its proper place: the scribe has here copied the commentary of Andreas (l. c., p. 97) where ver. 18 is quoted]. Ver. 4 ἦν περιβεβλημένη, πορφυροῦν κ. κόκκινον.—τὰ ἀκάθαρτα τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς [So 1. The form ἀκαθάρτης in T. R. troubled Bengel, Wetstein, and Matthæi; but it is a formation of Erasmus without any authority (Delitzsch, s. 42)]. Ver. 8 τὸ θηρίον.—[A reads ὑπάγει, see ver. 11].—τὸ ὄνομα [cf. ch. xiii. 8].—βλεπόντων.—ὅτι ἦν.—καὶ παρέσται [T. R. has καίπερ ἐστίν, and is followed by A. V. (“and yet is”); and by Luther, (“wiewohl es doch ist”): but this reading has no authority. It results from Er. having so printed the text of 1 which distinctly exhibits καὶ παρέσται, this accentuation rendering the reading of Er. impossible. The Vulg. seems to omit the words, merely giving, “Videntes bestiam quæ erat, et non est;” but it continues at ver. 9, “Et hic est sensus,” there being no καί in the text. Griesbach notes, “καὶ παρέσται. ἴδε ὁ νοῦς. Et hic est sensus, Vulg. Aeth.” Mede on καὶ παρέσται says: “Sic lego cum ed. Complutensi, Primasio, et Syro interprete” (p. 524). Bengel notes that καίπερ is nowhere used by St. John; and never elsewhere in the N. T. except with a participle]. Ver. 10 om. καί before δ εἰς. Ver. 13 διδῶσιν. Ver. 16 καὶ τὸ θηρίον [So 1 reads; but Er. changed this into the ἐπὶ τὸ θηρίον of the T. R., after the Vulg. “in bestia”]. Ver. 17 τελεσθήσονται οἱ λόγοι [So 1 reads; but Er. without any authority changed his text into the τελεσθῇ τὰ ῥήματα as adopted in T. R.].]

The Seventh chief Vision of the Revelation Proper (ch. xvii. 1—xxii. 5) begins here:—see the remarks introductory to ch. xv.

This series of Visions extends to ch. xxii. 5; and now takes up the Vision of the “Seven Vials” (ch. xv. 1—xvi. 21) where the seventh Vial seemed to close. The appearance on the scene in the first verse (as in ch. xxi. 9) of “one of the Seven Angels which had the Seven Vials” (see on ch. xvi. 21) connects this Vision with that which precedes; just as the introduction of one of the Four Living Beings in ch. xv. 7, when the “Seven Angels” enter, connects the Vial-Visions with ch. iv. 1—the Vision with which the Revelation Proper opens. Again, as the seventh Trumpet (ch. xi. 15—19) is followed in ch. xii.—xiii. by the Visions which exhibit the history and character of the “Woman”—i.e., the Church, the Dragon, the Beast, and the “False Prophet,” so now the seventh Vial is followed by a Vision in which the Seer beholds the destruction of the Harlot (ch. xviii.)—introduced in direct contrast to the Church—and of the same three enemies of God (ch. xix. 20; xx. 10). This enmity had been manifested in bloodshed, persecution, seduction, and blasphemy (see ch. xvi. 6; xiii. 7, 12; xiv. 8; xvi. 9, 11, 21): and here, in ch. xvii.,—a chapter which is introductory, and which alone in the Apoc. is of direct interpretation,—this enmity is represented, in ver. 3, under the two connected forms of the antichristian World-power or Beast, and the antichristian World-city or Harlot—the seat of the Beast’s authority.

Babylon had already been introduced in ch.

xiv. 8, and ch. xvi. 19; but not until now is the import of the symbol explained. In vv. 15–18, the Angel unfolds why, and by what means, the Harlot receives the judgment which is described in ch. xviii. The Beast had, in like manner, been already introduced in ch. xi. 7 and ch. xiii. 1; and now, in this introductory chapter, the import of this symbol also is declared (vv. 8–13), as well as why and by what means (ver. 14) the destruction of his power is to be accomplished. And thus the sequel is described of the “Seven plagues which are the last,” wherein “is finished the wrath of God” (ch. xv. 1). After the destruction of the three great enemies of God, follows the universal Judgment (ch. xx. 11–15); and then—announcing that evil shall not triumph for ever—follow the glories of the New Jerusalem (ch. xxi. 1–xxii. 5).

CHAP. XVII.—THE HARLOT AND THE BEAST.

For the meanings assigned to Babylon or the Harlot, viz. I. (a) Rome Pagan, as in St. John’s day; (b) Rome which shall become Pagan hereafter;—II. Rome Papal;—III. Jerusalem;—IV. the World-City or seat of the World-power, wherever that power may be concentrated at any period of history,—see on ch. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; and Note B at the end of this chapter. For the meanings assigned to the Beast, viz. (1) The Roman Empire in St. John’s day;—(2) The Papacy;—(3) The World-power of which Rome is the symbol;—(4) The World-power, all reference to Rome being excluded;—(5) The fulfil-

AND there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto ment of the symbol by Nero,—see the remarks introductory to ch. xiii.; and also Notes D and E at the end of this chapter.

According to Ebrard (in Herzog's Real-Encycl.) it is not until now that Babylon—the false Lamb of ch. xiii. 11, or the Papacy in its ecclesiastical character—is presented as the Harlot, or Apostate Church: see the remarks introductory to ch. xiii. The Reformers, Ebrard thinks, were in error when they identified this Babylon with the Antichrist of Daniel (ch. vii.), and of St. Paul (2 Thess. ii.); because Antichrist (see vv. 8, 11) is rather identical with a kingdom of open apostasy wherein even the semblance of Christianity is cast off,—an infidel ruler who is to execute judgment on the Harlot, or Babylon:—see vv. 13, 16, 17.

As Bengel notes, ch. xvii. is divided into three parts by the three addresses of the Angel, vv. 1, 7, 15: (1) The Harlot and the Beast;—(2) The signification of the symbolism;—(3) The Judgment of the great Harlot.

THE HARLOT (1-6).

1. And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials,] See ch. xv. 1, 7. Which of the “Seven” is left undetermined, cf. ch. vi. 1:—Eichhorn decides that it is the first; others say the seventh, as Babylon, under the seventh Vial (see ch. xvi. 19), is here the theme. As the judgment on Babylon is now minutely described, one of the Angels who have the “Vials” is, not unnaturally, the ministering Angel employed; but it does not thence follow whether the Vision of this chapter, which is altogether explanatory, comes after, or precedes, or synchronizes with the Vial-Visions:—see on ch. xv. 1; xxi. 9. Bengel decides that the “Vials” have now been poured out;—Hengst. decides that the “Vials” are still full.

It is also to be noted that as one of the “Seven Angels” now shows to the Seer the “Harlot;” so, in ch. xxi. 9, one of the same group shows to him the “Bride.”

and spake with me, saying,] Omit “unto me”—see vv. 11.

Come hither,] As in ch. xxi. 9 (cf. John xi. 43) the adverb (δεῦπο) is here used, not the verb “Come,” as in ch. vi. 1, 3, 5.

I will show thee the judgment] As Düsterdieck points out, “the judgment” is not described in this chapter—nay, in ver. 16 we are clearly told that it is still future. It follows in ch. xviii. The “Harlot” is here exhibited, not as judged, but as existing in her antichristian form: and this is required, because the special Vision of the World-city, as distinguished from the World-power in general, is a new revelation.

Hengst. would regard the judgment of the “Harlot,” as the proper theme of ch. xvii., where the “wilderness” (ver. 3) denotes her desolation, and where the symbol is explained in ver. 16. Her guilt had been already told, not only in ch. xiv. 8, but in ch. xiii. 7, 8 where the Church is persecuted by the Roman power—the sixth Head of the Beast: “The great Harlot is only so far different from the sixth Head, as this Head denotes the Roman power, while the Harlot is the City of Rome.”

of the great harlot] I.e., Babylon (ver. 5) which had been already referred to in ch. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; and which, as explained in ver. 18, is “the Great City,” or heathen Rome personified,—in other words, the chief centre of the God-opposing World-power, “the throne of the Beast” (ch. xvi. 10). Why Babylon, Rome, the World-city of any period, is called “the great Harlot” is clear from ch. xiv. 8. This idea is expressed more fully in ver. 2.

We are to observe that St. John does not introduce here the idea of “adultery,” which is founded on the fact of “marriage” (cf. Ezek. xvi. 38; xxiii. 37, 45), or covenant-relationship. In Scripture, indeed, the term ‘adultery’ is never applied to a heathen kingdom” (see on ch. ii. 22):—in such a case the term “harlot” is used, signifying that seductive influence or crafty policy which seeks to draw others into subjection. The expressions “harlot” and “fornication” are used in this sense in the Old Test. with reference to World-cities—e.g. in Isai. xxiii. 15-18 to Tyre; and in Nah. iii. 4 to Nineveh. On this latter text Dr. Pusey writes: “Mostly, idolatries and estrangement from God are spoken of as whoredoms, only in respect of those who, having been taken by God as His own, forsook Him for false gods. But Jezebel, too, of whose offences Jehu speaks under the same two titles [‘witchcrafts’ and ‘whoredoms’] (2 Kings ix. 22) was a heathen. . . . Of this sin, World-Empires, such as Nineveh were the concentration. Their being was one vast idolatry of self and of the god of this world” (l. c., p. 387). As to St. John’s usage, the words of Rev. ii. 14 are decisive; and so is his further use of the word “fornication” in connection with Jezebel in ch. ii. 20, 21. Hence it follows that there is no difficulty whatever in applying the term “harlot” to the world at large; or to a Pagan city; or, thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters :

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and as stated above, to the godless centre of the World-power—the World-City.

This result nevertheless is warmly contested; and the chief reason assigned is this, that "harlotry symbolizes uniformly the apostasy of God's Church" (Auberlen, l. c., p. 279). The word "harlot," writes Words., is used "at least fifty times to describe the spiritual fornication, that is, the corrupt doctrine and practice of the Churches of Israel and Judah;" or as Alf. notes: "In eighteen places out of twenty-one where the figure occurs, such is its import," viz., to be the prophetic emblem of "God's Church and people that had forsaken Him." . . . "In three places only is the word applied to heathen cities: viz. in Isai. xxiii. 15, 16 to Tyre; and in Nah. iii. 4 to Nineveh:"—see also I. Williams, pp. 314-320.

The general use of this figure in the O. T. is not disputed. The question merely is, what is the sense here? and to this an answer has been given above. Auberlen indeed asserts that "'Harlot' means, in the whole Old and New Test., the apostate Church of God" (p. 278); and again: "It is not only a church here, and a church there; but Christendom as a whole, even as Israel, as a whole, had become a Harlot. The true believers are hidden and dispersed; the invisible Church is within the visible" (p. 290).

It is hard to understand how such statements can be made in the face of the Lord's promise, "Lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world,"—especially hard is it if we remember how the Church is described when she appears again after ch. xii., as the "Bride," as the "New Jerusalem" (ch. xix. 7, 8; xxi. 2, 9, 10; xxii. 17; cf. John iii. 29). Nor does the imagination of an "invisible" Church get over the difficulty,— "The Woman is the invisible Church; the Harlot is the visible Church" (Auberlen, p. 276); for our Lord has also said "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid" (Matt. v. 14).

By applying this passage to 'a Christian church' (I. Williams, p. 318; Words.), or to 'an apostate and faithless church' (Alf.), such contradictions may, of course, be avoided. The possibility of an application to some section of the Christian body is at once to be admitted—in the sense of Matt. xiii. 47-50: and thus Words. contrasts what he regards as a description of "a faithless Church" (ch. xvii. 1, 3), with "the words which describe the faithful Church in glory (ch. xxi. 9, 10)." As stated on ch. xvi. 19, the forms of evil symbolized by the World-city or "Harlot" may be unbelief, or superstition, or sensuality; in any of which sins a section of the Church Catholic may share with the God-opposing world:—but it is not in accordance with Scripture to speak, with Auberlen, of "the apostate Church of God."

Burger mentions this singular misapprehension, merely for the purpose of indicating "to what arbitrary interpretations want of attention to the connexion of the Apocalyptic symbols, and the prepossessions of a lively imagination can lead" (s. 263).

that sitteth on many waters;] (See vv. 11.). This is said of Babylon in Jer. li. 13.

The wealth of Babylon was caused not merely by the Euphrates, "but by a vast system of canals" (see on Jer. li. 13). Hengst. points out that "waters" "in the symbolical language of Scripture are an image of prosperity" (Hos. xiii. 15); and in Ps. cvii. 33, 34, it is "said in reference to Babylon, he causes the waters of her well-being and prosperity to become dry:"—for an allusion to this type see ch. xviii. 17.

The meaning which the imagery of this verse symbolizes is explained in ver. 15:—the "Harlot" "sitteth on many nations," cf. ch. xiii. 3, 7, 12, 16. Nah. ii. 8 is usually explained to mean the large population of Nineveh. Bleek's comment on this place, however, is that as the site of Babylon was on the Euphrates, so that of the "New Babylon," Rome, is on the Tiber. And this, he adds, excludes the opinion of Züllig that Jerusalem is meant.

2. with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication,] The "kings" represent their subjects (as in ch. xvi. 14) who yield to the seductions of the great World-city.

Understanding the passage literally, writers (e. g. Vitranga, p. 752; Words.; &c.) often ask, "If this be pagan Rome, who and what are these 'kings,' and what is indicated by her having been the object of their lustful desires?" Alford answers for this school: "I do not hesitate . . . to maintain that interpretation which regards papal and not pagan Rome as pointed out by the Harlot of this Vision." On a different principle, Renan replies: "The Herods, Tiridates king of Armenia, &c., all eager to visit Rome, there to give festivals, to pay her their court" (p. 430); and to the same effect, Hengst. concludes: "Rome [the pagan city of Rome] is 'the great Harlot' that allures the kings into this commerce, as it is said of Tyre in Isai. xxiii. 17." See Note B at the end of this chapter.

and they that inhabit the earth were the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

3 So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured made drunken] (The verb, καταικέω, with an accus. and without a preposition following, is found only here in the Apoc.; cf. Acts xix. 10, 17:—for the usual form, viz. ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, see ch. iii. 10. The verb is placed absolutely in ch. ii. 13). The imagery of this passage is applied to Babylon in Jer. li. 7; see ch. xiv. 8. Both clauses of the verse are combined in ch. xviii. 3.

3. And he carried me away] Cf. ch. xxi. 10.

in the Spirit] See on ch. i. 10. The Vision of ch. xvi. 19 is now to be explained; and for this end a new spiritual condition of the Seer, and a new scene are required; compare ch. iv. 2.

into a wilderness:] So Wordsworth and Düsterd. render with due attention to the absence of the article.

Many (e. g. Andr., Ewald, De Wette, Hengst., Bleek, Düsterd.) see in these words a reference to the approaching, but still future (see on ver. 1) desolation of the "Harlot" (ἑρημὸν, ἡρημωμένην, ver. 16; ch. xviii. 2, 17, 19). Hence we can understand why the "Harlot," in all her magnificence, is beheld by the Seer in "a wilderness." In Jer. l., li., it is denounced that Babylon shall "become a desolation." In Isai. xxi. 1, Babylon, on account of her approaching desolation, is called "the desert of the sea." What is said here of Babylon, holds substantially in respect to every World-power that is opposed to God, and treads in her footsteps (Hengst.). It is to be observed, also, that in this single instance in the New Testament, do we find the word signifying "wilderness" without the article (cf. ch. xii. 6, 14). This fact indicates that we cannot identify this locality with the wilderness in ch. xii. 6, 16; and also proves (see below) that the "Woman" of ch. xii. is not to be identified with the "Harlot" here. On the other hand, Alford maintains that "the wilderness" is the true rendering, observing that "it may be questioned whether the expressly indefinite rendering, 'a wilderness' is ever justifiable."

By the word "wilderness" in this place Beda understands "divinitatis absentia;"—Cocceius that part of the world where, in St. John's day, persecution and idolatry prevailed;—Vitranga (p. 755) sees a reference to Isai. xxi. 1, "the desert of the sea," and also to ver. 15, where the "waters" of ver. 1 are explained to mean "peoples;" and he takes the word to signify, as in Ezek. xx. 35, "the wilderness of the people;"—Bengel notes:

New Test.—VOL. IV.

"Europe, especially Italy;"—Words.: "She is a Great City, and yet in a wilderness," literally, the Roman Campagna; spiritually, "Rome is not like a fruitful field of the Lord, but may be compared to a wilderness."

and I saw a woman] The absence of the article here, and its insertion in ver. 15 ("the Harlot") are parallel to the absence of the article in ch. xii. 1, and its insertion vv. 4, 6, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. In fact the "woman" or "Harlot" here is not to be identified with, but is rather to be contrasted with, the "Woman," or the Church, in ch. xii.,—just as a "wilderness" in this verse is not "the wilderness" in ch. xii. 6, 14. Auberlen, however, as already stated, regards the "woman" in both places to be the same: "The Harlot," he writes, "as described in ch. xvii. . . . is identical with the Woman who, we saw in ch. xii., is a symbolical representation of the Church of God in the world. This Woman has become a harlot" (p. 274). And he would explain the omission of the article before "Wilderness," "Woman," "Beast," by saying that while identical with "the Wilderness" (ch. xii. 6, 14), the "Woman" (ch. xii. 1) and the "Beast" (ch. xiii. 1), yet, in a sense, these terms are not identical:—"The heathen world, the Church, and the World-power, have undergone great changes, so much so that John can scarcely recognize them, and sees 'a Beast,' 'a Woman,' 'a Wilderness'" (p. 277). As to this result see on ver. 1; where the restriction to "a Church" has been noticed:—e.g., I. Williams says: "To the wilderness the Apostolic Woman had fled, and now we are carried there and see her not; but instead the purple Harlot" (p. 321): he also notes that "the Apocalypse carefully abstains from using the name of 'Jerusalem' for this false Church" (p. 320).

sitting upon a scarlet-coloured beast,] The Beast now presents some features different from those described in ch. xiii., because the "Harlot," or World-city, is expressly to be distinguished from the Beast, or World-power. "This Beast is introduced as if a new appearance: but its identity with that mentioned before, ch. xiii. 1 ff., is plain as the description goes onward" (Alf.). Henceforward he is always spoken of as "the Beast:" and the war in vv. 12-14, is evidently that which is described in ch. xix. 19; and ch. xix. 20 can refer only to ch. xiii. There is no foundation for the opinion of Ebrard and Züllig—summed up in Note C on ch. xi. 7—that the Beast of ch. xiii. 1 is not the Beast beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

A A A

4 And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and ^{Gr.} decked ^{guilt.}

of this chapter. The differences in the details depend on the circumstances peculiar to each description; and a formal identification is omitted here because the Seer dwells in this clause not on the Beast, but on the "woman" who sits upon him. The Beast is now indicated in a cursory manner, though in terms sufficient to mark the connexion with ch. xiii. The full description is reserved for ver. 8, &c.

"Scarlet-coloured:"—The three colours of the Tabernacle were blue, purple, and scarlet—see the note on Ex. xxv. 4.

The word κόκκινος is derived from coccus, the Kermes berry (as it was supposed); but the Kermes (Arab. little worm) was an insect found in Asia, the Coccus ilicis of Linnæus. They were long taken for the seeds of the tree on which they live; and before the introduction of cochineal, Kermes was the most esteemed drug for dyeing scarlet.—See Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science, art. Kermes; Pliny, H. N. ix. 41; xvi. 8.

The description of the Harlot's attire in ver. 4 (cf. ch. xviii. 16) suggests the choice of this colour. Grotius, De Wette, and Züllig refer the colour not to the Beast itself but to its trappings. Many identify this colour with that of the "Dragon," "red as flame" (πυρρός, ch. xii. 3; cf. ch. vi. 4), whom the Beast serves: they see in it a symbol of the blood which he sheds (ch. xi. 7; xvi. 6)—a sacrificial colour: compare Heb. ix. 19.

full of names] Either a case of irregular apposition (cf. ch. iv. 1); or (taking the participle as a neuter sing.), full of the names—a note of identification with ch. xiii. 1; or again we may render, names full of blasphemy: see vv. 11. For the construction (which differs from the usage elsewhere—see ver. 4; ch. iv. 8; xv. 7). Düsterd. refers to Phil. i. 11; Col. i. 9, and on this latter text Professor Moulton (l. c., p. 287) notes: "This constr. of πληροῦσθαι is followed by γέμων in Rev. xvii. 3, 4. In modern Greek, words of fulness may take an accus."

of blasphemy,] See on ch. xiii. 1, where the Beast bears the "names" merely on the "Seven Heads:" the "names" have now spread over the whole body, doubtless owing to the fact that the influence of the "Harlot" is superadded. Züllig considers that the "names" were embroidered on the scarlet cloth which covered the Beast.

seven heads and ten horns.] Here and in ch. xiii. 1, the Beast presents the characteristic features of the "Dragon" in ch. xii. 3. The "Heads" are now seen without diadems;

a circumstance which supports the explanation that rejects the application to personal "Kings." An old writer has observed that the Beast reappears from the Abyss (see on ch. xi. 7) without his diadems, as though, in this last stage, he would symbolize rather the violence of popular rage, than the prescriptive sanctity of monarchical supremacy. Düsterd., who upholds the twofold reference to "mountains" and to literal "kings," considers that this omission is supplied by the royal attire of the Harlot (ver. 4) who is seated on the Beast (see on ver. 10): and he attaches no definite historical meaning to the number Ten of the Horns in this chapter, explaining their introduction now as merely intended to identify the Beast here, with the Beast of ch. xiii. 1:—see on ver. 7.

Dante applies vv. 1–3 to the Church of Rome under Nicholas iii. (A.D. 1277), Boniface viii. (A.D. 1294), and Clement v. (A.D. 1305). Pope Clement transferred the Papal See from Rome to Avignon, where it remained in what Italian writers call its "Babylonian Exile" (A.D. 1309–1378):—

"The Evangelist you Pastors had in mind,
When she who sitteth upon many waters
To fornicate with kings by him was seen;
The same who with the Seven Heads was born,
And power and strength from the Ten Horns received,
So long as virtue to her spouse was pleasing."— Inferno, xix. 106–111, Longfellow's transl.

Avignon is here the seat of the Papacy: and Dante—so his commentators tell us—understood by the "Seven Heads," the Seven Sacraments (or Virtues) of the Church, and by the "Ten Horns" the Ten Commandments—see Note B at the end of this chapter.

4. arrayed in purple and scarlet,] The colours significant of sovereign rule; and thus the colours of the robe of mockery in John xix. 2; Matt. xxvii. 28; cf. ch. xviii. 12, 16. The "scarlet" may also indicate her "blood-stained" garments—see ver. 6. The form of the word rendered "purple" (see vv. 11,—an adj. for a subst.) is peculiar to St. John, and is found in the New Test. only in ch. xvii. 4; xviii. 16; John xix. 2, 5. The form generally used occurs in ch. xviii. 12.

The Tyrian purple dye (Ezek. xxvii. 7, 16) "was obtained from two little shell-fish, the Buccinum and Murex—the former being found on rocks near the shore, and the latter in deeper water—on the Phœnician coast." (Brande and Cox, art. Murex). Purple was one of the three colours of the Tabernacle:

with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication :

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ^{Or, fornications.}

—see the Note on Ex. xxv. 4; and Note A on ch. xxi. 20.

and decked] See Margin:—the participle is carried on to the nouns which follow.

precious stones and pearls,] Gr. “precious stone,” in the sing.; see the note on ch. xv. 6. Cf. the description of the king of Tyre, Ezek. xxviii. 13; and also what is said of Jerusalem, Ezek. xvi. 10–18. On the word “pearl” here, and in ch. xviii. 12, 16; xxi. 21, see Note A at the end of this chapter.

having in her hand a golden cup] Cf. the application to Babylon of the phrase “a golden cup,” Jer. li. 7; and the note on ch. xiv. 8.

full of abominations, and of the unclean things] (As to the accus. after γέμων, see on ver. 3). The accusative “the unclean things” is coupled with the genitive “abominations,” “after the Hebrew idiom, in order to avoid the threefold genitive:”—so Ewald, Hengst., and De Wette. Lücke (s. 461), and Düsterd. take the accusative, “the unclean things,” to be parallel to the accusative, “a golden cup,” both depending on “having” (cf. ch. xviii. 12), viz. even the unclean things:—see vv. 11. So also Stuart and Züllig, who translate—“even the impurities.” Alf. thinks that the constr. is changed in order to mark a difference between the more abstract designation of the contents of the cup as “abominations,” and the specification of them in the concrete as “the unclean things.”

All actions to be condemned are called “abominations,”—cf. ch. xxi. 27; Luke xvi. 15.

of her fornication,] Cf. ch. xviii. 3. Hengst. understands not the abominations of idolatry, but only political enormities,—that artful policy by which Rome reduced the nations to impotence.

I. Williams would understand “false and hypocritical Christianity” (p. 324): the generation against which our Lord testified as “adulterous” (Matt. xii. 39) had no idol worship; the “idolatry” spoken of by St. Paul (Eph. v. 5) is “covetousness.”

5. and upon her forehead a name written,] I.e., “having (see ver. 4) a name written;” as was customary with harlots—see Wetstein and De Wette (“Nomen tuum pependit a fronte.”—Seneca, Controv. i. 2; cf. Juv. Sat. vi. 123). Hengst., however, says, “Not a title, but the expression of her nature. The name consists of a whole sentence, to which, substantially though not formally, ver. 6 belongs.” For the contrasted name borne by the servants of God, see ch. xiv. 1.

MYSTERY,] Or, as explained below, A mystery.] As rendered in A. V., MYSTERY is the first element of the proper name, and so C. à Lapide, Vitringa, I. Williams, Hengst., Bleek, Words., Alf. The name on the forehead of the High Priest (Ex. xxviii. 36, 37)—the ineffable NAME—was a mysterious secret; so here the Harlot's character is known to God only. Her name is “Mystery,” and “Confusion”—so “Babylon” is interpreted; a character now added to the “names of blasphemy” borne by the Beast. Words. notes: “Her title is Mystery, a secret spell, bearing the semblance of sanctity.”

On the other hand, Züllig, De Wette, Ebrard, Düsterd., Auberlen interpret A mystery,—the word standing in apposition to “name,” and denoting the enigmatical sense in which the title that follows is to be taken—as if “a preliminary nota bene” (Düsterd.); it may be compared with the word “spiritually,” in ch. xi. 8, or with the note of attention, “Here is wisdom” (ver. 9; ch. xiii. 18). The three ideas—“mystery,” “spirituality,” “wisdom”—are combined in 1 Cor. ii. 7, 10, notes Auberlen (p. 275); and he adds that the word Mystery (used on one occasion only by Christ, Matt. xiii. 11) “always, and without exception, designates a subject which is hidden to the unassisted reason and eye of man, and can only be seen by a special Divine revelation (cf. Rom. xi. 25; xvi. 25; 1 Cor. ii. 7–10; xv. 51; Eph. iii. 3–5). See on ch. i. 20; x. 7:—in fact “mystery” is the antithesis to “revelation,” see ver. 7.

Reuss, referring to ch. xi. 8, explains the Harlot's name of “Mystery” as meaning “allegorically,” “because it is to her that the prophecies of the Old Test. against Babylon are referred: by her proper and historical name she is called Rome.” To the same effect Burger, who explains that her name is said to be “a Mystery,” in order that we may not think of the historical Babylon on the Euphrates.

Stuart notes: “Why not translate ‘a name written mysteriously,’ accus. adverbial?”—viz., “BABYLON THE GREAT (the mother of harlots and of the abominations of the earth):”—the parenthesis being “an exclamation of the author, and not a part of the inscription.”

ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

7 And the angel said unto me,

BABYLON THE GREAT,] See ch. xiv. 8; xvi. 19, where this, the Harlot's, title has been already introduced as the concrete representative of the collective World-kingdom.

Babylon is a mystery, notes Hengst., as still continuing "Great" after Christ appeared, and still retaining power to persecute the Saints—see ver. 6.

See Note B at the end of this chapter.

THE MOTHER OF THE HARLOTS] This title repeats, in another form, the imagery of ver. 4. Düsterd. observes that the word "Mother" signifies that she has made her daughters—"the cities of the nations" (ch. xvi. 19)—to become Harlots also, and drunken with her cup, thus filling the world with her cruelty (ch. xiii. 7, 14; xiv. 8, 11). I. Williams, who refers the prophecy to Jerusalem, writes: "Aretas, in speaking of the City of Rome as signified by Babylon, adds, 'In all this the prophetic saying is suitable, As is the mother, so is the daughter' (Ezek. xvi. 44). But it is remarkable that the proverb which this Greek writer refers to is spoken, not of Babylon, but of the Ancient Jerusalem, in that very chapter which forms the basis of this analogy or figure in the Apocalypse" (p. 329).

Züllig regards Nineveh as the type here of the Harlot—see Nah. iii. 4–7; and he notes: "In the Apoc. a name, by a favourite usage, is divided into several words. Cf. ch. iii. 14, and especially ch. xix. 11."

AND OF THE ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.] De Wette explains that the Harlot is the type of all nations which practise idolatry. Hengst. understands "political enormities;" "not false religious zeal, but despotism," see ver. 6. The sins of the World-city—unbelief, superstition, sensuality—are all included under the Harlot's title.

6. drunken with the blood of the saints,] I. e., "by reason of (ἐκ) the blood"—see ch. viii. 11; xvi. 10, 11. To this corresponds the scarlet colour of the Beast, and of the Harlot's attire—vv. 3, 4. For the metaphor, compare "Ebrius jam sanguine civium, et tanto magis eum sitiens" (Plin. H. N. xiv. 28, ap. Wetst.). For the fact, cf. ch. xvi. 6; xviii. 24.

of the martyrs of Jesus.] Cf. ch. ii. 13. "The Saints" do not really differ from the witnesses, or "Martyrs of Jesus;" but the latter description states more plainly that the testimony of Jesus which the Saints have borne has been the cause of their death: cf. ch. i. 2, 9; vi. 9. The language, notes and when I saw her, I wondered with a great wonder.] For the idiom, cf. ch. xvi. 9. The reason for the Seer's "wonder" the Angel explains, in ver. 7, to be "the mystery of the Woman and of the Beast that carryeth her."

Hengst., is changed in order to heighten the guilt of Rome. Of course "the Two (typical) Witnesses" of ch. xi. are not meant.

Writers explain these words variously. Bengel: Because so powerful a Beast carries and serves a woman;—De Wette and Züllig: Because St. John, as in ch. v. 4, did not understand the symbolism;—Hengst.: Because the Roman power remains still unbroken after Christ has come, see on ch. xiii. 3;—Ebrard (comparing the "wonder" in ver. 8): Because the Beast, already seen in ch. xiii., reappears in a form so different;—Auberlen: Because a change so extraordinary has passed over the Woman; "the impression made on John may be expressed by the words of Isa. i. 21: 'How is the faithful city become an harlot!'" (p. 277); and he contrasts with this feeling of "wonder" which the Seer exhibits nowhere else [but see ch. v. 4], the expression of gratitude and joy manifested in ch. xix. 9, 10; xxii. 6–8. To the same effect, I. Williams. Alford, also, for the most part, adopts this opinion of Auberlen; but he altogether fails to answer the objection of Düsterd. that neither in the text itself, nor in the Angel's explanation (ver. 7), is an allusion made to the identity of the "Woman" of ch. xii. and the "Harlot"; or to this as the reason for St. John's wonder. Alf. replies that the silence of the Angel is "just what we might expect, if the fact of identity were patent:"—but that the identity does not exist has been already shown on ver. 1. Wordsworth (after Vitranga, p. 764) explains,—Not because Heathen Rome persecuted the Saints, but because a Christian Church calling herself "the Mother of Christendom," i. e., the Church of Rome, should be "drunken with the blood of the Saints."

The Seer is now to behold the mystery of evil more closely; and the continued conflict of the Church with the "Prince of this world" is to be more distinctly revealed. Daniel (vii. 1–7) had already symbolized, under the image of four Beasts, the four successive World-empires: and, borrowing from Daniel's figurative language, St. John has composed the symbol of one Beast, with "Seven Heads" and "Ten Horns," designed to typify, throughout all time, the antichristian

Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast that thou sawest was,

World-power. This form, Satan, in his character of "Prince of this world," has assumed in ch. xii., where his hostility to the Church of God is described; and under this form, as the actual World-power, the embodiment of Satan's influence is represented in ch. xiii. In ch. xvii. is added, as the contrast to the Church, the symbol of the "Harlot" representing the local centre, or World-city, whence the antichristian spirit is to be diffused at any particular period;—and the special features of this symbolism are now developed by the Angel.

It is to be noted that up to this point the Seer beholds in a Vision the actors in the events that follow. The events themselves are not presented here in a Vision: the Angel predicts them.

THE ANGEL INTERPRETS (7).

7. The interpretation given by the Angel (see ver. 1), like the Vision itself which is to be interpreted (vv. 1–6), is directed to the two chief figures—to that of the Beast in vv. 8–14, and to that of the Harlot in vv. 15–18: the latter interpretation is divided from the former by the customary formula "And he saith unto me," ver. 15.

Wherefore didst thou wonder?] See ch. vii. 13,—the Angel does not now pause for a reply. Hengst. compares Matt. xiv. 31: he regards these words as a reproof to St. John who is prone to dwell upon what is visible; see also Mark vi. 6, and the verb in John vii. 21. This may well be doubted,—see on ver. 6.

the mystery] The mysterious signification of the symbolism:—cf. on ver. 5; and ch. i. 20.

of the woman, and of the beast] Note the articles—"the Woman," "the Beast," of ver. 3.

We have here the two chief forms introduced in this section (vv. 7–18) which, though typifying different objects,—the World-city and the World-kingdom,—are essentially connected together (cf. ver. 3). Hence St. John speaks of but one mystery—the mystery of the Woman and of the Beast; treating in the first place of the more general subject, "the mystery of the Beast" (vv. 8–14); and then of the more special subject, "the mystery of the Woman" (vv. 15–18).

Hengst. would explain:—"The mystery of the Harlot is that she is made desolate (ver. 15); of the Beast that it goes into perdition (vv. 8–11). The mystery of the Beast is indicated here rather than fully disclosed, this being reserved for ch. xix. 20. . . . We have properly to do in this place only with the judgment on the Harlot—see ver. 1."

I. Williams observes that it is rather of the Beast on which the "Woman" sits than of the "Harlot" that the Angel speaks; as if this her connexion with the Beast, was what explained "the mystery." St. John does not wonder at all at the Beast, but much at the Woman: and it is twice repeated that all but the elect shall wonder at the Beast—ch. xiii. 3; xvii. 8. To wonder at the Beast is the part of the wicked; to wonder at the Woman is the part of the Seer himself (p. 332).

that carrieth her,] The token of the intimate connexion between the two forms already represented in ver. 3. On the verb here, see on ch. ii. 3.

the seven heads] To the "Seven Heads" two interpretations are given by the Angel:—(1) They are "Seven Mountains" on which the Woman sits (ver. 9); (2) They are "Seven Kings" (ver. 10).

and the ten horns.] See on vv. 9, 12. The imagery of ch. xiii. is resumed. There is no mention here of diadems as in ch. xiii. 1, where the Beast is seen in the full exercise of his demonic power. The "Ten Horns" have not yet—so far as this Vision has proceeded—surrendered their kingly power to the Beast (see vv. 12, 13), and, hence, the diadems are absent.

THE MYSTERY OF THE BEAST (8–14).

8. was, and is not;] This fact is three times insisted upon—here; at the end of this verse; and in ver. 11. The words "is not" are generally allowed to signify the reception of the deadly wound by one of the "Heads," as stated in ch. xiii. 3. Observe,—what the Angel here explains refers to the Beast, not to the wounded "Head," which, indeed, in ch. xiii. is put for the whole Beast: see the note on ch. xiii. 3.

and is about to come up out of the abyss,] This fact is implied in the last words of this verse; and is also implied in ver. 11, where it is said that the Beast will reappear in the person of an eighth "King." It is thus that the healing of the "death-stroke" (ch. xiii. 3) is now expressed,—the wound of one "Head" being ascribed to the whole Beast, because, as Lücke notes, the antichristian character of the Beast culminates in this one "Head"—cf. ch. xiii. 3, 12, 14 (see, however, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, the objection of Ebrard quoted in the note on ch. xiii. 3). The Beast—the symbol of the ungodly World-power in its universal form—is here the symbol of the Roman Empire. The paganism of the world had received its fatal wound from the sharp sword of the Archangel (ch. xii. 7), and absolutely from—the Cross of Christ (Col. ii. 15). The material fabric of the Empire had already been rudely shaken. Tacitus (Hist. i. 11) describes the year 69 as full of the gravest dangers,—as being “annum reipublicæ prope supremum,” and then the torrent of the barbarian hordes broke in. “The shattered, pillaged, dilapidated Empire,” however, as Sir F. Palgrave writes (see on ch. xiii. 3), “was still one state, one community:” and thus the godless World-power, as especially noted in ch. xiii. 14, still “lived.” Heresy and unbelief and worldliness, moreover, sprang up to trouble the Church also:—and so time has gone on; and never has revived paganism been more combative than in the nineteenth century.

Here it is to be further observed that St. John speaks in this passage of the revival of the Beast as about to be, not as present when he wrote. The “not being”—which has “its ground in the atonement of Christ”—is to be regarded, notes Hengst., as continuing during the coming again and renewed being: this may be inferred from ver. 11. The Beast now returns, not only from “the sea” but “out of the Abyss” (see on ch. ix. 1), whence it has drawn new anti-christian strength—see ch. xi. 7. He now appears scarlet-coloured, a symbol of blood-guiltiness; and the “names of blasphemy,” formerly written only on his “Horns” (ch. xiii. 1), now cover his whole body (ver. 3).

Wordsworth notes: “The Beast was, in its Imperial form, and exists no longer in that shape; having received a deadly wound, and being killed in that respect; and is about to ascend out of the Abyss; i. e., in this new form in which it will be described” (see on ch. xiii. 3). Ebrard, on the other hand, argues that the Angel speaks as in ver. 10 from the standpoint of the time in which he converses with St. John—“the Beast was, and is not,” he, therefore, speaks of a power which, in the days of St. John, belonged to the past, and consequently not of the Roman power which did exist in the days of St. John: whence it follows that the Beast of ch. xvii. typifies a power different from that typified by the Beast of ch. xiii. (see on ch. xi. 7; xiii. 1). The latter, or World-power in its Roman form, has arisen from “the sea” of the nations—from the commotions of the world’s history; and, although taken into the service of Satan in his character of “Prince of this world,” has not been directly produced by Satan. The Beast of ch. xvii., on the other hand, ascending “out of the Abyss,” is the type of a World-power whose origin is directly and immediately the work of Satan, and therefore a result of direct demoniacal influence (s. 458 ff.):—but see above on ver. 3.

According to Andreas (l. c., p. 99) the Beast is Satan, borne from the Abyss by Antichrist to destroy men. Beda takes the Beast to be Antichrist, who is to reign at the end of the world.

and to go into perdition.] See vv. 11. If we read as in ver. 11, the translation is, and he goeth into perdition (cf. John xvii. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 3)—to return whence he came forth. Ch. xix. 20 is the commentary.

These words seem to be added parenthetically, in order to support the children of God under the prospect to which they must look forward.

shall wonder.] Namely at the reappearance of the Beast just described (cf. ch. xiii. 3, 8, 12),—as stated more fully at the end of the verse, “when they behold.”

[they] whose name hath not been written in the book of life] See vv. 11; Gr. upon [ἐπὶ] the book [or roll] of life: see ch. xiii. 8, where we have “in [ἐν] the book of life;” and where the parallel with ch. xxi. 27 is more exact.

For “the book of life” see on ch. iii. 5.

from the foundation of the world.] See Matt. xxv. 34; a text which supports the natural connexion of these words with the verb “written,”—the article which should regularly connect them with “the book of life” not being inserted. Alf., however, notes: “It is by no means certain, in the loose Greek of the Apoc., whether these accuracies must be insisted on;” and, relying on ch. xiii. 8, he connects with the words immediately preceding.

when they behold the beast.] The participle in the genitive; see vv. 11.:—“Perhaps” an “example of the gen. absolute with the subject omitted;” cf. Matt. i. 18 (Moulton’s ed. of Winer, p. 736);—or the gen. constructed with the relative clause (De Wette):—or a case of attraction agreeing with “whose.”

when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

9 And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

The cause of the Seer's "wonder" is now explained:—

how that he was,] As in John ix. 8; not "which was" as A. V. Words. notes that the neuter (ὃ, τι) is not used by any writer of the New Test. as a relative, except when followed by ἄν—cf. Luke x. 35; John ii. 5; Col. iii. 17. Winer (s. 44) gives as doubtful cases John viii. 25; Acts ix. 27; 2 Cor. iii. 14: see also on 1 Cor. xvi. 15 Moulton's ed. of Winer, p. 781.

and is not, and shall come.] (See vv. 11.). The Cod. Sinait. reads "shall come again," παλιν. Gr. "and shall be present"—words which are equivalent to "is about to come up out of the Abyss." Note that the other words of the first clause, "was and is not," are repeated. Bengel points out the contrast between this title of the Beast, and that of our Lord in ch. i. 4, "Which is and which was, and which is to come" (see in loc.); and also notes the correspondence of the verb "shall come" (παρεσθαι), with the established expression (παρουσία) of the Evangelists (Matt. xxiv. 3); of St. Paul (2 Thess. ii. 1, 8); of St. James v. 7; of 2 Pet. iii. 4—to denote the Lord's Second Coming. The same term is likewise used to denote the coming or presence of the "man of sin" in 2 Thess. ii. 3, 9. This correspondence Düsterd. denies, because the term παρουσία does not occur in the Apoc.:—but see 1 John ii. 28. That Presence of Christ is described in ch. xix. 11.

Differently:—Men wonder, continues Ebrard (s. 460), that this World-power destroyed long before the time of St. John is to reappear. The Beast from the "sea" existed during the mystic three and a half years after the Ascension (ch. xii. 5, 6); consequently it existed in the time of St. John; and the wounding of its sixth Head the Seer beheld as still future. On the other hand, this Beast of ch. xvii. had already gone "into the Abyss" when St. John lived, and was to reappear long after St. John's time. This reappearance, accordingly, has nothing to do with that healing of the Roman "Head" of the World-power in ch. xiii.

Godet admits that his interpretation which places Israel as one of the "Seven Heads" of the Beast (see on ch. xiii. 1, 3) does not suit political history;—but that it suits "the religious history of humanity, which is that of John" need not be proved. Until its dispersion by the Romans, A.D. 70, Israel "was" the first of peoples: but then it suddenly disappeared from the rank of nations—it "was, and is not;" but it "will come again:" "This Israel, to human eye annihilated, will yet revive to be the supreme expression of the revolt of humanity against God the Creator" (pp. 365–367)—to be Antichrist.

For the interpretation which applies the symbolism to Nero, see below on ver. 11; and above on ch. xiii. 3.

Marlorat (A.D. 1550) and other Protestant writers, adopting the reading of the Textus Receptus (see vv. 11.), interpret: Heathen Rome is passed away; and, although Papal Rome is there (καίπερ ἔστιν), its world-rule is nothing in itself (οὐκ ἔστι):—see Introduction, § 8. Züllig also retains the reading of T. R.,—which has no authority whatever,—and gives as the solution of the enigma ("das Lösewort des Räthsels") the word Edom (ii. s. 319): see on ver 9, and Note D.

9. Here is the mind which hath wisdom.] (The "And" of A. V.—and of Wiclif, Tyndale, Cranmer, but not Geneva—does not exist in the Greek: it is perhaps taken from the Vulg.: see vv. 11. on ver. 8).

Or render, Here is the meaning (ὁ νοῦς).

That the explanation itself is a "mystery" is clear from this formula, which is to the same effect as that which introduces "the number of the Beast," ch. xiii. 18:—the sense being that the interpretation of what follows belongs only to an understanding gifted with wisdom. Ewald explains, "Here is the meaning of this enigma;"—others (Grotius, Herder, &c.), "Here is the sense full of wisdom, the deep mysterious import of the symbol;"—Stuart thinks that this verse should end at the word "wisdom:" he refers "Here" to what precedes—special sagacity is required in order to understand what the writer has said about the Beast.

THE SEVEN HEADS (9–11).

The seven heads] See ch. xii. 3; xiii. 1.

The absence of "diadems" in ch. xvii. may be explained by the following reference to "mountains." The reference to "kingdoms" or royal powers is supplied by the description in ver. 4 of the regal magnificence of the "Harlot." Kingly rule was symbolized by "diadems" in ch. xiii. 1.

are seven mountains,] I.e., signify, represent "seven mountains":—cf. on ch. i. 20.

It is important to observe the merely passing notice, in this one place, of the "Seven Mountains." It is thus indicated in the slightest manner how Rome, the "Urbs septi-collis" of the period ("Septem urbs alta jugis, toto quæ præsidet orbi," Propert. iii. 11, 57—a line which combines the statements of vv. 9, 18), was the City in which the World-power was concentrated in the days of St. John. The obviousness of this allusion supplies an answer to the assertion, often made, that St. John always veils under obscure language (e.g. "the number of the Beast") his references to Rome and her rulers, for the purpose of avoiding the hostility of the heathen. The hills here are doubtless real hills, while the "waters" in ver. 15 are symbolical: but this is no reason why the hills or "mountains" should not have a further meaning. A reference so slight as this cannot possibly be looked upon as exhausting the proper or full meaning of the Apostle's words; and the interpretation of this most obscure passage depends on our fully understanding the symbol. It requires no divine "wisdom" to see in this place the City of Rome on the Seven Hills; nor can a geographical notice so common (see Note C at the end of this chapter) come up to the sense of the words, "Here is the mind which hath wisdom."

Now it is contrary to the analogy of Scriptural symbolism to understand by "heads" literal "mountains." A "mountain" is regarded (like the expression "sea," or "earth," in Ps. lxxv. 6-9; Hab. iii. 10) figuratively, as the seat of power. In Dan. ii. 35 the "stone" becomes "a great mountain;"—Babylon is so described in Jer. li. 25;—and both stone and mountain are prophetic names of Christ, see Gen. xlix. 24; Isai. xxviii. 16; Zech. iv. 7 (cf. Matt. xxi. 44). Mountains generally signify in symbolical language the seats of gods and kings, especially of false gods and godless potentates who require to be humbled (see the note on Isai. ii. 2). The overthrow of the World-kingsdoms by the Kingdom of God is represented by the same image in Isai. xli. 15. In Hab. iii. 6 the "mountains" are compared to the "nations." The hill or mount is often the symbol of a place of strength:—e.g. the Mountain of holiness, the Mount of God, Mount Sinai, Mount Zion. In fact, to suppose the coincidence of a seven-hilled city to be the primary meaning here, would not suit the style of the Apocalypse.

And thus two explanations are given by the Angel: "Mountains," as symbolizing seats of power; and "Kings," as representing what kings represent, i.e., kingdoms—the former explanation being given first, inasmuch as the figure "Mountains" was more familiar to the readers of prophecy; and then both figures are identified as "Kings" in ver. 10. "The 'Mountains' stand in the same relation to the 'Kings,' as, in ver. 15, the 'waters,' where the Harlot sitteth, stand to the 'peoples:'—as little as the 'waters' are to be taken literally, so little are the 'mountains'" (Auberlen, p. 270). This remark answers the objection of Düsterd. that, on the interpretation here adopted, one symbol, "Heads," first typifies another symbol, "Mountains;" and that thus by a double process we attain to what is properly intended, viz. "Seven Kings." The symbolic reference, however, to Rome preserves the natural import of "Mountains;" while "the many waters" (ver. 1), and the "Seven Heads" or "Mountains" (vv. 3, 9) on which the Harlot sits receive their respective explanations in vv. 15, 10. The difficulty has arisen from not bearing in mind that two symbols, the Beast and the Harlot, are here intermingled; and that what is now to be explained is their mutual relation. That the expression "Seven Mountains" points to the City of Rome, seated on the Palatine, Quirinal, Aventine, Cælian, Viminal, Esquiline, and Janiculan hills—in St. John's age the capital of the Universal World-empire to which the imagery points—need not be questioned. This result, indeed, is plainly indicated in ver. 18.

Wordsworth observes that the drawing together of the "Seven Mountains" into the circle of the Roman city is combined by Roman Poets with the drawing together of the World's kingdoms into the domain of the Roman Empire:—

"Scilicet et rerum facta est pulcherrima Roma, Septemque una sibi muro circumdedit arces."
Georg. ii. 534

This interpretation, however, of the "Seven Mountains" is not undisputed:—

I. Williams observes that as the Babylon, the Jerusalem, the Sodom and Egypt of the Apoc., and also the Mount Zion and mountain of Jerusalem (ch. xiv. 1; xxi. 10) are not to be taken literally but spiritually, it might seem that Rome too, or the City on Seven Hills, is also to be so taken. We should thus understand, not the local city of Rome, but the principle of worldly greatness and ambition. "The Harlot sits on seven hills and on many waters: as the waters are not literal, why should the hills be?" The Greek interpreters conclude that "the Seven Heads and Seven Hills on which the Universal Babylon is seated are seven places pre-eminent in power, on which the kingdom of the world is established,—Nineveh, of the Assyrians; Ecbatana, of the Medes; Babylon, of the Chaldeans; Susa, of the Persians; the kingdom of Macedon; the ancient Rome; and the new Rome." With these they connect as Kings,—Ninus, Arbaces, Nebuchodonosor, Cyrus, Alexander, Romulus, and Constantine (p. 337). While I. Williams, however, argues that "there would be no reason, according to the analogy of the

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is Apocalypse, to conclude that Rome is here literally intended," he nevertheless adds: "Still it must be allowed that the prophecy does in some awful manner hover, as with boding raven wing, over Rome" (ib.).

Züllig (s. 319 ff.) gives the meaning "in these two words,—The City is Jerusalem, its Kingdom is Edom" (see Note D). Every scholar knows that Rome was built on Seven Hills and was the mistress of the world: but Rome is nowhere thought of in the Apoc.; while everything in it revolves round Jerusalem. The proof rests on Ps. lxxxvii. 1: "His foundation is in the holy mountains." Many towns besides Rome can boast of their seven hills—Constantinople, Scutari, Brussels, Bamberg, &c.; but Jerusalem especially can boast of the sacred number Seven—four larger and three smaller groups, viz.: (1) The highest and greatest, to the south, Zion; (2) to its north, through the Tyropœum, Akra; (3) the Temple-mountain, Moria, on the East; (4) to the north of Moria, Bezetha. Among these larger lay the group of three smaller hills—the four and three of the Apoc.: (5) Ophel, Neh. iii. 26, 27; [see the notes on 2 Chron. xxvii. 3; Isai. xxxii. 14, and Smith's Bible Dict. in voc.]; (6) the hill of the Castle Antonia; (7) the hill of the three towers, Hippicus, Phasaël, and Mariamne.

Lakemacher (quoted by Bleek, l. c., s. 89) names, Zion, Akra, Moria, Bezetha, and the three points of the Mount of Olives. Abauzit, Hartwig, Harenberg, Herder, &c. also understand Jerusalem,—see Bleek, s. 88.

Krenkel (l. c., s. 75) expresses concisely the usual opinion:—Where, he asks, was there a city which, in Cent. i., united all these tokens, but Rome? The purple (ver. 4) denotes her Imperial power;—the scarlet her thirst for blood;—she is styled a "Harlot" after the manner of the Old Test. Prophets (see Isai. xxiii. 15, 17);—she is called spiritually Babylon (ch. xiv. 8), as Jerusalem is called Sodom and Gomorrah (ch. xi. 8), so far as she vies with her elder sister on the Euphrates in hatred towards the people of God. What, then, can the Beast on which she sits denote but the Roman World-power?

on which the woman sitteth:] Gr. "where the woman sitteth on them"—a Hebrew union of the relative "where" with the demonstrative "on them:" cf. the use of the "relative pronoun," in ch. xii. 6, 14.

10. And they are seven kings;] As well as "Seven Mountains";—see on ver. 9, where it is shewn that "mountains" symbolize seats of power, a fact which connects the symbol "mountains" with the symbol "kings." "Kings" again (cf. ver. 12) represent not individual rulers, but "kingdoms." See Dan. ii. 38: "Thou [viz. king Nebuchadnezzar] art this bead of gold;" on which follows: "And after thee shall arise another kingdom."—cf. Dan. vii. 17, 23, where kings and kingdoms are used as equivalent. See also Jer. xxv. 11: "These nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years,"—viz. Nebuchadnezzar and his four successors (cf. the note on Jer. xxvii. 7). And thus a "king" represents a "kingdom," and does not, in prophetic imagery, denote an individual "king." In 2 Esdras xii. 22, 23 there is an instance of this;—and we may also refer to ch. xiii. 1, where the explanation is given of the "Seven Heads." Here accordingly, the "Seven Heads" of the Beast signify (i.) the Seven Hills of Rome,—which are introduced both to indicate the then existing embodiment of the World-empire and to render more clear the reference to World-kingdoms,—and (ii.) Seven great World-monarchies, each in succession impersonated as a "King," who in his day is representative of the antichristian World-power. All this might and all this energy are now beheld concentrated—under the mystic signature "Seven"—in the one symbol of the Beast; and this, it is important to bear in mind, is not Rome, nor the Roman Empire, but a general symbol of secular antichristian power. (We may also render as A. V.).

With reference to the opinion that the "Seven Kings" are personal rulers it is to be noted once more that the symbolism of ch. xvii. cannot be understood apart from the symbolism of ch. xiii. Now in ch. xiii. 1 the "diadems" form one of the most prominent features of the description; while the exclusive application of the diadem to signify kingly authority—as proved in the supplementary Note D on ch. ii. 10—precludes any reference in the Apocalypse to the Roman Cæsars before the time of Diocletian. Indeed the applicability of the title "king" (βασιλεύς), in any form, to the early Roman Emperors is contrary to all history.

Some account of the various interpretations assigned to the symbol of the "Seven Kings" is given in Note D at the end of this chapter.

the five are fallen,] I. e., the five World-empires anterior to Rome. As Alford notes: "Egypt is fallen, the first Head of the Beast that persecuted God's people (Ezek. xxix.; xxx.);—Nineveh is fallen, the bloody city (Nah. iii. 1–19);—Babylon is fallen, the great enemy of Israel (Isai. xxi. 9; Jer. l.; li.);—Persia is fallen (Dan. x. 13; xi. 2);—Grecia is fallen (Dan. xi. 3, 4)."

According to Rationalists the five fallen "Kings" are the five Emperors beginning not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and with Augustus and ending with Nero;—Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, come between Nero and Vespasian whom Düsterd. makes to be the sixth Head; and these three he indicates by three of the "Ten Horns," cf. ch. xii. 3; xiii. 1;—Renan, counting from Julius to Claudius, considers Nero to be still alive ("Néron, qui est à la fois la Bête et un des sept rois, n'est pas mort en réalité,"—p. 433).

Others interpret allegorically; or understand the successive forms of government over Rome, &c. In no case, however, do such interpretations preserve the natural meaning of the verb in this passage; as it becomes necessary to assign to it the forced sense "have passed away," or "are dead," for which it would not be easy to find a precedent. In Scripture "fallen" is said of cities or kingdoms; as, e.g. in ch. xiv. 8; Isai. xxi. 9; Jer. li. 8; Amos v. 2.

the one is,] (Omit "and"—see vv. II.). I. e., the sixth World-Empire, or the Imperial power of Rome, as it existed in the days of St. John. So Hengst., and Auberlen; and so even Godet, who makes the fifth "Head," now fallen, to be Israel (see on ch. xiii. 1).

According to Stern the sixth "Head" is the Roman Cæsar, when St. John wrote; and this Head bore the "death-stroke" (ch. xiii. 3) which Christianity inflicted;—according to Vitringa, this sixth "Head" is Pope Paul III. (A.D. 1534-49);—according to Mede, the form of government by Emperors;—according to Rationalists, generally, Galba;—according to Renan, Nero, whom St. John erroneously believed to be still alive;—according to Lücke and Düsterd., Vespasian;—according to Züllig, Herod of Chalcis, who received back the dignity of king from Claudius, A.D. 44.

From this interpretation Züllig concludes that the date of the Apocalypse is to be placed under Claudius, between A.D. 44 and A.D. 47, the year when Herod of Chalcis died: and so Lakemacher, Obs. Phil., x. 5, 6: see Introd., § 4, a. Similarly the rationalistic school regards this verse as fixing the date under Galba, A.D. 68; just as ch. xi. 2 is taken to prove that it was written before the destruction of Jerusalem (see Scholten, l.c., s. 44)—the Head "smitten unto death" of ch. xiii. 3 being Nero, the fifth Cæsar.

the other is not yet come;] (Omit "and"). I. e., the seventh, or antichristian World-power which is to succeed to the power of pagan Rome:—in other words the World, in the broadest sense of the word, as opposed to the Church. The principle of Auberlen has been already discussed on ver. 1,—namely that the Head of the Beast which had been "smitten unto death" (ch. xiii. 3) was this seventh "Head," and that it "represents the Christian State and its Christian civilization"—"Christianity has become worldly, the world has become Christianized; this is the fundamental type of the Christian era" (p. 299). Alford accepts this result: he regards "this seventh 'Head' as the Christian Empire beginning with Constantine." If, as his agreement with Auberlen implies, he regards the Empire, so far as it was Christian, as representing the existing form of Antichrist, this conclusion is self-condemned.

Wordsworth (see on ch. xiii. 3) takes this seventh Head to be the Imperial power of Germany "which rose upon the ruins of the Italian kingdom;" and so Burger, who illustrates by the title "the Holy Roman Empire";—Launoy and others understand the Papacy as succeeding the Empire;—A school of Roman Catholic writers (cf. Stern above) understand 'A new heathen power to rule in the last age of Christianity from Rome as a centre;'—According to Vitringa, it is Pope Paul V. (1605-1621).

The seventh World-empire, notes Ebrard (s. 468), which is to come between the Roman Empire and Antichrist, is made up of the "Ten Kings," or Kingdoms of ver. 12;—Godet (see on ch. xiii. 1) takes the seventh "Head" to be a new power which is hereafter to absorb all the fragments of the Roman Empire;—Keil (l.c., p. 279) concludes that if the sixth sovereignty is the Roman, then by the seventh we may understand the World-powers of modern Europe that have come into its place.

According to the rationalistic school generally, this "Head" is Otho or Vitellius;—According to Lücke and Düsterd., Titus;—According to Renan, Galba, "who is old and feeble; he will soon fall" (p. 432).

and when he cometh, he must continue a little while.] I. e., "must needs" "by God's decree,"—see on ch. i. 1. On the phrase "a little while" (ὀλίγον—cf. on ver. 12), observe that there is no noun here expressive of "time," or "season" as in ch. xii. 12; xx. 3; the language is indefinite, the words "must continue" alone being emphatic. The stress is laid on the fact of some endurance, not on its being but short (see 1 Pet. i. 6; v. 10). Ebrard refers to the "one hour" of ver. 12;—and the rationalistic school apply the phrase to the short duration of the reigns of Galba, or Titus. There is however good reason in the opinion of Hofmann and Hengst.

is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have re-that we are to understand a duration such "that by means of it the Church should be exercised in patience."

Auberlen, carrying out his idea of the apostasy of the Church (see on ver. 1), considers that it is only the seventh Kingdom (or the Empire springing from the Germanic Tribes) which became a Christian World-kingdom, and that this is meant by the "death-stroke" in ch. xiii. 3: "This expression, combined with he must continue a little while, reminds us that the Germanic nations were to remain only for a short space heathenish, beast-like, anti-christian; that the seventh Head was soon to receive its wound." But "the Christian Germanic world apostatizes from Christianity. . . . A new heathenism breaks in upon the Christian world" (l. c., p. 300). In other words, the wound which the Beast had received when the German Tribes were converted to Christianity, has now been healed by their apostasy.

The explanation of the "Seven Heads" given in ver. 9 referred merely to the relation of the "Harlot" to the Beast; the explanation here concerns the "Heads" themselves, but says nothing as to the judgment of the "Harlot" in the last times:—ver. 10 is the preface to ver. 11, which tells "who the Beast is, and specially, how he is related to the Seven World-kingdoms" (Ebrard s. 463).

11. And the beast that was, and is not,] As spoken of in ver. 8, and as seen in ver. 3. Neither here nor in ver. 8 do these words indicate the age of St. John: they merely serve for a token of the Beast at the time of his appearing.

The beginning and the end of this description, taken from ver. 8, point attention to the fact that the subject of both verses is the same.

is himself also an eighth,] The absence of the article gives the sense, "an eighth," not "the eighth,"—not one of a series already named; and therefore not, as Rationalists insist, "one of the Seven." Further still, as the gender of the numeral proves, he is "an eighth King;" not one of the Seven Kings, but the result, as it were, or outcome of them—see below. In the person of this eighth "King" the Beast himself is embodied. It is he in whom the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xi. 7), which now "is not," will appear again.

There is considerable difficulty in determining who this eighth "King" is to be; and we may notice a similar ambiguity in the case of the "Little Horn" in Daniel. Rationalists, who see in the eighth "King" the returning Nero, triumph especially in their interpretation of "the number of the Beast," ch. xiii. 18,—"Nero-Cæsar;" and on the "Nero-Fable" see Note E at the end of this chapter. Züllig, who would fain apply the Nero-fable to his theory of the Edomite kings, admits that history affords no trace of an expectation of the return of one of the banished Herods, as an eighth, after Agrippa II.:—see above on ver. 10, and Note D at the end of this chapter.

On the "eighth" King, see Note F at the end of this chapter.

and is of the seven;] Cf. John xv. 19; xvii. 14; 1 John iii. 12—"cometh of the seven;" not, "is one of the seven," as Mark xiv. 69; Luke xxii. 58; Acts xxi. 8; Col. iv. 9, to which meaning St. John's usage is directly opposed. In such a sense he always prefixes the numeral (εἰς) which is wanting here—see ver. 1; and also ch. v. 5; vi. 1; vii. 13 (cf. vv. 4–8); xv. 7; xxi. 9; John i. 41; vi. 8, 70; vii. 50; xi. 49; xii. 4; xiii. 23; xx. 24. This fact removes another foundation from the rationalistic argument for the reappearance of Nero.

and he goeth into perdition.] The fate of the Beast in ver. 8 is again denounced; and the language of 2 Thess. ii. 3 is again recalled.

The object of the rationalistic interpretation, under its most moderate form, may be stated thus after Dürsterdieck:—Assuming that St. John did write the Apoc., Rationalists seek (1) to prove, from internal evidence, that the Fourth Gospel was not written by the same author; and they seek (2) to discredit the whole Christian Revelation by representing an Apostle of Christ, in this his acknowledged work, as a political partizan (see Renan passim), and a myth-bewildered fanatic (see Note E). Dürsterdieck, indeed, refuses to allow that St. John believed the Nero-fable; but he explains with care that he regards the prophetic element of the Apocalypse to contain "nothing magical," "no mantik" element, but to be merely "ethical."—"The natural assumption," he writes, "for the ethical genesis of the prophecy, was, in the case of John, the same as in the case of Josephus, when the latter promised the Empire to Vespasian and his son Titus, before Vespasian had himself resolved to assume the Imperial power (B. J., iii. 8)." The British and Syrian campaigns had proved to all how superior were Vespasian and his sons to men like Otho and Vitellius. That Titus ("the seventh King") should reign but for a short time; and that his brother Domiceived no kingdom as yet ; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

tian, "proceeding from the Seven" (and the eighth), should appear as an incarnation of the Beast from the Abyss, easily followed from natural reasons. The character of Domitian was well known : in the words of Eutropius he proved himself to be "exitibilis tyrannus" (H. R., viii., 1); and St. John might "naturally expect" that the danger always at hand while Titus reigned ("fratrem insidiari sibi non desinentem,"—Sueton., Titus, 9) would be realized in his being dethroned by his brother. Further still :—While the Apostle's common sense "naturally" led him to predict that the reign of Titus was to follow that of Vespasian, and to be of short duration, "John has been mistaken," adds Düsterd., "when he expected that the Roman World-empire would come to an end with Domitian. This singular error undoubtedly proves a certain imperfection of prophetic genius in the author of the Apocalypse, but does not in any way deprive him of it altogether" (s. 514).

Volkmar (s. 251) justly scoffs at this idea of "ethical Inspiration" as a defence of "the canonical character" of the Apocalypse. Admit, indeed, under any form, the rationalistic interpretation of the Book, and, almost before the ink was dry with which St. John wrote, the facts of history had falsified his predictions.

THE TEN HORNS (12-14).

12. And the ten horns that thou sawest are ten kings,] On the meaning of the word "Kings," see on ver. 10; and on the symbol "Horns," as well as on the symbolical significance of the numbers "Seven" and "Ten,"—the former denoting totality in the abstract, the latter completeness as regards the world,—see on ch. xii. 3; xiii. 1; and Introd. § 11, a.

The "Horns" are probably to be regarded as borne by the seventh "Head" (see on ch. xii. 3), or seventh phase of the godless World-power. The "Ten Kings" symbolize the collective powers of the earth.

Burger suggests that if Seven expresses progressive development in time, Ten expresses contemporaneous perfection :—the "Ten Kings" therefore are to be contemporaneous.

Hengstenberg takes the number Ten, applied here to "Kings" or Kingdoms, to be a round number :—they are not individual Kings, as is plain from the whole character of the Apoc., which never deals with individuals, but always represents the future in its most general features. The "Heads" denote World-monarchies, of which there was always but one at a time.

The Roman Empire, writes Dean Vaughan, is the Beast's sixth Head; and like the former will pass away. The seventh Head is a mere cluster of Ten Horns. The end of Rome shall be not a conquest, but a dismemberment—not one Kingdom, but Ten Kingdoms (ii. p. 166). The Horns (he adds on ch. xix. 11) denote division, not concentration; this power is known by a plurality, not by a unity of crowns and thrones. To the same effect Bossuet, "C'est un caractère assez remarquable, que d'un seul empire il se forme tant de grands royaumes." On this principle the "Ten Horns" denote the kingdoms of the earth,—be their number what it may,—ending in the State-system of "the Last Times," which is completely under the rule, and at the command of Antichrist.

which have received no kingdom as yet;] Hengstenberg would render "had not yet received kingdom," or "dominion."—the matter in hand concerns not nations with their respective governments, but the combination of the Ten as the reigning power on the theatre of the world's history;—Ebrard explains not yet by the existence, when St. John wrote, of the Roman Empire, the sixth World-power, on the fall of which the "Horns" become the seventh: see on ver. 10;—Grotius understands "not as yet within the limits of the Roman Empire;" but this restriction is not mentioned in the text.

The words "no kingdom as yet" may intimate that what is spoken of is a something to arise subsequent to the ten horns on the Beast in Daniel, with which the "Ten Horns" here have been erroneously identified: "For the Beast itself is the 'Little Horn' that arises among those ten of Daniel (vii. 8), uprooting three, and therefore not co-existent with the Ten" (I. Williams p. 346).

Andreas, however, recognized here the ten horns, or Kings whom Daniel also saw. Of these Antichrist will slay three, and reduce the rest to his rule.

Bengel, with the codex A, reads "not" (οὐκ for οὐπω); and explains, have not received, because they have given it to the Beast (ver. 17). Burger (see above) also favours this reading: and he would interpret in connexion with the words, "for one hour," which follow :—"They are kings, indeed, but vassal-kings merely, dependent on the Beast;—kings, for they are clothed with royal power;—but only "as kings," for they have not received an actual kingdom. They enjoy their authority, moreover (see below), for a very short time—the $3\frac{1}{2}$ years of Antichrist's supremacy; see Dan. vii. 20-25.

but they receive authority as kings,] By the expression "as Kings," Hengst. under-13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

14 These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome ^a 1 Tim. 6. them: ^afor he is Lord of lords, and ¹⁵ ch. 19. ¹⁶.

stands the plenitude of regal power:—"as Kings that reign, not merely over their own subjects, but over the world;"—Words., on the contrary, takes it to denote "the precariousness of their power;"—and so Dusterd.: "Their Kingdom is not real, full, regal power; but as being transient, is represented as if it were royal power" (cf. ch. ix. 3);—Alf. thinks it represents "the reservation of their kingly rights in their alliance with the Beast;"—Auberlen would refer it to the absence of the "diadems" in ver. 3, indicating "that the Ten Kingdoms into which the Germano-Sclavonic world is to be divided, will lose their monarchical form in the end" (p. 302).

for one hour,] (On the accus., cf. ch. ix. 5; and also Matt. xxvi. 40). Shortness of duration (see ver. 10) is denoted here:—"especially" writes Words. as "compared with the power of the Beast's contrast, the Lamb, which is not for an hour, but for ever. On this use of 'hour,' cf. 2 Cor. vii. 8; Gal. ii. 5; 1 Thess. ii. 17; Philem. 15." See also ch. viii. 1; and cf. ch. xviii. 10:—why their authority is thus brief is told in ver. 14. Hengst. notes that history confirms this sense of short duration; for the first appearance of the German Tribes almost coincides with their conversion to Christianity.

Vitringa and Elliott give a different explanation—"at one and the same time with:" see ch. iii. 3, "thou shalt not know what hour (ποῖαν ὥραν) I will come upon thee." If St. John had meant "a short time," notes Vitringa (p. 776), he would have written πρὸς ὥραν (John v. 35; 2 Cor. vii. 8; &c.), or πρὸς καιρὸν ὥρας (1 Thess. ii. 17), or χρόνον ὀλίγον (Acts xiv. 28):—compare too ch. xii. 12. I. Williams also suggests: "They shall come into existence together with the Beast, as they enter into the description of the Beast when St. John first sees him rise from the sea (ch. xiii. 1)." The Vulg. renders "una hora accipiet post bestiam."

It seems more natural to understand "a short time,"—it may be the brief duration of Antichrist's reign at the End: cf. Matt. xxiv. 22. In ver. 17 the duration of their authority is limited to the time required for fulfilling "the words of God."

Volkmar as a Rationalist thus explains this verse: "They have not yet received Imperial power; they are at present, under the sixth (and seventh) "Head," merely simple Prefects of the Provinces; but—united to the fifth "Head" (Nero) when he returns to Rome as the eighth—these provincial rulers will exercise authority similar to the Imperial, though but for a short time," when the Emperor avenges himself on Rome (ver. 16);—and Renan: "The limited period for which the Proconsuls and Imperial Legates of the Ten chief provinces, who are not true Kings, receive their power from the Emperor" (p. 433).

with the beast.] I. e., in alliance with him. As to the meanings assigned to the "Ten Horns" see Note D at the end of this chapter.

13. These have one purpose;] Or "one mind," as A. V.

and their power and authority they give unto the Beast.] See vv. 11., and note the present tense, though the future is signified:—cf. 1 Macc. viii. 4. (On the reading of T. R., διαδιδώσουσιν, see Introd., § 8). The expression of ver. 12, "with the Beast" is enlarged upon in this verse; and then the unity of purpose of the "Ten Kings" and the Beast is referred to in ver. 17:—they are to war (1) with the Lamb, and (2) with the Harlot (vv. 14, 16).

Ewald notes, "the Satanic Nero-purpose;"—Renan writes: "If we could admit a retouching of the Apocalypse after the event ('des retouches post eventum') we might suppose a reference here to the attempts of the generals to re-establish the Neronian régime (Tac., Hist. ii. 71, 95; Sueton., Vitell. 11; Dion Cass. lxx. 4, 7). I have made many efforts to see whether Otho might not be the second Beast (ch. xiii. 11), or 'False Prophet,' which would explain ch. xiii. 12, 16, 17; but vv. 13–15 resist such an interpretation" (p. 488).

Ebrard anticipates an objection:—"How can the Ten Kingdoms receive power 'with the Beast' and yet, as the seventh World-power, precede the Beast who is the eighth?" The answer is to be found in the Book of Daniel. As in Dan. vii. 8 the 'Little Horn' arises among the other ten (and therefore while they exist), so the Beast rises, in his inchoate state, while the "Ten Horns" rule. They rule "for one hour with the Beast," who then appears alone and independently as an "eighth" World-power (s. 470).

14. These shall war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them,] This result is the reverse of that stated ch. xi. 7; xiii. 7. It points, by anticipation, to ch. xix. 11–21.

Lord of lords, and King of kings;] Cf. ch. xix. 16; 1 Tim. vi. 15; and also Deut. x. 17;

King of kings : and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

15 And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

Ps. lxxxix. 27 ; Dan. ii. 47 ; vii. 14. Not the Lamb only, "shall overcome them;" the same verb is to be carried on to the next clause,— and they [also shall overcome] that are with him, called and chosen and faithful.] I. e., the armies in heaven are to share in overcoming the "Ten Kings" (ch. xix. 14). "The armies which are in heaven" consist of those who, having been "called and chosen" on earth, in their Baptism, "to fight manfully under Christ's banner," have continued His "faithful soldiers and servants unto their lives' end:"—cf. on ch. iii. 22. Hengst. considers that the mention of "the called," &c., as instruments of Christ's victory, proves that the victory can be no bloody and destroying one; but one to be gained, through the peaceful mission of the Church, by the weapons specified in Eph. vi. 11–17. See on ch. xix. 14.

Bengel renders as does A. V.: "they that are with Him are called," &c. There seems, however, no reason why such a statement should be made here; the other rendering, too, is far more natural:—The Redeemed are represented as sharers in the victory; they must also be represented as sharers in the conflict: cf. Eph. vi. 10–17. Indeed these words supply a distinct echo of Pauline doctrine. In its theological sense—"nemo vocat nisi Deus"—"called" is found in the writings of St. John only here and in ch. xix. 9; "chosen" only here and 2 John 1, 13; and for "faithful," cf. ch. ii. 10; John xx. 27; 3 John 5.

THE MYSTERY OF THE WOMAN (15–18).

15. And he saith unto me,] A new clause; see on ver. 7. The judgment of the "Harlot," the chief figure in this Vision (see ver. 1), is now to be set forth. This judgment could not be comprehended without a previous insight into the relation between the "Harlot" and the Beast; and without understanding what the Beast symbolizes. :

The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot sitteth,] On the Beast beside the waters.

are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.] This authoritative explanation of the symbol of "the waters" is in strict harmony with Isai. viii. 7; cf. Ps. xviii. 4, 16; cxxiv. 4. All inhabitants of the earth are thus symbolized (cf. ch. xiii. 3, 8, 12, 16), for all serve the "Harlot"—see ver. 18. In such enumerations as this the number four is employed—"the signature of the earth"—see ch. v. 9; vii. 9; x. 11; xi. 9; xiv. 6.

Ebrard interprets: The Angel of ver. 1 gives this explanation, because the same Rome, which now appears as a "Harlot," had appeared in ch. xiii. 1 as the Beast from the sea; and hence, the meaning of "the sea" or "the waters" from which that Beast arose is now added. On this interpretation of Ebrard, see Note C on ch. xi. 7.

16. And the ten horns which thou sawest, and the beast,] (See vv. 11.). The alliance of the "Ten Kings" with the Beast—of the collective powers of the earth with the embodiment, at this particular time, of the principle of evil—is described in vv. 12, 13. (A nom. absolute: as persons are intended, the pronoun which follows (οὗτοι) is masculine).

these shall hate the harlot,] The reference is to what is still future:—the moving cause is God (ver. 17), the immediate occasion is not revealed, but the World-city, in which the resources of the godless World-power are concentrated, is to become an object of hatred to the former subjects of the "Harlot." "I will raise up thy lovers against thee" (Ezek. xvi. 37; xxiii. 22) was of old the denunciation against spiritual faithlessness: and subsequent history affords many an example of the enmity that arises at times between World-rulers and World-cities. Cf. Zech. i. 19: "These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem." and shall make her desolate] See on ver. 3. Note the contrast to ver. 4, and to ch. xviii. 16.

and naked,] This symbolism is based on Ezek. xvi. 35–39; xxiii. 22, 29:—"and shall leave thee naked and bare."

and shall eat her flesh,] The token of extreme hostility—see Psalm xxvii. 2; Micah iii. 3; cf. Jas. v. 3. Dürstendieck explains this figure as referring to the symbol of the Harlot; and the burning, in the next clause, as referring to the symbol of the City in ver. 18. Wordsworth understands the carneal element of her power, as distinguished from the spiritual.

and shall burn her utterly with fire.] See ch. xviii. 8, 18; and cf. Gen. xxxviii. 24; Ezek. xvi. 41.

17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree,

Alf. considers that the distinction drawn by Dusterd. cannot be pressed; cf. Lev. xx. 14; xxi. 9:—it cannot positively be said that nothing more than the burning of the City is now intended.

We thus see the severance of the World-power from the World-city, together with the destruction of the latter by the former—an event which marks the beginning of God's judgments on the antichristian World-power. So important a feature of the Divine scheme is this event, that ch. xviii. is devoted to the unfolding of its details.

I. Hengstenberg interprets:—The nations of the Germanic race are intended “who were destined by God to avenge the cause of Christ upon the persecutor Rome;” and he quotes St. Jerome in proof of the sufferings which Rome endured at the hands of Alaric, and the Barbarian invaders generally. So Grotius, Bossuet, Elliott and, generally, on the same principle, Dean Vaughan, who writes:—“The wild beast has Seven Heads, and Rome is the sixth. Rome therefore will pass away. But how? The prophecy answers, The seventh Head is a mere cluster of Ten Horns. The Roman Empire will have no one successor. Its end shall not be a conquest, but a dismemberment . . . not one kingdom, but Ten Kingdoms. Diverse in all else, these Ten Kingdoms shall make common cause against their one predecessor. The very Beast on which Rome has for so long triumphantly ridden shall shake her off, shall turn upon her, shall aid the Ten Kings in her spoliation and destruction. Thus in this form . . . shall the last of the Seven Heads rise into vitality, and the last of the Seven Empires begin its reign. And there shall be none later than that seventh: there shall be no more World-Empires. Six single powers, and then Antichrist, and then the End:—see 1 Thess. ii. 3, 8” (ii. p. 167).

II. On the other hand Words. uses this passage as another proof that the “Harlot” cannot be Heathen Rome; for it is certain that the Heathen City of Rome was not destroyed by any powers that grew out of the Empire of Rome” . . . “The Horns of the Beast, i. e., some Powers that have grown out of the Roman Empire, will one day be alienated from the Papacy:—“The Harlot City,” writes Tertullian, “is to receive its deserved retribution from the Ten Kings, which will grow out of the dismemberment of the Roman Empire” (De Res. Carn. 25). “The ruin of Papal Rome will not be effected by Protestant Nations, but by Papal Princes and People rising against her.” To the same effect

Vitranga (p. 780). I. Williams interprets generally of “a Christian Church, not keeping her faith:”—“Rome and Jerusalem,” he adds, “were united in putting Christ to death, and in persecuting His Church; but Rome rose against Jerusalem, and burnt it with fire—itsself surviving; so the Beast and the Ten Kings are combined with the Harlot in persecuting Christ's witnesses and saints for a time, but rise afterward against her, and destroy her with fire. . . . Ancient idolatrous Rome slew Christ and his saints, and then proceeded to make desolate, destroy, and burn the harlot Jerusalem” (p. 354). And more generally still, Auberlen: “The Church which, instead of witnessing against the apostate World-power, committed fornication with it, shall be judged by that very World-power. The time will come when worldly rulers . . . shall make the Harlot desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire, to designate the fulness of carnality into which the Church is sunk” (p. 318). See above on ver. 1.

III. Godet writes:—Babylon is the capital of the universal monarchy which Antichrist will found (see on ver. 11). Seated on Seven Mountains it is certain that Babylon denotes Rome. It is then at Rome that the residence of the Jewish Monarch is first to be: “But how can a Jew forget the mortal blow that his nation has formerly received from Rome? . . . God has made use of Rome to chastise Israel; He is about to make use of Israel to judge Rome. It is the old antagonism between Jew and Pagan—the most profound antithesis of history—which now attains to its supreme crisis. Rome is reduced by triumphant Israel to the actual state of Nineveh or of Babylon. After this act of vengeance, Antichrist will go to establish, as we have seen (ch. xi. 7, 8), at Jerusalem, his natural capital” (p. 374). Here takes place the struggle of the Beast with the “Two Witnesses,” and the conversion of Israel, already restored politically. This is what is revealed in the “Little Book,” in ch. xi.

IV. Rationalists in general interpret this passage as referring to the return of Nero and his allies to take vengeance on Rome. E.g. Reuss (Hist. of Theol. p. 383): “Heaven will not defile itself by direct contact with ‘the mother of Harlots,’ the modern Babylon. This shall be chastised by the king it has rejected—by Nero the Antichrist returning at the head of the armies of the East.” Renan seems rather disposed to ascribe what St. John writes here (“le pamphlet du chef des Églises d’Asie”) to his having witnessed the submission of the generals of the armies in and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

18 And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

the different provinces—Vindex, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Mucianus, Vespasian, &c.—to the central authority in order to reconstitute the Empire. They humiliated Rome by depriving her of the sole right of disposing of the Empire (“evulgato imperii arcano posse principem alibi quam Romæ fieri”—Tacit. Hist. i. 4); and they went so far as to threaten to stop her supply of food,—see Joseph. B. J. iv. x. 5, &c. (p. 434).

17. For God did put in their hearts] The aorist. is proleptic:—cf. ch. xvi. 16. The moving cause of the unexpected fact predicted in ver. 16 is now assigned: the immediate cause is not revealed. Here the influence proceeds from God, see ch. xviii. 8;—in ch. xvi. 14, 16, it proceeds from the “three unclean spirits.” to perform his purpose,] The Vulgate [“Deus enim dedit in corda eorum ut faciant quod placitum est illi”], Stuart, Züllig, Hengst., Words., Alf., Burger, understand “to perform unconsciously God’s purpose, while they appear to accomplish their own”—see ver. 13. Bengel, De Wette, Düsterd., Bisping, understand “the Beast’s purpose,”—it is God who has impelled them to unite with and serve the Beast. Appeal is made to the expression “until the words of God,” &c., below; and also to the unsuitable connexion of the “Divine purpose” and the “human purpose” in one clause:—we might, however, rather expect to read “the Beast’s,” not “His purpose,” if such a meaning were intended; see the repetition of the word “Beast” below. Reuss does not decide: Ils feront son dessein (de Dieu ou de la bête.).”

and to perform one purpose,] Or translate “to do his mind, and to come to one mind,]. The words of ver. 13 repeated.

and to give their kingdom unto the beast,] For the interpretations which have been assigned to these words, see on vv. 13, 16.

until the words of God should be accomplished.] See vv. 11. This clause corresponds to the first words of the verse. “The words of God” in this place may be compared with “the mystery of God” in ch. x. 7. According to Burger, “The words of God” here signify, “the prophecies which in the Old and in the New Test. treat of these Last Days.” The action of the “Ten Kings” has not only its end in the fulfilment of “the words,” i. e., the expressed will of God; but also its limit:—when they have thus acted their power is over, see ver. 12. Ebrard on ch. xix. 9 expounds: Antichrist, the Beast from the Abyss, allied with the “Ten Kings” shall exercise unlimited rule, as the “eightb” World-power (ver. 11), until the “words of God” shall be fulfilled through the Marriage of the Lamb.

The mighty influence of the world-ruling City becomes oppressive to Antichrist. He will be sole ruler: “World-ruler and World-city must always be found together; the despotic military influence of the one, and the democratic commercial influence of the other—Communism and Cæsarism—must always be united, if there is to be one form of World-power. But if this result is attained, the internal contrast between both regularly emerges. World-ruler and World-city part in twain, from the very nature of things, and in the first instance to the disadvantage of the World-city. Historical examples of how results of this nature come to pass are conspicuous in ancient and modern times: e.g. the conflicts between the Emperors and the Urbs,—between Paris and its Cæsars” (Kliefoth, in loc.).

18. the great city, that reigneth] Gr. that hath a kingdom] The present tense defines the period to be the time when St. John wrote. Expositors of every school generally agree that Rome Pagan, or Rome Papal, or Rome under both aspects, is intended here.—see on ver. 9. Whatever applications may be made of this prophecy, and wherever the concentration of the World-power may be placed at any period of history, it is plain that when St. John wrote Pagan Rome was such a City as this verse describes. Here we have one of the leading subjects of modern controversy; and some of the results may be mentioned in this place:—

“Papal Rome,” writes Hengst., “has never had for the Papacy the same importance which heathen Rome had for the Roman Empire. The Pope has never been, like the Emperor, only the representative of Rome, so that the dominion might be attributed not to him but to Rome, as is done here.” He quotes in proof:—

“Terrarum Dea gentiumque Roma, Cui par est nihil, et nihil secundum.”
(Martial.)

“Per omnes quotquot sunt partes terrarum et Domina suscepta et regina” (Amm. Marcell.). So too the same Temple was erected to Rome and to Augustus; Hadrian erected a Temple in the city to Rome herself; &c.

Ebrard explains:—Not "the Great City" of ch. xi. 8; for that was destroyed by the earthquake (ch. xvi. 18, 19), before "the one hour" of ver. 12. In ch. xi. 8; xvi. 19, "the Great City" is a type; here it is the exposition of a type, being what the "Woman" signifies; and a type cannot be explained by a type. The actual "City" here corresponds rather to one of the three parts into which that typical City was divided by the earthquake—see on ch. xvi. 19; for the "Woman"—Babylon, or the City of Rome—is become in these last times, since the earthquake, no longer a Kingdom, but the seat of the power of the "False Prophet" (s. 474.)

Dean Vaughan writes: "The Babylon of St. John's time, the Babylon to which this prophecy primarily refers, was the great Roman Empire One of the chief uses of Prophecy would have been lost if that application had not been thus clear and decisive To promise the Church under Domitian deliverance from the yoke of the Papacy, would have been to mock, and not to console" (ii., p. 201).

Bishop Wordsworth argues that the full extent of the prophecies of the Apocalypse here, and in ch. xviii., concerning the fall of the Great City, were not fulfilled by such events as the capture of Rome by Alaric, or the assaults of the different Barbarian nations. Nevertheless, when the Imperial power of Germany was broken, and the Bishops of Rome after Gregory VII. acquired a spiritual and temporal sway under the titles which the Popes now "assumed of Sovereign-Pontiff and Supreme Head of the Universal Church, Vicar of Christ upon Earth and 'Ruler of the World,' he stood in a more lofty eminence than had ever been attained by the Cæsars": "Therefore," he concludes, "since it is generally agreed that these prophecies concern Rome, and since they were not fulfilled in Heathen Rome; and since they concern Rome as she was to become after she had ceased to be Heathen; and since, after she had ceased to be Heathen, she became in course of time subject to the Bishop of Rome, and has continued to be subject to him for many hundred years; therefore, our conclusion is, that they concern Rome as the capital City of the Bishop of Rome, and of the Papal World" (p. 251).

In order to repel the application to the Papacy, many Roman expositors also apply what is said of the destruction of Rome, to the future—to Rome again become Pagan: "This is the hypothesis," observes Bishop Wordsworth, of "Suarez, Viegas, Ribera, Lessius, Menochius, C. à Lapide, and others, particularly Dr. Manning in our own day" (ib.). Thus Stern (s. 374) writes:—"Babylon is really the City of Rome, not only, however, according to the old-heathenish, but also according to the new-heathenish signification of the World's history. So long as Rome maintains Christianity, so long God forgets, humanly speaking, her ancient guiltiness. But in the last times of the New Test. World-history, many inhabitants of the Roman obedience will abandon their holy Catholic faith; will unite with the revolutionists of all lands; nay, unmeasured wickedness will rear its throne in Rome, after the Holy Father with his faithful Bishops and Priests and the pious believers shall have been hunted into the desert." And Bellarmine (De Rom. Pont. iv 4.): "Tunc etiam summus Pontifex Romanus Pontifex dicetur et erit, licet Romæ non habitet, sicut accidit tempore Totilæ." It is irrelevant to urge in reply to such an interpretation the discordance between it and the conclusions of other schools of Roman theologians who consider that these prophecies were fulfilled in ancient Heathen Rome:—it can only be said that, like all Futurist expositions, its acceptance or non-acceptance rests on some preconceived theory.

The use of the present tense in the expressions "The Woman is," "which reigneth," is urged by many (e.g. De Wette, Dusterd.) as proof that, by "the Great City," Rome only—the capital, when St. John lived, of the World-empire typified by the Beast—can be meant. But, as Bengel notes, we must rather interpret these present tenses from the standpoint of the Vision (cf. ch. iii. 12; xi. 7), as signifying, not the City which now rules the world in the days of the Seer, but as the seat where the World-power is concentrated at each crisis of history; especially in the days of Antichrist—to which time, however, the words need not be restricted. How the World-ruling City may be called in the last times, we do not know; how at any previous time, we need not absolutely determine.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XVII.

NOTE A ON VER. 4—ANCIENT PEARLS.

Pearl—Μαργαρίτης: Margarita: and later Margaritum—seems to have been known
New Test.—VOL. IV.

from the earliest times to the Asiatic Greeks in consequence of their intercourse with the Persians, ever its greatest admirers. Among the motives impelling Cæsar to attempt the conquest of Britain was the fame of its pearl fisheries. Pearls in the ancient world held the highest rank among precious stones, and for an obvious reason—their beauty is entirely due to Nature, being susceptible of no improvement from art.

B B B

As no two Pearls were ever found exactly alike, this circumstance gave origin to the name 'Unio' (unique). But in Low Latin, 'Margarita(um)' and 'Perla' became a generic name; 'Unio' being restricted to the fine, spherical specimens—see King, The Natural Hist. of Precious Stones, pp. 258–267. "Unio," used as a noun masc., denotes a single large pearl (pearl in Hoch-deutsch is perala), see Pliny, ix. 35, 112, 123;¹ Senec. De Ben. vii. 9; Mart. viii. 81, 4; xii. 49, 13. Shakspeare uses union for pearl in Hamlet, v. 2.

NOTE B ON VER. 4—BABYLON (p. 469).

Tertullian seems to have been the first of the Fathers who transferred the name Babylon to Rome:—"Sic et Babylon apud Joannem nostrum Romanæ urbis figuram portat, proinde et magnæ et regno superbæ et sanctorum debellatricis." Adv. Jud. c. 9;—see also Adv. Marc. iii. 13. "Et prostituta illa civitas a decem regibus dignos exitus referat."—De Resurr. c. 25. "Illa civitas valida, quæ super montes septem et plurimas aquas præsidet, cum prostitute appellationem a domino meruisset, quali habitu appellationi suæ comparata est? Sedet certe in purpura cum coccino et auro et lapide pretioso." De Fem. Cult. c. 12;—cf. Scorp. c. 12.

St. Irenæus understands by Babylon the Roman Empire which is to be divided among the Ten Kings:—

"Manifestus adhuc etiam de novissimo tempore, et de his qui sunt in eo decem regibus, in quos dividitur quod nunc regnat Imperium, significavit Joannes Domini discipulus in Apocalypsi, edisserens quæ fuerint decem cornua, quæ a Daniele visa sunt. . . . et reliqui subjiciuntur ei et ipse 'octavus' in eis; et 'vastabunt Babylonem, et comburent eam igni, et dabunt Regnum suum Bestiæ.'" Adv. Her. v. 26, p. 323.

St. Jerome styles Rome, though Christian, Babylon:—"Cum in Babylone versarer, et purpuratæ meretricis essem colonus, et jure Quiritum viverem," &c.—Lib. Didymi de Sp. Sancto, Præf. t. ii. p. 105.

On Isai. xxiv. 7, 8, he also writes:—"Atteretur . . . spiritualis Babylon, quæ sedet in septem montibus purpurata, cujus supplicia in Apocalypsi Joannis legimus." t. ii. p. 332.

And on Isai. xlvii. 1 (ib., p. 549):—"Licet ex eo quod juxta LXX scriptum est, filia Babylonis, non ipsam Babylonem quidam, sed Romanam urbem interpretantur, quæ in Apocalypsi Joannis et in Epistola Petri, Babylon specialiter appellatur."

And once more writing to Marcella:—"Lege Apocalypsin Joannis, et quid de muliere purpurata, et scripta in ejus fronte blasphemia, septem montibus, aquis multis, et Babylonis cantetur exitu, contuere. 'Exite,' inquit Dominus, 'de illa, populus meus,'" &c. (Rev. xviii. 4). Epist. 46, t. i. p. 206. (The object of this Epistle is to persuade Marcella to leave Rome, and to take up her abode in Palestine). See on 1 Pet. v. 13.

In the Middle Ages Rome is not seldom styled "the Western Babylon" (see the references to this fact by Mr. Chas. Maitland, l. c., p. 299, &c.). As already stated the Papacy, while in Avignon, was regarded by Dante as fulfilling Rev. xvii. He is followed by Petrarch, who writes: "Babylon, fens Rhodani ripis imposita, famosa dicam an infamis meretrix, fornicata cum regibus terræ? Illa quidem ipsa es quam in spiritu sacer vidit Evangelista. Illa eadem, inquam, es, non alia, sedens super aquas multas, sive ad littora tribus cincta fluminibus," &c.—Epist. in Titulo, xvi. (xx).—See Cary's note on the Inferno, xix. 106–111.

It was a principle with the later Reformers to identify Babylon, in the character of the Harlot, with the Apostate Church. Calvin (Instit. iv. 2, 12; vii. 21, 25; 9.4) concluded that all the notes of Babylon, which he identifies with Antichrist, were to be found in the Papacy. Nevertheless he distinguished (iv. 2, 12) Roman Catholic Christendom from the Papacy existing in it. He concedes as to the former, "ecclesias apud eos esse nec inficiamur," maintaining, however, that the Papacy itself was an antichristian institution.

Among the Lutherans it is a recognized doctrine that the Pope "is the veritable Antichrist" (Art. Smalc. iv.). And Turretin (A.D. 1703) writes: "Constans est omnium Reformatorum et Protestantium fides Antichristum illum magnum esse Papam Romanum."—Comp. Theol. 16, 15, Contr. 1.

In opposition to this Protestant interpretation there arose in the Church of Rome a school of expositors (Ribera, 1591; Viega, 1601; Alcasar, 1614; &c.) which adopted the formal principle of the Reformers, viz. t.:

¹ Pliny writes: The worth or quality of Pearls lies wholly "in candore, magnitudine, orbe, levore, pondere, haud promptis rebus in tantum ut nulli duo reperiantur indiscreti, unde nomen unionum Romanæ scilicet imposuere deliciæ." He tells of one Clodius, who "singulos uniones convivis absorbendos dedit;" adding how "Ælius Stilo Jugurthino bello unionem nomen impositum maxime grandibus margaritis prodit."

identification of Babylon with Rome, but who inferred from 2 Thess. ii. that Antichrist will be a man living in the last times, and who is symbolized by the Beast of ch. xiii. This school assumed that the interval between the Ascension of Christ and the appearance of the personal Antichrist is passed over in the Apocalypse, which only contains a prophecy concerning "the three and a half years" before Christ's Second Advent; and by this period they understood three and a half common years. Turretin (l. c., 16, 15, 1) thus characterizes this school:—"Pontificii Antichristum fingunt hominem singularem et unicum, ortum ex tribu Dan, qui se pro Judæorum Messia venditans, spatio trium annorum cum dimidio, templum Hierosolymitanum instaurabit, universum orbem subiget, Henochum et Eliam redivivos trucidabit, totum Christianismum evertet, seipsum in templo restaurato proponet adorandum, ac tandem a Christo in monte Oliveti, ex quo paraturus sit ascensionem in cælum, occidetur." To this effect, with minute variations, Stern¹ and Bisping interpret the Apocalypse.

NOTE C ON VER. 9—THE SEVEN MOUNTAINS.

The applicability of the symbol of the Seven Heads, as denoting seven mountains, to the City of Rome, is obvious. Rome was ordinarily styled "the Seven-hilled City,"—ἡ πόλις ἡ ἑπτάλοφος,—"Urbs septicollis." She was celebrated as such in an annual national festival, the Septimontium. Thus Varro (ob. B.C. 28) writes: "Dies Septimontium nominatus ab his septem montibus in quibus sita Roma est."—De ling. Lat. iv.; and Plutarch: τὸ Σεπτιμόντιον ἀγούσιν ἐπὶ τῷ τῶν ἑβδομὸν λόφον τῇ πόλει προσκατανεμηθῆναι, καὶ τὴν Ῥώμην ἑπτάλοφον γενίσθαι.—Probl. Rom. p. 280. See also Tertullian De Idol. 10; Ad Nationes, ii. 15.

"Of the seven hills, the Quirinal and Viminal are styled colles, whilst the others, though without any apparent reason, are called montes. It cannot depend upon their height, since those called colles are as lofty as those dignified with the more imposing name of montes; whence it seems probable that the difference originated in the ancient traditions respecting the Septimontium."—Smith's Dict. of G. and R. Geogr. ii. 721.

¹ Stern writes: "Most of the expositors of the Apocalypse and many of the Fathers are of opinion that in the 17th and following chapters the downfall of heathen Rome is predicted. Already the Jews were wont to apply the name Babylon to Rome, which they hated so bitterly:—see Schöttgen, Hor. Hebr. pp. 1050, 1125. Babylon in the Last Days Stern identifies with "das abgöttisch gewordene Rom" (s. 382).

To give a few quotations out of many:—

Virgil:—

"Illa inclyta Roma, . . .
"Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces."
Æn. vi. 783.

Cicero:—

"Hoc tu indaga, ut soles; ast hoc magis: ἐξ ὁσίων ἑπτάλοφον."—Ad Attic., vi. 5.

Horace:—

"Di quibus septem placuere colles."
Carm. Sac. 7.

Tibullus:—

"Carpite nunc tauri de septem montibus herbas."—ii. 5, 55.

Ovid:—

"Sed quæ de septem totum circumspicit orbem Montibus imperii Roma deumque locus."
Trist. i. 4, 69.

Martial, celebrating the view from the Janiculum, writes:—

"Hinc septem dominos videre montes Et totum licet æstimare Romam."—iv. 64, 11.

Claudian:—

"Aurea septem-geminas Roma coronet arces."—xii. 19 (ed. Gesner).

Prudentius:—

"Divum favore cum puer Mavortius Fundaret arcem septicollem Romulus."
Peristeph. x. 412.

See, in loc., Wetstein, Wordsworth (Sequel to Letters to Gondon, xi.), Alford.

NOTE D ON VER. 10—THE SEVEN HEADS AND TEN HORNS.

The "Seven Heads" (or "Kings") are variously understood (see on ch. xiii. 1):—

I. As Seven Kingdoms:—a. (1) Egypt, (2) Assyria, (3) Babylonia, (4) Medo-Persia, (5) Græcia, (6) Rome, (7) The Roman Empire reconstituted after the Barbaric invasions:—so Auberlen, Keil (On Daniel, Engl. tr. p. 279), Hengst, Alford. Stern partially accepts this classification: he omits Egypt, and divides (4) into Media as the third, and Persia as the fourth Kingdom,—the seventh "Head" being a new heathen power which in the Last Days is to rule the nations from Rome.

b. (1) Assyria, (2) Babylonia, (3) Persia, (4) Macedonia, (5) Syria under Antiochus Epiphanes, (6) Rome, (7) The "Ten Horns" of ver. 12 combined into a seventh Apocalyptic World-kingdom:—so Hofmann, and Ebrard.

c. (1) Babylonia, (2) Medo-Persia, (3) Macedonia, (4) Syria, (5) Egypt, (6) Heathen Imperial Rome, (7) "The Imperial power of Germany:—so Words. The same principle of interpretation was adopted by Andreas (for whom the seventh World-kingdom began with Constantine, and the eighth is the Kingdom of Antichrist), Beda, N. de Lyra.

d. For Godet's opinion, see on ch. xiii. 1.

II. As the Seven forms of Roman government, Republican and Imperial:—i. (1) Kings, (2) Consuls, (3) Decemviri, (4) Military Tribunes, (5) Dictators, (6) Emperors, (7) The rule of Odoacer. So Calovius, whom Vitringa (p. 771) calls "Anonymus," adding that Launoy—who also understood by the "Kings" the forms of government at Rome—substituted for Odoacer, the series of Popes who, before they gained temporal power, had constituted the seventh King, and after they gained it, became the eighth King of ver. 11. Mede understands the same forms of government, but regards the "False Prophet" (ch. xiii. 11) or Roman Bishop as the seventh: "the last Head of the Beast is indeed but the seventh, yet in some respects is an eighth [see ver. 11]," for the Sixth Head, or rule of the Cæsars—that "which was" in St. John's day—"declined at length to a Demi-Cæsar confined to the West, which being in some sort diverse from the former, takes the seventh place, and makes the "False Prophet" the eighth. But being, as in name, so in substance, the same Cæsar with the former, 'the False Prophet' (in whose time the Whore rides the Beast) is still in order the seventh. The 'False Prophet,' beginning his dominion as soon almost as the Demi-Cæsar, is therefore in order of time the seventh as well as he;"—though the Demi-Cæsar is soon gone, the 'False Prophet' still survives, succeeding him as it were an eighth (Opp. pp. 524, 922). ii. To the preceding may be added: "Septem capita esse septem illos montes [scil. Romæ], et etiam septem Reges, quo numero intelliguntur omnes Romani Imperatores."—Bellarmino (de Rom. Pont. iii. 5). iii. Vitringa notes (see above on the interpretation of Calovius): "Longe magis mihi aridet systema Anonymi" (p. 773); but he proceeds to suggest a new interpretation, viz. that the "Seven Kings" of the mystical Babylon, or the seven more eminent Popes, are intended by the "Seven Heads" of the Beast,—that is to say, before the Reformation, Gregory VII., Alexander III., Innocent III., Boniface VIII., John XXII.;—and after the Reformation, Paul III., and Paul V. (see also his note on ch. xiii. 1, p. 592). iv. Akin to this is the following interpretation,—the "Seven Kings" denote the Patriarchs of Alexandria, Jerusalem, Antioch, Constantinople, Rome, Gaul, Spain; so Cocceius.

III. Allegorical explanations:—a. The Seven capital vices—the pride of the lion, the avarice of the tiger, the luxury of the bear, the gluttony of the wolf, the envy of the serpent, the anger of the viper, the sloth of the ass: so Tiranus on ch. xii. 3 (Comm. in S. Script., 1632, vol. iii. p. 581); but he also explains the Dragon's Heads as further denoting "septem sibi famulantes reges et regna:" see his notes on ch. xiii. 1; xvii. 9;—b. On the same principle Alcasar (l. c., p. 678) understands the Seven Christian persecutions.

IV. The literal explanations: The "Seven Heads" are Seven personal Rulers—literally Seven "Kings, or Emperors of Rome."

Mr. Maurice, as a "Preterist," makes Nero the fifth Emperor; Galba is the sixth ("the one is"); Otho, the seventh ("is not yet come"): "When Nero died, it seemed as if the wild Beast into which imperial government had transformed itself, was extinct; Vitellius ['the eighth'] would show that it lived and breathed" (l. c., p. 326).

This principle is accepted with one consent by the rationalistic school. The idea, however, is by no means original:—see the interpretation of St. Hippolytus, as given in Note C on ch. xii. 3; and also the method of Victorinus (see below Note E), which was applied in a manner equally arbitrary by Hammond and Grotius. This interpretation received a more systematic application in 1781 from Corrodi, a Swiss theologian in his "Histoire du Chilasme;" and through Eichhorn (in 1791), and Bleek (in 1820) it has become the leading feature of rationalistic exegesis. Among modern rationalists, Renan (as formerly Wetstein) gives the interpretation in a form somewhat modified. He makes the series of the Roman Cæsars to begin with Julius (see Note C on ch. xiii. 3); but the order of the Emperors is taken by the vast majority to be:—(1) Augustus, (2) Tiberius, (3) Caligula, (4) Claudius, (5) Nero, (6) Galba, (7) Otho, (8) Vitellius, (9) Vespasian, (10) Titus. The forms of the literal interpretation may, accordingly, be classified; and thus the "Seven Heads" are as follows:—

(a.) The five before Domitian.—(1) Galba, (2) Otho, (3) Vitellius, (4) Vespasian, (5) Titus; then (6) Domitian, (7) Nerva;—so Victorinus. (b.) The Emperors counted from the Cæsar who first opposed Christianity,—(1) Claudius, (2) Nero, (3) Galba, (4) Otho, (5) Vitellius, (6) Vespasian, (7) Titus, (8) Domitian;—so Hammond and Grotius:—"He begins from Claudius," writes Grotius, "because Tiberius and Caius had no knowledge of the Christians: and, as Ezekiel always computes times from his own deportation, so John also counts the Emperors from his" (in loc.). (c.) Assuming that Nero must be the fifth Head,—the Head "smitten unto death" (ch. xiii. 3),—and that the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, i. e., between the end of Dec. 69 and the spring of the year 70, under Vespasian (who is, therefore, the sixth "Head")—Lücke, Bleek, and Düsterd. decide on counting thus, (1) Augustus, (2) Tiberius, (3) Caligula, (4) Claudius, (5) Nero, (6) Vespasian, (7) Titus, (8) Domitian. Nero they argue died June 9, A.D. 68. Galba was now recognized as Emperor by the Senate, and was assassinated January 15, A.D. 69, on which day Otho was proclaimed. Otho put an end to his own life on April 17, and was succeeded by Vitellius, who was slain Dec. 21. The "Principate" of Vespasian, however, dated from July 1, A.D. 69, on which day "the Legions swore to him at Alexandria" (see Merivale, l.c. vol. vi. p. 477). The three short reigns of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, Lücke regards as a mere interregnum, and as not deserving a place in the list of Emperors. This interregnum, accordingly, following the suicide of Nero, "the fifth King," the last of the line of the Cæsars, constituted the "death-stroke" of ch. xiii. 3. The "healing" of the wound was effected by Vespasian, "the sixth King," who restored the full power of the Roman Empire by founding the new dynasty of the Flavii. The sole proof of this theory offered by Düsterd. consists in the words with which Suetonius begins his life of Vespasian: "Rebellione trium principum et cæde incertum diu et quasi vagum imperium suscepit firmavitque tandem gens Flavia." This passage, however, by the mere application of the title "Principes" to the three—Galba, Otho, and Vitellius—distinctly recognizes the right of each to the name of Emperor (see Introd. § 4, b). Thus Ovid contrasts Romulus with Augustus:

"Vis tibi grata fuit; florent sub Cæsare leges; Tu Domini nomen, Principis ille tenet."
Fast. ii. 142.

The title of "Imperator" conveyed the idea of the ruler's military capacity; the title of "Princeps" conveyed the idea of the highest civil pre-eminence (see Merivale, l.c., iii. p. 452). And consequently as Julius is the first (see Note C on ch. xiii. 3), and Nero the sixth Emperor, so Galba (as Renan allows) must be regarded as the seventh. This theory, indeed, of Lücke and Düsterd. has been devised in order to preserve some slight authority for the Apocalypse as a prophetic Book (see on ver. 11); but it is utterly extinguished by the light of history.

(d.) On the rationalistic principle pure and simple, the "Seven Kings" are the Seven Cæsars beginning with Augustus.—Nero being thus the fifth: Galba is the sixth, and his advanced age indicates that a new reign is close at hand. 'Every one in the year 68 must have known' that Galba's successor, the seventh "King," would be either Otho or Vitellius; and as St. John 'believed' (see ch.

xiii. 5) that the world was to come to an end in three years and a half, the reign of this seventh must be of short duration. Then comes the eighth, or Nero returning from the Abyss as Antichrist:—so Volckmar, in loc.; so Ewald; and also, De Wette, Credner, Guericke, Réville, Scholten, Krenkel, &c. Reuss lays down the principle of this school: "The Beast is the seat of the 'Woman'; consequently something local—an Empire which has 'Seven Kings' at its head (sept têtes):"—the reigning Head, the sixth, is Galba.

Renan, who understands history, argues differently;—although he too accepts the "Nero-fable" ("cette idée, mère de l'Apocalypse," p. 351), namely, that the dead Nero was to return as Antichrist;—and he concludes: The "Seven Heads" are the Seven Emperors from Julius Cæsar to Galba. Galba, the seventh, reigns for the moment, but he is old and feeble. The sixth, Nero, who is at the same time the Beast and one of the "Seven Kings," is not dead according to popular belief; he will reign again (the final catastrophe being only three and a half years distant); he will thus be the eighth King; and will then perish (p. 433):—On the "Nero-fable," see Note E.

(e.) Stuart regards it as indifferent whether we begin with Julius or Augustus; i.e., whether Nero or Galba is the sixth: St. John only seeks to cover the ground till the close of the persecution then raging; and Otho's short reign would make no difference (l.c., p. 325).

(f.) That no eccentricity of interpretation should be wanting, Rinck (s. 62) combines the principle of Hammond and Grotius (see above b.) and the arbitrary hypothesis of Lücke (see above c.), with the Nero-fable;—He begins with the Emperor whom he assumes to have been the first persecutor, (1) Caligula; then come (2) Claudius, (3) Nero, (4) Vespasian, (5) Titus, (6) Domitian, (7) Nerva—and Nero revived is to be regarded as a prophetic and indefinite unit ("Eins") for all the Cæsars who follow until the subversion of the Roman Empire.

V. The hypothesis of Zullig is still more eccentric: The Beast is Edom—that is to say, false Judaism. In 1 Chron. i. 43–50, we find the names of eight kings of Edom. The fourth is named Hadad; and, consequently, the eighth, who is also named Hadad, "is of the [previous] Seven" (see ver. 11);—or, perhaps, in the catalogue of Gen. xxxvi. the name should be always written Hadar (as in ver. 39, where the Hebrew ḥ is put for ḥ);—or, again, it might be Harad, the root of the name Herod. Now the Herods sprang from Edom; and we have accordingly, in these eight kings, types of the new Edomite kings over Israel,—viz. (1) Herod the Great,

(2) Archelaus, (3) Philip, (4) Herod Antipas, (5) Agrippa I., (6) Herod of Chalcis, (7) Agrippa II. (Acts xxv. 13), whom Josephus (B. J., iii. 17) and Justus of Tiberias (ap. Phot. Cod. xxxiii.) name as the seventh and last of these kings, who reigned until A.D. 100 (see Winer R. WW. B., art. Herodes). This conclusion is shared by Herder and Wetstein; who regard the entire Beast as the Judaism which persecuted Christianity. On the reference to "Edom" see Renan, quoted on ch. xiv. 8.

VI. The "Kings" understood by the Greek interpreters: see I. Williams quoted on ver. 9.

VII. The interpretation of the "Futurists":—

i. (a) See the theory of Roman Catholic Expositors as stated in the note on ver. 18.

(b) According to Todd (p. 281) and De Burgh ("I do believe it is Rome, but Rome as it shall be, and not Rome as it is," p. 319) this prophecy relates to Rome in that future time to which this Vision refers.

ii. Bengel is partly a "Futurist":—The prophecy, he writes, regards "Seven Mountains" according to the times of the Beast, in which the Palatine is deserted, and the Vatican flourishes. The "Seven Heads" have not a double meaning; but one only compounded of a Mountain and a King:—There is (1) the Mons Caelius and on it the Lateran with Gregory VII. and his successors;—(2) Mons Vaticanus with the temple of St. Peter, from Boniface VIII.;—(3) Mons Quirinalis, with the temple of St. Mark, and the Quirinal Palace, from Paul II.;—(4) Mons Esquilinus, with the temple of St. Maria the Greater, from Paul V. From these four spots, Papal Bulls given from the City, have been dated: no fifth, sixth, or seventh: "Mountain" has as yet been so respected by the Popes. Bengel considers that this fact establishes the truth of his interpretation.

VIII. In the Chronicle of Roger de Hoveden (ed. of the "Master of the Rolls," vol. iii. p. 75) under the year 1190, we are told of an interview at Messina between Richard I. and the Abbot Joachim. The Chronicler thus reports Joachim's explanation of this verse:—"There are Seven Kings"; namely Herodes, Nero, Constantius, Maumet, Melsemutus, Saladinus, Antichristus; of these 'five' have fallen; . . . 'and one is,' namely Saladinus, who at this time oppresses the Church of God, and keeps possession of it with the Sepulchre of our Lord, and the Holy City Jerusalem; . . . 'one of them is not yet come,' namely Antichristus. Concerning this Antichristus, the same Joachim says that he is already born in the city of Rome, and will be elevated to the Apostolic See."¹

On this Professor Stubbs notes that the explanation of the present verse given in Joachim's Commentary (Venice, 1527) "is not in close agreement with the account given in Benedict and Hoveden, but is not sufficiently inconsistent with it to prove the latter to be a fabrication. The Bollandists contend that the whole account is a forgery, but this is extremely improbable" (ib., p. 76). Professor Stubbs adds that Joachim, in his Commentary, had made the fourth Head to be Chosroes, king of Persia, "sub quo perditus Maometus invaluit"; the fifth the Emperor Henry I.; while the seventh begins with Frederick II.:—"but this was probably written after the quarrel of Frederick II. with the Papacy." Melsemutus was "the second monarch of the Almohad dynasty."

Among the interpretations of the "Ten Horns" we meet the following:—

I. (i.) According to Vitranga: Ten Kingdoms arise out of the fragments of the Roman Empire, and are recognized in the world, in organized form, about the time of the appearance of Antichrist, in Cent. xi. The kingdoms are (1) Gaul, (2) Spain, (3) Germany, (4) England, (5) Scotland, (6) Denmark, (7) Sweden, (8) Hungary, (9) Bohemia, (10) Poland; all ready to recognize the supremacy of the See of Rome;—(ii.) Hengst. and Words.: They are Kings or Kingdoms, as Daniel's Vision explains (ch. vii. 24), growing out of the Roman Empire at its dismemberment;—(iii.) Alford: Ten European powers arising out of Daniel's Fourth Kingdom: "not the Roman Empire merely, but the aggregate of the Empires of this world as opposed to Christ;" "in the precise number and form here indicated, they have not yet arisen (see on ch. xiii. 2);"—(iv.) I. Williams does not consider that these Ten Horns are the same as the ten in Daniel, or the Kings that destroyed the Roman Empire: Ten signifies (see St. August., De Civ. Dei, xx. 7) universality of dominion; and as the seven heads in Daniel, all meeting here in one, intimate that the kingdoms of the world will form this one body, so its 'Ten Horns' represent all the great and powerful of the world which it sways. Antichrist leagued with the world will war with the Lamb (Ps. ii. 2, 3, p. 346):—(v.) Auberlen: "Individual small kingdoms" which give their power to the antichristian Kingdom: "That three of them are humiliated in doing so, is mentioned in Dan. vii. 8, and is not repeated but presupposed by John" (p. 303). "The non-existence of the Beast," he adds, "embraces the whole Germanic Christian period:" the healing of the wound has already begun; the return of the Beast is prepared in the principles of the Revolution of 1789—"In Napoleon, despotism sanctioning revolution, and proving that the Beast even in this shape can carry the Harlot;—In Socialism;—In Communism." At what period the seventh Kingdom shall pass over into the eighth, God alone knows, "Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" (Matt. xvi. 3);—(vi.) Ebrard: The Ten Kingdoms are here spoken of, not so far as they lie concealed as its component parts in the sixth, or Roman World-empire, but so far as, on the cessation of Roman power, they come forward with independent authority and constitute the seventh World-empire:

¹ On the application of these words by Bishop Hurd (Sermons on the Study of Prophecy, p. 235) and by Bishop Newton (l. c., on ch. xi. 1-14), see Dr. S. R. Maitland's Letter to Rev. W. Digby, p. 64, &c.

II. Züllig (see above) refers to Gen. xxxvi. 40; 1 Chron. i. 51, where eleven princes (Heb. alluphim; A.V. "dukes") of Edom are enumerated (ii. s. 327). The Rabbins, however, reduce these eleven, to ten (see Eisenm. i. 734, 781): and R. Bechai, reads in the case of the last two names, either "duke Magdiel of the city Iram;" or "duke Iram of the city Magdiel." The word alluphim, moreover, signifying friends, confidants, allies, the modern antitypes of the provincial rulers of Edom—rulers of Ten smaller kingdoms of Edom—now make common cause with the Beast.

III. "Preterists":—Mr. Maurice considers that these "Horns" are significant of that military force upon which the Empire rested. The "Ten Kings" are the commanders of the Legions in the different provinces: "There could be no more faithful account of an organized anarchy" (p. 327).

The rationalistic school are unanimous in finding in the historical circumstances of St. John's age, the interpretation of this symbol. (a) The Ten Horns are the Proconsuls and Imperial Legates of the ten chief provinces, or nationalities of the Empire:—e.g. Réville (p. 121) reckons up (1) Spain, (2) Gaul, (3) Germany, (4) Italy, (5) Greece, (6) Asia, (7) Syria, (8) Palestine, (9) Egypt, (10) Africa; and Renan enumerates, (1) Italy, (2) Achaia, (3) Asia, (4) Syria, (5) Egypt, (6) Africa, (7) Spain, (8) Gaul, (9) Britain, (10) Germany,—adding, "Apoc. xvii. 12 rend ceci clair" (p. 413). And so Ewald, Volkmar, H. Gebhardt, who refer the "one hour" (ver. 10) to the short continuance of Nero as Antichrist. (b) Others, e.g. Eichhorn, De Wette, Bleek and Krenkel, understand the Parthian Kings who were to cross the Euphrates (ch. xvi. 12) as allies of Nero. (c) Wetstein applies the symbol to the Ten leaders of the Flavian parties.

IV. Stern understands that Antichrist, in the last times will acquire the Empire of the world, and conquer Babylon by the help of the "Ten Horns,"—i.e., supported by Ten (a number used figuratively for tolerably many) smaller kingdoms, which have not yet attained independent strength, but which, out of jealousy towards all-powerful Babylon, ally themselves with Antichrist, and deposit in his hands all the warlike means which they possess. And thus Babylon—Rome become godless—will be destroyed (s. 382).

V. Dusterd. allows that the "Ten Horns" (vv. 3, 7) serve to identify the Beast here with the Beast already described; but he gives up "every concrete, historical reference of the 'Ten Horns.'" What is said here of the "Ten Kings" is simply borrowed from Dan. vii. 24, in order to finish off "the Apocalyptic picture." If we look for "the relative fulfilment" of the prophecy we find it in this, that henceforward Emperors are to attain to power only by means of intestine strife, and through conflicts which must tend to the destruction of the City (s. 518).

NOTE E ON VER. 11—THE NERO-FABLE.

The origin and growth of the "Nero-fable" render it easy to estimate the probability of its having had any influence on the composition of the Apocalypse. Let impartial history tell the source of this fiction.

Dean Merivale (Hist. of the Romans under the Empire, vol. vi. p. 365, ed. 1858) writes: "Nero perished on the 9th of June (A.D. 68) at the age of thirty years and six months, in the fourteenth year of his principate. . . . Some unknown hands were found to strew flowers on his sepulchre, and the rival King of Parthia adjured the Senate to do honour to his memory (Suet. Ner. 50, 57). Undoubtedly the Romans regarded with peculiar feeling the death of the last of the Cæsars" [Sueton. Galba i.; "Progenies Cæsarum in Nerone defecit"]. . . . "Yet these circumstances would not have sufficed to impart a deep mystery to the event, without the predisposition of the people to imagine that the dynasty which had ruled them for four generations could not suddenly pass away finally and irrevocably. The idea that Nero still survived, and the expectation of his return to power, continued long to linger among them. More than one pretender arose to claim his empire, and twenty years later a false Nero was protected by the Parthians, among whom he had taken refuge, and only surrendered to the repeated and vehement demands of the Roman Government" [Suet. Nero, 57; Tac. Hist. ii. 8 — "Achaia et Asia falso exterritæ, velut Nero adventaret"]. "This popular anticipation was the foundation, perhaps, of the common persuasion of the Christians, when the death of the prince was no longer questioned, that he should revisit the earth in the character of Antichrist; and both Romans and Christians seem to have combined in believing that the East, and possibly that Jerusalem itself would be the scene of his reappearance." [Compare Suetonius Nero, 40: "Prædictum a mathematicis Neroni olim erat, fore ut quandoque destitueretur. . . Sposponderant tamen quidam destituto Orientis dominationem, nonnulli nominatum regnum Hierosolymorum, plures omnis pristinae fortunæ restitutionem"]. "There will be different opinions whether this idea sprang originally from the Christians or the Romans; probably it was the result of a common feeling reaching from one to the other" (p. 368). And again (A.D. 89): "During the progress of these distant wars Domitian had been disturbed, though only for a moment, by the appearance of a pretended Nero, who threw himself on the support of the King of Parthia, if he was not in fact set up by the Parthians to annoy the chief of the rival Empire. This event occurred perhaps in 89. . . The Romans were at last disabused of the imposture regarding their late tyrant, which had so long floated before their eyes; but the fable survived among the Jews and Christians, for many generations after the fall of the Flavian dynasty" [i.e., after the death of M. Aurelius, A.D. 180]—l.c., vol. vii. p. 111.

The pretender here mentioned, A.D. 89, was the third and last of the "false Neros."

As to the growth of this fiction, and its application to the interpretation of the Apocalypse, it is to be observed,—

Firstly,—That the obscure reference in Rev. xiii. 3, to one of the Heads of the Beast as "though it had been smitten unto death," and to the subsequent healing of its wound, has been found in some early and fantastic writers applied to Nero. E. g. :—

θαν γ' ἐνανέλθῃ
ἐκ πέρτων γαίης ὁ φύγας μητροκτόνος ἐλθών.
Orac. Sibyll. viii. 70, 71.

This Sibylline book is ascribed by critics to Cent. ii. or iii. The fourth book, however, ascribed to the year 79, is apparently the earliest Christian notice of the "Nero-fable,"—see Introd. § 4, b. No. (30); and Note E on ch. ii. 20. Sulpicius Severus (circ. A.D. 401), (Chron. ii. 28, ap. Corp. Script. Eccl. Lat. ed. Halm, vol. i. p. 82), describes Nero as one "qui persecutionem primus inciperet: nescio an et postremus explevit, siquidem opinione multorum receptum sit, ipsum ante Antichristum venturum." And again: "Interim Nero humanis rebus eximitur, incer-tum an ipse sibi mortem consciverit: certe corpus illius non repertum. Unde creditur, etiam si se gladio ipse transfixerit, curato vulnere ejus servatus, secundum illud quod de eo scriptum est: 'et plaga mortis ejus curata est,' sub seculi fine mittendus, ut mysterium iniquitatis exerceat"—ib., c. 29, p. 84.¹

Secondly,—That ch. xvii. 8 is relied upon in order to prove that Nero is intended by the reference in ch. xiii. 3, and that he is to return from the Abyss as the embodied Antichrist.

Now, not to argue again that one can hardly understand by the whole Beast in ch. xvii. 8 Nero only, who is typified in ch. xiii. 3 as one of the Beast's Heads, it is to be noted—(1) That this interpretation ascribes to St. John a superstitious belief in a fable which even the heathen rhetorician Dion Chrysostom, who lived under Domitian, scoffed at² (Orat. xxxi., ed. Reiske, t. i. p. 504);—(2) That it is doubtful in the highest degree whether the Nero-fable existed even at the end of Cent. ii. in the form in which Rationalists wish to find it in St. John. On the contrary, there is clear proof that the original "Nero-fable" assumed that form in which, by an anachronism, Rationalists find it in the Apocalypse, from combining with it a misinterpretation of 2 Thess. ii.; Rev. xiii. 3; xvii. 8. It is not said by Suetonius, or Tacitus, or Dion Chrysostom, that the popular delusion amounted to this,—that Nero, really dead, was to return to life from the nether world; but merely that it was not known in what manner he had perished ("vario super exitu ejus rumore, eoque pluribus vivere eum fingentibus credentibusque."—Tac., Hist. ii. 8), and that the report had arisen that he was not dead, but had fled to Parthia, whence he was to return to punish his enemies ("quasi viventis et brevi magno inimicorum malo reversuri."—Sueton. Nero., 57). Thus in the passages already referred to from the Sibylline Oracles he is represented as a fugitive (φύγας, φεύγων): and so Lactantius when tracing the origin of the fable to the Sibyllines represents the matter: "Dejectus itaque fastigio imperii ac devolutus a summo tyrannus impotens nusquam repente comparuit, ut ne sepultura quidem locus in terra tam malæ bestię adpareret. Unde illum quidam deliri credunt esse translatus ac vivum reservatum, Sibylla dicente, 'Matricidam progressum a finibus esse venturum,'" &c. (De Morte Persec. c. 2). Lactantius knows nothing of the re-animation and return of the dead Nero; and the uncertainty as to the place of Nero's burial is easily explained by the words of Eutropius,—"exsequias Neronis, quæ humiliter sepultæ fuerant" (Hist. Rom. vii. 18). And thus in the time of Lactantius (A.D. 325) the "Nero-fable," which he describes as a delusion, had not yet taken the shape in which it is now sought to find it in the Apocalypse. See Düsterd. in loc.; Alexandre, Excursus ad Sibyll. VI., pars ii., c. 16.

¹ The source of this interpretation was plainly St. Martin of Tours, whose life was written by Sulpicius. This life includes an account of St. Martin's intercourse with angelic beings ("Constat autem etiam angelos ab eo plerumque visos"—Vita, 21, ib., p. 130), and of the revelations imparted to him by the Angels. Of these visions a fuller account is given by his disciple Gallus (Dial. i. 1, ib. p. 152), who informed Sulpicius of the things "quæ Martino angelis nunciavit": e.g. of the end of the world,— "Neronem et Antichristum prius esse venturos: Neronem in occidentali plaga subactis decem regibus imperaturum, persecutionem ab eo eatenus exercendam, ut idola gentium coli cogat." Antichrist is to rule in the East from Jerusalem; he is to destroy Nero, and is himself to be destroyed by the coming of Christ: "Non esse autem dubium quin Antichristus maiore spiritu conceptus jam natus esset et jam in annis puerilibus constitutus, ætate legitima sumpturus imperium."—Dial. ii. 14, ib. p. 197.

² For his liberality, writes Dion Chrysostom, Nero was pre-eminent (τούτῃ δὲ μέλιστα περιήν ὁ Νέρων); and also for his despotic character. Consequently men revolted from him, and compelled him to destroy himself,—*ἡρώτασαν τὴν ποτὶ τέρψην ἀπολόσθαι αὐτόν. οὐδέτις γὰρ καὶ νῦν τοῦτό γε θῆλον ἔστω. ἐπεὶ τῶν γε ἑλλεν ἔνεκεν οὐδὲν ἐκώλυεν αὐτὸν βασιλεύειν τὸν ἔσχατον χρόνον, ὃν γε καὶ νῦν ἐτι πάντες ἐπιθυμοῦσι (ἦν οἱ δὲ πλείστοι καὶ οἰοῦνται, καὶ [οἱ κατὰ] τρέψαν τὴν οὐχ ὅπως αὐτοῦ τεθνηκότος, ἀλλὰ πολλὰς μετὰ τὸν σφόδρα οὐθύνοντες αὐτόν (ἦν ἰδοί). These words Reimarus (ap. Dion. Cass., p. 1056) renders thus: "Et adhuc omnes cupiunt eum vivere, plurimi quoque putant: quanquam non semel, sed multoties quodammodo mortuus sit, una cum iis qui tantopere sibi persuaserant eum vivere."*

Victorinus (if indeed the words ascribed to him are genuine—see Cave, Hist. Lit., i. p. 147; and Note G on xiii. 18) appears to apply the Nero-fable to the Apocalypse. It seems probable however that the passage is an interpolation due to one of those writers who are spoken of with little respect by Ambrosius Autpertus in the eighth century:—see Introduct. § 4, b.

The words of Victorinus are as follows:—"One is," i.e., (1) Cæsar Domitianus; "five have fallen," i.e., (2) Domitian's brother Titus, (3) his father Vespasian, (4) Otho, (5) Vitellius, (6) Galba. "Another is not yet come," i.e., (7) Nerva, who continued but a short while, scarcely two years. "The Beast is 'of the Seven,'"—i.e., Nero reigned before those Emperors; "and is the eight (octava)," for, when the Beast shall come again, count thou the eight place; "quoniam in illo [viz. Antichristo] est consummatio" (l. c., p. 61). The Head smitten to death, and then bealed (ch. xiii. 3), denotes Nero, for he killed himself with his own sword; him, "suscitatum Deus mittet regem dignum dignis, et Christum qualem meruerunt Judei." As he will bear another name the Jews will receive him as Christ. He will rise again from Hell, as Ezekiel (xxx. 4) says, "Aqua nutriet illum, et infernus auxit illum."

St. Augustine is really the first writer who mentions the "Nero-fable" in connexion with the interpretation of Scripture; but it is with reference to 2 Thess. ii., and not to Rev. xvii. "No one doubts," observes St. Augustine, "that St. Paul has spoken in 2 Thess. ii. of Antichrist and the day of judgment." He confesses that he does not understand verses 6-8:—"Some think that this is said of the Roman Empire, and therefore that Paul the Apostle expressed himself obscurely lest he might incur the charge of wishing ill to the Roman Empire," "ut hoc quod dixit, 'Jam enim mysterium iniquitatis operatur,' Neronem voluerit intelligi, cujus jam facta velut Antichristi videbantur. Unde nonnulli ipsum resurrectionem, et futurum Antichristum suspicantur. Alii vero, nec eum occisum putant, sed subtractum potius, ut putaretur occisus: et vivum occultari in vigore ipsius ætatis, in qua fuit cum crederetur extinctus, donec suo tempore reveletur, et restituatur in regnum. Sed multum mihi mira est hæc opinantium tanta præsumptio."—De Civ. Dei, xx. 19. St. Augustine makes no reference whatever to the Apoc. in this connexion.¹

As to the fact dwelt upon by Lucke, Bleek, and others, that the "Nero-fable" was believed in by the Christians of the first century independently of the Apocalypse—in proof of which the words quoted above from the Sibylline books are adduced—we may observe that not a word is said by any ancient writer of the miraculous recovery of Nero (a notion founded by modern critics on Rev. xiii. 3), or of his rising again from the Abyss (founded on Rev. xvii. 8);—all that is said applies not to Nero himself but to the false Nero, who, shortly after the eruption of Vesuvius, raised the standard of revolt in the East, under the reign of Titus; and who perished miserably. The references of the Sibyllist are simply in accordance with the affected mystery in which his pretended oracles are involved:—nothing is said of what the false Nero is to accomplish, ¹ St. Jerome (on Dan. xi. 28) mentions that many regarded Nero as the Antichrist spoken of by Daniel,—"Domitium Neronem Antichristum fore":—but there is no reference to the Apocalypse.

or even of the capture by him of Rome. The contrary¹ follows from the Sibylline verse that comes next after those relied upon in proof of the fable;—The false Nero “Ἦξει, καὶ Ῥώμης δ'φυγὰς, μέγα ἔγχος αἰρώων, Εὐφρήτην διαβάς πολλὰς ἔμα μυριάδεσσιν,—

And the result is:—

Ταλῆμον Ἀντιόχεια, σὲ δὲ πόλιν οὐκέτ' ἔρουναι,
B. iv. 138–140.

This passage merely speaks of Antioch and other places in the East suffering much from the fugitive's return; but of Antichrist, or his connexion with Nero not a word is said. See Hengst., ii. p. 79 &c.; Thiersch, Versuch der Herst. für die Kritik des N. T., s. 410, ff.

No historical grounds indeed can be alleged for asserting that St. John in Rev. xiii. 3 adopted a popular delusion widely diffused in his time, as to the return of Nero who was to be raised from the dead. The belief did not exist in St. John's age; and no one, as yet, has ventured to maintain that St. John was himself the concocter of this form of the “Nero-fable.” The sole historical fact round which this fable has gathered, is the existence of Pretenders who assumed the name of Nero.

A fable of this nature which, like other popular myths, has grown up so slowly, is not peculiar to any one age or race. The legend of King Arthur as not dead, but sleeping on the Eildon hills, lived long in the hearts of the people of Britain. The belief in the return of Frederick Barbarossa is still cherished by the German peasant. A similar expectation filled Portugal in a later and more historic age (A.D. 1578) when the fate of the chivalrous Sebastian was involved in some mystery after his defeat by the Moors. Michelet having told the death of the last Duke of Burgundy, adds: “Il n'était pas facile de persuader au peuple que celui dont on avait tant parlé était bien vraiment mort.

¹ We read to this effect in B. iv. 145, “Ἦξει δ' εἰς Ἀσίην πλοῦτος μέγας, ὃν ποτὲ Ῥώμη [συλῆσασα], as it had been said in B. iii. 350–352, “Ὅπῃσά δαυμοφόρον Ἀσίης ὑπεδέξατο Ῥώμη, Χρῆματ' ἀντὶ τριπλῆς τῆσας δεδέξαται ἑκατὼν Ἀσσιῶν Ἐκ Ῥώμης, ὁλοήν κ. τ. λ.

Alexandre refers these notices of a restoration to Asia of the wealth plundered from it by Rome, to the belief—“Orientem aliquando prævaliturum” (Sueton. Vespas. 4; Tac. Hist. v. 12). As Lactantius writes: “Romanum nomen . . . tolletur de terra, et imperium in Asiam reverteretur, et rursus Oriens dominabitur” (vii. 15). Alexandre explains this popular belief by the expectation, derived from the Jews, of the approaching kingdom of Messiah (p. 353). The words rather point to the hoped-for success of the false Nero.

Il était caché, disait-on, il était tenu enfermé, il était fait moine; les pèlerins l'avaient vu, en Allemagne, à Rome, à Jérusalem . . . Il se trouvait des marchands, qui vendraient à crédit, pour être payés au double, alors, que reviendrait ce grand duc de Bourgogne.”—Hist. de France, 17. (See Trench's “Hulian Lectures,” p. 187).

NOTE F ON VER. 11—GALBA, OTHO, VITELLIUS.

It has been shown in Note D that one of the steps in the proof on which the usual rationalistic interpretation of this chapter depends, is the omission from the series of Roman Emperors of the three rulers who intervened between Nero and Vespasian,—Galba, Otho, and Vitellius. On Otho's defeat at Bedriacum by the generals of Vitellius, in April 69, Otho killed himself, after a reign of but ninety-five days,—“Nonagesimo et quinto Imperii die,” are the words of Suetonius. Vitellius was put to death in the following December; and the brief duration of these three reigns has led Lücke, Düsterd. and others to omit them from the order of the imperial succession: see, above, Note D. Some authorities may indeed be quoted in favour of this omission;—

The “Paschal Chronicle” (ed. Dindorf. p. 459) thus describes the succession after Nero:—μετὰ Νέρωνα Γάλβας ἐβασίλευσεν ἐν Ἰβηρίᾳ, Οὐιρέλλιος ἐν Γερμανίᾳ, “Ὅθων ἐν Ῥώμῃ. After mentioning the shortness of their reigns, the chronicler proceeds,—Ῥωμαίων ζ' ἐβασίλευσεν Οὐεσπασιανός, making Vespasian the seventh emperor, and the successor of Nero—who would thus be the sixth (see ib., p. 311). Domitian is reckoned the ninth, as succeeding Titus (ib., p. 465. Cf. Note C on ch. xiii. 3). In his Chronicle Eusebius gives the statement, here copied, as to Galba, Otho and Vitellius; but in his History (iii. 5) he includes Galba and Otho alone between Nero and Vespasian.

Several writers and chroniclers in like manner leave out of the imperial succession some one or all of these three Emperors. Thus Clemens Alex. in the first catalogue given by him (see Note C on ch. xiii. 3), states the order to be “Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Vespasian, Titus,” &c.; but in the second, “Julius, Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Vespasian,” &c. Orosius (lvi. c. 7, 8) gives the succession thus: “Quo [Galba] mox oppresso, Otho Romæ, Vitellius in Germania, Vespasianus in Syria, imperia simul atque arma rapuerunt:” where he too seems to omit Otho and Vitellius from the list of established Emperors.

None of these writers make Vespasian either sixth or even seventh Emperor.¹

These quotations give more or less support to the rationalistic interpretation: but on the other hand, there is no doubt whatever that the three Emperors were recognized by contemporary writers as belonging to the line of the Imperial succession,—and, indeed, by all subsequent writers who are not influenced by subjective theories of history. Thus Josephus (B. J. IV. cix. 2; cxi. 9) describes in full the succession to Nero of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius. Suetonius includes them regularly among “The Twelve Cæsars,” as also does Ausonius, writing of the Emperor who followed them: “His decimus, fatoque accitus Vespasianus.”—De XII. Cæsariibus.

Dion Cassius writes: οὕτω μὲν οὖν ὁ Γάλβας αὐτοκράτωρ ἀπεδείχθη (lib. lxxv. p. 1049); the

¹ How the changes are rung on this historical question may be illustrated by the following controversy:—

The fourth chapter of the Epistle of St. Barnabas (as given in the Cod. Sinaiticus) quotes, as follows, Dan. vii. 24:—λέγει δὲ οὕτως καὶ ὁ προφῆτης Βασιλείαι δέκα ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς βασιλεύσουσιν, καὶ ἐξαπατήσεται ἐπισθεν αὐτῶν μικρὸς βασιλεὺς, ὃς ταπεινώσει τρεῖς ὅψ’ ἐν τῶν βασιλέων: and also Dan. vii. 7, 8:—καὶ εἶδον τὸ τέταρτον θηρίον ποικίλον καὶ ἰσχυρὸν καὶ χαλεπότερον παρὰ πάντα τὰ θηρία τῆς γῆς, καὶ ὡς ἐξ αὐτοῦ ἀνέτειλεν δέκα κέρατα, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῶν μικρὸν κέρας παραφυῶν, καὶ ὡς ἐταπεινώσεν ὅψ’ ἐν τρία τῶν μεγάλων κεράτων.

These words Hilgenfeld (Nov. Test. extr. Can., Fasc. ii. p. 66), in opposition to Volkmar, applies to the time of Domitian. Hilgenfeld maintains that St. Barnabas here alleges that there will reign ten Roman Emperors; and that “the Little Horn,” which comes up last, signifies Nero (ἐλθὼν ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ καταργήσει τὸν καιρὸν τοῦ Ἀνόμου. (c. xv.)—viz. Nero), who, returning as Antichrist, will strike down three Emperors who are closely connected one with another. These Hilgenfeld takes to be the three Flavii—Vespasian, Titus, Domitian—who, added to the Seven Roman Emperors of the Apocalypse (ch. xvii. 10), make up the Ten with whom the Roman Empire is to come to an end. Volkmar, on the other hand, thinks that St. Barnabas—correcting St. John, who regarded Nero, restored to life, to be the Antichrist whom Messiah was to destroy—“regnum Danielis item habuit Cæsareum et reges sic numeravit decem: Augustus, &c., Nero (5); Galba, Otho (2)—nam Vitellius apud Alexandrinos non numeratur; Flavii (3): igitur decadem Cæsarum sic implent, quorum extremus, Domitianus, maxime fuerat adversarius Dei et Messias Israelis, par fere Neroni. Qui sequebantur, Nerva, Traianus, Adrianus, efficiebant unam per adoptionem dynastiam: τρεῖς, ὅψ’ ἐν βασιλείς,”—and that it was these three (Dan. vii. 8) who were to be overthrown, by one of the preceding Emperors restored to life in the character of Antichrist.

accession of Otho is next referred to (ib., pp. 1053, 1054); and then (lxxv. p. 1060), we read: Οἱ δὲ ἐν τῇ Ῥώμῃ... τὸν Βιτέλλιον... αὐτοκράτορα ἀνηγόρευον.—Vespasian’s accession being recorded in the same manner (see lxxvi. p. 1076). The Emperor Julian numbers them among the “Cæsars” (see Note C on ch. xiii. 3); and Aurelius Victor (De Cæsar. i. 6, 7, 8) equally includes the three as succeeding Nero. Epiphanius, who in his Anchoratus, makes Vespasian succeed Nero (μετὰ Νέρωνα Οὐεσπασιανός, clx., vol. ii. p. 63), speaks of Galba as reigning seven months and twenty-six days, of Otho as reigning three months and five days, and of Vitellius as reigning eighteen months and twelve days (De Mensur. et Ponder. cxi., vol. ii. p. 169). Petavius (ib. p. 385) points out the error of Epiphanius as to these dates, referring to the dates given by Dion; but this error does not touch the question here. Petavius himself (De Ration. Temp. lib. v.—“A 68 Christi ad 96”) gives Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, as following Nero and immediately preceding Vespasian as Emperors. To the early authorities may also be added Sulpicius Severus (A.D. 401), who places Galba, Otho, and Vitellius after Nero (Chron. ii. 30, p. 84).

To state the historical conclusion, with Dean Merivale:—

Galba was saluted Imperator by the soldiers on the 3rd of April, A.D. 68 (vol. vi. p. 356), and his election was sanctioned by the Senate (ib., p. 372). On his assassination, Otho “stepped through an Emperor’s blood into the place of the Cæsars” (ib. p. 399). On the suicide of Otho, the senators “met immediately and decreed Vitellius, by a single act, all the honours and titles which had been dealt out from year to year to his predecessors.”—ib., 431.

NOTE G ON VER. 11—THE EIGHTH KING.

Düsterdieck—who does not rely on the Nero-fable, but who considers that Domitian is the eighth—partly agrees with Grotius and Hammond who translate, “the son of one of them” (“filius unius eorum”). Appealing to Rom. ix. 10; Matt. i. 3, 5, 6; Luke i. 27, they make Vespasian the sixth, and his younger son Domitian the eighth (see Note D), Andreas also explains “sprung from one of their Heads (ὡς ἐκ μιᾶς αὐτῶν).” Both explanations, however, insert the numeral, which is not found in the text; and, therefore, Düsterd. understands “the extraction or descent (‘Herkunft’) from out of the Seven:” “John,” he notes, “does not insist on the eighth springing from one of the Seven,—although this is true,—but on this, that he who as the personification of the whole Beast corresponds in a certain measure to all Seven, has himself, from out of these Seven, the source of his human personality. Thus the Seven collectively stand parallel to the eighth, who is the embodiment of the whole Beast" (s. 512). It is not said, argues Düsterdieck, that the fifth fallen king (Nero) will return as the eighth, but that the eighth, who is still future, will be the personified Beast himself,—even he in whom the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xi. 7), who now "is not," will reappear. To find, therefore, the Nero-fable here, would be to ascribe to St. John [as Renan does, l. c., p. 414] "a confusion between the entire Beast with 'Seven Heads' (the Roman Empire), and the Head 'smitten unto death' (Nero), ch. xiii. 3." See the remark of Schleiermacher quoted in the Introduction, § 4, b.

Burger, disregarding St. John's usage, explains: "He—the Beast, Antichrist—'is of the Seven,' i. e., he belongs to the number of the Seven, for he is the seventh Head (see on ch. xiii. 3), but he is, at the same time, the eighth—for, as being the Head 'smitten unto death,'—as being he whose 'death-stroke was healed,'—as being he who 'is not; and is about to come up out of the Abyss' (ver. 8),—he appears as an eighth in the series; and nevertheless is the seventh, for it is one and the same person 'which was, and is not, and shall come.' This is the 'Little Horn' of Dan. vii. 8, 20, 21, 24, 25. Accordingly, rising on the Head of Daniel's fourth Beast, among its ten horns, exalted over them, and thus belonging to that phase of the World-power which this fourth Beast typifies,—Antichrist will 'come up' as the seventh 'Head,'—will be 'smitten unto death,'—will seem to retire from the stage,—but will return as an eighth, and yet be the same as the 'Head' which was the seventh." See on ch. xiii. 3.

Vitranga, Bengel, Alf. understand that, after the "Seven Heads" of the Beast, the personal Antichrist is in the future to appear as an eighth. Somewhat similarly Ebrard who takes "the sixth King" to be the Roman World-power; the seventh World-power to be the "Ten Kings" with the Beast (ver. 12); and the eighth World-power to be the Beast from the Abyss (ver. 8), or Antichrist (s. 464 ff.). Ebrard also compares 2 Thess. ii. 3 ff. with Dan. vii. 25; xi. 36. This opinion is developed by Godet:—"After the seventh (see on ver. 10), "will appear Antichrist—the eighth Head, and at the same time the entire monster—issuing now not from the sea of the peoples, but from the Abyss:" and, Godet adds, according to his peculiar theory, "To the astonishment of the whole earth the possessor of this power will be found to be that Israel [the Head "smitten unto death," ch. xiii. 3; see on ch. xiii. 1] which men believed to be erased for ever from the list of peoples;—which shall issue, of a sudden, from its tomb as that which it really is, the first of the peoples,— that nation to which belongs, whether for weal or for woe, the sceptre of the world." (l. c., p. 368).

I. Williams writes (pp. 341–342): The Seven "Kings," though mentioned in connexion with them, are not the Seven "Heads," for the Beast himself is one of the Seven: not one of the "Seven Heads" he now himself wears, but of the seven Kingdoms of Daniel; as arising out of one of them, the Roman. "The Apocalyptic Beast corresponds with the 'Little Horn' of Daniel, which arises among the Ten Horns of this seventh Head, and by its rising roots up three, by which it becomes itself the eighth" (Dan. vii. 8); "he is probably the final Antichrist":—if there be some "confusion" here between being one of the Seven and yet one beyond them, the same exists in Daniel (vii. 11), where the Beast, being one of the Seven Heads, is as it were confounded with the 'Little Horn' itself. "An ambiguity which the fulfilment alone will explain."

Auberlen interprets:—"The wounded Head has been healed; the World-power has been restored to the condition of the preceding Kingdoms; a new Kingdom has arisen "in which all the Beast's opposition to God is concentrated; . . . therefore we read of an eighth, which proceeds from the seven, and is the full manifestation of the Beast-nature." "Like Daniel's Little Horn the seventh Kingdom passes over into an eighth, which is not merely one of the Seven, but is brought forth by them, and proceeds from them. This is the anti-christian Kingdom in the strict sense of the word." Not that a personal Antichrist will certainly stand "at the head of the antichristian Kingdom, for it is possible that the eighth, like the preceding "Seven Heads," designates a Kingdom, a power, and not a person" (l. c., p. 303).

Wordsworth: "This is descriptive of the Roman power as it rose to supremacy under the Papacy, and carried the Harlot as on a throne. It was an eighth Kingdom, and it rose after the Seven, and from them" (see on ver. 10);—it was like the "Little Horn" of Dan. vii. 8: "Rome is the Western Babylon; and the Western Babylonian Power is, as it were, the octave of the Eastern. The Eastern Babylonian Power is the first in the prophecies of Daniel; the Western Babylonian Power is the eighth in those of St. John."

Hengstenberg supplies: "He is an 'eighth' in destruction"; i. e., the Beast himself like the Seven, or with the Seven who have already fallen, goes as an eighth into perdition:—the heathen State comes to an end with the seventh phase of the godless World-power. We have a commentary on this passage in ch. xix. 11–21. In other words, as Hengst. expressly concludes, there is no eighth Head; the text limits the number to Seven.

CHAPTER XVIII.

2 Babylon is fallen. 4 The people of God commanded to depart out of her. 9 The kings of the earth, 11 with the merchants and mariners, lament over her. 20 The saints rejoice for the judgments of God upon her.

[Ver. 1 *om. καί.—*ἄλλον ἄγγελον. Ver. 2 ἐν ἰσχυρῇ φωνῇ λέγων [Erasmus, without any authority, here abandoned his codex, and rendered by “ἐν ἰσχύει” (sic) the infortitudine of the Vulgate. Cf. Ps. xxix. 4, LXX.].—δαμονίων.—[The words καὶ φυλακὴ παντ. ὁρνέου ἀκαθ. καί, which are wanting in 1, and elsewhere, Er. inserted after the Vulgate “et custodia omnis volucris immunda et”. Ver. 3 [A omits τοῦ οἴνου.—C merely reads τῆς πορν. τοῦ θυμοῦ].—πέπωκε [so P, 1 (πέποκε), T. R.; cf. ch. xiv. 8.—A, C read πέπτωκαν.—N, B read πεπτώκασι. “πεπτω—pro πεπω—non potest non pro antiquissimo vitio haberi”—Tisch.: but compare τὸ ποτήριον τῆς πτώσεως, Isai. li. 17, 22, LXX.].—Heb. הִלְחִיחַ = titubatio, “pr. vinum quod titubatio est, i.e. eam efficit”—Gesenius]. Ver. 4 ὁ λαὸς μου ἐξ αὐτῆς. Ver. 5 ἐκολλήθησαν (so 1, for which Er. substituted ἠκολούθησαν after the Vulgate pervenerunt). Ver. 6 om. ὑμῖν.—om. 2nd αὐτῇ.—τὰ διπλᾶ. Ver. 7 αὐτὴν [Words. reads αὐτήν].—δὲ Κάθμαι. Ver. 8 [A omits Κύριος].—κρίνας. Ver. 9 om. αὐτήν.—ἐπ’ αὐτήν. Ver. 10 om. ἐν. Ver. 11 ἐπ’ αὐτήν. Ver. 12 [B, T. R. read μαργαρίτου.—N reads μαργαρίτων.—A reads μαργαρίτας.—C, P read μαργαρίτας].—βυσσίνου. Ver. 13 add καὶ ἄμωμον after κιννάμ. Ver. 14 σου before τῆς ἐπιθυμ.—ἀπώλετο for and ἀπῆλθεν.—αὐτὰ οὐ μὴ εὐρύσουσιν. Ver. 16 om. 1st καί.—μαργαρίτη. Ver. 17 ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων [1, T. R. read ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὄμιλος.—P reads ὁ ἐπὶ τ. πλοίων πλέων]. Ver. 18 βλέποντες. Ver. 19 τὰ πλοῖα. Ver. 20 οἱ ἄγιοι καὶ οἱ ἁπόστολοι. Ver. 21 μύλων. Ver. 22 [N, A omit πάσης τέχνης]. Ver. 23 [A omits οἱ before ἔμποροι.].]

THE FALL OF BABYLON (1-24).

The approaching fall of Babylon is announced in this chapter (see ver. 21). The actual overthrow is assumed to have taken place between ch. xviii. 24, and ch. xix. 1. In ch. xix. 1-10 that overthrow is celebrated. The appearance of three Angels (cf. ch. xiv. 6-13) exhibits the chief stages of the Vision:—(i.) In vv. 1-3 the announcement of ch. xiv. 8 is repeated and developed;—(ii.) The fall of Babylon (see ch. xvi. 19), an event still future (cf. vv. 4, 8, 9), is described with minute details in vv. 4-20;—(iii.) The overthrow of the City is represented by a significant action in vv. 21-24. These three Angels have clearly no typical signification (see below). The narrative follows the division, which has marked the Seals, Trumpets, and Vials, into seven clauses, the sixth being divided from the seventh by an interposed section. Thus we have (1) The fall of Babylon and her sin (ch. xiv. 8; xvii. 2.) in vv. 1-3;—(2) The invitation to God's people to depart from out of her (cf. Isai. lii. 11), for her iniquities have come “in remembrance before God” (ch. xvi. 19), in vv. 4, 5;—(3) The Angel turns to address those who are to inflict the judgments, in vv. 6-8;—(4) The lament of the “Kings” is given in vv. 9, 10;—(5) The lament of the “Merchants” in vv. 11-17;—(6) The lament of the “Mariners” in vv. 17-19. On this is interposed a brief utterance of triumph in ver. 20; and then (7) comes the symbolical action which declares her overthrow.

The severance between the World-power and the World-City (ch. xvii. 16), and the consequent destruction of the latter by the former is a leading event in the history of the Church of God, because it signifies the beginning of the Divine judgment on the anti-christian World-power itself, and on its prince, Antichrist. This event is announced by Heaven; and all the dwellers on earth who previously had served the “Harlot” lament over it. In order to typify this event, the present chapter combines the overthrow of Babylon—the City which desolated Israel by its power (see Isai. xiii.; xiv. 22, 23; xlviii. 20; lii. 11; Jer. 1; li. 6-9), and the ruin of Tyre—which led Israel astray by its idolatry and lasciviousness (Ezek. xxvi.; xxvii.). Hence it is that the language of this description is borrowed from the language of the former prophets respecting the fate of these two cities. The object of this chapter, writes Hengst., is “to clothe with flesh and blood” the description of ch. xvii. 16; and the destruction of heathen Rome is a guarantee of the future accomplishment of this prediction—see ch. xx. 8, 9. Words. notes: “Though Babylon falls, the Beast still remains. Therefore the fall of Papal Rome will not be the destruction of the Papacy” (ch. xix. 19).

Renan considers that St. John, writing as a Jewish fanatic, and interpreting in the spirit of political hatred the rumours connected with Nero's death, now imagines that the rulers of the provinces (see ch. xvii. 16) are about to attack and destroy Rome; and, taking the destruction of the City to have been accomplished, that he here celebrates the fall of his enemy (p. 439).

Reuss illustrates in an instructive manner,

AN D after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, 'Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the 'abundance of her delicacies.

by the case of this narrative, the modern conception of "Apokalyptik" as expressed by Rationalists:—see Note A at the end of this chapter; and Intro. § 9.

CHAP. XVIII.—THE FIRST ANGEL (1-3).

1. After these things] (Omit "And"—see vv. 11.) For this formula see on ch. iv. 1, 2.

another angel] I.e., other than the Angel of ch. xvii. 1; cf. x. 1. There is no reason whatever for taking this Angel to be Christ (Calov., Hengst.);—or the Holy Spirit (Cocceius, Vitr.);—or "another of the Vial-Angels," as in ch. xvii. 1 (Bisping);—or Luther (Nicolai).

coming down out of heaven.] Bengel connects "another" with "coming down," as if the sense were 'another besides the last who came down from heaven,'—see ch. x. 1; and so Alf.

having great authority;] Of this it is added as a visible sign—and the earth was lightened with his glory.] See Ezek. xliii. 2; Luke ii. 9; Acts ix. 3; xii. 7. I. Williams is reminded of "the Angel ascending from the East"—ch. vii. 2.

2. And he cried with a mighty voice, saying,] See vv. 11. The subject here is the same as in ch. xiv. 8, but the denunciation is more searching.

Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great.] Cf. Isai. xxi. 9. The aorists here are proleptic. Burger suggests that they may denote the certainty of what is to happen—see vv. 4-8. The fall of Babylon is also foretold in ch. xvi. 19: see also on ch. xvii. 16. The ruin of the World-city is here developed.

Reuss notes that "the allegory of the 'Woman' is replaced by the proper expression."

and is become a habitation of devils,] See vv. 11. On the word rendered "devils,"—i.e., demons, evil spirits of an inferior order,—see the note on ch. ii. 10; and cf. ch. ix. 20; xvi. 14. For the imagery see Isai. xlii. 19-22; xxxiv. 14 (LXX.); Jer. li. 37. Babylon, destroyed by the Beast from the Abyss (see ch. xvii. 16), naturally becomes the habitation of his agents, the demons. Cf. also Matt. xii. 43.

and a hold of every unclean spirit,] Gr. a prison (see ch. ii. 10 and cf. ch. xx. 7), a place of custody ("the prisoner to his bold retir'd."—Dryden). De Wette, Hengst., Bisping understand a place of banishment.

and a hold of every unclean and hateful bird.] Another prophetic symbol of desolation, see Isai. xxxiv. 11;—for Babylon, cf. Jer. l. 39; for Nineveh, cf. Zeph. ii. 13, 14. The symbol is differently explained by Words: "Not cage or prison, but place where they are safe; where these ill-omened birds resort or keep their vigils."

3. For] The sins, on which her judgment is grounded, are the cause.

of the wine of the wrath of her fornication] Compare the text of this verse with that of ch. xiv. 8,—see the note on that place. Compare, too, the note on ch. xvii. 1. (Observe, the Cod. Alex., A, omits the words "of the wine": and Cod. C merely reads "of the fornication of her wrath.")

all the nations have drunk;] Unless there has been a very ancient error on the part of the scribes, as Tischendorf (8th ed. suggests, the weight of authority supports the rendering: "For by reason of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, all the nations are fallen,"—a reading not obviously in accordance either with the context, or the parallel passages, ch. xiv. 8; xvii. 2.

On the other hand compare Isai. li. 17, 22 (LXX.);—A.V. "the cup of trembling"; see vv. 11. (The two readings differ merely by the insertion in the latter verb of the Greek letter τ.)

and the kings of the earth committed fornication with her,] As already stated in ch. xvii. 2.

The "Kings," according to Reuss, are not the allies of Antichrist, come from the East, but the numerous minor vassals of the Empire, who, protected by the central authority, tyrannized over the unhappy populations.

and the merchants of the earth waxed rich,] Through the extensive commerce created by her luxury, as explained in the words which follow.

by reason of the abundance] (Cf. ch. viii.

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

5 For her sins have reached unto 13). Gr. by the power of, as Marg. Vitr. renders copia, and aptly compares Ezek. xxviii. 4 (LXX.).

of her wantonness.] This noun (τὸ σπῆνος) occurs only here in the N. T.; the verb only in vv. 7, 9; and the compound verb only in 1 Tim. v. 11 (cf. 2 Kings xix. 28, LXX.—Hebr. shaanan = fastus: Gesen.; A. V. tumult). In the verb, writes Archbishop Trench, "is properly the insolence of wealth, the wantonness and petulance from fulness of bread; something of the Latin lascivire" (Synonyms p. 189): cf. Deut. xxxii. 15. De Wette renders "by her powerful luxury"—"von ihrer gewaltigen Ueppigkeit;" Vulg.: "de virtute deliciarum ejus;" Words: "riotous luxury." Note here, "merchants of the earth" combined with "kings of the earth,"—the two expressions denoting the different aspects of the phrase so often used to embrace the mass of mankind, viz. "they that dwell on the earth,"—see on ch. iii. 10.

THE SECOND VOICE (4-19).

4. another voice from heaven.] The second Angelic voice,—see vv. 1, 21. To suppose with Bengel and Hengst. that "the voice must be the voice of Christ," would be opposed to the character of the entire passage.

This "Voice" now proceeds, as Ebrard notes, to develop "in strophic form" what the Angel (vv. 2, 3) had briefly announced. The passage accordingly may be divided into six strophes, viz. vv. 4, 5; vv. 6, 7; vv. 7, 8; vv. 9, 10; vv. 11-16; vv. 17-19.

The first strophe:—

saying, Come forth, my people, out of her,] The words "my people" are spoken in the name of Christ or of God, as in ch. xi. 3; xxii. 7; see also ver. 8. The Angelic "voice," speaking with God's authority as in ch. xi. 3, urges His people to depart out of the World-City where all evil is concentrated, almost in the very words in which Israel of old had been exhorted to flee from Babylon: "My people, go ye out of the midst of her," &c. This thought is three times expressed by Jeremiah (Jer. l. 8; li. 6, 45); and for proof that this exhortation was needed, see the note on Jer. l. 8. It is thus that at all times the people of God have been warned to flee from the City of Destruction,—cf. Gen. xix. 15, 22 ("Escape thither; for I cannot do anything till thou be come thither"); Num. xvi. 26; Isai. xlvi. 20; lii. 11; Matt. xxiv. 16 (see Euseb. H. E. iii. 5); 2 Cor. vi. 17.

Special applications:—

Bossuet (followed by Hengst.) applies the verse to the Lord's care for His people when Rome was sacked by Alaric;—Stern applies it to the faithful who, in the Last Days, shall be found in Rome (see on ch. xvii. 10);—Bishop Wordsworth notes: "The Babylon of the Apoc. is Papal Rome. . . . Even now, at this present time,—as this prophecy reveals,—the Holy Spirit, who reads the heart, and who wrote the Apocalypse, sees some People of God in Rome;"—I. Williams writes: From Egypt, from Sodom, from Babylon, from Jerusalem, "the people of God were called before the judgment came on those places; and now they are called out of the mystic Babylon" (p. 360). It is impossible, he adds, to understand this pathetic dirge of Babylon "merely of the world at large, for that cannot have come to an end; nor of any one city, from the universal nature of the figures; nor of any religious system or Church, for to leave such is not to leave behind every temptation to luxury as overthrown; but an alliance between Christianity and the world. "The words may be considered partly as prophetic," for the time will come "when Providence will bring about such a separation;" and partly imperative "as demanding at all times our 'escape to the mountain,' to the Jerusalem which is above . . . from this Babel of discord" (p. 363).

Auberlen (pp. 284, 320) comments thus:—As in Ezek. xvi.; xxiii., the whoredoms are described of Israel with the most ancient kingdoms of the world,—Egypt, Assyria, Babylon,—so in ch. xii. "the first period of the Christian Church is described, when apostate Israel was the Harlot, and the young congregation of Christ, the Woman. Soon, however, fornication crept into the Church itself [see on ch. xvii. 1], so that, as a whole, she appears in ch. xvii. no longer as the Woman but the Harlot; the great Babylon, which yet contains concealed the true people of God,—the Woman" (see ch. xviii. 4). The true people of God did not perish in the death of the Harlot; but before the judgment on Babylon she is commanded to come out of it, lest in the consummation of Babylon's sin, she be polluted by it, and thus fall into her destruction:—see Matt. xxiv. 15, 16. "Herein consists the first justification of the Woman; she is distinguished from the Harlot, and not judged with her:" but this is only a negative justification; the positive, real glorification has yet to be gained by a severe struggle. Here also it behoves her to enter, through much heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double.

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a 'queen,'^{1s. 47} and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

tribulation, into the kingdom of God. This last affliction through which the Bridal Church has to pass, is not a judgment, such as fell on the Harlot, but a time of purification, during which the dross of earthliness still cleaving to her, is perfectly taken away" (ch. xx. 4). Cf. Luke xxi. 28.

Renan concludes with calm precision: "The Seer of the Apocalypse, in December 68, or January 69, gives orders to his people to quit Rome" (p. 206).

that ye have no fellowship with her sins,] See Eph. v. 11; cf. Jer. li. 6, 9. It is not meant: "That ye share not the punishment of her sin," as Bengel, De Wette, Züllig; but the cause is expressed from which the result follows, namely,— and that ye receive not of her plagues:] Luke xvii. 32 supplies the comment. St. Jerome warning Marcella to flee from Rome to Bethlehem (A.D. 386), and referring to what is said of the Harlot in ch. xvii. 3, 9, 15, as well as to the fall of Babylon, proceeds to quote this verse (Epist. 46).

5. for her sins have reached even unto heaven,] (See vv. 11). Gr. were joined; olive together; cf. the Vulgate, pervenerunt. Words renders: "because her sins olive even unto heaven," as Matt. xix. 5; Luke x. 11; Rom. xii. 9:—on this same use of the same verb, compare "My soul cleaveth unto the dust"—Ps. cxix. 25; xlv. 25; lxi. 8; Lam. ii. 2; Zech. xiv. 5 (LXX). The metaphor is borrowed from Jer. li. 9, her sins reach to heaven and adhere to it.

One may here recall the first mention of Babylon in the Bible,—Gen. xi. 3, 4.

and God hath remembered her iniquities.] Cf. ch. xvi. 19.

Verses 6, 7^a form "the second Strophe" (see on ver. 4):—

6. Render unto her even as she rendered,] (Omit you, see vv. 11). The words are founded on Jer. l. 15, 29; li. 24; cf. Ps. cxxxvii. 8. The "Voice," speaking in the name of God (see the close of ver. 8), now turns to address those who are to inflict the judgments, thus marking the third division of the chapter,—see the remarks introductory. Hengst. considers that the instruments of vengeance thus addressed are the "Ten Kings" (ch. xvii. 16); to whom Bisping adds Antichrist in the Last Days.

Ebrard rejects this meaning, and regards the words as addressed to "My people" as in ver. 4.

and double [unto her] the double according to her works:] "Unto her" is not read in the Greek—see vv. 11. The chief reference is to Jer. xvi. 18. This was the ordinary rule according to the Law,—Ex. xxii. 4, 7, 9: see the note on Isai. xl. 2. The double (see vv. 11), i.e., the fixed, legal retribution; cf. Isai. lxi. 7; Zech. ix. 12:—see also Ezek. xvi. 59.

in the cup which she mingled, mingle unto her double.] A double portion of the wine of God's wrath, see ver. 3; ch. xiv. 8; xvi. 2, 4: see on ch. xiv. 10. The cup which she had used as a means of seduction, shall now be changed into the instrument of her punishment.

7. How much soever] "In as many things as (ōra)." Dürstiedick compares Rom. vi. 10 (ō dē ō); Gal. ii. 20.

she glorified herself,] Gr. her—see vv. 11 and waxed wanton,] Or luxurious. See on ver. 3.

so much torment and mourning give her,] Or so much give her of torment and mourning: for she] See ver. 8 "mourning" (πένθος), and ver. 11 "mourn," A. V.: the usual term signifying the lament for the dead (Gen. xxvii. 41; Amos viii. 10),—here for her children. (Clause a of ver. 7 ends here).

Verses 7^b, 8, form "the third Strophe" (see on ver. 4):—

Because she saith in her heart, I sit a queen,] See Isai. xlvii. 7-9, on Babylon:—cf. Ezek. xxviii. 2; Zeph. ii. 15, on Tyre. The reference is to ch. xvii. 18. Or render as A. V.:—see ch. iii. 17.

and am no widow, and shall in no wise see mourning,] See Isai. xlvii. 8; and cf. Lam. i. 1. "See" that is, 'learn from experience this sorrow.'

Auberlen's conclusion as to the sense in which the symbol of the "Harlot" is to be understood is stated here: "Notwithstanding the universal character of the Harlot, it remains true that the Roman and Greek Churches are in a more peculiar sense the Harlot than the Evangelical Protestant. Babylon, in the times of St. John, became Rome; and it is clear from Rev. xviii. 7, that

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning,

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas that great city Babylon, that mighty we are intended to bear this in mind.... The Roman Catholic Church is not only accidentally and de facto, but in virtue of its very principle, a Harlot.... the metropolis of whoredom, the mother of harlots (ch. xvii. 5). It is she who, more than others, boasts of herself: 'I sit a Queen, and am no widow,' &c., l. c., p. 294.

8. therefore—The usual prophetic formula (διὰ τοῦτο), see Amos iii. 11; Micah iii. 12.

Or render, "seemourning. Therefore.. in one day shall her plagues come." Compare the lament of the poet:

"Omnia ademit Una dies infesta tibi tot præmia vitæ."
Luc. iii. 911.

See also Isai. xlvii. 9. The singular, in one day, is in contrast to the plural, her plagues—four in number (see below)—which shall come with a sudden destruction.

Ebrard understands that the several plagues are to come on the same day; see the expression "in one hour," vv. 10, 17, 19.

death,] Some take this to be postilence—see on ch. ii. 23; vi. 8; but it is rather death by the hand of enemies that the context refers to.

and mourning,] for the loss of her people,—see on ver. 7.

and famine,] Here notes I. Williams, "are the red horse, and the black, and the pale of the four Seals (ch. vi.). And, though not expressly mentioned, it is implied, that He also on the White Horse is together with them; for it is added, 'For strong is the Lord God who judgeth her'" (p. 370).

and she shall be utterly burned with fire,] The punishment of the "Harlot" in ch. xvii. 16.

for mighty is the Lord God which judged her,] (See vv. 11.). Compare ch. xvii. 17, where the event is expressly declared to have been overruled by God; as also the language of Ezek. xvi. 59; Amos iii. 6.

Verses 9, 10 form "the fourth Strophe" (see on ver. 4):—

9. And the kings of the earth,] See ver. 3; ch. xvii. 2; Ezek. xxvii. 16, 17. Verses 9–19 comprise (1) "Kings," the rulers of the world, who are combined in this lament with (2) the "merchants" of the earth; and (3) those who traffic on the seas;—indicating the universal character of the World-City. This varied imagery prevents an exclusive application to any one City—Babylon, Tyre, Jerusalem, Rome: see on ver. 11.

New Test.—VOL. IV.

Burger would, at this point, divide the section (vv. 4–20) into two; because he considers that the description in vv. 9–20 cannot have proceeded from the "voice from heaven" in ver. 4. This section (vv. 9–20), accordingly, he ascribes to St. John himself; and he explains that the Seer was "here moved by the Spirit of Prophecy to insert in this place this lament over the fall of Babylon (founded on Old Test. passages such as Isai. xxiii.; Ezek. xxvi.; xxvii.) whereby the meaning of the future judgment described to him in vv. 4–8 appears in its full light."

who committed fornication and lived wantonly with her,] Or luxuriously: see on ver. 7. Compare the dirge over Tyre, Ezek. xxvi. 15–xxvii. 36, into which the description here passes imperceptibly.

shall weep and wail over her,] For the verb to wail, see on ch. i. 7. For similar lamentations see the dirge in Jer. xlix. 20–22, over Edom; and in Jer. l. 46, over Babylon. Note,—in this, the first lament, the tense used is the future; in the second, the present, vv. 11–14; in the third, the past, vv. 17–19. This verse gives the standpoint of the prediction: what is still future is described here.

when they look upon the smoke of her burning,] These words are repeated in ver. 18. Words. notes:—"Some of those very Powers, who were once vassals of Rome, will one day rise against her.... The reason of this [lament] seems to be that the Fall of Rome may perhaps be followed by a triumph of Anarchy, and an outbreak of Infidelity."

10. standing afar off for the fear of her torment,] Fearing lest they may "receive of her plagues,"—ver. 4.

saying, Woe, woe,] The two-fold Woe expresses merely the depth of their sorrow, not, as Hengst. thinks, a reference to the 'doubling' in ver. 6. Ewald (see on ch. xi. 14), explains that the end of "the third" city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

11 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more:

12 The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of Woe" of ch. viii. 13, is realised in a twofold form, three times—here and in vv. 16, 19.

the great City, Babylon, the mighty city] Observe the nominative here,—not the dative (?), as in ch. viii. 13, or accusative, as in ch. xii. 12,—indicating not a denunciation of woe, but an exclamation of sorrow.

for in one hour is thy judgment come.] See vv. 17, 19,—and the phrase "in one day," ver. 8. For the sense "suddenly," see Jer. li. 8 (ἀφνω, LXX.). Ebrard urges that we must not here understand "suddenly" (as De Wette), or "in the same hour," eadem hora, as in ch. 8 where the prep. (now omitted, see vv. 11.) is found, and where more than one judgment is spoken of; but "swiftly," in the space of one hour. And he interprets, either that but one hour has elapsed from the announcement (perhaps in ch. xvi. 12) to the coming of the judgment; or that in the space of one (mystical) hour the fall of Babylon has been completed. In support of the former interpretation, we may observe that the "Ten Kings" reign during one hour (see on ch. xvii. 12), and these (ch. xvii. 17) give their power to the Beast (s. 481). For the word "Judgment," see on ver. 10.

Verses 11–16 form "the fifth Strophe" (see on ver. 4):—

11. And the merchants of the earth] See on ver. 3. The "Kings" represent the world's secular and political power; the "Merchants" all who engage in the world's struggle for mammon: cf. Ezek. xxvii. 3, 12–25.

The passage Jas. iv. 13–v. 6 has been compared with these verses (especially the ἐμπορευόμεθα of Jas. iv. 13 with the ἔμποροι of this chapter—vv. 3, 11, 15), by a writer in the Academy (March 16, 1878), who follows Zeller, quoted on ch. ii. 10. But the similarity is purely fanciful.

weep and mourn over her,] The present tense (see vv. 11.), the descriptive tone being assumed here (see on ver. 9). Cf. the use of the tenses in ch. xi. 9, 10. The future is resumed fully in ver. 15 (see on ver. 14).

for no man buyeth] We may refer to ch. xiii. 17 as illustrating the suitability of this judgment. Babylon had deprived all who would not serve her of the social right to "buy or sell;" and now she is herself compelled to buy no more.

their merchandise any more:] Gr. ship's burden, as in Acts xxi. 3—their freight, their cargo (τὸν γόμον); Vulg. 'merces,'

"wares:" the word occurs in the N. T. only in this passage and in Acts xxi. 3. For the imagery see the prophecies against Tyre Isai. xxiii. ; and especially Ezek. xxvii.

Vitringa and others feel that the features of this descriptive passage do not suit Rome, which was never at any period of her history the centre of the world's commerce. Vitringa, accordingly, would refer allegorically to "spiritual wares" ("mystice," . . . "Roma destructa, jacet emporium mercium spiritualium," p. 793). Words. notes: "The Church of Rome, 'the general Mart of Christendom,' has endeavoured to extend her spiritual traffic into all parts of the world." Hengst. urges, as "decisive against this view," that the commerce here spoken of is altogether different from that of Tyre. It is merely said that "Babylon bought this merchandise; she does not sell the wares, but they merely serve for her use and consumption." Alford writes: "The difficulty is not confined to the application of the prophecy to Rome Papal, but extends over the application of it to Rome at all, which last is determined for us by the solution given, ch. xvii. ult. For Rome never has been, and from its very position never could be a great commercial city. I leave this difficulty unsolved. . . . The details of this mercantile lamentation far more nearly suit London than Rome at any assignable period of her history."

See above the remarks on ver. 9:—The whole passage points not to any single city, at any one single period, but to the World-City throughout all time. See the concluding paragraph of the Introduction.

12. merchandise] Omit the article.

Reuss disapproves of this passage: "All the objects of luxury which formed the basis of the commerce and of the riches of the whole world are enumerated here with an evident sentiment of disdain and repulsion. Commerce itself, so often signalized by the ancient prophets as an agent of corruption, as a destroying element of national purity, is also execrated by their disciple, who takes pleasure in making the inventory of its disaster."

Hengst. notes that "the hard materials of display," as well as "the soft" are four in number, "the signature of the earth, which plays an important part in this chapter, occupied as it is with the fate of the mistress of the world."

Züllig divides the articles of luxury in this passage into seven classes:—

pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all 'thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, 13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and 'slaves, and ^{Or, bodies,} souls of men.

(1) The first class of articles of luxury:—precious wares.

of gold, and silver, and precious stones.] Gr. precious stones,—see on ch. xv. 6; ch. xxi. 19. Compare the attire of the "Harlot," ch. xvii. 4.

and pearls;] The genitive is naturally to be read here, as in the case of the preceding and the following nouns,—see vv. ll.

(2) The second class of articles of luxury:—materials of rich attire.

and of fine linen,] The adjective is to be read,—see vv. ll.; Gr. of fine linen stuff. On the word rendered "fine linen," see Note A on ch. xv. 6.

and purple, and silk, and scarlet;] Each article specified here is an extreme instance of luxury:—the principal distinction of the Cæsars was the military or imperial robe of purple (Gibbon, ch. xiii.) As to the word rendered "silk" (Gr. silken stuff), Virgil is the most ancient writer who expressly mentions the soft wool which was combed from the trees of the Seres or Chinese ("Velleraque ut foliis depectunt tenuia Seres"—Georg. ii. 121). So costly was this article of luxury that in the reign of Tiberius a law was passed against its use ("ne vestis serica viros fœdaret"—Tac. Ann. ii. 33); and it was not till the reign of Helioabalus (A.D. 218) that this law was despised, and the Emperor first wore a dress composed wholly of silk (bolosericum),—see Gibbon, ch. x.; Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science, art. silk. On the word rendered "scarlet" (Gr. scarlet stuff), see on ch. xvii. 3.

From genitives the construction now passes to accusatives, until the words "horses, and chariots, and slaves," in ver. 13, where the gen. is resumed.

(3) The third class of articles of luxury:—materials for costly furniture.

and all thyine wood,] The tree Thuja was called citrus, and its wood citrum by the Romans. It is mentioned by Homer (Odyss. iv. 52). Athenæus (v. p. 207) connects it with ivory, as here. It was commonly used for inlaying,—cf. Dioscorides (i. 21); Theophrastus (Hist. Plant. iii. 4). The Thuja is one of the cupressineous division of coniferae, of which one species, the arbor vitæ, is common in English gardens. Here we are to understand the related genus Callitris quadri- valvis of present botanists (the Thuja articulata of Desfont), a large tree of Barbary, yielding a hard fragrant wood, and also the aromatic gum-resin called Sandarach. Pliny (H. N. iii. 15) speaks of a mania at Rome for tables made of this material:—see Smith's Dict. of the Bible; Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science.

and every vessel of ivory, and every vessel [made] of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble;] Note the last four genitives depending on the preposition ἐκ.

13. and cinnamon,] The first of—

(4) The fourth class of luxuries:—precious spices.

"The bark of the Cinnamomum Zeylanicum, a lauraceous tree, native of Ceylon;" it was imported into Judæa by the Phœnicians or Arabians. It was a component of the holy oil, Ex. xxx. 23; a perfume for the bed, Prov. vii. 17:—see Smith's Dict.; Brande and Cox, as before.

The accusatives still continue—down to the word "sheep" inclusive.

and spices,] Gr. amomum,—an addition to the Textus Receptus (see vv. ll.).

"Amomum," is a zingiberaceous plant with aromatic seeds, much employed under the name of cardamoms, grains of Paradise, &c.; found only in the hot parts of India and Africa. The Romans prepared from it a fragrant balsam, and unguents for the hair:—

"Assyrio semper tibi crinis amomo Splendeat."—Mart. viii. 28.

Cf. Virgil, Ecl. iv. 25.

and incense,] The Greek word denotes the material, viz. gums, spices, &c., which when burned produce the perfumed smoke known as incense, see Note A on ch. v. 8; and cf. ch. viii. 3; Luke i. 10.

and ointment, and frankincense;] On the word "frankincense" see Note C on ch. viii. 3.

(5) The fifth class:—articles of food.

and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat;] "Fine flour" (σμιδαλις) "the finest meal"—see Gen. xviii. 6; Lev. ii. 1, 2 (LXX).

(6) The sixth class:—merchandise for agricultural and domestic uses.

and cattle, and sheep,] In Luke x. 34; Acts xxiii. 24; 1 Cor. xv. 39, the Greek word (κτῆνος) is rendered "beast;" but it is better

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

to render here "cattle:" "beast" in the Apoc. is θηρίον—e.g. ch. vi. 8; xiii. 1; cf. Tobit x. 10.

Note,—the series of accusatives ends here.

and [merchandise] of horses, and chariots;] The construction with genitives is now resumed, see on ver. 12. The noun rendered "chariot" (ῥάδιον,—not ἄρμα used in ch. ix. 9; Acts viii. 28), Quintilian states to have been a Gaulish carriage with four wheels (Isidor. xx. 17):—see Grimm in vor. Alexander Severus supplied the Roman senators with carriages of this kind ornamented with silver (Lamprid., ap. Wetstein, writes: "interesse Romanæ dignitatis putans ut his tantæ urbis senatores vectarentur").

(7) The seventh class of merchandise, according to Züllig:—the traffic in men.

and of slaves.] Gr. (merchandise) of bodies (σωμάτων, Vulg. mancipia); cf. Tob. x. 10 (A.V. "servants"); 2 Macc. viii. 11 (A.V. "captives"); see the next note. In classic Greek the expression was "servile bodies" (σώματα δοῦλα):—see Pollux, iii. 78; Lob. ad Phryn. p. 378. Vitringa quoting Gen. xxxiv. 29, "all their wealth" (LXX. πάντα τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν), explains here, "instrumenta quælibet domestica." and [the] souls of men.] "Souls" in the accus. Or lives. This phrase is borrowed from the usage of the Old Test. In Ezek. xxvii. 13, "the souls of men" (דְּמִיּוֹת אֲדָמָה,—LXX. ἐν ψυχαῖς ἀνθρώπων,—A.V. "the persons of men") are enumerated as part of the traffic of Tyre—see the note in loc. The A.V. translates by "persons" in Gen. xxxvi. 6 (LXX. τὰ σώματα); Num. xxxi. 35;—by "souls" in Gen. xii. 5;—by "men" simply in 1 Chron. v. 21 (where the Hebrew and the LXX. have "souls of men"). The translation by the LXX. in Gen. xxxvi. 6 (see above) of the Hebrew "souls" by the Greek "bodies," is urged in proof that "slaves" (see the last note) and "souls of men" are equivalent expressions. The difference of construction, however, points to a difference of meaning; apparently to different kinds of slaves.

The series of genitives ends here.

Wetstein understands by "souls of men" gladiators;—Grotius and Züllig take "souls of men" to mean slaves properly so called; and "bodies of men" to mean persons of free condition who offer themselves for hire, e.g., mercenary soldiers, hired labourers, &c.;—Ewald thinks that "bodies" denote male and "souls of men" female slaves (in loc., s. 313);—Bengel, Hengst., Dusterd., Alf., and others, refer the word "bodies" to slaves employed about horses and chariots (with which they are united by construction), and "souls" to slaves in general;—Ebrard, takes "souls of men" literally; and applies this text to the spiritual danger to the "soul" resulting from this luxurious traffic. The expression, accordingly, does not denote the last among many articles of commerce; but refers to all that went before, and sums up the results of Babylon's spirit of luxury and world-traffic whereby "souls" were ruined, and sold into the slavery of the Dragon (s. 484);—Words. notes, not very differently, that the reservation of the last two classes for the close of the catalogue "appears to be designed to remind the reader that it is a spiritual commerce which is here described: a commerce in bodies and souls of men; a spiritual slave-trade. Such is the commerce of Rome;—Vitringa rejects this meaning (p. 794).

I. Williams thus expounds the passage: "All these things which are so minutely particularized, as expressive of the meshes of that net by which men's souls are taken, have also their place in the New Jerusalem, where every jewel is specified by name, and the gold of its streets, and the fine linen, and the incense, and the wine, and the oil, its white horses also. In both alike must they stand for spiritual merchandise of good and evil, the false riches and the true" (p. 374).

14. And the fruits] Gr. the harvest—a noun found only here in the N. Test.; the "summer fruits" of Jer. xl. 10.

which thy soul lusted after are gone from thee.] A Hebrew idiom (see vv. ll.).

and all things that were dainty] Gr. "oily," and hence "splendid,"—found only here (Greek and English) in the N. T.

and sumptuous.] As in Luke xvi. 19.

are perished from thee.] See vv. ll.

and [men] shall find them no more at all.] Gr. "they shall find them"—see vv. ll.

The connexion of this fourteenth verse with the rest of the passage has greatly perplexed commentators. The change to the second person led Vit. (p. 794), after Beza and Launoy, to conclude that the verse should come between vv. 23 and 24;—Ewald suggests that it is a marginal note by St. John himself, who for the moment found no suitable place for the thought;—It is an apostrophe, notes Stuart, after the manner of the Hebrew prophets, resulting from excitement in the 15 The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing,

16 And saying, Alas, alas that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

17 For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off, mind of the writer (cf. Isai. xiv. 10; xlvii. 1-3);—Dusterd. thinks that, as in ver. 9, the “Kings,” so here the “Merchants,” utter their lament over the City;—Alford connects with ver. 11, as if we had there “our,” not “their” merchandise;—This interruption, writes Zullig, is “a flash from the blue heaven,” as in ch. xvi. 15;—Burger would divide the entire section (vv. 4-20) at ver. 9—see above on ver. 9.

Hengst. however, is clearly right in regarding this whole passage, vv. 4-20, as uttered by the voice from heaven directed to Babylon. In like manner, in ver. 22, Babylon is addressed by the Angel of ver. 21, after he had previously spoken of her in the third person.

15. The merchants of these things.] See vv. 12-14,—especially the “dainty and sumptuous” things mentioned in ver. 14.

who were made rich by her.] The cause of the lamentation is specified.

shall stand afar off] The future is now used.

for the fear of her torment, weeping and mourning;] Ver. 11 is here resumed, after the interposed description of the City’s luxury.

16. saying, Woe, woe.] (Omit “and”—see vv. 11.)

This verse corresponds closely to ver. 10, the lament of the “Kings.”

the great city, she that was arrayed] Note the nominative absolute, as in ver. 10. Cf. this description with that of the “Woman,” in ch. xvii. 4; and on this alternation of “Woman,” and “City,” cf. ch. xvii. 16. For the particulars see ver. 12.

and decked] Gr. gilded. See ch. xvii. 4.

and precious stones and pearls] See vv. 11.—Gr. precious stone and pearl—see on ver. 12; and cf. ch. xxi. 18, 19. The “Kings,” ver. 10, mourn over Babylon as “the mighty City;” the “Merchants” mourn for the City of luxury.

Burger notes that the City is here described exactly as it had been shewn to the Seer in ch. xvii. 4,—magnificent and luxurious. Expositors, he adds, who understand by the “Woman,” in ch. xvii. 1, the Papacy, will have trouble in adjusting this verse with the whole description which entirely confirms the conclusion that the “Harlot” is the great World-City of the last World-Empire—the Babylon of the Last Times, whose judgment, announced in ch. xiv. 8, is recorded in ch. xvi. 19. See however the note on ver. 20.

17. for in one hour so great riches is made desolate.] In the Greek texts, and according to the natural connexion, these words belong to ver. 16.

Here, as in ver. 10, mention is made of “one hour” as the period within which all this magnificence is to come to an end.

Verses 17-19 form “the sixth Strophe” (see on ver. 4):—

And every shipmaster,] Gr. pilot. This word is found elsewhere only in Acts xxvii. 11; cf. Ezek. xxvii. 27. In the addition of this third class—sea-faring men (see on ver. 9)—Ebrard sees a reference to the typical “many waters” of ch. xvii. 1.

and every one that saileth any whither,] So Alf.—see vv. 11. Gr. who saileth to a place (cf. Acts xxvii. 2);—and so the Vulgate: “et omnis qui in locum navigat”;—every one who saileth to the place (Words.);—Bengel, Ebrard, Hengst., Dusterd., Bisping, &c., render that saileth to a definite haven;—De Wette translates: “Nach einem Orte schiffen” (but in his commentary he renders Küsten-fahrer, as the A.V. of Acts xxvii. 2, “meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia”);—I. Williams: every one at the place as he saileth by, comparing Jer. xviii. 16, of Judah, and Zeph. ii. 15, of Nineveh.

(1) After the “pilot” the person who navigates the ship, and directs her course—(2) the Captain is next mentioned.

and mariners.] Here are mentioned (3) all who work the ship.

and as many as gain their living by sea,] A classical phrase; Gr. “as many as work the sea,” “mare exercent.”

(4) All are now denoted who are in any way interested in the sea, whether as sailors, or fishermen, or divers for pearls, &c. The fundamental passage here is Ezek. xxvii. 26, &c., where the subject is the fall of Tyre.

stood afar off.] Like the “Kings” and “Merchants” in vv. 10, 15, and of their

18 And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!

19 And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

20 Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophetes;—the other features also are repeated in this Strophe, viz. the mention of the grandeur of the City (vv. 10, 16, 18), and the exclamation at its downfall, vv. 10, 16, 19.

Observe also that in vv. 17, 18, 19, the past tense (ἔστησαν) is used. In ver. 15 (as in vv. 8, 9) the future is resumed; and in ver. 11 we have the present.

Reuss notes that "the past tense of the Apokalyptik style is all of a sudden resumed here"—see Note A at the end of this chapter. The change of tenses, however, rests altogether on the animated character of the description.

18. and cried out as they looked upon.] See vv. 11; and cf. ver. 9.

saying, What [city] is like the great city? Cf. Ezek. xxvii. 32, where Tyre is spoken of. Ebrard compares ch. xiii. 4, where the Beast from the sea, or "Babylon qua World-power, is similarly eulogized" (s. 486).

19. And they cast dust upon their heads.] See again Ezek. xxvii. 30; cf. Job ii. 12; Lam. ii. 10.

weeping and mourning.] See vv. 11, 15.

saying, Woe, woe, the great city.] As in vv. 10, 16, we have the nominative case.

wherein were made rich] Alford would render "whereby;"—he writes: "ἐν is ambiguous at first appearance, but from what follows it cannot be local, as E.V. 'uberein.'" all that had their ships in the sea] See vv. 11. for the introduction of the article.

by reason of her costliness.] The substantive (τιμωρίας) is found only here (for the adj. see ch. xvii. 4; James v. 7). By reason of (see ver. 3) her costly treasures of gold and silver, all that trade by sea were made rich: cf. Ezek. xxvii. 33—a chapter which, once more, as throughout this passage, is followed.

for in one hour is she made desolate.] The expression "in one hour" is thrice repeated, vv. 10, 17, 19.

On this lament I. Williams notes: "There is something especially mournful in the fall of great cities, as in that celebrated passage of antiquity: 'On returning from Asia, as I sailed from Ægina towards Megara, I began to look on the regions around. Behind me was Ægina, before Megara, on the right hand Piræus, on the left was Corinth; cities which at one time were most flourishing, now they lay before the eyes prostrate and in ruins"—Epist. Sulpic. Cicer." (p. 376).

20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven,] We have here the section interposed between the sixth and the seventh clause. Ch. xix. is the response to this invitation, uttered—not by the "shipmaster" and "mariners;" (ver. 17) whom it would not suit,—nor yet by St. John, who is the passive beholder of the Vision,—but by the celestial voice (as in ch. xii. 12) from which proceeded all between ver. 4 and the present verse: see on ver. 14. This verse, in fact, is "as it were an Epistrophe to the six Strophes" (Ebrard):—see on ver. 4. Cf. Deut. xxxii. 43 (LXX.); Isai. xlv. 23; xlix. 13; Jer. li. 48. I. Williams understands ch. xix. 1 to correspond to the word "Heaven"; and ch. xix. 4, where the Church is symbolized by the Twenty-four Elders, to correspond to the "Apostles and Prophets"—ch. xix. 5, referring to the "Saints." The parallel in ch. xii. 12 proves that the speaker is not, as Züllig and Burger suppose, St. John himself.

and ye saints, and ye apostles, and ye prophets;] (See vv. 11.). Not only Heaven, but those also who belong to the Lord on earth (see Phil. iii. 20) are invited to rejoice over the fallen City. Believers on earth are specially enumerated here, as "the Saints," "the Apostles," "the Prophets;" they are classed more summarily in ver. 24, in ch. ii. 18, and in Luke xi. 49–51. Hengst. restricts "the Apostles" to the Twelve, as in ch. xxi. 14;—Züllig understands by them all teachers "sent forth," e.g. Barnabas, Acts xiii. 3; Epaphroditus, Phil. ii. 25; cf. Rom. xvi.;—Ebrard makes the "Apostles and Prophets" to represent "the martyrs of Jesus," ch. xvii. 6.

Lücke (s. 389) argues from these words that because the Apostles are here assumed to be in heaven, the Apocalypse was not written by the Apostle John. To this Döder. answers that one might as well argue from the verse that the writer of the Apocalypse was not a prophet, or that he was not an Apostle; and Godet (St. John's Gospel, i. 56)—having observed that the passage proves that when the Apocalypse was written there were in heaven some phets; for God hath avenged you on her.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.

22 And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

saints, apostles, and prophets, who had suffered martyrdom—adds: “But ‘some apostles’ are not all the Apostles, any more than ‘some saints’ are all the saints.”

From Acts xii. 2 we learn that the Apostle James had been put to death. Renan regards this verse as confirming the tradition that St. Peter and St. Paul suffered martyrdom at Rome.—p. 185. Reuss observes that “the prophets are the Christian orators known from the Acts and the Epistles; Rome was not guilty of having shed the blood of those of the Old Testament.” With reference to the narrative of the martyrdom of St. John by the Jews, as alleged in the chronicle of Georgius Hamartolos (Cent. ix.),—which Keim (l.c., i. s. 42) adduces in order to shew that the Apostle John was never in Asia Minor,—see Introd. § 4.

for God hath judged your judgment on her.] On this use of the preposition (ἐκ) cf. ch. vi. 10; xix. 2.

This passage, we may perhaps conclude, refers to the prayer of the Martyrs under the fifth Seal (ch. vi. 10), and to the acknowledgment of God's judgments under the third Vial (ch. xvi. 5-7): and we may understand by “your judgment,” (1) Either ‘what you have judged,’ or ‘what she hath judged concerning you’;—(2) After the analogy of Isai. x. 2; Micah vii. 9 (LXX.), ‘what seemed right to you.’ (For τὸ κρίμα here, cf. ch. xvii. 1; xx. 4; John ix. 39. For ἡ κρίσις ver. 10, cf. ch. xiv. 7; xix. 2; John iii. 19; v. 22, 29, 30). Hengst. explains: “Your judgment (cf. ch. xvii. 1; xx. 4), the doom which she pronounced upon you, the judgment which she held over you, your condemnation (ch. vi. 10, and cf. ch. xiii. 10).” Words. translates: “for God judged your cause from out of her; that is, He has taken your cause out of her bands into His own—Ps. ix. 4; cxl. 12.” Alf.: “God hath exacted from her that judgment of vengeance which is due to you.” Düsterd.: “It is called a judgment of believers (‘your judgment’), so far as this judgment executed on the City (‘taken from her’) is the justification and satisfaction of the believers who had been persecuted by the World-City, but who are now avenged on her.”

THE THIRD ANGEL (21-24).

The third Angel (see vv. 1, 4) now enters on the scene.

21. And a strong Angel] Gr. one strong [or mighty] Angel, cf. ch. viii. 13. The epithet “mighty” refers to the task to be performed,—cf. ver. 1; ch. v. 2; x. 1.

took up a stone as it were a great millstone.] (See vv. 11. :—note the forms of this expression in Matt. xviii. 6; Mark ix. 42; Luke xvii. 2). Cf. ch. viii. 8, for a similar image.

and cast it into the sea.] The figure is borrowed from the symbolical action committed to Seraiah by Jeremiah (li. 61-64): “Thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates: and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink,” &c. Here the image is intensified by being changed into that of “a great millstone,”—with plain reference to the words of Christ as to those who cause to offend, Matt. xvii. 6.

The Euphrates, the river of Jeremiah's prophecy, has now become a sea.

saying, Thus with a mighty fall shall Babylon the great City, be cast down.] The noun (δρῦμα) is found only here;—on the cognate verb cf. Matt. viii. 32 and the parallel passages.

and shall be found no more at all.] The total disappearance is denoted, as a great stone sinks beneath the waters:—cf. Ex. xv. 5; Neh. ix. 11. Observe,—the phrase “no more at all” occurs six times in vv. 21-23.

“They who say that the Apocalyptic Babylon fell when Rome was taken by the Goths, contradict this voice of the Angel” (Words.).

22. And the voice of harpers and minstrels and futeplayers] This imagery, expressive of complete desolation, is borrowed from Isai. xxiv. 8; Ezek. xxvi. 13.

and no craftsman of whatsoever craft [be be] shall be found any more at all in thee;] Gr. no craftsman of every craft—words which important authorities omit, see vv. 11.

and the voice of a mill] See Matt. xxiv. 41. Compare the reading in ver. 21. Or translate “the voice of a millstone.”

23 And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

23. And the light of a lamp shall shine] The word signifying "lamp" occurs here for the first time in the Apoc.—cf. ch. iv. 5; viii. 10. The verb is rendered as if accentuated as the active (φάω); if accentuated as the passive (φαῖν), render "shall be seen."

and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride] The imagery of this whole passage is founded on Jer. xxv. 10:—see also Jer. vii. 34; xvi. 9; xxxiii. 11.

for thy merchants were the princes of the earth;] See on ch. vi. 15. Burger takes "the princes of the earth" as the subject here—"they were thy Merchants" (see vv. 11.); which he thinks suits best the order of the laments, ver. 9, &c., and also the description of ch. xvii. 2. The expressions here are founded on the language used of Tyre in Isai. xxiii. 8. The words refer not to the merchants of Babylon itself, but to "the Merchants of the earth" who "waxed rich by the power of her wantonness," ver. 3; cf. ver. 15; Ezek. xxvii. 21, &c. Renan (p. 442) admits that this feature of the description is not very well suited to Rome.

In the phrase "the princes of the earth" are combined the classes specified separately in ver. 3, and in vv. 9-16,—viz. the "Kings" and the "Merchants" of the earth, who share in the fall of the Great City. The cause of "the princes of the earth" waxing rich, by means of that traffic with Babylon which supplied the luxury and the enjoyments that are now no more, is added in the next clause,— for with thy sorcery were all the nations deceived.] (See on ch. ix. 21). That is, because all the nations had been allured by her seductions (ch. xvii. 2); and all the world's treasures had flowed into her lap. By the guilty seductions of Babylon (Isai. xlvii. 9-12), as described in ch. xiv. 8; xviii. 3, all the nations have been deceived, and, owing to this cause, been subjected to her dominion.

Stuart rightly takes the last two clauses, each beginning with "for" (ὅτι), as "separate and co-ordinate reasons for the ruin that had just been predicted." I. Williams takes these two clauses "to mark the Tyre and the Nineveh of the prophets—Tyre, 'the crowning city whose merchants were princes' (Isai. xxiii. 8); and Nineveh, 'the mistress of witchcrafts' (Nah. iii. 4)—both types of the days of merchandise polluting the Christian Church with the 'whoredoms and witchcrafts of Jezebel's' (2 Kings ix. 22)" . . . "As the Balaam of the Seven Epistles was the forerunner of the False Prophet,—so Jezebel of the great Harlot, Babylon" (p. 382). See also on ver. 24.

24. And in her was found] The Angel now ceases to address the fallen City; and, adopting the narrative style, speaks out this last great cause of her overthrow as a fact respecting her.

the blood of prophets and of saints, and of all that have been slain on the earth.] To what is said in ver. 20 is added here "of all that have been slain on the earth." "From this passage," says Andreas, "we are confirmed that the prophecy is of the world, and not of one city" (i.e., p. 105). I. Williams refers to Matt. xxiii. 29, 35, 36; Luke xi. 49, 51; xiii. 33: "If it be asked how can the blood of saints shed by heathen Rome be required of this mystical Jerusalem? it is the same as to ask how the blood of Abel could be required of Jerusalem" (p. 383).

Düsterd. takes the two co-ordinate clauses of ver. 23 beginning with "for," together with this verse, to state a threefold denunciation of the guilt of Babylon—(1) on account of her luxury (see vv. 3, 11); (2) of her lasciviousness (vv. 3, 6, 9); (3) of her blood-stained hatred of believers (ch. xvii. 6):—"And thus the discourse of the Angel is closed by a definite statement of the guilt of the City."

Auberlen—who represents Babylon as meaning the Church, "the Harlot of the New Covenant,"—writes: "Nor must we confine our thoughts here to cases like those of Huss, the Waldenses, the Huguenots, the British Martyrs, &c., or the martyrs which are yet future; but bear in mind the words 'Whoso hateth his brother is a murderer' (1 John iii. 15). Wherever true faithful Christians are neglected and oppressed by the rulers of the Church . . . there we commit murder against the saints of God" (i.e. p. 290).

Be this as it may the result is clearly this, that as Jerusalem filled up the measure of its sin by the rejection of the Saviour, and must also now expiate the guilt which had been incurred by Israel in past generations (Matt. xxiii. 35), so must the World-City of the Last Days.

With this Vision the judgment on Babylon is completed and sealed. To the present section (ch. xvii. 1—ch. xix. 10) belongs the scene in heaven which corresponds to the invitation of ch. xviii. 20.

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. XVIII.

NOTE A ON CHAP. xviii.—“APOKALYPTIK.”

The modern conception of “Apokalyptik” has been already discussed in the Introduction, § 9. This conception has been favoured by such orthodox writers as Auberlen (l.c., p. 80, &c.). Rationalists also have adopted it; and rationalistic writers seek to combine the notion of “Apokalyptik” with their own theory as to Prophecy (see on ver. 18). For Rationalists, “an ordinary Prophet” is but a moral teacher whose vision is bounded by the horizon of his own time—by “the real and actual situation.” Prophecy includes no pre-dictive element; and—as Rationalists deny the existence of the Supernatural—no Prophet possesses an insight into the future.

To give an example:—Although, notes Reuss (p. 127), ch. xviii. is one of the most simple and easy of the entire Book, it has nevertheless presented the difficulty of determining the precise moment at which the Seer places the ruin of Rome, predicted in ch. xvii., and positively accomplished when ch. xix. begins. The reader may at first sight hesitate whether “the three voices which here celebrate in succession the fall of the Capital, prophesy the future or speak of an accomplished catastrophe.” The author, adds Reuss, here abandons the framework of his “Apocalyptic” drama, and speaks as an ordinary prophet from the point of view of the real and actual situation. From the “Apocalyptic” point of view there should be, when Rome is destroyed, only the elect on one side, and on the other the Romans and their adherents, whom Antichrist [Nero] and his Oriental army have devoted to death. But now, from the point of view of simple prophecy—the colours of its pictures being borrowed from the Old Test.—we hear of men in great numbers, who, ruined politically by the fall of Rome, but not included in her catastrophe, shall mourn over her destiny from motives of interest rather than of pity. See Note A on ch. i. 1.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 God is praised in heaven for judging the great whore, and avenging the blood of his saints. 7 The marriage of the Lamb. 10 The angel will not be worshipped. 17 The fowls called to the great slaughter.

[Ver. 1 om. 1st καί.—ὡς φωνήν.—λεγόντων.—om. καὶ ἡ τιμή.—om. Κυρίῳ.—τοῦ Θεοῦ. Ver. 5 ἀπὸ τ. θρ.—τῷ Θεῷ.—om. καὶ before οἱ φοβ.—om. καὶ before οἱ μικροί. (Codex C breaks off here). Ver. 6 λεγόντων.—[N, B, P read ὁ Θ. ἡμῶν]. Ver. 7 [A reads δώσωμεν]. Ver. 8 λαμπρόν, καθρόν. Ver. 9 [A reads οἱ ἀληθ].—τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰσιν. Ver. 11 [A, P, 1 omit καλούμενος]. Ver. 12 [N, B, P, 1 omit ὡς].—[B, Syr., Andr. read ἔχων ὀνόματα γεγραμμένα, καὶ ὄνομα γεγρ.]. Ver. 13 [N reads περιεραμμένον.—cf. ῥεραντισμένοι, Heb. x. 22].—κέκληται. Ver. 14 τὰ ἐν τῷ οὐρ.—λευκόν, καθρόν. Ver. 15 τοῦ θυμοῦ τῆς ὀργῆς. Ver. 16 om. 2nd τό. Ver. 17 δεῦτε συνάχθητε [1 reads δεῦτε εἰς τὸ δεῖπν., and Er. supplied καὶ συνάγεσθε from the ei congregamini of the Vulg.].—τ. δείπνον τὸ μέγα τοῦ. Ver. 18 ἐλευθέρων τε καί. Ver. 19 τὸν πόλεμον. Ver. 20 καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὁ [A, Cop. read καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ ὁ].—τῆς καιομένης.—ἐν θείῳ. Ver. 21 τῇ ἐξελεύσει [so also in 1; but Er. altered this reading after the qui procedit of the Vulg.; cf. ch. i. 16; xix. 15].]

This chapter, in vv. 1–8, gives the response to the invocation of ch. xviii. 20. Judgment has been inflicted on the “Harlot” (ch. xvii. 1); and as the downfall of the “Accuser” had been followed by a hymn of praise (ch. xii. 10), so now a heavenly Hallelujah celebrates the first act of the final sentence upon the anti-christian powers which served as Satan’s instruments. At each crisis in the Apocalypse we find a similar hymn of praise—ch. iv. 8; v. 9; vii. 10; xi. 15; xv. 3; xvi. 5.

It is to be noted that from this point onwards the Apocalypse follows the course of the closing chapters of Ezekiel, from ch. xxxvi. to the end:—There, the land of Israel is comforted, and a resurrection of the dead is described (Ezek. xxxvi.; xxxvii.); then comes “the Gog-catastrophe” (Ezek. xxxviii.;

AND after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2 For true and righteous are his xxxix.); then we read of a new Heaven and a new Jerusalem in a new Holy Land resembling Paradise.

Hengst.,—who considers that in St. John's time the Beast oppressed the Church by the instrumentality of the "sixth Head," or heathen monarchy of Rome (see on ch. xvii. 1),—concludes that now, in answer to the voice of the Angel in ch. xviii. 20, the Church of the just made perfect celebrates God's judgment on Rome, (1) by the Hallelujah of the Saints (vv. 1-3), and (2) in ver. 4, by the Hallelujah of "the four and twenty Elders," or representatives of the Church—see on ch. iv. 4. Here, as exhibited in the Vision, a past salvation is celebrated; and on this follows, in vv. 5-8, another Hymn which by faith anticipates what is to come, and introduces a narrative of how such anticipations are gradually realized. The Song of praise and the Vision of the Bride are intended to give support under the sad picture of ch. xviii. In vv. 9, 10 a new command to "write," as in ch. xiv. 13, is given; and then—in vv. 11-21 which enlarge on the intimations of ch. xvii.—the victory of Christ over the "Ten Kings" is recorded:—on the defeat of Attila, notes Hengst., the battle-field of Chalons was strewn with 162,000 corpses. We next read of the destruction (ver. 20) of two of the three enemies of God's Kingdom, of whom we were told in ch. xiii.; while ch. xx. 1-6 represents how the third, Satan, is rendered for a time harmless.

Ebrard regards vv. 1-10 as marking the transition to the second part of the seventh Vial (see on ch. xvi. 21). The first judgment under this Vial, or the fall of Babylon (ch. xvi. 19), having been developed in ch. xvii. and ch. xviii., the second judgment, or that on the Beast from the Abyss and the agents by whose aid the sentence on Babylon had been executed, is now recorded in ch. xix. 11-21. This judgment Ebrard calls "The marriage of the Lamb" (ver. 7); and it brings to an end the three and a half days during which the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xi. 7-11)—the eighth World-power (ch. xvii. 11)—is to rule.

In the description of the Apocalyptic judgment in ch. xvii.-xix., notes Auberlen (l. c., p. 317), "we are struck by this remarkable difference, that the Harlot is judged first by the Beast and his Kings, and that afterwards the Beasts and their allies are judged by the 'Parusia' [i.e., "the Presence" or "Coming," 2 Thess. ii. 8; 1 John ii. 28] of the Lord Jesus himself."

CHAP. XIX.—THE SONG OF TRIUMPH (1-4).

1. After these things.] Omit "And"—see vv. 11.

I heard as it were a great voice.] The addition of "as it were" (see vv. 11.; and cf. ver. 6) denotes that what St. John now hears merely resembles the voice of a multitude. It is not necessarily the voice of the Saints spoken of in ch. xviii. 20 (Bengel, Hengst., Ebrard, &c.); or of the Angelic host (Züllig); or of those described in ch. vii. 9, 14 (De Wette);—the words merely express 'a voice loud as that of a great multitude.'

of a great multitude in heaven, saying.] The participle "saying" is in the genitive plural (see vv. 11.), agreeing with the collective noun, "multitude" in the singular.

Hallelujah.] The first Hebrew words of Ps. cxxxv. 1, signifying "Praise ye the Lord."

We are given in ver. 5, after St. John's manner (cf. ch. ix. 11), a translation of this Hebrew formula, which occurs in the New Test. only in this chapter (four times, notes Hengst., and "in reference to the victory of God over the Earth, the signature of which is four.") It is borrowed from the Psalms, of which fifteen either begin or end with Hallelujah. This phrase Hallelujah, like the "Amen" (Ps. xli. 14) and the "Hosanna" (John xii. 13; Ps. cxviii. 25) of the Psalms has become current in our language; it is found in the Psalter for the first time in the last words of Ps. civ. 35, where R. Kimchi notes that in the Psalms and elsewhere Hallelujah chiefly appears where mention is made of the punishment of the ungodly. Thus it is used here also. The Jewish "Te Deum," as it is called, consisting of Ps. civ.-cix., chiefly sung at the Feasts of the Passover and of Tabernacles, derived its title of "The great Hallel" from the frequent use in those Psalms of the phrase Hallelujah. Here, then, we have the great Hallelujah of the Apocalypse; and the Christian "Te Deum" has thus its counterpart in Heaven.

Salvation, and glory, and power, belong unto our God:] (Omit "and honour," and "the Lord," and read τοῦ Θεοῦ in the genitive:—see vv. 11.). Gr. "The salvation and the glory," &c.; or "All salvation and glory," &c. On the rendering "belong unto our God," see the A.V. of Ps. iii. 5 (LXX.). This doxology is threefold; and on judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

3 And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

4 And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.

the doxologies in the Apocalypse, see on ch. i. 6; v. 13; vii. 12.

2. for true and righteous are his judgments; Cf. ch. xv. 3; xvi. 7. The reason is here given for the ascription of praise in ver. 1. The praise is special; not general as it is in ch. v. 12, 13.

for he hath judged the great harlot; A second coordinate clause, as in ch. xviii. 23.

which did corrupt the earth Cf. ch. xi. 18, and the fundamental passage Jer. li. 25 (LXX.)—the Greek verb being the same in all three places.

with her fornication. Gr. "in her fornication." The cunning policy by which the "Harlot" sought to bring the world and Christians to destruction (Hengst.).

Instead of opposing (writes Auberlen on his peculiar theory—see on ch. xvii. 1), "and lessening, she ["the Harlot Church"] promoted the sinful life and decay of the world by her own earthliness, allowing the salt to lose its savour" (i. c., p. 289).

and he hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. See 2 Kings ix. 7 (LXX.). On the prep. (ἐκ) cf. ch. vi. 10; xviii. 20.

3. And a second time they say, Hallelujah. Note the verb in the perfect,—they have said. This verse is a kind of antistrophe to the strophe consisting of vv. 1, 2.

The first Hallelujah corresponds to the Angel's voice, ch. xviii. 4–19, and is the response to ver. 20; this second Hallelujah corresponds to ch. xviii. 21–24, where it is declared that Babylon "shall be found no more at all."

And her smoke goeth up for ever and ever. Cf. ch. xviii. 9, 18; Isai. xxxiv. 10. We have "And," not "for" as in ver. 2, because this verse but repeats the preceding strophe.

4. And the four and twenty elders and the four living beings See on ch. iv. 4, 6: the Twenty-four Elders, the heavenly representatives of the Church, and the Four Living Beings the representatives of the living Creation upon earth, re-echo the strain of adoration,—see ch. iv. 11; v. 8, 14.

God that sitteth on the throne, See ch. v. 13.

saying, Amen; Hallelujah. These words are taken from the end of Ps. cvi. 48:—like the Song of Moses (ch. xv. 3), the Amen and Hallelujah of the Temple Service are used in Heaven.

Thus closes, notes Hengst., what the Seer announces as to the fate of Babylon or beaten Rome, in her Imperial power, ch. xvii. 18. On the ground of this interpretation, St. Irenæus (Adv. Her. v. 30) expects the partition of the Empire among the "Ten Kings." Tertullian insists that Babylon is with St. John, 'Romane urbis figura' (Adv. Mar. iii. 13); and so, more than all the Fathers, St. Jerome, writing A.D. 386 ("Lege Apocalypsin Joannis et quid de Muliere purpurata et Babylonis cantetur exitu contuere: Exite, inquit Dominus, de illa, populus meus, &c." (See Note B on ch. xvii. 4). Even in Cent. v. Rome had not renounced its heathenism (see Orosius, vii. 38); and what was historically realized in the course of centuries is here compressed into one scene. Hence neither the calamities inflicted upon Rome by Alaric (Bossuet), nor by Attila (Grotius) exhaust the sense of this prophecy. At all events the appearance of the "Four Living Beings,"—who do not appear when the Judgment under the seventh Trumpet (ch. xi. 15–18) is come; and also the going forth of "the Word of God" (vv. 11–16) to smite the nations after this thanksgiving is ended, denote that the Kingdom of God is still making progress on earth.

5. And a voice came forth from the throne. See vv. 11.—the reading (ἀπό) denoting the direction merely, not the source of the voice. The speaker is left quite indefinite, as is the case so often in the Apoc. (see ch. i. 10; x. 4, 8; xiv. 2). Hengst. and Ewald, referring to ch. xvi. 17, think that the voice must proceed from Him "that sitteth on the throne," from Christ, as in ch. iii. 21; v. 6; vii. 17:—but we should note that Christ nowhere employs the expression "our God," see John xx. 17;—Bengel ascribes the voice to the "Four Living Beings;"—Züllig, De Wette, Bisping to one of them;—Düsterd., referring to ch. v. 9, to the "Elders" and the "Living Beings." This verse is not a continuation of the Hymn of praise in vv. 1–4 proceed-

6 And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia :

for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him : for the marriage

ing from those martyrs whom Babylon had slain, but is rather anticipatory of the future, as in ch. xv. 4. I. Williams considers that the voice of the "Saints," on earth (ch. xviii. 20)—who are here described as the "servants" of God, and who are distinguished from the Angels in heaven—echoes back, in full response, (1) the voice of "the innumerable company of Angels" in ver. 1; and (2) that of the representatives of the Christian Church in ver. 4.

saying, Give praise to our God.] The dative case—see vv. ll. (cf. 1 Chron. xvi. 36; 2 Chron. xx. 19, LXX.). These words are the translation of Hallelujah,—see on ver. 1; the pronoun our being added.

all ye his servants, ye that fear him, the small and the great.] See vv. ll. for the omission of "both":—cf. ch. xi. 18.

The Angel, in ver. 9, affirms the truth of the facts that form the theme of the Hymn of praise which now follows.

THE MARRIAGE SUPPER OF THE LAMB (6-8).

6. And I heard] As in ver. 1; and in response to ver. 5. This last choral Hymn looks onwards, beyond the Divine judgments, to the Marriage of the Lamb.

In vv. 6-10, notes Auberlen (p. 318), is described "how the judgment of the Harlot prepares the justification and Marriage Feast of the Woman." These verses form the transition to the subsequent prophecies:—with the judgment of Antichrist (vv. 11-21) the Marriage Feast begins.

and as the voice of mighty thunders.] This Hymn of praise, according to Ebrard is not confined to heaven as in vv. 1-3. Here, the "Nations" of ch. xvii. 15, now repentant (ch. xi. 13), are symbolized:—the "many waters" point to the troubled "sea" of the peoples; and the "mighty thunders" to the mysterious acts and influences of God which lead to repentance—see ch. x. 3, 4. Bisping considers that all the heavenly voices now combine,—the Four Living Beings, the Elders, the Angels and Saints; and thus the chorus rings forth in louder harmony.

saying, Hallelujah.] The participle is in the genitive plural,—see vv. ll.

for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.] See, on ch. i. 8. The word here rendered "Omnipotent" is elsewhere rendered "Almighty" (παντοκράτωρ). If the pronoun be read (see vv. ll.), translate "for the Lord our God, the Omnipotent, reigneth." The verb is in the aorist:—see on ch. xi. 17. Words explain—"served Himself to be King, by subduing His enemies"; and De Wette:—"als Herrscher hat sich gezeigt der Herr, unser Allmächtige."

That God takes possession of His Kingdom is the great theme of this verse, the full import of which is exhibited in ch. xx. 11-15. This event is connected with the Marriage of the Lamb, vv. 7, 8:—cf. Isai. liv. 4-8. As Hengst. puts it, we have negatively the foundation of God's Kingdom in the overthrow of His enemies (ch. xii. 10); and positively, as soon as this event takes place, in the glorification of the Church.

Here, notes Ebrard (see the remarks introductory to this chapter), is celebrated the last act of the Divine Judgment; and he illustrates this result by a comparison of the Apocalyptic times: I. (a) Three and a half years from the Ascension and Jerusalem's destruction, to the conversion of Israel (ch. ii. 2, 3; xii. 6);—(b) One hour (ch. xvii. 12; xviii. 10, 16, 19);—(c) Three and a half days of Antichrist (ch. xi. 9, 11; xii. 14). II. (a) The sixth (Roman) World-power ("the one is" ch. xvii. 10; cf. ch. xii. 6);—(b) The seventh World-power, the Ten Kings with the Beast (ch. xvii. 12);—(c) The eighth World-power, The Beast from the Abyss, Antichrist (ch. xvii. 11). III. (a) Babylon as the World-power (ch. xiii. 8);—(b) Babylon as the Woman carried by the Beast (ch. xvii. 3). The fall of Babylon is now interposed (ch. xviii.). IV. (a) The Ecclesia pressa of the Gentile Christians (ch. vii. 14; xi. 1; xiii. 1; xvii. 6, &c.); to which is added Israel in Exile, Jerusalem trodden down (ch. xi. 2; xii. 6);—(b) Israel converted (ch. xii. 7-9);—(c) The Church in concealment (ch. xii. 13-16; cf. ch. vii. 3-8; xix. 8).

7. Let us rejoice and be exceeding glad, and let us give the glory unto him.] For the reading "and we will give," see vv. ll. All is said in anticipation. The punishment of the Beast and of the "False Prophet" (ver. 20)—or the beginning of the Last Judgment—follows the fall of Babylon: and thus the reign of the "Omnipotent" (ver. 6) and the full glory of the Church are yet to come.

of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

8 And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean for the marriage of the Lamb is come.] The "aorist proleptic" as in ch. xi. 18; cf. ch. xiv. 7.

"The Marriage of the Lamb" is the blessed union of the Lord with His chosen Bride the Church. Although betrothed to Him she has not yet been brought to perfect union, but still lives in hope (Rom. viii. 24, 25). The figure of marriage is borrowed from the Old Test.,—cf. Isai. liv. 1-8; Ezek. xvi. 8; Hos. ii. 19. On this passage compare Matt. xxii. 1-14.

The event does not come to pass until ch. xxi. 2. We are neither to understand, with Vitringa, "the Marriage Supper" of ver. 9;—nor refer, with Words., to John ii. 1-3, as in such a sense both the "Marriage" and the "Supper" would refer (cf. ch. xxi. 9) to the Church's state of happiness to be looked for before the End of all things;—nor yet understand with Züllig an "ante-past" of a select circle of Messiah's friends, which continues during the Millennial Reign (ch. xx. 4). We must rather infer that the voice of Scripture declares how the union of the Lamb with the "Bride," or Church of the Redeemed (ch. xxi. 9; xxii. 17), signifies the final imparting to the faithful of their eternal reward (ch. xi. 18; xxii. 12).

It is to be observed that in John iii. 29 it is not explained who is "the Bride." In 2 Cor. xi. 2 St. Paul approaches the full explanation, which he gives in Eph. v. 22-32: "I speak concerning Christ and the Church." The Church therefore is "the Bride, the Wife of the Lamb":—and so in the Old Test., the Song of Songs, and Psal. xlv.; cf. Matt. ix. 15; xxv. 1, &c.; Mark ii. 19; Luke xii. 36. The feast, or "ante-past," as distinguished from the "Marriage," is referred to in ch. iii. 20.

and his wife bath made herself ready.] Ready for the Bridegroom—see ch. xxi. 2; Matt. xxv. 10. The "Marriage" itself has not as yet arrived, although the day has dawned; and this preparation for the future union is alluded to in such passages as 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 27. The word rendered "Wife" (γυνή) is used in the sense of "Bride" in Gen. xxix. 21; Deut. xxii. 24 (LXX.); Matt. i. 20. The "Bride" had already been referred to under the figure of "a great multitude which no man could number" (ch. vii. 9),—as the "Woman" with the Crown of Stars (ch. xii. 1),—as the 144,000 on "the Mount Zion." She is the Church of the Last Days—the Elect of Israel and of the Heathen. She has been "made ready" in "the wilderness" (ch. xii. 6); and having remained faithful in the time of tribulation, the recompense described in ver. 8 awaits her.

I. Williams explains:—At the fall of the mystic Babylon "the marriage of the Lamb is come." The Apostolic "Woman" had fled into the wilderness (ch. xii. 14), and had disappeared from sight. In her stead was seen the "Harlot," in whom, for a time, the Church visible had been lost. Now, on the destruction of the "Harlot," the Virgin Bride again appears (p. 391). See also Auberlen's conclusion referred to in the note on ch. xviii. 4.

De Burgh, appealing to Isai. liv. (cf. Hos. ii.; iii.), regards the emblem of marriage as denoting the future restoration of the Jewish people (p. 343). It is to be noted that writers who hold the doctrine of the "Pre-millennial Advent of Christ," "all distinguish between 'the Bride of the Lamb' and the whole number of the saved; affirming that the one will be complete at His Coming, but the other not."—D. Brown, l. c., p. 79. The Bride represents "all who have believed up to the commencement of the Millennium. These alone are the mystical body of Christ. But after they are completed, at the Second Advent the earth will be peopled by the 'nations of the saved' in flesh and blood,—a totally different party from the then glorified Bride" (p. 80).

8. And it was given unto her] By Divine Grace,—cf. ch. vi. 4.

that she should array herself] For the constr. (with iva) see ch. vi. 4; viii. 3; John xvii. 4. Cf. the words "bath made herself ready," ver. 7: "She shall be brought unto the King in raiment of needlework."—Ps. xlv. 14. See also Gal. iii. 27; Eph. vi. 13; Isai. lix. 17.

in fine linen, bright [and] pure.] See ch. vii. 9. For the reading, see vv. ll.; and on the word "linen," see ch. xviii. 12, 16, as well as Note C on ch. xv. 6. The adjectives signify the brightness of a holy life, and the purity of the Christian character:—cf. ch. xiv. 1-5. Grotius notes:—"The grave attire of the matron; not the gaudy splendour of the harlot" (ch. xvii. 3).

Alford regards this whole verse not as the voice of the celestial chorus, but as a narrative clause "written in the person of the Seer himself." Far better, however, is it (with Düsterd., Ebrard, Burger, &c.) to consider the heavenly song as ending with the words "bright and pure;" the rest of the verse being added parenthetically by the Seer from his reminiscence of ch. vii. 14; cf. ch. iii. 18. See to the same effect on ver. 10.

and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

9 And he saith unto me, Write,
Mat. 22. ² Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God.

10 And I fell at his feet to wor-

(For the fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints.)] These words are the comment of St. John. For the word rendered "righteous acts" see on ch. xv. 4. De Wette and Bleek explain the plural to signify the number of persons who possess this righteousness;—Düsterd.: "righteous deeds by which the Saints have manifested their fidelity";—Words. notes that this use of the plural, the "pluralis excellentiæ et majestatis," adopted from the Hebrew, is frequent in the Apoc.: e.g. (σάρκας) "flesh," ch. xvii. 16; xix. 18, 21 (cf. "bloods," John i. 13). He understands "the large freeness of the righteousness bestowed by the infinite merits of Christ's obedience";—Alf.: "The plural (δικαιώματα) is probably distributive . . . one [act of righteousness] to each of the Saints, enveloping him in a pure robe of righteousness." "Not," adds Alf., "Christ's righteousness imputed or put on, but the Saints' righteousness. . . . It is their own; inherent, not imputed; but their own by their part in and union to Him";—Hengst.: Not the reward of the "Bride" for her preparation, as in ch. vi. 11; "not the glory of the Saints; but their excellencies,"—cf. ch. iii. 18. See Professor Archer-Butler's Sermon on "The Wedding Garment," Matt. xxii. 11-14, where he writes: "The Wedding Garment must be woven and fashioned on earth. It must be brought from thence with each happy spirit to heaven."

In ch. xiv. 13 it is said "their works follow with them;" here that they are clothed in fine linen, which is "the righteous acts of the saints."

Before the grace of Christ, the Old Testament conception is expressed in Isai. lxiv. 6.

THE EPISODE (9-10).

Before the last Vision of this series is exhibited to the Seer, there follows an episode, closely resembling that which occurs in ch. xiv. 12, 13. The blessedness is now represented of the guests who are symbolically described as the "Bride" (Matt. xxii. 1-14; xxv. 10); and the true object of the Church's worship is pointed out, as in a parable.

9. And he saith unto me.] Note the similarity to ch. xxi. 5. All that can be said with certainty as to the speaker is that he is an Angel, see ver. 10; ch. xxii. 8, 9:—but what Angel? Bengel, Züllig, De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd., Alf., assert positively that it is the Angel who from ch. xvii. 1 has stood beside the Seer; the same who in ch. xxi. 9 shows the "Bride" to St. John;—Lange understands the Angel of ch. xviii. 21;—Perhaps, notes Bleek, he who in ver. 5 utters the voice from the throne;—On the other hand, Ewald and Ebrard conclude that with the entrance of the Angel of ch. xviii. 1, the agency of the Angel of ch. xvii. 1 has ceased; and they justly understand here the "Angelus interpretæ" of ch. i. 1:—see also ch. i. 10.

Write.] See on ch. i. 11.

Blessed are they which are bidden to the marriage supper of the Lamb.] Cf. ch. xiv. 13, to which this clause corresponds,—both denoting the first stage of blessedness, and both forming a comment on 1 Thess. iv. 17. In both cases moreover a Divine confirmation is added: in one it is "Yea, saith the Spirit"; in the other, These are true words of God,"—see also on ver. 7; as well as the saying in Luke xiv. 15. For the verb "to bid" or "call," see on ch. xvii. 14. The "Marriage," as pointed out on ver. 7, is to be distinguished from the "Marriage Supper." "The betrothal and union of Grace in this life passeth over into the union of glory, of which it is said, 'Blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb.'"—Pusey, on Hos. ii. 19. See also on ver. 17.

And he saith unto me.] These words introduce a second and distinct clause.

These are true words of God.] See vv. 11. Cf. ch. xxi. 5; xxii. 6. Hengst. translates: "These words are true, (they are the words) of God;"—Düsterd. and Burger: "These are the true words of God;"—De Wette, Alf.: "These sayings are the true [sayings] of God;"—Züllig: "These true words are God's words."

Bengel notes on the phrase that the word rendered "true" (ἀληθινός, see on ch. iii. 7) is not put alone in the Apoc. except in this one place, being always conjoined with "holy" (ch. iii. 7), or "righteous" (ch. xv. 3), or "faithful" (ch. xix. 11). Thus ὁ Θεοῦ ("of God") here supplies the place of "faithful" in ch. xxi. 5; xxii. 6.

Ebrard (see on ch. xvii. 17) would restrict the expression "words of God" to vv. 6-9, i. e., down to "the marriage supper of the Lamb;"—Burger would restrict the saying to vv. 1-8, which immediately precede;—Düsterd. would apply it to ch. xviii. 1—ch. xix. 9, viz. to what the Angel promises in ch. xvii.

ship him. And he said unto me, 1 ch. 22. 9. See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

1;—Alf. to all that follows ch. xvii. 1;—Hengst. to the preceding vv. 5–8 only, viz. to the truths of the coming of the Lord's Kingdom, of the Lamb's Marriage, of the preparation of the Bride.

H. Gebhardt (l. c., s. 14) infers from this verse, combined with ch. xxi. 5; xxii. 6, that a distinction is indicated between the true announcements of God, relating to what went immediately before, and the erroneous opinions of the Seer:—or, as he words it: "They modify the certainty and true Divine character of the rest of the contents" of the Apocalypse. In this he goes even beyond Volkmar, who sees here only a distinction between "the word and the spirit" of what is written (s. 278).

10. And I fell down before his feet to worship him. See ch. xxii. 7, 8; the natural meaning in both passages being that St. John—on hearing what is said in ver. 9, and the words "I come"—took the Angel to be the Lord Himself and not a "fellow-servant." In ch. xvi. 1; xvii. 1, the Seer recognized that the speaker was a created Angel; but here not so. On the other hand, Grotius, Vit., Bengel, Ewald, Alf., see in this act a token of exaggerated gratitude or reverence paid to one who had imparted such great things;—A mark of Oriental homage, notes Stern, as Lot (Gen. xix. 1), or Nathan before David (1 Kings i. 23), not as one worships God;—Ebrard and Words. see in the narrative a warning "against all such acts of worship as are directed by the worshipper himself to any Being beside God;"—Hengst. considers that St. John in his humility forgets his own share in imparting the revelation; and that the Angel in his humility brings this to light (see Matt. iii. 14; Rom. xii. 10; and cf. Acts x. 25, 26);—Züllig thinks that the passage is founded on Dan. ii. 46, where (as Jewish tradition explains in accordance with Dan. ii. 27–30; v. 16, 17), the Prophet refers the King, with his adoration, to God;—Auberlen contrasts this expression of gratitude at the glorious promise to the Church confirmed by the words of ver. 9, with the feeling of wonder described in ch. xvii. 6; and he compares Dan. viii. 17;—I. Williams notes: "It appears here like a termination. This end before the end (ch. xxii. 9), followed by resuming the subject, much resembles the same in St. John's Gospel, which seems to terminate with the chapter before the last, and then, after some addition, comes again to a similar conclusion" (p. 393).

And he saith unto me, See [thou do it] not:] Gr. See; not (Opá μή);—Winer (s. 530) explains the phrase as "an apostrophe;" for the full constr. cf. Matt. viii. 4; xviii. 10; 1 Thess. v. 15.

Words. notes the contrast to the claim of the antichristian power, ch. xiii. 4, 8, 12, 15.

I am a fellow-servant with thee] See on ch. i. 1. The title of "servant" is assumed by the sacred writers without any disparagement of their office and authority:—cf. Rom. i. 1; Phil. i. 1; Tit. i. 1; 2 Pet. i. 1; &c.

and with thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus:] Or "that hold." On "the testimony of Jesus," see ch. i. 2, 9; xii. 17; xx. 4. In ch. xxii. 9 the words are "with thy brethren the prophets, and with them which keep the words of this Book,"—a parallel which throws light on what follows here.

worship God.] Whose servants we both are (see ch. xxii. 6, 9)—of Whose prophetic Spirit we alike partake in this our common ministry; and therefore one of us may not worship the other.

(For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.) These words, like the latter clause of ver. 8, are a parenthetical explanation given by St. John himself, who thus prepares the way for ch. xxii. 9—the meaning of the words being this: 'I am the fellow servant of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus—that is of thy brethren the prophets; for (as St. John here explains) the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.' "The testimony of Jesus," as noted on ch. i. 2, is to be understood both subjectively, and objectively; as denoting both the testimony borne by Jesus (John iii. 31–33; viii. 14—see ch. xxii. 20), and the testimony borne to Jesus (John v. 37; 1 John i. 1–3). See Luke xxiv. 27.

The majority of writers, however, understand these words as spoken by the Angel, and Stern makes the connexion to be: 'The gift of prophecy is thy reward for holding fast the testimony of Jesus, for having faith in Him, and bearing witness to it before all the world;'—and Burger interprets "Not merely the gift of prophecy (1 Cor. xii. 10) but the gift of understanding prophecy; and St. John differed from his 'brethren,' or fellow-Christians, merely in possessing a higher measure of this gift."

According to Dusterd. the genitive is altogether subjective—"the witness which proceeds from Jesus," and the thought is that Christ, by imparting the testimony of the Apocalypse to believers, fills them with the Spirit of prophecy;—Alf., on the other hand, takes the gen. to be altogether objective; the Angel saying: "Thou and I and our brethren all bear witness to Jesus; and the way in which we bear this witness, the substance and essence of this testimony, is 'the spirit of prophecy' (1 Cor. xii. 13);" this Spirit given to me and to thee "is the token that we are fellow-servants;"—And so Vitringa ("Plenius dixisset: Spiritus testimonii Christi est Spiritus prophetie; hoc est ejusdem generis, dignitatis, et scopi est, cujus Spiritus prophetie"—p. 819). It has been thus inferred from ch. xxii. 9 (cf. ch. vi. 9; xii. 17) that all Christians, in every age, who can receive and understand Prophecy, have this spirit; and are, like St. John, fellow-servants and brethren of the Angels;—so Ebrard and Bleek. Consequently Angels are not to be worshipped.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that

Here comes to a close the interposed section (vv. 1-10) which forms the transition from the description of the fall of Babylon—the hostile World-power, to the description of the overthrow of Satan and his allies—the hostile spiritual power.

THE VISION OF THE WORD OF GOD (11-16).

Babylon, with which Antichrist had hitherto shared the rule of the world, has fallen; and the Seer now returns to Antichrist and the "Ten Kings" (see ver. 19) who had been left as if with none to resist them. Their war with Christ has been already foreshadowed in ch. xvii. 14 (cf. too ch. xvi. 12, 14). The Lord—"The WORD of God"—now comes forward to fight the last fight, and to bring comfort and peace to His Church.

This description of Christ sums up the features and attributes of earlier descriptions:—The White Horse (ch. vi. 2); the Titles (ch. iii. 14; xvii. 14); the Eyes (ch. i. 14; ii. 18); the unknown Name (ch. ii. 17); the Sword (ch. i. 16); the Rod of iron (ch. ii. 27); the Winepress (ch. xiv. 20)—which is also recalled by the Vesture dipped in blood; the many Diadems (not merely Seven or Ten as in ch. xii. 3; xiii. 1) which signify that He combines in His Person all royal dignity and power; and thus is "King of kings" (ch. xvii. 14).

But is this description symbolical or literal? It may be assumed with confidence—in accordance with the entire character of the Apocalypse, and in opposition to modern theories (see Note A at the end of this chapter)—that the scene now brought before us is altogether figurative and spiritual; and that the conflict here described is neither literal nor visible. I. Williams truly says (p. 402): "The idea of a [literal] army is altogether destroyed by the same being also a Marriage Supper and a Bride. We have, therefore, no clue to the nature of the fulfilment, except that of final discomfiture, all notion of a sensible warfare being stopped." Accordingly, assuming that this is so, the connexion seems to be as follows:—The seventh and last scene of the Revelation proper (see the remarks introductory to ch. xvii.) begins with the victory of Heaven over the hostile World-power (ch. xvii. 1-xviii. 24). Then in ch. xix. 1-10 we hear the voices of triumph, and the announcement of the "Marriage of the Lamb." On this follows the picture of the overthrow of Satan's allies and of himself (ch. xix. 11-xx. 10); this destruction of the hostile spiritual power being followed by the universal Judgment (ch. xx. 11-15), and the glories of the New Jerusalem (ch. xxi. 1-ch. xxii. 5).

On this passage (vv. 11-21) Dean Vaughan, having quoted ch. xvii. 10—"When be [the seventh king] cometh, he must continue a little while," observes: "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years (2 Pet. iii. 8); and that short space has been expanded by the event into a period of several centuries. Other Babylons, on a smaller scale, and with features less precisely marked, have come and gone since St. John's prophecy against Rome was fulfilled. The Beast still is, and still develops himself from time to time in new forms and shapes. Wherever he develops himself, there arises another Babylon. . . . We are living not in the time of the sixth, but in the time of the seventh Head of the Beast; that Head which is known by its 'Ten Horns'; that power which is known by division, not by concentration; by a plurality, not by a unity of crowns and thrones on earth. And here we read of the closing scene of the period of that seventh supremacy. It is the last of the Empires: there is none to follow it. It is to terminate in that great outbreak of evil which under many different figures appears both in Old Test., and in New Test. prophecy, as the sure token of the last end of all" (ch. xvi. 13-16; xix. 19).—I. c., ii. p. 202.

11. And I saw the heaven opened;] In ch. iv. 1 "a door" is opened in heaven in order that the Seer may ascend thither, in spirit, and gaze within and learn the secret things of God. Here the "Heaven" itself is opened in order that the Lord may issue forth with His hosts. These Ewald would identify with the sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself.

144,000 of ch. xiv. 1-5, as they were there seen prepared for their victory.

In ch. xi. 19 the Temple in heaven, and in ch. xv. 5 the Holy of Holies had been already opened; consequently, argues Ebrard, nothing more can be revealed in heaven, and this can be no new Vision, but the second part merely of the Vision explaining the seventh Vial:—see on ch. xvi. 21. Ebrard also compares this verse with ch. xiv. 14:—In ch. xiii. St. John had beheld the Beast from the “sea” or the Kingdom of this world; and then, in ch. xiv., he was led to see the 144,000 on Mount Zion, and to hear of the fall of Babylon, and to look upon the Son of Man coming “upon the cloud” to reap the harvest:—so here, after he has beheld the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xvii. 8) or the kingdom of Antichrist, and after Babylon has fallen, and he has heard the song of triumph over her, he looks upon Christ issuing forth from heaven.

and behold, a white horse, and he that sat thereon.] There is here a reference to ch. vi. 2, where exactly the same words occur. Under the first Seal the Rider on the White Horse went forth to his work of conquest; here He comes forth to strike the last blow and to execute the last acts of judgment. In neither case does the Rider come forth visibly—see Note A at the end of this chapter. And thus the Rider beheld under the first Seal reappears at the close of the Book; He is the Beginning and the End, the Alpha and the Omega of the Apocalypse (ch. i. 8; xxi. 6; xxii. 13).

called Faithful and True;] (The “was” of A.V. is not to be inserted,—cf. ch. iv. 2, 3). In ch. iii. 14 the same epithets are applied to Christ:—on the word rendered “True” see ver. 9. There is weighty authority for omitting the word “called,”—see vv. ll.

and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.] Compare Isai. xi. 3, 4. The nature of the judgment is indicated in conformity with vv. 14, 19.

Todd,—having observed that the Vision of Babylon terminates, like the Visions of the Seals and Trumpets (ch. vi. 17; xi. 15), in the great Day of wrath, and the establishment of Christ’s Kingdom,—infers that as the Coming of Christ in Glory “is described at the conclusion of each of the apocalyptic Visions, these Visions, although consecutive in the order in which they were exhibited to St. John, are not consecutive, but synchronous in their fulfilment;” which is to be sought for in the future—in the events that precede, accompany, or immediately follow the Lord’s Second Advent (l. c., p. 80).

12. And his eyes [are] a flame of fire,] Omit “as,” see vv. ll. Cf. ch. i. 14. The features of this description differ in some respects,—required by the different circumstances of this appearance—from those in ch. vi. 2. There Christ is armed with a bow—the weapon which strikes from afar; here his eyes “are a flame of fire”—denoting that He comes not to seek and to save that which was lost, but to scorch and to consume. Such is the character in which the Lord now appears.

and upon his head [are] many diadems;] Not now the “crown,” the Victor’s wreath, but the kingly “diadem” the emblem of His own proper Regal authority;—nay more, “many diadems,” denoting the concentration of all kingly authority in His Person, as plainly expressed in ver. 16: see Note D on ch. ii. 10. E.g. Ptolemy Philometor “set two diadems around his head, that of Asia and of Egypt.”—1 Macc. xi. 13; Artabanus also “in whom the Kingdom of Parthia ended” used two “diadems”—see Spanheim, De usu Numm. t. i. p. 451, who refers to Joseph. Antt. xiii. 8; and to Herodian, Hist. vi. 2, ed. Bekk. p. 119. In Diodorus Siculus (i. 47) we read of one having “three kingdoms on the head,” “the context plainly showing that these are three diadems, the symbols of a triple royalty.”—Trench, Synon., p. 77. Pusey, on Zech. vi. 11, notes that the “crowns” there spoken of were not “diadems” at all, but “circlets of silver and gold.” Referring to this place, Züllig would explain the “Ten Diadems” of ch. xiii. 1 to be trophies of victory borne away by Christ from the “Ten Kings” of ch. xvii. 12:—cf. 2 Sam. xii. 30. To this Dusterd. objects that the “Kings” had not yet been conquered.

and he hath a name written, which no one knoweth but he himself.] See Matt. xi. 27. The “New Name” of ch. ii. 17; iii. 12, which will finally be disclosed to those “which are bidden to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb.” St. John sees the “Name”; it appears “written,” but he can neither read nor express it: cf. Judges xiii. 18. Some say it is the ineffable name JEHOVAH; others “The Word of God,” ver. 13:—but neither of these names is “new,” nor is either of them unknown. It has also been asked where this name was written? On the diadems? On the forehead (so Burger after the analogy of ch. vii. 3; xiv. 1)? On the vesture? On the

^c Is. 63. 2.

13 'And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of God.

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15 And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

horse? To these questions no answer need be given.

Alford admits into the text the words inserted merely by "B, Syr., Andr." (see vv. ll., and Tisch., 8th ed.). He renders "having [names written, and] a name written," &c., expressing, however, a doubt as to their genuineness; and suggesting "that the names were inscribed on the diadems, signifying the import of each":—Reuss would explain this doubtful reading by a reference to the names Messiah, Christ, Word, Son of David.

13. And he [is] arrayed in a vesture dipped in blood:] On the word "dipped" (ὑδαμνένον) see John xiii. 26; the verb occurs elsewhere only in Luke xvi. 24. Cf. ver. 15; and ch. xiv. 20. For the reading "sprinkled with blood," see vv. ll.:—cf. Heb. ix. 13, 19, 21; x. 22; xii. 24; 1 Pet. i. 2. The reference in any case is to Isai. lxiii. 2, 3:—doubtless the blood of His enemies. Words. notes that St. Hippolytus (in Noet. § 15, p. 53, ed. Lagarde) reads "sprinkled," but "explains it as referring to Christ's own blood, by which the Incarnate Word cleansed the world."

and his name is called] The verb is in the perfect tense,—see vv. ll.

The Word of God.] This is no "new name:" by this title of "THE WORD" Christ is designated only by St. John:—here, in John i. 1–14, and in 1 John i. 1. He is the Personal Revelation of God Himself—in Whom dwells the fulness of the Godhead bodily (Col. ii. 9). Lücke and others object that we have here "the Word of God," and not, absolutely, "the Word" (see Introd. § 7, III. (a)). The writer, however, of the Fourth Gospel was confessedly the writer of the First Epistle, and there, too, the title is not "the Word," absolutely, but "the Word of Life." It may be noted that the phrase "the word of God" (also ὁ λόγος)—when not used as a title of the Personal Word—occurs in ch. i. 2, 9; vi. 9; xx. 4:—see on ch. i. 2; and cf. ch. xvii. 17; xix. 9.

At His first coming in humility He is known as "The Son of Man;" at His Second Coming in glory as "THE WORD OF GOD."

14. And the armies which [are] in heaven]

(See vv. ll.). It is in close accordance with the usage of Scripture—as well as with the interpretation adopted above—to hold that the heavenly Host (Luke ii. 13) which accompanies Christ in this His manifestation as Judge, is composed of Angels only (see Matt. xvi. 27; xxv. 31; 2 Thess. i. 7; and cf. 1 Kings xxii. 19; Ps. cxlviii. 2). Züllig, Düsterd., De Burgh, Alf. would include the glorified Saints also who are introduced in ch. xvii. 14. The share of the Saints, however, in the Judgment (1 Cor. vi. 2, 3) is described for the first time in ch. xx. 4:—see on ver. 11.

followed him upon white horses.] Symbolizing a triumphant march—see on ch. vi. 2.

clothed in fine linen, white [and] pure.] (Omit "and"—see vv. ll.). White is the colour and livery of heaven—see on ch. i. 14; here the holiness and purity of the heavenly host are symbolized (cf. ver. 8). Hengst. would refer to ch. xv. 6, but see the note on the text of that verse. Their garments are not, like their Leader's, "dipped in," or "sprinkled with blood" (cf. "Their blood shall be sprinkled upon My garments," Isai. lxiii. 3). This Host is without sword or spear—arms of actual warfare are assigned only to the WORD: see on ch. xvii. 14.

15. proceedeth a sharp sword.] See on ch. i. 16; cf. ch. ii. 12, 16. Compare also "the breath of his mouth," 2 Thess. ii. 8. In illustration of the effect of Christ's words upon His enemies, Hengst. refers to John xviii. 5. Such features of the description as we have here show that all is symbolical.

that with it] The preposition (ἐν) is instrumental.

and he shall rule them] See on ch. ii. 27; xii. 5. Here, and in the words "he treadeth," the pronoun "He" (αὐτός) is emphatic—"HE" and none other.

he treadeth] In ch. xiv. 17–19 it was "another Angel" who gathered the vintage of the earth; but how "the wine-press was trodden" (ver. 20) is not stated. As in Isai. lxiii. 3, Christ treads "the wine-press alone."

the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God.] See vv. ll.:—cf. ch. xiv. 8, 10; ch. xvi. 19. Gr. the wine-press of the wine of the fierceness.

ch. 17.
4.

16 And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, "KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS."

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God;

18 That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

The two images of the "cup of wrath" and of the "wine-press" in ch. xiv. 10, 19, are here combined.

He comes to execute judgment on the godless, as described in Jude 14, 15.

16. And he bath upon his vesture, and upon his thigh a name written.] (See vv. 11.). Many explain that the name was written on the vesture only;—upon the part of it which covered the thigh: so De Wette, Hengst., Dusterd., Bispin, &c. Hengst. observes that the thigh is introduced as the place where the sword (which is not mentioned here, see ver. 15) is usually found, in accordance with Ps. xlv. 3: "Gird thee with thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty." Wetstein, Eichhorn, De Wette, refer to the custom of engraving the artist's name on the thigh of a statue ("Signum Apollinis cujus in femore nomen Myronis erat inscriptum."—Cicero, Verr. iv. 43; cf. Pausanias, Eliac. extr.; Herod. ii. 106; and Wetstein in loc.).

KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.] The order is that in 1 Tim. vi. 15; but the order of ch. xvii. 14 is inverted. For the title cf. Deut. x. 17; Ezra vii. 12; Ps. cxxxvi. 3; Dan. ii. 37, 47; viii. 25.

Hengst. notes that the names of Christ in this Vision are four—(1) "Faithful and True" (ver. 11); (2) the Name "that no man knew" (ver. 12); (3) "The Word of God" (ver. 13); (4) and here "King of Kings and Lord of Lords,"—"Before this sacred number four, the earth, whose signature is four, must tremble." In an elaborate, but most unsatisfactory dissertation, Züllig tries to establish a parallel between these four names and the titles of Messiah in Isai. ix. 6:—(1) (as Hengst.) "Wonderful, Counsellor;" (2) "The Mighty God" (or as Züllig explains "The Divine hero—the hero of might"); (3) "The Everlasting Father" (or as he explains—"The forerunner for the gaining of spoil"—"Vormann zum Beutemachen"); (4) "The Prince of Peace." ("Der Sprech-geist Gottes").

The Action now begins:—

THE CONFLICT (17–21).

17. An angel] Gr. one Angel:—cf. ch. viii. 13; xviii. 21.

standing in the sun;) From which station, writers comment, as well suiting the glory of the Angel, he can best summon the birds in mid-heaven, who surround the place where the Angel stands; and whence his voice can be heard by the whole earth.

and he cried with a great voice, saying to all the birds that fly in mid-heaven.] See ch. viii. 13; xiv. 6.

Come [and] be gathered together] (Omit "and;" see vv. 11.). This call of the Angel directs us to the same memorable call in Ezek. xxxix. 17–20, and to the mysterious gathering against Israel, there described, of Gog and Magog; thus connecting that description with their appearance in ch. xx. 8. The usual imagery, signifying a disastrous defeat, is employed:—see 1 Sam. xvii. 46; Isai. xviii. 6; Jer. vii. 33; xii. 9; cf. also Matt. xxiv. 28.

Universal nature is summoned to rejoice at this consummation of God's purpose.

unto the great supper of God;) See vv. 11. We have to note the contrast here to "the Marriage Supper" of the Lamb, ver. 9. This passage gives one aspect of "the war of the Great Day of God, the Almighty"—ch. xvi. 14. For the other aspect see ch. xx. 7–9.

"It is the great Epiphany," notes I. Williams (p. 400). "The first Epiphany was by a Star, this in the Sun." Beda understands the Eagle-spirits of heaven: "Ye holy souls that hunger after righteousness, come now and behold the righteous judgments of God."

Andreas takes the birds to be good Angels;—Primasius makes them to be evil angels;—Brightman and others understand nations and churches which have not yet attained full truth.

18. and the flesh of captains.] Or military tribunes,—Gr. ohiliarchoi.

and the flesh of horses and of them that sit thereon.] The word "flesh" is repeated here five times in the plural (see on ver. 8): Words. takes this to denote "the completeness and universality of God's retribution."

both free and bond, and small and great.] The word "both" is read in the Greek,—see vv. 11. Hengst. compares this enumeration to those in ch. vi. 15; xiii. 16; there are four classes (Kings, Captains, Mighty men, 19 And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

20 And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

Riders); and another composed of four members, the "free and bond," the "small and great."

"The world," notes Auberlen, "in its opposition to God, when it has reached the highest development of its material and spiritual power, is after all only a decorated carcase, decaying; round which the eagles gather, and to devour which all the birds that fly in the midst of heaven are called together" (p. 323).

19. And I saw] The past tense here, and in vv. 20, 21, imports that this act of the judgment was represented in Vision; not described, as in ch. xviii.

the beast.] Of ch. xiii. 1. Ebrard however, understands not "the Beast from the sea,"—the World-power; but the "Beast from the Abyss,"—Antichrist, (ch. xvii. 8): see on ch. xiii. 1.

and the kings of the earth.] The allies of the Beast—the "Ten Kings" of ch. xvii. 12, 13 who are called up by demons, see ch. xvi. 13–16. Ebrard draws a distinction between the "kings of the earth" (ch. xviii. 3, 9), and their "armies;" both together making up the "Ten kingdoms" which are symbolized by the "Ten Kings" of ch. xvii. 12. Hengst. takes the phrase "kings of the earth" as the contrast to "the King of Kings," who is of Heaven.

and their armies.] Consisting of the inhabitants of the earth—see ch. xiii. 4, 8, 16.

gathered together to make war] Gr. the war (see vv. 11. here and in ch. xx. 8). The article is emphatic:—the great last struggle for which they had assembled under the sixth Vial (ch. xvi. 12–16; xvii. 14), but which does not take place until now—"The Great Day of God, the Almighty" (ch. xvi. 14).

against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.] Note here the sing. "army," as contrasted with "armies" above. The unity among Christ's followers is signified—He has but one army, composed of various hosts: see ver. 14.

The appearance of Christ, writes Ebrard, has put an end to the attack on the Church—see ch. xii. 15. Antichrist now turns against the Lord Himself.

The rationalistic interpretation may be summed up in the words of Renan:—"Although Rome is destroyed, the Roman world, represented by Nero, the Antichrist, is not annihilated . . . The prophet sees the Beast (Nero), and the kings of the earth (the Generals of the Provinces, almost independent) and their armies, united to make war against Him who is seated on the White Horse" (l.c., p. 444): see on ch. xvii. 12.

20. And the beast was taken.] This verb (πιάσῃ) is characteristic of St. John's style:—it occurs eight times in the Fourth Gospel; elsewhere in the New Test. in Acts iii. 7; xii. 4; 2 Cor. xi. 32. Züllig and Hengst. note that it is not stated how or by whom the Beast was seized:—doubtless it was by the army of Christ.

On this description see Dan. vii. 11.

and with him the false prophet] See on ch. xiii. 11–17; with which passage agrees this appearance of the "False Prophet." See also ch. xvi. 13.

that wrought the miracles in his sight.] See ch. xiii. 13; Gr., the signs:—the "False Prophet" being thus identified with the second Beast in ch. xiii. 11. This performing of miracles, notes Bengel, explains why the "False Prophet" receives a like punishment with the Beast.

wherewith he deceived them] See ch. xiii. 14.

Ebrard thus explains the connexion with ch. xiii. :—The agency of the "False Prophet" is carried on in the sixth World-Kingdom, risen again from apparent destruction; but now long since subverted as a World-kingdom (or Beast from the "Sea"). The World-power has parted into three powers (cf. ch. xvi. 19 with ch. xvii.)—into (1) the "Ten Kings" (as a seventh World-power); (2) the Beast from the Abyss (as becoming near the seventh); (3) Babylon, now become the "Woman." After this, Babylon (ch. xvii. 16) has been utterly and for ever overthrown (ch. xviii. 21); the "Ten Kings" have given up their power to the Beast from the Abyss; and this Beast then reigns as the eighth World-power. As the "False Prophet," in ch. xiii. 11, had come to help the Beast from the "Sea" in his sixth form; so now an analogous lying-power (in another form but in the same spirit—that of the Dragon) comes to help the Beast in his eighth form—i.e., the Beast from 21 And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

the Abyss—and will exercise anew his old arts until Christ's Second Coming (s. 507).

that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image:] See ch. xiii. 15, 16.

they twain were cast alive into the lake of fire] Or Gehenna (Matt. x. 28; Mark ix. 43; Jas. iii. 6)—“the eternal fire” (Matt. xxv. 41). The word “Gehenna” is not found in the writings of St. John. This language rests on such passages as Isai. xxx. 33; lxvi. 24. On the “Lake of Fire,” cf. ch. xx. 10, 14; xxi. 8.

For Renan's explanation of the source of this symbolism, see on ch. ix. 2.

We are to note that St. John implies a distinction between the place of Satan's abode, the Abyss (ch. ix. 1; xi. 2; xvii. 8; xx. 1, 3)—and the place of Satan's punishment “the Lake of Fire” (ch. xix. 20; xx. 10, 14, 15; xxi. 8).

that burneth with brimstone:] (Note the irregular concord here,—see vv. 11.). This casting alive into the “Lake of Fire” (cf. Dan. vii. 11) has been contrasted with the Ascension of the “Two Witnesses” (ch. xi. 11, 12) to heaven. It is not stated who inflicts this judgment; the agent is doubtless some “ministering spirit,” as in ch. xx. 2.

They are cast “alive,” notes Hengst., for they have not a human nature,—they are purely ideal forms. Those who are human suffer a bodily death, ver. 21.

These are living men, notes Burger, not personifications which could not be cast into the “Lake of Fire.”

21. and the rest were slain] All the inhabitants of the earth, ch. xiii. 3, 8, 14, 16 (Düsterd.);—the adherents of Antichrist enumerated in ver. 18 (Hengst., Ebrard, Bisping);—or the “kings,” and their “armies” (ver. 19), which seems to be the most natural meaning. So in effect Auberlen (p. 339); who considers that the unconverted Jews and Heathen still survive on earth, inasmuch as, never having come into contact with the Gospel, they are therefore not guilty of rejecting it.

with the sword of him that sat on the horse, [even the sword] which came forth out of his mouth:] (See vv. 11.). As in ver. 15. Death—spiritual death, no doubt, see Isai. xi. 4—falls on them as a preliminary punishment: see ch. xx. 12–15.

Burger—who looks upon this conflict as literal and visible—admits that “the sword” is not a literal “sword,” but he gives as illustrations of what is intended the events referred to in Josh. x. 12; 2 Kings xix. 35; and also ch. xx. 9, together with the description of ch. xvi. 18–21—especially the “great hail.” Nevertheless Burger doubts whether this judgment on Antichrist and the Lord's appearance described in vv. 11–16 are what we read of in Matt. xxiv. 30; xxv. 31; John v. 28, 29; 2 Cor. v. 10. He also points to the difference between vv. 11–16 and ch. xx. 11. These difficulties, to which his exposition is exposed, he leaves unsolved.

and all the birds] See ver. 17.

The following expositions have been given:—The “birds” (vv. 17, 21) are, according to Hammond, the Goths and Vandals who desolated the Roman Empire;—According to Cocceius they are the Turks who after the fall of Constantinople devastated the Catholic countries of the West;—According to Hengst. the Huns;—Wetstein applies the prophecy to the murder of Domitian (ver. 20), and the overthrow of his soldiers (ver. 21);—Grotius applies ver. 19 to the Emperor Julian and his partizans; and ver. 20 to the abolition of pagan sacrificial rites by Theodosius and Justinian;—C. à Lapide understands a description of the miserable deaths of heretics;—Stuart notes: The substantial meaning is that the leaders as well as their followers in the persecutions directed against the Christians will be subjected to a speedy and dreadful punishment: “I doubt not that the great truth taught is, that final, complete, and certain victory over heathenism will be achieved” (vol. ii. p. 352). He makes “the Second Catastrophe” (see the remarks introductory to ch. xii.) to end here; the “Third Catastrophe and sequel” being contained in ch. xx. 1–xxii. 5.

ADDITIONAL NOTE on Chap. XIX.

NOTE A ON VER. 11—THE PRE-MILLENNIAL ADVENT.

A controversy which embraces more than one question has arisen at this point in modern times respecting the Second Coming of Christ, —“Will it be pre-Millennial?”

The Second Advent,—the “Presence,”—the “Parusia” of Christ (ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Χριστοῦ), —is frequently spoken of by the writers of the

New Test. in connexion with the Last Judgment,—Matt. xxiv. 3, 37; 1 Cor. xv. 23; 2 Thess. ii. 8; James v. 7, 8; 2 Pet. i. 16; &c. In St. John's writings the word παρουσία is found only in 1 John ii. 28, and does not occur in the Apocalypse (see on ch. xvii. 8). Now the Last Judgment is not described in this Book until ch. xx. 11; and Scripture recognizes only one visible Return, or Coming, or "Parusia," of Christ. The question, therefore, arises, whether the issuing forth of the Lord from heaven, as described in vv. 11–21 is or is not visible? Whether the conflict here is literal or symbolical? In other words, whether the overthrow of Antichrist is carnal or spiritual? Christ has, it is true, intimated that all is not to be peace on earth (Matt. x. 34); and the Church will, doubtless, be militant unto the End:—but St. Paul defines the means by which alone the Cross is to triumph when he declares that the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh (2 Cor. x. 4). Dr. David Brown well observes: "The Kingdom of Christ not being 'of this world,' and so not 'bearing the sword,' does not 'break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms' (Dan. ii. 44) in any such pitched battle as the armies of men contend for the mastery in, and such as many are wont to represent 'the battle of that great day of God Almighty' at 'Ar-Mageddon.' . . . I believe the warfare itself to be not carnal. There may be much carnal warfare in connexion with it. . . . But . . . this symbolical description [Rev. xix. 11–21] of the conflict that is to issue in the final destruction of Antichrist and all his party, does not lead me the more to expect a 'carnal warfare,' but just the reverse. . . . The final issue is to be gradual rather than immediate—the result of many blows rather than of one."—Christ's Second Coming: Will it be Premillennial? p. 334.

The question, in short, amounts to this, Is the Second Advent of Christ to re-constitute, or to terminate the present state of things?—to establish an earthly (Millennial) kingdom illuminated by the beams of His Glory, and pervaded by the sense of His visible Presence? that is to say, Is the doctrine of what is called the "Premillennial Advent" true? That doctrine is as follows:—The present earthly state of things is not to terminate with the Second Coming of Christ, but to be then set up in a new form; when the Redeemer with His glorified Saints will reign in Person for a Thousand Years over a world of men still in the flesh (see Brown, l.c., p. 6). And again: "But it may be said, if this be not the Second Advent, where does it occur in the Apocalypse after this? 'After the Millennium,' says Mr. Birks, 'there is not found one syllable in the prophecy expressive of such an Advent.' True, for this is symbolical and figurative; . . . But when I read thus, 'And I saw' [after the Millennium] 'a great white throne, &c. &c. [ch. xx. 11], and connect this with 2 Pet. iii. 10, I see the Lord personally present in the one passage, while the other informs me he has only then come. Thus no attempt is made in the Apocalypse to picture by symbols the Personal Advent, but in place of it He is beheld in His great white throne—just come; with which agree the words of Jesus himself, 'When the Son of Man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory'" (l.c., p. 446).

On the other hand, the majority of expositors, of the most different schools, decide that the Second Advent of Christ is to be visible: many writers further insisting that the Second Advent is to precede the Millennium. Thus Auberlen: "This coming of Christ [to 'establish His kingdom of glory upon earth'] must be carefully distinguished from His Coming to the final Judgment. It is this Coming which both Daniel and John describe (Rev. xix. 11–12; Dan. ii. 33–44; vii. 9–14, 26, 27); it is this Coming by which all shall be fulfilled which the prophets of the Old Test. have prophesied concerning the Messianic time of peace and prosperity; it is this Coming which the Lord Jesus refers to in His discourse, Matt. xxiv. 29, &c., as distinguished from that spoken of in Matt. xxv. 31". . . . "The expression, 'the Parusia of Christ' denotes in the New Test., this Advent, and it alone; and this Second Coming of Christ, viewed in connexion with the Kingdom established by it upon earth (the Millennial), occupies a much more prominent position in the Biblical mode of conception, than in that of the modern Church. Passages like Matt. xxiv. 27–31; Acts i. 11; Rev. i. 7, leave scarcely a doubt that this appearance of the Lord will be visible" (l.c., p. 322). [It is a mere assumption, it may be observed, on Auberlen's part, that the passages last quoted refer to vv. 11–21, and not to the Lord's appearance in ch. xx. 11]. Auberlen next proceeds to bring in his theory of "an invisible Church" (see on ch. xvii. 1):—"The fundamental importance of this Coming of the Lord consists (according to Col. iii. 3, 4) in this, that Christ and His Church shall become manifest and visible, even as before they are hid in God. The Advent of Christ has a two-fold object,—To judge the World-power, and to bring to the Church redemption, glorification, and power over the world" (ibid.). From this conclusion Bisping only differs in not assigning so much importance to this victory over Antichrist, and to the Millennial reign, which he regards as merely a transition period, and not the ultimate object of the Second Advent. No less certain is Mr. Birks ("The Four Prophetic Empires," p. 330) that "The Second Advent of our Lord, as described in the latest prophecy of Scripture, does not follow, but precedes the Millennial kingdom." To the same effect De Burgh distinguishes this appearance of Christ, or the Second Advent, from the general Judgment, ch. xx. 12-13; previously to which as well as to the Millennium, comes this "special judgment on a specific body of persons, an organized faction, found in opposition to Him, and His Kingdom" (l. c., p. 345).

CHAPTER XX.

2 Satan bound for a thousand years. 6 The first resurrection: they blessed that have part therein. 7 Satan let loose again. 8 Gog and Magog. 10 The devil cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. 12 The last and general resurrection.

AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key

[Ver. 2 [A reads ὁ ὄφεις ὁ ἀρχαῖος]. Ver. 3 om. 2nd αὐτόν.—[A reads ἐμμένως αὐτόν for ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ].—om. καὶ before μετά. Ver. 4 om. 1st αὐτῶν.—om. τὰ before χίλια. Ver. 5 om. δέ.—ἐξῆσαν ἄχρι [1 reads ἀνέστησαν ἄχρι.—T. R. ἀνέξῆσαν ἕως, Erasmus having taken the first syllable ἀν from his manuscript, and ἐξῆσαν ἕως from the Vulg. vixerunt donec. Er. himself, in his five editions, has ἕως τελεσθῇ τὰ χίλια ἐτη ἄχρι,—ἄχρι being a printer's error]. Ver. 6 [K, B read τὰ χίλια.—A omits τὰ]. Ver. 8 τὸν πόλεμον [cf. ch. xix. 19].—ὡν ὁ ἀριθμὸς αὐτῶν. Ver. 9 om. ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ [cf. ch. xxi. 2, 10]. Ver. 10 καὶ before τὸ θηρίον. Ver. 11 μέγαν λευκόν. Ver. 12 τοὺς μεγάλους καὶ τοὺς μικρ. [the words μικροὺς καὶ μεγάλους (of T. R.), omitted in 1, are found in the commentary of Andreas. Cf. ch. xi. 18; xiii. 16; xix. 5, 18].—ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου. Ver. 13 twice reads τοὺς νεκροὺς τοὺς ἐν αὐτ. Ver. 14 οὗτος ὁ θάνατος ὁ δεύτερός ἐστιν, ἡ λίμνη τοῦ πυρός.]

After the "Seven plagues which are the last" (ch. xv. 1) comes the final Judgment itself, in the different stages of which the Three great Enemies of God receive their doom. These are the Dragon—of whom we first read in ch. xii., and his two agents, the Beast from the "Sea," or World-power (ch. xiii. 1), and the Beast from the "Earth," or "False Prophet" (ch. xiii. 11); cf. ch. xvi. 13. The enmity of these two agents of the principle of evil derives its source from Satan himself; and is realized throughout the Visions which follow, in bloodshed, persecution, seduction, and blasphemy. This God-opposing power is further manifested in ch. xvii. 3 under the two connected forms of the World-kingdom, or Beast, and the World-city, or "Harlot." In the description of the Last Judgment this order is reversed. Satan is now introduced and judged, not first of all but last of all, when he is "cast into the lake of fire" (ch. xx. 10). In ch. xix. 20, his two agents, the Beast and the "False Prophet," had been subjected to the same sentence; while earlier still, the seat of the World-power, Babylon, the "Harlot," had been destroyed (ch. xviii.).

But what is the place of the opening verses of this twentieth chapter in this symbolical picture of the final triumph of the Divine kingdom over the kingdom of evil? Omitting minor differences there are here two opposite systems of interpretation:—

I. This chapter takes up and continues in historical order the narratives of the preceding Visions;

II. In ch. xx. 1-9 we have, not a continuation of what went before, but a "Recapitulation" of events dating from the First Advent of Christ—ch. xix. 21 being continued at ch. xx. 10.

On these two systems see the Excursus at the end of this chapter.

THE THOUSAND YEARS (1-6).

1. And I saw an angel coming down out of heaven,] One of the host of Angels to whom the key of the Abyss is given, as in ch. ix. 1. In order to execute his office, the Angel comes "down out of heaven," for Satan has no longer a place there—see ch. xii. 9, 12.

The punishment of Satan, notes Auberlen, is always done by ministering Angels:—in ch. xii. by the Archangel Michael; here by an "Angel"; in ver. 10 no agency is spoken of:—see on ch. xii. 7.

Appealing to ch. i. 18, Hengst. (and so St. Augustine, Vitruvius, and others) decides that this Angel must be Christ Himself, "as at vii. 2; x. 1; xiv. 17; xviii. 1" (but see the notes on these texts);—Joachim and Cocceius understand the Holy Spirit;—Bullinger regards him as symbolizing the Twelve Apostles;—De Lyra, either Pope Calixtus II. (who compelled the Emperor Henry V. to yield on the

of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, question of Investitures, A.D. 1122), or Pope Innocent III.;—According to Brightman, the Angel is Constantine the Great.

having the key of the Abyss] The present abode of Satan and his evil spirits—see ch. ix. 1-11; and cf. on ch. xi. 7; xvii. 8. This is to be distinguished from the "Lake of Fire," ver. 10, a further and more awful place of punishment: see Matt. viii. 29; xxv. 41. St. Augustine (see on ver. 3), as already quoted on ch. ix. 1, seems not to regard the "Abyss" as a place at all; and similarly Ebrard (also quoted there) takes the meaning to be symbolical. It cannot, he argues, denote an actual locality, because the "Abyss" is first opened under the fifth Trumpet (ch. ix. 1, 2); while Satan nevertheless is both in heaven and on earth, see ch. xii. 3, 7-13: and again, because he has power to send from it the "Locusts" (ch. ix. 11), as well as the Beast, ch. xi. 7; xvii. 8:—but see on ver. 2.

and a great chain in his hand.] Gr., upon his hand,—lying on it, and hanging from it, prepared to execute the Divine Will, and bind Satan: cf. ch. v. 1.

Bossuet takes the chain figuratively to mean "the inviolable commands of God, and the impress of His Eternal Will."

2. And he laid hold on the dragon.] For the Three great Enemies of God's Kingdom, see ch. xiii. 2, 4, 11; xvi. 13. On the "continuous" system of interpretation, ch. xix. 21 is taken up here—see Note A at the end of this chapter. Cf. ch. xii. 3 as to the first appearance of the Dragon.

the old serpent.] Note the nominative here (see vv. 11.) marking the prominence of the idea—see Introd. § 7, IV. (d). The same titles used in ch. xii. 9 are here repeated verbatim; see also ch. xii. 14, 15. The word "Devil" used again in ver. 10 is also found in ch. ii. 10; xii. 12:—the word "Satan" used again in ver. 7 is also found in ch. ii. 9, 13, 24; iii. 9. Hengst. suggests that the exact repetition of these titles refers to the fundamental victory over Satan spoken of in ch. xii. 9. (This verse is quoted by St. Justin M., Apol. i. 28: see Introd. § 2, a).

which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him] Satan being a spirit, the binding by the "chain" must be understood figuratively;—not permitting him, as St. Augustine explains, to exercise his whole power of temptation. The expression "bound," recalls the binding of "the strong man," "Beelzebub the prince of the devils," Satan, Matt. xii. 24, 29; Mark iii. 26, 27. On the overthrow of Satan's power compare Luke x. 18; John xii. 31; xvi. 11; 2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6.

The binding of Satan, notes Auberlen, as a Millenarian, is mentioned first, because it is organically connected with ch. xix. 20.

for a thousand years.] The accusative case—signifying the duration of this binding of Satan: cf. ch. ix. 5. The importance of this period of duration is indicated by its being repeated six times in vv. 2-7.

That the period of a "Thousand Years" is to be taken figuratively, is in accordance with such texts as Ps. xc. 4 ("A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday"), or 2 Pet. iii. 8 ("One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day"). A space of time absolutely long is denoted,—just as "half an hour" (see on ch. viii. 1) denotes a space of time absolutely short. In fact, a very great, although not a countless number is signified;—not the "ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands" of ch. v. 11; or that "which no man could number" in ch. vii. 9. We are to understand a long, though finite duration, beginning from the First Advent of Christ (1 Cor. xv. 24, 25).

On the number 1000 (=10×10×10; or 10³)—the largeness of which has deterred the advocates of the "Year-day" theory from applying here their favourite method of calculation—see Introd. § 11, b, II. As the period of "three years and a half" was a chronological expression among the Jews denoting a time of suffering, so a "Thousand Years" signified with them the "Day of Messiah"—"Dies Messie mille anni:"—see Wetst. in loc.

Auberlen notes that Ten, the number which symbolizes the World in its completeness, is here raised to the power Three, the number of God:—"that is the world is penetrated perfectly and thoroughly by the Divine element."

Dean Alford expresses the literal interpretation as follows:—"That the Lord will come in person to this our earth: that His risen elect will reign here with Him and judge: that during that blessed reign the power of evil will be bound: . . . At the end of the Millennial period Satan is unloosed, and the nations of the earth are deceived by him." "This," he concludes, "is my firm persuasion."—Prolegg., p. 259.

How the difficulties which surround this notion of the Millennial reign of Christ on earth are met by Auberlen, may be seen in Note A at the end of this chapter. Auberlen:

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand also considers that both Daniel and St. John describe the Millennial Kingdom;—the former, after the manner of the Old Test., describing the earthly aspect of the coming of God's Kingdom (Dan. ii. 35, 44; vii. 13, 27); the latter describing its spiritual aspect (Rev. xx. 1-6). In these passages, he observes, all prophecy on the subject, whether in the Old or New Test., is summed up. With the Coming of Christ—the Parusia (Luke xix. 11, 12, 15, see on ch. xvii. 8)—the Kingdom of God shall be manifested; not indeed the eternal blessedness after the Last Judgment (Matt. xxv. 34), "but, anterior to that event, it shall come as an earthly, Jewish, although not carnal Kingdom of glory" (p. 326); "Israel is again to be at the head of all humanity" (p. 340).

Differently still:—Düsterd. dwelling on the "poetic beauty" of "the Apocalyptic drama" takes the "Thousand Years" to be but "an ideal representation" of the interval between the Resurrection of believers, and the general Resurrection of the rest of mankind.

As will be shewn below, the idea of a Kingdom of Christ upon earth which should endure for a "Thousand Years" had passed from Judaism to Christianity; and many in the Church of the second and third centuries accepted the doctrine from this Jewish source, through the medium of such writers as St. Barnabas, and Papias, and St. Justin Martyr. That Papias borrowed his Chiliasm doctrine from the Jewish "Apocalypse of Baruch" is almost certain, as already pointed out in the Introduction § 9:—see also the Excursus at the end of this chapter. Indeed the general notion of a future age of perfect earthly happiness, and also of a period of a "Thousand Years" in connexion with man's future destiny, was in like manner entertained among the heathen, as we learn from Plato (see the Excursus). A world-wide belief, accordingly, such as this, naturally supplied St. John with symbols and with language wherein to clothe his revelation of the fortunes of the Church,—just as he has employed for the same purpose the details of the Theocracy, or the imagery of war, or the phenomena and the convulsions of Nature.

Our Lord's words, as given in Luke xi. 21, 22, clearly refer to the restraining Satan's power, so "that he should deceive the nations no more" (ver. 3). Accordingly, as history has proved, heathen idolatries, sacrifices, oracles, have gradually ceased; and Christian civilization and Christian morality have been developed where the Gospel has prevailed.

That aspect of the doctrine, as held by Jews or by certain of the primitive Christians, which presented the "Thousand Years" as a season of carnal enjoyment, need not be referred to:—that other aspect only which presents a Millennium of spiritual felicity, is to be regarded. The passages of Scripture usually referred to in proof of one or other of the phases of Chiliasm are those promises to the chosen People which are contained in the Old Test., and which are alleged not to have been as yet fulfilled in their true sense, viz., Gen. xii. 1-3; xv. 3-6; xxvii. 17-29; and the prophecies of Daniel and Ezekiel. Or, again, our Lord's words, Matt. v. 5; viii. 11; xix. 28, 29; xxvi. 29; Luke xiv. 12-14; xxii. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 25, &c.; and above all, Rev. xx.

3. And cast him into the abyss.] Our Lord has Himself thrown much light on this whole passage by the words, "Now shall the Prince of this world be cast out" (John xii. 31): "Now"—from the date, that is, of the Incarnation. Here Satan is cast out of the earth; in ch. xii. 9 he was cast out of heaven. From the "Abyss," partially unlocked (ch. ix. 2), the smoke of the Locust-plague issued; thence, too, the Beast ascended (ch. xi. 7; xvii. 8) to whom Satan gave authority (ch. xiii. 4, 7). From this locality Satan himself has been allowed, by God's permission, to come forth; and in Job i. 7 is revealed the liberty conceded to him before he is now bound. In regarding the "Abyss" as a purely figurative expression denoting "the multitude of the ungodly, the malignity of whose hearts against the Church is profound" (see on ch. ix. 1), St. Augustine has, surely, exceeded the limits of spiritual symbolism, as the texts just quoted, among others, prove:—compare De Civ. Dei, xx. 7.

and shut [it], and sealed [it] over him.] See vv. 11. Cf. Dan. vi. 17; Matt. xxvii. 66. Note, the verb rendered "sealed" is used, absolutely in the active, only here and in John iii. 33. The Cod. Alex. reads, shut him up, and set on him an abiding seal.

This "setting" a seal over him St. Augustine takes to mean that it will for ever be a secret in this life who they are that belong to the Devil's part, and who do not (ib.).

that he should deceive the nations no more.] As he has hitherto done (ch. xiii. 14; xvi. 13, 14); see ver. 8. The "conj. aorist," taken in a future sense (cf. Winer, s. 450), signifies that "the nations" are still to be on the earth during the "Thousand Years." It is clear from ch. xxi. 24, that "the nations" is an expression to be taken in all its generality. St. Augustine (l. c.) would restrict it to the years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was Elect;—Hengst. to "beatben nations as such," not individuals;—Other writers refer to the beatben as distinct from Christians; for people who are not Christians,—argue Millennarians of this class,—even after ch. xix. 21, are still to exist on earth, although in its most remote regions (ver. 8);—Burger concludes that sin has not as yet ceased from the earth as long as sinful men dwell on it: but the great increase and development of sin which Satan's influence effects is not experienced until the "Thousand Years" are ended.

until the thousand years should be finished:] Scripture elsewhere intimates that before the end of the world Satan's power to deceive—perhaps by the revival of heathenism—will be restored. "The Day of the Lord," we are told, will not be "except the falling away come first and the Man of Sin" is revealed "according to the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thess. ii. 3-9); when the desolating "abomination" (Matt. xxiv. 15) will spring up, exceeding all other idolatries; when the power that now restrains shall be taken out of the way.

after this] Omit "And"—see vv. 11. Gr. after these, viz. "the Thousand Years." Or, after these things.

he must be loosed for a little time.] For the prophetic formula "must," see ch. i. 1; iv. 1. On the word rendered "time" (chronos,—not the word rendered "time" in ch. xii. 12, which is kairos), see on ch. i. 3; ii. 21. This duration is occupied by the events described in vv. 7-11.

This period Bengel arbitrarily assumes to be 1111½ years, or "half a time" (kairos), and to extend from A.D. 2836 to A.D. 2947 + ½. By adding to this "the short time" of ch. xii. 12, or 883½ years, he gets A.D. 3836, the close of the second Millennium or reign of the Saints in heaven:—see Note A at the end of this chapter. Upon the loosing of Satan in A.D. 2836, the gradual Resurrection of the martyrs begins. These reign with Christ in heaven until A.D. 3836, the period of the general Resurrection. This, with the final Judgment that speedily ensues, is described in ver. 11, &c. (see Introd. § 11, (b), IV.). When this additional period is fulfilled, and Satan, followed by Gog and Magog, is defeated, he has arrived at the fourth and last stage of his punishment—"the Lake of Fire": see on ver. 2, and on ch. xii. 12.

The "little time," St. Augustine (l.c., c. 8) understands to be the great period of Antichrist, the "three and a half years":—perhaps, suggests I. Williams (p. 413), because this space of time is the mystical number expressive of a period of trial of longer or shorter duration.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION (4-6).

These verses convey a revelation interposed between ver. 3 and its continuation in ver. 7. The Apostolic Church, sighing under her many tribulations, is here taught the spiritual meaning of that Millennial existence which man so fondly pictures to himself as an existence of earthly bliss in the future—a bliss however, of which earth can never be the scene:—see the Excursus at the end of this chapter.

Burger notes that vv. 4, 5 exhibit the other side of the victory won in ch. xix. 20, 21.

Ebrard takes a different view:—As ch. xix. 20, 21, reveals the subversion of Antichrist by the Lord Himself, so here we have a new Vision unfolding the share of the "Saints" in that same judgment.

4. And I saw thrones.] See the note on Dan. vii. 9; and read in combination with each other the following texts:—Dan. vii. 18, 22; Matt. xix. 28; 1 Cor. vi. 2; Rev. ii. 26; iii. 21. In like manner, with the close of this verse, "They reigned with Christ," compare ch. i. 6, "He made us to be a Kingdom;" and ch. v. 10, didst make them to be a Kingdom . . . and they reign on the earth."

The idea of royal "thrones" can hardly be avoided here. Some refer exclusively to judicial seats or thrones—see below. One can scarcely doubt that both ideas are combined.

These heavenly "thrones" have been placed by some on the earth.

and they sat upon them.] The subject of the verb is not specified (cf. ch. x. 11; xii. 6), but the meaning naturally is the "souls" (see below) of the glorified dead; the martyrs, as well as the faithful, who are next spoken of, and who now, with Christ, judge and govern the Church (see 1 Cor. iv. 8; vi. 2, 3):—so St. Augustine (l.c., c. 9). Burger suggests the Twelve Apostles (Matt. xix. 28) or the Twenty-four Elders;—Hengst. the Apostles in fellowship with the Twelve Patriarchs;—Reuss the Saints (Dan. vii. 22; 1 Cor. vi. 2), or the Angels;—And yet again, Words, the Pagan and Papal persecutors, of the Church. Grotius takes the Judges to be God and Christ—a sense excluded by the following words "judgment was given unto them." If a distinction is to be made between those who "sat" upon the thrones here, and those who "reigned with Christ" at the given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and end of the verse, the natural subject of the verb would be the representatives of the Universal Church—the “Twenty Four Elders” of ch. iv. 4; xi. 16. The number of the “thrones,” however, is not stated here.

and judgment was given unto them:] “Judgment” (κρίμα) without the art., notes Burger, points to a special judgment for a definite object. Of those who see here a judicial transaction in heaven, some regard the “judgment” as intended to decide on the claims of the Martyrs to their reward (Hengst.);—Düsterd. includes the Saints generally—to which Alf. objects, quoting John v. 24, the believer “cometh not into judgment” (εἰς κρίσιν);—Words. writes: “The Pagan and Papal persecutors of [the] Martyrs had been seated on thrones executing judgment, and condemned them to death;—Ebrard thinks that the absence of the art. before the word “judgment” indicates a judgment preliminary to that of ver. 12. This he takes to be a judgment on Christ’s enemies identical with that described in ch. xix. 20–xx. 3.

The true sense (see below) seems to point to that moral judgment of humanity spoken of by Christ in John v. 24–27, the execution of which is here delegated by Him to His Saints as promised in ch. iii. 21:—see on ver. 12.

and [I saw] the souls] In ver. 12 St. John says “I saw the dead;” here he beholds “the souls” of those who “shall never die” (John xi. 25, 26),—of the martyrs in glory,—“animæ,” writes St. Augustine, “martyrum nondum sibi corporibus suis redditis” (i.e., c. 9). It is of the Martyrs only that “the souls” are expressly said to have been now seen. Words. notes: “He does not say he saw the bodies;” i.e., the Seer has a Vision of the Martyrs in the state of the dead, after they were slain, and before their Resurrection.

of them that had been beheaded] Gr. who had been smitten with an axe;—the axe (πέλεκυς, securis, fœces) was the badge of Roman power (Virg. Æn. vi. 820), as Wetstein notes, a supplicium Romanum. Of course we may take this to be an emblem of all forms of martyrdom; pointing to those “souls” beneath the Altar which cried for vengeance (ch. vi. 9), as also those who were slain by the Beast over all the earth, and with whose blood the “Harlot” was drunken—ch. xiii. 7, 15; xvi. 6; xvii. 6; xviii. 24.

for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God,] See ch. i. 9; xii. 17; xix. 10.

and such as worshipped not the beast,]

The second class of those who were seen seated on the “thrones,” see ch. xiii. 15:—Either “the souls of such as,” &c.; or (with an accusatorial construction, supplying πάντας before οἰκίτες), “I saw all the faithful of all times, such as” &c.—which includes the living as well as the dead. This latter construction seems to give the true sense; and thus there is here not a Vision of Martyrs only, or of the dead only:—see on ch. vi. 11.

neither his image,] See ch. xiii. 14.

and received not the mark upon their forehead and upon their hand;] See ch. xiii. 16. As in ch. vi. 11, St. John distinguishes two classes here,—(1) “The noble army of Martyrs”; (2) “The holy Church throughout all the world,” understood in the sense of the lines—

“There is

One great society alone on earth:
The noble Living and the noble Dead.”

Wordsworth, The Prelude, B. xi.:

—the redeemed in heaven, and the faithful on earth—“the Communion of Saints.” “Nor is this union,” writes Pearson, “separated by the death of any, but as Christ in Whom they live is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, so have they [viz. “such persons as are truly sanctified in the Church of Christ, while they live among the crooked generation of men,”] fellowship with all the Saints which from the death of Abel have ever departed in the true faith and fear of God, and now enjoy the presence of the Father.”—On The Creed, Art. ix. [“Neque enim,” writes St. Augustine, “piorum animæ mortuorum separantur ab Ecclesia quæ etiam nunc est regnum Christi. . . . ‘Et si qui non adoraverunt bestiam,’ &c. simul de vivis et mortuis debemus accipere” (ib.)].

Burger sees in ver. 4 two classes,—as well the 144,000 of ch. vii. 4–8, and ch. xiv. 1–5, as those spoken of in ch. vii. 9–17 and ch. xv. 2–4.

and they lived,] Millennarians with one voice assert “lived again”:—e.g. Alf. writes, “ζῆσαν = ἀνέζησαν,” as in ch. ii. 8; Rom. xiv. 9.” In both these texts the reference is to Christ, and therefore is irrelevant here. When other Millennarians urge the force of the words which follow, “the rest of the dead,” and “the First Resurrection,” they give a meaning to the passage which it cannot bear—see below. The key to the real reigned with Christ a thousand years.

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years sense of this whole Vision is, however, to be found in our Lord's words (John v. 24-29) which unfold the conception of spiritual Life. In John v. 22 the Father "hath given all judgment unto the Son,"—i.e., (1) "judgment" in its spiritual sense as defined in vv. 24-26, and (2) in its external sense, as defined in vv. 27-29: in other words, the two senses in which "judgment" is now referred to in this present verse, and in ver. 12. Accordingly, it is declared in John v. 24 that believers "have eternal Life," and "come not into judgment" (in the spiritual or moral sense), but have "passed out of death into Life." Even in this world, they already have spiritual Life—"Life," in the fullest and truest sense of the word. And this is the meaning of the expression here, "they lived,"—see also 1 John iii. 14; and cf. Luke xv. 32; Rom. xi. 15. Neither here nor in ver. 5 (see vv. 11.) is it said "they lived again."

Hengst., in his theory of the Millennium (see Note A), does not include those now actually living on earth, and explains: "I saw how they lived, or attained to life before my eyes:—he sees them not merely in the state of the living; he also sees how they came to this state—cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 7.

and reigned with Christ a thousand years.] See vv. 11. The Textus Receptus reads the article here—"the Thousand Years."

This reigning of the Church Militant on earth, as well as of the Church triumphant in heaven (1 Cor. iv. 8; cf. Eph. ii. 6; 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12), with Christ, since His Incarnation (see on ver 2), has been already referred to in ch. v. 10; cf. ch. i. 6:—it includes also the office of judging. Hence it follows that it is only the faithful who have been born since the date of the Incarnation, who both "live" (i. e., receive spiritual life) and "reign" with Christ:—the rest of mankind are spoken of in ver. 5.

Auberlen (see Note A) holding that Christ has taken up His Bride, the Church, with Him to heaven, regards the free communion of the heavenly and earthly Churches, to be one of the glories of the Millennium. As a type of this communion between the Church on earth and the glorified Saints, visible in their risen bodies, he takes the appearances of the risen Saviour to His disciples during the Forty Days which preceded the Ascension (l.c., p. 334). This same comparison with the Forty Days is made by Ebrard, who, however, considers that the Saints reign, not from heaven, but over the "nations" on earth, near to whom is "the camp of the Saints," ver. 9.

Burger considers that this verse conveys a literal prediction; but he declines to discuss any question connected with it ("Wie sie zu denken, womit sie ausgefüllt sein wird, haben wir nichts zu besprechen").

On the absence of the article Bengel founds his theory of two Millennial periods—see Note A. The art. is omitted in ver. 2, and is inserted in vv. 3, 7; and Bengel takes these three verses to mark the first "Thousand Years," or the binding of Satan. He connects vv. 5, 6 with ver. 4, this second group of three verses marking the second "Thousand Years," or reign of the Saints—the art. being doubtful in ver. 6 (see vv. 11.). On its omission Bengel notes: "versu 6, quasi in elegio, seorsum posito."

5. The rest of the dead] (Omit "But"—see vv. 11.). Compare, as on ver. 4, John v. 25: "The hour . . . now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God"—when "Jesus sees Himself as the only really Living One, in the midst of mankind who are sunk in death and in sin" (Godet in loc.). On this, the spiritual sense of "being dead," compare "Let the dead bury their dead"—Luke ix. 60; see also Luke xv. 24; Rom. vi. 2; Eph. ii. 1, 5; Col. ii. 13. The spiritual sense of "death," as well as of "life," implying a moral Resurrection, is to be retained here. "The rest of the dead" St. Augustine takes to be those who have not heard the Divine voice, John v. 25 ("quicumque non vixerit, id est, isto toto tempore quo agitur prima resurrectio, non audierit vocem filii Dei," ib.). And so Hengst. and Bispington, &c.,—"the godless dead."

I. Williams understands the Saints of the Old Test., those under the fifth Seal who "died for the word of God," but not for the testimony of Jesus; and who are to rest "yet for a little season" (ch. vi. 9, 11); cf. also Heb. xi. 39, 40. De Wette and Düstend. include among "the rest of the dead" all godly or ungodly who had literally died, but had not been called to reign with Christ during the Millennium;—and so De Burgh, who excludes from those who "reign," "all the converts of the Millennial period."—p. 364.

The meaning, however, seems to be, "All mankind from the beginning who have not shared on earth in that "Life" which Christ came to confer, and which He alone could bestow (John i. 4; v. 40),—whether holy men of old who had not received the promise (cf. the case of John the Baptist, Luke vii. 28; and also Heb. xi. 39, 40); or those among the heathen of all times who have were finished. This is the first resurrection.

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on ever shewn "the work of the Law written in their hearts" (Rom. ii. 15); or, in fine, the ungodly of all ages and of all nations.'

lived not until the thousand years should be finished.] Note, we do not read, "lived not again" (see vv. 11.), as the A.V.:—see on ver. 4. Alford, however, and others still interpret, as before, "lived not (again)," i.e., did not rise, literally speaking, from the dead—according to their notion of the "First Resurrection": see below. Words. notes: "After the crisis of the last struggle they will revive 'to shame and contempt' (Dan. xii. 2) at the General Resurrection."

Dean Vaughan explains: "'The rest of the dead lived not'—in that sense of life which is alone the Gospel's and the Christian's sense." Till after the "Thousand Years" "they exist only in that suffering of the lost soul which is separation from God, and therefore also from life and from hope; and when they are finally reunited to the resurrection body it will be for them not a 'body of glory' (Phil. iii. 21) but . . . a body suited to that future life which is called more properly the second death" (ii. p. 219).

It may well be doubted whether an expression so comprehensive as "the rest of the dead" is to be thus restricted in its meaning. Carefully preserving, however, throughout this passage the same meaning for the words "life" and "death," the result is rather as follows:—"The rest of the dead" who are at length to attain to spiritual life do not receive that gift until the end of the present Dispensation,—until the end of the "Thousand Years,"—until the eve of the General Judgment. They are then to "live," but not to "reign" with Christ (see on ver. 4). Accordingly the "First Resurrection" (see below) includes those only who both "live" and "reign." They who only "live" with Christ hereafter do not share in what is here called the "First Resurrection"; but they are to share in the "Resurrection of the Just" (Luke xiv. 14).

This clause of ver. 5 is parenthetical.

This is the first resurrection.] The fourth verse is resumed here. These words Millenarians rely upon as rendering their system secure. Dean Alford writes: "If in a passage where two resurrections are mentioned, . . . the first resurrection may be understood to mean spiritual rising with Christ, while the second means literal rising from the grave;—then there is an end of all significance in language; and Scripture is wiped out as a definite testimony to anything. If the first resurrection is spiritual, then so is the second, which I suppose none will be hardy enough to maintain."

As opposed to this reasoning one may ask, if "the second death" is to be taken in a spiritual sense in ver. 6, why may not the "First Resurrection" in the same verse be, in like manner, so taken? Here the reader is to note, (1) That, from beginning to end, St. John nowhere uses the words relied upon, "the second resurrection,"—as indeed neither is the phrase "the first death" employed by him: while he uses here, and repeats in ver. 6, the phrase, the "First Resurrection," and also repeats more than once the phrase, "the second death" (see vv. 6, 14; ch. ii. 11; xxi. 8). In ver. 12 the Universal Resurrection is spoken of in the most general terms,—and similarly in vv. 12, 13 and, elsewhere, literal death (e.g. "I will kill her children with death," ch. ii. 23); but St. John abstains pointedly from writing the "second resurrection" or "the first death." In other words, he abstains from language which would have been so natural had the supposed parallel between two literal resurrections been intended:—i.e., had the "First Resurrection" which he speaks of been literal, as is that other Resurrection to which he merely refers in the most general terms. So too St. John nowhere uses "the first death" to signify the literal death of the body; while he carefully dwells upon "the second death," or final doom of the wicked (ch. ii. 11; xxi. 8)—a figurative sense which is evident from ver. 14, where "the second death" follows the Resurrection of the body, and does not precede it, as the literal event referred to in vv. 12, 13 (which we call death) precedes the future rising from the grave.

(2) In this figurative sense "the second death" is connected, in ver. 6, with the "First Resurrection":—and thus, as in vv. 12, 13 we do not scruple to take the word "dead" literally, or to understand a literal Resurrection (although not expressed); so, in like manner, we need not scruple, as Alford does, to interpret in a spiritual sense the "First Resurrection," just as all interpret spiritually "the second death."

(3) We do not read of "the first birth," but we do read, and notably in John iii. 3, 5, of being "born again," "born of water and of the Spirit"—in fact of Regeneration or "the second birth"; and this is precisely what the "First Resurrection" means. Thus, speaking of those who are "born of God," St. John writes: "We have passed out of death into life" (1 John iii. 14). Hence the antithesis of ver. 6: The "First Resurrection,"—The "second such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

death." In John v. 24, 25, our Lord "borrows from the physical Resurrection images whereby He depicts the moral work which is to pave the way to it. He seems to allude to that magnificent vision of Ezekiel (ch. xxxvii.), in which the prophet, standing in the midst of a plain covered with dry bones, calls them to life, first by his words, and then by the breath of Jehovah" (Godet, in loc.). In John v. 25, in the words "the hour that now is," Christ speaks of what takes place in this life; and then He goes on to speak (vv. 28, 29) of that future hour "in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice." And so St. John teaches in this present passage, following the stream of New Test. doctrine. Thus St. Paul: "We were buried with Him through baptism into death" (Rom. vi. 2-4); "Buried with Him in Baptism, wherein ye were also raised with Him" (Col. ii. 12); or as St. Paul applies the images of death and resurrection: "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead" (Eph. v. 14). Hence it is that in harmony with all New Test. teaching, we have symbolized here, under the figure of the "First Resurrection," that "death unto sin and new birth unto righteousness" in the Sacrament of Baptism, of which the Lord's death and Resurrection are the pledge and the efficient cause.

(4) Further,—the words of Christ, John v. 28, 29, are decisive against the opinion that there is to be a First, literal, Resurrection of certain of the dead distinct from that of all: "The hour cometh in which all that are in the graves shall bear the voice of the Son of Man, and shall come forth." Here we are to note (1) that the event spoken of is wholly future, the words "and now is" of ver. 25 being carefully omitted;—(2) that we read not merely of "the dead," but of "all that are in the graves;"—(3) that it is not merely "they that bear," which implies a division of classes, but "all that are in the graves shall hear;"—(4) that Christ is not speaking in ver. 29 of "life" only—as in ver. 25; in ver. 29 two opposite issues are proposed, life and judgment. In a word, at that one, last "hour" the righteous and the unrighteous are to rise together from the dead: see Godet in loc.

The conclusion, then, is as follows:—The subjects of the "First Resurrection" are those who are specified in ver. 4, of whom Christ had already spoken in John v. 25; while "the rest of the dead,"—who are referred to in the parenthetical clause at the beginning of the present verse,—though they do not partake of the "First Resurrection" until the end of the "Thousand Years," are also included in the announcement of John v. 29: They shall come forth from their graves, "they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have wrought evil, unto the resurrection of judgment." is he that hath part in the first resurrection:] The phrase "to have part" is peculiar to St. John; see John xiii. 8, in which verse alone—although with another preposition, "with" (μερά not ἐν), as referring to a person—do we find it elsewhere in the New Test.: see ch. xxi. 8. Cf. Luke xi. 36; xii. 46; Acts viii. 21; and Introd. § 7, IV, (c).

6. Blessed and holy] For similar words of consolation and encouragement cf. ch. i. 3; xiv. 13; xvi. 15; xix. 9; xxii. 14.

Note,—They that have "part in the First Resurrection," as shewn on vv. 4, 5, "live and reign with Christ a Thousand Years" (ver. 4). They who, from among "the rest of the dead," shall "live" with Him after the "Thousand Years" are finished, will share in the blessedness of the former, although they have not reigned with Him.

It is no objection to the interpretation here given of this passage that, among those who "are buried with Christ through Baptism into death," and who like Him are "raised from the dead" (Rom. vi. 4), there are some—nay many—who fall away. It is characteristic of St. John to assume that the gifts of Divine grace actually produce that spiritual change which the God of love designed that they should produce in man. Thus he writes: "Whosoever is begotten of God doeth no sin" (1 John iii. 9); while this same Epistle opens (i. 8) with the assertion of the general principle: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves": see also John x. 28, 29; xiv. 15:—"Ipse est autem particeps ejus, qui non solum a morte, quæ in peccatis est, reviviscit, verum etiam in eo quod revixerit, permanebit."—St. August., ibid.

over these the second death hath no power.] Gr. no authority. In ver. 14 we are told that "the second death" is "the lake of fire"—see also ch. ii. 11; xxi. 8; and ver. 15 proves that not those only who "have part in the First Resurrection" are released from "the second death," but those also who are "found written in the Book of Life,"—that is, all who shall ultimately "live" with Christ. On the spiritual as well as the literal signification with St. John of the expressions, "die," "death," see John xi. 25, 26; 1 John v. 16, 17.

but they shall be priests of God and of Christ,

7 And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth,^a Gog and Magog, to gather ^{a Ezek. 38. 2. & 39. 1.}

and shall reign with him] See ch. i. 6; v. 10. Note that the expressions being "priests," and the "reigning," or having "a Kingdom," are always used of this present life.

St. Augustine points out that it is briefly intimated here that Christ is God; "Deum esse Christum, dicendo sacerdotes Dei et Christi"—ib., c. 10.

a thousand years.] Or "the Thousand Years,"—see vv. 11; and cf. Bengel's note quoted on ver. 4.

For the interpretation which connects this passage with an earlier Vision, see the remarks of Todd quoted on ch. xi. 18.

From comparing the blessing in this verse with that in Dan. xii. 12, 13, some have inferred that the 1335 (1260 + 30 + 30 + 15) days of Dan. xii. 12, will be immediately followed by the Resurrection of the Just, and the Millennial reign of Christ. Thus some ancient writers held that the 1260 days (Rev. xii. 6) or "three and a half years" (the duration of Antichrist's power—Dan. vii. 25), the 1290 days of Dan. xii. 11, and the 1335 days, will commence together after the delivering up of the Saints to the antichristian "Horn" (Dan. vii. 21);—that at the end of the 1290 days (i.e., in thirty days after the "three and a half years") Antichrist "shall be broken without hand" (Dan. viii. 25);—and that at the end of the 1335 days the dead shall be raised with their bodies:—see Todd's Lectures on Antichrist, p. 117.

Referring to the "Pre-millennial scheme" of modern times Dr. David Brown asks: "When Christ appears at the beginning of the Millennium, He will raise all the Saints that shall have died before that time, and change all that shall then be alive. But what is to become of the myriads of Saints that are to people the earth during the Millennium? . . . This whole subject is a blank in the system. It has positively got no Scripture on the subject. . . . For the most part the subject is avoided" (l. c., p. 155).

THE JUDGMENT ON SATAN (7-10).

7. And when the thousand years are finished.] See on ver. 3:—the narrative of ch. xix. 19-21 is here resumed. A clear proof of the parallel nature of the two passages is supplied by the quotation in ch. xix. 17, 18, of those words of Ezekiel (ch. xxxix. 17, 18) on which ver. 8 (see below) is founded. The two passages, indeed, are but different accounts of the assembling "unto the war of the great day of God, the Almighty," described in ch. xvi. 14-16; the hosts being gathered together by the evil spirits proceeding from "the Dragon," "the Beast," and "the False Prophet." The destruction of "The Dragon," or Satan is described here; and the destruction of "the Beast" with the "False Prophet" is described in ch. xix. 20. For the order in which the Three Enemies of God are punished see the remarks introductory to this chapter.

Satan shall be loosed out of his prison.] On this revival of Satan's power at the end, compare the words: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"—Luke xviii. 8. As to the binding of Satan, see on ver. 2.

Here we have no longer a Vision, introduced by the words "And I saw," but a distinct prediction of what will come to pass hereafter. We have now the prophetic future; in ver. 9 the historic form is resumed with aorists. This instance (together with shall come forth, ver. 8), as Hengstenberg observes, is the only case in the Apoc., where the future, as such, is announced beforehand. In ver. 9 St. John returns to his Vision. The future in ch. ix. 6 but reflects Jer. viii. 3;—in ch. xi. 3, St. John is not the speaker;—in ch. xiii. 8 the future follows from what was seen.

According to Reuss (see on ch. xvi. 18), the Third great Conflict is described here in vv. 7-10.

8. and shall come forth to deceive] See ver. 3. How Satan accomplishes his deception at this stage, has been explained by commentators generally by a reference to ch. xvi. 13.

the nations which are in the four corners of the earth.] As to the sense in which "the nations" are to be taken, see on ver. 3. As to "the four corners of the earth," see on ch. vii. 1;—i.e., the whole earth to its four corners (cf. 1 Sam. xiv. 38, LXX.). Others take the meaning to be, "the nations occupying the most remote parts of the earth" (so Vitr. "extrema terra ora," p. 870);—"the peoples outside the scene of historical development" (Burger). Who these "nations" are, and whence they are to come, are questions which cause Millennialists great perplexity. Not to mention the difficulty as to the existence, during the Millennium, of members of the Church who are born and die, marry and are given in marriage, there remains the them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

further difficulty as to unbelieving "nations." Vitr. suggests that they may be "Iberi, Colchi, Albani, Moschi, Sarmatæ, Turci, &c.—ib.;"—Mede conjectures "Orbis Americani, Arctici et Antarcticæ incolæ;" and generally the Antipodes (l. c., p. 575);—Hengst., as before (see on ver. 3), refers to the beatben as such; and he notes how Bengel "perceived, even in his day, the beginnings of the germinating heathenism;"—Ebrard explains that they are the unconverted heathen who dwell all round the region assigned to the Saints as their dwelling, see ver. 9; and so Bisping;—De Burgh (p. 366): "That enemies will be suffered to exist during [Christ's] reign, for the exhibition of His power, is intimated in other Scriptures (Ps. cx. 2, 3). The only question is, Why should this be permitted?—To prove the undoubted security of the Saints . . . as also finally to consummate the guilt of the enemy himself." And yet, as Düsterd. objects, Millenarians generally consider that all ungodly nations and rulers had already been annihilated (ch. xix. 21).

Besides the connexion of this verse with the prophecy of Ezekiel (see below), Hengst. also connects it with Daniel's prophecy of the "Little Horn" (Dan. vii. 8, 21, 24), or Antichrist.

Gog and Magog. These names appear in Ezek. xxxviii.; xxxix.; where, however, we read "Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Mesbech and Tubal" (Ezek. xxxviii. 2). In Gen. x. 2, Magog is a son of Japheth father of the Gentiles (ver. 5), as distinguished from the race of Shem (ver. 21); Gog being (see above) "the chief prince of Mesbech and Tubal," who are also sons of Japheth. In Gen. x. 2 (see note in loc.) Magog is placed between Gomer and Madai (ancestors of the Cimmerians and Medes)—evidently as the name of a people of the North—see Ezek. xxxviii. 15; xxxix. 2. In Cuneiform inscriptions "we find side by side with 'a chief of Madai (Media)' 'Sariti and Pariza, sons of Ga-a-gi, a chief of the Saka (Scythians),' whom Mr. Smith (Hist. of Assyrianipal, p. 97) identifies with Gog" (note on Ezek. xxxviii. 2). The statement of Josephus (Antt. i. 63) that the descendants of Magog were the Scythians is generally accepted as true. The great irruption of the northern races from beyond the Caucasian range, who are known by the general name of Scythians, is recorded by Herodotus (B. i. C. 103–106); and, although the fact has been questioned, the influence of those races in Western Asia is confirmed by the Cuneiform records (see Rawlinson, Hist. of Herod., vol. i. Essay xi., p. 648). This invasion lasted from

B.C. 633 to B.C. 605;—see Larcher (Hist. d'Herodote, t. vii., p. 151), who places the Scythian devastation of Judæa in B.C. 628, or the year after Jeremiah prophesied (in the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign) the coming of evil "out of the North" (Jer. i. 14; iv. 6; vi. 22–24). Although not mentioned in the historical Books of the Old Test., we have, as Ewald concludes (Hist. of Israel, Engl. tr. vol. iv. p. 230), clear evidence of this devastation of Judæa, during the Scythian invasion of Egypt, in Jer. iii.–iv., and in Zephaniah: while the name Scythopolis, given to the ancient Bethshan, or Beth-shean (Judges i. 27; Judith iii. 10; 2 Macc. xii. 29), which lay on the great road between Nineveh and Egypt, perpetuated the memory of the event. (Dr. Pusey, however, dissents from this reference to Zephaniah—see his Minor Prophets, p. 439). Ewald, arguing from Ps. lix. 6, also considers that this Psalm was composed by Josiah as the record of his having been besieged in Jerusalem by this nomad horde.—Die Dichter des A. B., ii. s. 164. This terrible invasion of the northern nations, which left such traces and memories behind (see St. Jerome, in Ezek. xxxviii., t. v., p. 444), supplied the foundation of the imagery and language of Ezekiel. Ezekiel expressly states (ch. xxxviii. 17) that Gog and Magog had been the subjects of earlier prophecy,—intimating thereby that these names were but symbols of the enmity of the world to the people of God. The later Jewish theology also explains the names as signifying the nations which shall come up in the Last Days to Jerusalem, and shall fall by the hand of Messiah (Jerus. Targum on Num. xi. 27, ap. Wetst.); and later still, the Talmud applied the names to the Goths (Neubauer, La Géogr. du Talmud, p. 422). See also St. Ambrose, De Fide, II. c. xvi., t. ii. p. 495.

Renan notes: "Gog et Magog, personifications mythiques des invasions barbares";—and he notes: "Chez certaines tribus parlant l'ossète, Gogb 'montagne' et Mugbogh 'la grande montagne' désignent deux massifs du Caucase." The two names were applied to the Scythian populations of the Caspian and the Black Sea.—p. 447; see Koran, xviii. 94; xxi. 96; Carm. Sibyll. iii. 319, 512 (see Note E on ch. ii. 20).

The result, then, is that the catastrophe which St. John is now about to describe has led him to borrow once more, and with greater minuteness, that imagery of Ezekiel (xxxix. 17–20) which he had already employed to signify this same destruction of the powers of the world, leagued with Satan, in their last assault on the City of God:—see on ch. xix.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire

17. And thus, in "Gog and Magog" we have an epithet, taken from the symbolism of the Old Test., to represent the heathen and God-opposing nations of the earth.

St. Augustine (l.c., c. xi.) understands by Magog the ungodly in whom, as in an Abyss (see on ver. 3), the Devil—symbolized by Gog—is shut up ("Gog tectum, Magog de tecto"). Others, he adds, took them to be barbarous nations outside the Roman Empire; some, from the initial letters, applying the names to the Getæ and the Massagetzæ.

Luther, Grotius, and others refer to the Saracens;—Bellarmine (De Pont. Rom. iii. 17) refers generally to Antichrist;—Bossuet to the Albigenses and Manichæans;—Mede regards the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel and St. John as type and antitype, relating to the first and second Resurrections respectively (cf. Ezek. xxxvii.): "Each resurrection has for its forerunner (prodromus) its own Gog and Magog" ("illâ Scythicum illum et Aquilonarem, hac vero mysticum"—p. 571).

to gather them together to the war:] The article (see vv. 11.) is emphatic, as in ch. xix. 19. Here is the last great struggle, under the sixth "Vial," ch. xvi. 12—16; xvii. 14. This conflict, notes Burger, is to take place long after the conversion and restoration of Israel—see Ezek. xxxviii. 8.

the number of whom] The pronoun (see vv. 11.) is repeated for emphasis—cf. ch. ii. 7.

is as the sand of the sea.] "Like a cloud to cover the land"—Ezek. xxxviii. 9, 16:—cf. Josh. xi. 4; Judges vii. 12; 1 Sam. xiii. 5. See also ch. ix. 16.

9. And they went up] The past tense, the historic aorist, is resumed here; see on ver. 7. The verb is that employed when an army proceeds to attack,—Judges i. 1; 1 Kings xxii. 4.

over the breadth of the earth,] To over-spread it:—the phrase is taken from Hab. i. 6, LXX.; and is used in contradistinction to the "corners of the earth" in ver. 8.

and compassed the camp of the saints about,] The word rendered "camp" (παραβολή, cf. Heb. xiii. 11, 13) is that which expresses a station of soldiers—see Acts xxi. 34. There is also an evident reference to the state of the "Church Militant"—cf. Eph. vi. 11—17. The terms 'Camp' and 'City' are images borrowed from the condition of Israel in the Wilderness and in the Promised and the beloved city:] I.e., Jerusalem—so styled in Eccles. xxiv. 11; cf. Ps. lxxviii. 68. Jerusalem throughout the Apocalypse is the symbol of the Church—the nations, writes St. Augustine, do not come together into one place, when they come to attack the camp and the City, "because the City is none other than the Church of Christ diffused throughout the whole world":—so also Beda, Vitruvius, Hengst.

Land (Ex. xiv. 19; Ps. cvii. 36). Here the "Camp" is to be understood as surrounding and defending the "City,"—cf. Luke xix. 43.

Of Millenarians some understand "the metropolis of the Church during the Thousand Years' reign," the symbolical Jerusalem (see Bispington);—Others understand the literal, earthly, Jerusalem (so Alford). It is generally agreed that it is not the "New Jerusalem," cf. ch. xxi. 2: Mede, however, takes it to be so; and "the Camp of the Saints" he supposes to be "the nations who shall walk in the light of it,"—ch. xxi. 24. Grotius takes "the Camp" to denote "the Seven Churches" (ch. ii. 1; iii.);—and "the City" to be Constantinople;—Gog (see on ver. 8) represents the house of Othman, which first appeared in Lydia;—and the "earth" means the inhabitants of Asia Minor,—Mohammed II., of the race of Othman, being the conqueror of Constantinople. The "fire from heaven" (see below) signifies, adds Grotius, the destruction, still future, of the Turkish Empire, "fire" denoting such catastrophes,—see Isa. ix. 5; x. 16; xxvi. 11.

and fire came down out of heaven,] (Omit the words "from God," see vv. 11.; and cf. ch. xxi. 2). This feature of the Vision is also taken from Ezek. xxxviii. 22; xxxix. 6. On fire as the instrument of Divine punishment, see Gen. xix. 24; Lev. x. 2; Num. xvi. 35; 2 Kings i. 10; Luke ix. 54.

10. And the devil that deceived them] Dürstend. thinks that emphasis should be laid on the present participle here, "that deceiveth them," in order to mark the continuous and peculiar agency of Satan:—see vv. 2, 3.

was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone.] See Matt. xxv. 41; and also the words "Art Thou come hither to torment us before the time,"—Matt. viii. 29.

This, according to Bengel, is the fourth stage of Satan's punishment,"—see on ver. 3.

and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

12 And I saw the dead, small and where are both the beast and the false prophet;] As stated in ch. xix. 20. On the addition of "both," see vv. 11.

It has been suggested that this casting of the Devil—"the Prince of the power of the air" (Eph. ii. 2)—into the "Lake of Fire" after the Beast and the "False Prophet," is implied in the pouring out the seventh "Vial" "upon the air" (ch. xvi. 17). The conflict at Armageddon, however, was under the sixth "Vial" (ch. xvi. 16); and consequently the conflict here is not the same.

and they shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.] See on ch. i. 6. The eternal torment:—cf. ch. xiv. 11; and also ch. xix. 3; Matt. xxv. 46; Mark ix. 48; Isai. lxvi. 24.

The Three great Enemies of God's Kingdom have now disappeared.

THE UNIVERSAL JUDGMENT (11—15).

A new Vision begins here,—the Last, and Universal Judgment of "all that are in the graves," described by our Lord in John v. 28, 29. See above on ver. 5.

Hengst. would see here the final decision as to those only who had submitted to the influence of the Three Enemies of God's Kingdom,—ver. 11 referring to the irrational Creation, and vv. 12—15 to mankind. According to Ebrard, there are on earth, at this crisis, only the glorified Saints who reign with Christ during the Millennium: all the other inhabitants of earth had perished (see ver. 9); and now comes the "Second Resurrection," viz. of those who had never heard Christ's name, as well as of those who, having heard, were positively unbelieving (ch. xix. 21). There must be a "docta ignorantia," he concludes, as to unbelievers who have been converted and who have died during the Millennium; we are only told that they are among those who are to be "judged according to their works" (vv. 12, 13):—believers, he adds, are not judged, John v. 24. The conclusion is yet more dogmatic of those who hold the doctrine of "the Pre-millennial Advent," as a writer quoted by Dr. Brown (l.c., p. 196) states it: "All the dead whose names were in the Book of Life will have been raised a 1000 years before this, and not one shall perish or be again judged; while all the dead will be raised afterwards to a Judgment at which no one shall be saved." A strange conclusion indeed in the face of such a picture as that given in Matt. xxv. 31—46.

11. And I saw] Cf. vv. 1, 4,—and also ch. xix. 1, 6 ("I heard"); and ch. xix. 11, 17, 19 ("I saw"),—introducing the new Vision. See on ch. iv. 1.

a great white throne.] This is the true order, as in the Greek (see vv. 11):—the A. V. changed the order of the Textus Receptus "Great" as compared with the thrones of ver. 4; "white" (cf. the "white cloud," ch. xiv. 14) as being the colour of heaven, see on ch. ii. 17:—"The great white throne is equivalent to the throne of glory of Matt. xxv. 31, for light at the utmost intensity is white; from this, too, we may further explain Dan. vii. 9; Rev. i. 14,"—Trench, Studies in the Gospels, p. 194.

and him that sat on it.] Clearly the Person referred to in Matt. xxv. 31; John v. 22; Rom. xiv. 10; 2 Cor. v. 10—namely "The Son of Man," Christ, He Who is the Source of the New Creation (ch. xxi. 5). The true reading in ver. 12, "before the throne" is also to be noted:—the sense of this passage being expressed in the words of the Te Deum, "We believe that Thou shalt come to be our Judge."

According to Hengst., "God in the Undivided Unity of His Being;" "not the Father in fellowship with Christ,"—see ch. iii. 21; vii. 17; xxii. 1; and so Züllig. De Wette, Düsterd., Alford, and Bisping conclude that it is "God the Father," ch. i. 8; iv. 2; cf. Dan. vii. 9.

from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away;] Cf. ch. xvi. 20. Not from one locality to another, but so that "there was found," &c.

and there was found no place for them.] See ch. xxi. 1:—The present earth and the present heaven give place to the "New Heaven and the New Earth."

On the scene here referred to, cf. 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10—12. The old world disappears, notes Burger, through the fiat of that Omnipotence which at the first called all things into existence (Heb. xi. 3).

12. And I saw] Another scene now opens (see on ver. 11) continuing the preceding Vision.

great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another ch. 3. 5. ^bbook was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

the dead, the great and the small.] (See vv. 11.). The Seer now beholds those of "the dead" who had been raised from their graves as ver. 13 describes. This is clearly a description of the General Resurrection—see John v. 28. That we have here an exhaustive specification of the human race—of all who have ever lived, the just and the unjust—is plain from ch. xi. 18; xix. 5.

Hengst. argues that "the dead can only be the ungodly dead"—"the dead" being understood of those who are spiritually dead (Matt. viii. 22) according to John v. 24; viii. 51;—Bengel understands those who survive the Lord's "Parusia";—Alf. and Bisping see here "the rest of the dead" of ver. 5; i.e., the (assumed) Second Resurrection is now described, of all "the great and the small" who had not part in the "First Resurrection" (cf. ch. xi. 18). "If 'the dead great and small,'" observes Dr. David Brown (l. c., p. 198), mean merely 'the rest of the dead,' seven verses before, "why was not the same expression retained, or at least an equivalent expression, looping one clause with another at some distance from it"—as in ch. v. 10 compared with ch. xx. 4; or ch. vii. 15–17 with ch. xxi. 3, 4; or ch. xiv. 11 with ch. xix. 3, 20; &c., &c.?

standing before the throne.] See vv. 11. The codex of Erasmus follows Andreas in reading "before God":—Cf. Rom. xiv. 10, and see on ver. 11.

These words are related to ver. 13 where it is told whence "the dead" have come, just as ch. xv. 1 is related to ch. xv. 6.

and books were opened.] This feature of the Vision is borrowed from Dan. vii. 10. We have here, notes Ebrard, "a symbolical representation of the Divine Omniscience."

Observe, not "the books" as below, but "books" indefinitely, such as are spoken of throughout Scripture as the register of all human actions—Ps. lvi. 8; Isai. lxxv. 6; Mal. iii. 16; cf. Deut. xxxii. 34. See Matt. xii. 37.

St. Augustine explains the "books" as a symbol of the "Divine memory" (De Civ. Dei, xx. 14):—"Illi libri quos priore loco posuit, intelligendi sunt sancti et veteres et novi, ut in illis ostenderetur quæ Deus fieri sua mandata jussisset: in illo autem qui est vitæ uniuscujusque, quid horum quisque non fecisset sive fecisset. Qui liber si carnaliter cogitetur, quis ejus magnitudinem valeat æstimare? Non ergo unus liber erit omnium, sed singuli singulorum. . . . Quædam igitur vis est intelligenda divina; qua fiet ut cuique opera sua in memoriam revocentur. . . . Quæ vis Divini libri nomen accepit?]. Beda who, on the whole, copies St. Augustine here, sees a reference to the Old and the New Testaments, according to which men, under both dispensations, are to be judged.

and another book was opened.] These words seem to point to "the Manifestation (or rather "the Revealing") of the sons of God,"—to "the redemption of our body," spoken of in Rom. viii. 19, 23,—to the literal Resurrection to glory of the Saints, as distinguished from their spiritual Resurrection in this life, described in ver. 5; see also ver. 15. All the dead are judged (see below) out of "the books"; the names of the Redeemed alone are inscribed in "the Book of Life."

which is [the book] of life.] See ch. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xvii. 8; xxi. 27; and compare Ps. lxix. 28; Dan. xii. 1; Luke x. 20; Phil. iv. 3; cf. Ex. xxxii. 32; Ezek. xiii. 9.

Beda notes that the reprobate are self-condemned, as they now read of the good which they might themselves have done. This may be part of the "judging" ascribed to the Saints in ver. 4, when "judgment was given unto them" (l. Williams).

and the dead were judged.] All the dead: "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of GOD."—Rom. xiv. 10. On the part to be taken by the Saints in this judgment of the human race, see on ver. 4.

out of the things which were written in the books.] We have here the article omitted above—"the books," in which all human actions are inscribed.

Alford does not really differ from Dusterd., when he takes "the books" to be "vouchers for the book of life;"—Hengst. takes "the books" to be "those of guilt, condemnation, death." . . . "A name cannot be written both in the books, and in the Book of the Lamb:" the single 'book' in this phrase denotes either that few are saved, or that the Book of Life contains simply the names; while "the books" contain the long array of their evil deeds";—Bisping makes "the books" to contain a record of words and deeds, disclosing the characters of all; while "the Book of Life" gives to those inscribed in it the right to be received into eternal bliss.

according to their works.] The constant

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

1 Or, the grave.

14 And death and hell were cast doctrine of Scripture—see e.g. Rom. ii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 10; Gal. vi. 7; Col. iii. 24, 25; and especially of this Book,—cf. ch. ii. 2, 5, 19; iii. 1, 8, 15.

13. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it:] On the imagery which the “Sea” has suggested throughout the Apocalypse, see the remarks of Dean Stanley as quoted in the Introduction, § 4. It is scarcely possible to understand in this verse the literal, physical sea. To do so would be to interpret contrary to the analogy of the whole Book. But if the “Sea” is symbolical here, of what is it the symbol? Are we to say, with Hengst., that “the sea can only be referred to in this place as the receptacle of the lost dead?” or, with Ebrard, are we to explain: “All who have died in the heathen-world, so far as that world has not been reached by the preaching of the Gospel; and who, therefore, could not commit the sin of positive unbelief?” Both senses are unsatisfactory. The terms “Death and Hades” are sufficiently comprehensive to include all who had ceased to live before this hour of Judgment; and thus we are constrained by the context itself to understand “the dead” in this place to mean those who are spiritually dead,—those who, as St. Paul teaches (Eph. ii. 1), “were dead (νεκροί) through their trespasses and sins,” and who are to be found among the living nations of the earth when the Lord returns “to be our JUDGE.” See Intro., § 10, (b) on ch. vii. 1–3. The living must, surely, be included here. Compare also the condition of the New Heaven and the New Earth as described in ch. xxi. 1: “And the Sea is no more.”

As examples of the literal interpretation, Stuart writes:—“Not only those who have been buried beneath the earth, in the proper domains of Death and Hades, but all who have perished and are buried in the ocean, will be raised to life;”—and Bishop Horsley (Sermon on 1 Pet. iii. 18–20) suggests that not the comparatively few who perished by shipwreck are referred to here, but “the myriads who perished in the general Deluge, and found their tomb in the waters of that raging ocean.”

In order to account for this separate mention of the “Sea,” writers (after Wetstein), quote words of Achilles Tatius (v. p. 313), which describe the souls of those whose bodies lie in the sea as not going to Hades, but as continuing to wander about the waters.

and death and hell gave up the dead which were in them:] (See vo. II.). On the similar conjunction of “Death and Hell” (or “Hades”—the receptacle of the dead) see on ch. i. 18; vi. 8.

All living and dead shall stand before the JUDGE,—1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. And so St. Augustine explains (l. c., c. 15). He understands by “the Sea giving up its dead,” the existing world exhibiting those who had not yet died;—by “Death giving up its dead,” its giving up the good “qui tantummodo mortem perpeti potuerunt, non et infernum:”—by “Hell giving up its dead,” its giving up the wicked “qui etiam poenas apud inferos pendunt.” and they were judged each one according to their works.] The words of ver. 12, here repeated, are ever the burden of the Judgment.

14. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire.] “Death, and Hell” (“Hades”) the follower of death, represented locally in ver. 13 and in ch. i. 18, are here personified as in ch. vi. 8. St. Augustine (ibid.) takes “Death and Hell” to signify the Devil whose punishment was stated more literally in ver. 10. St. Paul had announced, “The last enemy that is destroyed is death” (1 Cor. xv. 26); and here, with “Hell” or “Hades” its companion, “Death,” the product of sin, receives the punishment of sin. Their destruction is the guarantee of the life of the blessed,—ch. xxi. 4.

It is to be noted that, according to Christ’s words, “Hades” includes both Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43) and Gehenna (Luke xii. 5),—“Abraham’s bosom,” and the state of “torment” of “anguish,” of “anguish in flame” (Luke xvi. 22–28). Here “Hades,” without any distinction between the two regions,—although between them “there is a great gulf fixed” (Luke xvi. 26),—is “cast into the Lake of Fire.” Burger’s explanation is not to be disregarded:—Neither “Death,” nor the abode of the departed, “Hades,” has place any longer in the New Creation. “Death” and in its train the abode of the dead belong to the present Creation. In the New, which God will restore, “Death” ceases, and consequently “Hades” has nothing more to do. There is no personification intended here: the things themselves, called “Death” and “Hades,” no longer exist. Nevertheless the question remains, Why should “Paradise”—“Abraham’s bosom”—be cast “into ‘the Lake of Fire’?”

into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

This is the second death, [even] the lake of fire.] See vv. 11. The apposition of the two clauses, as now to be read, denotes that "the second death" (see ver. 6; ch. ii. 11; and cf. on ch. ii. 7), which is followed by no Resurrection, consists in the being cast into "the Lake of Fire,"—see ch. xxi. 8. In other words, "Death" and "Hell," being here personified, will be treated like the two Beasts and Satan, ver. 10; ch. xix. 20. All the misery and condemnation which accompanied them as "the wages of sin," is now cast into "the Lake of Fire," the abode of the condemned. Their destruction points onwards to the bliss of the Redeemed, in ch. xxi. 4.

Ebrard understands "Death and 'Hades'" "in the concrete," viz., the men—positive unbelievers—who are there found and judged and condemned "according to their works;" he adds,—"Of the dead in the 'Sea' nothing express is said"; and he regards this silence as a confirmation of his interpretation of the "Sea"—viz. that class of the dead which consisted of those among the heathen who had either never heard of Christ; or who had been converted during the Millennium:—see on ver. 13. He applies ver. 15 to explain "how it will fare with the heathen who die in ignorance." How such persons are saved "we find in ch. xxii. 2, where we read of 'the healing of the nations,'"—cf. Acts x. 35.

15. And if any was not found written in the book of life,] See on ver. 12; and also the remarks on ver. 6, as to those who shall be released from "the second death."

Ebrard (see on ver. 14) applies this verse to the heathen who had never heard of Christ. Hengst. observes: "In ver. 14 the final hell is, as it were, erected; here it receives its wretched inhabitants."—John xv. 6.

he was cast into the lake of fire.] In this verse, the doom of unbelievers is described; and "the Judgment of condemnation" is ended, in order to introduce, for the comfort and encouragement of believers, the picture of eternal happiness which now occupies the rest of the Book.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XX.

NOTE A ON VER. 2—THE MILLENNIUM.

I. The principles of Millenarianism were borrowed by the first generations of Christians from Jewish theology (see the Excursus). They rest on the literal interpretation of the two phrases—a "Thousand Years," and the "First Resurrection." Babylon, it is said, having fallen (ch. xviii.), and judgment having overtaken the Beast and the "False Prophet," together with "the kings of the earth and their armies" (ch. xix. 19–21), there immediately follows a preliminary judgment on Satan himself, previous to his final judgment. Upon this, he is bound for the literal period of a "Thousand Years" (ver. 2), during which the "First Resurrection" (ver. 5) takes place. That is to say, a literal Resurrection from the dead takes place,—either of all "the dead in Christ" (1 Thess. iv. 16), all "that are Christ's at His Coming" (1 Cor. xv. 23); or, at the beginning of the Millennium, of those only who had suffered for Christ in preceding times, and then—"each in his own order" (1 Cor. xv. 23)—of the rest of the righteous who had not obeyed the Beast (so Mede, p. 572). After this follows, during the Millennium, the reign of the Saints, on earth, with Christ, Who is to exercise there in Person

His sovereignty, from Jerusalem as the centre, and by means of the revived theocracy and kingdom of Israel (so De Burgh, p. 359, and others). Mede, however, while he considers that the Saints are to reign on earth with Christ during the Millennium (p. 573), yet is careful to add that he does not dare to imagine (as some of the Ancients did) that Christ will Himself reign on earth. His is ever "Regnum Cælorum" (p. 603). Throughout this Millennial age, nevertheless, of perfect felicity, besides the Saints who reign with Christ and judge the world, there still exist nations on earth (ver. 8), "who during the binding of Satan have been quiet and willing subjects of the Kingdom" (Alf.);—or (as others more naturally explain) who are avowed enemies of the kingdom, or, at least, who are still unconverted. To these, countless "as the sand of the sea" (ver. 8), Satan, "loosed out of his prison" when "the Thousand Years are finished" (ver. 7), before the end, and before his final overthrow, turns with all his powers of seduction, and leads them to assail the Saints (ver. 9). Hence, we are told, it follows that the risen Saints are to dwell in the earthly Jerusalem, where they are to be assailed by hosts of heathen nations still living on earth; and this, although all the inhabitants of the earth—the enemies of God, and adherents of the Beast and “False Prophet”—had already been slain: see ch. xix. 21. Such a result leads Düsterd. to understand this “apocalyptic drama” to be a purely “ideal representation” of a long series of events occurring on the Day of the Lord’s Coming, comprising the general Resurrection and the Last Judgment; “no special period of time” being signified by the Millennial reign, for “a thousand years in God’s sight are but as yesterday.”—Ps. xc. 4.

Auberlen—here following Piscator (A.D. 1627), Petersen, Joachim, Lange, Hebart (see Semisch, art. Chiliasmus, in Herzog’s Real-Encycl.)—meets this objection by supposing that the whole congregation of believers who have died in Christ are to be clothed, at the “First Resurrection” (ver. 5), with their glorified bodies, whereby they are rendered visible to earth, and are manifested together with Him; while living believers, freed from everything earthly, are to be caught up to meet the returning Lord in the air (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17). The Elect, thus gathered together by the Angels (Matt. xxiv. 31; xiii. 43), “live and reign with Christ a Thousand Years” (ver. 4). It is from heaven, however, that the Saints exercise their rule; for earth, not yet renewed, is not suited for the glorified Church (p. 334). At the beginning of the Millennium the state of the world will be what it was at the date of Christ’s Ascension,—Israel and the Gentiles, who still remain on the earth (see on ch. xix. 21), opposing the Church, but being gradually converted by the influence of the Church in glory, and by the sight of the judgments on Satan and his adherents (ch. xix. 11–xx. 2). From the religious point of view, in their relation to God, Gentiles and Jews stand on a perfect equality; from the stand-point of the history of Revelation, however, Israel is, and ever shall be the chosen people through whom God’s designs are executed:—Ex. iv. 22; xix. 5, 6; Rom. xi. 21–24 (p. 343). The Last Times shall prepare a thorough change of heart in the people of Israel; and to this change of heart the Lord’s words in Matt. xxiii. 39 clearly point (p. 347). In the Millennium Jews and Gentiles are united; and thus, the whole human race becoming one, the full and true life of humanity is at last realized—Rom. xi. 30–32. Still, during the “Thousand Years,” there is a separation between earth and heaven—between humanity glorified and humanity still living in the flesh. Hence it is possible that an apostasy should take place at the end of the Millennial period (p. 356).

In this description we recognize many features of the older Chiliasm. This system assumes that there are to be two future Advents of Christ, of which the former is to be preparatory:—the texts relied upon are John xxi. 21–24; Acts i. 10, 11. In accordance with Zech. xiv. 4, Christ is to descend on Mount Olivet, whence He had ascended to heaven:—there the Chiliast expects the former of the two Advents to take place; and there Antichrist is to meet his final overthrow. The Jews are now to be converted as a nation (Zech. xii. 9, 10; Luke xiii. 34, 35; Rom. xi. 25–27; 2 Cor. iii. 13–16), and the Kingdom restored to Israel (Jer. xxxiii. 17, 20, 21; Luke i. 32, 33; xxi. 24)—the kingdom consisting of Jews and Gentiles, with Christ as the Head (Matt. xix. 28; xx. 23; 1 Cor. vi. 1–4).

Vitringa contented himself with explaining the Millennium to signify “a long time, not less than a Thousand Years” (p. 853); and with placing its beginning in those times when the empire of the Beast is to terminate,—the Millennium itself being a figure of that long duration of the Church’s peace, and happy condition on this earth, of which the emblem is that silence of “half-an-hour” in heaven, under the Seventh Seal—ch. viii. 1 (p. 844). And Bengel represents as the chief excellence of his apocalyptic system that, following Vitringa, he had “restored the old, true order,—Antichrist, Millennium, End of the world” (l. c., pp. 661–675).

On the doctrine of “Pre-millennarians” who distinguish between “those Christians whom they style the Bride, and the rest of the Saved”—see Dr. David Brown (l. c., p. 91) who, in illustration of this doctrine, quotes as follows: “This elect body,” says Mr. Bonar, “of believers before the Millennium is the Bride, and shall be complete at the Lord’s coming. Not one other shall be added to this body after the Lord’s coming—not one” (P. 123). See Note A on ch. xix. 11.

II. According to the second system of interpretation,—of which St. Augustine is the ablest exponent (De Civ. Dei, xx., 7, &c.).—Christ had gone forth, in the first Seal “conquering and to conquer” (ch. vi. 12). Foes, however, are still to be encountered as the other Seals and the Trumpets and the Vials describe. The Church is to be ever militant on earth; a form of Antichrist is to continue until the end; and although the agents of the evil one are at length overcome (ch. xix. 20), Satan himself still remains undestroyed. Has Christ, then, not conquered? In order to answer this question, the Seer now re-ascends (“recapitulando quid in istis mille annis agat Ecclesia”—St. August., l. c., xx. 9) to the beginning, and recounts the work of Christ at His First Advent, and what He still continues to do. Christ was the Woman’s promised Seed Who bruised the Serpent’s head (Gen. iii. 15). This, the first promise in the Bible, was fulfilled by the Incarnation, when "the Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil" (1 John iii. 8). At His First Advent Christ declared: "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the Kingdom of God is come unto you. Or else, how can one enter into the strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man?" (Matt. xii. 28, 29). St. John, accordingly, now explains (ver. 2) that Christ had already "laid hold on the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years." From the date of the First Advent, therefore, the "Thousand Years"—symbolizing a great but indefinite period of time—take their beginning ("mille annos pro omnibus annis hujus seculi posuit, ut perfectio numero notaretur ipsa plenitudo temporis"—St. August., l.c., c. 7). During this period the power of Satan is restrained, and the opposing power of the "First Resurrection"—the spiritual Resurrection of the soul, "the death unto sin, the new birth unto righteousness"—is the strength and support of the Church. Again:—The Church being always in conflict with the powers of evil (for Satan has been "bound" merely, not destroyed); and these powers manifesting themselves, with ever renewed intensity at successive periods of history, St. Paul has announced that before the end of all things "that Wicked shall be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the breath of His mouth, and destroy with the brightness of His Coming" (2 Thess. ii. 8):—a time which Christ Himself foreshadowed when He said: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"—Luke xviii. 8.

This interpretation of vv. 1-6 assumes that the two phrases, a "Thousand Years" (ver. 2), and the "First Resurrection" (ver. 5), are to be understood figuratively, in accordance with the general character of the Apocalypse (see Introd. § 10). In ver. 7 St. John resumes the course of his narrative, and recounts once more what he had already told, in ch. xix. 11-21, of the last conflict of the Church with the hosts of Antichrist. This conflict is now followed by the absolute destruction of the powers of evil (ver. 10). Then comes the Universal Judgment (vv. 11-15).

An interpretation has also been proposed which is founded on the symbolical meaning of the number Ten (1000=10³). This number, as stated in the Introduction (§ 11, (a)), signifies completeness and perfection. The number 1000, it is said, denotes here merely the perfection and universality (Ecumenicität) of the victory of Christ over Antichrist; and the "Thousand Years" are not intended to represent any space of time. The passage (vv. 1-10) is inserted between ch. xix. 21 and ch. xx. 11 only in order to separate the destruction of the Beast—together with the overthrow of Gog and Magog—from the Last Judgment, so that each of these events, according to its importance, may appear in its true light. It is plain, however, that this manner of giving a symbolical signification to the words, does not bring out the sense of this mysterious Episode.

The majority of Millennarians place this period of the Church's felicity altogether in the future. Many, especially in ancient times, in accordance with Jewish theology, understand the Millennium to be the seventh "Thousand Years" of the world; and thus the world's Sabbath (Gen. ii. 2, 3). On this aspect of the doctrine, see Gibbon, ch. xv. Hofmann, however, understands not the seventh Thousand Years, "but the eighth,—the "Day" of the Lord, at the beginning of which the Church has risen again" (ii. s. 373). Bengel finds here two periods of a thousand years (see on ver. 3):—the former of which or third stage of Satan's punishment (see on ch. xii. 12) begins A.D. 1836 with the destruction of the Beast (ch. xix. 20), and the binding of Satan; the latter begins, A.D. 2836, after the reign of the Saints on earth, and when Satan is loosed (ver. 7). It is closed A.D. 3836, immediately before the end of the world—ver. 11. (This twofold Millennium had been already taught by St. Barnabas—see the Excursus at the end of this Note). Ebrard explaining the number mystically regards the interval between Christ's Ascension and His Second Advent as the "half-week" (3½ years); and the duration of His visible rule in His Kingdom on earth as a "Thousand Years," or twenty Jubilee periods of fifty years (Lev. xxv. 10). The age accordingly in which we now live—the period of the ecclesia pressa et militans—is insignificant when compared with the duration of the visible glory of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

Others place the Millennium in the past:—E. g. Bossuet understands the first "Thousand Years" of the Christian Era;—Brightman, Cocceius, Grotius, Hammond, see the beginning of the "Thousand Years" in the time of Constantine the Great, and its end under Lewis the Bavarian (A.D. 1313-1347), the last opponent of the Popes;—Others—e. g. Luther, count this period down to Pope Gregory VII. (A.D. 1073-1085), in whom they recognize Satan let loose;—We have the "Thousand Years" reign behind us, writes Hengst. (ii. p. 285), and stand now at the loosing of Satan out of his prison (ver. 7): the Millennium counts from Christmas Eve, A.D. 800, the coronation of Charles the Great—under whom the German Tribes were converted to Christ and the Christian Empire of the West founded—down to the reign of Napoleon (Apollyon).—ib., p. 304.

From the rationalistic point of view, Wetstein concluded that the Apocalypse described prophetically the Jewish war—the duration of which he restricted to the “three and a half years” (1260 days);—“Ita tamen ut quæ cum illis connexa sunt, paulo altius repetat, subjungatque quæ non diu postea consecuta.” He did not shrink from reducing the “Thousand Years” to the fifty years from the death of Domitian to the Jewish war under Hadrian. Gog and Magog he found in the revolt under Barchochab. The Heavenly Jerusalem, in the happy state of Christianity, and the spread of the Gospel after the complete suppression of the Jewish nationality.

Volkmar appeals to “the day of the Lord’s vengeance,”—“the year of recompenses;”—“the day of vengeance,”—“the year of my redemption” in Isai. xxxiv. 8; lxiii. 4; where the “Day” and the “Year” are identical, according to Ps. xc. 4. Hence, “the day of vengeance”—“the year” of the first triumph of Christianity after Nero’s death—extends, in God’s sight, to a 1000 years. Thus the day of an imperial triumph used to extend to several days—under Trajan to 120; and accordingly here “the day” of triumph extends to 365 × 1000. Reuss sees here an exact expression of the “Judæo-Christian Eschatology” of the age, the first rudiments of which true Christians must leave behind (Heb. vi. 2): to this popular belief the Apocalypse adds “the double Resurrection, and a Millennial era between the two.” This theory ingeniously combines the conflicting systems taught by the Jewish doctors—the political element in the ancient hopes of Israel, and the religious element (ch. ii. 27; xii. 5; xix. 15; Acts i. 6; ii. 30); and assures to the Martyrs privileges above all others. Such a doctrine, adds Reuss, “needed to be counteracted by all the force of the spiritualistic reaction which had its root in the Pauline Gospel, and its scientific basis in the Alexandrine School” (p. 366). Renan contents himself with referring to his theory that the Beast cast into the “Lake of Fire” (ch. xix. 20) is Nero, the Antichrist; adding that Satan still remains chained during the “Thousand Years” (p. 445).

EXCURSUS ON THE MILLENNIUM.

It is of some importance to trace the early history of the doctrine of the Millennium (“mille anni”), or Chiliasm (χιλία ἐτη), or the “Thousand-years’ reign of the Saints with Christ,” inasmuch as the consensus of the Primitive Church is the stronghold of Millenarianism. Dean Alford, for example, writes on Rev. xx. 5: “Those who lived next to the Apostles, and the whole Church for 300 years, understood them [the ‘Thousand Years’] in the plain literal sense.” It is necessary, therefore, to examine the facts.

The expectation of an order of things entirely new founded on the language of Messianic prophecy, however misapplied, lay at the root of every form of Chiliasm among the Jews. It was the same hope of a renovated earth, prompted by the instinctive longing—may we not say the memory?—of the human soul, which suggested even to those outside the pale of Revelation, in the picture of a world from which the curse had been withdrawn, the Vision of a second “Golden Age.” The history of human thought proves that the fact has ever been acknowledged of “a primal perfection, of a present disorder.”¹ The old poet of Greece,² though fully conscious of the tokens of suffering and decay which darkened the face of nature, seeks to bridge over the chasm between the gods and degenerate man by the supposition of previous races, each more degenerate than its predecessor, during the five Ages from the Golden Age in the past to the existing Age of Iron:—the first Age, altogether pure, when good, perfect, and happy men lived from the spontaneous abundance of the earth, in ease and tranquillity like the gods themselves. The later verse of Virgil in the West testifies how the return of this Golden Age was the goal and the ideal of human hope.³ And as if to remove all shade of difference between the expectations of the Gentile world and the Jewish anticipations of Millennial enjoyment, the same period of a “Thousand Years”—which St. John has here taken as the symbol of a sacred period—again and again recurs in the religious speculations of the heathen. In the Phædrus of Plato we read how the soul of the true philosopher is excused from seven of the Ten Millennial probations through which the rest of mankind have to pass; while in the Republic is given an account of the allotment and selection of the second life at the close of this period of a “Thousand Years,”⁴ this same duration being assigned

¹ “Hi qui spirituales sunt istos ista credentes χιλιετας appellat Græco vocabulo: quod verbum e verbo exprimentes nos possumus Milliaris nuncupare.”—St. August., De Civit. Dei, xx. 7.

² See Trench’s Hulsean Lectures, p. 231.

³ Hesiod, Opp. et Dies, 120, &c.

⁴ “Tu modo nascenti puero, quod ferrea primum Desinet, ac toto surget gens aurea mundo,”
&c. Eclog. iv.

⁵ “Ten thousand years (ὅσον ἀφικνεῖται ἐτην

by Virgil for the purification after death from the stain of sin:—

"Has omnes, ubi mille rotam volvere per annos, Lethæum ad fluvium Deus evocat agmine magno," &c. Æn. vi., 749.

According to Jewish theology, as collected from the Talmud, Messiah is to gather in from the Dispersion all the scattered descendants of the Tribes, to discomfit their foreign oppressors, and from Jerusalem as a centre to rule over the whole earth which is to be a scene of temporal enjoyment and prosperity. Even the doctrine of the Resurrection was harmonized with the exclusive nationality of the children of Abraham. Of the chosen race, if not all, at least the more virtuous are to be summoned from Paradise, from the abode of departed spirits; and under their triumphant King are to enjoy for a "Thousand Years" glory and bliss upon the earth:—see Wisd. iii. 1-8. Here comes in another feature of Jewish Theology:—Lücke (l. c., s. 309 ff.) considers that Chilistic conceptions appeared among the Jews, in the times before Christ, as soon as they began to distinguish between the temporal and the eternal kingdom of Messiah; or rather the "days" of Messiah's appearance (ἡμέραι τ. υἱοῦ τ. ἀνθρώπου, Luke xvii. 22), and μυρίων) must elapse before the soul can return to the place from whence she came, for she cannot grow her wings in less; only the soul of a philosopher, guileless and true... may acquire wings in the third recurring period of a thousand years (τρίτη περίοδος τῇ χίλιετεί); and if they choose this life three times in succession, then they have their wings given them, and go away at the end of three thousand years"—Phadrus, 249 (Jowett's transl. vol. i. p. 583). See also on the source of this period of 1000 years Dr. Thompson's note, Biblioth. Classica, p. 54.

The choice of lives (ἀπαρσι βίων), which takes place at the end of each Millennial period (τῇ χίλιεστῇ), is described circumstantially in the Republic. The slain warrior who has returned to life records in its pages his vision of the souls of those on whom judgment had passed:—Some sorrowed and wept at the remembrance of what they had endured beneath the earth during their journey of a thousand years; while others described heavenly blessings, and visions of inconceivable beauty. "For every wrong which they had done to any one they suffered tenfold; the 'thousand years' answering to the hundred years which are reckoned as the life of man."—De Republ. x. 615 (Jowett's transl. vol. ii. p. 458). And the conclusion is: "Wherefore my counsel is that we hold fast to the heavenly way, and follow after justice and virtue always. . . . And it shall be well with us both in this life and in the pilgrimage of 'a thousand years' (ἐν τῇ χίλιετεί πορείᾳ) which we have been reciting" (ἰδ., 621 p. 464).

the αἰὼν μύλλων—a distinction which does not appear in Messianic Prophecy. The "days" of Messiah form the epoch when the present world has its end, and the future has its beginning (see Züllig, l. c., i. s. 38, 43; Gfrörer, l. c., s. 212, 252). But how, it was asked, was the duration of this period to be determined according to Scripture? Some took as its type, according to Ps. xcv. 10, the "forty years" in the Wilderness;—others the "four hundred years" sojourn in Egypt, according to Gen. xv. 13;—others, again, took as their chronological type the "Week" of Creation, as Daniel (ix. 25) has done; and as the world was created in six days, and as a "Thousand Years" in God's sight are but as one day (Ps. xc. 4), so the duration of the world is the "Week" of Creation distributed through time—each "Day," or "Age" of this "Week" being equal to a "Thousand Years." As there was a Sabbath of Creation, moreover, which began after man was formed, so must there be a Divine Sabbath of the Messianic era of Salvation beginning as soon as the human race, restored to its primitive innocence, shall stand on the earth as Adam did in Paradise. Thus R. Salomon writes: "It is fixed that the world shall stand for 6000 years, according to the number of the days of the week; but on the seventh Day is the Sabbath, and during the seventh Millennium the world has rest."¹

All Jewish conceptions of a Millennial Kingdom of Messiah were reflected in the system of the Ebionites, and with the other errors of that system injuriously affected the early Church;² but this tenet of the later Judaism was conveyed more directly to the Christian community by the Epistle of St. Barnabas, where it is repeated almost literally.³ Here, however, in accordance with the essence of the Gospel, a condition of spiritual, blissful rest is described,—a restored harmony of Humanity, and a glorified state of Nature. Neither St. Barnabas, however, nor the Fathers who subsequently held this doctrine conceived that the 1000 years' reign was to be the end of all things, but merely a Millenary Sabbath,—a stage of transition to eternal life.⁴

¹ Talm., Avoda Sara, fol. 9, col. 1,—see Eisenmenger, Entd. Jud., ii. p. 652. See also Gfrörer, Das Jahrb. des Heils. 2tes Abth., Kap. x. s. 219, ff.

² Neander, Allg. Gesch. d. Kirche, i. s. 191.

³ Referring to the LXX. version of Gen. ii. 2, καὶ συνετέλεσεν ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ἑκτῇ κ. τ. λ., St. Barnabas (c. xv.) writes: τοῦτο λέγει ὅτι συνετέλει ὁ θεὸς κύριος ἐν ἑξακισχίλοις ἔτεσι τὰ πάντα· ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα παρ' αὐτῷ χίλια ἔτη.

⁴ Having further quoted Isai. i. 13, St. Barnabas (ibid.) concludes that, after the seventh Millennium of rest, an eighth day succeeds (ἀρχὴν ἡμέρας ὀγδόης ποιῆσαι, ὅ ἐστι, ἅλλου κόσμου

But there also passed over to the early Christians from the Jewish system a coarser belief embodying gross pictures of an earthly kingdom. The Christian conception naturally differed from the Jewish in this that it represented the Millennial reign as brought in by Jesus of Nazareth, and as including both Jews and Gentiles:—what was common to both was the period of blessedness on earth; and the selection of Jerusalem once more as the City of God.¹ That such a belief should, ἀρχῆν), foreshadowed by the day of the Lord's Resurrection, when all that is earthly is to cease, and a new and eternal world to begin. St. Augustine thus describes this opinion, as held in his day:—"Qui propter hæc hujus libri verba (Apoc. xx.) primam resurrectionem futuram suspicati sunt corporalem, inter cætera maxime numero annorum mille permoti sunt, tanquam oporteret in sanctis eo modo veluti tanti temporis fieri Sabbatismum, vacatione scilicet sancta post labores annorum sex millium ex quo creatus est homo . . . ut quoniam scriptum est [2 Pet. iii. 8] . . . sex annorum millibus tanquam sex diebus impletis, sequatur velut Sabbati septimus in annis mille postremis, ad hoc scilicet Sabbatum celebrandum resurgentibus sanctis."—De Civ. Dei, xx. 7.

¹ That immediate contact with the early Chiliasm literature of the Jews existed in the primitive Christian times, is manifest from the similarity between the statements of Papias and those of the "Apocalypse of Baruch":—see the Introduction, § 9, where the publication of this work by Ceriani is referred to. This Apocryphal writing has also been published by O. F. Fritzsche in his edition of the "Apocryphal books of the O. T." Leipzig, 1871, p. 654. Ceriani (l.c., t. i., fasc. 2, p. i.) observes of the "Apocalypse of Baruch": "Antiquissimis quidem ascenserem ex indole libri Judæo-Christiana, ex ejus cum quarto Esdræ arcta affinitate in pluribus, ac demum ex loco illo Papiæ insigni de Chiliasmo apud Irenæum, Contr. Hær. v. 33, collato cum nostro libro No. 29." Fritzsche also concludes as to the date: "Hæc Judæum non multo post Hierosolyma a Tito eversa conscripsisse manifestum est"—Pref. p. xxxii.

The remarkable coincidence of the Millenarianism of Papias with that of Jewish writers is thus shown:—"In Papiæ," continues Ceriani, "enim superadditur fabulosæ jam nostri narrationi, quod in hujusmodi rebus serius ætatis iudicium videtur." In chapter 22 Baruch is addressed by a voice from heaven, and Baruch in answer styles the speaker "Lord" (Dominator Domine). In ch. 24 the voice tells Baruch: "Ecce autem dies veniunt et aperientur libri, in quibus scripta sunt peccata omnium qui peccaverunt, et iterum etiam thesauri, in quibus iustitia eorum qui justificati sunt in creatura collecta est." A great "tribulation" is to fall on the inhabitants of the earth in the last days (ch. 25); and Baruch asks (ch. 28): "Utrum in uno loco, aut in una ex partibus terræ futura sunt ista, an tota terra sentiet?" And then for a time, have been popular in the early Church was altogether natural. Christ had declared it to be His mission to found a Kingdom; and never was the contrast between the Kingdom of God, and the kingdom of the world exhibited more forcibly than in the days when the first Christians lived. Then, as at all times, the Lord's Second Advent was looked for in the future—whether near or remote; and as the efforts of the heathen to crush out the Christian Faith grew more cruel, and persecution waxed more fierce, so did the early believers cherish more eagerly the hope of a speedy deliverance and of a rich reward. All was changed, however, as soon as the Christian Religion was recognized by the powers of this world. When the age of persecution passed away, Chiliasm ceased to form an element of the popular belief. It was only with the cessation of outward oppression, and still more with the growth of that new relation of the Church to the State under which men actually enjoyed the peace that had once seemed to be hopeless on earth, that the motives died out which prompted the longing for the

we read (ch. 29): "Respondit et dixit mihi: Totius erit terræ quod eveniet tunc. Propterea omnes qui vivent sentient. Illo autem tempore protegam tantum eos qui reperientur illis diebus in terra ista. Et erit postquam completum fuerit quod futurum est ut sit in illis partibus, tunc incipiet revelari Messias. Et revelabitur Behemoth ex loco suo, et Leviathan ascendet de mari, duo cete magna quæ creavi die quinto creationis, et reservavi eos usque ad illud tempus; et tunc erunt in escam omnibus qui residui fuerint. Etiam terra dabit fructus suos unum in decem millia, et in vite una erunt mille palmites, et unus palmes faciet mille botros, et botrus unus faciet mille acinos, et unus acinus faciet corum vini. Et qui esurierunt jucundabuntur," &c., &c. (p. 80).

The words of Papias ["De temporibus regni Domini"] quoted by Irenæus (Contr. Hær. v. 33, p. 333) are as follows:—

"Venient dies, in quibus vineæ nascentur, singulæ decem millia palmitum habentes, et in uno palmitē dena millia brachiorum, et in uno vero palmitē dena millia flagellorum, et in unoquoque flagello dena millia botrorum et in unoquoque botro dena millia acinorum, et unumquoque acinum expressum dabit vigintiquinque metretas vini. Et quum eorum apprehenderit aliquis sanctorum botrum, alius clamabit: 'Botrus ego melior sum, me sume, per me Dominum benedic.' " &c., &c. (ap. Routh, i. p. 9). Irenæus refers to this quotation in the words already cited, Introd. § 2 (a), No. (6); and he adds that, to the inquiry 'How can these things be?' Papias replied by referring to the days spoken of in Isai. xi. 6, &c.; lxv. 25. A literal and carnal interpretation of the ideal picture thus presented by Isaiah was clearly the source of the coarse Chiliasm of the Jewish school.

"Thousand Years" reign of believers with Christ.

There are four chief stages in the history of Chiliasm:—I. The earliest stage is that of the first four centuries, when the doctrine was both popular and earnestly insisted on by many distinguished Fathers of the Church;—II. Then came the period from St. Augustine to the Reformation;—III. In the age of the Reformation Chiliasm was revived among the enthusiastic and fanatical sects which then started into existence;—IV. And next followed the time from Joseph Mede, in Cent. xvii., down to the present day.

I. The same influences that moved the orthodox among the primitive Christians,—the tradition, namely, which had passed over to them from the Jews, as well as the gloomy aspect of the times,—acted upon the early heretics also: e.g. Cerinthus, the Ebionites,¹ Montanus.² Chiliasm, or the doctrine that the Saints were to reign with Christ on earth for the literal period of a Thousand Years, now became the common, although by no means the universal belief. With the exception of the Epistle of St. Barnabas, no trace of this doctrine is to be found in the writings of the other Apostolic Fathers.³ Athenagoras, Tatian, Theophilus of Antioch, Clemens Alex.⁴ are silent on the subject.

Justin M., who came next after Papias of Hierapolis as teacher of Millennarianism—ardent supporter though he was of this doctrine—expressly writes that "there are many Christians of pure and devout minds who do not admit this"—*Dial. c. Tryph. c. 80.*⁵

¹ For Cerinthus, see Euseb. iii. 28, vii. 25;—for the Ebionites, see St. Jerome, In Isai. lx. i; lvi. 20.

² For the Montanists, see Tertullian adv. Marc. iii. 24. Tertullian's words are: "Nam et confitemur in terra nobis regnum repromissum, sed ante cælum, sed alio statu, utpote post Resurrectionem in mille annos in Civitate Divini operis Hierusalem cælo delata." See also the writing of the presbyter Caius, against Proclus or Proculus (ap. Euseb. iii. 28) as well as the Test. xii. Patriarch. (Judah, c. 25; Benjamin, c. 10);—Evangel. Nicod. (II., c. iii. (xix.) 15);—Sibyll. Orac. ii. 27–31; iii. 743–784; v. 413, &c.; viii. 206, &c.

³ An echo of the doctrine has been thought to exist in Hermas, i. 3; iii. 8.

⁴ In Clemens Al. (Ex. Script. Proph. Eclogæ, c. 57, t. ii. p. 1004) we read:—οἱ γὰρ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων εἰς ἀγγέλους μεταστάντες, χίλια ἔτη μαθητεύονται ὑπὸ τῶν ἀγγέλων κ. τ. λ.

⁵ Trypho had taunted Justin M. with holding the doctrine that Jerusalem was to be restored, and that Christians were to lead a life of happiness in union with Christ, together with the Patriarchs and Prophets and the Jewish people. To this Justin replies: "Ὡσαύτως οὖν σοι καὶ πρότερον, ὅτι ἐγὼ μὲν καὶ ἄλλοι πολλοὶ ταῦτα φρονοῦμεν ὡς καὶ πάντες ἐπίστασθε τοῦτο γενησόμενον· [viz. that the doctrine of the Millennium owed its origin to the Jews, and was held by them] πολλοὺς δ' αὖ καὶ τῶν τῆς καθαρᾶς καὶ εὐσεβοῦς ὄντων Χριστιανῶν γνώμης τοῦτο μὴ γνωρίζειν, ἐσημανέ σοι (c. 80); and then he goes on to speak of the Gnostics.

The leading advocates of Millennarianism in the Early Church were,—Papias (ap. Eus. iii. 36, 39) who, as has been pointed out, borrowed from Jewish sources;—St. Irenæus¹ (v.

Mede in his Dissertation on this passage (Opp. p. 533) has suggested a rather startling emendation, which has given rise to some controversy. He would insert a negative, οὐ, in this clause, and read "of Christians that are [not] of pure and devout minds";—this, he argues is required by the context. In his edition of the "Dialogue with Trypho," Thirlby (in loc., p. 311) observes:—"Medus (quem sequitur Tillotsonus, Reg. Fidei, par. iii. sect. 9, p. 756 et seqq.) legit τῶν οὐ τῆς καθαρᾶς. Vehementer errant viri præclari." And similarly, in his ed. of the works of Justin, Otto (in loc., ii. p. 274) notes: "Dallæus (De pænis et satisf. human. p. 453, Amst. 1649), Münscherus (Handb. d. chr. Dogmengesch. ii. 455), alique recentiores (vid. Semisch, Justin der Märtyr., ii. p. 469) τῶν μὴ τῆς καθαρᾶς [legunt]. Sed Martyr, ut jam Thirlbius indicavit, aperte distinguit inter duas orthodoxorum partes." Döllinger, also referring to Münscher who would insert the negative, writes:—"Many moderns have entered into this view, and have inserted the particle μὴ in the text. But . . . St. Justin does not, as Münscher pretends, speak of only two classes of Christians—the Gnostics, who denied not only the Millennium but likewise the Resurrection of the flesh, and orthodox Christians who admitted both. He evidently distinguishes three classes: (1) those who believe with him in a future Resurrection, and in the Thousand Years' Kingdom;—(2) those true Christians who believed in the Resurrection, but not in the Millennium;—and (3) the Gnostics, who were in name Christians, but were in truth impious heretics, who blasphemed the God of Abraham, who denied the Resurrection of the flesh, and who did not, therefore, merit the name of Christians. He does not object to these last the rejection of the Millennium, as, in comparison with their fundamental errors, this was of no importance. . . . According to St. Justin, therefore, the belief in the Resurrection of the flesh, not in the Millennium, was a proof of true orthodoxy" (Hist. of the Church, Cox's transl., i. p. 196). "Although Justin," writes Möhler (Patrologie, s. 251), "favours Chiliasm, he will not represent it as a generally received dogma, but openly acknowledges that many other orthodox and pious Christians are not of this opinion."

¹ Irenæus notices three different stages which man passes through before he attains to the "Vision of God" (ὁδοὺς ἐλθεῖν σοι εἰς τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, Adv. Har. v. 31, 2); viz.: (1) The souls of the righteous, in happy converse with Christ, await the revival of their bodies;—(2) After the judgment of the wicked, follows the Resurrec-

34-36);—Tertullian, in his lost work De Spe Fidelium (see also Adv. Marc. iii. 24; De Resurr. Carn. c. 25; De Monogam. c. 10; De Spectac., c. ult.);—St. Cyprian, De Exhort. Mart., Præf. (on the authenticity of this work, see Smith's Biogr. Dict.);—St. Methodius, De Resurrect., lib. contr. Origen.; Conviv. x. Virgg. ix. 1 (ap. Galland. iii. p. 730);—Nepos (ap. Eus. vii. 24; St. Dionys. Al. i. 43);—Victorinus (ap. Routh, Rel. Sacr. iii. 458);—Lactantius, Inst. Div. vii. 14, 24. It is to be borne in mind, moreover, in confirmation of what has been noted as to St. Justin M., that in the writings of Tertullian before he became a Montanist, we find nothing to favour the doctrine of the Millennium. On the contrary, in "The Rules of faith" given by him (De Virg. Vel., c. i.; adv. Prax. c. 2; De Præscript. Her. c. 13), as well as by so decided a Chiliast as Irenæus (see Her. i. 10; iii. 4), no reference whatever is made to Chiliasm as a necessary article of belief. Nor should it be forgotten that Dionysius Alex., who resisted with success the teaching of Nepos (A.D. 255), speaks always respectfully of his opponent;—a fact which proves that Nepos did not hold the gross and carnal aspect of Millenarianism. This controversy, indeed, with Dionysius proves that, under its most favourable aspect, Millenarian doctrine was now, in the middle of Cent. iii., positively discountenanced in the Church.¹

It has been already apparent from the words of St. Justin M. quoted above, that

tion of the righteous, who will then reign with Christ on earth in the enjoyment of happiness, not excluding corporeal pleasure;—(3) The being taken up to enjoy "the Vision of God." To the earthly kingdom of Christ succeeds the great apostasy, and the rule of Antichrist—ib. v. c. 25-30.

¹ Gennadius of Marseilles (A.D. 459) thus sums up the opinions of the Millenarians of the fifth century:—"In Divinis repromissionibus nihil terrenum vel transitorium expectemus, sicut Meletiani sperant. Non nuptiarum copulam, sicut Cerinthus et Marcion delirant. Non quod ad cibum vel ad potum pertinet, sicut, Papia auctore, Irenæus, Tertullianus, et Lactantius, adiescunt. Neque per mille annos post resurrectionem regnum Christi in terra futurum, et sanctos cum illo in deliciis regnatos speremus, sicut Nepos docuit, primam justorum resurrectionem, et secundam impiorum : et inter has duas mortuorum resurrectiones, gentes ignorantes Deum in angulis terrarum in carne reservandas : quæ post mille annos regni in terra justorum, instigante diabolo, movendæ sint ad pugnam contra justos regnantes ; et Domino pro justis pugnante imbre igneo compescendas : atque ita mortuas, cum ceteris in impietate ante mortuis, ad æterna supplicia in incorruptibili carne resuscitandas" (ap. St. August., Opp. ed. Bened. t. viii., App. p. 78).

Chiliasm was not the universal belief of the primitive Church. So early as the year 196 an earnest opponent of the Millenarian doctrines was found in Caius, a Roman Presbyter, who, writing against the Montanist Proclus, declares that the "Thousand Years" Kingdom was a vain fable invented by the heretic Cerinthus (see Introd. § 5). Even thus early the tendencies to which Chiliasm gave an impulse,—as exhibited chiefly in the extravagances of the Montanists,—contributed to the growing opposition to this doctrine. It was from the Church of Alexandria, however, with its famous school of theology, that the most strenuous resistance to Millenarianism proceeded. Origen speaks in terms of strong condemnation respecting those who interpret Scripture in a Jewish sense. He was the first—so far as we know—who directly impugned the doctrine. He charges the Chiliasts with holding that "strangers should be given to them as ministers of their delights" (Isai. li. 3-5); with looking for "promises consisting in bodily pleasure and luxury;" &c.:—see his Sel. in Psal., vol. ii. p. 570; tom. xvii. in Matt. vol. iii. p. 827; Prolog. in Cantic., iii. p. 28; De Princip. II. xi. 2, where, in reply to the favourite references of Chiliasts (Matt. v. 6; xxvi. 29), he writes: "Multa alia ex scripturis exempla proferunt, quorum vim figuratiter intelligi debere non sentiunt."

Nepos of Arsinoe wrote in reply to Origen: and was in turn answered by St. Dionysius of Alex. (Introd. § 5). The last echo of Chiliasm, however, in the Eastern Church is given from the writings of the younger Apollinaris, the heresiarch (A.D. 370), who went so far in his Jewish sympathies as to teach that the Temple was to be rebuilt, and the entire Jewish worship to be restored—men still living, as they do now, but observing the Mosaic Law (ὅτι ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ ἀναστάσει χιλιονταετηρίδα τινὰ ἐπιτελοῦμεν). In support of this Millennial period he referred to Rev. xx.; which, nevertheless, as Apollinaris admits, "the greatest number and the pious" (οἱ πλείστοι καὶ εὐλαβεῖς) understand in a spiritual sense:—see Epiphan. Her. lxxvii. 26, t. i. p. 1031. See also St. Basil, who thus describes the opinion of Apollinaris,—"ἴσται δὲ αὐτῷ καὶ τὰ περὶ ἀναστάσεως, μυθικῶς συγκείμενα, μᾶλλον δὲ Ἰουδαϊκῶς" (Ep. 263, ed. Ben. t. iii. p. 406).

And thus we see that from an early period Chiliasm was neither held universally, nor imposed as an article of faith; while, as Apollinaris admits, it had almost died out in his day. So little is Dean Alford's assertion, already quoted, to be accepted—namely, that the whole Church, for 300 years after the Apostles believed in a literal Millennium; and so little true is Gibbon's sneer, that the doctrine of a life of enjoyment for 1000 years greatly accelerated the progress of Christianity (ch. xv.).

II. From the fourth century to the age of the Reformation, the interpretation of the "Thousand years" advocated by St. Augustine prevailed in the Church. At one time he was himself disposed to be a Chliast, in the strictly spiritual sense of the doctrine—"etiam nos hoc opinati fuimus aliquando" (l.c., xx. 7; see also his "Sermo 259, in die Dom. Octav. Pasch." c. 2), "Regnabit Dominus in terra cum sanctis suis," &c. (Opp., t. vii. pars 2). The spiritual sense he allows to be "tolerable" ("quæ opinio esset utnunquæ tolerabilis"); but of other aspects of the doctrine he writes: "Nullo modo ista possunt, nisi a carnalibus credi" (ib.). In this carnal sense Chliasm is reckoned among the heresies of the age by Philastrius (A.D. 380, Her. 106); and Stephanus Gobarus (A.D. 600) records the existence in his time of this carnal doctrine, without, however, expressing his own opinion.¹ The sentiments of St. Jerome may be inferred from his reference to the work of Dionysius of Alex., whom he describes as mocking at the fable of the "Thousand Years" ("irridens mille annorum fabulam,"—Comm. in Lai. Pref. in libr. 18^m. t. iv. p. 767). The existence of Millenarianism may for a time be traced in the Medieval belief that the world was to come to an end in the year 1000. Subsequently to this date various ideals of the Millennial kingdom were proposed—by the Mendicant Orders (A.D. 1200) as a return to Apostolic poverty;—by the Abbot Joachim (A.D. 1202) as a union of contemplation with the inspiration of love;—by Peter de Oliwa (A.D. 1297) as the more energetic action of the Holy Ghost.

III. With the Reformation Millenarianism entered on its third stage. In the Apocalypse many recognized a prophetic compendium of the history of the Church. In the supposed downfall of the Papacy, they saw sure tokens of the near return of the Lord. Among the wild imaginations of the time, the Anabaptists embraced Millenarianism in its grossest forms, and used this belief as a plea for lawlessness and crime. Hence the repudiation by both the Foreign and the English Reformers of this doctrine, which was expressly condemned in the original Articles of the Church of England: "They that go about to renew the fable of heretics called Millennarii, be repugnant to Holy Scripture, and cast themselves headlong into a Jewish dotage" (Art. xli.):—see also the Augsburg Confession, Art. 17; the Swiss Confession, Art. 11.

IV. During the sixteenth century no writer of repute defended Millenarianism; and the question was not revived till the learned Joseph Mede (A.D. 1627), in his Clavis Apocalyptica, introduced the subject once more into the field of controversy. The chief impulse however to the revival of this doctrine was given by Bengel in 1740; and the chief importance of Bengel's system, according to Auberlen (l.c., p. 373) "consists in this, that he brought to light again a truth of Scripture which had been misapprehended for nearly fifteen centuries, viz. the doctrine of the Millennial kingdom." According to Bengel's chronological system (see Introd. § 11, b., IV.) the former of the two periods of a "Thousand Years" which he assumed, was to begin in year 1836;—Jurieu placed the date of the Millennium in 1785;—Stilling in 1816;—Sander in 1847;—an anonymous writer (quoted by Ebrard in Herzog's Real-Encycl.) between 1879 and 1887. In early times the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus² had shortened this period to 500 years;—certain anonymous writers referred to by Philastrius (Her. 106) interpreting Isai. lxi. 2—ἐνανθὺν κυρίου δεκρόν—according to "the Year-day" theory, placed its beginning in the year 365;—and St. Hippolytus, apparently following "the Gospel of Nicodemus" (see below, note¹), placed it in A.D. 500.

Several modern Chliasts (e. g. Rothe, Ebrard, P. Lange) interpret merely as a symbolic prophetic number; and will fix nothing more nearly as to the duration of the Kingdom of Glory.

The tendency to Millenarianism lies deep

¹ That is to say 500 years before the end of the sixth Millennium from the Creation:—see Cooper's transl., c. iii. (xix.), p. 303. In this apocryphal "Gospel of Nicodemus" the Archangel Michael tells Seth that the Son of God is to come in 5500 years; and the High Priests tell Pilate that they had found this in a certain collection of writings (Bibliotheca) belonging to the first book of the Septuagint (in libro primo de Septuaginta). They add together the successive generations from the time "quo fecit Deus cælum et terram et primum hominem," and these together make up 5500 years: "Sicut invenimus scriptum in bibliotheca prænuntiasse Michael Archangelum ad tertium filium Adæ Seth in quinque et semis millibus annorum advenisse Christum Filium Dei."—Evangel. Nicodemi, P. ii., c. xii. (xxviii.): cf. c. i. (xvii.), "Descensus Christi ad Inferos," Latine A. (ed. Tischendorf, p. 391). Mr. B. H. Cooper (Apocryphal Gospels, Introd. p. c.) is inclined to believe that the Jews really possessed the collection (Bibliotheca) here spoken of.

² "Ὅτι πρότερον οἱ δίκαιοι ἀναστήσονται, καὶ σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντα τὰ ζῶα, καὶ ἐπὶ χίλια ἔτη τρυφήσουσι καὶ ἐσθλόντες καὶ πίνοντες, καὶ τεκνοῦντες, καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο ἡ καθολικὴ ἐπιστήσεται ἀνδράσιν. καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἐνανθίου, ὅτι τῶν δικαίων προανδράσιν οὐκ ἔστιν, οὐδὲ ἡ χιλιονταετὴς τρυφή, οὐδὲ ὁ γάμος.—ap. Photium, Codex 232.

in human nature. Man feels that he is himself weak; too utterly powerless in his own strength to win Paradise back again. It was the ingenuous creed of the heathen Greek or Roman that the restoration of the "Golden Age," when earth would be all fertility and bounty, and man all perfect and happy, could only proceed from the favour of the gods. It was the belief of the Jew that his expected Millennium of carnal enjoyment and worldly dominion was to be brought in by Messiah. Neither Jew nor Gentile dreamed that human efforts could remedy the evils of life. In our modern philosophy, however, 'Man,' or rather the abstraction 'Humanity,' is invested with the character of Godhead. Our new prophets speak of 'Man,' of his future, of his dignity. Civilization is merely the gradual evolution and successive attainment, so to speak, by mankind, of the Divine Nature. We are not indeed told precisely where this progress begins, or where it ends: but nevertheless, according to this doctrine earth alone remains for man; it is no longer his place of exile,—it is his only dwelling-place, his only country. To the ancient conceptions of a "Golden Age,"—or of an earthly Messianic reign,—or of a carnal triumph of Christianity,—has succeeded the kindred doctrine of the perfectibility of the human race. In short, worldly as well as religious speculation has its Millennial dream; inasmuch as it assumes that there is a goal of perfection to which mankind can attain within the present conditions of things. Many Chiliasm enthusiasts appeared during the great French Revolution, who thought that the ideal of earthly bliss would be at once attained by establishing the principle of the "rights of man"; and there is little doubt that the crudest Chiliasm lies at the root of the socialistic and communistic tendencies which are now menacing the very existence of European civilization.¹ For man has need of an ideal. If once he abandons the religion of Christ,—if heaven is a blank for him,—if there is no other life in which he believes or hopes,—he will transfer his ineradicable idea of the Infinite to the present life; and strive in imagination to enlarge the narrow horizon that bounds his earthly career. He will transport to this world his conception of supreme happiness; and imagine for himself a Paradise on earth, having no hope to find it elsewhere. It is thus, from the denial of religion, that the notion of 'progress' has arisen—that "Golden Age" which the prophets of these latter times, Condorcet, and Priestly, and Turgot, and Comte, so pompously announced in recent generations, and of which Mr. J. S. Mill has been the apostle in our own. Amid all the declamation of our modern philosophers—their great words as to spiritualism, and progress, and reason—one single thought, one single aspiration, may be clearly disengaged; and that, an ideal of material happiness, and of sensual enjoyment. Morality has no place, or at best but a very secondary place, in the new dogma, the great end of which is the amelioration of physical life. And this, in the mystical language of these thinkers, is "the New Apocalypse":—an Apocalypse, indeed, but one which has neither an Apostle of Christ for its author, nor the Spirit of God as the source of its Inspiration.

(On the subject of the Millennium, see Greswell's Essay in his Exposition of the Parables, vol. i. p. 142; Herzog's Real-En cycl., Art. Chiliasmus; Martensen's Christliche Dogmatik; Trench's Hulsean Lectures, Lect. v.).

¹ See Martensen, Dogmatik, Engl. tr. p. 473.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 A new heaven and a new earth. 10 The heavenly Jerusalem, with a full description thereof. 23 She needeth no sun, the glory of God is her light. 24 The kings of the earth bring their riches unto her.

[Ver. 1 ἀπὸ θρον. Ver. 2 om. ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης.—εἶδον is to be read after καὶ νῦν [Er., followed by A. V., here departs in both cases from his codex, and re-translates from the Vulg. ergo Ioannes vidit].—ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ is to be read after ἐκ τοῦ οὐρ. Ver. 3 ἐκ τοῦ θρόνου (cf. ch. xix. 5; xx. 12).—[N, A, 1 read λαοί,—B, P read λαός].—[A, P read, and N, B, 1 omit αὐτῶν Θεός. Er. supplied the words from the Vulg. eorum Deus. Ver. 4 om. ὁ Θεός.—ἐκ τῶν.—[A, P om. ὅτι]. Ver. 5 [A, B om. μοι].—πιστοὶ καὶ ἀληθ. Ver. 6 γέγοναν [with N, A, Iren.—N, B, P read γέγονα.—1 reads γέγονα τὸ, α καὶ τὸ, ὦ. After the Vulg., "Factum est. Ego sum a et ω," Er. reads γέγονε, ἐγὼ εἰμι τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω,—Videtur Erasmi. ad vg. conformasse," Tisch.].—[A reads ἐγὼ εἰμι τὸ Α,—N, B, P, 1 omit εἰμι]. Ver. 7 ταῦτα.—[A, 1 read αὐτῶν].—[Er., altering the αὐτοὶ ἔσσονται μοι νιοὶ of his codex, after the Vulg., erit mihi filius, inserted without authority the art. before υἱός]. Ver. 8 τοῖς δὲ δεαλοῖς.—ὁ θάνατος.—ὁ δὲ θάνατος.—Ver. 9 om. πρὸς με (inserted by Er. without any authority, and adopted in the A. V.).—ἐκ τῶν ἐπτά.—τῶν γεμόντων.—τὴν γυναῖκα τοῦ ἀρνίου. Ver. 10 om. τὴν μεγάλην. Ver. 11 om. 1st καὶ. Ver. 12 ἔχουσα τέχας.—ἔχουσα πύλας. Ver. 13 καὶ is to be read before the

Is. 65. 17.
2 Pet. 3.
13.

AND 'I saw a new heaven and a new earth : for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

2nd, 3rd, and 4th ἀπό.—[A reads βορρά,—δυσμῶν,—νότον]. Ver. 14 ἔχων.—ἐπ' αὐτῶν.—δώδεκα ὀνόμ. Ver. 15 μέτρον, κάλαμον. Ver. 16 οἱ τοσοῦτον ἔστιν.—[After ὅσον A reads καί].—[The words et longitudo ejus tanta est quanta et latitudo of the Vulg., which are wanting in 1, Er. rendered: καὶ τὸ μήκος αὐτοῦ τοσοῦτον ἔστιν (sic) ὅσον καὶ τὸ πλάτος]. Ver. 18 οἱ ἦν.—δμοιον. Ver. 19 οἱ καί. Ver. 20 σάρδιον. Ver. 21 διανήγης [so also 1: "I hold διαφανής," writes Delitzsch—"which has no authority and which is a usual epithet of ὕαλος,—to be ein erasmisches Quid pro quo"]. Ver. 23 οἱ ἐν. Ver. 24 καὶ περιπατήσουσι τὰ ἔθνη διὰ τοῦ φωτός αὐτῆς [The A. V. here follows the reading adopted by Erasmus, who omitted to correct by aid of the Vulgate the confusion of his codex, in which the scribe had mixed up as follows the comment of Andreas on ver. 23, with the text of ver. 24:—The words of Andreas are, τὰ μὲν γὰρ σωζόμενα ἔθνη καθὼς εἴρηται, ἐν τῷ φωτὶ αὐτῆς περιπατήσουσιν. This is thus given by the scribe in 1: καὶ τὰ ἔθνη τῶν σωζομένων, τῷ φωτὶ αὐτῆς περιπατήσουσι (with these words the Comment. on ver. 23 ends; and then follows the text of ver. 24, viz. καὶ περιπατήσουσιν τὰ ἔθνη, διὰ τοῦ φωτός αὐτῆς καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς καὶ τὰ ἔθνη. Luther's transl. "Und die Heiden, da sie selig werden" u. s. w., rests on this same confusion in codex 1 between the comm. of Andreas, and the Sacred Text,—see Delitzsch in loc.].—οἱ καὶ τὴν τιμὴν (see ver. 26). Ver. 27 κοινόν.—ὁ ποῶν [A omits ὁ].]

CHAP. XXI.

THE GLORIES OF THE NEW JERUSALEM (xxi.-xxii. 5).

1. And I saw] For the connexion of this closing scene of the Seventh chief Vision of the Revelation Proper with the previous scenes see Note A at the end of this chapter.

a new heaven and a new earth:] In place of the earth and heaven which, according to ch. xx. 11, fled away from the face of Him that sat on the throne:—cf. Isai. lxv. 17; lxxvi. 22; 2 Pet. iii. 13. It is disputed whether an absolutely "new" Creation is intended here, or "a renaissance"—a reproduction as from a seed (1 Cor. xv. 42, 43)—of a new earth from the old. In support of the latter opinion, St. Paul's words (1 Cor. vii. 31) are quoted, where he says that, not "this world," but "the fashion (σχῆμα) of this world passeth away" (St. Jerome writes: "figura præterit, non substantia"). We are reminded also of the "Regeneration" which Christ spoke of (Matt. xix. 28); and writers dwell upon the creation of the old world out of "water," and the production of the new from the conflagration of the old—2 Pet. iii. 5-12; cf. Gen. i. 2.

for the first heaven and the first earth are passed away;] (See vv. 11.). The result of the power revealed in ch. xx. 11:—cf. 1 Cor. xiii. 10; 2 Cor. v. 17. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God;" therefore, when "the natural body" "is raised a spiritual body" (1 Cor. xv. 44, 50), a new world is necessary for its abode.

and the sea is no more.] As in ver. 4, "the first things are passed away." The interpretations given to these words are various: (1) The literal,—"the sea" exists no longer, because the "new earth" has arisen out of fire (Beda, De Wette, Ebrard, Alf., Bispington);—(2) The former "sea" has passed away like the former "earth," but this does not preclude a "new" sea, any more than a "new" earth (Düsterd.);—(3) "The sea" of the nations, the wicked restless world, cf. ch. xx. 13, and see ch. xvii. 15; Isai. lvii. 20 (St. Augustine, Hengst., Words.). [See on ver. 13 what St. Augustine says of "the sea giving up its dead." Having observed, "De Mari novo aliquid me uspiam legisse, non recolo,"—he adds that ch. iv. 6 does not refer to this scene; and he concludes: "Non erit hoc seculum vita mortalium turbulentum, quod Maris nomine figuravit," c. 15];—(4) Because in Paradise there was no sea, and here all is Paradise (Züllig); and so, in substance, Volkmar, and Renan who adds a 'sterilization of part of the earth,'—the "Abyss" or domain of Satan, ch. xi. 7; xiii. 1 (p. 449);—(5) Because no longer required to separate and keep apart divisions of the human race (Andreas, Gerlach);—(6) The old heaven and earth of the former Israel having passed away, the "Sea," the emblem of the Gentiles (Ecclus. xxxix. 23), is no more (I. Williams).

The interpretation of St. Augustine (No. 3) is that which best suits the symbolism of this Book.

Auberlen notes:—Not under the Millennial Kingdom is the end of the development of God's Kingdom. During the Church-historical era, nature and history pursue their wonted, unspiritual course. During the Millennial Kingdom the life of Christ becomes manifest and visible (Col. iii. 3, 4); penetrating the whole world of history—government, civilization, art. Finally, after the Millennium, this life of Christ becomes

2 And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be also the power which transfigures nature, in the time of the "New Heaven" and "The new Earth." In all this process, Israel is once more the head of humanity; and this is why Prophets, intent on the future of the people of the Old Covenant, pass over the Church-historical period—which they only notice as the time of Israel's Dispersion among the Gentiles (p. 358).

2. And I saw the holy city.] Omit "John"—see vv. 11. The "Holy City" is the Church Triumphant, including, like the "Heaven" and the "Earth" (ver. 1), the community consisting of its inhabitants who have in like manner become "new." The Church is represented as "a City" in Matt. v. 14; Heb. xi. 10, 16; xiii. 14. The epithet "Holy" is now supplied in addition to the reference in ch. iii. 12—cf. ver. 10; ch. xi. 2; xxii. 19; Matt. iv. 5; xxvii. 53; Isai. lii. 1.

new Jerusalem.] Or, Jerusalem coming down new. As the Seer beheld in the renovated world "a new heaven and a new earth" (ver. 1), he now beholds in the glorified Church a "new Jerusalem." As the Theocracy, with its system of worship and its Sanctuary, had its type in "the City of the Living God" (Heb. viii. 5; ix. 23; xii. 22), so St. Paul speaks of the earthly Jerusalem in contrast to the heavenly (Gal. iv. 26; Phil. iii. 20).

Tertullian writes: "Hanc et Ezechiel novit et Apostolus Joannes vidit." (Adv. Marc. iii. 24). See the note on ch. iii. 12.

coming down out of heaven from God.] (See vv. 11). Not on the old, but on the "new earth," and therefore not of this material Creation: the language of ch. iii. 12 is repeated;—see also, below, ver. 10. This conception of the heavenly Jerusalem, familiar to St. Paul and St. John, occurs also in Jewish theology, where the thought of the City "coming down out of heaven," and of a world made new, is likewise to be met with. [Thus we read in Sobar Gen. f. 69, c. 271, "R. Jeremias dixit: Deus S. B. innovabit mundum suum, et ædificabit Hierosolymam, ut ipsam descendere faciat in medium sui de cælo, ita ut nunquam destruat" (see Wetst. on Gal. iv. 26; Schöttgen, Diss. de Hieros. Cæl., Hor. Hebr. i. 1205)]. The "new Jerusalem" comes "down out of heaven," because the Church is already there in triumph, although here below it suffers and struggles. St. Paul speaks of "the Jerusalem which is above" as "our Mother" (Gal. iv. 26).

"This is the City of God," notes Burger, "which the pious Fathers of old waited for, and which will not pass away from them,—Heb. xi. 10, 16."

A threefold Jerusalem, notes Hengst, is peculiar to the N. Test.:—(1) The heavenly community of the righteous (ch. xiv. 1–5);—(2) The Church in her militant state (ch. xi. 2; xx. 9);—(3) The New Jerusalem on the renovated earth, as here; after whose descent from heaven, the two other forms are seen no more. In this third form Jerusalem combines the heavenly character of the first and the earthly existence of the second. The City, notes Bengel, comes down from God: and still His throne is in it, and He Himself is with men therein (ver. 3; ch. xxii. 3). The New Heaven has inclined to the New Earth; the New Jerusalem is the bond of union. As in Matt. v. 34, 35, the symbolical City has come between.

prepared as a bride] As in ch. xix. 7; where see the note and the references:—cf. ch. xxii. 17; Isai. lxi. 10–lxii. 5. The Holy City and the Bride are now contrasted with Babylon and the Harlot.

adorned for her husband.] Notwithstanding the parallelism of this passage to ch. xix. 7, Millennialists make a distinction. They place the marriage of the Lamb before the Millennium, although here, after the Millennium, the "Bride" is so called for the first time in this Book. Ebrard explains this by saying that the "Bride" united to her "Husband" had been in heaven during the "Thousand years," and now descends with Him to earth:—accordingly she is "adorned for her Husband," not for the Bridegroom; and in ver. 9 she is styled both Bride and Wife. Bisping explains that the Millennial reign was the time of the Marriage Feast; and that it is only now that the Lord brings home His Bride. Even Bengel explains ch. xix. 7, "His Wife hath made herself ready," by "her bath begun to make herself ready" ("paravit se, i.e., copit parare se. De nuptiis istis vide c. xxi. 2, 9.")

It is surely enough in reply to those who place the union of Christ with His Church before the Millennium, to say that, after the Millennium is over, the Church is here described as descending from heaven "as a Bride adorned for her husband." "It is rather awkward," writes Dr. Brown (i.e., p. 60), "to suppose a bridal preparation and a presentation of the parties to each other, a 'Thousand Years' after the union has been consummated."

his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

[ch. 7. 17.]

4 And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sor- row, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. ^{2 Cor. 5. 17.}

THE RESULTS OF THE JUDGMENT (3-8).

3. And I heard] A new Vision—vv. 3-8 forming an interlude, as it were, between ver. 2 and ver. 9; and exhibiting the results of the final Judgment (ch. xx. 11), as set forth in Matt. xxv. 34, 41.

In ver. 9 the narrative of ver. 2 is resumed.

a great voice out of the throne saying,] As in ch. xix. 5; cf. ch. xx. 12:—see vv. 11. Compare the voice “in the midst of the Four Living Beings” (ch. vi. 6) who are “round about the throne” (ch. iv. 6). Hengst. reads “out of heaven,” referring to ch. xi. 15; xii. 10; xiv. 2; xv. 2-4; xix. 1, 6.

Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men,] His actual dwelling, the Heavenly Jerusalem, not the symbol merely of this, as in the wilderness, Lev. xxvi. 11, 12; see also Ezek. xxxviii. 27, 28. Not a “Tabernacle,” notes Burger, but the “Tabernacle” of God; the true contrast to the shadow of heavenly things—the “Tabernacle” of the Covenant and the Temple under the Jewish Law. Not “men” but “the men,” i. e., redeemed and glorified humanity.

and he shall dwell with them.] Gr. make his tabernacle,—see ch. vii. 15; John i. 14; Ex. xxix. 45. The fact of God’s dwelling with His people, first manifested by the Incarnation, is now accomplished (see ch. vii. 15-17). This fact supplies the best exposition of the present Vision (cf. Ezek. xxxviii. 28; xliii. 7).

How God dwelt with His people of old is described in Ex. xl. 34-38.

and they shall be his people,] This is the frequent subject of Prophecy, e.g. Jer. xxiv. 7; xxxi. 1; Ezek. xxxviii. 27; Zech. viii. 8. Bispington considers the plural “an unhappy adaptation to the plural-subject (αἱροί), since God, as He can have but one kingdom, so He can have but one people.” The evidence however of MSS. in favour of the plural, “peoples” greatly preponderates,—see vv. 11.

and God himself shall be with them.] Cf. the name “Immanuel,” “God with us”—Matt. i. 23; Isai. vii. 14.

[and he] their God:] (For the authorities which omit these words, see vv. 11.) It is thus implied that the contrast between the Church and the world has now ceased. On this promise see Jer. xxx. 22; xxxi. 33; Ezek. xi. 20.

4. and he shall wipe away every tear from their eyes;] (See vv. 11.) Note the verbal agreement with ch. vii. 17; and cf. Isai. xxv. 8; Isai. lxv. 19.

and death shall be no more;] See ch. xx. 14.

Death, as it had come into the world through sin (Gen. ii. 17; Rom. v. 12), must cease when the victory over sin shall have been won,—1 Cor. xv. 54.

neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more:] Isai. xxxv. 10; Isai. li. 11.

the first things are passed away.] (Or “for the first things,”—see vv. 11.) As told in ver. 1. On this fact depends the great change implied in vv. 1, 5:—evil has now ceased; and there is unimpeded union with God.

Martensen (Christian Dogmatics, § 289, Engl. tr.) compares vv. 1-4 with 1 Cor. xv. 24-28, and observes, that it is by no means implied that the mediatorial office of Christ is at an end: “All communications of blessing from the Father to His creatures pass through the Son, and now it is for the first time, in the full sense of the words, true that Christ is present in all Creation, for He now fills all with His own fulness” (p. 484).

5. And he that sitteth on the throne said,] Christ, as in ch. xx. 11:—even in His state of humiliation the Lord Jesus announced, “Then shall the Son of Man sit upon the throne of His glory” (Matt. xxv. 31). On the other hand vv. 6, 7, are adduced in proof that it must be God the Father, as in ch. iv. 3; v. 1, 7. The distinction need not be pressed, see 1 Cor. xv. 28. “The Commission of the Son is perfected; His work has attained its object; the scene of that work—the old world of sin and of death—has disappeared; in its stead is the New Creation, in which God is All in All” (Burger).

Behold, I make all things new.] He declares that to be His work which St. John had already beheld in ver. 1; and to which He Himself had, when on earth, referred as the “Regeneration” (Matt. xix. 28). All things had been originally “made by Him” (John i. 1); and now He makes “all things New.” On the earthly aspect of the “New Creation,” see 2 Cor. v. 17; and on Christ as the Source of the “New Creation,” see

And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.

6 And he said unto me, It is done.
ch. i. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end.
R 22. 13.
1a. 55. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

7 He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

Lee on Inspiration, Lect. iii. pp. 120-130, 4th ed.

According to Rom. viii. 18-25 we have here expressed the last and highest object of all Christian hope.

And he saith,] Omit "unto me"—see vv. 11.

Write:] For the third time in this Book the Seer receives the special command to "write" certain words, see ch. xiv. 13; xix. 9:—cf. on ch. i. 11. Who is the speaker here? The same indefiniteness as to the speaker, noticed on ch. i. 1, 10, appears in this place. The speaker may be regarded as the presiding Angel of the entire series of Visions,—see ch. xxii. 6, 16.

In ch. x. 4; xiv. 13, the words proceed from a voice "from heaven;" in ch. xix. 9 we read as here. Note also the present tense, saith, λέγει,—εἶπεν being used immediately before and immediately after in ver. 6.

for these words are faithful and true.] (See vv. 11). We may also render (Gr. recitativum): Write, "These words are faithful and true:"—cf. ch. iii. 17, &c.; Matt. ii. 23; John i. 20; 1 John iv. 20.

6. And he said unto me,] The speaker is once more "He that sitteth on the throne;" see on ver. 5.

All is come to pass.] (See vv. 11). Gr. They are done, or They are come to pass, or They are accomplished—as the interpreter of St. Irenæus (v. 25, p. 336) read the text—"Et dixit mihi, Facta (cf. ch. xvi. 17, where the same verb, γέγονεν, is in the singular). "The Divine promises and judgments" (Words.);—"All things are become new" (Bisping);—"The Divine Decrees" (Ebrard);—"The words just described as faithful and true" (Burger).

The expression "All is come to pass" places the promise and the menace which follows (see ver. 8) in connexion with the whole Vision:—What the Seer has beheld is now accomplished; the old world has passed away; the New Earth has come into being.

The reading of N, B, P, 1 (γέγονα ἐγὼ τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω) "I am become the Alpha," &c.—although the evidence for it is not weak—is opposed not only to St. John's usage, see ch. i. 8 (the verb is wanting in ch. xxii. 13), and to sound theology (for Christ cannot become what He has ever been), but renders the sense absurd: one cannot become the "Alpha" the "beginning," the "first" (ch. i. 8, 17; ii. 8; iii. 14; xxii. 13), of all things. Were the speaker God the Father, this inference would be, if possible, stronger.

Twice, in this Book, notes Bengel, is it said "It is done,"—at the completion of the wrath of God, ch. xvi. 17; and here, at the making of "all things new." Three times, notes Stier (on John xix. 30, vol. viii. p. 24, Engl. tr.), do we read in the Bible of the repose of God in Christ,—at the beginning, Gen. i. 31; in the "It is finished" of John xix. 30; and here, in the final "All is come to pass."

I am the Alpha and the Omega,] See ch. i. 8; xxii. 13.

the beginning and the end.] This translation, as it were, of the preceding words is also given in ch. xxii. 13, where the third equivalent, "the first and the last," also occurs:—see on ch. i. 8.

I will give] The pronoun repeated,—"I am the Alpha," "I will give;"—Christ speaks throughout. The ideas here conjoined are expressed separately in ch. xxii. 13, 17.

unto him that is athirst] The thought is taken from Isai. lv. 1; see ch. xxii. 17, and John vii. 37.

of the fountain of the water of life freely.] Cf. Isai. xlii. 3; John iv. 10, 14. "Living water" (used in its natural sense in the Old Test., e.g. Gen. xxvi. 19) is not necessarily the equivalent of "the water of life," in the highest and spiritual sense of the words;—but it is so in St. John iv. 10, as coming from Him in whom is the absolute life.—Trench, Studies in the Gospels, p. 94.

In ch. vii. 17 (as in Isai. xlix. 10) we read of "fountains of waters of life," which are now united into one stream proceeding from the Throne—see ch. xxii. 1.

7. He that overcometh] Here only, since the Seven Epistles (cf. ch. ii. 7, 11, &c.), do we find the stimulating promise "to him that overcometh" (cf. ch. xii. 11)—in like manner uttered by Christ, see on ver. 5.

shall inherit these things;] (See vv. 11). Here only in St. John's writings do we read of the everlasting inheritance—the constant theme of Evangelical promise (Matt. v. 5; xix. 29; xxv. 34; Rom. iv. 13; 1 Cor. vi. 9; &c.). This inheritance imports citizenship in the Heavenly Jerusalem (ch. iii. 12);—all the glory of the City of God (ver. 11);—the water

8 But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone : which is the second death.

9 And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, of life from the inexhaustible fountain (ch. xxii. 17);—"all things" that have been created anew (vv. 1, 5).

and I will be his God,] The Seer goes back once more, as in ver. 3, to the first great promise to the Church at its typical "beginning" (Ex. xx. 2; Lev. xxvi. 12),—a promise fulfilled only in Him who is Immanuel, "God with us:" cf. 2 Sam. vii. 24.

and he shall be my son.] These words of Christ point to that perfect equality of the Son with the Father, when GOD shall be all in all (1 Cor. xv. 28). Compare too Christ's title, "The Everlasting Father" (Isai. ix. 6):—see on ver. 5.

The interpretation which makes the speaker to be God the Father relies upon 2 Sam. vii. 14; Heb. i. 5; ii. 10—πολλοὺς υἱούς (see e.g. Ebrard).

"What 2 Sam. vii. 14 promised to the house of David, is fulfilled, through David's Son, for all members of that new humanity which dwells in the Tabernacle of David, Amos ix. 11, 12" (Burger).

8. But for the fearful.] (See vv. 11). As contrasted with those "that overcome" in ver. 7:—cf. those who "draw back," Heb. x. 38. Hengst. refers to lack of faith, as in Matt. viii. 26; but this thought is expressly added in the next epithet.

and unbelieving.] "Not apostates from Christ," notes Düsterd., "but the dwellers on earth who are hostile to Christianity (ch. xiii. 8; xvi. 2, 21), to whom (cf. ch. ix. 21) the following epithets apply." Some (e.g. Züllig, Words.) read after "unbelieving," the words "and sinners"—a reading, however, which has for its authority the single Uncial B.

and abominable,] (The Greek text has not the article). Gr. defiled with abominations, viz., those referred to in ch. xvii. 4; cf. ver. 27,—probably the "dogs" of ch. xxii. 15; cf. 1 Tim. i. 10.

We may note how the language of the Law (e.g. Lev. vii. 21) is here employed to signify those who are shut out from the City of God. The ancient Jerusalem is the divinely appointed symbol throughout.

and murderers, and fornicators,] On this verse compare 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. "The characters named form four pairs—the four, the 'signature' of the earth, to which belong these different tendencies of those who live in the world, Col. ii. 20" (Hengst.).

and sorcerers, and idolaters,] Cf. ch. ix. 21; xviii. 23; 1 John v. 21:—"Sorcerers" include all who took part in the magical arts of the heathen: the reference to "idolaters" naturally follows,—cf. Gal. v. 20.

and all liars,] Note the threefold reference to this sin—here; in ver. 27; and in ch. xxii. 15; cf. ch. ii. 2. In illustration of St. John's manner, compare also John viii. 44; xviii. 37.

On this verse compare ch. xxii. 15. It takes up the scene described in Matt. xxv. 41–46.

their part [shall be] in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone;] (On the phrase "their part shall be," see on ch. xx. 6). This locality—so often described—is referred to simply in ch. xxii. 15, as being "without." The Apocalypse attesting "The wrath of the Lamb" (ch. vi. 16), now returns to the judicial severity of the Old Test.:—see ch. xiv. 11; xix. 3; Isai. xxxiv. 10; lxvi. 24; Dan. vii. 11.

which is the second death.] See ch. ii. 11; xx. 6, 14. This, the Lord's last word from the Throne, is nevertheless followed by the sublime appeal in ch. xxii. 17—"The Spirit and the Bride say, COME;" and by the glorious close—"The grace of the Lord Jesus be with all" (ch. xxii. 21).

The Seer having now shewn us, under its two aspects in vv. 3–7 and in ver. 8, the scene introduced in ch. xx. 11, the narrative of ver. 2 is resumed.

THE NEW JERUSALEM (9, 10).

This passage is a typical Vision corresponding to the Vision of Babylon, in ch. xvii.:—Here one of the Seven Angels of Judgment shows the Seer the Bride (cf. Eph. v. 27); there one of the same Vial-Angels shows him the Harlot,—see on ch. xvii. 1 and ch. xvi. 21. Hitherto these Angels had been the executioners of the Divine wrath (ch. xvi.); their work is now completed in a Vision of Divine Love.

9. And there came one of the seven angels] Omit "unto me." Gr. one from among (see vv. 11); cf. on ch. vii. 11.

who had the seven vials,] See on ch. xvii. 1. This second and last appearance of one of the Vial-Angels indicates that the Visions contained in ch. xvii. 1–ch. xxii. 5 form the continuation of the Vial-Visions.

and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.

10 And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,

11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; who were laden with the seven last plagues;] Gr. who were full of. The true reading (see vv. 11.) places the participle in concord with "Angels." (T. R. reads φιάλας τὰς γεμούσας).

and he spake with me, saying, Come hither,] Cf. ch. iv. 1.

I will shew thee] This ninth verse follows ch. xvii. 1, almost verbatim, down to this point.

the bride, the wife of the Lamb.] (See vv. 11.)

In ch. xvii. 1 the Harlot is the false Bride, corresponding to the false Lamb of ch. xiii. 11.

On vv. 9-27 Züllig notes: "The interpreting Angel shows the Seer the new City of God,—its appearance as a whole (vv. 10, 11);—its walls with their gates and foundations (vv. 12-14);—its measurements (vv. 15-17);—its special features also,—such as its magnificence (vv. 18-21), its unique character (vv. 22, 23), the life-movement within it (vv. 24-27)."

10. in the Spirit] As in ch. xvii. 3;—the Seer is "carried away," but not "into a wilderness."

to a mountain great and high.] St. John beholds the City there,—but not from thence: see Isai. ii. 2.

and shewed me the holy city Jerusalem,] (Omit "the great,"—see vv. 11.) So in ver. 2; ch. xi. 2; xxii. 19. On the erroneous reading here, the "Great City," Words. correctly notes: "That phrase is restricted in the Apocalypse to the mystical Babylon:—see ch. xi. 8; xviii. 10, 16." Bengel comments: The Angel said he would show John the "Bride," and now he shows him a "City," he had said (ch. xvii. 1) he would show him the great "Harlot," and he showed him "Babylon." And again: Taken apart to the "Wilderness" (ch. xvii. 3), the Seer beheld a City, the Harlot; here, to the "Mountain," he sees a City, the Bride. It was to the "Wilderness" that the Apostolic "Woman" had fled (ch. xii. 6), and where the Harlot was found; and then we afterwards read of the "Mountain" (cf. Heb. xii. 22). "So was it with Israel of old."—I. Williams (p. 452).

coming down out of heaven from God,]

Observe coming down,—not already descended:—compare ver. 2, and ch. iii. 12. Winer points out how the construction henceforth frequently changes independently of the governing verb "shewed" [καταβαίνουσιν] agreeing regularly with τὴν πόλιν,—then ὁ φωστὴρ (ver. 11) inserted independently,—then (ver. 12), reverting to πόλιν, a new clause begins with ἔχουσα] (§ 59. 11)—cf. ch. i. 15.

THE HOLY CITY (11—ch. xxii. 5).

Here begins the description of the City, following Ezek. xlviii. 30-35. In vv. 11-23 are described the structure and plan;—in vv. 24-27 what takes place within its walls;—in ch. xxii. 1-5 the felicity of the life within it.

11. having the glory of God:] Not a special, divinely caused, splendour, but the abiding Presence, the Shekinah (Ex. xl. 34; Num. ix. 15-23; 1 Kings viii. 11)—see ver. 23; ch. xxii. 5; cf. xv. 8; John xii. 41; Acts xxvi. 13; 2 Chron. v. 14; Isai. xxiv. 23; lx. 1. Christ Himself has said: "The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them" (John xvii. 22) her light] (Omit "and," see vv. 11.) Gr. luminary (ὁ φωστὴρ), "the light of the City;" "that which gives her light," "that whereby she is illuminated"—as by the sun and moon, see Gen. i. 14 (LXX.); of which the source was "the glory of God,"—see Ezek. xliii. 2:—and so most expositors. The distinction is that between the "glory" which represents the Presence of Jehovah, and the derived "light," which is Messiah,—the lamp (ὁ λύχνος) thereof is the Lamb" (ver. 23); cf. Isai. lx. 19. This word "light" (φωστὴρ, which occurs elsewhere in the New Test. only in Phil. ii. 15—cf. John ix. 5) Bengel takes in the sense of "an opening for light," "a window:" so also Bleek.

See, on ver. 10, Winer's remark as to the construction of this passage.

[was] like unto a stone most precious, as it were a jasper stone,] For the jasper, see on ch. iv. 3.

clear as crystal:] See on ch. iv. 6:—Of a starry, diamond-like effulgence (κρυσταλλίνον); cf. "stellatus iaspide"—Æn. iv. 261. Mr. King, having observed that the Emerald "appears to be generated from the Jasper," adds: "This explains the meaning of 12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel :

13 On the east three gates ; on the north three gates ; on the south the comparison of the gem illuminating the New Jerusalem to 'a most precious stone': i.e., one combining the Jasper's green, with the Crystal's lustre—an exact description of the true Emerald."—Nat. Hist. of Precious Stones, p. 281.

This description preserves the identity with Him that sat on the Throne, round which was a rainbow "like an Emerald to look upon" (ch. iv. 3).

12. having a wall great and high ;] (Omit "and" at the beginning of the verse—see vv. 11). The security is now represented of the New Jerusalem against the foes who in the latter days are to assail the Church,—see ch. xx. 9. Gog and Magog had of old time come up against those that dwelt "without walls"—Ezek. xxxviii. 11. By the "wall," Beda understands the Lord protecting His Church (Isai. xxvi. 1; Zech. ii. 5). This wall is of jasper (ver. 18), and so is its first foundation (ver. 19), and so (ver. 11) is the similitude of the glory of God.

having twelve gates ;] (See vv. 11 ; and for the constr. Winer's note, quoted on ver. 10). The word rendered "gates," Gr. portala, means in the singular (see Matt. xxvi. 71; Luke xvi. 20; Acts x. 17; xii. 13, 14) the "portal" of a palace, or house;—cf. "the door of the gate," Acts xii. 13. In the plural it means the "portal" of a city—as in this chapter ten times, and in Acts xiv. 13. Here the expression symbolizes how the citizens enter the New Jerusalem—see ch. xxii. 14. The number of gates denotes the freedom of access to the City.

and at the gates twelve angels ;] Representing the one household of God, the Church of Angels and men. Or, as I. Williams notes (p. 454), "according to the symbolism of the Apocalypse, as we had before the Angels of the Seven Churches—Angelic watchers corresponding with the sacred 'keepers of the door' of the Temple." Or spirits ministering to the saved—cf. Heb. i. 14; Ps. xci. 11; Matt. xviii. 10; Luke xvi. 22. Some refer to Isai. lxii. 6; cf. Gen. iii. 24—denoting that everything unworthy and impure is to be excluded from the City.

It is rather beneath the character of this imagery to conclude (with Dusterd., and Alf.) that the Angels here spoken of serve merely "for the adornment of the City after the idea of a beautiful fortress."

and names written thereon ;] Compare the engraving of "the names of the children of Israel"—Ex. xxviii. 9, 29; xxxix. 14. We are to understand here the emblem of the City of the people of God.

which are [the names] of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel ;] The order of the Tribes as adopted by St. John in ch. vii. is doubtless followed here—see on ch. vii. 5. See Ezek. xlviii. 31: "The gates of the City shall be after the names of the Tribes of Israel." "Twelve," the product of the Divine number Three, and the world-number Four, is the symbolic number, under both Covenants, of the Church—of the world penetrated by the Divine influence. As such it occurs under the Old Covenant in the Twelve Tribes; under the New, in the Twelve Apostles:—see Auberlen, p. 355; and Introd. § 11 (a). Bähr (Symbolik, i., s. 208) notes that Jerusalem, as Josephus (B. J. v. 4, 2) describes it, was on four hills, with three gates on each side, as described in ver. 13. Bähr also refers to the "Camp" described in Num. ii., which represented Israel symbolically as a people that had God in its midst. So it is, in like manner, here. Each "Gate" bears the name of one of the Twelve Tribes. It is thus denoted that the Church made perfect is no confused multitude, but an organized Body, "each member having its special vocation and peculiar glory" (Ebrard).

13. on the east [were] three gates ;] "Gates" being in the nom. case, it is simpler to supply the verb substantive, as in ver. 11, than to take the construction to be one pointing to the earlier clause, as in ch. iv. 1. According to Ezekiel (xlvi. 32) the names of the Tribes corresponding to the eastern gates are Joseph, Benjamin, Dan (note, that Manasseh is substituted by St. John for Dan, in ch. vii. 6);—according to the encampment in Num. ii. 3-7, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, had each "the standard of their camps," "on the east side." In Ezekiel the order is, North, East, South, West;—in Numbers, East, South, West, North.

and on the north three gates ;] ("and" is to be added, see vv. 11). The Gates of Reuben, Judah, Levi, in Ezek. xlviii. 31;—the standards of Dan, Asher, Naphtali, in Num. ii. 25-29.

and on the south three gates ;] (See vv. 11). Of Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, in Ezek. xlviii. 33;—of Reuben, Simeon, Gad, in Num. ii. 10-14.

three gates; and on the west three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

and on the west three gates.] (The A. V. here supplies "and," which is not in the Textus Receptus, see vv. ll.). Of Gad, Asher, Naphtali, in Ezek. xlviii. 34;—of Ephraim, Manasseh, Benjamin, in Num. ii. 18–22 (cf. Zech. xiv. 10).

See Note B at the end of this chapter.

On this arrangement, according to the four quarters of heaven, see Luke xiii. 29. We have here "the signature of Nature, penetrated, glorified, hallowed, by what is heavenly" (Ebrard). In these four quarters Vitringa and Hengst. see an emblem of "the Ecumenical character of the New Jerusalem."

14. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations,] (See vv. ll.). Gr. having—the masc. part., nom. case, in irregular concord. See Heb. xi. 10, "the City which hath the foundations."

De Wette explains thus:—Every twelfth part of the walls, between the several gates, had a foundation stone stretching along the whole length, and exposed to view, see ver. 19; and thus the names which were inscribed were visible:—so Düsterd., Words., Alf., &c. Four of these, notes Düsterd., are corner-stones, joining the third gate on one side, to the first gate on the next. It is far more consistent, however, with the grandeur of the whole description to understand that the wall rests on a basis of twelve courses of stones; each course encompassing the entire city, and constituting one foundation: see ver. 19.

The material of the whole wall is Jasper, of the whole City Gold (ver. 18).

and on them twelve names] See vv. ll. Cf. the "Twelve Stars," ch. xii. 1; and also the Twelve standards of the Tribes planted around the Tabernacle, Num. ii.;—see on ver. 13.

of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.] See Eph. ii. 20; a passage which is itself based on Matt. xvi. 18:—cf. 1 Tim. iii. 15. No one Apostle alone supports the City of God—Christ Himself is the One Foundation, 1 Cor. iii. 11:—see also 1 Pet. ii. 4–6, which passage carries out this imagery.

On the Foundations of the New Jerusalem are inscribed the names of the Heads of the Church in the days of the "Regeneration"—Matt. xix. 28; cf. Luke xxii. 30. The symbolical number Twelve is all that is insisted upon here; and thus it is needless to discuss whether the twelfth Apostle is Matthias (Acts i. 26), or, as Hengst. insists, St. Paul. See Note A on ch. iii. 19 where the opposition alleged to exist between St. John and St. Paul is discussed. This notion is defended by a reference to the present verse. It is argued that the number Twelve excludes St. Paul. Bengel has acutely noted that St. Paul, as Apostle of the Gentiles could not have been included here; and he justly refers to Matt. xix. 28.

Rationalists, however, insist upon a designed exclusion of St. Paul,—e.g. Volkmar (quoted on ch. ii. 2; xiii. 11), who argues that the Apostle of the Gentiles has expressly referred in Eph. ii. 19–22 to this passage of the Apocalypse; and, in order to include himself, speaks merely of "the foundation of the Apostles"—not "the Twelve Apostles." So Renan: "The author of the Apocalypse on the morrow of the death of the Apostles, is, of all the Jewish Christians, filled with the greatest hatred against Paul" (Saint Paul, p. 367). Again:—"Note above all Rev. xxi. 14, which excludes Paul from the number of the Apostles."—L'Antéchrist, p. 34. And to the same effect B. Aubé, Hist. des Persecutions de l'Eglise, p. 125.

This inference is a favourite one with "advanced critics" of modern times. The whole object, however, of the imagery here is to preserve the unity of the description. Jerusalem, representing the Twelve Tribes, and having Twelve Gates, could not be represented as resting on thirteen foundations. Again:—Lucke, Ewald, Bleek, and others argue from this verse that the author of the Apocalypse could not himself have been an Apostle,—as thus to style himself "a Foundation" would be inconsistent with Apostolic modesty, and consequently that he was not the Apostle John:—see Introd. § 6, (1). The symbolical character of this whole description, however, sets aside all reference to individuals, and lies apart from every conclusion based upon the meaning of the words interpreted literally.

On this verse, combined with Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 30, Mr. Elliott founds the conclusion that when Christ shall make all things new (ver. 5), and this earth is restored to paradisaical blessedness, the nationality of Israel is to be restored; and that the chosen People, while inhabiting Palestine in flesh and blood, will be under the rule of the Twelve glorified Apostles—see Hor. Apoc. iv. p. 167. In this conclusion, writes Dr. Brown (l. c., p. 448), Mr. Elliott stands alone.

15 And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

16 And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand fur-

15. And he that spake with me had for a measure] On the added words for a measure, see vv. 11.

a golden reed to measure the city,] See ch. xi. 1; Ezek. xl. 3, 5, &c.; xlii. 15, &c. The object of this act of measuring, as in Ezek. xl. 4, is to fix the attention of the Seer. The usual note is—"The reed is of gold because the City is Divine, and an Angel measures it"—see on ver. 17. The details which follow are all to be understood spiritually.

["Neque enim putandum est secundum Judaicas fabulas Deum auro et gemmis ædificaturum Jerusalem, et non vivis lapidibus," &c.—St. Jerome, Comm. in Aggæum, ii. 7-9.]

16. And the city lieth foursquare,] The Greek term signifies any figure in form quadrangular (ver. 13); here, as the sequel shows, the sides are at right angles and equal,—see Ezek. xlviii. 16, 20. The word rendered "foursquare," is that used in heathen philosophy to denote the perfection of man (e. g. τετράγωνος ἄνθρωπος, cf. Arist., Eth. i. 10; Rhet. iii. 11); and so Simonides in the Protagoras of Plato designates the perfect man.

We have here, notes I. Williams, "The square of perfection . . . but the four che-rubic forms are not here, for there is no Temple; nor the Four Living Creatures, representing His manifestation in the visible Creation; but the living stones, resplendent each with the Light of the Lamb."—p. 457.

and the length thereof is as great as the breadth:] (For the text here see vv. 11). That is to say, 12,000 furlongs. In Ezek. xlviii. 16,—the original of the symbolism here,—the length of each side is given separately. De Wette, however, considers that the measure of 12,000 furlongs, or stadii, refers merely to these two dimensions,—to twice the length and twice the breadth.

and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs:] I. e., extending to—to the length of. On the constr. (ἐνί with the accus. as ἐφ' ὅσον Rom. xi. 13) see Winer § 49, s. 363. For the word "furlong" (τὸ ὁράδιον) see Note B on ch. xiv. 20.

In the following description there is plainly a reference to the ancient Babylon, with which the "New Jerusalem" is now contrasted. Herodotus (i. 178-186;—cf. Strabo, xvi.), who had himself seen the grandeur of Babylon, tells us that it also was "four- square" (ἰούσης τετραγώνου);—that each side was 120 stadii in length [i. e., one hundredth part of the length of each side of the "New Jerusalem"];—that its walls were 200 cubits in height, and 50 cubits in thickness (see Jer. li. 58);—and that it had 100 gates of brass (Isai. xlv. 1, 2). The ancient Babylon contained within its walls the vast temple of Belus, which was also "foursquare," each side of its sacred precincts being two stadii in length. The Belus tower was built in stages, eight in number, square being placed on square (Hdt. i. 181). Through the city flowed the Euphrates, dividing it nearly in half (διὰ τῆς πάλαιος μέσης, Hdt. i. 185). Here too were the "hanging gardens" (ὁ κρεμαστὸς κήπος), in the form of terraces (Berosus, ap. Joseph. Ant. xii. 1), the highest of which was planted with trees of all kinds, some of the largest size (cf. ch. xxii. 1, 2):—see Rawlinson's Ancient Monarchies, ii. 510-540.

The description given in this verse does not decide absolutely whether 12,000 stadii (or 1378.97 English miles) is the length of each side of the "New Jerusalem,"—as understood by Andr., Bengel, Hengst., Ebrard, Ewald, Dusterd., Züllig, Words., Bisping, &c. According to Vitruvius, Wetst., Eichhorn, De Wette, Alford, the entire circuit of the City is meant, making the distance between each gate 1000 stadii. This latter explanation is avowedly prompted by the desire to reduce the vast dimensions of the City; the difficulty being caused by forgetfulness that the whole picture here given is symbolical. In either case the dimensions surpass any natural explanation; while in the latter case there is both a departure from the original picture by Ezekiel, and also a departure from the plain sense of the words which follow. In Apocalyptic symbolism 1000 expresses a vast number; and, when multiplied by Twelve,—the number of perfection,—there results a signification adapted to what we here read of the City of God. When 1000 is multiplied by the square of Twelve the meaning is "a multitude which no man could number,"—see ch. vii. 4, 9; xiv. 1.

"The parallel," notes Burger on ver. 9, "is not to be mistaken: what Babylon was to the anti-Christian World-empire, viz. the brilliant centre of its earthly glory,—the World-city,—the seat of the Beast and his ally the False Prophet; that will the New Jerusalem be to Humanity born anew, viz. the Centre of the perfected, glorified Kingdom of God."

longs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

the length and the breadth and the height thereof are equal.] The Holy of Holies (Ex. xxvi. 33) was a cubical chamber having each of its three dimensions equal to Ten cubits. Although not expressly stated in the Book of Exodus, Philo, Josephus, all tradition, and every consideration of probability, concur as to this:—see the Note on Ex. xxvi.; Ewald in loc.; Bähr, Symbolik, i. s. 225. In Solomon's Temple also the Holy of Holies was a cube, each edge of which was Twenty cubits,—see 1 Kings vi. 20. Here also each dimension is of the measure just specified, viz. 12,000 stadia—the City being a vast cube. This is the only natural sense of the words. That it is high as heaven and includes the Throne of God, is implied in ch. xxii. 3, as Ewald (s. 349) notes.

The Rabbinical books contain similar imagery:—We read in the Talmud Bava Batra f. 75, 2: "Deus tempore futuro Hierosolyma evecturus est in altitudinem xii. milliarum S. D. Zach. xiv. 10. Quid est 'in loco suo'? talem esse futuram superne, qualis est infra."—see Wetst. in loc.

The following interpretations have been suggested:—

De Wette (see above) makes the circumference of the City to be equal to 12,000 stadia, this measure having no reference to the height. When the height is now mentioned, there is no thought as yet of how great that height is:—the height is not referred to until ver. 17, and the word "equal" (ίσα) is here used loosely,—signifying that the height is equal all round. The sense, therefore, is:—The length and breadth are each equal to 3000 stadia, and the height of the wall is 144 cubits (ver. 17) all round. Düsterd. distinguishes between the height of the City, and the height of its walls; the City itself, i. e., of the mass of houses contained in it (so Hengst.), being, as stated above, the cube of 12,000 stadia, and its wall of the height of 144 cubits. Alf. ridicules this result, and supposes that the City is placed "on a hill or rock [of which the text says nothing] which may be imagined as descending with it;" and thus taking the 12,000 stadia to be the circumference, and including this hill or rock, we get the cube of 3000 stadia. Luthardt supposes a City situated on a lofty mountain, with its houses in terraces around the mountain sides. The City would thus appear as a Pyramid; of which the apex attains to the elevation of 12,000 stadia, while at the mountain foot a wall surrounds it of 144 cubits high. This certainly agrees with the words of the text, but not with the exigencies of the symbolism.

The heavenly Jerusalem, observes Renan, "is in contradiction to all the sound rules of architecture."—p. 473.

It is quite plain that we cannot take a perfect cube to represent a material city; or compare such a structure to "a Bride adorned for her husband" (ver. 2). This symbolic form, as already pointed out, is borrowed from that of "the Most Holy Place" (Ex. xxvi. 33); and, conjoined with the image of the "Bride" (Isai. lxii. 5), represents the idea of the Church as the spiritual abode of God. Accordingly all the other images which depend upon this,—the gates, the walls, the site of the City, the river which waters it, the trees on that river's banks, and so forth,—can only be understood in a spiritual and symbolic sense.

17. And he measured the wall thereof.] In vv. 12, 14, we read of the "gates" and "foundations" of this "wall;" and now the height of the wall is measured. Some understand, its thickness, cf. Jer. li. 58; Ezek. xli. 9. The former sense is better suited to the nature of a Vision; and also better suited to the words "great and high" in ver. 12; cf. Deut. iii. 5; xxviii. 52.

a hundred and forty and four cubits.] (On the genitive "cubits;"—a constr. "unknown to Greek prose"—see Moulton's Winer, p. 244). Again the sacred Twelve, raised to the second power. Solomon's Porch, the highest part of his Temple, was 120 cubits (1 Chron. iii. 4); and the general height of the Temple 30 cubits (1 Kings vi. 2). With reference to the dimensions of the "City" itself writers dwell upon the comparative insignificance of this height—less than the height, notes Stuart, of the walls of Babylon: the most inconsiderable wall however, notes Düsterd., is sufficient to exclude all that is impure—see ver. 27. The height of the wall is, by design, comparatively insignificant, writes Zullig, in order not to obstruct the light radiating from the City.

[according to] the measure of a man, that is, of an angel.] (Gr. a measure of a man—see ch. xiii. 18). The constr. is "a lax apposition" to "the clause ἐπεὶ τὸ μέτρον τοῦ ἀγγέλου" (Winer, § 33, 7). In ch. xiii. 18 we read of "the number of the Beast" that it is "the number of a man,"—as in Deut. iii. 11 mention is made of "four cubits . . . after the cubit of a man,"—of which the meaning is 'not less than the ordinary cubit.' Here the explanation is

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper : and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The added "that is of an Angel,"—words which can only imply that in the Heavenly City men will be "equal unto the Angels" (Luke xx. 36), "and will reckon and measure all things by a spiritual and Divine arithmetic, and by a heavenly and Angelic mensuration":—so Words. Thus too Ebrard notes: That which suits the New Jerusalem,—the measure not of men with mortal bodies but of glorified men when they become equal to the Angels (Matt. xxii. 30). "Measured," writes I. Williams, "to suit human capacities, though it be of what is altogether incomprehensible and divine: . . . they that are accounted worthy to attain that life are equal to the Angels" (p. 458). Bengel calculates what this Angelic measure must be:—As in ch. xiii. 5, 18, we could not explain the 42 months without the aid of the number 666 (see Introd. § 11, (b), IV.); so in this chapter all would be obscure were we not to identify the 144 cubits, with the 12,000 furlongs, and take these two equal measures to represent the height of the wall. Hence one ("englisch-menschlich") cubit is equal to $8\frac{1}{3}$ furlongs; and Bengel considers it important to note that $8 \times 8\frac{1}{3} = 66\frac{2}{3}$.

Burger interprets as follows:—The sacred Twelve, the signature of the Church, which we have already met in the Twelve Gates, the Twelve Foundations, the Twelve thousand stadia,—is here multiplied by itself (cf. ch. vii. 4). The "wall" is intended for the protection of the City; and its true defence consists in this that it is the City of the perfected Church of Christ, of which the number is 144. Burger, although he notes that the Greek article is absent, translates (with the A. V.) of the Angel, i. e., "the Angel" who "spoke" with St. John, and who used the well-known "measure of a man" such as men also employ.

Mr. Maurice writes:—"That measure of a man, which is not derived from his fallen nature, but from his angelic nature, is God's measure. The City which lieth foursquare is His City. He knows the measure of it" (p. 420).

Stuart notes: "It is an Angel who makes the measurement; and lest we might think it was a different measure from that in ordinary use ('of a man'), the writer guards us against such an error":—so Hengst., Dusterd., &c.

According to Volckmar "the golden reed" (ver. 15) regarded as the "measure of an Angel," measures by stadia; regarded as the "measure of a man" its unit is a cubit. Both numbers (the 12,000 stadia for the City, and the 144 cubits for its wall) are to be measured by both scales: and thus we get for the height of the "wall" (by Angels' measure) 12×12 stadia; and for the height of the City, which Volckmar makes to be 3×1000 —i. e., $3 \times 4 \times 250 = 12 \times 250$ —cubits (by the measure of a man).

18. And the building of the wall thereof] The term rendered "building" (ἐκδόμησις) is found elsewhere only in Josephus (Antt. xv. 9, 6), where it signifies the mole or break-water of the port of Cæsarea, built by Herod the Great. It is variously explained here to mean the 'superstructure' as opposed to the 'foundation,' ver. 19; or simply the 'materials,' what is built in the walls ("materies in murum inædificata, h. e. ex quo murus extructus erat." Grimm, in voc.).

[was] jasper:] (See vv. 11 for the omission of the verb). The building consisted of one material, "Jasper"; on which see ver. 11; ch. iv. 3.

and the city [was] pure gold like unto pure glass.] See on ch. iv. 6. The Gold (see vv. 11, and ver. 21) was like glass not merely in brilliancy but transparency.

Compare this description of the "New Jerusalem" with the cherished ideal of the Jews:—"For Jerusalem shall be built up with Sapphires and Emeralds and precious stone: thy walls and towers and battlements with pure Gold. And the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with Beryl and Carbuncle and stones of Ophir" (Tobit xiii. 16, 17). Cf. too, the apostrophe to the King of Tyre: "Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering, the Sardius, Topaz, and the Diamond, the Beryl, the Onyx, and the Jasper, the Sapphire, the Emerald, and the Carbuncle, and Gold" (Ezek. xxviii. 13).

19. The foundations of the wall of the city] Omit "And,"—see vv. 11. On the sense in which the "Foundations" are to be understood, see on ver. 14. Each separate "Foundation" consisted of one great precious stone going round the whole City, and underlying the entire wall;—not merely an ornament set into the foundation, but a "Foundation" itself.

[were] adorned with all manner of precious stones.] Gr. with every precious stone,—the noun is in the singular: see on ch. xv. 6. For the thought of the following description see Isai. liv. 11, 12 (cf. xxviii. 16): see also David's enumeration of the materials which he had accumulated for first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcadony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the Solomon's Temple (1 Chron. xxix. 2). The Foundation, notes Words., was garnished with 'every precious stone,' and these Twelve precious stones are specified, "indicating that the Twelve Apostolic Foundations present every spiritual grace bestowed by God upon His faithful servants, who are His Jewels (Mal. iii. 17)." As a contrast Babylon also and the "Harlot" are adorned "with gold, and precious stones and pearls." Compare ch. xvii. 4; xviii. 12, 16; and cf. infra, ver. 21.

The first foundation was jasper;] The same as the material of the superstructure, or wall resting on the Twelve Foundations,—see ver. 18. On the Jasper, see on ch. iv. 3; and cf. ver. 11. See Note B at the end of this chapter the second, sapphire;] Heorew, Sapphir (ספיר);—cf. Ex. xxiv. 10; Isai. liv. 11; Ezek. i. 26. In the case of no ancient gem has the attribution of the name been so much disputed as of the Sapphire, or "precious Corundum." Mr. King decides that the Sapphirus of the ancients was our Lapis-lazuli. Pliny describes it as opaque, and sprinkled with specks of gold ("Inest ei aliquando et aureus pulvis qualis in sapphiris. In its enim aurum punctis concludit. Cæruleæ et sapphiri . . . Corallo-achates guttis aureis Sapphiri modo sparsa"—Hist. Nat. xxxvii. 39, 54); and he states that it came from Media (i.e., Persia and Bockhara) whence the entire supply of Lapis-lazuli is brought to the present day. Epiphanius speaks of "the stone Sapphirus, like that of a dark blue beetle." Andreas (i.e., p. 134), who considers that St. Paul is signified by this stone, says that some call it Lazurium (τὸ λαζούριον), from its sky-blue colour. "Before the true precious stones were introduced from India, the Lapis-lazuli held the highest place in the estimation of the primitive nations of Asia and Greece; in fact it was almost the only stone known to them having beauty of colour to recommend it."—King, Precious Stones and Gems, p. 294. The modern Sapphire is the ancient Hyacinthus, rendered in the A.V., "Jacinth," see on ver. 20, and ch. ix. 17. "The modern name Sapphire is a mere epithet expressive of its colour: the ancient Sapphirus or Lapis-lazuli furnishing the paint ultramarine, sapphirinus came to signify 'azure,' exactly as 'Nila' the present Indian name of our Sapphire does."—King, Nat. Hist. of Precious Stones, p. 248.

the third, chalcadony;] "The Chalcadonius of Pliny (xxxvii. 30) was an inferior species of the Smaragdus (Emerald), so called from being found in the copper mines near Chalcedon . . . He describes them as small and brittle, changing their colour when moved about like the green feathers in the necks of peacocks and pigeons . . . It is evident that they were only crystals of transparent Chrysocolla" [native verdigris—a carbonate of copper] "still popularly termed 'the Copper-Emerald.' . . . It is difficult to trace the steps by which this name has been transferred from a substance of a brilliant green colour to one so totally distinct in all its characters as our "Chalcadony" (White Carnelian), a semi-opaque quartz of a milky tinge."—King, Precious Stones, p. 157.

the fourth, emerald;] See ver. 20, on the word "Beryl;" and also on ch. iv. 3.

20. the fifth, sardonyx;] "The most beautiful and rarest variety of Onyx, and that which was held in the greatest esteem by the ancients, for engraving into cameos" (Brande and Cox, Dict. of Science). Pliny (H. N. xxxvii. 23) defines this stone as originally signifying a white mark in a Sard, like the human nail placed upon flesh, and both of them transparent. "The Onyx is called from the resemblance of its white and yellow veins to the shades in the human finger nail . . . Three colours were considered essential to the idea of Sardonyx. . . . The early Greeks make no distinction between the Onyx and the Sardonyx. According to Köhler, when the red, brown, or yellow ground is covered by white veins irregularly disposed, it is called Onyx; if they are in regular strata, one over the other, it becomes the Sardonyx."—King, l.c., pp. 254, 257, 302. Achilles Tatius (ii. 1) describes such a gem, of which the base was black, the middle white, the rest red as fire.

the sixth a sard;] See on ch. iv. 3.

the seventh, chrysolyte;] Or oriental Topaz; see below on "Topaz." The description of Pliny "translucent with golden lustre" ("aureo fulgore translucentis"—H. N. xxxvii. 42) applies to no other gem so exactly as to this: "The Arabian Chrysolithi were most probably the modern Jacinths, for Pliny's account of them applies exactly to the latter gem . . . Chrysolithi, whatever they may have been, were in high esteem with the Romans."—King, l.c., p. 165, &c. See Ezek. xxviii. 13.

the eighth, beryl;] Pliny (H. N. xxxvii. 20) states that many were of opinion that the "Beryl" was of the same or a similar nature with the Emerald. "This opinion," writes Mr. King, "has been proved correct by tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate modern analysis, the component parts of each, in the same proportions, being Silica, Alumina, and Glucina, coloured by the oxide of Chrome. . . . The Emerald is distinguished by its peculiar 'emerald-green' which it derives from a small proportion of Chrome: all the varieties of other colours, tinged, more or less, yellow or blue, or altogether colourless, are Beryls. . . . "Beryllus is the Low-Latin term for a magnifying glass: hence the German 'Brille,' a pair of spectacles."—ib., p. 130, &c.

the ninth, topas;] In colour a yellowish green,—our Peridot: "This gem derived its name from the island in the Red Sea, thirty miles off the main land, where it was first discovered. . . . The Roman lapidaries accurately discriminated the two varieties, the Chrysopteron, our Chrysolite; and the Prasoides, our Peridot; the latter 'aiming at the exact imitation of the colour of the leek-leaf.' Although the same chemically, both being Silicates of Magnesia coloured by a Protoxide of Iron, yet, from the jeweller's point of view, there is a great difference between the Chrysolite and the Peridot. The former is much harder, and the yellow in it greatly predominates over the green. . . . In the Peridot green is the predominant colour, but slightly modified by yellow. . . . The modern Topaz is a totally distinct substance from the Topazius, . . . it was totally unknown to the ancients."—King, l.c., p. 336, &c.

the tenth, chrysoprase;] This word does not occur in the LXX.; elsewhere it is found only in Pliny (H. N. xxxvii. 20,—"Fulgore vicinum genus huic [beryllo] est, sed pallidius, et a quibusdam proprii generis existimatum"), who accurately distinguishes the varieties of beryl. The most admired "emulates the green tint of pure sea-water," the modern aqua-marine. Next is the Chryso-beryl, in which this green is tinged with gold,—probably our Indian Chrysolite. There was a still paler kind known by the name of Chrysoprase, a variety only of the Chryso-beryl: "Most certainly it was not our Chrysoprase, silica-coloured a beautiful apple-green by Oxide of Nickel."—King, l.c., pp. 130, 163. In his Nat. Hist. (p. 335) Mr. King adds that here, for "Chryso-prasus," "Marbodius has evidently read Chryso-paston [which is the reading of the cursive MSS. 40, 50, 92], a dark blue studded with gold dust:—if correct, the three shades of blue would then follow each other in order."

the eleventh, jacinth;] The modern Sapphire,—Gr. Hyacinthus, see on ch. ix. 17. Of no ancient appellation, notes Mr. King, has the proper attribution been so much and so variously disputed as of this (Nat. Hist. p. 242). [Düsterd. states incorrectly that in Ex. xxviii. 19 (LXX.) the Cod. Alex. gives, for the Hebr. Lesbem (לִשְׁבֵם), ιάκινθος in place of "ligure" (Λιγύριον)]. Epiphanius suspected that the ligure of the LXX. (the Lyncurium of Theophrastus) was the Hyacinthus of his own time, because so important a stone could not have been omitted by Moses. Here we find the first germ of the subsequent confusion between two very different things. There can be no doubt, observes Mr. King (ib., p. 217), that the Lyncurium of Theophrastus "is our Jacinth (Zircon), the yellow Jargoon, distinguished by having for its chemical base the earth Zirconia peculiar to this family. This exactly resembles Amber in colour."

"That the Hyacinthus of the ancients is the Sapphire of the moderns [see on ver. 19], will be perfectly evident to any mineralogist who will carefully peruse the minute description of the same gem given by Solinus [who lived two centuries after Pliny]. The modern name Sapphire is a mere epithet expressive of its colour."—King, ib., p. 194. See Note C at the end of this chapter.

the twelfth, amethyst.] Violet or purple. "The common Amethyst, and the stone generally designated among the ancients by this name, is nothing more than rock crystal coloured purple by manganese of iron; in modern mineralogy, Amethystine Quartz:"—see King, l.c., p. 60. Pliny thus distinguishes this stone from the preceding: "Differentia hæc, quod ille emicans in Amethysto fulgor violaceus dilutus est in Hyacintho" (H. N. xxxvii. 41). The name Amethyst, though most probably a mere corruption of the Eastern name for the stone, a trace of which seems preserved in Ex. xxviii. 19, in the Hebrew Achlamab (אֶחְלָמָב),—perhaps the true origin is the Persian 'Sbemesi,'—was interpreted by the Greeks as though formed from α and μέθυ, 'wine-less':—see King, ibid. ("Majorum vanitas ebrietati eas resistere promittit, et inde appellatas."—Pliny, H. N., xxxvii. 40).

Different interpretations have been given of the precious stones themselves, of their order, and of their symbolical meaning; but these interpretations are purely arbitrary; e.g. according to that which is most usually adopted,—the Jasper, the last stone of the Breastplate (Ex. xxviii. 20) and which is the first "Foundation" here, unites the Alpha and the Omega; the ending the Old, and the beginning the New.

21. each one of the several gates was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

22 And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 ^{1s. 60. 19.} And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 ^{1s. 60. 1.} And the nations of them was of one pearl:] (On this idiom, cf. John ii. 6). For the word "Pearl," see on ch. xvii. 4. In Isai. liv. 12, the "gates" are "carbuncles." Here, notes I. Williams, "all are of the same celestial substance, as on every side of the world the entrance is but of one kind, the knowledge of God in Christ,—the Incarnation, which the pearl signifies,—the one pearl of great price" (p. 462). In Bava Bathra f. 75. 1 (see Wetst.), it is said that God will place gems and pearls ("gemmas et margaritas") thirty cubits square, and hallowed out to the height of twenty cubits, and to the breadth of ten cubits, in the gates of Jerusalem." J. D. Michaelis is embarrassed by the size of such pearls.

St. Augustine expounds this passage:—"The Apostles and Prophets are "Foundations," because their authority is the support of our weakness. They are the 'Gates,' because through them we enter into the kingdom of God; and while by their means we enter, we enter through Christ, Himself the 'Gate.' The one 'Gate' is Christ, and the Twelve 'Gates' are Christ; for Christ dwells in the Twelve 'Gates.' There is a deep mystery in the number Twelve. . . . The Twelve is here put for universality, as spoken of all who sit in judgment (Matt. xix. 28); in the same manner all who enter the City enter by one or other of the Twelve 'Gates.' These are the Four quarters of the globe. Our Lord declares that He will call His sheep from the Four winds; from all the Four winds the Church is called. It is called in the Trinity, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost:—Four, then, being thrice taken, the Twelve is found."—In Psalms. lxxxvii.

and the street of the city] Gr. the broadway,—cf. ch. xi. 8; xxii. 2. The word is used collectively; all the streets compose one ideal "street":—so also in ch. xxii. 2.

was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.] Or transparent as glass—see on ver. 18. On the Greek word rendered "transparent," and introduced into the text by Erasmus, see vv. 11. The transparency of glass is the sign of its purity; and such is here the purity of the Gold.

22. And I saw no temple therein:] Or "Sanctuary"—see on ch. xi. 1. As noted on ver. 16 the City is in form a perfect cube, like the Holy of Holies in the Temple of Jerusalem. The entire City is now that which the Holy of Holies had formerly been—the locality of the immediate Presence of God. The Temple and the Temple-service have hitherto supplied the symbols which denote the condition of the Church on earth before the Judgment. This has now ceased; the Temple is no more; there is none seen in Heaven. The Redeemed being all Priests (see ch. i. 6; v. 10; xx. 6) unto God, the New Jerusalem is without Temple, being all Temple. On the necessary imperfection of the earthly Sanctuary, see Heb. x. 1.

Note:—In ch. iii. 12; vii. 15, the righteous are spoken of as serving God in the heavenly Temple,—the sense thereby conveyed being no more than that they dwell in the Divine Presence. Here the description enters into details; the righteous, when all is accomplished, "shall see His face" (ch. xxii. 4); there shall be no inner "Sanctuary,"—no veil between God and the Redeemed.

for the Lord God the Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple thereof.] GOD is now "all in all" (1 Cor. xv. 28):—"a proof of Christ's Divinity."—Words.

23. And the city hath no need of the sun, Compare Isai. lx. 19, 20.

neither of the moon, to shine upon it:] See vv. 11. For the construction (with iva) see Intro. § 7, IV., (f). Cf. John i. 19.

for the glory of God did lighten it,] See ver. 11:—the immediate Presence, the Shekinah. The promise, in ch. vii. 15, 16, is here fulfilled: there the Redeemed serve God "day and night;" but here, in this final description of the blessed, it is no longer amid the alternations of light and darkness. In ch. vii. 16, there is still need of a sun; here, there is need of neither sun nor moon. The true nature and essence of GOD ("God is light"—1 John i. 5) is at length discerned.

and the lamp thereof [is] the Lamb.] Or, the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb, the lamp thereof.] The glory of God is the Sun which illumines the New Jerusalem; and His light is reflected from the Lamb, Who is "the brightness,"—"the effulgence,"—"the reflexion" (ἀνὰ γλαύρα), of the Father's Glory (Heb. i. 3). See also ch. vii. 17.

which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

Compare the striking lines of Kosegarten (1758-1818) quoted in Trench's Sacred Lat. Poetry, p. 314:—

“Dir scheint, O Stadt, der Sonne Antlitz nicht, Und nicht ihr bleiches Bild;
Es leuchtet dir ein himmlisch Angesicht, Das wunderbarlich und mild.”

It is unsound theology to refer, with some, “the glory of God” to the Sun; and to regard the Lamb as corresponding to the Moon, which throughout Scripture is regarded as “the lesser light.”

St. John now assumes the tone of the elder Prophets,—see Ps. lxxii. 10, 11; Isai. lx. 3, 11; lxvi. 12.

24. And the nations shall walk amidst the light thereof:] Omit “of them which are saved.” On the confusion which the manuscript of Erasmus has here introduced into the Textus Receptus, and which is retained in the A. V., see vv. ll. Reuss would account as follows for this confusion in the text:—He considers it to be “un trait bien curieux” that “the nations” (i.e., according to him the heathen) should walk in the City of God, because there are now “no other dwellers on the earth than the inhabitants of the New Jerusalem, all previous national or religious distinctions having been effaced.”—the scribes felt this difficulty; and they tried to get rid of it by writing “les peuples (c’est à dire la foule) des sauvés.”

We may also translate, “by the light of it;” or (as Words.) “through her light.” The expression in the text (διὰ τοῦ φ.), notes Düsterd., “gives the picturesque conception of the Heathen taking their way through the midst of the light which streams forth from the City illumined by the glory of God.” Cf. Isai. ix. 2; lx. 3. Alf. renders “by means of her light,”—“i. e., she shall be so bright as to serve for sun and moon to the world that then is, and her inhabitants. For such inhabitants are clearly supposed; see below and ch. xxii. 2.”

By “the Nations” here—as in ch. xxii. 2—all the “Nations” of the Redeemed are to be understood, in the sense of ch. v. 9; vii. 9:—see on ch. xv. 3; and on ver. 26. Hengst. insists that we must not understand “Nations” generally;—as ἔθνη, in the usage of the Apocalypse “are always beaten nations in their natural or Christianized state (see on ch. xx. 3);” here, only “converted heathen.” Ebrard refers to those of the “beaten,” outside the City and on the “New Earth,” who are nevertheless written in the Book of Life,—who while on earth had striven against sin, but had not come to a knowledge of the Saviour,—and who now, after their Resurrection from the dead, become willing subjects of God and the Lamb: see on ch. xx. 13. To the same effect Züllig.

and the kings of the earth do bring their glory into it.] (Omit, “and honour,”—see vv. ll.). “Their” refers solely to the “Kings,” the homage of “the Nations” is distinct,—see ver. 26. Some (e.g. Züllig) refer “their” to both “the Nations” and “the Kings.”

There will still be “Kings” writes Hengst.: “As among the Angels there are distinctions of rank and order (see ch. viii. 2), so shall there be among glorified men. . . . It is contrary to all sound feeling that a David, that a Charles the Great, should there be lost without distinction among the general mass;” and he refers to the position assigned to the Apostles in vv. 14, 19. Words. notes: “Some ‘Kings of the Earth’ will remain Christian unto the end and will not join in the rebellion against Christ (ch. xvi. 14; xviii. 9; xix. 19). Kings and nations (ch. xx. 8) are before mentioned as rising up against Christ, but here they are tributary to Him.” Words. is referring to “the heavenly Jerusalem;” but Millenarians interpret differently,—e.g. Alford, who explains: “The Kings of the earth (no longer hostile to Christ) bring;” &c. (see on ver. 26). And I. Williams: “All that partakes of the true anointing shall thither be brought: ‘the Kings of the East’ spoken of in the sixth Vial; the many crowns, with the King of kings. Whatever is precious, whatever is truly great and good upon earth . . . shall be brought into that City; all that the Prophets have spoken of the riches of the Gentiles shall flow into it; the Wise Men of the East with their first-fruits shall be there, the special gift of faith, more precious than of gold that perisheth” (p. 466).

Hence it appears that writers are divided as to whether the heavenly state is meant, or a glorious state of the Church upon earth. When this verse was applied in his day to the Church on earth, St. Augustine’s comment on the opinion was: “Hoc de isto tempore accipere quo regnant [cives Ejus] cum Rege suo mille annis, impudentiæ nimis mihi videtur” (De Civ. Dei, xx. 17). Comparing such passages as “And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and Kings to the brightness of Thy rising,” Stuart observes that St. John “conceives of the New World after the similitude of the old, i.e., as having a great metropolis, and all lands being in subjection to it.” Burger more suitably refers to the contrast between the New Jerusalem and Ancient

⁴ Is. 60.
11.

25 ⁴ And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

Babylon. To Babylon flowed all earthly glory hostile to Heaven;—to the New Jerusalem the Kings of the "New Earth" offer all their magnificence to the honour of God and the Lamb.

25. And the gates thereof shall in no wise be shut by day (for there shall be no night there):] The reason is added parenthetically for not saying "day and night," as in ch. iv. 8; vii. 15; xii. 10; xiv. 11; xx. 10. "There shall be no night there" because of the Divine glory, vv. 11, 23; ch. xxii. 5;—cf. Zech. xiv. 7. The open gates are an emblem of perfect security: "What the ancient poets sang of as a vision of the Golden Age, with its 'apertis otia portis,' will then be fully realized" (Words.). Many refer to Isai. lx. 11, to prove that the reason why the gates stand open is to allow the nations to bring in their treasures to the New Jerusalem,—so Hengst., Düsterd.

26. and they shall bring the glory and the honour of the nations into it:] The verb is to be taken impersonally—cf. ch. x. 11; xii. 6: so Bengel, De Wette, Düsterd., Alf., &c. Others (Züllig, Ewald, Bleek) make "the Kings" (ver 24) the subject of the verb.

For the inclusion of "the Nations" among the Blessed, see ch. v. 9; vii. 9; and cf. on ver. 24.

Alf., having noted at the beginning of this chapter that "the whole" of "the remaining portion of the Book is subsequent to the General Judgment," nevertheless observes here: "This is set forth to us, that, besides the glorified Church, there shall still be dwelling on the renewed earth, nations organized under kings, and (ch. xxii. 2) saved by means of the influences of the heavenly

City." De Wette asks, "Why do not these kings and nations dwell in the heavenly City?" But assuredly they do so dwell; and as Words. concludes:—"All will dwell together as brethren, as children of the same Heavenly Father, in one Everlasting Home (John xiv. 2)." See on ver. 24.

Delitzsch mentions that Erasmus, misled by the transcribers of his manuscript, omitted this verse in his earlier editions. Hence this verse did not appear in any of the original editions of Luther's translation:—Handschr. Funde, s. 51.

27. and there shall in no wise enter into it anything unclean,] See vv. 11: Gr. anything common—cf. Acts x. 14; and Mark vii. 2. See also Isai. lii. 1: and on the use here of expressions taken from the Law, see above on ver. 8. "The enumeration is comprised in the number three" (Hengst.).

Compare ver. 8; ch. ix. 21; xxii. 15.

neither he that doeth an abomination] See vv. 11. Gr. and he that doeth. On the word "abomination," cf. ch. xvii. 4, 5; and see on ver. 8.

and a lie:] All such had been "cast into the Lake of Fire,"—ch. xx. 15. There seems to be a special reference here to the previous existence of Antichrist,—cf. 1 John ii. 22; 2 Thess. ii. 11. See on ch. xiv. 5; xxii. 15. For the contrast, see John iii. 21.

but only they which are written in the book of life of the Lamb.] See ch. xiii. 8; and cf. ch. iii. 5; xx. 12, 15.

The thought borrowed from Dan. xii. 1 ("At that time Thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the Book") is preserved to the last.

ADDITIONAL NOTES on Chap. XXI.

NOTE A ON VER. 1—THE CONNEXION WITH THE PREVIOUS SCENES.

1. In the earlier part (ch. xvii.—ch. xx.) of the seventh Vision of the Revelation Proper (see the remarks introductory to ch. xvii.) the enemies of God, of the Lamb, of the Church, have been judged; and Satan has been overthrown. In the concluding part (ch. xxi.—ch. xxii. 5),—the last and highest object of Apocalyptic Prophecy,—the accomplishment of the mystery of God (ch. x. 7), and the fulfilment of the promises to the Seven Churches (ch. ii.; ch. iii.) are presented to us, in contrast to the judgment of condemnation described summarily in ch. xx. 15 ("Finito Iudicio, quo pronuntiavit iudicandos malos, restat ut etiam de bonis dicat." August. De Civ. Dei, xx. 16). In the picture here given of the New Jerusalem we have once more before us the descriptions given in Isai. lx., and in Ezek. xl.-xlvii. St. John, however, follows the order in Ezekiel, who, after his account of Gog and Magog, exhibits, in Vision, the Holy City and the Temple, and the return to it of God's glory.

As to the connexion here Millennarians differ:—

—According to Auberlen, the 144,000 sealed from the Twelve Tribes of Israel (ch. vii. 4) form the nucleus of glorified humanity, to which, during the Millennium, an innumerable company of the Gentiles are to be united in heaven; while upon earth, the world of nations is added to the kingdom of Israel. The glorified Church in heaven, and the Church on earth, although separate during the Millennium, are yet connected with each other; and to this Christ refers in Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 28-30; (see above on vv. 12, 14). “After the Millennial Kingdom, after the universal Judgment, when Heaven and Earth are renewed, and the New Jerusalem descends from above, then all limitations shall disappear and cease” (p. 356).

Alford places ch. xxi. and ch. xxii. subsequent to the universal Judgment; and he takes them to describe the bliss of Christ's people with Him in the eternal kingdom of God, which is situated on the purified and renewed earth. He does not understand the annihilation of the old Creation, but the passing away of its outward form, and its renewal to a more glorious one; and this by the means described in 2 Pet. iii. 10, through “a renovation by fire.” To the same effect De Burgh (p. 371): “The creation of the new heaven and earth, and the descent of the New Jerusalem take place after the Millennial reign of Christ;” and yet, he adds, “almost all who have had their minds turned to the subject” look upon ch. xxi., and ch. xxii. as “but a recapitulation of ch. xx. for the purpose of fuller detail;”—the renovation of heaven and earth, and of Jerusalem, being “parallel with the Millennium, and taking place at the beginning of the Thousand Years.” “It is certain,” however, concludes De Burgh, that “the New Heavens and the New Earth come into existence after the general conflagration” (2 Pet. iii.).¹

In reply to the two latter opinions, Dr. Brown (l.c., p. 273, &c.) brings together the texts 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10-13; and Rev. xx. 11; xxi.

1:—If the “conflagration,” described occurs before the Millennium, what, he asks, is to become of the inhabitants of the earth? (1) As to De Burgh [and Alf.] (to whom are to be added “Mr. Tyso and Mr. Ogilvy”) who place the “conflagration” a Thousand Years after Christ's coming, how can they explain St. Peter's words: “The day of the Lord will come as a thief, in the which the heavens shall pass away,” &c.? To this question De Burgh (cf. pp. 375, 376) answers, that this “Day of the Lord” is a Thousand Years long, and as it is only ‘in the day,’ the “conflagration” may be as well at the end as at the beginning of it,—an explanation opposed to the Apostle's object, which is to warn scoffers who would deride the expectation of Christ's coming, that the conflagration, like the Deluge of old, will burst upon them when least expected,—Luke xvii. 27. (2) As to the other class of expositors, who make the Second Advent and the “conflagration” to be contemporaneous, and both to be pre-millennial,—Many restrict the “conflagration” “to the prophetic earth, or the territory of old Rome;”—Others to the vast territory of the Papal Babylon, and the goddess of its inhabitants” (as Elliott iv. 217-227); or to “all Christendom become Papal:”—“Papal Europe only is flung into the crucible,” writes Mr. A. Bonar (Redempt., 117-118). (3) Some again suppose that the “conflagration,” like the Judgment, will be broken up into two or more “conflagrations” on a small scale (see Mr. Bickersteth, Guide, p. 284; Mr. Brooks, Elem. of Propb. Int., p. 239). As to what becomes of the existing inhabitants of the earth, “a modest conjecture” of Mede “is now the general understanding of Pre-millennialists:—viz. that “the rapture of the saints” (1 Thess. iv. 17) is intended to preserve them “during the conflagration of the earth and the works thereof,” as Noah and his family from the Deluge (p. 776). Dan. iii. 25 is also quoted; and the words “I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand.”—Is. li. 16.

As to other interpretations of ch. xxi., it must suffice to note that Grotius refers to the time after Constantine, when the earth was no longer steeped in the blood of martyrs;—that Vitruvius sees the Church renewed on earth, a completion of the Reformation;—that Alcasar sees the future glory of the Church of Rome.

NOTE B ON VER. 19—THE TWELVE FOUNDATIONS.

Mr. King, in his different works on Precious Stones and Gems has given a consistent explanation of St. John's description here. He assumes that the Foundations of the Wall consist of Twelve courses of precious ¹ “During the Millennial Reign the inhabitants of the earth will be still in mortal flesh, the great object of Christ's reign on Earth during this Thousand Years being to carry Christianity into effect in this world, to gather to Himself all the nations of the earth, and to bring about their conversion” (De Burgh, ib., p. 373). See on ch. xiv. 6; xv. 4.

Stones; and notices the fact that these Stones are not arranged here in the same order as in the "Rationale" (Ex. xxviii. 15, Vulg.) or "Breastplate" (Hebr. יָשָׁרִי, LXX. λογείον) worn by the Jewish High Priest, described in Ex. xxviii. 17-21. Mr. King goes on to say:—

"Instead of this, St. John has most ingeniously disposed them according to their various shades of the same colour, as the following list will demonstrate, taking them in order from the bottom upwards:—

(1) Jaspis, dark green. (2) Sapphirus, blue [our Lapis-lazuli]. (3) Chalcedony, a greenish sort of Emerald.

(4) Smaragdus, bright green. (5) Sardonyx, red and white. (6) Sardius, bright red.

(7) Chrysolite, golden yellow. (8) Beryl, bluish green. (9) Topazius, yellowish green.

(10) Chrysoprassus, apple-green. (11) Hyacinthus, blue. (12) Amethyst, violet or purple."

"Neither is this order of the colours suggested by the rainbow, as their heavenly position would naturally suggest,—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, purple, violet. Again, St. John being so close an imitator of Ezekiel, one might have presupposed him guided by the prophet's most poetical apostrophe to the King of Tyrus (xxviii. 13). . . . So minute an acquaintance with the nicest shades of colour of the precious Stones will more forcibly impress the reader, if he should attempt to arrange from memory, and by his own casually acquired knowledge alone, twelve gems, or even half that number, according to their proper tints. . . . The 'sainted Seer' alludes in other passages to the proper colours of precious stones in a very technical manner: 'He that sat on the throne' [ch. iv. 3] was like the Jaspis and the Sardius, and was crowned with a rainbow like the Smaragdus; whilst the light within the Holy City [ch. xxi. 11] was like 'a very precious stone, a Jaspis resembling Crystal,'—or the green of the Plasma united with the brilliancy and lucidity of the Crystal,—by which he probably sought to distinguish the true Emerald, ever a special favourite with the Jews. Such allusions display that exact knowledge of particulars only possessed by persons either dealing in precious stones, or from other circumstances obliged to have a practical acquaintance with their nature, which could never have been found in a Galilean fisherman; unless [interposes Mr King] we choose to cut the knot of the difficulty with the ever-ready sword of verbal inspiration."—Nat. Hist. of precious Stones, p. 336.

It is to be noted here that the expression "verbal inspiration" is peculiarly unsuitable. St. John assuredly, like every other Jew, was familiar with the names of the precious Stones enumerated by Moses and Ezekiel. The upholder of the Divine Inspiration of the Bible maintains that the same influence which enlightened the native faculties, and guided the acquired knowledge of all the Sacred Writers, directed, in the present instance, that scientific selection of which Mr. King has given so clear, and learned an account. The phrase which correctly describes such an influence is "Dynamic Inspiration"; and of this no better illustration can be adduced than the language of the Seer in the present passage:—see Lee On Inspiration, Lect. iv.

I. Andreas would assign each precious stone, in accordance with ver. 14, to some one of the Apostles:—

(1) The Jasper is St. Peter; (2) The Sapphire, St. Paul (διὰ τοῦτον, εὐκότος τῷ σῶματι, ἐξ οὗ φασὶ καὶ τὸ λαζούριον γίνεσθαι, τὸν μακρίον Παῦλον οἶμαι σημαίνεισθαι); (3) The Chalcedony, St. Andrew; (4) The Emerald, St. John; (5) The Sardonyx, St. James; (6) The Sard, St. Philip; (7) The Chrysolite, St. Bartholomew; (8) The Beryl, St. Thomas; (9) The Topaz, St. Matthew; (10) The Chrysoprassus, St. Thaddeus; (11) The Hyacinth, St. Simon Zelotes; (12) The Amethyst, St. Matthias.

Andreas refers for this classification to Epiphanius, who discusses in a special treatise (De xii. Gemmis) the nature of the precious Stones in Aaron's Breastplate, but makes no reference to the Twelve Foundations in the Apocalypse. Epiphanius also classifies the Gems according to the Tribes of Israel,—e.g. to Reuben, the Sard; to Simcon, the Topaz, &c.:—see Opp. vol. ii. p. 231.

Coming to modern times:—

II. Bengel places the Apostles in the following order:—(1) Jasper, St. Peter; (2) Sapphire, St. John; (3) Chalcedony, St. James. (4) Emerald, St. Andrew; (5) Sardonyx, St. Philip; (6) Sard, St. Thomas.

(7) Chrysolite, St. Bartholomew; (8) Beryl, St. Matthew; (9) Topaz, St. James, the son of Alphæus.

(10) Chrysoprassus, St. Simon Zelotes; (11) Hyacinth, St. Jude the brother of James; (12) Amethyst, St. Matthias.¹

Stern distributes as follows:—(1) The Jasper is the foundation on which Christ has ¹ Mr. Streeter (in his Precious Stones and Gems, 1877) gives another classification:

"1.—The hard and solid Jasper, representing the Rock of the Church, was the emblem of Peter.

2.—The bright blue Sapphire was emblematic of the heavenly faith of Andrew.

3.—The Emerald, of the pure and gentle John.

4.—The white Chalcedony, of the loving James.

5.—The friendly Sardonyx, of Philip.

6.—The red Carnelian, of the martyr Bartholomew.

built His Church—St. Peter; (2) The Sapphire,—St. Andrew; (3) The Chalcedony,—St. James the son of Zebedee; (4) The Emerald,—St. John; (5) The Sardonyx,—St. Philip; (6) The Sard,—St. Bartholomew; (7) The Chrysolite,—St. Matthew; (8) The Beryl,—St. Thomas; (9) The Topaz,—St. James the Less; (10) The Chrysoprase,—St. Thaddæus; (11) The Jacinth,—St. Simon Zelotes; (12) The Amethyst,—St. Matthias. A vain attempt this at an explanation, notes Bisping.

II. Ebrard justly observes that the twelve-fold colour of these precious Stones denotes symbolically how the one light of the Gospel is variously refracted through the medium of Apostolic teaching; and yet he seeks (as do also Vitringa, Züllig, Ewald, &c.) to identify the various precious Stones enumerated here with those in the High Priest's Breastplate. This attempt of Ebrard is not successful. He takes the Stones of the Breastplate as represented in the LXX. version of Ex. xxviii. 17-20. In the LXX., however, Jasper is substituted in ver. 18 for the jabalom or diamond (see on Rev. ii. 17), although the Hebrew expressly gives "Jasper" (יָסָפֶר) in ver. 20. The order of the Stones, moreover, is entirely different:—e.g. in the Breastplate the Sapphire is the fifth stone, and the Jasper the twelfth; while in the Apocalypse, the Jasper is the first Foundation, and the Sapphire the second;—and it is only by an arbitrary interchange of the four "triads" of Stones in the Breastplate, and of the different stones in each "triad," that Ebrard can procure any approach to identity. Even for this he must assume that the three Stones in the Breastplate which do not occur here—the Antbrax, [LXX., Hebr. 7B], Ex. xxviii. 18], the Ligure, the Agate (ἀγάτης),—correspond respectively to the Jacinth, the Chrysoprase, and the Chalcedony. Compare the variety also in the order of the precious stones enumerated in Ezek. xxviii. 13;—see the note in loc.

Züllig (Excursus on Rev. xxi. 19, 20, B. ii. s. 456, &c.) goes farther still than Ebrard. He seeks to assign a particular precious stone to each Tribe of Israel, in the order of the gates of the New Jerusalem as given in Ezek. xlvi. 31-34. He attains the following result: (1) The Jasper corresponds to Ben- jamin; (2) The Sapphire to Dan; (3) The Chalcedony to Simoon; (4) The Emerald to Issachar; (5) The Sardonyx to Zebulun; (6) The Sard to Gad; (7) The Chrysolite to Asher; (8) The Beryl to Naphtali; (9) The Topaz to Reuben; (10) The Chrysoprase to Judab; (11) The Jacinth to Levi; (12) The Amethyst to Joseph. This arbitrary arrangement begins on the East side in Ezekiel's list of gates (see on ch. vii. 5), and there with the middle gate; it then goes round in the order South, West, North,—ending with the first gate in the East side, that of Joseph.

III. De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd. agree in denying such applications to either the Patriarchs, or the Apostles individually. And Hengstenberg thus sums up his interpretation: "So that we must here rest in the conclusion, that by the variety in the precious Stones is symbolized the richness of the glorious Gifts of God, which unfolded themselves in the Apostles."

IV. Some ancient writers (e.g. Arethas, Beda, Cæcumenius, Ludolphus, C. à Lapide) give a mystical and spiritual meaning to each of the Stones. The Jasper is the brightness of faith; the Sapphire of hope; and so forth: cf. St. Gregory, Moral. in Job. xxviii. 16; but, as I. Williams notes, all such attempts are vain. The idea is well expressed by Words. that "in the variety and beauty of the precious Stones, is symbolized the πολυποίκιλος σοφία of God (Eph. iii. 10)."

There is doubtless here an order Divinely intended—an order best expressed in the words of the ancient Hymn:

"Suis coaptantur locis Per Manum artificis."

[On these precious Stones, see Pliny, H. N. xxxvii.; Epiphanius, De xii Gemmis Rationalis, t. ii. p. 225, Ed. Petav.; Marbodius, De Lapidibus pretiosis Enchir.; Faustino Corsi, Pietri Antiche, Roma 1828, p. 127, &c.]

NOTE C ON VER. 20—JACINTH, HYACINTHUS.

The name Jacinth has been transferred, as follows, to the modern gem from the ancient Hyacinthus which has thereby totally lost its original designation:—'Jacinth,' the French 'Hyacinthe,' comes to us from the Italian 'Giacinto,' formed, according to the usual rule of that language, from the Latin 'Hyacinthus' (King, Pr. Stones, p. 220). Pliny writes: "Multum ab [amethysto] distat Hyacinthus, ab vicino tamen colore descendens. Differentia hæc est, quod ille emicans in Amethysto fulgor violaceus diluitur in Hyacintho, primoque adspectu gratus evanescit antequam satiet, adeoque non implet oculos ut pæne non attingat, marcescens celerius nominis

7.—The Chrysolite, pure as sunlight, of Matthias.

8.—The indefinite Beryl, of the doubting Thomas.

9.—The Topaz, of the delicate James the younger.

10.—The Chrysoprase, of the serene and trustful Thaddæus.

11.—The Amethyst, of Matthew the Apostle.

12.—The pink Hyacinth, of the sweet-tempered Simon of Cana"—(p. 19).

New Test.—VOL. IV.

G G G

sui flore."—H. N. xxxvii. 41. "What this flower (the Hyacinth) was," adds Mr. King, "is fully as much a matter of dispute among the botanists, as is the nature of the gem with the mineralogists." Pliny (H. N. xxi. 97) writes: "Hyacinthus in Gallia maxime provenit; hoc ibi fuco hyssginum tinguitur:"—the dye hyssginum is usually translated blue. "Sprengel defines it to be the common gladiolus, an explanation overthrown by Pliny's distinction: 'Post hanc gladiolus comitatus hyacinthis.' Many others agree with La Chaux in considering it to be the tiger lily, with whom sides Milton, who has

'Like to the sanguine flower inscribed with woe.' A few make it to be the larkspur, a purple flower. . . . My own opinion, amidst this diversity, rather inclines to the blue fleur-de-lys, the blossom of which lasts but for a day, and thus answers to one of Pliny's characters of the disputed flower" (see Solinus, Polybistor, c. xxx.):—Nat. Hist. p. 243.

In Ex. xxv. 4 the three colours of the Tabernacle are "blue [Hebr. כָּתֹמֶת] and purple, and scarlet" (LXX., ἰάκινθον καὶ πορφύραν καὶ κόκκινον):—see the Note on Ex. xxv. 4; and on Rev. ix. 17.

CHAPTER XXII.

Nothing may be added to the word of God, nor taken therefrom.

1 The river of the water of life. 2 The tree of life. 5 The light of the city of God is himself. 9 The angel will not be worshipped. 18

AND he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, [Ver. 1 om. καθάρων. Ver. 2 ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐκείθεν [Cf. John xix. 18; Ezek. xlvii. 7, 12, LXX., ἐνθεν καὶ ἐνθεν. ℔ has merely ἐνθεν καί,—"excidit versus quo scripta erant ἐνθεν ξύλ. (ω.),"—Tischend.].—om. ἐνα. Ver. 3 κατάθεμα [T. R. κατανάθεμα, "eine erasmische Erfindung,"—Delitzsch]. Ver. 5 οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι.—[A reads ἔξουσιν].—φωτὸς λύχνου.—[A, P read φῶς ἡλίου.].—φωτίσει.—ἐπ' αὐτούς. Ver. 6 ὁ Κύρ.—τῶν πνευμάτων τῶν προφητῶν. Ver. 7 καὶ ἰδοὺ. Ver. 8 ὁ ἀκούων καὶ βλέπων ταῦτα. Ver. 9 om. γάρ (inserted without any authority by Er.). Ver. 10 ὁ καιρὸς γάρ, in place of οἱ ὁ καιρ. Ver. 11 καὶ ὁ ῥυπαρὸς ῥυπανθήτω ἐπὶ [These words, omitted from his MS., Er. supplied after the Vulg. (et qui in sordibus est sordescat adibuc) by καὶ ὁ ῥυπῶν ῥυπωσάτω (sic) ἔτι.—I omits all from ἀδυσκιάτω ἔτι to καὶ ὁ ὁστος κ. τ. λ.].—δικαιοσύνην ποιησάτω [Here Er. rendered the justificetur of the Vulg. by δικαιοσύνην]. Ver. 12 om. the 1st καί.—ἐστιν αὐτοῦ. Ver. 13 om. εἰμι.—ἡ ἀρχὴ καὶ τὸ τέλος (These words are to be read after ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος, from both of which A omits ὁ). Ver. 14 οἱ πλύνοντες τὰς στολὰς αὐτῶν [So ℔, A, Vulg.;—B, 1, Cop. read οἱ ποιοῦντες τὰς στολὰς αὐτοῦ. P is defective in vv. 7–21]. Ver. 15 om. δέ.—πᾶς φύλων. Ver. 16 [A reads ἐν τ. ἐκκλ.,—℔, B ἐπὶ,—I omits the prep.].—om. τοῦ before Δαυεὶδ.

[After Δαυεὶδ the codex of Erasmus breaks off; and he supplied the rest of the chapter by his own re-translation of the Vulgate. In his first edition (1516) he writes "Quamquam in calce hujus libri nonnulla verba reperi apud nostros, quæ aberant in Græcis exemplaribus, ea tamen ex Latinis adjecimus":—see Introductio § 8. Thus in ver. 16 he rendered the et matutina of the Vulg. by καὶ ὀρθρινός, for which we must read with ℔, A, B (cf. ch. ii. 28) ὁ πρωινός,—before which καί (found only in A) is to be omitted]. Ver. 17 ἔρχου twice.—ἐρχέσθω.—om. καί before ὁ θείων.—λαβέτω ὕδωρ. Ver. 18 Μαργαῶ ἐγὼ παντὶ τῷ [contestator enim, Vulg.].—ἐπιθῇ ἐπ' αὐτά.—τῷ βιβλίῳ. Ver. 19 ἀφέλῃ.—τοῦ βιβλίου.—ἀφελεί.—τοῦ ξύλου [de libro vite, Vulg.].—om. last καί [et de his quæ scripta, Vulg.].—τῷ βιβλίῳ. Ver. 20 om. 2nd καί [This καί Er. took (as he has taken the whole verse) from a reading supplied by Laurentius Valla; it is not presented in the Vulg., nor is it read by any Uncial MS.]. Ver. 21 om. ἡμῶν.—om. Χριστοῦ.—om. ὑμῶν [A reads μετὰ πάντων.—℔ reads μετὰ τῶν ἁγίων.—B reads μετὰ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων.].—[A omits Ἀμήν].—[Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi cum omnibus vobis. Amen. Vulg.].]

1. And he shewed me Ch. xxi. 10 is here taken up and continued.

Ezek. xlvii. 1–12 should be read carefully in connexion with verses 1 and 2; cf. also Joel iii. 18; Zech. xiv. 8.

a river] Omit the word "pure,"—see vv. 11.

Here at length, and in ver. 2, the types which Paradise presented are fulfilled:—(i.) We have first of all the "river" which "went out of Eden," Gen. ii. 10. See on ver. 2.

For this restoration of a better Paradise, see on ch. ii. 7.

of water of life,] "There is a river," wrote the Psalmist, "the streams whereof shall make glad the City of God" (Ps. xlv. 4)—streams proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded not of physical water; but of the spiritual life promised by Christ,—John iv. 10, 14; vii. 38; see also ch. vii. 17; xxi. 6.

Bright as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.] From one and the same throne,—see ch. iii. 21. In Ezek. xlvii. 1, the “waters issued out from under the threshold” of the Temple. In the New Jerusalem there is no Temple (ch. xxi. 22), and the river proceeds “out of the throne of God and of the Lamb,”—cf. ch. v. 13; vii. 17.

The Lord, while on earth, had spoken of the “rivers of living water;” and St. John (vii. 39) has added the comment: “This spake He of the Spirit.” Here, the “river of water of life” “proceeds out of the throne of God and of the Lamb”—affording a remarkable illustration and proof of the Article of the Creed: “I believe in the Holy Ghost, Who proceedeth from the Father and the Son.”

Note carefully the connexion of this verse with the first clause of ver. 2.

2. In the midst of the street thereof.] I.e., ‘The river proceeded out of the throne of God and of the Lamb, in the midst of the street of the City.’ “The street” is taken collectively, as in ch. xxi. 21. The connexion of these words with ver. 1—which alone seems to render the words that follow, especially the word “And,” intelligible—was first pointed out by Matthiä; and has been adopted after him by Züllig, Fuller, Bisping, and Burger. The great majority of commentators however, with the A. V., place a full stop at the end of ver. 1; but in that case the whole analogy of the Apoc. would suggest the existence of “and” at the beginning of ver. 2—introducing a new clause; see e.g. ch. iv. 1. The analogy of Ezekiel’s vision also leads to the same result. There the waters issue forth “eastward,” in the direction of the principal avenue of the Temple Court,—“by the way that looketh eastward” through which the Prophet is led (Ezek. xlvii. 2); and in neither ver. 7, nor ver. 12, of which this passage is an almost verbal transcript, is there mention of a “way” or “street” in connexion with the “trees.”

And on this side of the river and on that was the tree of life.] Or, a tree of life. (See vv. 11., and the references there given). The new clause begins, as usual, with “And.” The word “tree” in the Greek is anarthrous, but is taken generically to represent the numerous trees which grew on either side of the river—see on ch. xxi. 16; or two trees merely may be signified, in contrast to the one Tree in the original Paradise.

Düsterd. allows that it is very difficult, with the ordinary punctuation, to explain the construction, which Alf., after him, renders thus: “In the midst of the street of it (the city), and of the river, on one side and on the other,”—the gen. (‘of the river’) being governed by ‘in the midst’ (as Ewald, Düsterd., and others), not by ‘on either side’ (as De Wette): and the meaning being that the trees were on each side in the middle of the space between the street and the river.”

I. Williams renders: “In the midst, &c., and on either side of the river was there a tree of life;” the absence of the article before the word “river” in ver. 1, as well as before the word “tree,” implies, he suggests, “in both cases a River and a Tree not to be confounded with any other mentioned in Scripture from its transcendental nature.” And he explains (after Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Wells): “in the midst of the river encompassing the street on this side and on that side”:—“On the sides of the River, then, not, as in Ezekiel many trees, for the solace of our weakness on earth, but the one Tree of Paradise; when the flaming sword of death is removed. Not a river dividing into four heads to replenish the earth, but one River and one Tree, restored to the unity which is in God. One river, encompassing in the midst of it ‘the tree of life.’” (p. 471).

(ii.) In “the tree of life” (cf. ch. ii. 7) we have the second type from Paradise—Gen. ii. 9; iii. 22. See on ver. 1.

In the note on Gen. ii. 9 see Dr. Kennicott’s remark as to the generic force of the word “tree”; whence he infers that all the trees of Paradise, except the Tree of Knowledge, were Trees of Life.

bearing twelve [manner of] fruits.] Or, twelve crops of fruit. “As before, the one Foundation of Christ was found to be in the Twelve Foundations with Twelve precious stones of every colour, so here the one Tree of Life bears ‘twelve manner of fruits’” (I. Williams, p. 469);—“signifying,” notes Ebrard, “the ever new enjoyments of the Blessed.”

On the other hand Hengst. writes: “We are not to think of different kinds of fruits;”—but merely “new fruits,” indicating that “the enjoyment of life shall be without interruption.” And so Burger, “a twelve-fold harvest of fruits, as the verse goes on to her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:

4 And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads, explain—a new harvest each month.” And so Stuart renders: producing twelve fruit harvests, so as to afford an abundant, not a varied, supply.

yielding its fruit every month:] (Omit the initial “and” of the A.V.: and see vv. 11.) The words of Ezek. xlvii. 12, “whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months,” rather support Hengst. against the A.V.; viz., that the Tree yields “new” fruit every month in never-ending succession. The fruit of the Tree, notes Reuss, is no longer forbidden; on the contrary, it is offered with a fecundity of which actual nature presents no example.

The number Twelve is again suggested by the word “month”:—cf. the Twelve gates of Pearl (ch. xxi. 21), to which the expression “every month” has been taken to correspond; just as the thought of the “Nations” walking in the light of the City (ch. xxi. 24), corresponds to the closing words of this verse—and the leaves of the tree [were] for the healing of the nations.] Compare: “And the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine”—Ezek. xlvii. 12. The sense clearly is that the healing virtues of the Tree of Life supply the remedy for that sickness of the soul which troubled the “Nations” during their earthly existence, but to which they shall no more be subject in the City of God. The objection of Hengst. is groundless, who limits the healing to the present state of things: “Healing implies disease. But this belongs only to the present life.” As little can one argue from ch. xxi. 4, that the tears which God shall wipe away, imply that sorrow still exists in the New Jerusalem. The tears are those which men weep under the troubles of earth, but which cease to flow in the Life Eternal. Dürstiedick refers to those who are “atbirst,” as we read in ver. 17; ch. vii. 16;—and to the wretched and miserable in ch. iii. 17. The virtue of the Tree of Life, as of the Cross, is not limited to Jews only, but extends to all the “Nations” of the earth, who are within the Christian Zion—see ch. xxi. 24–26. So Words; and see the notes on ch. xx. 2; xxi. 24.

On the other hand, De Wette, Züllig, Ewald, Alf., understand the “Nations,” dwelling outside the heavenly City;—Bengel understands the “Nations” to which the Gospel has not been preached in this life;—Ebrard makes “the healing” import not “the healing” from sin, but from the state of undeveloped faith in Christ.”

Renan comments thus: The Apocalypse is “par excellence the Book of Jewish pride. According to the author, the distinction between the Jews and the pagans will continue in the Kingdom of God. While the Twelve Tribes eat of the fruits of the Tree of Life, the Gentiles must content themselves with a medicinal decoction of its leaves (‘d’une décoction médicinale de ses feuilles. Trait ironique’).”—p. 475.

3. And there shall be no curse any more:] Or, no more anything accursed. On the word rendered “curse” see vv. 11., and Matt. xxvi. 74 (κατάθεμα—“Apud profanos non existat,” Grimm), and cf. Josh. vii. 12, 13; Zech. xiv. 11 (LXX.). All upon which the curse (Gen. iii. 17) might rest has departed from the community of the Blessed—see ch. xx. 10, 15; xxi. 27; therefore what follows naturally results. Because there is no more curse, the Divine rule shall never be withdrawn.

and the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be therein:] Note, “and,” not “but.” One and the same Throne,—see ver. 1; ch. iii. 21.

and his servants shall do him service:] See ch. vii. 15. Shall worship Him—not them; for Christ has said, “I and the Father are One”—John x. 30.

Burger would translate “shall serve him as priests,” enjoying the rights conferred in ch. i. 6; v. 10; 1 Pet. ii. 5. That the verb here used (λατρεύω) does not signify this, see Archbishop Trench’s Synonyms, p. 118.

As in ch. xx. 7, the descriptive style of the Vision has passed in this verse into a direct prediction.

4. and they shall see his face:] See Matt. v. 8; 1 John iii. 2; cf. Ex. xxxiii. 20; Ps. xvii. 15.—“Not through veils and mysteries” said Arethas (after “the great Dionysius,” ap. Cranmer, l.c., p. 491), “but even as He was seen by the holy Apostles, on the holy Mount,” when they said “It is good for us to be here,”—Luke ix. 33. See on ch. xxi. 22.

and his name [shall be] on their foreheads:] See ch. iii. 12; vii. 3; xiv. 1.—“Not engraved in plates of metal, as on the forehead of the High Priest, but written by the finger of God.”—I. Williams, p. 473.

* ch. 21.
23.

5 "And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

6 And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

7 Behold, I come quickly: blessed

5. And there shall be night no more;] See vv. 11. The description of ch. xxi. 23, 25, is here repeated:—cf. John ix. 4; xi. 10.

and they need no light of lamp, neither light of sun;] See vv. 11. The Codex Alexandrinus reads, "they shall need."

No night:—No lamp, no Sun is needed now,— for the Lord God shall give them light;] See vv. 11.: Gr. shall lighten upon them.

and they shall reign for ever and ever.] Not for a definite period as in ch. xx. 4, 6, but "unto the ages of the ages,"—see on ch. i. 6. The rule of glorified man over the New Earth is to be of a different character from that exercised by man over Nature according to the law laid down in Gen. ix. 2.

With this promise the Revelation Proper (ch. iv. 1—ch. xxii. 5) comes to a close, and the description of the New Jerusalem is ended:—see the remarks introductory to ch. xvii.

III. THE EPILOGUE (6-21).

The Third of the three great divisions of the Book.

THE ANGELIC CONFIRMATION (6-11).

The Visions have now ceased which disclose the future; and the Epilogue follows where, in vv. 6-11, the Angel confirms the truth of the communications received by St. John; and where Christ Himself, in vv. 12-16, adds to this His testimony. In vv. 17-21 the Prophetic Book itself is concluded.

The Epilogue closely corresponds to the Introduction:—The recapitulation, vv. 6-12, corresponds to the theme as stated in ch. i. 7, 8;—The words "I John," ver. 8, correspond to ch. i. 9;—The Benediction, ver. 21, to the Salutation, ch. i. 4-6.

6. And he said unto me,] The "Angelus Interpres," the interpreting Angel who has in general conveyed the revelations:—see on ch. i. 1; xxi. 5. Not so, writes Düsterd., understanding the Angel who is the speaker in ch. xxi. 9. Differently still Ebrard,—he decides that there is here no new utterance of the Angel who speaks in ch. xxi. 9; but that St. John, as in ver. 8, is himself the speaker, who now recalls to his own recollection and to that of his readers two facts,—(1) the statement of this Angel in ch. xxi. 5; and (2) the truth that the entire of the Apocalypse is of Divine origin.

These words [are] faithful and true:] See ch. xxi. 5; and cf. ch. xix. 9; Dan. viii. 26. It is clear from vv. 7, 18, that the Angel refers here to the entire of the Apocalypse.

and the Lord, the God of the spirits of the prophets,] See vv. 11. Not, as we read in Num. xvi. 22, "the spirits of all flesh," but in the restricted sense expressed in 1 Cor. xiv. 32, and also in the words "the spirit of Prophecy"—ch. xix. 10.

"The spirit of the prophets" notes Hengst., "is the spirit of Prophecy which rests on them;" the Spirit itself is the same for all (1 Pet. i. 11; 2 Pet. i. 21); but each prophet has his own measure of the Spirit's gift,—1 Cor. xii. 11; and so De Wette. Düsterd. however understands the prophets' own spirit, which God makes His instrument, guiding it by the Divine Spirit. This latter seems to be the true meaning.

sent his angel to shew unto his servants] "In (or "concerning") the churches," as in ver. 16;—to believers generally.

the things which must shortly come to pass.] The verbal agreement of this verse with ch. i. 1, intimates that the conclusion of the Book begins here. This agreement also proves that these words apply to the whole Apocalypse.

7. And behold, I come quickly.] (See vv. 11.:—in ver. 12 "And" is omitted). "And still He is not yet come. See ch. i. 1; and 2 Pet. iii. 8" (Words). In the Inscription (ch. i. 1-3), the order of the clauses is not the same as in this verse,—the words "the time is at hand" closing the third verse in ch. i.

The words "I come quickly" are now thrice repeated—here, and in vv. 12, 20; see also ch. ii. 16; iii. 11. The fundamental prediction is given in Mal. iii. 1. The present passage, although uttered by the "Angelus Interpres," is evidently spoken from the Person of Christ (see ver. 16; cf. ver. 20; and also ch. xi. 3):—the person sent, speaking from the Person of the Sender, as in Gen. xix. 21, 22. If this be borne in mind, the discussion as to who is the speaker in the different clauses of the chapter—e.g. in vv. 12-15—is not of much is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

8 And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.

profit. On the change from the first to the third person Burger compares Jer. xxxiv. Ebrard, who considers that St. John, not the Angel, is now the speaker, notes that the Seer reminds his readers of the saying of Christ, "Behold I come quickly," in ch. iii. 11; just as he has quoted at ch. xvi. 15 a similar saying in ch. iii. 3, "I will come as a thief":—see on ver. 8.

Blessed is he that keepeth the words] The words are "faithful and true" (ver. 6; ch. xxi. 5). Cf. ch. xiv. 13; xvi. 15; xix. 9; xx. 6.

In ch. i. 3 the verse begins with the Benediction, see above.

of the prophecy of this book.] The addition, "of this Book," is made to what is said in ch. i. 3, as the command given to the Seer in ch. i. 11, 19, has now been obeyed.

"This Book"—not as yet written—is referred to here, and again in vv. 9, 18, 19.

8. And I John am he that heard and saw these things.] See vv. 11. Commentators note here the present tense of the participles—marking, without temporal significance, the ecstatic condition in which St. John "hears and sees" these things—as contrasted with the aorists that follow, and which refer specially to vv. 6, 7: cf. the tense of the participle in ch. xx. 10; xxi. 9; &c. "John," writes Bengel, "had placed his name in the title of his Book (ch. i. 4, 9), . . . and now at the close he names himself again, so that we might perfectly know that he, the Apostle John, had written this testimony as to the Coming of Jesus Christ." It is common to his Gospel, Epistles, and Apocalypse, that the truth of the facts recorded should be established by the evidence of bearing and seeing—e.g. John i. 14; xix. 35; xxi. 14; 1 John i. 1, 2; iv. 14. "These things," here and at the end of the verse, refer to the entire contents of the Book.

Dionysius of Alex. (ap. Euseb. vii. 25) connects this clause of ver. 8 with ver. 7; so that the Seer includes himself in the blessing there pronounced.

And when I heard and saw, I fell down to worship] As in ch. xix. 10, where see the note. Observe the aorists in this place—see above.

9 Then saith he unto me, ^{See^{ch. 19.}} thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

10 And he saith unto me, Seal before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.] Note again the tense of the participle rendered "which shewed."

When St. John had heard the words "Behold I come quickly" (ver. 7), he supposes that He who speaks is the Lord Himself: he therefore falls, as in ch. xix. 10, before the Angel; so Bispington—Hengst. considers that the offered worship in ch. xix. 10 had respect solely to the contents of the preceding verses; here, on the other hand, it has respect to the contents of the entire Book;—Ebrard (see on ver. 6) decides that there is no repetition of the act of worship; but that as St. John, in ver. 6, had recalled to mind what he had heard in ch. xxi. 5; and, in ver. 7, had recalled to mind ch. iii. 11; so here he merely re-states what he had written in ch. xix. 10, in order the more carefully to preserve the record of a fact and a warning of such grave importance for the instruction of the Church of all time. As in the Old Test. the person of the Prophet is sometimes lost in that of the word of God Himself who speaks through the Prophet, so it happens here. Thus in ver. 9 it is said "I am thy fellow servant," and then, without any intimation of change of person, we read in vv. 12, 13, "Behold I come quickly," "I am Alpha and Omega" (see on ver. 7). To prevent therefore any ambiguity, what occurred in ch. xix. 10 is again introduced.

9. And he saith unto me, See [thou do it] not: I am a fellow-servant with thee and with thy brethren] (Omit "for" before "I am,"—see vv. 11.). So far there is perfect agreement here with ch. xix. 10, where the words which follow, "that have the testimony of Jesus," are now replaced by the prophets, and with them which keep the words of this book: worship God.] The command to "worship God," is the same in both places. On this reference to "the prophets" Bishop Wordsworth notes: "The prophets were St. John's brethren, and this spiritual brotherhood is displayed in the Apocalypse. He and they were inspired by the same Spirit, and as is here observed by an ancient Expositor, 'how many words of Isaiah, how many words of Zechariah, do we read in this book of St. John!'" Dusterd. likewise observes that "the prophets" are here not the sayings of the prophecy of this book : for the time is at hand.

11 He that is unjust, let him be unjust still : and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still : and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still : and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

12 And, behold, I come quickly ; and my reward is with me, ⁶to give ^{Rom. 2.}

distinguished from the rest of the believers as "brethren" of St. John (an idea which does not appear in ch. xix. 10) ; the design being to exalt St. John's authority as a Prophet, and the authority of the Apocalypse. To this inference corresponds the Angel's command in ver. 10 (cf. ch. i. 11, 19) that the Seer should impart the Revelation to others,—a command to be contrasted with the words of ch. x. 4 (cf. Dan. viii. 26 ; xii. 4, 9). Alford refuses to recognize any distinction between "prophets" and "brethren."

After this episode, as it were, of vv. 8, 9, the utterances of the Angel in ver. 7 are resumed.

10. And he saith unto me,] These words either indicate that the discourse of the Angel here takes a new beginning ; or rather serve to point out that his words in ver. 7 are continued :—see on ver. 9.

Seal not up the words of the prophecy of this book ;] The public announcement of the revelation is here enjoined,—see on ch. i. 19. In ch. x. 4 an opposite command is given.

The end of all things under the seventh Trumpet (ch. x. 7) has now come.

for the time is at hand.] See vv. 11. The words of ch. i. 3 are closely followed.

Ebrard would once more see not an actual utterance of the Angel, but a reminiscence on the part of the Seer of the commands "to write" given in ch. i. 19 ; xxi. 5. These are now expressed in the different form "seal not up ;" just as the reason given in the words "the time is at hand" replaces the form "I come quickly" in ch. iii. 11, and ver. 7 above.

As in Dan. viii. 26 ; xii. 4, God is wont to command His prophets to "seal up" His prophecies when they refer to remote times ; so, when they refer to times near at hand, He commands that the revelation should not be sealed, as the Angel commands here (C. à Lapide). The nearer the time is at hand, so much the more does the Church need the consolation with the Apocalypse conveys.

11. He that is unrighteous,] On δ ἀδικῶν, cf. Matt. xx. 13.

let him do unrighteousness still ;] Or, "yet more." The Angel, with a retrospective glance at the previous visions which reveal the eternal ruin of the ungodly, and the eternal glory of the Saints, now addresses to both solemn words of practical exhortation, not unmingled with a certain irony,—cf. Ezek.

iii. 27 ; xx. 39 ; Matt. xii. 33 ; xxvi. 45. The time is so short there is hardly need to change :—so the majority of commentators. The moral is—"Change while there is time" !

Hengstenberg notes that this verse stands between the sayings "the time is at hand" (ver. 10), and "I come quickly" (ver. 12) ; and that its meaning is to be determined by its position :—Each of its statements is alike agreeable to the will of God. If men will not sanctify Him, He will sanctify Himself upon them. If they will have it so, let it be so ;—if it is right in their view, so is it also in God's.

Burger regards the first two members of this verse as conveying a thought similar to that contained in Luke xvii. 26-30 :—every man will continue to act according to his disposition and the bent of his will, as long as there is time to do so. This time, however, is short. "Behold," says the Lord, "I come quickly" (ver. 12).

Ebrard makes this verse also to be the inference of St. John.

and he that is filthy, let him be made filthy still ;] Or, "yet more." See vv. 11. Cf. James i. 21 ; ii. 2 ; 1 Pet. iii. 21, on the word translated "filthy." Alf. would take the verb "in the constant middle sense of passive verbs when the act depends on a man's self"—"and let the filthy pollute himself still." Cf. on ver. 15.

and he that is righteous, let him do righteousness still ;] Or, "yet more." See vv. 11. On the word "righteous" cf. ch. xv. 3 : and as illustrating the manner of St. John, compare the use of this form of speech in 1 John ii. 29 ; iii. 7 :—see Introd. § 7, IV. (f).

and he that is holy, let him be made holy still.] Or, "yet more." Alf. would render the passive verb as before : "and the holy sanctify himself still."

Bishop Butler (Analogy, ii. ch. 1) quotes this verse in order to illustrate the fact that "the light of Reason does not any more than that of Revelation, force men to submit to its authority."

The verse is also quoted in the Epistle of the Churches of Lyons and Vienne (ap. Euseb. H. E. v. 1) :—see Introd. § 2, (a) No. (13).

CHRIST ADDS HIS TESTIMONY (12-16).

12. Behold, I come quickly ;] Omit "And," see vv. 11 ; and on ver. 7. A passage (vv.

every man according as his work shall be.

^{d Is. 42. 4. & 44. 6.} 13 I am Alpha and Omega, ^dthe beginning and the end, the first and the last.

12—16,) where the utterance is from the Person of Christ Himself, now begins:—the objection to this division, founded on ver. 14, is removed by the true reading in that place.

Ver. 16 proves that the speaker here is Christ,—or, at least, which amounts to the same thing, the Angel in His Person, see on ver. 7.

Hengstenberg decides that “the speaker here, as in ch. i. 8, is simply GOD in the undistinguished unity of His Being, or God in Christ. . . . Where the Angel does not speak in his own person, or the speaker is not more definitely described, as at ver. 16, there it can be only God in Christ.” Dusterd., however, makes St. John himself the speaker in vv. 12—15; and he takes vv. 12, 13, to be an introduction, in which St. John (who knows himself to be the true interpreter of the whole revelation) passes over to his own exhortation (ver. 14) from the utterances of the Angel. The Seer does this by the use of the two Divine sayings of vv. 12, 13, just as he had done in ch. i. 8.

and my reward is with me.] Or, wages. I.e., the reward which I bestow;—see ch. xi. 18; Isai. xl. 10; lxii. 11. These words of Isaiah belong to those Divine sayings which identify St. John as a prophet—see on ver. 9.

to render] The infin. epexegeticus, added as a complement after the verb “I come;”—cf. John iv. 15: see Winer, § 44, 1.

to each man according as his work is.] See vv. 11. The Apocalypse here at its close (cf. ch. ii. 23; xx. 12, 13), insists upon the doctrine on which St. Paul without ceasing dwells,—God “will render to every man according to his works”—Rom. ii. 6; xiv. 12; 1 Cor. iii. 8; 2 Cor. v. 10; &c.

These words intimate that the entire life of a man is to be regarded as one continuous “work.” We may compare 1 Cor. iii. 12—15, where also the singular, “work,”—τὸ ἔργον,—is found.

13. I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end.] See vv. 11.—compare Isai. xli. 4; xliii. 10; xlv. 6; xlviii. 12. St. John again follows the prophetic utterances of Isaiah—see on ver. 12 above.

In this place only the three Apocalyptic titles of Christ are combined:—(1) “The Alpha and the Omega”—see ch. i. 8; xxi. 6; (2) “The First and the Last”—see ch. i. 17; ii. 8; (3) “The Beginning and the End”—see 14 Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

15 For without are dogs, and sorch. xxi. 6. The first title is symbolical; the second is borrowed from the Old Test. (see reff. above); the third is philosophical. The sense is, ‘I am He from Whom all Being has proceeded, and to whom it will return;—the primal Cause and final aim of all history;—Who have created the world, and Who will perfect it.’

As before, Alford and others ascribe these words to God the Father.

14. Blessed are they that wash their robes.] This (see vv. 11.) the reading of the Alexandrine and Sinaitic MSS., Dusterd. imagines to have been suggested by a desire not to allow the Divine utterances in vv. 13, 16, to be interrupted by an intervening utterance of St. John, which he takes this verse to be. This reading alone, however, renders the meaning clear, and the connexion intelligible.

For the full doctrine of what is here expressed, see ch. vii. 14,—from which verse the Vulgate has supplied “in sanguine Agni” in this place.

Bishop Wordsworth still retains the reading adopted in the A. V., “that do his commandments.” This reading is found among Uncials only in B (C and P are defective here); and among Versions in the Copt., Syr., and Arm. Andreas has it, and therefore codex 1. It is found in Tertullian (De Pudicit. 19), and also in Cyprian (Epist. 394) who appeals to Matt. xix. 17. Cf. ch. xii. 17; xiv. 12.

that they may have the right [to come] to the tree of life.] Or, the authority over the tree of life; and thus “live for ever”—Gen. iii. 22: cf. the promise, ch. ii. 7; and see above ver. 2. On the constr. “that they may” see on ch. xiv. 13. Words. renders: “that their authority may be upon the tree of life”—i.e., may extend to it, and may be exercised upon it, so that they may take and eat of its fruit.” Ebrard here (as in ch. xiv. 13) makes this a dependent clause,—‘They wash their robes in order that they shall, as the result, receive authority to eat of the tree of life.’

and may enter in by the gates into the City.] Or portals (πυλῶν). Christ Himself is the “Gate”—see John x. 9 [Εγὼ εἰμι ἡ θύρα]; and on ch. xxi. 21. See on ver. 19.

The former clause of this verse Ebrard refers to those who dwell within the City this clause to “the Nations” (see on ch. xxi.

cerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

16 I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.

26; and above on ver. 2) who dwell without. It is more simple, however, to understand that the great object and aim of believers—"The right to come to the tree of life"—is first set forth; and then the way that leads to it, entrance "by the gates into the City."

15. Without are all dogs,] Omit the "For" of the A. V.—see vv. 11. The article, here represented by "all," precedes each of the first five nouns. In the first noun there is a general description of that moral impurity which is specially noted in ver. 11—an idea borrowed from the wild, unclean type of "dogs" in Eastern lands, and still preserved in the French word canaille:—cf. Matt. vii. 6; Phil. iii. 2. This verse pronounces a sentence of eternal exclusion of all such from the City of God.

Düsterdieck suggests that the contrast which is presented here to the Benediction in ver. 14, rather requires that these words should be taken as a command—"Hinaus die Hunde!" "Away ye dogs!" ("foras"—scil. "sunto," not "foris"—scil. "sunt," supplying, in fact, ἐξωρα). Words. compares "Procul, O procul este profani." The former sense seems far more natural.

and sorcerers,] See, in a different order, the catalogue of sinners given in ch. xxi. 8.

Or render, Without [are] the dogs, and the sorcerers, and the fornicators, &c.

and every one that loveth and doeth a lie. See vv. 11.:—or, every one loving and doing. The 'doing a lie' stands opposed to 'doing the truth,' John iii. 21; cf. ch. xxi. 27. As in the summary of ch. xxi. 8, all single sins are here also comprehended in the general idea of "a lie."

Hengst., having noted that in ch. xxi. 8 those who are excluded from the Kingdom of God "form four pairs," and that in ch. xxi. 27 the enumeration "is comprised in the number three," goes on to observe: "Here the excluded are seven, and the seven is divided by the four and the three, just as in Isai. i. 4."

"I am not sure," writes Bossuet, "if any portion of Scripture can be found in which terrors and consolations are better intermingled than they are in these last two chapters. There is everything to attract in this most blessed City; all in it is rich and glorious; but everything also is fitted to inspire one with dread,—for we there perceive still more of purity than of grandeur."—Comm. in loc.

Burger notes that vv. 14, 15 show the results, on either side, of the choice left free for every one (ver. 11), and of the judgment (ver. 12).

16. I Jesus have sent mine angel] As stated from the very first, ch. i. 1. These words contain a direct reference to the present revelation to St. John. See on ver. 7; and compare ver. 12 as to the relation of the speaker throughout to our Lord.

The Apocalypse here resumes as at the beginning the form of an Epistle. Here for the first time, and only here, at the close of the Book, and as the seal to all that is written in it, the Lord styles Himself by His personal name JESUS.

to testify unto you these things in the churches,] See vv. 11. The reading ἐν is adopted here; but if ἐν be read translate concerning the churches, as in ch. x. 11 (cf. John xii. 16): so Hengst., Züllig, Düsterd. Hengst. takes "unto you" to mean "my servants the prophets who are represented by John, cf. vv. 6, 9; ch. i. 1." Düsterd., omitting the prep. (with codex 1) translates, have sent mine angel unto you the churches [i.e., the Seven Churches of ch. i. 4] to testify, &c. Burger, likewise without the prep., suggests the same translation. If, however, the prep. (ἐν) is to be read he refers "unto you" to the Angels of the Churches, and renders, "concerning the churches." Bengel, also omitting the prep., refers the dative "unto you" to the Angels of the Seven Churches; and he takes ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις to be an ablative, rendering "in the churches." Vittr. translates "in commodum Ecclesiarum" (ἐν):—"Grotius recte vertit Ecclesiarum bono." Alf., likewise reading ἐν, nevertheless translates "in the churches" ("the ἐν of addition by juxtaposition—John iv. 6; Rev. ix. 14").

I am the root and the offspring of David,] See ch. v. 5; Matt. xxii. 41-45;—cf. also Isai. xi. 1, 10; Rom. xv. 12. On the words "offspring" (γένος) Düsterd. quotes in illustration: "Credo equidem . . . genus esse Deorum"—Æn. iv. 12. Vitringa notes "Sensus est, in Christo solo stare et conservari familiam Davidis" (l.c., p. 915).

At the word "David" the cursive manuscript, "1," used by Erasmus breaks off—a manuscript which has so greatly influenced the Textus Receptus and the modern translations of the New Testament. From this point to the end of the Apocalypse the 17 And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. ^{Is. 55. 1.} And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, ^{Deut. 4.} If any man shall add unto these things, God shall ^{Pro. 32. 6.} add unto him the plagues that are written in this book :

"Authorized Version" is a translation into English, of the re-translation by Erasmus of the Vulgate into Greek. On this subject see vv. ll., and the Introduction, § 8.

the bright.] Omit [and], which is not in the Greek, Compare

"Hesperus that led
The starry host, rode brightest."— Par. Lost, IV. 605.

the morning star.] Omit and,—see vv. ll. on this, and also on the word translated "morning." See on ch. ii. 28.

In this, and in the preceding title, the Lord refers to the past and to the future. He Who after the flesh is the Son of David, is now the Herald of the coming Dawn;—from Him proceeds the light of the eternal Day: see ch. xxi. 23. "I will give him the Morning Star," is His promise to every one "that overcometh" (ch. ii. 28).

Sir. I. Newton compares 2 Pet. i. 19.

THE CONCLUSION (17-21).

17. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come.] Or translate "Both the Spirit and" See vv. ll.: cf. the same form, Ἐρχομαι, in ch. vi.

In response to the Lord's announcement in ver. 12, "Behold, I come quickly," the Universal Church,—the "Bride,"—inspired by the Holy Ghost (cf. Acts xv. 28), answers, "Come!" Not the Church triumphant, as in ch. xxi. 2, 9, but the Church still waiting for Redemption—cf. John xv. 26, 27.

It is unnecessary to refer precisely, with Hengst, to the Spirit of Prophecy (ch. xix. 10), or yet to the Spirit of the prophets (ch. xxii. 6), in which St. John found himself on the Lord's Day (ch. i. 10; iv. 2), and which speaks through him (ch. xiv. 13);—or, with Ebrard and Bisping, to the Spirit abiding with believers (Rom. viii. 26);—or, with Düsterd. and Alf., to the Spirit in the churches and in the prophets (ch. ii. 7, 11; xix. 10);—or with Züllig, to the Prophets (ie., the prophetic Spirit), and the Saints, ch. xi. 18; xvi. 6; xviii. 20, 24.

On the "Bride,"—the symbol by which the Church is represented,—see ch. xix. 7; xxi. 2, 9.

And he that heareth, let him say, Come.] See ch. ii. 7. 11—he that heareth

"what the Spirit saith unto the Churches:" cf. ver. 18; ch. i. 3. Ebrard understands 'he that heareth the words of Christ in vv. 12-15;'—Düsterd., 'he that heareth the promise of the Lord's coming';—Alf. and Burger, 'he that heareth the cry of the Spirit and the Bride.' We cannot overlook the Lord's own repeated admonition (see Matt. xi. 15), where also the "bearing" is taken absolutely.

And he that is athirst, let him come:] See ch. xxi. 6; John iv. 14; vii. 37; cf. Isai. lv. i. See vv. ll.

he that will.] Omit "and," see vv. ll. Here, notes Ebrard, is the turning point of this exhortation:—to be "athirst," and to "will," are the essential conditions of "coming" to Christ.

let him take] See vv. ll.

18. I testify] (Omit "For,"—see vv. ll.) The personal pronoun is emphatic; 'I John testify.' We have here the Apostle's final warning;—not, as some (e.g. Ebrard) who appeal to ver. 20 conclude, a continuation of the Lord's address in ver. 16. Burger takes Christ Himself to be the speaker, and notes: "This is the Seal which the Lord Himself stamps upon the Book."

unto every man] As in ver. 16; Heb. x. 15. Alf. suggests "of every man," as Rom. x. 2; Gal. iv. 15.

that beareth the words of the prophecy of this book.] Note the accurate repetition of the words of ch. i. 3, where the Seer pronounces a Benediction on those who "read" and "bear," and "keep the things that are written therein."

The solemn menace now follows:—

If any man shall add unto them,] See vv. ll. Gr. upon them—and so in the next clause.

The anathema here, in accordance with the whole spirit of the Apocalypse, is founded on the Old Test.:—e.g. "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it," Deut. iv. 2; xii. 32; Prov. xxx. 5, 6. Speaking of the perfections of God, the son of Sirach writes: "Unto Him may nothing be added, neither can He be diminished,"—Ecclus. xlii. 21.

These words, writes Burger, are addressed to the entire Church and its teachers. "Here," notes Words., "is a prophetic protest against the spurious Revelations forged 19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

20 He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

by false Teachers in the name of Apostles (see Fabricius, Cod. Apocr., N. T.; Jones, On the Canon; Lücke, &c.)."

God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:] For the Old Test. parallels see Deut. vii. 15; xxviii. 27, 60. For the references to the "Book" itself, the first six Trumpets, ch. viii. 7-ix. 21 may be referred to;—the "Seven Thunders," ch. x. 3;—the "Seven Vials," ch. xv. 1-17;—the "Earthquake," ch. xi. 13; xvi. 18;—the fall of Babylon, ch. xviii. Of course the penalties on additions or omissions are denounced against those who would, as Hengst. notes, assail "the proper kernel of the Book; such as would substitute for the narrow way presented in it, a broad one; or would in some measure extinguish the light of hope that shines in it for Christians." As a commentary on this passage we may well refer to the similar denunciation by St. Paul in Gal. i. 8, 9; and also to his reference to Hymenæus and Philetus who taught "that the Resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some" (2 Tim. ii. 17, 18).

19. and if any man shall take away from the words] E.g. the exhortations to patience, ch. xiii. 10; xiv. 12;—to be "faithful unto death," ch. ii. 10; iii. 10.

There have been at all times those who say "Let him make speed, and hasten His work, that we may see it" (Isai. v. 19; 2 Pet. iii. 4).

God shall take away his part] See vv. 11. For the phrase "his part" cf. ch. xx. 6; xxi. 8; John xiii. 1; and see Introd. § 7, IV., (c).

The words that follow are clearly figurative.

from the tree of life,] For this important change of reading (τοῦ ξύλου for βίβλου) in place of that adopted in the A.V., and introduced by Erasmus from the Vulgate, "de libro vite" see vv. 11. Compare also Introd. § 8.

and out of the holy city,] The two prepositions "from," and "out of" (ἀπό, ἐκ) are connected with the verb "shall take away."

The Tree and the City were both mentioned in ver. 14. "In these two," notes Bengel, "stands the sum of the blessedness written in this Book, at its beginning and at its close,—ch. ii. 7; iii. 12; xxi. 2; xxii. 2."

[even from] the things which are written in this book.] Or translate, "from the tree of life, and out of the holy city, which are written in this book" (Omit "and," before "from the things;" see vv. 11.). As "the plagues" in ver. 18 are described as "written in this Book," so Hengst. would refer the words "which are written in this Book" both to "the Tree" and to "the City." Wordsworth comments: "The reading of the text [viz., the omission of "and"] is important as declaring that the Holy City belongs to those who are written in this Book;—and he renders, "out of the Holy City of those that are written," &c.

Ebrard notes: "Not John, but only He, the Lord, has power to issue such threatenings, as we read in vv. 18, 19." These words have caused offence to many. Thus Luther, in his Preface of the year 1522, expresses strong disapproval at St. John's assigning so much greater weight to his own Book than to the other Holy Books ("Darzu dünkt mich das allzuviel sein, dass er hart solch sein eigen Buch mehr denn andere heilige Bücher, da viel mehr angelegen ist, befiehlt und dräuet" u.s.w.); and, following him, De Wette, Kliefoth, &c. Luthardt justly replies: "As Paul, Gal. i. 8, f. invokes the curse on the man who corrupts the doctrine of faith, so John invokes the curse here on the man who corrupts the doctrine of hope; for the subject-matter here is the true consolation and light of the Church in the heaviest tribulation, and also the Word which has power to preserve the faithful so that they may not fall in the great Temptation, and perish."

The presumption, notes Bisping, would be intolerable, were such words to issue from the mouth of one who was not an Apostle.

20. He which testifieth these things saith,] The speaker is Christ, see ch. i. 2; xix. 10:—"The testimony of Jesus Christ."

This idea of "testimony" (μαρτυρία) appears at the beginning, and recurs at the end of all the three greater documents which we have received from St. John:—John i. 19; xxi. 24;—1 John i. 2; v. 11;—Rev. i. 2; xxii. 20.

The words "these things" refer to the whole Book,—see vv. 6, 18; and cf. John xxi. 24. In what follows we have the parting sayings of the Lord, and of His Apostle.

Yes: I come quickly.] Here with the reiteration of that promise which is the essence of the entire Apocalypse the Lord's own sayings come to a close.

Amen: come Lord Jesus.] (Omit "even so," see vv. 11). Thus the Seer answers in the name of the Church Universal. The Lord had promised the beloved Disciple an age above that of others (John xxi. 22): "If I will that he tarry till I come."—As if remembering these words, the longing of his soul gathers itself up in the parting cry: "Amen: Come Lord Jesus."

21. The Grace of the Lord Jesus] Omit "our," and "Christ," see vv. 11.

be with all. Amen.] Omit "you," see vv. 11. According to readings of more or less authority we may render, "be with the saints"; or "with all the saints." These variations in the text have, doubtless, arisen from the desire of the scribes to bring this Benediction into more exact conformity with the closing words of St. Paul's epistles,—as e. g. 1 Thess. v. 28. It would seem from this place, and from ch. i. 4, that St. John had regard to the Pauline form.

To this close may be added that other saying of St. John (1 John ii. 28):—

"And now, little children, abide in Him; that, when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at HIS COMING."

THE SPEAKER'S COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE.

THE OLD TESTAMENT,

WITH

An Explanatory and Critical Commentary, and a Revision of the Translation.

BY BISHOPS AND CLERGY OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH.

Edited by F. C. COOK, M.A., Canon of Exeter.

Now Ready, 6 vols., Medium 8vo, 6l. 15s.

Vol. I. GENESIS, EXODUS, LEVITICUS, NUMBERS, DEUTERONOMY. By HAROLD E. BROWNE, D.D., Lord Bishop of Winchester; F. C. COOK, M.A., Canon of Exeter; SAMUEL CLARK, M.A., Rector of Eaton Bishop; J. F. THRUPP, M.A., Vicar of Barrington; and T. E. ESPIN, B.D., Canon of Chester. (1000 pp.) 30s.

Vols. II. & III. JOSHUA, JUDGES, RUTH, SAMUEL, KINGS, CHRONICLES, EZRA, NEHEMIAH, ESTHER. By ARTHUR C. HERVEY, D.D., Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells; T. E. ESPIN, B.D., Canon of Chester; and GEORGE RAWLINSON, M.A., Canon of Canterbury. (1130 pp.) 36s.

Vol. IV. PSALMS, JOB, PROVERBS, ECCLESIASTES, SONG OF SOLOMON. By Dean JOHNSON, M.A.; Canon C. J. ELLIOTT, Vicar of Winkfield; Canon COOK; E. H. PLUMPTRE, M.A., Dean of Wells; W. T. BULLOCK, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul's; and T. KINGSBURY, M.A., Prebendary of Salisbury. (708 pp.) 24s.

Vol. V. ISAIAH, JEREMIAH. By W. KAY, D.D., Hon. Canon of St. Albans and Rector of Great Leghs; and R. PAYNE SMITH, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. (606 pp.) 20s.

Vol. VI. EZEKIEL, DANIEL, HOSEA, JONAH, AMOS, NAHUM, ZEPHANIAH, JOEL, OBADIAH, MICAH, HABAKKUK, HAGGAI, ZECHARIAH, MALACHI. By G. CURREY, D.D., Master of the Charter House; Archdeacon ROSE, B.D.; J. M. FULLER, M.A., Vicar of Bexley; E. HUXTABLE, M.A., Prebendary of Wells; R. GANDELL, M.A., Prebendary of Wells; F. MEYRICK, M.A., Rector of Blickling; SAM. CLARK, M.A.; Canon COOK; and W. DRAKE, M.A., Rector of Sedgebrook. (750 pp.) 25s.

This great Work, which has been prepared by a combination of leading divines of the Church of England, had its origin in the widely-felt want of a plain explanatory Commentary on the Holy Scriptures, which should be at once more comprehensive and compact than any previously published. The cordial and enthusiastic reception which has been extended to the work—even by those whose connections would lead them to the most severe and indeed hostile criticism—demonstrates the great success which the enterprise has already achieved. From the fulness, fairness, thoroughness, and candour with which all difficult questions are discussed, the Bible Commentary is sure to be satisfactory to the scholar; while the plain, direct, and devout manner in which the meaning of the Sacred Text is explained, thoroughly adapts it for the widest popular use, whether in the closet, in the family, or in the Sunday-school.—Advertisement to the American Edition.

THE SPEAKER'S COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE.

Now Ready, 4 Vols. Medium 8vo. £4. 14s.

THE NEW TESTAMENT,

WITH

An Explanatory and Critical Commentary, and a Revision of the Translation.

BY BISHOPS AND CLERGY OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH.

Edited by F. C. COOK, M.A., Canon of Exeter.

Vol. I. ST. MATTHEW, ST. MARK, AND ST. LUKE.
INTRODUCTION, by WM. THOMSON, D.D., Lord Archbishop of York.
ST. MATTHEW, ST. MARK, ST. LUKE. By Dean MANSEL, D.D.; Canon COOK; W. BASIL JONES, D.D., Lord Bishop of St. David's. (340 pp.) 18s.

Vol. II. ST. JOHN AND THE ACTS. By B. F. WESTCOTT, D.D., Canon of Peterborough, and Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge; and W. JACOBSON, D.D., Lord Bishop of Chester. (630 pp.) 20s.

Vol. III. ROMANS, CORINTHIANS, GALATIANS, EPHESIANS, PHILIPPIANS, COLOSSIANS, THESSALONIANS, TIMOTHY AND TITUS, PHILEMON. By E. H. GIFFORD, D.D., Hon. Canon of Worcester; T. S. EVANS, Canon of Durham; J. WAITE, M.A., Vicar of Norham; J. S. HOWSON, D.D., Dean of Chester; F. MEYRICK, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln and Rector of Blickling; J. GWYNN, Dean of Raphoe; HENRY WACE, M.A., Preacher at Lincoln's Inn; WM. ALEXANDER, D.D., Lord Bishop of Derry; JOHN JACKSON, D.D., Lord Bishop of London. (850 pp.) 28s.

Vol. IV. HEBREWS, ST. JAMES, ST. JOHN, ST. PETER, ST. JUDE, REVELATION. By Canon KAY, D.D.; ROBERT SCOTT, D.D., Dean of Rochester; WM. ALEXANDER, D.D., Lord Bishop of Derry; J. R. LUMBY, D.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity at Cambridge; and WM. LEE, Archdeacon of Dublin.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

Apart from its specially excellent portions, there can be no question that the work will supersede all older commentaries for English readers, so far as an external commentary is concerned.—Guardian.

This great work renders a public service, and is a real boon to the Church.—Literary Churchman.

We cannot but congratulate the originator and the promoters of the undertaking upon the selection of one possessing in so high a degree those qualifications of extensive reading, sound judgment, critical scholarship, and though last, not least, practical common sense.—Christian Observer.

We regard these volumes as a specimen of English scholarship, of which we need not be ashamed. The arrangement is admirable.—Nonconformist.

We can thankfully express our entire satisfaction with the aim, style, and spirit of the writers.—John Bull.

Strong common sense, a considerable scholarship, and devout feeling are conspicuous everywhere.—British Quarterly Review.

The book, as a whole, promises to be the best Commentary of its kind—explanatory without practical remarks or spiritual applications.—Evangelical Magazine.

Our judgment of the work, as a whole, is extremely favourable. It will certainly give wise and careful readers a more intelligent view of Holy Scripture.—English Independent.

Throughout we find learning without parade, and criticism without irreverence. The reader is kept well abreast of the times: contemporary as well as ancient expositors, critics, and travellers being laid under contribution. The original design of the work appears thus to be consistently carried out.—Watchman.

Now Ready, 4 Vols. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. each.

THE STUDENT'S EDITION

OF

THE SPEAKER'S COMMENTARY ON THE OLD TESTAMENT,

Abridged and Edited by J. M. FULLER, M.A., Vicar of Bexley.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

